Deep Strength
ARCHIVE

compiled by /u/dream-hunter

www.TheRedArchive.com

■ ■ ■

Every single post from the blog Deep Strength in a single PDF file.

Disclaimer:

I am not the creator of the posts; all I did is compile the entire blog into a single PDF file. Every single post is credited by its author below the title of the post, along with a link directly to the post.

Please redistribute the PDF file to as many people as possible, as the information contained is priceless and future generations should have access to it. If at any time the PDF file is lost, it can be officially downloaded from TheRedArchive.com.

Enjoy, and if you are a fan of red pill, don’t forget to check my website TheRedArchive.com for an archive of content related to The Red Pill community including many subreddits and blogs.

Best Regards,

/u/dream-hunter

July 23, 2026

■ ■ ■

Practical ways to improve your attractiveness and desirability for a Christian spouse

January 7, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I initially wrote this a while ago and posted it on Boundless, and it was summarily deleted. It was commented on in these two places but it is worthy of its own post here:

http://societyofphineas.wordpress.com/2013/11/14/a-woman-wants-a-king-not-a-peasant/http://sunshinemaryandthedragon.wordpress.com/2013/11/17/truthful-dating-and-relationship-advice-is-terribly-sexist-does-that-mean-reality-is-sexist-too/

————————–

To the women.

What men are attracted to: physical beauty. All things being equal (spiritual characteristics, femininity, etc.) a man will pick the most attractive female.

The good thing, however, is that all men have different tastes for what they find attractive. Some like black hair, some like brown, some like blonds, some like redheads. Some like different color eyes, some like different types of body shapes.

However, one of the things that turns most men off (note: most not all) is being overweight or obese. If you are overweight or obese and you want to have men ask you out I would suggest losing weight through good nutrition and exercise. The same would be true for men. Women don't want a man who is overweight or obese.

Again, all things being equal all men and all women would prefer to have their spouse be physically active and healthy.

This is not to say personality does not matter. It does. If there is a attractive woman that nags, is entitled, and otherwise makes a man's life a pain in the butt then these are qualities in her personality that will make him drop her as a potential mate.

Being spiritual is not an excuse to ignore the physical, and neither is being physical fit an excuse to ignore the spiritual. You want both. Be as physically attractive as you can, and seek after God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength.

Note: All of the tenets that feminism pushes onto women such as confidence, independence, strong attitude, etc in women is a turnoff for most men. We are looking for a spouse, not a business partner.

Conclusion: Women your physical beauty will get you in the door, and your personality and spirituality will make him want to keep you. While the latter is the most important, you cannot neglect the former if you want to get married.

————————–

To the men.

What women are attracted to: lots of different things including looks, athleticism, talent (musical and otherwise), high status, masculine personality, money, etc.

Proportions of these depend on the woman and you have no way to telling. However, the most important one to develop is a confident masculine personality, although the others are nice to have and can/should be worked on. The easiest way to improve your confidence is your posture, working out, etc.

Remember this men: your confidence is displayed in your posture, your walk, and your tone of voice. Studies show that non-verbals are 50-90% of the conversation. You can have all of the confidence in the world, but if it is not reflected in your body language you will fail.

If a Christian man goes up to a Christian woman with slumped shoulders, a downcast look in his eyes, is fidgting, and speaks quickly with a high tone of voice “let’s go out on a date” is he going to be successful? Absolutely not.

On the other hand, if a Christian man goes up to a Christian woman with his shoulders back, a smile on his face, makes direct eye contact with her, and says in a low tone masculine voice” “let’s go out on a date” is he going to be successful? A much higher percentage that the woman will say yes.

Easy ways you can work on your non-verbals and confidence from another commenter:

1. Start working out. Heavy weights to build muscle

2. Fix your nutrition if you’re overweight/obese. Add in more protein to help gain muscle

3. Work on your posture. Don’t slouch. Ever.

4. Work on your walking. Long strides, confidently. When you’re making any actions, slow and deliberate. If you have any nervous movement such as scratching, wiggling, RLS, etc eliminate it completely.

5. Become comfortable with space. When you’re sitting down instead of crossing legs or arms over yourself spread legs out and put your arm up on the chair. Get comfortable and relaxed in these power poses.

6. Make eye contact with everyone. Hold it and don’t look away first. Smile if you lock on for a few seconds and it continues. Never look down when talking to a woman as this indicates to her that [you are submissive to her].

7. Speak more slowly and deliberately so that your voice is lower in tone.

Obviously, these things are important, but more important is your spiritual walk. As is stated in Scripture about Jesus: “They were amazed at his teaching, because his words had authority.”

As a masculine, CHRISTIAN man you should be studying the Word, praying, meditating, fasting, etc so as to become more like Jesus. You should know the Scriptures well enough to speak with authority on your faith. If you don’t know the Scriptures or the power of God then how are you to be a responsible leader in your marriage?

Conclusion: Men your masculine personality and confidence will get you in the door, and your ability to lead her spiritually will make her want to keep you. While the latter is the most important, you cannot neglect the former if you want to get married.

———————–

Final conclusion: Both sexes should work on being more physically attractive and spiritually attractive.

However, men and women are different in what they look for in attractiveness. You need to know the population you are trying to sell yourself to if you wanted to get married.

A brief commentary to Christian woman who desire a husband

January 7, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a very simplified post on the two problems that women must confront in themselves if they desire a husband.

There's two main points that most Christians miss:

1. If a woman is having trouble being asked out then she needs to work on her physical attractiveness OR if she has a lot of men hanging around her but not asking her out then she is aiming too high.

Men are attracted to beauty. Exercise, nutrition, touch of make up, flattering feminine clothing, and all of these things to improve her physical attractiveness will help.

If she has men hanging around her then she is already physically attractive, but it is likely that she is not attracted to those that are around her. She will have to recalibrate her attraction sensors to the men around her instead. As an observer says, eliminating any hint of the entitlement, self delusion and princess mentality is key.

2. If a woman is having trouble staying in a relationship that is directed towards marriage then she needs to work on how to become more of a godly woman.

That would be a woman who is respectful, submissive, encouraging, and willing to go above and beyond for her man. If she is easily prone to criticism, gossip, and all other manner of unrighteous behavior then this will not help her case to get a man to ask her out.

These are two different responses to two different problems that women must be aware of. You need both to get into a relationship to where a man is going to want to commit to you.

To game or not to game

January 7, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I found the manosphere last January and voraciously read everything from it. From the PUAs (pick up artists), to the MGTOWs (men going their own way), to the tradosphere, and the various blogs of the Christian manosphere (orthosphere, protestants, etc.). Since the fall I have most of the blogs I peruse simply because I have less time; however, I have learned some very valuable lessons from them especially as I study the Scriptures more in depth.

However, let's delve into the topics at hand.

1. "Game" is poorly defined.

One of the biggest issues I've seen with "game" is that it's been poorly defined by it's supporters and detractors.

- The first crowd believes that "game" is a specific set of codified techniques that were "pioneered" by the PUAs in order to improve your relative attractiveness to a woman's in order to use other techniques to get a woman into bed.
- The second crowd believes that "game" is a toolbox insomuch that a tool such as a hammer can be used to do constructive things such as building furniture whereas it can also be used as a weapon to bash someone over the head.
- The third crowd believes that "game" is fundamentally about "charisma" or "self improvement" because masculinity is about building a man who is not just respect by women but by other men, children, colleagues in the workplace, etc. It is the ability to weild influence.
- Finally, there is a fourth depiction of game that Leap has been commenting on which is the one I most agree with having studied the Scripture more in depth. This is the depiction of game that it is inherently worldly in nature, and that mascunlity of the positive variety comes from being a masculine man of God as the Scripture define it.
- edit: There is a fifth depiction of game actually that I would say that many on the Christian manosphere would use. That would be "game" describes all masculine traits that are attractive to women. Whether they were previously learned from their fathers, society before it was feminized, or whatever is another debatable topic. I personally disagree with this viewpoint because most of the proponents who subscribe to this say that there's no way a Christian nice guy can be attractive without game, but that is simply not true (see: Jesus). There's also the matter of if "game" can be separated out into good/evil or neutrality.

While the Christian manosphere argues back and forth on whether "game" is good or not good, first you must define your definitions of what “game” actually is. This is necessary for any useful debate.

I am going under the assumption of the 4th point above. That “game” is inherently worldly and is therefore not of God.

2. Frame matters… or heart matters.

The main problem I find when Christians discuss whether to “game” or not is where is the heart of a man who is willing to use “game”?

If we, as Christians, agree that “game” is composed of words (rhema) and actions designed to facilitate feminine attraction, then we must conclude that what Jesus says on our hearts and subsequent actions is true:

> Matthew 12 (NASB)
>
> 33 “Either make the tree good and its fruit good, or make the tree bad and its fruit bad; for the tree is known by its fruit. 34 You brood of vipers, how can you, being evil, speak [c]what is good? For the mouth speaks out of that which fills the heart. 35 The good man brings out of his good treasure [d]what is good; and the evil man brings out of his evil treasure [e]what is evil. 36 But I tell you that every [f]careless word that people [g]speak, they shall give an accounting for it in the day of judgment. 37 For [h]by your words you will be justified, and [i]by your words you will be condemned.”

Likewise, Paul states in Galatians 5 (NASB):

> 16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not carry out the desire of the flesh. 17 For the flesh [g]sets its desire against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are in opposition to one another, so that you may not do the things that you [h]please. 18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the Law. 19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God. 22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law. 24 Now those who [k]belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires.

In Cane’s post Don’t shut your eyes when I turn off the lights there is some incisive commentary about why the heart matters.

The act of sex in marriage is holy because the heart is right with God, and act of fornication outside of marriage is evil because the heart is not right with God. These are not two acts that differ only in context. It is out of the heart from which these actions flow, and if the heart is walking in darkness the action is of darkness and if the heart is walking in light then the heart is in the light.

Likewise, one example of this is most clearly displayed when children apologize. If they feel that they are right then they will only begrudgingly apologize and must be forced to admit their perceived wrong doing. However, if they feel that they sincerely wronged the other person then they will go all out to make sure that the person they are apologizing to isn't offended, if there's anything they can do to help, and profusely saying sorry. Children wear their hearts on their sleeves.

Now, this may sound to many that "game" is indeed like a toolbox, but that is incorrect. "Game" at the heart of it's nature is inherently about wanting to be more attractive to the opposite sex. It is setting up a false idol of "attractiveness." It is essentially taking the woman off the pedastal and placing yourself upon it instead of God.

In fact, many of the more secular blogs have it almost correct and are more insightful than some Christians. They parrot that "any self improvement you do should be for you, not for women." If you do things in order to get women, then that itself is a form of neediness. And women are not attracted to neediness.

However, the correct response should be that you are becoming more masculine because you want to please God. Seek first His kingdom and His righteousness and all these things will be added to you.

3. What does godly masculinity look like as contrasted to by "game"?

Things that a godly Christian man may say and do may be the same as that which a PUA may say to a Christian woman. For example, a Christian man who is pursuing a Christian woman may tease her, set boundaries for the relationship, and tell her what to expect. These are the same things a player may do.

However, they aren't the same because of the intent of the heart behind the action. My intention is to grow a relationship toward marriage in a godly manner, while PUA is using the same actions to fornicate with the woman.

Don't get it backwards. Game is not a toolbox insomuch you take a tool and do things, or you have in mind a certain end goal and you choose a tool to do it. You start with the heart because out of the heart flows all things.

That said, this is not the end of the discussion.

4. Both the heart and the actions matter.

> 22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law.

One of the interesting things about "kindness" is the adaptability of the heart and the actions that flow forth from it.

We all know Christians who attempt to preach brimstone and hellfire to athiest which just drive them away from the gospel. Likewise, we know of Christians who are angry and can be violent against abortionists. Let me be clear, while there may be good intent in the heart about these things, the frame of reference is incorrect.

Kindness in Strong's is defined as:

> Strong's #5544: Kindness is goodness in action, sweetness of disposition, gentleness in dealing with others, benevolence, kindness, affability. The word describes the ability to act for the welfare of those taxing your patience. The Holy Spirit removes abrasive qualities from the character of one under His control.

One of the synonyms for kindness is also gentleness, and it is also gentleness that is defined as a synonym to the Greek word "Praos" which is used for humility, meekness, and gentleness in the Scripture.

An action that comes from the heart, as Christian walking in step with the Spirit, should show both humulity and the adaptability of kindness.

This is why I think game is unacceptable as a Christian. It's also why I believe that certain techniques which sound good in theory such as dread game are off of the mark.

Do the ends justify the means? Is it right to make your wife jealous (which the Bible says is of the flesh in Galatians 5) so that she is more attracted to you? Isn't that just from the desires of the flesh?

Examine your heart. Would you be able to stand before God and justify running dread game on your wife?

It certainly does not make it right for a wife to withhold form her husband (1 Cor 7), but to use the old cliche two wrongs do not make a right.

We are accountable for our words and actions before God. And there are other ways to assert Biblical leadership instead (which will be the topic of future posts).

5. Godly masculinity is shown through the fruits of the Spirit

Agape

> Ephesians 5 (NASB)
>
> 25 Husbands, love (agapao) your wives, just as Christ also loved (agapao) the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word (rhema), 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love (agapao) their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves (agapao) his own wife loves (agapao) himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church.

What does it mean for a husband to love his wife and Christ loved the Church?

It would be good of us to note that which is said in the Greek. The most important thing to note in this passage is that love (agapao) is used, and the second most important point to note is that the water of the Word (rhema) is used.

When I was looking at Scriptures there were two things that stood out. The Divine Expression or Jesus and His words which is Logos — John 1:1 in the beginning was the Word (Logos). You can think of Jesus and His fulfillment of the law with his teaching and actions as Logos. The all encompassing Scriptures themselves are referred to by either gramma (G1121 or graphe (G1124) (thanks to mdavid for the clarification). On the other hand, the spoken revelation of the Word is rhema.

Rhema is powerful — as God (Logos) spoke the world into being (Rhema), and man shall not live by bread alone but from every Word (rhema) that comes from the mouth of God. This is why it's important to pray out loud because the spoken Rhema word is powerful. Likewise, to others it gives life and death. The power of the tongue is enormous as it says in James, yet it is easily corrupted. Going back to the passage from Matthew 12 that I referenced earlier: "But I say unto you, That every idle word (Rhema) that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

The goal of the leadership of the man in a Christian marriage is to spur his wife to have a deeper relationship with God. And it is through his Words (rhema) that he must speak life that washes and cleanses her as just as Christ does his Church.

The goal is certainly not to make the wife happy. The goal is not to cater to the wife. The goal isn't even to do nice things for the wife even though these things are good. The goal is to cleanse her with your Words and Actions and spur her on towards righteousness.

This is why joy (chara) is needed even in the midst of hardship to set the example as to which a Christian wife can follow his lead towards being a better Christian.

This is why peace (eirene) — wholeness of one who is in Christ — is needed so that a man may not find validation is in wife or hold her above him on a pedastal.

This is why longsuffering/endurance (makrothumia) is needed because we all go through these periods of suffering even inflicted by our loved ones or ones that say they love us (wives, children, family friends).

This is why kindness (chrestotes) and humility (praos) and goodness (agathosune) are needed to be able to respond to conflict not in a self righteous manner but in a way to where differences can be resolved without giving in to the temptations of the flesh to escalate.

This is why self control is so important for a Christian man so that he does not give into his anger when his wife gets emotional and allow the situation to spiral out of control into the deeds of the flesh — "[i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these."

And as one who is faithful (pistis) may we never forget that our faith is of a godly persuasion. Many are called but few are chosen. It is not we who looked to Him first, but He that first loved us. That He sent his son into the world to forgive our sins, and that as we confess He is faithful and just to forgive our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

And before the conclusion of this post let me end it with a Scripture 1 Corinthians 13 (NASB):

> 4 Love is patient, love is kind and is not jealous; love does not brag and is not arrogant, 5 does not act unbecomingly; it does not seek its own, is not provoked, does not take into account a wrong suffered, 6 does not rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth; 7 [b]bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things.
>
> 8 Love never fails; but if there are gifts of [c]prophecy, they will be done away; if there are tongues, they will cease; if there is knowledge, it will be done away. 9 For we know in part and we prophesy in part; 10 but when the perfect comes, the partial will be done away.
>
> 11 When I was a child, I used to speak like a child, think like a child, reason like a child; when I [d]became a man, I did away with childish things. 12 For now we see in a mirror [e]dimly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then I will know fully just as I also have been fully known. 13 But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the [f]greatest of these is love.

——————————————————-

Conclusions

My conclusion must therefore be to eschew game in favor of masculinity that is rooted in Biblical righteouness. As Christians who are in Christ, we must bear good fruit. If we do not bear fruit we are cut off and cast into the fire. That is certainly not what we want.

> Ephesians 2 (NASB)
>
> 8 For by grace you have been saved through faith; and [h]that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; 9 not as a result of works, so that no one may boast. 10 For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand so that we would walk in them.

Game does not bear good fruit — whether it is from the heart or in deed — even if in the end things end up according to Scripture because it is inherently selfish. This is why it is evil.

God can use evil (game) for good, but do not mistake that because good may result from it that evil is good to do. Shall we sin all the more so that grace may abound? Certainly not. The Scripture is quite clear on this from Paul’s teaching in Romans 6.

Game is childish, and we act childish when we use it. It is selfish and of the world. Let’s put it away and put it behind us as we strive toward Biblical righteouness.

We have for ourselves in the Scriptures the example of Jesus and it can be parsed out what His character is like. That is what godly masculinity looks like, and that is what we should strive for.

I’ll probably write on this topic a bit more in the future as well, but this blog is meant to be more practical in nature so I’ll start talking about specific examples soon enough.

Christian Masculinity and Confidence

January 16, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It is an observable fact that God created women to be attracted to “confidence.” Therefore, it would behoove us to understand the aim of a Christian man whose primary goal is to serve God, but has not been gifted with celibacy (1 Cor 7:7).

We know that Satan likes to have cheap knockoffs of what God has ultimately planned for our lives. Self confidence or irrational self confidence, as espoused by “game”, is a poor knockoff of what Christian men are called to in godly masculinity.

Often times, we mistake “confidence” as something that a godly Christian man should have but that is incorrect. If we are to have confidence as Christian men it most definitely is not to be in ourselves.

So let’s explore what that would look like for a godly Christian man.

---

1. To understand confidence we must go to the Greek used in the New Testament.

There are two Biblical components of confidence that the NT writers use: Parrhesia and Peitho.

> παῤῥησία — parrhēsia — par-rhay-see’-ah — G3954 Strong’s
>
> From G3956 (pas) and a derivative of G4483 (Rheo); all out spokenness, that is, frankness, bluntness, publicity; by implication assurance: – bold (X -ly, -ness, -ness of speech), confidence, X freely, X openly, X plainly (-ness).
>
> πείθω — peithō — pi’-tho — G3982 Strong’s
>
> A primary verb; to convince (by argument, true or false); by analogy to pacify or conciliate (by other fair means); reflexively or passively to assent (to evidence or authority), to rely (by inward certainty): – agree, assure, believe, have confidence, be (wax) content, make friend, obey, persuade, trust, yield.

These words is used in many famous verses from the NT namely, Parrhesia — 31 times in the NT and thrice by Jesus. Once when Jesus said Lazarus was dead.

Once to the discples, John 16:25 “These things I have spoken to you in [f]figurative language; an hour is coming when I will no longer speak to you in [g]figurative language, but will tell you plainly (parrhesia) of the Father.

Once at the trial before the priests, John 18:19 The high priest then questioned Jesus about His disciples, and about His teaching. 20 Jesus answered him, “I have spoken openly (parrhesia) to the world; I always taught in [g]synagogues and in the temple, where all the Jews come together; and I spoke nothing in secret. 21 Why do you question Me? Question those who have heard what I spoke to them; they know what I said.”

Acts 4:13 Now as they observed the confidence (parrhesia) of Peter and John and understood that they were uneducated and untrained men, they were amazed, and began to recognize them [k]as having been with Jesus.

Acts 4:29 And [v]now, Lord, take note of their threats, and grant that Your bond-servants may speak Your word with all confidence (parrhesia), 30 while You extend Your hand to heal, and [w]signs and wonders take place through the name of Your holy [x]servant Jesus." 31 And when they had prayed, the place where they had gathered together was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak the word of God with boldness (parrhesia).

Peitho is used 55 times in the Gospel, thrice by Jesus.

The rich young ruler: Mark 10:24 And the disciples were amazed at his words. But Jesus said to them again,"Children, how difficult it is[b] [for those who trust (peitho) in riches] to enter the kingdom of God! 25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich person to enter the kingdom of God."

Jesus and Beelzebub: Luke 11:22 But when someone stronger than he attacks him and overpowers him, he takes away from him all his armor on which he had relied (peitho) and distributes his plunder.

Rich man and Lazarus: Luke 16:29 But Abraham *said, 'They have Moses and the Prophets; let them hear them.' 30 But he said, 'No, father Abraham, but if someone goes to them from the dead, they will repent!' 31 But he said to him, 'If they do not listen to Moses and the Prophets, they will not be persuaded (peitho) even if someone rises from the dead.'"

Romans 8:38 For I am convinced (peitho) that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, 39 nor height, nor depth, nor any other created thing, will be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Philipians 1:6 For I am confident (peitho) of this very thing, that He who began a good work in you will perfect it until the day of Christ Jesus.

---

2. What is interesting about these two words is that they denote the two qualities that should be developed by Christians:

Parrhesia is about a external boldness, especially through the spoken word (rheo), the same word that God used to create the heavens the earth.

Peitho is about an internal confidence, by which we have salvation.

As I discussed heavily in my previous post To game or not to game, we know that out of our hearts come our actions. Therefore, we know that an "internal confidence" must be developed before the "external boldness."

Thus, Parrhesia is therefore a product of Peitho.

However, Peitho itself is about the confidence we have in God, and we do not have confidence in God except manifested by the fruits of such confidence. Therefore, we know that there must be some fruit of "Peitho" in our lives that allows us to manifest

“Parrhesia.”

Can you spot which of the fruits leads is manifested by peitho (internal confidence) in God as contrasted to the definition of confidence from Merrium-Webster. Take a moment before moving on to the next section to think about it.

> con·fi·dence noun \ˈkän-fə-dən(t)s, -ˌden(t)s\
>
> 1. a feeling or belief that you can do something well or succeed at something
> 2. a feeling or belief that someone or something is good or has the ability to succeed at something
> 3. the feeling of being certain that something will happen or that something is true
>
> Galatians 5
>
> 22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law.

---

3. If you guessed all of them you would be correct, but the two that stand out the most are the following:

Faith (pistis) as it relates to our soul’s salvation and assurance in God, and His salvation and peace (eirene) as it relates to our emotional state.

> πίστις — pistis — pis’-tis — G4102
>
> From G3982 (peitho); persuasion, that is, credence; moral conviction (of religious truth, or the truthfulness of God or a religious teacher), especially reliance upon Christ for salvation; abstractly constancy in such profession; by extension the system of religious (Gospel) truth itself: – assurance, belief, believe, faith, fidelity.

A few things to note. First, pistis is a derivative of peitho which makes obvious sense. We are assured in our faith and salvation. Second, our faith is of a divine persuasion or origin — that is that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us (Rom 5:8). It is He who first called to us to repent and accept the gift so that no one can boast, and as we accept that gift we are recreated in Him to do good works (Eph 2:8-10).

> εἰρήνη — eirēnē — i-rah’-nay — G1515
>
> Probably from a primary verb εἴρω eirō (to join); peace (literally or figuratively); by implication prosperity: – one, peace, quietness, rest, + set at one again.

I’ve posted this before in the manosphere, but reading the wiki on eirene is worth understanding the full nature of how the word is used in regard to one of the two overarching emotional states Christians are to have (peace being one and the other being joy):

> Peace is the result of resting in a relationship with God.[13] Peace is a tranquility, a state of rest, that comes from seeking after God, or, the opposite of chaos.

Peace or eiréné is God's gift of wholeness and derived from eirō, "to join, tie together into a whole",[14] properly, when all essential parts are joined together as one or as a whole.The word "peace" comes from the Greek word eirene, the Greek equivalent for the Hebrew word shalom, which expresses the idea of wholeness, completeness, or tranquility in the soul that is unaffected by the outward circumstances or pressures. The word eirene strongly suggests the rule of order in place of chaos.

When a person is dominated by peace, he has a calm, inner stability that results in the ability to conduct himself peacefully, even in the midst of circumstances that would normally be very nerve-wracking, traumatic, or upsetting…Rather than allowing the difficulties and pressures of life to break him, a person who is possessed by peace is whole, complete, orderly, stable, and poised for blessing.[15]

Jesus is described as the Prince of Peace, who brings peace to the hearts of those who desire it. He says in John 14:27:[16] "Peace I leave with you, My peace I give to you; not as the world gives do I give to you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid". NKJV The only way to get this peace is to trust in the Jewish God, YHWH, as Isaiah says, "The steadfast of mind You will keep in perfect peace, because he trusts in You".[17]

"Peace is not the absence of conflict, but the presence of God no matter what the conflict". -Anonymous

"Therefore, since we have been justified through faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ".[18] "May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace as you trust in him, so that you may overflow with hope by the power of the Holy Spirit".[19]

When having peace with God through the sacrifice of Jesus, we are then able to make peace between men, and also between men and God, also called "evangelism". It is understood that those who have peace with God, and are therefore sons of God, will act like their Father in heaven and become those who are able to make peace, or be peace makers, as Jesus says, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called sons of God"[20] and "If God were your Father, you would love Me, for I proceeded forth and have come from God, for I have not even come on My own initiative, but He sent Me".[21] So by saying this, Jesus is stating that only those who have received peace with God through Himself, the "sons of God", are able to make peace, no one else. These sons of God are specified by John when he says, "None of those who are children of God continue to sin, for God's very nature is in them; and because God is their Father, they cannot continue to sin".[22] Paul also says, "Never pay back evil for evil. Take thought for what is right in the sight of all men".[23] Peace, in the Bible, is much more than just a lack of yelling or lack of war, it is the presence of YHWH allowed into a place and a person. Only with the Jewish God is there peace, as

> Isaiah writes, "'There is no peace,' says the Lord, 'for the wicked.'"[24] Jesus is the Jewish God,[25][26] and He is alive.[27]

Now, we can see why irrational self confidence, as espoused by "game" is a poor knockoff of what eirene is to a Christian man striving for godly masculinity.

The very fact in knowing that we are whole in Christ, with or without a woman, should be reflected in our character and our words. Nothing turns off a woman faster than neediness, and if you need a woman to make you whole, then you are not walking in the perfect peace of your salvation which is God.

Conclusions

The greatest commandment.

> Deuteronomy 6:5 "You shall love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might.
>
> Matthew 22:35 One of them, [n]a lawyer, asked Him a question, testing Him, 36 "Teacher, which is the great commandment in the Law?" 37 And He said to him, "'You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.' 38 This is the great and [o]foremost commandment. 39 The second is like it, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' 40 On these two commandments depend the whole Law and the Prophets."
>
> Mark 12:30 and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength.'
>
> Luke 10:27 And he answered, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your strength, and with all your mind; and your neighbor as yourself."

I find it interesting there is a passage difference between Matthew, Mark and Luke. Mark and Luke include strength there, but it is not present in Deuteronomy or Matthew. There's commentary on this here — http://www.studylight.org/ls/ds/index.cgi?a=520 — though I'm only going to discuss 3 at the moment.

The pulpit commentary suggests:

- Heart; which among the Hebrews was considered to be the seat of the understanding, is here considered as the home of the affections and the seat of the will.
- Soul; the living powers, the animal life.
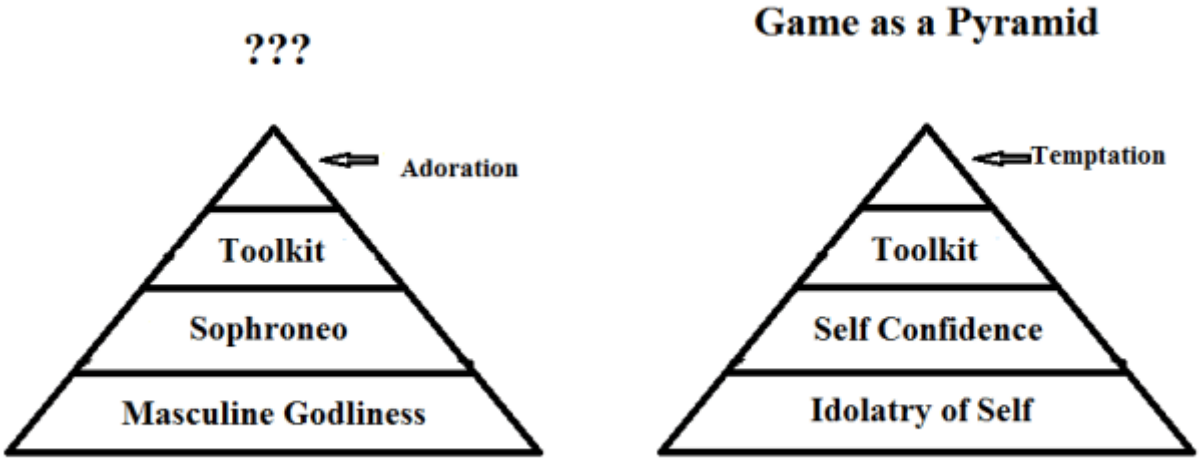
- Mind; διαμοίᾳ, intellectual powers. These are to be the seat and abode of the love enjoined.

And these mesh well with what we have learned about in this post about our confidence in Christ.

- In our hearts, we have eirene, the peace of God which is a wholeness with Him.
- In our souls, we have peitho/pistis, the faith and assurance of salvation from God.
- In our minds/might, we have parrhesia, the intellectual understanding that leads to an external boldness of which we can freely speak to others because of God.

As a Christian man speaking to my brothers in Christ, I would encourage you not to look to develop the “self confidence” that the world loves and that is an illusion of attractiveness, but to love God with all of your heart, soul, and mind/might. This is the confidence that we are called to in Christ that will be attractive to Christian women.



> 1 Corinthians 13:11 When I was a child, I used to speak like a child, think like a child, reason like a child; when I became a man, I did away with childish things.

Throw away confidence as a childish thing.

Instead, walk in the peace/wholeness of God in your life, grow in your faith and assurance of your salvation, and speak boldly of the things God is working on in your life and the lives of others. This fullness in Him is what God has intended for His all humans, and this is what is attractive to another facet of His creation (women).

The foundations of Christian masculinity

January 17, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

vs.

Images from Further Ruminations on Game by Donal Graeme

So there's a lot that has been going on in the Christian manosphere over the past couple of days at Free Northerner's, Donal Graeme's, SeriouslyPleaseDropit's, Cane Caldo's and Zippy's blogs about game.

There is definitely progress being made, but the progress is incomplete.

As I discussed in Christian masculinity and confidence, the foundation of confidence comes from a fruitful walk with God as an outcropping of inner peace, faith, and boldness expression that comes from Eph 2:8-10.

Sophroneo is a good estimate of the counterpart between confidence, but because a soundness of mind in the Scriptures is related to self control and faith it is blended with them as the fruits of the Spirit. Neither is a toolkit needed. The approximation of godly masculinity directly to adoration and idolatry of self (dark triad traits) directly to temptation are straight forward aside from actions.

The blindness of men is often not in the actions that we take, but it is in either the hardness of heart or deception of the heart because out of the heart flow our actions.

In particular, the foundations of godly masculinity are found straight from the Bible.

> 2 Peter 1 (NASB)
>
> 3 seeing that His divine power has granted to us everything pertaining to life and godliness, through the true knowledge of Him who called us [d]by His own glory and [e]excellence. 4 [f]For by these He has granted to us His precious and magnificent promises, so that by them you may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world by lust. 5 Now for this very reason also, applying all diligence, in your faith supply moral [g]excellence, and in your moral excellence, knowledge, 6 and in your > knowledge, self-control, and in your self-control, perseverance, and in your perseverance, godliness, 7 and in your godliness, brotherly kindness, and in your brotherly kindness, love. 8 For if these qualities are yours and are increasing, they render you neither useless nor unfruitful in the true knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9 For he who lacks these qualities is blind or short-sighted, having forgotten his purification from his former sins. 10 Therefore, brethren, be all the more diligent to make certain about His calling and choosing you; for as long as you practice these things, you will never stumble; 11 for in this way the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will be abundantly supplied to you.

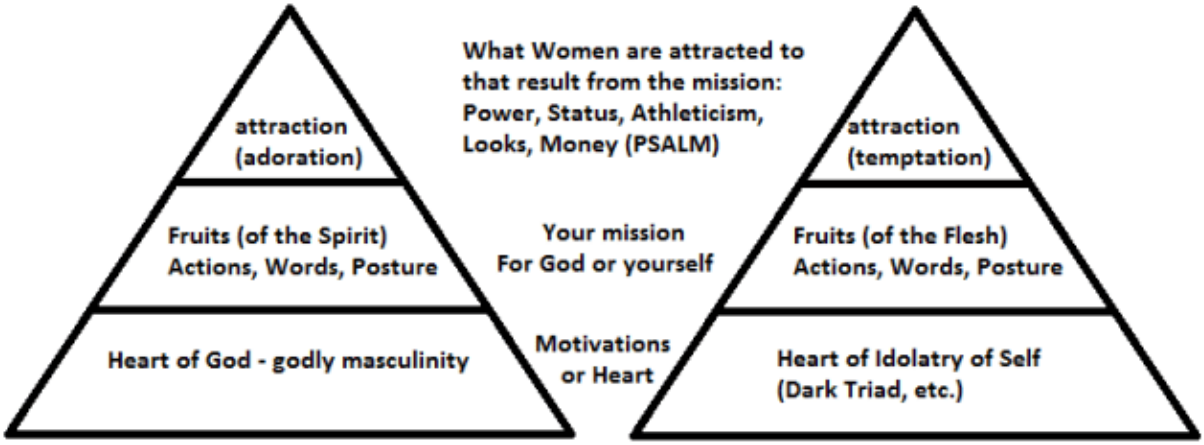
Therefore, we know how we are to grow as Christians walking in godly masculinity.

Faith -> Moral excellence -> Knowledge -> Self Control -> Perseverence -> Godliness -> Brotherly Kindness -> Love

The Greek words are particularly illuminating:

- Faith – Pistis – Persuasion, moral conviction, reliance on God
- Virtue / Moral excellence – arete – From G730 (of male), properly manliness, valor, excellence, praise, virtue
- Knowledge – gnosis – knowledge / science
- Self control – egkrateia – temperance
- Patience – hupomone – endurance, long suffering
- Godliness – eusebeia – godliness, piety, holiness
- Brotherly kindness – Philadelphia – brotherly love/affection
- Love / Charity – agape – unconditional love

There are a couple important points to note here.



First, each of these qualities build on each other. Out of faith comes moral excellence to progress in God-likeness. And by now knowing what is good (and the one that is good is God) we gain the knowledge of the difference between the flesh and the Spirit. From that we exercise self control which is our free will to choose the Spirit or the flesh, and battling with the flesh over a long period of time we have endurance and patience in the faith. This is what godly masculinity is. Out of faith comes the knowledge and ability to be Christ-like and the application of Christ-likeness.

Second, it is only after godliness of self builds truly into brotherly love and charity. The fruit of serving others in the church is useless, if not built from a foundation of character within a man that is striving to be godly.

Third, how many Christian “nice guys” are actually progressing in their walks with God? I hate to sound defeatist but most Christians in today’s churches are there because it’s more of a social club or they think it is the right thing to do. Christians are to be continually growing and changing not just serving. If there is no change, then there is no growth.

Therefore, a pyramid would look like this:

Note: I like the recodified Donal's LAMPS to PSALM.

Obviously, it can be broken down further into components of the fruits (of the Spirit or flesh) that are attractive to women when you are doing them. However, I am not going to do that at this present juncture.

edit: revision after discussing with Donal

Christian masculinity, the nice guy, and neediness

January 17, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To follow up on my previous post on Christian masculinity and confidence, I want to provide Christian men with some insight into why being a “nice guy” is unattractive. I am going to follow this up with a post on practical advice on what peace, peitho/pistis, and parrhesia look when interacting with Christian women in the future.

The larger point of this blog is not merely understanding conceptually what Christian masculinity looks like but to put it in action.

> James 1 (NASB)
>
> 22 But prove yourselves doers of the word, and not merely hearers who delude themselves. 23 For if anyone is a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like a man who looks at his [x]natural face in a mirror; 24 for once he has looked at himself and gone away, [y]he has immediately forgotten what kind of person he was. 25 But one who looks intently at the perfect law, the law of liberty, and abides by it, not having become a forgetful hearer but [z]an effectual doer, this man will be blessed in [aa]what he does.

The adjective “natural” in front of face is the word

γένεσις — genesis — ghen’-es-is — G1078

From the same as G1074; nativity; figuratively nature: – generation, nature (-ral).

The nature of your heart as a Christian man is reflected in who you are and what you do. This is the mindset from which you need to consider your interactions with women.

Women have almost the innate ability to instinctively analyze posture and motivation because they are created by God to be creatures of feeling. They look at you and see what you do and they getting feelings from it.

When you change your behavior in an attempt to make a woman like you because you are interested in her then you are being a fake — a fraud, not genuine, a charlatan, a sham. She will instinctively read this in your posture and actions. You are pedastalizing her because you believe she is special or requires some special handling.

You should treat her the same way you would treat her as when you interact with your family and friends. That is the real you. The one who is able to joke around with, flirt, make playful fun of, and interact with naturally in your relationships with others.

If she doesn’t like the “real you” and the personality that comes with it then that’s OK. Not everyone in this world is going to like you. Remember, you’re on your search for the one woman who will marry you. Not 10 or even 20 women that are interested in you.

Women will never respect a man caters to her whims, and no one likes liars and fakers. Much less liars and fakers who call themselves Christians.

When you can understand this, then you can finally understand the disgust at women have for betas. Betas put on a fake personality to try to “win the girl” and are lying to themselves and others.

This is what Christian men need to learn — don’t change your behaviors for a woman. If you’re going to change your behaviors, then take off the old and put on the new. Do it for God as a new creation in Christ. Never change yourself for a woman.

Women know if you’re saying and doing things because you are trying to impress them. They’ll think it will be amusing and will accept your help. Often with a smile. They’ll thank you profusely. But they won’t be attracted to you. If you’re going to help women do it because you are willing to serve them as a brother in Christ. Women can detect the difference — the neediness of approval and validation that you seek from her — because it will show in your body language. Women are more in tune with subtle social cuing.

Additionally, because you are pedalstalizing her she will innately feel pressured to perform up to those expectations of the pedastal that you have put her on. This is why women typically despise being the leader in a relationship — there is the expectation of responsibility that comes with it.

Always examine your heart. Your underlying motivations. Remember, God looks at your heart. Don’t do things because they will be able to please men or women. Do things because you will please God. Your mission is to be a masculine Christian man for God. Women will naturally follow from this.

edit: As Donal pointed out, if you are a “genuinely nice guy” and have no illusions of pedastalization or don’t change your behavior around women then you need to grow because you are feminine and unmanly. See this more recent post if that is your issue.

God doesn’t owe you anything

January 17, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Many manosphere and PUA blogs have harped on this point before. However, many Christians don’t consider this from the Christian perspective.

Donal had a post on this which explores some of the concepts, but this is my take.

Consider the story of Job. He is a blessed man, but God is the initiator in the discussion with Satan! God brings up his case before Satan, and then He allows Satan to tempt him. And yet, Job still has the correct perspective.

> Job 1 (NASB)
>
> “Naked I came from my mother’s womb,
> And naked I shall return there.
> The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away.
> Blessed be the name of the Lord.”

We are blessed because God has given us life, and that He has chose us.

> Romans 5 (NASB)
>
> 6 For while we were still helpless, at the right time Christ died for the ungodly. 7 For one will hardly die for a righteous man; [d]though perhaps for the good man someone would dare even to die. 8 But God demonstrates His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

What more then does He owe us?

The correct perspective is that we owe Him a huge debt that we can never repay. And there are many parables on this very fact such as the Parable of the Unforgiving Servant, Parable of the Master and the Servant, etc.

Second, consider my favorite parable, the parable of the Talents. This parable is particularly illuminating in a variety of ways because of the way it goes against many modern concepts that Christians unknowingly fall prey to.

> Matthew 25:14-30 (NASB) — Parable of the Talents
>
> 14 “For it is just like a man about to go on a journey, who called his own slaves and entrusted his possessions to them. 15 To one he gave five [a]talents, to another, two, and to another, one, each according to his own ability; and he went on his journey. 16 Immediately the one who had received the five talents went and traded with them, and gained five more talents. 17 In the same manner the one who had received the two talents gained two more. 18 But he who received the one talent went away, and dug a hole in the ground and hid his [b]master’s money.

The first revelation of the talents is that this parable is not talking literally about money. This parable is about your life. The talents are your life and what you do with it. The expression of the responsibility with money is also the responsibility you are to have with your life. What are you going to do with it?

The second is made immediately clear by the first point: ~~Personality responsibility~~ Stewardship [1]. Those of us entrusted with talents — and talents in the body of Christ are varied — and we have a personal responsibility to use them in a manner worthy of God.

[1] Correction analysis here.

The third point is that life is not fair. Why does one receive 5 talents? Why does one receive 2 talents? Why does one receive 1 talent? If we believe that God created us and formed us, and we know that God knows us better than ourselves and our own abilities then we know that "He gives to us each according to our abilities." The key is not that some have received more and some have received less; it is that you are to do with your ability what God has given you.

> 19 "Now after a long time the master of those slaves *came and *settled accounts with them. 20 The one who had received the five talents came up and brought five more talents, saying, 'Master, you entrusted five talents to me. See, I have gained five more talents.' 21 His master said to him, 'Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your [c]master.'
>
> 22 "Also the one who had received the two talents came up and said, 'Master, you entrusted two talents to me. See, I have gained two more talents.' 23 His master said to him, 'Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your master.'

This is where the parable diverts into talking about the kingdom of God. We are to be responsible with what we have been given for God, and to reap a reward. We are to store up treasures in heaven, but that doesn't mean we won't be blessed here on earth insomuch as God deigns to bless ministries.

Many of God's commands are conditional:

- Honor your father and mother… then you will live a long full life in the land that LORD your God is giving you.
- If you love me you will obey my commands.
- If I shut up the heavens so that there is no rain, or if I command the locust to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among My people, and My people [d]who are called by My name humble themselves and pray and seek My face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, will forgive their sin and will heal their land.

> 24 “And the one also who had received the one talent came up and said, ‘Master, I knew you to be a hard man, reaping where you did not sow and gathering where you scattered no seed. 25 And I was afraid, and went away and hid your talent in the ground. See, you have what is yours.’
>
> 26 “But his master answered and said to him, ‘You wicked, lazy slave, you knew that I reap where I did not sow and gather where I scattered no seed. 27 Then you ought to have put my money [d]in the bank, and on my arrival I would have received my money back with interest. 28 Therefore take away the talent from him, and give it to the one who has the ten talents.’
>
> 29 “For to everyone who has, more shall be given, and he will have an abundance; but from the one who does not have, even what he does have shall be taken away. 30 Throw out the worthless slave into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Without even going into the consequences of the servant who hid his talents/life, the most interesting part of the last section of the parable to me has always been that to those who have shown responsibility with things God will often give more.

If you follow anything on the financial side of things Dave Ramsey recently had a column on 20 Things the Rich Do Every Day. The backlash from this blog is amazing (you can google it + the commentary that Dave has on the blog itself), but it shows that people don’t understand what personal responsibility is.

The habits that you build that encourage growth (reading your Bible, prayer, fasting, listening to God, serving others) are self perpetuating and build responsibility. Likewise, the habits that you don’t create in the list above are also self perpetuating. Out of the mindset come actions and actions for habits.

Therefore, riddle me this.

How can God entrust many “Christian nice guys” with wives when they aren’t personally responsible for growth in their own lives and don’t have experience serving others?

Christian nice guys are stunted in growth

January 17, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As you may very well know, Christian “nice guys” are often compared with deadbeats or unemployed man-boys that live in their parents’ basement that play video games and don’t take responsibility to be intentional with women.

The message to many of these men in the church from pastors and organizations such as Mark Driscoll, Dobson, FotF, and others is to “man up and marry and serve more.”

The irony is that they are part right and part wrong. The message to “man up” not so many words is a good one. However, it must be divorced from “marry and serve more.”

Dumping responsibility on a “boy” or “man-boy” who has not developed a sense of responsibility will only make the problem worse. You see this all of the time as Christian nice guys marry women only when they reach the wall, and why the Christian divorce rate is sky high.

> Putting a “burden” on the back of a Christian nice guy who is unprepared to accept it will only break him and his marriage.

First, we must understand what the feminization of the Church has caused, which is that men are to be more like women. Therefore, we have our first revelation. Christian nice guys have the same mindset as women do.

- Christian nice guys want to feel loved. Not respected.
- Christian nice guys are fearful.
- Christian nice guys are dependent.
- Christian nice guys are more emotional.
- Christian nice guys are passive.
- Christian nice guys try to be sensitive.
- Christian nice guys tend to be weak.
- Christian nice guys tend to be exceedingly self critical.
- Christian nice guys tend to be too accepting or accomodating.

Since many men now grow up either with passive, weak, emotional, fathers or have no fathers at all but single mothers, there is no one to teach “boys” to become “men” so they become like “women” instead. This is precisely why they are unattractive to women.

The key to unlock this is what is the key to becoming a masculine man?

Traditionally, masculinity was forged in adolescence where the father talked to the son about women, sex, and life, and they also bonded over challenges in activities with teaching.

The primary conclusion that we must make as we connect the dots is that boys have to overcome challenges to be men. As I said to Seriouslypleasedropit in the previous thread,

> Most Christian men are stuck in the prison of their own mind of which they are afraid to leave.

And here is where the change needs to occur.

Christian nice guys MUST be prepared to start to be uncomfortable and to grow. If they are not prepared to grow, they are not prepared to become men and will wallow in their situation of their choosing.

Masculinity is forged in difficult situations. To overcome difficult situations, you have to put yourself in uncomfortable situations because the stress of such situations is what is going to force you to adapt or die trying. Whether there is a success or failure there is a learning experience, and it is from a learning experience from which masculinity is going to take hold in the fertile soil and sprout.

However, this is the key. Most boys as they're learning are willing to fail as they do things. Yet, there is encouragement from the father to keep trying and eventually they succeed. If you challenge boys to impossible situations they will ultimately give up and stop trying eventually often times because they do not know what to do which is making them fail. This is why throwing Christian nice guys into man up marriage situations is a horrendous idea.

Therefore, the path to growth must be measurable incremented steps. Failure is inevitable. But there will be some successes, and there will be growth. This is how men are forged. And it helps to have men around you who are like minded.

> Proverbs 27:17
>
> Iron sharpens iron, So one man sharpens another.

To start growing you must be prepared to be uncomfortable and face your fears.

The following prayer is something like I have prayed for everyday for the past 6 months, and in that time I have seen immense growth. I pray that many of you take it to heart too.

> Heavenly father,
> Place me in an uncomfortable situation today [with other people], and help me to overcome it and make the right decisions. But even if I don't use the situation to teach me something about You.
>
> In Jesus' name, Amen.

Be aware. When you ask God for something be prepared for Him to answer it because He will.

The fundamental nature of Christianity

January 18, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Although this post is about the fundamental nature of Christianity, it will also explore the masculinity as it relates to a wife.

Here's a question to ponder:

> What makes humans different from animals?

This is actually an interesting question because it has far reaching Biblical ramifications for the lives of Christians.

First, let's go back to Genesis to see what God says about humans.

> Genesis 1 (NASB)
>
> 24 Then God said, "Let the earth bring forth living creatures after [ag]their kind: cattle and creeping things and beasts of the earth after [ah]their kind"; and it was so. 25 God made the beasts of the earth after [ai]their kind, and the cattle after [aj]their kind, and everything that creeps on the ground after its kind; and God saw that it was good.
>
> 26 Then God said, "Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [ak]sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth." 27 God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them. 28 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth." 29 Then God said, "Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed that is on the [an]surface of all the earth, and every tree [ao]which has fruit yielding seed; it shall be food for you; 30 and to every beast of the earth and to every bird of the [ap]sky and to every thing that [aq]moves on the earth [ar]which has life, I have given every green plant for food"; and it was so. 31 God saw all that He had made, and behold, it was very good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.

Thus, one of the fundamental ways humans are different from animals is that we were made in the image of God. Quite obvious. But it bears note that the creation of animals was good (Hebrew: tob), but the creation of humans was very good (Hebrew: meod tob).

Secondly, consider the next passage.

> Genesis 2 (NASB)
>
> 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall > not [n]eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die."

Here, God gives man a choice. And a choice means two things — two things that God imbued innately into man when He created them.

1. That we have the ability to consider actions and consequences
2. That we can overcome our [animal] behavior

These two choices are the essence of what we would call "free will."

Now, consider a third passage.

> Genesis 3 (NASB)
>
> Now the serpent was more crafty than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said to the woman, "Indeed, has God said, 'You shall not eat from [a]any tree of the garden'?" 2 The woman said to the serpent, "From the fruit of the trees of the garden we may eat; 3 but from the fruit of the tree which is in the middle of the garden, God has said, 'You shall not eat from it or touch it, or you will die.'" 4 The serpent said to the woman, "You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil." 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.

The most interesting thing about this passage is that this is before the fall. Since God had imbued humanity with the ability to make choices, we know that innately that humanity has the ability to be tempted. The far reaching ramifications go back to the second point:

Without the ability to be tempted, humans do not have free will. Without the ability to be tempted, humans do not have the ability to make a choice whether to flee from temptation or give in to it. Without the ability to be tempted, we would not be able to reason the actions or consequences of our behavior. The free will we have — the ability to be tempted — is something that God made in us, and unlike the animals, it is very good.

As Christians, this should give new meaning to your understanding of temptation. This should give you new meaning to the understanding of the Lord's prayer.

> Matthew 6 (NASB)
>
> 9 "Pray, then, in this way: 'Our Father who is in heaven, Hallowed be Your name. 10 'Your kingdom come. Your will be done, On earth as it is in heaven. 11 'Give us this day [e]our daily bread. 12 'And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. 13 'And do not lead us into temptation, but deliver us from [f]evil. [g][For Yours is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.']

For God has created humans with the ability to be tempted, yet we should pray that He not allow us to be tempted. Just as 1 Corinthians 10 states:

> 13 No temptation has overtaken you but such as is common to man; and God is faithful, who will not allow you to be tempted beyond what you are able, but with the temptation will provide the way of escape also, so that you will be able to endure it.

Now, what does this teach us about the nature of the flesh versus that of the Spirit?

> Galatians 5 (NASB)
>
> 16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not carry out the desire of the flesh. 17 For the flesh [g]sets its desire against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are in opposition to one another, so that you may not do the things that you [h]please. 18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the Law. 19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God. 22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law. 24 Now those who [k]belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires.

The nature of the flesh is that of the selfish and the now. It is about instant gratification. It is an attitude of “what can you do for me?” It is divisive. It sets people against one another. It is every man for himself.

But the nature of the Spirit is that of the selfless and the eternal. The one who is in God is able to look past the selfishness and the now. He is able to exercise free will, and in doing so walk into the freedom that Christ has gifted to those who receive it.

When Adam and Eve sinned in the fall, it was about choosing their desires — their self — over that of God. Selfishness is focused inward, but God is focused outward to relationships.

As Jesus says in the parable of the rich young ruler,

> 16 And someone came to Him and said, “Teacher, what good thing shall I do that I may obtain eternal life?” 17 And He said to him, “Why are you asking Me about what is good? There is only One who is good; but if you wish to enter into life, keep the commandments.”

First, Jesus corrects him because there is no one good but God. And it is only in God that we can do good things. Any else is inherently selfish because we are fallen.

> Ephesians 2 (NASB)
>
> 8 For by grace you have been saved through faith; and [a]that not of yourselves, > it is the gift of God; 9 not as a result of works, so that no one may boast. 10 For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand so that we would walk in them.

The freedom/free will that God has given us in Him is to exercise our freedom to do good and overcome temptations.

Those that give into the the nature of the flesh exercise no free will. As one famous song goes,

> You and me baby ain't nothin' but mammals. So let's do it like they do on the Discovery Channel.

Therefore, we know that the fundamental nature of Christianity is this:

> Titus 2 (NASB)
>
> 11 For the grace of God has appeared, [f]bringing salvation to all men, 12 [g]instructing us to deny ungodliness and worldly desires and to live sensibly, righteously and godly in the present age, 13 looking for the blessed hope and the appearing of the glory of [h]our great God and Savior, Christ Jesus, 14 who gave Himself for us to redeem us from every lawless deed, and to purify for Himself a people for His own possession, zealous for good deeds.

God desires to have a relationship with all men, and that all men live together in agapao love. Christianity is about unity in relationships — with God and with others.

This is the end of the discussion on the nature of Christianity because we know what Christianity is about: unity in relationships with God and others.

Therefore, as men of God striving to grow in Him, those of us who want to grow in godly masculinity and who seek a wife need to do two things:

1. Master our desires so that we are not enslaved by them. This is an exercise of free will, and it is fundamental to the nature of humans. Will you give into temptation or not? Will you choose godliness over evil?
2. Start to look outwardly — to give freely as Christ has given for us — showing the mastery of Christ in our own body as a witness to others.

To master these concepts is the essence of godly manhood because we know that women look to men for leadership.

The mastery over the desires of the flesh results in elimination of neediness and validation. This changes how you act and what you say, and it will make you more attractive to women.

To master your neediness for a woman is to understand the function of wife to a husband. She is not a completion of you, just a helpmeet to you.

> When you expect a woman to meet a need that she is not created to meet, she will become unhappy because she bears a greater burden of responsibility that was not meant to be.

This is the mindset needed to understand the role of a wife in godly marriage, and it will pay dividends in your own search.

Understand then, that this is the same as Paul's thorn we face as single Christian men looking to find a godly wife, which may seem hopeless.

> 2 Corinthians 10 (NASB)
>
> 9 And He has said to me, "My grace is sufficient for you, for power is perfected in weakness." Most gladly, therefore, I will rather boast [c]about my weaknesses, so that the power of Christ may dwell in me.

As a good wife is a gift from God, I would like to receive this gift. But I don't need it, even though man was not meant to be alone. His grace is sufficient for me, and his power will be perfected in my weakness.

Self improvement versus God improvement

January 18, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

“Self improvement” is one of the many ways that the PUAs and other lifestyle manosphere sites use to build an “attractive man” that women want to be around. However, “self improvement” at its core is obviously about the self. It is inherently selfish and prideful. Therefore, we eschew it because that is not what God has called us to.

The mindset, however, is indeed correct. We must understand as Christians that things we may do and things the world may do may look similar, but we do them for different purposes and intents. This will become more clear as I talk about this further.

One of the big things about “self improvement” in the manosphere is getting men to exercise and build a muscular physique. On the surface, this seems relatively innocuous, but it’s looking at things from the wrong lens.

For example, let’s examine the most recent missions trip that I went on.

Because I workout and exercise regularly, I was able to help out with some of the more difficult manual labor tasks in regard to construction of a feeding center and school. This is beneficial for the kingdom of God.

Obviously, it would be a lie to say that I would just work out to be able to assist the kingdom of God better wherever I go, and that I don’t care about what I look like. But, it is at least a start.

Our motivations for “God improvement” should therefore come from what we know in Scripture. Matthew 28 is a clear command to all Christians. Therefore, the question I must ask for myself over anything that I do is,

> How does doing X,Y,Z make me a better ambassador for Christ?

This is the lens of how we are to examine our actions and motivations.

Like it or not, appearances do matter.

All non-Christians in the US know that gluttony is a sin. Therefore, as a witness to those non-Christians should I eat correctly and exercise? You betcha.

The discipline acquired from regularly scheduling exercise and discipline yourself in eating does extend towards Scripture. The more self control you have the easier it is to exercise self control.

> Again, the problem with most Christian nice guys is not actions and words, it is mindset.
>
> Although having a system with examples would be nice.[1]

Parables are not understood by unbelievers because they do not have the correct frame of reference. Even Christians that have been Christians for 40-50 years can find new concepts and teachings within parables because of gaining a greater understanding (mindset) of who God is and how He works through people and relationships.

Is surfing the internet when I'm bored making me a better ambassador for Christ? No. What value is there in that?

Is working out and eating correctly making me a better ambassador for Christ? Yes.

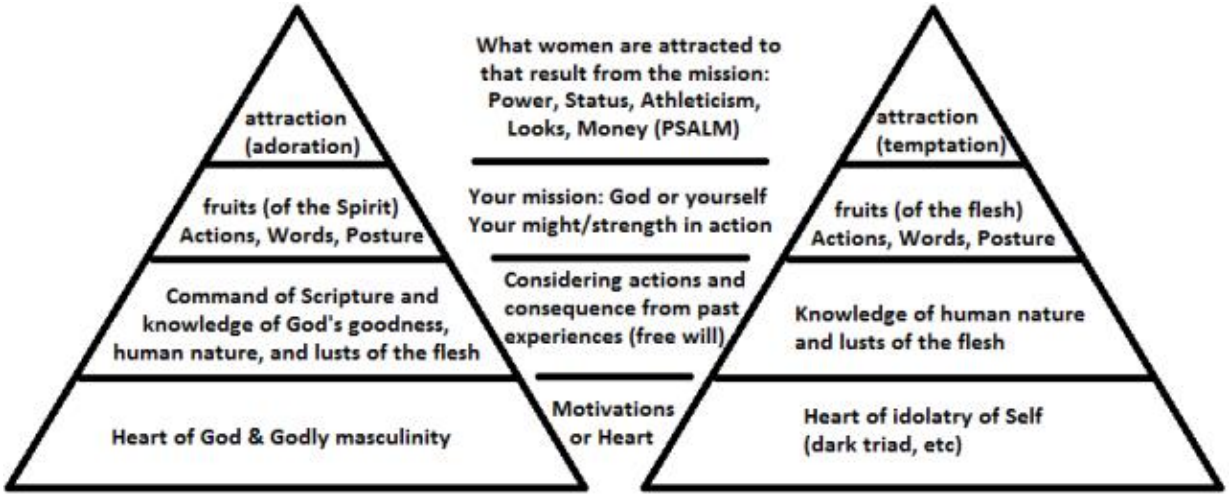
> 1 Timothy 4:8 For physical training is of some value, but godliness has value for all things, holding promise for both the present life and the life to come.

Is meditating, reading the Scriptures, praying, fasting, etc. making me a better ambassador for Christ? Yes.

Is learning how to talk with men and women of all ages well without stuttering making me a better ambassador for Christ? Yes. Christianity is all about relationships. How you grow in a relationship with God and with your brothers and sisters in Christ.

Is learning a new hobby and mastering it making me a better ambassador for Christ? Yes, if you can make friends and eventually share the gospel with them, or develop increased fellowship with your brothers and sisters in Christ.

Everyone knows that public speaking is a learned skill. Almost no one is good at it when they start. Can improvement in public speaking make you a better ambassador for Christ? Absolutely.



Is learning how to converse with others effective going to make you a better ambassador for God? Surely.

"Self improvement" as a Christian is not wrong because of the "improvement" but because of the "self."

However, the biggest trap that a Christian man may fall into is that he may get too focused on the improvement "itself," and neglect to leverage any of the improvement for the gospel or to obey God.

This is the difference between me telling my brothers in Christ to eat right and workout because it will make them more attractive to women, but to eat right and workout because God hates gluttony and slothfulness. Intentions matters. The fact that it may make women more attracted is just a nice side effect of obeying God's commands.

As I talked about in the Foundations of Christian Masculinity, it is the heart for God or the heart for self that matters.

Therefore, strip off the old habits which are fruitless. Those of laziness, watching TV, surfing the Internet, being fearful of men and women, and the like. And put on new habits to embrace the calling of an ambassador for Christ.

Set your heart on God, and grow in a way that will nurture — or as the PUAs say… bring value to — His kingdom.

Even if you only give a part of your self "improvement" to God, He will take what you give Him and use it for his glory. Then you will know what it means to know that He first called you, and be willing to give him your most important resource that you own: time.

Know this, God can redeem "self" improvement for Himself. So it is not a sunk cost.

In conclusion, it is therefore important to know what gifts God has called you to as well as your mission/occupation in life apart from the gospel so as to be excellent in all that you do and to know what you may need to work on to grow as a new creation in Christ.

As was stated earlier, improvement that the PUAs may do such as workout, eat healthy, read a lot, etc. may look similar to what we should be doing as Christians. These habits are not bad because they are focused on the self and how to leverage it for sleeping with women. First and foremost, intention matters to God.

A Christian man leveraging improvement to get a wife is not seeking God first but focusing on the "self."

Colossians 3:2 Set your mind on the things above, not on the things that are on earth.

[1] I will be posting more examples later on, and perhaps with a collaboration we will make it into a book/system.

Leave her better than how you found her

January 18, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This has been a phrase for in the PUA community since at least 2009, if not further back.

> "Leave her better than how you found her"

However, Heartiste/Roissy's commentary that it isn't likely the truth.

The phrase always stuck with me, but in light of my recent revelations on understanding of Christianity in terms of relationships I now know why it did.

This is because as Christians we know that apart from God we can do no good. Because only God is good, if we abide in Him and Him and us, we can do good.

Therefore, as Christians called to do good works, we are called to to do good in all things for the glory of God:

> 1 Corinthians 10 (NASB)
>
> 31 Whether, then, you eat or drink or whatever you do, do all to the glory of God. 32 Give no offense either to Jews or to Greeks or to the church of God; 33 just as I also please all men in all things, not seeking my own profit but the profit of the many, so that they may be saved.

The reason why PUAs cannot leave a woman better than how they found her is because of the innate nature of their interaction. They are seeking self gratification either for ego, sex, or other reasons. This inherent nature takes, even though it may make a woman feel good during, and leaves her empty after the PUA has left her. This is underlying theme of the PUAs and game — it is the nature of the flesh. Selfishness.

However, since Christians are called to righteousness, and if God is in us and in our interaction, it is possible to "leave a woman better than how we found her" but only through the power of God:

> Romans 7 (NASB)
>
> 14 For we know that the Law is spiritual, but I am of flesh, sold [m]into bondage to sin. 15 For what I am doing, I do not understand; for I am not practicing what I would like to do, but I am doing the very thing I hate. 16 But if I do the very thing I do not want to do, I agree with the Law, confessing that the Law is good. 17 So now, no longer am I the one doing it, but sin which dwells in me. 18 For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh; for the willing is present in me, but the doing of the good is not. 19 For the good that I want, I do not do, but I practice the very evil that I do not want. 20 But if I am doing the very thing I do not want, I am no longer the one doing it, but sin which dwells in me.
>
> 21 I find then the [n]principle that evil is present in me, the one who wants to do good. 22 For I joyfully concur with the law of God [o]in the inner man, 23 but I > see a different law in [p]the members of my body, waging war against the law of my mind and making me a prisoner [q]of the law of sin which is in my members. 24 Wretched man that I am! Who will set me free from [r]the body of this death? 25 Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then, on the one hand I myself with my mind am serving the law of God, but on the other, with my flesh the law of sin.

This is because Christian masculinity through the power of God at its core is about selflessness, the fruits of the Spirit — agapao love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self control — and spurring each other on towards godliness in the relationships with God, men, and women.

I believe this is one of the reasons that sex is prohibited prior to marriage. It is a mental, physical, emotional, and spiritual bonding experience of give and take which cannot be undone. The bond that is made is broken when they separate, and it leaves both parties broken in at least some way.

As we know, the Scriptures are quite clear,

> Ephesians 5 (NASB)3 But immorality [c]or any impurity or greed must not even be named among you, as is proper among [d]saints;
>
> 1 Corinthians 7 (NASB)
> Now concerning the things about which you wrote, it is good for a man not to touch a woman.

So, getting to practicals since I like practicals.

What does it look like in a relationship between a masculine Christian man and a woman before marriage, but in today's "dating" or "courtship" and "engagement" phase?

No sex and decreasing the amount of physical contact before marriage is a good idea. Having been a Christian for a number of years I've been on the fence about going as far as even no kissing before marriage. This is something that each Christian must face and pray to God for guidance on.

Beyond the physical this is a tough question because ultimately the path to marriage is a bonding experience. We know that most people do not meet their spouse as the first one we date, which means that there will be hardship in the nature of a "break up."

This is why it is important for Christians to understand that "dating" is not commitment either from the man's side or the woman's side. When Christians believe that "dating" is a "commited relationship" the investment creates a bond that may be broken if you break up. If a man or woman experiences prolonged issues of withdraw or intimacy after a break up this is a sign that you were too invested in something that has a large chance of not working out.

As a Christian masculine man you need to make this clear to any woman you date to ensure that any woman you talk to are aware of this. Most women won't like that and will probably fight you about it, but it is the right thing to do especially if the relationship does not work out.

> How can you leave a woman better than how you found her?

Over the past year, my experience growing into Christian masculinity has been that the best way to do this is from your natural leadership position in the dating relationship, to the engagement relationship, to eventually the marriage relationship.

Almost all Christian women want their husband to be a spiritual leader in their marriage, and it starts with dating. Therefore, as Christian masculine men looking to marry we should take hold of this God created dynamic to be the teacher in the relationship.

> Ephesians 5 (NASB)
> 22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
>
> 1 Corinthians 11 (NASB)
> 3 But I want you to understand that [a]Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman, and God is the head of [b]Christ.

This dynamic has the beneficial side effect of maintaining or increasing a woman's attraction to you in the relationship because the teacher-student dynamic is one of leadership which readily makes a woman respect you.

The fact that you are teaching her spiritually means that she will grow in her relationship with God, regardless of if you two do not work out. The marriage dynamic is ultimately about the husband loving his wife as Christ does the Church:

> Ephesians 5 (NASB)
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word (rhema), 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

I discussed the Rhema Word a bit in To Game or Not to Game, but it is the revealed or revelation Word of God in our lives, often through speech.

Implementation of this dynamic starts with the masculine Christian man. It is important for you to be bringing up the questions to ensure her knowledge of the Scriptures and use of them is accruate. This requires multiple things that the Christian masculine man must have:

1. A spiritual relationship with God that is constantly growing.

2. Extensive knowledge of the Scriptures, to speak with authority on them.
3. A good handle on both social and political issues in regard to how they relate to the Word of God and the Christian walk.
4. An ability to effectively communicate in uncomfortable situations, and
5. To let her know that you are willing put her in uncomfortable situations because that is how she will grow, but if it is too uncomfortable for her to speak up and tell you so that you can back off.

As you can see, this requires a massive amount of time and investment from a Christian man of God. But it is something that a man should be working on anyway. These are qualities that must be developing, and which I often do not see in many Christian nice guys. This is the place I would tell Christian nice guys to start.

I'm not going to post a list of questions here right now, though I may do that in the future as I have compiled a fairly large list. But, a sampling of such topics that you may want to lead a spiritual discussion on may include those from Dalrock's blog post on Interviewing a Prospective Wife 1 and Interviewing a Prospective Wife 2.

If you have other talents such a musical, cooking, hobbies, or physical activities to teach a woman those are also good for building a connection with a prospective woman. But they are always going to be secondary to the spiritual component.

In conclusion, we know that to "leave her better than you found her" you need to:

1. Let her know that your intention is engagement and/or marriage, but that dating is not a committed relationship so she can "guard her heart."
2. Do not act improperly towards her, especially physically.
3. Start the relationship off right by leading her spiritually which will increase her attraction and respect for you, among other things you should be leading.

The very fact that you if you start leading her spiritually will show you if she is compatible with you, and if she is willing to learn from you.

This will make it exceedingly clear almost right away whether she is a woman who is worthy of marriage, or one who is given over to the things of the world.

She will grow spiritually, if she is willing, and will be better off than how you found her even if you two are not a match.

This is only possible as a Christian masculine man who is walking with God.

Not personal responsibility but stewardship

January 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I made a mistake in my analysis in God doesn't owe you anything.

The primary mistake that I made is that God requires that we have personal responsibility. But that is not true. Personal responsibility is responsibility that is "personal." Personal is of the self and of the selfish nature. It is a quality of the flesh.

Instead, the parable itself is clear on what happens:

> Matthew 25:14-30 (NASB) — Parable of the Talents
>
> 14 "For it is just like a man about to go on a journey, who called his own slaves and entrusted his possessions to them. 15 To one he gave five [a]talents, to another, two, and to another, one, each according to his own ability; and he went on his journey. 16 Immediately the one who had received the five talents went and traded with them, and gained five more talents. 17 In the same manner the one who had received the two talents gained two more. 18 But he who received the one talent went away, and dug a hole in the ground and hid his [b]master's money.

The man going on the journey, the Father, gives out talents to his servants to be stewards of them. Thus, we are not called to personal responsibility, but instead we are called to stewardship (Merriam-Webster definition):

> Stewardship
> the conducting, supervising, or managing of something; especially: the careful and responsible management of something entrusted to one's care <stewardship of natural resources>

Therefore, let us not focus on the self (personal responsibility), but instead proper allocation of our time and resources taking into account the call for which God has called us to in Him (stewardship).

God is good

January 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

When you examine Genesis 3, it's interesting because of the nature of the curses placed on both the serpent, Eve, and Adam.

The curse is one of pain and suffering, but at the end there is always joy or fulfillment.

> Genesis 3 (NASB)
>
> 13 Then the Lord God said to the woman, "What is this you have done?" And the woman said, "The serpent deceived me, and I ate." 14 The Lord God said to the serpent,
> "Because you have done this,
> Cursed are you more than all cattle,
> And more than every beast of the field;
> On your belly you will go,
> And dust you will eat
> All the days of your life;
> 15 And I will put enmity
> Between you and the woman,
> And between your seed and her seed;
> He shall [d]bruise you on the head,
> And you shall bruise him on the heel."

There is only death for the serpent, or Satan, but the enmity between the woman and the serpent results in the promise of a messiah: Jesus Christ.

> 16 To the woman He said,
> "I will greatly multiply
> Your pain [e]in childbirth,
> In pain you will bring forth children;
> Yet your desire will be for your husband,
> And he will rule over you."

To the woman, there are two curses.

The first of pain during childbirth. But, as we know at the end of childbirth is great joy for the new life that has come.

The second is the desire for her husband and for him to rule over her. Since the default state of humans is rebellion to God, it takes much effort for a woman to submit to the rule of her husband, but when she does she knows the peace of God in her life.

> 17 Then to Adam He said, "Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, 'You shall not eat from it';

> Cursed is the ground because of you;
> In [f]toil you will eat of it
> All the days of your life.
> 18 “Both thorns and thistles it shall grow for you;
> And you will eat the [g]plants of the field;
> 19 By the sweat of your face
> You will eat bread,
> Till you return to the ground,
> Because from it you were taken;
> For you are dust,
> And to dust you shall return.”

There are likewise two curses to Adam.

The first being of toil. To work the ground, but we know that at the end of the sowing is reaping. The harvest. A time of great joy and feasts in tradition.

The second of death. But we know the fulfillment of the messiah that death is not a curse because through the messiah our Spirit lives on with the One who created it.

I find these passages interesting for two reasons.

1. One is that the promises to the humans were already there — childbirthing was already without pain, the husband already ruled over his wife, the ground already bore fruit, and there was no death but eternal life. In fact, the curse is a contrast of the perfection of creation before the fall — that which is good — and the consequences of disobeying God which result in suffering in our mortal bodies.
2. The second, I believe, is the curses seem to be placed in such a way to help us better understand the goodness of God. If there was no pain in childbirth would there be such joy after it is finished? If we did not have to sow, would we be as grateful for the harvest? This is the interesting nature of how a curse actually draws out the expression of a fullness of joy, gratefulness, or peace.

As I explained in the Fundamental Nature of Christianity, what we know of as “free will” is the ability for us to be tempted and having the choice to overcome those temptations. We know that in the ability to be tempted that God is very good in His creation, not just good as the animals, light and darkness, and firmament and water were created. Our choice in temptation is good in that by our “free will” — our choice — when we are in God we are able to choose to do good.

The contrast of the curse allows us to more fully understand his creation in a way that we could not before the fall. This is an amazing revelation to us — God is good even in the curses. God is good in his righteous judgment of sin.

Therefore, we know that in the blessings and the curses that God is good. We know that in the joy and the sorrow that God is good. We know that in life and in death that God is good. In everything and all things, God is good.

> Mark 10 (NASB) — Parable of the Rich Young Ruler
>
> 17 As He was setting out on a journey, a man ran up to Him and knelt before Him, and asked Him, “Good Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?” 18 And Jesus said to him, “Why do you call Me good? No one is good except God alone.

God is good.

Always be on your game

January 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

“Always be on your game” is one of the more interesting phrases born from the PUAs and manosphere in terms of maintaining your relationship with a woman.

Basically, it encompasses the fact that a man needs to always be vigilant of how he is acting toward others and his woman because if you start to “slip up” she may lose attraction for you.

There’s been a fair amount of backlash in men because of this because men feel that it is hard to change and maintain the change all of the time.

This is not far from the truth, but only a step in the journey.

For instance, take a look at this from a Biblical perspective.

- Is a Christian ever supposed to have time off from being an ambassador for Christ?
- Is a Christian ever not supposed to love the Lord with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength?
- Is a Christian ever not supposed to love others as Jesus has loved us? (Which replaced love your neighbor as yourself).
- Is a Christian husband ever not supposed to love his wife as himself?

The always be on “your” game mindset is actually a good one for a Christian to have, except instead of focusing it on “yourself” and always being on “your” game, you should be always on “God’s game.”

Now, all change is hard to effect at first. However, all change will become habit after doing it for extended periods of time. For example, it takes about 4-6 weeks before doing something everyday becomes a habit. This ranges from anything from nutrition, to exercise, to posture, to changes in attitude, to changes in personality, to any other habits that you want to develop.

Change happens slowly, but as you reinforce it everyday it will come. Don’t be afraid to exchange poor habits for good habits. Change for God.

Always be on God’s game.

Fear the final frontier

January 20, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is another follow up post to Christian masculinity, the nice guy and neediness and Christian masculinity and Confidence.

This post was also sped up in release by Donal's Discerning the Mindkiller.

Fear is one of the greatest motivators for negative or non-action. It's the main final frontier for all Christians, especially godly masculine men to master, when interacting with people.

If you had to pin each of these statements down to a particular reason why we don't do them what would it be?

- Why don't we share our faith with others?
- Why don't we freely communicate our sins with one another even though the Bible says to confess our sins to one another?
- Does it cause many men great anxiety to even hold the gaze of men and women?
- Why do men have problems going up and asking a woman out?
- What prohibits you from going out and learning new activities or hobbies?
- Why don't we have respect for our bodies by going to the gym or eating good food?
- What motivates me away from praying in public when I eat my food?

The simple fact of the matter is that often we as Chrisitans fear men rather than God.

We allow fear to take hold in our lives and motivate us to non-action or inaction when we know we should do the right thing.

This is one of the ultimate problems with Christian nice guys:

- They fear asking a woman out.
- They fear having their own opinion around her which may make her think less of him.
- They fear doing what they like to do because she make think less of him.
- They fear looking her straight in the eye and holding her gaze.
- They fear uncomfortable situations such as "defining the relationship" because they don't think she will think they same way.
- They fear what happens if she will leave him or if the relationship doesn't work out.

The Bible is quite clear on fear, with verses such as these:

> 1 John 4 (NASB)
>
> 18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casts out fear, because fear [e]involves punishment, and the one who fears is not perfected in love.

Let's go back a second to the article Christian masculinity and confidence. There I listed at the end these traits:

- In our hearts, we have eirene, the peace of God which is a wholeness with Him.
- In our souls, we have peitho/pistis, the faith and assurance of salvation from God.
- In our minds/might, we have parrhesia, the intellectual understanding that leads to an external boldness of which we can freely speak to others because of God.

The primary reason why eirene (peace), peitho/pistis (faith and assurance), and parrhesia (external boldness of actions) are important to the Christian masculine man is that they all opposed fear.

If we have the peace of God in our lives, the wholeness of Him who makes us complete, then what are we going to fear when talking to others about our faith? Indeed, what do we have to fear when we talk to women?

Likewise, if we are assured in our faith then do we need other women to complete us? Do we require human validation to somehow increase our worth in the eyes of God?

Do we need to be afraid of being bold in our actions for God or in interacting with others?

Simply put, fear is the antithesis of what it means to be a Christian masculine man. We often fear that we won't measure up. We often fear what otheres thing of us. We often fear men rather than God. But that is not what He has called us to in Christ Jesus.

The reason why I pray to God to place me in uncomfortable situations is that I do fear looking foolish in front of others. I do fear what other people think of me. But, I know that this fear is irrational. I know that is not how God expects us to act.

So, even though I may fail at times. Even though I may look foolish at times. Even though it's difficult for me to see the work that God is doing in me. I know that God's peace within me, my faith in him, and the boldness in how I should act will carry over into a Godly confidence. A confidence in God that is worth more than anything I could hope for and which will allow me to develop into a godly masculine man that is able to walk into the things that God has willed for me in the future.

That alone should be reason enough to start to want to conquer your fears. But if you need extra motivation, a lack of fear has the nice side of effect of being attractive to women. Women can smell fear, like neediness, from a mile away and are repulsed by it.

As you begin to conquer your fear of men rather than God you will find that you will become a godly masculine man that both Christian and non-Christian men and women respect and admire.

Improving your public and conversational speaking

January 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So here's some practical advice to not just men looking to become masculine men, but to all Christians. Especially those who are introverts.

If you're an introvert like me then you usually don't talk much during the day even if you're out with friends or in mixed company.

However, we know that conversation, like public speaking, is a learned skill. You need to practice at it to get good.

Therefore, this is my challenge to you in two areas:

1. When doing your [daily] Bible reading read all of it out loud.
2. When doing your [daily] prayer do it all out loud.

Though, it is not just enough to read your Bible aloud and pray aloud. I want you to focus on a couple things when doing this namely,

- Stand up straight or sit up straight with chest out and shoulders back.
- Take a deep breath before you speak each sentence or set of words.
- Speak in a measured tone — not too fast, not too slow.
- Speak it with authority.

Remember, the goal of a godly masculine man is ultimately going to be developing into one who is able to share the gospel and encourage those around him. So what better way to learn how to speak and communicate effectively than with the core fundamantals that help with your Christian walk.

Likewise, remember that reading is different from speaking and hearing the Word. This is the power of the rhema Word of God. There is power in authority of the Word of God and hearing it, and it will improve your relationship more with God than praying and reading the Scripture silently.

Over the past few months I've taken to reading Scripture aloud as well as praying aloud and it's done marvelous things for my communication ability. I pray the same for you.

God gives the force to everyone

January 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Yesterday, Chad talked about Masculine Power and Embracing Your Masculinity, and he made the connection that Masculine power is like the force (Star Wars analogy).

As many of you may know, I'm going through the New Testament in Greek and today I was slated to go over one of my favorite parables, the parable of the talents, which I discussed a bit in God doesn't owe you anything.

So what did I find when I looked at the Greek from this passage but,

> Matthew 25:14-30 (NASB) — Parable of the Talents
>
> 14 "For it is just like a man about to go on a journey, who called his own slaves and entrusted his possessions to them. 15 To one he gave five [a]talents, to another, two, and to another, one, each according to his own ability (dunamis); and he went on his journey. 16 Immediately the one who had received the five talents went and traded with them, and gained five more talents. 17 In the same manner the one who had received the two talents gained two more. 18 But he who received the one talent went away, and dug a hole in the ground and hid his [b]master's money.

It turns out the Greek work for ability is dunamis:

> δύναμις — dunamis — doo'-nam-is
>
> From G1410; force (literally or figuratively); specifically miraculous power (usually by implication a miracle itself): – ability, abundance, meaning, might (-ily, -y, -y deed), (worker of) miracle (-s), power, strength, violence, mighty (wonderful) work.

As you can see, the word used in the Greek is particularly interesting because it means not just "force" but it is also used in the context of miraculous power and miracles.

For example, some of the other ways in which this word is used in Matthew is:

> The Lord's prayer:
>
> Matthew 6:13 'And do not lead us into temptation, but deliver us from [f]evil. [g][For Yours is the kingdom and the power (dunamis) and the glory forever. Amen.']
>
> On false prophets:
>
> Matthew 7:22 Many will say to Me on that day, 'Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in Your name, and in Your name cast out demons, and in Your name perform many [n]miracles (dunamis)? 23 And then I will declare to them, 'I never knew you; depart from Me, you who practice lawlessness.'
>
> On Jesus' inability to do miracles in his hometown:

> Matthew 13:58 And He did not do many [ae]miracles (dunamis) there because of their unbelief.

The most insightful passage on what “power” or “force” is given to us is from Acts. If you are a Christian you should already know where I’m going with this.

> Acts 1 (NASB)
>
> 6 So when they had come together, they were asking Him, saying, “Lord, is it at this time You are restoring the kingdom to Israel?” 7 He said to them, “It is not for you to know times or epochs which the Father has fixed by His own authority; 8 but you will receive power (dunamis) when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be My witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and even to the remotest part of the earth.”

My contention is this:

God has imbued in us, his creation, with the ability to change the world around us. The force if you will. This is part of His essential nature which He also provided to man when He made man in own image. This is the dominion God gave man over all the earth.

However, since man sinned and was inescapably corrupted, God sent His son as a sacrifice that any who call on His name and believe in Him will be saved. And thus, He sends His Holy Spirit as our Counselor — a seal of power in Him — which is the proof of our inherentance that allows us to exist in Him and do good works (Ephesians 1:14 and 2:8-10).

Therefore, we know that the power that God has given us as Christians and specifically as masculine men is to exert it as an extension of us to do good works. We can do nothing of ourselves, but only Christ in us which gives us the power to do good. This is the fruit we are called to bear.

I’m going to make clearer the point which I believe Chad was going for but didn’t explicitly state. Namely, that masculinity, like game, is never neutral. You are either doing something to please God or you are not. As Jesus states in Matthew and Paul states in Galatians, > 24 “No one can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and [m]wealth.

> Matthew 6 (NASB)
>
> Galatians 5 (NASB)
> 16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not carry out the desire of the flesh. 17 For the flesh [g]sets its desire against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are in opposition to one another, so that you may not do the things that you [h]please.

The “force” imbued within us to do good and make changes in this world is through the power of the Holy Spirit. And if we walk with the Spirit, we will be able to bear good fruit and change the lives of those around us.

Those who use the force to do evil walk by the desires of the flesh. But those who have the Holy Spirit are able to use masculinity impact those around us with good.

Let’s just be friends

January 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So, as a man, you gathered your courage and asked an attractive woman out. In fact, you suspect that if she does say no because she is a nice Christian woman that she will respond with the time old “let’s just be friends.”

Typically, the response that most players/PUAs will tell you is just to say no thanks or let the conversation fizzle out and then next her. These responses aren’t necessarily a bad thing to do, but the intention behind it is selfish, so they tend to end up coming off unkind.

As Christian mascunline men we are called at all times to kindness, a fruit of the Spirit, as we walk with God. With that in mind, it is important to frame all of our interactions with women with graciousness, even though she may not be interested in us. We know that she is, as a fellow sister in Christ, still a creation of God and we want to treat her right.

With any social interaction there are a couple of key points. If it’s something such as public speaking (which conversations are) it’s always good to have a plan, especially for the worst case scenario.

After much thought and prayer and action, my personal favorite response to “Let’s just be friends” is the following because it is a win-win for both you and the woman if she actually is not interested in you.

- Her: “Let’s just be friends…”
- You: “I’m fine with that, but can I ask for a favor instead?
- Her: “What?” or “Maybe…”
- You: “Will you introduce me to your other single Christian friends” or if you have a specific one in mind then “Will you introduce to me to your single friend [name] instead“

Or preferably, if you know she is single,

- “Will you introduce me to your other single Christian friends… [and if I know of any Christian men who I think you might be interested I will let you know too.]“
- “Will you introduce me to your other single Christian friends… [and you have a Christian man you’re interested in I’ll introduce you or facilitate your interest.]“

Key point: don’t say it with the tone of voice as a question but just a statement. You’re asking for her help, but a statement is more open ended and not demanding which will more likely make her to acquiesce.

This type of interaction does multiple things on a behind the scenes level which is beneficial for all of those involved.

- First, you come off agreeable which will quell her anxiety. Women don’t like being put on the spot and having to reject men.

- Second, you act non-needy and non-bitter, which should raise or keep her respect of you up which plays into her potentially wanting to help you out.
- Third, you're offering an gracious exchange here. Obviously, she will most likely have some men she may be interested in and your ability to transition away from your interest in her and help her interests will put you in a favorable light.
- Fourth, because you ask for her help in meeting other singles she knows, you avoid the trap of "a Christian man asks one woman out from a group and it gets around to all of the other girls so they reject him when he asks because she was their 'second choice'" because you enlist her aid before she has a chance to talk to her other girlfriends about it.

This is actually a win-win-win for everyone involved. You offer will help her if she is interested in a man, she can introduce you to other women who may be interested in you with preselection, and the group will have overall improved introductions to each other.

Remember this: Even though you may not "get what you want" you should always remind yourself that your fellow brothers and sisters in Christ as also looking for a marriage partner as well.

With this type of interaction you help to start to bridge the gaps between male and female interest not just for yourself for everyone in that Church or small group setting.

If she declines or is snarky then you know she wasn't a good choice in the first place and you may need to refine your filters. Still, be gracious even if she goes nuclear. "I'm sorry you feel that way" tends to work well.

Conclusion

Rejection is never an end all be all. In fact, one of the most important points is to see rejection as an opportunity. As a Christian man you're looking for one woman as a wife, so if it's not that one then you need to continue your search.

The main point is that as a Christian is that you have limited amount of ability to approach women to find a wife. However, if you enlist others in the faith to help you find a spouse that will greatly expedite the process. Helping your brothers and sisters in Christ is also another beneficial bonus on top of that and will help build your relationships with others even if they are not the one you are to marry.

Life is transactional

January 22, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There was some discussion yesterday on Donal's site whether we should think of marriage as transactional or not, especially in regard to settling.

Jesus talks about the transactional nature of following him in Luke 14:25-35 (NASB), > 25 Now [a]large crowds were going along with Him; and He turned and said to them, 26 "If anyone comes to Me, and does not [b]hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be My disciple. 27 Whoever does not carry his own cross and come after Me cannot be My disciple. 28 For which one of you, when he wants to build a tower, does not first sit down and calculate the cost to see if he has enough to complete it? 29 Otherwise, when he has laid a foundation and is not able to finish, all who observe it begin to ridicule him, 30 saying, 'This man began to build and was not able to finish.' 31 Or what king, when he sets out to meet another king in battle, will not first sit down and consider whether he is strong enough with ten thousand men to encounter the one coming against him with twenty thousand? 32 Or else, while the other is still far away, he sends [c]a delegation and asks for terms of peace. 33 So then, none of you can be My disciple who does not give up all his own possessions.

>
> 34 "Therefore, salt is good; but if even salt has become tasteless, with what will it be seasoned? 35 It is useless either for the soil or for the manure pile; it is thrown out. He who has ears to hear, [d]let him hear."

To be very clear, everything in life is transactional.

I can use my time to play video games, or I can use it to exercise, or I can use it to read the Bible. I can use it to fornicate or I can use it to pursue a godly relationship headed towards marriage. I can use it to steal or work to get money to use it to buy.

Our greatest resource is time. And we exchange time for whatever it is that we do. This is the nature of the world that God created.

This is one of the fundamental things that women in today's age have trouble understanding because society is constantly lying to them. No, women can't have it all. Men tend to naturally recognize that if we spend more time on our job then we won't have time for our family or hobbies. It's a balancing act where you have to use your time wisely because you can't do everything. Nor should you try to.

This is why it is important to listen from God about what you are supposed to be doing with your time. This is something I constantly have to work on because I don't listen enough.

We are called to be stewards with that which we have been given: our time, our talents, our bodies, and the like. Don't squander that which God has gifted to you.

Christian masculinity, mastery, the internal and the external

January 22, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As Christian masculine men, we are called to develop two distinct categories of attributes within ourselves to be good ambassadors for the gospel. Though often these categories overlap, knowledge about how they function both in our bodies and outside our bodies is key to understand the calling of God.

Mastery in the Scriptures

The word for “mastery” shows up in the Scriptures only a couple of times, and it is very interesting in the contexts it is used.

The most often piece of Scripture which shows that we are to have a mastery over our own lives comes out of 1 Corinthians 9 (NASB) where Paul likens the Christian walk to a race:

> 24 Do you not know that those who run in a race all run, but only one receives the prize? Run in such a way that you may win. 25 Everyone who competes in the games (agōnizomai) exercises self-control in all things. They then do it to receive a perishable wreath, but we an imperishable. 26 Therefore I run in such a way, as not without aim; I box in such a way, as not beating the air; 27 but I [I]discipline my body and make it my slave, so that, after I have preached to others, I myself will not be disqualified.
>
> The KJV is a bit more clear:
>
> 24 Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. 25 And every man that striveth for the mastery (agōnizomai) is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. 26 I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: 27 But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway.

Strong’s dictionary defines the word agonizomai as thus, > ἀγωνίζομαι — agōnizomai — ag-o-nid’-zom-ahee

>
> From G73; to struggle, literally (to compete for a prize), figuratively (to contend with an adversary), or generally (to endeavor to accomplish something): – fight, labor fervently, strive.

And it’s quite an interesting word because the root of it, agon, is pretty much what we would say in English is similar to the words agony or agonizing. That is the mastery to which we are called is going to be a struggling, a fight, and a labor over our own bodies to do the calling of God.

The 6 other uses of this Word in the Scriptures, 2 by Jesus are as equally illuminating,

> Jesus to the multitude — Luke 13:24 "Strive (agonizomai) to enter through the narrow door; for many, I tell you, will seek to enter and will not be able."
>
> Jesus to Pilate — John 18:36 Jesus answered, "My kingdom [k]is not of this world. If My kingdom were of this world, then My servants would be fighting (agonizomai) so that I would not be handed over to the Jews; but as it is, My kingdom is not [l]of this realm."
>
> Paul to the Colossians — Colossians 1:29 For this purpose also I labor, striving (agonizomai) according to His [an]power, which [ao]mightily works within me.
>
> Paul about Epaphras — Colossians 4:12 Epaphras, who is one of your number, a bondslave of Jesus Christ, sends you his greetings, always laboring earnestly (agonizomai) for you in his prayers, that you may [f]stand [g]perfect and [h]fully assured in all the will of God.
>
> Paul to Timothy — 1 Timothy 6:12 Fight (agonizomai)the good fight (agon) of faith; take hold of the eternal life to which you were called, and you made the good confession in the presence of many witnesses.
>
> 2 Timothy 4:7 I have fought (agonizomai) the good fight (agon), I have finished the course, I have kept the faith;

The mastery or fight that we are called to takes on two forms: the internal and the external. 1 Corinithas 9 explains the internal as self controlled or temperate in all things. The external primarily focuses on furthering or advancing the faith. Let's discuss a little bit about what we can adequately call the internal and external the next section.

As I have discussed a bit before, the 9 fruits of the Spirit from Galatians 5 are thus:

> 22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law.

Catholic tradition from the catechism lists 12 fruits of the Spirit:

> charity, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, generosity, gentleness, faithfulness, modesty, self-control, chastity

It's actually pretty easy to categorize these into the two separate categories of the internal and the external. From there we can get an idea of how they are supposed to be developed in our lives.

- Internal (6) — Joy, Peace, Patience/Longsuffering, Faithfulness, Chastity, Self Control
- External (6)— Charity/Love, Kindness, Goodness, Generosity, Gentleness, Modesty

If we include the fruits from the Catholic tradition we can see that the traits we want to develop inside ourselves and externally through our actions are each equal — 6 internal and 6 external.

The internal characteristics of Joy, Peace, Patience/Longsuffering, Faithfulness, Chastity, Self Control are internal because they are of the godly characteristics that God wants multiply in our lives as a model for both other Christians and non-Christians. They are comprised of 2 different categories themselves which are the emotional and the logical:

- Emotional — Joy and peace which are not of ourselves but by nature from God. This is not to say other emotions such as happiness, anger, sadness, etc are bad, but they are transient and not what we are supposed to base our faith on. I will have a follow up post on this in the future.
- Logical — Faithfulness of a godly persuasion, Self control which leads to patience/longsuffering, and the maintenance of chastity which is also a form of self control.

The external characteristics are Charity/Love, Kindness, Goodness, Generosity, Gentleness, Modesty. They are primarily external characteristics because they are shown through our actions towards others. These also fit two categories namely actions and how we are to perform the actions,

- Actions — Charity/Love to others, Generosity to others, and Modesty for others.
- Performance of actions — Kindness, Goodness, and Gentleness/humility

Obviously, there can be argued a bit of overlap between the internal and external characteristics of say chastity and modesty, but that is nit picking. The main point is that we as Christians, and especially godly masculine men need to both master ourselves and in our relationships with others.

The main reason why I wrote the Foundations of Christian Masculinity is that the passage from 2 Peter 1 provides a guide on how to develop several of the internal and external characteristics:

> Faith -> Moral excellence -> Knowledge -> Self Control -> Perseverence -> Godliness -> Brotherly Kindness -> Love/Charity

Likewise, in the Fundamental Nature of Christianity I discussed free will and how it gives us the choice on whether to serve God or not. The ultimate conclusion of the article is that the nature of Christianity allows us to build relationships first with God and then with others effectively.

As you can see from the characteristics, the ones that are internal are mainly as an expression of your relationship with God. That is we can only have the supernatural peace and joy of God when we have faith in Him. We can only master our bodies to be able to overcome temptation with the free will that He has given us and build into perserverence and maintain our chastity from that.

Similarly, when I discussed the nature of the confidence as it relates to Christian masculinity, two of the three of the conclusions of the "state" that most resembles confidence that Christians should have are internal (eirene and pistis and not parrhesia):

- In our hearts, we have eirene, the peace of God which is a wholeness with Him.
- In our souls, we have peitho/pistis, the faith and assurance of salvation from God.
- In our minds/might, we have parrhesia, the intellectual understanding that leads to an external boldness of which we can freely speak to others because of God.

The main reason I keep harping on these characteristics is that without development of the internal characteristics most Christians will be dead in the water. For example, take the following series of questions and answers:

What is your testimony? Can you reliably tell someone your testimony of how you became a Christian and how God changed your life? I doubt most people that call themselves "Christian" in Western Civilization could actually do it. What then does that say about their "faith" and the assurance thereof?

How many Christians can you say you see the peace of God in their life through trials, or the joy of the Lord in their lives at all times even in struggles? Not many. To most people God in Western civilization is just an accessory to their lives to be called on only once a week or twice a year.

How many Christian men or women can say they have mastered self control of their desires? How about of the 7 deadly sins: lust, greed, pride, gluttony, sloth, wrath, envy.

My main point with this series of questions is this: Most Christians should be focusing on mastering themselves.

If you haven't mastered yourself and your desires how are you going to reliably show Love, Generosity, Modesty, Goodness, Kindness, and Gentleness/Humility through your actions? Are you not just going to be a hypocrite that non-Christians scoff at instead — that "christian" does and says this but look at what his life looks like.

This is not to say that we should neglect to serve others while we focus on mastering ourselves. Rather, it is a call to introspection about the stewardship of what you are doing with the heart, soul, mind, and body that Christ has redeemed.

It's interesting because there is a certain parallel with this and PUA. PUA for years was about using particular tricks and gimmicks in order to push attraction buttons on women to be able to sleep with them. However, over the past few years and with the addition of many manosphere blogs there is a greater focus on "self improvement." The reason why "self improvement" and "self confidence" are touted by the community is because that internal change leads to significant external change.

See my take on self improvement versus God improvement for more details.

The internal must be consistent with the external, otherwise you are just lying to yourself and others can see through it. Mastering the internal, which is your relationship with God and ability to control your desires and form good habits, will allow you to blossom and be able to serve and build relationships with others.

Improving your public and conversational speaking 2

January 23, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Improving your public and conversation speaking, I talked about both reading your Scripture out loud and praying out loud. Here are some other alternatives to do with yourself if you're not comfortable talking with people about them yet.

For example, write down your testimony that you would share with non-Christians about how you became a Christian and how God is working in your life. I would aim for about 2-5 minutes since no one likes being kept by long speeches. Once you have your testimony on paper you can start. I would progress in a couple of different manners:

- Read your testimony out loud.
- Once you improve on that, then only write down a couple main points of the testimony and then practice speaking it out loud while glancing at those points.
- Once you improve on that, then only write some key words or phrases and practice reciting it out loud
- Finally, be able to recite your testmony out loud with recall only.

If you're like me and public and conversational speaking are tough, a step by step process like this will help you get in the habit of elaborating on thoughts and key phrases that pop into your head. This is the basis of public and conversation speaking because it's unlikely that you will be able to form whole sentences or thoughts in your head as you are talking to other people.

Do it with the characteristics that I stated in the previous post:

- Stand up straight or sit up straight with chest out and shoulders back.
- Take a deep breath before you speak each sentence or set of words.
- Speak in a measured tone — not too fast, not too slow.
- Speak it with authority.

However, if you want to work on more conversational ability you can add these additional points:

- Look in the mirror and make eye contact with yourself while you talk. While it's not the same as looking into another person's eyes it's a relatively good approximation to practice on.
- Likewise, along with the diction, posture, and breathing make sure that you also eliminating any fidgeting or small movements or anything that can distract your talking.
- Even talking with yourself or others know that it's OK to be anxious. If you feel yourself tightening up then take another deep breath or two and smile and just say that you're a bit nervous. Being able to say this to people lets them know that you're human and will usually get a smile out of them because they understand.

There’s also another list of topics that I like to talk about out loud that are in the Bible, and those are conversational topics that are uncomfortable. For instance,

- Sex in marriage versus out of marriage
- The value of chastity
- Leaderships and submission
- If women should be able to vote
- Abortion
- And other volatile topics such as these.

Another technique is to debate with yourself and voice the varying sides of each option out loud yourself. Talking about both sides will get you more familiar with them so you can adequately have a handle on how to refute them effectively without having to stumble over your words. Plus, it helps to make you think in advance of what you are going to say.

The more at ease you can get with discussing these topics out loud even by yourself the more comfortable you will be discussing them with others or women. When you’re less afraid to talk about them out loud, that’s when productive discussion can occur and it will show others that you are a godly masculine man who is willing to have opinions that align with the Word of God.

The obvious nice part about this is the side effect that learning how to speak and communicate effectively going to help improve your relationships not just with women but everyone.

Anchored emotions

January 24, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

---

edit: This post should really be titled anchored hearts — the heart is composed of both the thoughts and emotions as per the Greek and Hebrew.

In Christian Masculinity, Mastery, the internal and the external, I talked a bit about external characteristics and internal characteristics we are to develop as Christians. Specifically, the internal characteristics were divided into two groups:

The internal characteristics of Joy, Peace, Patience/Longsuffering, Faithfulness, Chastity, Self Control are internal because they are of the godly characteristics that God wants multiply in our lives as a model for both other Christians and non-Christians. They are comprised of 2 different categories themselves which are the emotional and the logical:

- Emotional — Joy and peace which are not of ourselves but by nature from God. This is not to say other emotions such as happiness, anger, sadness, etc are bad, but they are transient and not what we are supposed to base our faith on. I will have a follow up post on this in the future.
- Logical — Faithfulness of a godly persuasion, Self control which leads to patience/longsuffering, and the maintenance of chastity which is also a form of self control.

We know that the emotional characteristics that godly Christians (not just masculine men) are to have are those which are in God and God alone. The peace of God and the joy of God.

The eirene (peace) of God is a supernatural imbuing of “wholeness” or “Shalom” (Peace be with you) that is with us when we accept Jesus as our savior and the Holy Spirit comes into our life. How the eirene peace of God is integrated with our lives is discussed more in the post Christian masculinity and confidence. There is no peace for the wicked, but those that exist in Him are able to have the peace of God in any situation in their lives.

Likewise, the Joy of the Lord which is our strength is also a supernatural imbuing of the emotional state characteristic of a mature Christian. Indeed, in the most recent missions trip I went on to Nicaragua I saw this in the children there that have such a joy in their lives even in the deepest despairs of poverty where they do not know where their next meal comes from. This is the supernatural joy that the apostles had when they were in in prison. This is the joy of the Lord that is present in the persecuted Church in the 10-40 window.

It’s very sad because Western Christianity has a huge problem with entitlement and a lack of gratitude. The entitlement carries over extensively into our emotional state such that we are unhappy with what we have even though we have more than 99.99% of the rest of the world. The missions trip to Nicaragua cost about $1400 to go to a week down there to help serve, and $1200 can put one of the students through a year of university there including books, housing and food. Yet, these are people that have more peace and joy in their lives than we do.

This makes Jesus' parable on the two foundations particularly illuminating:

> Matthew 7 (NASB) — The Two Foundations
>
> 24 "Therefore everyone who hears these words of Mine and [o]acts on them, [p]may be compared to a wise man who built his house on the rock. 25 And the rain fell, and the [q]floods came, and the winds blew and slammed against that house; and yet it did not fall, for it had been founded on the rock. 26 Everyone who hears these words of Mine and does not [r]act on them, will be like a foolish man who built his house on the sand. 27 The rain fell, and the [s]floods came, and the winds blew and slammed against that house; and it fell—and great was its fall."
>
> 28 [t]When Jesus had finished these words, the crowds were amazed at His teaching; 29 for He was teaching them as one having authority, and not as their scribes.

The parable speaks to broader applications such as a man having a foundation in God versus that of the world. That much most Christians can understand in their first read through. But what if we understood this passage in a different way.

We know that the most volatile part of humans are certainly their emotions, especially those of us that are of the feminine persuasion. It's very easy for us as humans to swing from being many of the different emotions to the other even in the span of only minutes in a day — anger, disgust, fear, happiness, sadness and surprise.

Emotions are actually comprised of a conglomerate of various interactions of feelings, moods, and affect.

- Feelings are best understood as a subjective representation of emotions, private to the individual experiencing them.
- Moods are diffuse affective states that generally last for much longer durations than emotions and are also usually less intense than emotions.
- Affect is an encompassing term, used to describe the topics of emotion, feelings, and moods together, even though it is commonly used interchangeably with emotion.

Though the main thing to understand is that they are transient.

We understand that emotions are normal. It is not bad to feel emotions whether happiness, sadness, anger, or any others. That is the capacity for which God created humans and He created it to be very good. However, that is also why Jesus says in our anger we should not sin. We need to have self control over our emotions such that we do not act rashly from them and do things that are sinful or that we will regret.

The Jewish people recognized that sin (avera) comes in three distinct categories:

- Pesha (deliberate sin; in modern Hebrew: crime) or Mered (lit.: rebellion) – An intentional sin; an action committed in deliberate defiance of God; (Strong's Concordance :H6588 (פשע pesha', peh'shah). According to Strong it comes from the root (:H6586); rebellion, transgression, trespass.
- Avon (lit.: iniquity) – This is a sin of lust or uncontrollable emotion. It is a sin done knowingly, but not done to defy God; (Strong's Concordance :H5771 (avon, aw-vone). According to Strong it comes from the root (:H5753); meaning perversity, moral evil:–fault, iniquity, mischief.
- Cheit – This is an unintentional sin, crime or fault. (Strong's Concordance :H2399 (חַטָּא chate). According to Strong it comes from the root khaw-taw (:H2398, H2403) meaning "to miss, to err from the mark (speaking of an archer), to sin, to stumble."

And so we understand that when we cannot control our emotions we commit avon against God. Fortunately, since this is not pesha (or intentionally rebellion against God), it is covered by the blood of Jesus. That if we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Nevertheless, we are called to take off the old and put on the new. We know that the emotions that come from the human experience and their derivatives are transient. But as Christians we know that the peace of God and the joy of the Lord given to us as Christians are free gifts from God. They are not based on our human experiences because like Him, they are present with us at all times.

Therefore, we should anchor our emotions to that to which God has given us in Christ Jesus through the Holy Spirit. His Joy and His peace. And when we can manifest those in our lives in the good and the bad then we will truly see our lives transformed, and this is what will cause other Christians and non-Christians around us to ask how. How are you so peaceful when it seems like your life is falling apart? How do you have so much joy when you are having a difficult time?

Happiness, in particular, is one of the emotions that almost all humans strive for. We all want to be happy. But realize this: there is nowhere in the Scripture much less the fruit of the Spirit that calls us to be happy as part of our Christian walk. In fact, the Scriptures tell us that the heart is deceitful and wicked:

> Jeremiah 17:9 (NASB) "The heart is more deceitful than all else and is desperately sick; Who can understand it?
>
> Jeremiah 17:9 (KJV) The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?

Thus, we can say for certain that while happiness is nice it is not the point of being a Christian walking with God. We can enjoy being happy when we are happy and we can look for happiness BUT not at the expense of doing what is righteous. It is more important to have the peace and joy of the Lord. It is more important for us show love, patience/longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self control than strive after a transient feeling of happiness.

This is the categorical flaw with Churchianity. “Christian” wives are divorcing their husbands because they are unhappy believing that God wants them to be happy. They do not know God or understand His Scripture lest they would know He hates divorce and does not call them to be happy.

Fear is another one of the emotions that can be present in humans which I have already discussed.

As Christians it is the times when we respond with the exact opposite emotions that people expect that will show them Christ in you. It is the time we respond with the exact opposite actions that will show them Christ in you.

Happiness and fear, like other emotions, are transient. Anchor your emotions to the firm foundation of peace and joy in Christ Jesus and not to those of the shaky foundation of the human flesh. Your life will be transformed.

Game is not a toolbox

January 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Game is not a toolbox, but it may look like a toolbox.

In to game or not to game, I explored the inherent selfish nature of game as opposed to that of godly masculinity.

Likewise, over at Free Northerner's Christian masculinity we've been talking about the merits of game versus godly masculinity.

The best way to illustrate how "game" is not a toolbox is indeed through analogies since game as a toolbox is an analogy. Here are analogies I present that should make clear that game, while looking like a toolbox and perhaps acting like a toolbox, is not a toolbox.

> Even though a gun is just a gun, would you want to own the gun of someone who used it to commit mass murder? Would you want to own the gun of one of the columbine shooters? On the other hand, would you even keep a gun that you used to kill an intruder in your home who meant you deadly harm?
>
> There's an innate revulsion that we have to the "gun" or "tool" that is used to commit murder, even though we know the tool is not responsible for the decision of the owner. Indeed, there may even be men and women who use a "tool" such as a gun in self defense to where they would have serious issues with keeping it after they used it to successfully defend themselves and kill someone.
>
> Likewise,
>
> Would you argue that sex is sex and the only difference between fornication and sex in marriage is context?I think that's an indefensible position. The reason why sex as an emotional, spiritual, and physical act in marriage is holy is because first the heart is right with God and we are walking into what God said was very good for His creation.
>
> Men and women can even sense the difference. Greater marital satisfaction in husbands and wives who waited to have sex after marriage than those who had premarital sex. There's tons of statistics and studies to support this, and the reasons for this are probably many.
>
> Sure, we can certainly learn from things that are not in and of the Bible. But the heart must be right with God in such actions. I would certainly not attempt to use dread game on a wife as God tells me that jealosy is of the flesh. Yet, I see Christians in the 'sphere fully supporting the use of dread game.

The biggest point that I see missing from the "game is a toolbox" proponents is how to reconcile their argument with the idea that we are are not just physical and emotional but also spiritual beings. We know from Galatians 5 that we are either doing things of the Spirit or of the flesh.

A Christian man who sets boundaries for his wife and shows leadership to have her calm down when she is emotional does so because he loves her as his own body, like Christ has loved the church and doesn't want the drama. And he doesn't want her to get emotional because she may sin in her hyperemotional state. He is concerned with growing both of their relationships towards God in true righteousness and holiness.

A player who sets boundaries for his girlfriend and shows leadership to have her calm down when she is emotional does so because he doesn't want the drama only. The fact that the motivations are inherently selfish imbue the whole act to be selfish and only of the flesh. Eventually, when you have only someone that cares about themselves, it will show in their actions and lead to at least some form of resentment from the other party.

These two may look the same outwardly. They may even use the same words or mannerisms. But they are not the same because God judges both the hearts, the minds, and the actions. This is the spiritual component of our actions that is missing when we say that game is JUST a toolbox.

We know that God tests both the hearts, minds, and actions:

> Jeremiah 11:20 But, O LORD of hosts, who judges righteously, Who tries the feelings and the heart, Let me see Your vengeance on them, For to You have I committed my cause.
>
> Jeremiah 17:10 "I, the LORD, search the heart, I test the mind, Even to give to each man according to his ways, According to the results of his deeds.
>
> 1 Chronicles 29:17-19 I know, my God, that you test the heart and have pleasure in uprightness. In the uprightness of my heart I have freely offered all these things, and now I have seen your people, who are present here, offering freely and joyously to you. O Lord, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, our fathers, keep forever such purposes and thoughts in the hearts of your people, and direct their hearts toward you. Grant to Solomon my son a whole heart that he may keep your commandments, your testimonies, and your statutes, performing all, and that he may build the palace for which I have made provision."
>
> Psalm 7:9 Oh, let the evil of the wicked come to an end, and may you establish the righteous— you who test the minds and hearts, O righteous God!
>
> Revelation 2:23 And all the churches will know that I am he who searches mind and heart, and I will give to each of you according to your works.

Now, this isn't to say "game" should be totally eschewed completely as there are many of us in the manosphere who have come to a greater zeal and fervor for the Lord because He has used the evil of game for good in us.

But know then this,

1. It is good to know to learn about what to do and what not to do from the nature of intersex relationships from the Scriptures, godly mentors, prayer, fasting, meditation on the Word, etc.
2. It is good to know what not to do from knowledge of the nature of the flesh such as game.

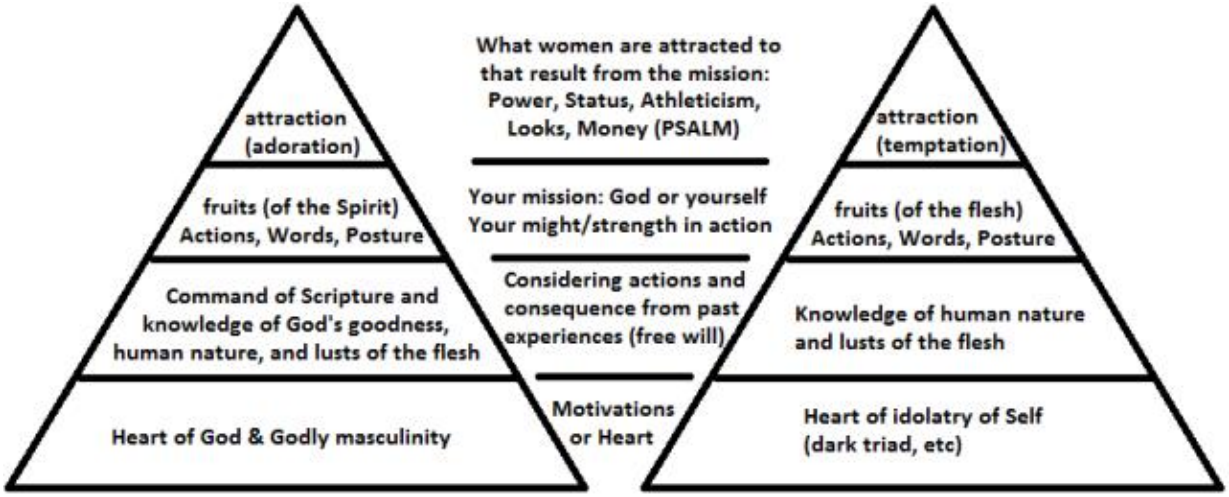
3. But I would be very, very, very careful about what learning what to do from something inherently selfish like game.

Now, God gave man logic and free will and we can use it to come to good conclusions about the nature of His creation. In this line of thought, Keoni's assertion that the underlying concepts of game as a Praxeology is correct.

For example, in the medical field humans have come up with amazing technology to preserve and extend lives through the nature of creativity and invention of the intelligence and logic which God has blessed us with. However, increased knowledge and innovation can be easily warped such as the entrenched establishement of "low fat high carb healthy diets" and pharmaceutical companies more concerned about profits than well being of the people.

This is to say that God may allow one to learn concepts about how He created masculinity to be through game, but if we do learn from that which is of the flesh we need to be hyperaware of if we are being deceived.



This is my main problem with game.

I can see there is utility in knowledge of it because God has allowed me to learn from it without being deceived. But what of my other brothers and sisters in Christ?

What if a Christian man who has no firm foundation in God is exposed to game? He may be deceived by the inherent nature of the flesh that game purports and is further drawn away from God into a life of hedonistic principles. For every Christian that has seen the light of God's creation, what about those that have fallen away from the faith because of game? I certainly know of many PUAs and players that were formerly Christians or Catholics.

This is precisely the reason why as Christians we should not espouse game as something that all Christians should know, at the very least until each one of those that we know has a firm foundation in Christ and seeks to please Him above all. It is only then that showing them knowledge of the flesh can be a learning experience without a temptation. You shouldn't give a man the components to build a house without first ensuring that he has a rock solid foundation to build on.

The foundation must be a heart for God first, and extensive knowledge of the Scriptures and how they apply to life. Then, and only then, is an introduction to the knowledge of "game" may be worth considering because of its strong appeal to temptation and selfishness.

Lest we not forget that a firm foundation is required before adding on top of it a house.

Good and the good and bad and the bad

January 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting facets of the Greek that is lost is translation to English is that of the four loves — Agape, Philia, Eros, and Storge.

However, there is actually another one of the fruits of the Spirit — goodness — that has two separate meanings. Likewise, the same for the bad.

> G18 — ἀγαθός — agathos — ag-ath-os'
> A primary word; "good" (in any sense, often as noun): – benefit, good (-s, things), well. Compare G2570.
>
> G2570 — καλός — kalos — kal-os'
> Of uncertain affinity; properly beautiful, but chiefly (figuratively) good (literally or morally), that is, valuable or virtuous (for appearance or use, and thus distinguished from G18, which is properly intrinsic): – X better, fair, good (-ly), honest, meet, well, worthy.
>
> G4550 — σαπρός — sapros — sap-ros'
> From G4595; rotten, that is, worthless (literally or morally): – bad, corrupt. Compt. G4190.
>
> G4190 — πονηρός — ponēros — pon-ay-ros'
> From a derivative of G4192; hurtful, that is, evil (properly in effect or influence, and thus differing from G2556, which refers rather to essential character, as well as from G4550, which indicates degeneracy from original virtue); figuratively calamitous; also (passively) ill, that is, diseased; but especially (morally) culpable, that is, derelict, vicious, facinorous; neuter (singular) mischief, malice, or (plural) guilt; masculine (singular) the devil, or (plural) sinners: – bad, evil, grievous, harm, lewd, malicious, wicked (-ness). See also G4191.
>
> G2556 — κακός — kakos — kak-os'
> Apparently a primary word; worthless (intrinsically such; whereas G4190 properly refers to effects), that is, (subjectively) depraved, or (objectively) injurious: – bad, evil, harm, ill, noisome, wicked.

As you can see, the definition of kalos from Strong's clarifies the meaning for us. This is important to know, since we know that agathos is an intrinsic quality of being good while kalos is about the extrinsic of doing good. Likewise, the same for the intrinsic quality of evil and the bad. This distinction is very important as we will see when we examine the context the certain ways that Jesus uses these two words in the Gospels.

Section 1

> Matthew 7 (NASB) — Jesus on false prophets
>
> 17 So every good (agathos) tree bears good (kalos) fruit, but the bad (sapros) tree bears bad (poneros) fruit. 18 A good (agathos) tree cannot > produce bad (poneros) fruit, nor can a bad (sapros) tree produce good (kalos) fruit. 19 Every tree that does not bear good (kalos) fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. 20 So then, you will [m]know them by their fruits.

This passage is extremely pertinent to the burgeoning discussion in to game or not to game and game is not a toolbox on why game is evil because the nature of game as selfish produces selfish actions.

This is why "game" as advice for telling us what to do such as dread game are evil because you are using a foundation of selfishness and this is reflected in your heart. It bears bad (sapros) fruit.

While the utility of what "game" tells us what not to do as Christian masculine men such as be needy and seek validation around women is useful. It helps you to avoid from bearing bad (sapros) fruit.

This is why this conclusion right here is so important:

1. It is good to know to learn about what to do and what not to do from the nature of intersex relationships from the Scriptures, godly mentors, prayer, fasting, meditation on the Word, etc.
2. It is good to know what not to do from knowledge of the nature of the flesh such as game.
3. But I would be very, very, very careful about what learning what to do from something inherently selfish like game.

Exchanging an idol — pedstaling of women — for another idol — self and/or primary focus women — is in no way a good thing.

Section 2

Now that we have had our fill of game for the day, let's turn our attention to understand how the good and the good relate to us in terms of God and ourselves as Christians.

In God is good I referenced the passage of the rich young ruler, so let me pull that passage out to the forefront again.

> Matthew 19 (NASB) — Parable of the Rich Young Ruler
>
> 16 And someone came to Him and said, "Teacher, what good thing (agathos) shall I do that I may obtain eternal life?" 17 And He said to him, "Why are you asking Me about what is good (agathos)? There is only One who is good (agathos); but if you wish to enter into life, keep the commandments."
>
> (KJV) 16 And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good (agathos) Master, what good thing (agathos) shall I do, that I may have eternal life? 17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good (agathos)? there is none good (agathos) but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

This is where the KJV is more illuminating that other translation even though I like NASB, although both have their utility.

First, the intrisic word for God is used. This further amplifies what I said in God is good that it is only God who is intrinsically good.

Second, if you notice the wording in each passage you can see that the question might be a bit vague. The reference to being good in NASB is that Jesus believes the young ruler is asking Him about good things or works, while the KJV passage translates the passage that Jesus assumed that the young ruler was calling him good rather than asking about good.

The utility in understanding this is that Jesus, in human form, did not consider himself to be on par with God if we take the translation of KJV to be true. This is further expounded upon in Philippeans 2 (NASB), > 3 Do nothing [c]from [d]selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; 4 do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others. 5 Have this attitude [e]in yourselves which was also in Christ Jesus, 6 who, although He existed in the form of God, did not regard equality with God a thing to be [f]grasped, 7 but [g]emptied Himself, taking the form of a bond-servant, and being made in the likeness of men. 8 Being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death [h]on a cross.

Section 3

A revisit to God doesn't owe you anything and not personal responsibility but stewardship.

> Matthew 25 (NASB) — Parable of the Talents
>
> 20 The one who had received the five talents came up and brought five more talents, saying, 'Master, you entrusted five talents to me. See, I have gained five more talents.' 21 His master said to him, 'Well done, good (agathos) and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your [c]master.'

It is those who are good stewards with what God has given them that are called intrinsically good when they settle accounts with their master. This cannot be understated. It is not the good (kalos) we do, but because we are good (agathos) and faithful in that which He has called us to do.

Section 4

Paul expounds on the nature of the good and the good and bad and the bad in Romans 7 on the two conflicting natures.

> 12 So then, the Law is holy, and the commandment is holy and righteous and good (agathos). 13 Therefore did that which is good (agathos) become a cause of death for me? May it never be! Rather it was sin, in order that it might > be shown to be sin by effecting my death through that which is good (agathos), so that through the commandment sin would become utterly sinful.

>
> 14 For we know that the Law is spiritual, but I am of flesh, sold [m]into bondage to sin. 15 For what I am doing, I do not understand; for I am not practicing what I would like to do, but I am doing the very thing I hate. 16 But if I do the very thing I do not want to do, I agree with the Law, confessing that the Law is good (kalos). 17 So now, no longer am I the one doing it, but sin which dwells in me. 18 For I know that nothing good (agathos) dwells in me, that is, in my flesh; for the willing is present in me, but the doing of the good (kalos) is not. 19 For the good (agathos) that I want, I do not do, but I practice the very evil (kakos) that I do not want. 20 But if I am doing the very thing I do not want, I am no longer the one doing it, but sin which dwells in me.
>
> 21 I find then the [n]principle that evil (kakos) is present in me, the one who wants to do good (kalos). 22 For I joyfully concur with the law of God [o]in the inner man, 23 but I see a different law in [p]the members of my body, waging war against the law of my mind and making me a prisoner [q]of the law of sin which is in my members. 24 Wretched man that I am! Who will set me free from [r]the body of this death? 25 Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then, on the one hand I myself with my mind am serving the law of God, but on the other, with my flesh the law of sin.

This is a very deep passage, and there are many things to learn from it.

1. The law is intrinsically good (agathos), but our actions in regard to the law confessing that it is good (kalos). That is we do good (kalos) by the law when we observe it, but it doesn't make us intrinsically good (agathos).

This is one of the fundamental parts of Christianity and why God had to send Jesus to save us. For while we can do good (kalos) by observing the law, we cannot be cleansed to be intrinsically good (agathos) by observing the law. And therefore, God requires a sacrifice to stand in the gap and cover our multitude of sins.

2. Although we want to do good (kalos), since nothing good (agathos) is present in us we cannot do good. This is what the Holy Spirit allows us to do, because we are in Him we are able to do good (kalos) even though our flesh is not good (agathos). When the Spirit is working in us we are recreated in Him to be good (agathos) and thus we can do good works (kalos).

3. I find it quite interesting that Paul used kakos instead of poneros here, though I imagine that kakos and sapros are synonyms in that it refers to what is intrinsically corrupt and therefore only corrupt actions flow henceforth.

I find it horrible that English is so limited that we don't glean a lot of the knowledge of how the words were used in Jesus' and Paul's time. And thanks be to God that He has allows my study of the Greek here to bear good (kalos) fruit and allowed me to share it with all of you.

Section 5

Finally, we get to references to Galatians 5. The reason why I continue to hammer home Galatians 5 is that Jesus is so adamant on our fruits that he dedicate many of the parables to understanding that we need to obey His commands and not be of our own selfish ambitions.

The word used in Galatians 5 is a derivative of good (agathos),

> G19 — ἀγαθωσύνη — agathōsunē — ag-ath-o-soo’-nay
>
> From G18; goodness, that is, virtue or beneficence: – goodness.

And the passages in which it is used are thus,

> Romans 15:14 And concerning you, my brethren, I myself also am convinced that you yourselves are full of goodness (agathosune), filled with all knowledge and able also to admonish one another.
>
> Galatians 5:22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness (agathosune), faithfulness,
>
> Ephesians 5:8 for you were formerly darkness, but now you are Light in the Lord; walk as children of Light 9 (for the fruit of the Light consists in all goodness (agathosune) and righteousness and truth), 10 [f]trying to learn what is pleasing to the Lord. 11 Do not participate in the unfruitful deeds of darkness, but instead even [g]expose them; 12 for it is disgraceful even to speak of the things which are done by them in secret. 13 But all things become visible when they are [h]exposed by the light, for everything that becomes visible is light.
>
> 2 Thessalonians 1:11 To this end also we pray for you always, that our God will [i]count you worthy of your calling, and fulfill every desire for goodness (agathosune) and the work of faith with power,

The main thing that stands out to me is that which I have constantly hammered home like the Galatians passage. It is only when we are walking by the Holy Spirit that we can express the goodness of God in our actions.

My conclusion is this.

When we are good (agathos) through the power of the Holy Spirit, we are able to do good (kalos) works. People then ask us why we do this good (kalos) then it is necessary to praise God because it is His goodness (agathos) in us that has allowed us to do good (kalos). This is one of the things that I continue to learn to grow in. Although God has created and blessed me with certain talents, it is only through the working of His Holy Spirit that I can use them for good (kalos).

If I self depreciate saying it was nothing or take credit for myself then I have done a great disservice to God claiming credit where it was His power in me. Therefore, I should instead praise only God for the goodness that others see in me and my works, for without the transforming nature of His power I would not be able to do good.

I believe this is why many think they can do good works to gain salvation. They do not understand the nature that if the tree is corrupted by sin it cannot bear good fruit.

Salvation, then, requires a bridge to stand in the gap. The cross is symbolic of the bridge from us to God, though it is the blood of Jesus that covers a multitude of sins and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit that allows us to to be transformed into a creation worthy of the Father.

Hebrew and Greek Resources

January 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

---

1. The current program I am using to reference Strong's dictionary is E-sword.

http://www.e-sword.net/

It's a free program although if you choose to buy some of the versions of the Bible on it such as NIV, NASB, etc. it costs money.

However, the KJV and KJV+ are free, and you can download ESV for free as well.

The KJV+ is the version that has Strong's dictionary linked to every single word is right in front of you for viewing yourself.

1. All it takes is a mouse-over of the green link, and the Hebrew or Greek word will pop up in the box so you can read it.
2. If you double click it then it appears in the bottom window if you want to compare it to other words you're mousing over.
3. If you right click the word, an option pops up and there's "quick search" which allows you to cross reference it to any place that word appears in the whole Bible, Old Testatment, or New Testament.

It really is an excellent resource, and I first learned of it in high school (which was back around 2002 or 2003). However, I never really appreciated it until the past year. I feel somewhat disconcerted that I really didn't care that much about the faith then to really study the Hebrew and Greek that much, but God works everything in His time to His purpose so I'm grateful that I'm here to share it with you all.

2. The other resources I saw recommended over at I believe Dalrock's is the Interlinear Bible.

http://www.scripture4all.org/

It's not as useful as E-sword in my opinion because it doesn't reference the definitions of the words and only shows what they are and how they were translated.

3. There are phone apps that reference Strong's dictionary.

I know there is a phone app that allows you to reference Strong's dictionary on the Bible. I know this because my current pastor has it, but I didn't grab the name of the app that does this. Search for it if you want to find it.

4. If anyone else has any other resources feel free to mention them in the comments.

The New Testament

January 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I never really bothered to look up the meaning of the old testament and the new testament in regard to the naming of the books of the Bible before and after Jesus.

> Mat 26:28
>
> (KJV) For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.
> (ESV,NASB) For this is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many for the forgiveness of sins.

So in any case, here's the Greek for the pertinent words:

New — G2537 — καινός — kainos — kahee-nos'
Of uncertain affinity; new (especially in freshness; while G3501 is properly so with respect to age): – new.

Testament — G1242 — διαθήκη — diathēkē — dee-ath-ay'-kay
From G1303; properly a disposition, that is, (specifically) a contract (especially a devisory will): – covenant, testament.

Shed — G1632 — ἐκχέω, ἐκχύνω — ekcheō ekchunō — ek-kheh'-o, ek-khoo'-no
From G1537 and χέω cheō (to pour); to pour forth; figuratively to bestow: – gush (pour) out, run greedily (out), shed (abroad, forth), spill.

Remission — G859 — ἄφεσις — aphesis — af'-es-is
From G863; freedom; (figuratively) pardon: – deliverance, forgiveness, liberty, remission.

Sins — G266 — ἁμαρτία — hamartia — ham-ar-tee'-ah
From G264; sin (properly abstract): – offence, sin (-ful).

Sins is from G264 — ἁμαρτάνω — hamartanō — ham-ar-tan'-o
Perhaps from G1 (as a negative particle) and the base of G3313; properly to miss the mark (and so not share in the prize), that is, (figuratively) to err, especially (morally) to sin: – for your faults, offend, sin, trespass.

Which is consistent with Romans 3:23 "for all [a]have sinned and fall short of the glory of God,"

Basically, just straight forward insight in what Jesus was actually doing by coming by the will of the Father and dying. The old covenant is fulfilled and the new covenant is here, through Jesus' blood sacrifice as all humans sin and are not perfect like God.

edit: As I go through the New Testament it's very interesting to see how consistent the ideas, themes, and fundamental points of Christianity are even between multiple authors. I suppose that's why it is said the Scriptures are inspired by God.

The Centurion’s Faith

January 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

> I have a request if you’re hopping around. I’d be curious to see your insight on the centurion’s request for the servant. The modern world, much like the Jewish one; would likely classify him as the anti-thesis of Christ. Yet this is not the case, and Christ praises him for a faith that is not held by any in Israel. The Centurion also would be closer aligned with what we consider masculine and similar to one of the Old Testament Patriarchs than any of Jesus’s disciples until the descent of the Holy Ghost.

> Obviously, I find the man fascinating, despite his only getting a small number of verses. Hence why I thought your insight with Greek might go further.

It’s a pretty straight forward passage with no real surprise in the choice of words used there. The first thing to note about this passage is the Centurion’s addressing of Jesus in Matthew 8 (NASB),

> 5 And when [e]Jesus entered Capernaum, a centurion came to Him, imploring Him, 6 and saying, “[f]Lord (kurios), my [g]servant is [h]lying paralyzed at home, fearfully tormented.” 7 Jesus *said to him, “I will come and heal him.” 8 But the centurion said, “[i]Lord (kurios), I am not worthy for You to come under my roof, but just [j]say the word (logos), and my [k]servant will be healed. 9 For I also am a man under authority (exousia), with soldiers under (hupo) me; and I say to this one, ‘Go!’ and he goes, and to another, ‘Come!’ and he comes, and to my slave, ‘Do this!’ and he does it.”
>
> 10 Now when Jesus heard this, He marveled and said to those who were following, “Truly I say to you, I have not found such great faith (pistis) [l]with anyone in Israel. 11 I say to you that many will come from east and west, and [m]recline at the table with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven; 12 but the sons of the kingdom will be cast out into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.” 13 And Jesus said to the centurion, “Go; [n]it shall be done for you as you have believed (pisteuo).” And the [o]servant was healed that very [p]moment.

I bolded some of the more pertinent words and am going to talk about them a bit.

> G2962 — κύριος — kurios — koo’-ree-os
> From κῦρος kuros (supremacy); supreme in authority, that is, (as noun) controller; by implication Mr. (as a respectful title): – God, Lord, master, Sir.
>
> G1849 — ἐξουσία — exousia — ex-oo-see’-ah
> From G1832 (in the sense of ability); privilege, that is, (subjectively) force, capacity, competency, freedom, or (objectively) mastery (concretely magistrate, > superhuman, potentate, token of control), delegated influence: – authority, jurisdiction, liberty, power, right, strength.

>
> G5259 — ὑπό — hupo — hoop-o'
> A primary preposition; under, that is, (with the genitive) of place (beneath), or with verbs (the agency or means, through); (with the accusative) of place (whither [underneath] or where [below]) or time (when [at]): – among, by, from, in, of, under, with. In compounds it retains the same genitive applications, especially of inferior position or condition, and specifically covertly or moderately.

The "authority" that the Centurion talks about is "exousia" which is different from "dunamis" that was discussed in this article. There's a bit more on this here:

http://www.prayertoday.org/2004/trainer/war-authority.htm

It's important to note that "dunamis" is more about power that is expressed through our actions (or demonstrative power) while "exousia" is about the the authoritative power that comes from a certain position.

And of course the word for "faith" is "pistis" which is the same as used in the fruits of the Spirit. Hebrews 11, etc.

I have little doubt that the Centurion uses logos ("written" word) instead of rhema ("spoken" word) because logos is typically referred to as the written Scriptures or Jesus himself (John 1). The Scriptures of the time represent the law, and the law as an authority for how to be right with God. Essentially, the Centurion recognizes that Jesus has authority (exousia) to exert power/miracles/etc (dunamis) over sickness, and thus he knows that Jesus does not have to come to have his servant healed.

The hierarchical understand of God and authority is important because we see this manifested in the structure of God as one in three (Father > Jesus > Holy Spirit), and we see that as manifested in earthly relationships as well (Father > Jesus > Husband > Wife > Children) as well as submission to earthly authorities.

The reason why I highlighted under (hupo) is that it is the same prefix that is used for the word for submission in Greek — hupotasso — which means to be subordinated to or to obey. The suffix tasso deals with being in an orderly manner. Thus, Jesus submits (hupotasso) to the Father's will likewise as servants submit (hupotasso) to the Centurion's will likewise as wives submit (hupotasso) to the husband's will. Thus, we know that "equality" fails at all levels of knowledge because it fails to adhere to the authority structures that God has placed in His creation.

And as Jesus said, this requires faith. The Centurion's knowledge of the hierarchical structure of how authority works allows him to be able to place an immense amount of faith to trust in Jesus at his word (logos). It is the same as we do as Christians today.

Be decisive

January 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Decisiveness is one of the key fundamental attributes of masculinity, and it is also one of the components of leadership.

Since it is one of the parts of masculinity, it also one of the traits that attracts women. Women like men who are decisive because it takes the pressure of responsibility off of them and they can just enjoy the ride that you're taking them on without having to worry.

Aside from the fact that decisiveness is attractive to women, men are called to be decisive irrespective of that fact. For example, how many times in Scripture was Jesus portrayed as wishy-washy in his beliefs and actions? Obviously, the answer is zero.

The underlying concept behind decisiveness is that it starts to eliminate your fear. Even though you may care what other people think, you still take action because you know that God has called you to a certain purpose or action.

If someone were to ask me what I believe in terms of God and religion if I am a Christian I should be able to tell them right away what I believe. Likewise, this extends into all facets of life. You must know what you believe. And when you firmly can stand behind your convinctions that is when you become decisive in your actions.

Section 1 — Example(s) of decisiveness with commentary

Let's look at some specific examples for how this can play out.

- Say you're a husband and you're wife (and boyfriend or girlfriend if you prefer) is getting emotional over a topic. You, as a husband, know that your wife will get angry or jealous and perhaps is prone to sinning by saying certain things rashly. What should you do?

Obviously, if you go to placate her with your words and actions you are not being decisive. You know from previous experience that attempting to placate an emotional woman is going to make her more angry. So why do you do it? There's no logic or rationale behind attempting to placate a woman on an emotional tear. You know it won't work. Yet, because it is the "easiest" course of action you go with it because you are afraid of being decisive and asserting leadership in this situation.

The correct course of action is to be decisive and tell her that you won't discuss the topic with her while she is emotional. But you know that a course of action such as this is prone to having her outburst more at you even though you know this is what she needs.

Obviously, I could tell a woman that "hey, I'm not going to discuss this when you're emotional" but that won't go over as well as phrasing it in a more considerate manner — "Hey, I understand you're feeling _X_ because of _Y_, and we will to discuss that in a bit." You can even add "Come here and let me hold you."

When women get emotional it is key to set boundaries for how she acts and for the subsequent discussion and enforce them. This is how you need to be decisive when conflict breaks out. There are two key components here.

1. Know how you want to handle the situation. This is mostly gained from experience in a man, so that is why it is imperative to seek knowledge of how to handle situations and talk to a lot of people.
2. Stick to your guns or principles. If you cave you are going to be touted as indecisive and she will lose respect for you. No matter how much a woman cries, whines, name calls, or the like you need to stick to your decisions. This does not preclude a apology if you did indeed wrong her or someone else, but the boundaries must be maintained even if you were in the wrong.

Obviously, there are a lot of other examples you can use to be decision. Any time someone asks a question there is the opportunity there. Many of which relate to women. For instance,

- What restaurant do you want to go out to?

"I would prefer going to X restaurant" or "Let's go to this restaurant." etc.

- Do you like this skirt or this skirt?
- Do you like my short haircut compared to my previous one?
- What time are you getting there?
- What is your testimony?
- Why do you believe in God?

Answering any type of question is a good time to practice decisiveness.

Today, any time you are asked a question give it a pause and a thought to think about it then give a decisive answer.

This will help you start to practice it.

Section 2 — Eliminating indecisive vocabulary

There's a lot of words that we use in English that are filler and denote uncertainty when we speak. Here is a decent sized list of them:

- Perhaps
- Maybe
- Possibly
- Probably
- Fairly
- If you like..
- Uhhh
- Ummm
- Sort of
- Kind of

- Like
- Just
- I was [just] wondering
- I was thinking
- I don’t know but,
- I mean
- You know
- Like I said
- Ok, so..

Take this week to listen to conversations closely for filler words. You’ll notice that women in particular like to use a lot of filler words like “maybe”, “kind of”, “sort of” when talking about their feelings and decision making. The same with a lot of men who many of us would define as “effeminate” or “nice guys.”

While most men do not pick up this, I believe that most women will subconsciously pick up on use of vocabulary from this and can tell almost immediately from how you speak if you’re a nice guy or a masculine man by your word choice.

When you notice them in your own speech attempt to start to eliminate them from your vocabulary.

The second thing I want you as Christian masculine men to practice this week is what I said above — to listen to conversation closely today and listen for filler words and start to eliminate them from your own vocabulary.

This is why it is important to slow down your talking so you’re more aware of what you are saying. Here’s a bit about chunking which is another technique you can use if it’s difficult to eliminate the words from your vocabulary even after being aware of them.

Section 2 — Training Decisiveness

It is a matter of training to raise up a man to be decisive.

You see this with children. When children know exactly what they want they are decisive — do you want to do this or that” I want to THIS! Please please please please! However, if you give them a lot of choices such as do want to play this game, that game, or this other game, or how about this game, or perhaps this game they will get flustered and unless they have a clear favorite they will be indecisive.

This is one of the problems that we face in our culture today, and the Economist had an article on it called The Tyranny of Choice.

The most important thing you need to know is what you believe. Like I said in improving public and conversational speaking and improving public and conversational speaking 2, one of the best ways is to use the things that will build your Christian faith as tools to improve your public and conversational speaking. The same is true of decisiveness.

I talked a bit about praying out loud, but let’s examine the Lord’s prayer from Matthew 6 (NASB) in terms of decisiveness of wording,

> 7 “And when you are praying, do not use meaningless repetition as the Gentiles do, for they suppose that they will be heard for their many words. 8 So do not be like them; for your Father knows what you need before you ask Him.
>
> 9 “Pray, then, in this way:
> ‘Our Father who is in heaven,
> Hallowed be Your name.
> 10 ‘Your kingdom come.
> Your will be done,
> On earth as it is in heaven.
> 11 ‘Give us this day [e]our daily bread.
> 12 ‘And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors.
> 13 ‘And do not lead us into temptation, but deliver us from [f]evil. [g][For Yours is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.’]

If you notice the wording in how we are to pray Jesus is not asking any questions of God. He basically instructs us to use declarative and imperative sentences and statements as opposed to interrogative.

For example, one of the wrong ways to answer a question from a woman such as “what restaurant do you want to go to?” is to answer it back with “well, I want to go here, but where do you want to go?” Obviously, this is not a decisive statement.

So then too even if we have questions of God or for Him in regard to decisions we make we should not pray by asking questions of God. For example,

- Wrong — God do you want me to do X or Y?
- Better — God you know my needs before I ask. Show me by relevation in my heart or through others the decision You want me to make, so that I can continue to walk in Your will.

Jesus states clearly in the next chapter, Matthew 7 (NASB),

> 7 “[c]Ask, and it will be given to you; [d]seek, and you will find; [e]knock, and it will be opened to you. 8 For everyone who asks receives, and he who seeks finds, and to him who knocks it will be opened.

There are no questions here. Only decisive words and actions. This is why I will reiterate the points here for prayer, Bible reading, and speaking on how to do it.

- Stand up straight or sit up straight with chest out and shoulders back.
- Take a deep breath before you speak each sentence or set of words.
- Speak in a measured tone — not too fast, not too slow.
- Speak it with authority.

Conclusions

So these are my challenges to you this week in summarized format.

1. Any time you are asked a question give it a pause and a thought to think about it then give a decisive answer.
2. Listen to conversation closely today and listen for filler words and start to eliminate them from your own vocabulary.
3. Pray, read your Bible, and learn about the faith and your own preferences and learn to do them decisively with authority in your voice and actions.

Eliminate the wishy-washy and become a more decisive man of God.

As you become more decisive and your words and actions both men and women will come to respect you more, and you will be able to have more influence as an ambassador for God.

The compassion of Christ

January 29, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

> Matthew 9 (NASB)
>
> 10 Then it happened that as [e]Jesus was reclining at the table in the house, behold, many tax collectors and [f]sinners came and were dining with Jesus and His disciples. 11 When the Pharisees saw this, they said to His disciples, “Why is your Teacher eating with the tax collectors and sinners?” 12 But when Jesus heard this, He said, “It is not those who are healthy who need a physician, but those who are sick. 13 But go and learn [g]what this means: ‘I desire [h]compassion [or mercy], [i]and not sacrifice,’ for I did not come to call the righteous, but sinners.”

This is another one of those things where the Greek reveals much more than can be put into words. It’s hard to see what compassion looks like in a person, and how it moves them to action. But the Greek helps us to understand it better.

The Greek word for compassion is used 12 times in the gospels. Here’s all of the contexts.

By the sea of Galilee — Matthew 9:36 Seeing the [ab]people, He felt compassion for them, because they were [ac]distressed and [ad]dispirited like sheep [ae]without a shepherd. 37 Then He *said to His disciples, “The harvest is plentiful, but the workers are few. 38 Therefore beseech the Lord of the harvest to send out workers into His harvest.”

Feeding the five thousand:
Matthew 14:14 When He went [h]ashore, He saw a large crowd, and felt compassion for them and healed their sick.
Mark 6:34 When Jesus went [q]ashore, He saw a large crowd, and He felt compassion for them because they were like sheep without a shepherd; and He began to teach them many things.

Feeding the four thousand:
Matthew 15:32 And Jesus called His disciples to Him, and said, “I feel compassion for the [q]people, because they [r]have remained with Me now three days and have nothing to eat; and I do not want to send them away hungry, for they might faint on the way.”
Mark 8:2 “I feel compassion for the [a]people because they have remained with Me now three days and have nothing to eat.

Parable of the unforgiving servant — Matthew 18:26 So the slave fell to the ground and prostrated himself before him, saying, ‘Have patience with me and I will repay you everything.’ 27 And the lord of that slave felt compassion and released him and forgave him the [y]debt.

Jesus restores the two blind men’s sight — Matthew 20:30 And two blind men sitting by the road, hearing that Jesus was passing by, cried out, “Lord, have mercy on us, Son of David!” 31 The crowd sternly told them to be quiet, but they cried out all the more, “Lord, Son of David, have mercy on us!” 32 And Jesus stopped and called them, and said, “What do you want Me to do for you?” 33 They *said to Him, “Lord, we want our eyes to be opened.” 34 Moved with compassion, Jesus touched their eyes; and immediately they regained their sight and followed Him.

Jesus heals the leper — Mark 1:40 And a leper *came to Jesus, beseeching Him and falling on his knees before Him, and saying, “If You are willing, You can make me clean.” 41 Moved with compassion, Jesus stretched out His hand and touched him, and *said to him, “I am willing; be cleansed.”

Jesus casts out a demon — Mark 9:22 It has often thrown him both into the fire and into the water to destroy him. But if You can do anything, take pity on us and help us!”

Jesus raises the widow’s son — Luke 7:12 Now as He approached the gate of the city, [h]a dead man was being carried out, the [i]only son of his mother, and she was a widow; and a sizeable crowd from the city was with her. 13 When the Lord saw her, He felt compassion for her, and said to her, “[j]Do not weep.” 14 And He came up and touched the coffin; and the bearers came to a halt. And He said, “Young man, I say to you, arise!” 15 The [k]dead man sat up and began to speak. And Jesus gave him back to his mother.

The Good Samaritan — Luke 10:33 But a Samaritan, who was on a journey, came upon him; and when he saw him, he felt compassion, 34 and came to him and bandaged up his wounds, pouring oil and wine on them; and he put him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn and took care of him.

The prodigal son — Luke 15:20 So he got up and came to [i]his father. But while he was still a long way off, his father saw him and felt compassion for him, and ran and [j]embraced him and kissed him.

As we can see, the word compassion comes up multiple times in the gospel in situations where Jesus sees those around him hurting or in situation where he can help them. So going to the Greek, we see that the word in the Greek word is splagchnizomai:

> G4697 — σπλαγχνίζομαι — splagchnizomai — splangkh-nid’-zom-ahee
>
> Middle voice from G4698; to have the bowels yearn, that is, (figuratively) feel sympathy, to pity: – have (be moved with) compassion.
>
> G4698 — σπλάγχνον — splagchnon — splangkh’-non — probably strengthened from σπλήν splēn
>
> (the “spleen”); an intestine (plural); figuratively pity or sympathy: – bowels, inward affection, + tender mercy.

What’s interesting about the word is that it’s something that we as Christians can relate to. If you’ve ever seen someone in a difficult position and had a yearning in your stomach and are moved to help them, this is the same thing that Jesus felt when he was moved to compassion for the sick, the injured, and the hurting. It’s that feeling in your gut that maybe, just maybe, you should step into the situation and do something about it.

Based on how Jesus acted when he felt that same thing, that is your cue to step into action and help them out.

This is also what Jesus talks about in Matthew 25 (NASB) on the judgment.

> 34 “Then the King will say to those on His right, ‘Come, you who are blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. 35 For I was hungry, and you gave Me something to eat; I was thirsty, and you gave Me something to drink; I was a stranger, and you invited Me in; 36 naked, and you clothed Me; I was sick, and you visited Me; I was in prison, and you came to Me.’ 37 Then the righteous will answer Him, ‘Lord, when did we see You hungry, and feed You, or thirsty, and give You something to drink? 38 And when did we see You a stranger, and invite You in, or naked, and clothe You? 39 When did we see You sick, or in prison, and come to You?’ 40 The King will answer and say to them, ‘Truly I say to you, to the extent that you did it to one of these brothers of Mine, even the least of them, you did it to Me.’
>
> 41 “Then He will also say to those on His left, ‘Depart from Me, accursed ones, into the eternal fire which has been prepared for the devil and his angels; 42 for I was hungry, and you gave Me nothing to eat; I was thirsty, and you gave Me nothing to drink; 43 I was a stranger, and you did not invite Me in; naked, and you did not clothe Me; sick, and in prison, and you did not visit Me.’ 44 Then they themselves also will answer, ‘Lord, when did we see You hungry, or thirsty, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not [e]take care of You?’ 45 Then He will answer them, ‘Truly I say to you, to the extent that you did not do it to one of the least of these, you did not do it to Me.’ 46 These will go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life.”

When you see those in need help them out. For instance, the poor person on the street begging, the person who just lost their job and may be homeless, widows having a hard time with finances, those who are depressed and downtrodden, and many others.

What good is compassion without action? Jesus felt compassion and then acted to help them out.

Don’t ignore that gut feeling that says you should help them out even if you are uncomfortable. That gut feeling is the same one that Jesus had that should tell you that you should reach out and be like Christ to them in that situation.

What I look for in evaluating a potential wife

January 29, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Moving along the lines of what Donalgraeme is looking for in evaluating potential wife prospects, this is how I do it. You'll probably notice many similarities, although we have some preference differences depending on our missions in life.

His big 4 list was:

- Chastity/Sexual History
- Age
- Attractiveness
- Religious Devotion

Some other factors for consideration are femininity, temperament, personality type, cooking, cleaning, mothering, submissiveness, intelligence/curiosity, earning capacity, initiative/entrepreneurial spirit, etc.

The main underlying theme is how she will be a helpmeet in his life.

I am looking for the same thing in regard to a helpmeet to assist me in my mission in life, though I hold some things more important than others. Personally, I used to have 10+ point list, but as I've grown over the past year I've parsed it down into 6 major categories that I look for when evaluating a woman.

1. Evidence of a relationship with God — daily Scripture, prayer, meditation, and service in the Church or community. A heart that is seeking after God and is fruitful in it with her actions.
2. Evidence of cultivated godly femininity — long hair, dresses modest, wears dresses and skirts, smiles often, enthusiastic, kind, gentle, humble, preferably knows how to keep a home and cook, etc.
3. Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed — Christian men and women are called to this prior to marriage, and I'm uninterested in having to deal with the drama that surrounds a woman that has had previous intimacy with other men. I'd readily consider a low N-count woman who has shown though her actions and attitude that she has repented (and not just feels bad about what she did) over a virgin Christian woman who has done everything but sex.
4. Evidence of attraction/chemistry — I work in the medical and fitness industries, and it is important for me to have a wife who is a good ambassador for Christ in how she looks. I've dated women before who don't care about good nutrition and exercise, and it never ends well because this is an integral part of my life. A woman who strives to be attractive even though it takes work is going to be a better ambassador for Christ than one who gives in to sloth and gluttony. This goes both ways as my potential wife should be attracted to me too.
5. Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization — God willing I hope to have many children (3-5+) and am looking to home school them. I don't care if my wife has a career, but she should be willing to lay it aside for her family. Age is not a primarily consideration for me, but since I want to have many children younger is better.

6. Evidence of submissiveness, especially to God — This pretty much sums up a Biblical marriage in that it encompasses the 3 major roles that a wife is called to: a helpmeet, with submission, and with respect. I tell women that my God given mission will put me in uncomfortable discussions and challenges, and if she's coming along with me then it will be more of the same. If you're not growing in your heart, mind, soul, and strength for Christ then what are you doing?

The reason why I started off each of the categories above with "evidence" is because I can't mind read, so all I have to go off of from women is what they do in their actions. Words are essentially meaningless with women. It's all about what they do that matters. Thus, evidence of their good fruits or bad fruits is important to look for in their lives. Discernment is important.

There's other minor points of consideration that may be folded into a lot of these above points, but this encompasses the vast majority of what I'm looking for in a potential wife.

All of the above points are areas that godly Christian women should be striving for anyway. The fact that there are not many women who want to walk in the above areas is disheartening but such is the society we live in. I can only pray that God can change the hearts and minds of those who are willing to seek Him.

Red Pill and Game

January 29, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

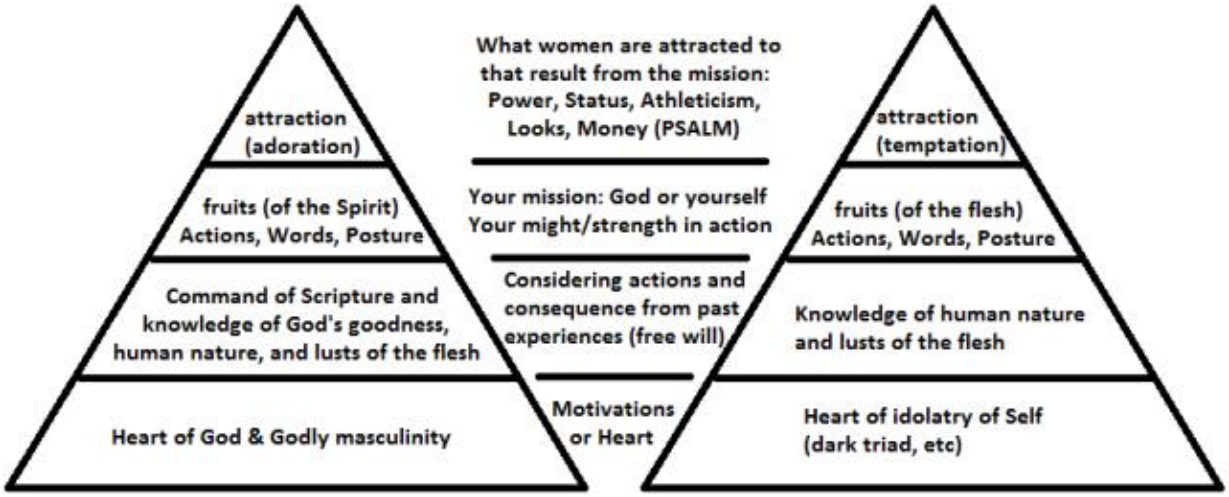
As per Keoni's previous posts on God, Game & The shape of the "men's movement" and The Great Unlearning, I think there's two separate things going on here. Though I also think there will almost inevitably be an impasse.

There's two separate things that we must consider when we discuss "game."

1. The Red Pill
2. Game

The Red Pill is about taking the blinders off and being able to see human nature, as opposed to the lies about men and women that are fed to everyone from the media, society, churches, and other people. The Bible is naturally red pill when you read it to understand human nature — see Adam and Eve first and foremost.

Game, on the other hand, I've always referred to as the "utilization of red pill knowledge in action."



As I wrote in to game or not to game, I wrote about the 4 respective positions that most take on what "game" is which are,

- The first crowd believes that "game" is a specific set of codified techniques that were "pioneered" by the PUAs in order to improve your relative attractiveness to a woman's in order to use other techniques to get a woman into bed.
- The second crowd believes that "game" is a toolbox insomuch that a tool such as a hammer can be used to do constructive things such as building furniture whereas it can also be used as a weapon to bash someone over the head.
- The third crowd believes that "game" is fundamentally about "charisma" or "self improvement" because masculinity is about building a man who is not just respect by women but by other men, children, colleagues in the workplace, etc. It is the ability to weild influence.
- Finally, there is a fourth depiction of game that Leap has been commenting on which is the one I most agree with having studied the Scripture more in depth. This is the depiction of game that it is inherently worldly in nature, and that mascunlity of the positive variety comes from being a masculine man of God as the Scripture define it.

As one of the people who would classify themselves as "anti-game", my conclusion has always been that knowledge by itself is not sinful as long as the knowledge isn't gained through actions which may incite or incur sin into your life. For example, in no uncertain terms would I say that watching pornography is OK even if you give me the explanation that you're just doing it learn what to do during sex. Fueling your lusts is inevitably going to be sinful.

That's why both pyramids have knowledge of human nature and lusts of the flesh:

Now, actions are born of intentions, and it is the heart that matters as well as the actions. In terms of game there's two categories that I would place things in. Things that game says to do, and things that game says not to do.

As I've stated in previous posts, what game says not to do is indeed good — e.g. don't pedestalize women, don't be nice, don't be needy, don't seek validation, etc. — as those are definitely concepts that you can see modeled by many of the great masculine men in the Bible and not modeled when they sin. Whether you have learned them from the Bible, or your father, or a masculine mentor, or game you should thank God for that.

My biggest issue has always been the implementation of game in terms of techniques that may seem innocuous but are, in actuality, spiritually of the flesh such as dread game. Clearly, borrowing techniques born of the dark triad traits as a Christian is just not a good thing to do for you as a man both for your own soul and for hers.

The feminists and white knights actually are correct in their assessment of some of game's techniques such as dread which do play with the emotions of women. As Christians, we know that it is much easier to sin when we are emotional and not thinking logically, so we know that it is never justified to use any "game technique" that intentionally plays on emotions as a Christian. Why would you throw a temptation in front of your sister in Christ, even if she's your wife and is not attracted to you?

This is what Chad, Donal, Cane, and everyone else mean in terms of the implementation of game is not of Christ but of the flesh. We see that certain techniques, even born of good intentions, may cause both men, women, husbands, and wives to fall into sin because of the inherent selfish nature of such techniques. Thus, we condemn the "dos" of game, while we might not necessarily condemn the "don'ts" of game.

I can indeed see how this disctinction of "knowledge" vs "implementation" and "dos" vs "don'ts" does indeed seem like a toolbox. However, the divide that you miss when you see things just as a toolbox is that spiritual component of temptation — am I drawing myself and women closer to God or not?

In most cases with the “dos” of game you are not. That’s why the heart matters because you want to see where the heart’s underlying motivation is. If you see that many of the game “dos” are indeed evil inasmuch as the dark triad traits are not of God but of the flesh, then you see why you shouldn’t use them.

Game is not a tool because by the same analogy a tool is not imbued with any spiritual righteousness or evil at all. A tool does not take on the characteristics of its weilder, nor does it influence them. But with game it does as manipulative techniques corrupt totally just as sin does.

If someone could tell me how “dread game” and other emotionally manipulative techniques are not spiritually bankrupt then I would consider seeing game as a toolbox. But indeed I don’t see it.

Anchored Souls

January 30, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

What I continue to find really interesting is the notion of heart, soul, and minds (and strength in another gospel) is that there are certain things associated with each of these facets of humans. We are not just of the physical — flesh and bones — but we are also spiritual beings, rational beings, and beings of emotions. There are many facets together enjoined as one.

In Christian Masculinity and Confidence, I explored some of the facets of what the analogy of "Confidence" is in a mature Christian man:

The pulpit commentary suggests:

- Heart; which among the Hebrews was considered to be the seat of the understanding, is here considered as the home of the affections and the seat of the will.
- Soul; the living powers, the animal life.
- Mind; διαμοίᾳ, intellectual powers. These are to be the seat and abode of the love enjoined.

And these mesh well with what we have learned about in this post about our confidence in Christ.

- In our hearts, we have eirene, the peace of God which is a wholeness with Him.
- In our souls, we have peitho/pistis, the faith and assurance of salvation from God.
- In our minds/might, we have parrhesia, the intellectual understanding that leads to an external boldness of which we can freely speak to others because of God.

Likewise, in Anchored Emotions, I explored the fullness of the heart that we are to have in Christ which are the joy and peace of God. All other emotions are transient.

> Happiness and fear, like other emotions, are transient. Anchor your emotions to the firm foundation of peace and joy in Christ Jesus and not to those of the shaky foundation of the human flesh. Your life will be transformed.

So today, I want to start exploring the fullness of the soul that we are to have in Christ.

To do that, let's harken back to Chad's recent exploration of the Virtues in his post on Righteous Actions and Character: the Virtues. The Theological Virtues (as termed by the Catholic Church in the catechism) are named straight out of Corinthians 13 passage on Love/Agape:

> 1 Corinthians 13:13 But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the [f]greatest of these is love.

I explored the fullness of faith — peitho and pistis — as it relates to confidence in all Christians, not just those with Christian masculinity already.

So let's explore Hope and Love a bit more, and see how they build on the foundation that is faith.

The anchoring of our souls in faith is that of the assurance of salvation and the assurance of what we hope,

> Hebrews 11 (NASB)
>
> 11 Now faith is the [a]assurance of things [b]hoped for, the [c]conviction of things not seen.

While the anchoring of our souls in hope is built on that foundation of faith and is our trust in Him to fulfill His promises to us, through His son Jesus Christ.

> Hebrews 6 (NASB)
>
> 17 [l]In the same way God, desiring even more to show to the heirs of the promise the unchangeableness of His purpose, [m]interposed with an oath, 18 so that by two unchangeable things in which it is impossible for God to lie, we who have [n]taken refuge would have strong encouragement to take hold of the hope set before us. 19 [o]This hope we have as an anchor of the soul, a hope both sure and steadfast and one which enters [p]within the veil, 20 where Jesus has entered as a forerunner for us, having become a high priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek.

Then what of love? Why is it built on a foundation of faith and of hope?

As I explained in Christian Masculinity, Mastery, the internal and the external, mastery first comes from the internal. Faith and Hope are manifestations of the internal state of our trust in God. They are the foundations upon which our souls exist in Christ, through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

This brings us to Love. In the fundamental nature of Christianity and the foundations of Christian masculinity, the two major conclusions that we draw are thus,

1. Christianity at its most basic level is about relationships both with God and men,
2. Our internal state is built up from faith all the way to godliness, then the expression of godliness manifests itself into expressions of brotherly kindness (philea) into love (agape).

So what then is love?

When questioned about the greatest commandments Jesus first said to Love the Lord your God with all your heart, all your soul, all your mind, and with all your strength and said the second is like it:

- Love your neighbor as yourself

However, that was of the Old Testament law. Jesus came in fulfillment of the Old Testament and formed a New Testament with us which is aptly described in His words in John 13 (NASB)

- 34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another.

Therefore, we know that if we have no faith, we can have no hope, and we can have no love.

But if we have faith in Christ, we have the hope that He will fulfill His promises. And if we have hope that He will fulfill His promises, we should have love/charity for all of His creation that all may see and fear and put their trust in God.

An anchord heart is to be in the peace and joy of the Lord.

An anchored soul is to be in the faith, hope, and love of the Lord.

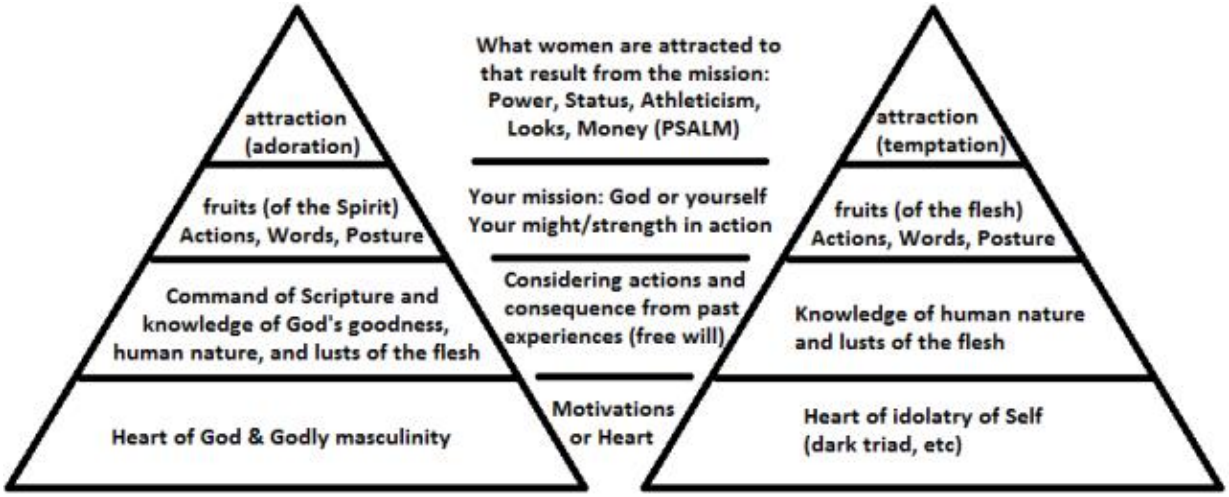
The end of the game debate



January 30, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was conversing with JoJ over at Free Notherner's Christian Masculinity, and was finally able to pinpoint the difference between the pro-game and anti-game debate that has raged about the Christian manosphere for the past half decade or more.

The part that got me started is that he came to the exact same conclusion that I did — the heart matters to God — but we came to exact opposite conclusions. This bothered me until I went back to the pyramid model and envisioned it from different angles.

> The top-down (anti-game) view is this: We know that we don't operate in a moral vacuum so therefore we can see that no "technique" or "tool" is void of spiritual ramifications. This is why game looks like a toolbox but is not — you cannot use a "tool" based in dark triad traits and expect not to be corrupted by it.
>
> The down-up (pro-game) view is this: We know that a Christian man who has a heart for God is able to sort between "techniques" or "tools" which are good and bad, and thus he can confidently say that eliminating neediness is going to make him a more effective man in successful communication, while on the other hand he may not use anything related to the dark triad because he knows that it will corrupt him. In this way, "game" can be seen as a tool because of the discernment of the individual.
>
> I'm pretty sure that we all agree that the knowledge by itself is not sinful (though some ways in which it is acquired can be). The main reason why I am "anti-game" per se is that it's good to look at what "not to do" with game such as not be needy, not seek validation from women, not pedestalize them, etc. but be very careful on what to use from game on what we "should do." It's the "should do" techniques that may be subtly based in the dark triad that will corrupt. From the top-down view, that would be eschewment of game on a broader level as self seeking especially if you don't know the spiritual ramifications of such, though if you can adequately distinguish between them (through the Holy Spirit) from a down-up it can be viewed like a "tool."

The game debate, in the end, is indeed a matter of perspective it seems. I wouldn't necessarily say that one side is right or wrong. In theory both views are adequately supported insomuch as God wants your both your heart and He wants good fruit/good works from Christians.

If we take a look at the pyramid from a top-down perspective, I know that as a Christian I can see that there are two pyramids and that implementation of knowledge (game) is spiritual devoid if it bears bad fruit which much of game does. It either falls into one camp or the other. One of God and one of the world. However, if I'm looking at the pyramid from the bottom-up perspective, I can see that it starts with the heart and therefore if you serve God you will only do things to please him which can include some of the "implementation of game knowledge" that will help you become a better Christian or see better the insight from Scripture.

However, in practice I think the top-down framework to view actions is best (the anti-game view) because it looks at the fruit of actions for not just the self but for everyone involved. This is why I still continue to say that techniques like dread game — which is rooted in the dark triad — are of the flesh. Although it may improve the marriage as an end result, it can also result in sin along the way. As Jesus said, "you shall know them by their fruits." An improved marriage but with sin is not how God wants us to live.

I've already proposed a 'filtering method' for "game" that seems to adequately eliminate most if not all of the dark triad techniques while keeping the soundness of "tools" a Christian man can learn from the knowledge of and practice:

1. It is good to know to learn about what to do and what not to do from the nature of intersex relationships from the Scriptures, godly mentors, prayer, fasting, meditation on the Word, etc.
2. It is good to know what not to do from knowledge of the nature of the flesh such as game.
3. But I would be very, very, very careful about what learning what to do from something inherently selfish like game.

Though, in Love, there needs to be a wholeness in the thinking of not just "self" but "us" as a Christian man interacting with a woman. Therefore, everything should be tested against the Scriptures and Holy Spirit in accordance with the question,

- Are my actions drawing myself and others / women closer to God?

This is the heart that God wants, and the heart motivated to action and knowledge that will “bear good fruit.”

My final thoughts on game:

If someone is clearly putting God first in their heart and actions whether they are “pro-game” or “anti-game” I support them. Whether they see me as “repackaging game” or whether I’m building “godly masculinity” I don’t care.

The debate is utterly pointless and a waste of time.

What matters, ultimately, is that I can effectively get out knowledge of how to instruct those who want to be masculine men of God.

P.S. This is the last game debate post I will ever write (hold me to it!) because I consider it resolved. The rest of the Christian masculinity posts with references to game will be on filtering and implementation with theological underpinnings.

The Change

January 31, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It was about a year ago that I first heard about the Russian “maxim”:

> To be a general’s wife, you have to marry a lieutenant

And I know that TempestTcup has blogged about it, but I think that’s the only person from the manosphere who has.

However, it’s not just women who are like this because men also fall into the same trap. We’re looking for the unicorn — the perfect women who seeks after God with all her heart, doesn’t have anything to do with feminism, is beautiful, never lusts after other men (but will somehow be wildly in love with us), was a virgin and chaste, etc.

This is why my “list” of what I look for in women has changed significantlly over the past year to things where I can see evidence of changes of God working in her life.

It’s important to be able to embrace the change: no one is perfect and no one will ever be. All Christians will be a work in progres, both in thought and in word and in deed.

> Ephesians 4 (NASB)
>
> 20 But you did not learn [o]Christ in this way, 21 if indeed you have heard Him and have been taught in Him, just as truth is in Jesus, 22 that, in reference to your former manner of life, you lay aside the old [p]self, which is being corrupted in accordance with the lusts of deceit, 23 and that you be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 24 and put on the new [q]self, which [r]in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

With that in mind, what really are we looking for? Here’s my 6 major points from the article above.

1. Evidence of a relationship with God
2. Evidence of cultivated godly femininity
3. Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed
4. Evidence of attraction/chemistry
5. Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization
6. Evidence of a willingness to be led

The main thing I see with the above is that I shouldn’t be looking for a complete product with the above categories.

Yes, it’s great if a woman has been reading the Scriptures and praying everyday to learn more about God everyday since she was 2 until now. However, a woman showing that she has the commitment over many months or several years is looking to seek after God too.

Likewise, in a category such as “a willingness to be led” I’m not looking for a woman who capitulates to every demand that Christian men or women suggest. I'm looking for a woman who is able to take any type of constructive criticism — test it against Scriptures — and then if it fits then is able to learn from it and grow.

The biggest factor you look for in this equation is the "but",

> "Thank you for your feedback, BUT I do it like this because…"

The "but" always tells you about someone's attitude in their willingness to learn and grow or if they're set in their own ways because they think they know what is best.

Unfortunately, this principle does not exactly apply to a woman's relationship with a man. There's very few men who are willing to accept criticism from women because criticism from women is called nagging. You don't understand what it is like to be a man. Indeed, no woman can teach a man how to be masculine. Likewise, if you go behind his back to talk to his friends about getting him to change that won't go over well either.

Fortunately, God has the answers to this for you in 1 Peter 3 and 1 Corinthians 7 on unbelieving husbands. This is a hard path to walk for most women, even those with believing husbands. You may know what is right according to Scripture. You may even have good intentions in your heart. But you can't change a man except through your submissive behavior and the power of God working in it. That's why it's so important that you choose a godly man who is seeking after God, and one who is willing to listen to his wife about his blind spots. That's tough to find even in the Christian manosphere today.

My main point is this: Marriage is not the end of the journey but only the beginning of two as one. The only evidence of that is through fruit of actions. I should see that she is improving her heart, soul, mind, and strength for Christ just as I am.

Understanding Attraction

February 1, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donalgraeme quantified what women find attractive in the 5 vectors of female attraction and going APE with a categorization of appearance/personality/externalities.

As Chad says, God is not a system. But the things He created as systems, and I like systems. I know that Free Northerner does too. I don't like black boxes. I like to understand why I'm putting what into the system and why the result comes out as it does.

I want to know what is the difference in the "power" of nice guys as opposed to bad boys.

Well, it turns out that my discussions with deti and JoJ in The Red Pill and Game and Donalgraeme's ongoing discussion concerning men, masculinity, women and femininity as well as knowledge of what I have from the PUAs and JoJ's explanations have helped me closer to quantifying what exactly attracts women to men. My posts on Anchored emotions and anchored souls also played a role as you will see.

Even with Donal's posts I think that many men see attraction as something that is mythical and mysterious. That is exactly what this post seeks to address.

A man's handshake.

It's often said that you can measure a man character by the quality of his handshake. The reason why a man's handshake is so important is because it's an expression of his will. It's his power put into one single moment.

But let's briefly take a step back and examine why that is the case. To understand attraction we must first go back to what the PUAs know to reverse engineer it. They posit that when you first interact with a woman typically you draw her in by building "comfort" — sharing commonalities about yourselves. Once you're one the same wavelength in building comfort, you have built "rapport" with her because you start to mirror each other. The PUAs have known for a long time that while comfort is needed to draw a woman in to get her invested, that by itself doesn't build attraction. Rather, breaking the rapport is the key to building attraction. Here's some examples.

Let's explore why this is. There's two ways that breaking rapport happens:

1. You break rapport — teasing her, disagreeing with her, mystifying her (riddles/jokes/making her guess), humor, etc.
2. She breaks rapport — shit/fitness testing you, she disagrees with you, she is rude

Let's go back the handshake analogy and expound upon it.

When you build "comfort" by exploring the commonalities between you, that's showing her the superficial side of you. She feels the warmth of your hand and the physical contact and it's nice, but it's still very superficial to her.

However, when you break rapport, that is you showing her your manhood. You're breaking past the superficiality and showing her what is underneath. You're showing her what is behind the veneer of what you present to the world.

When you break rapport — when you tease her, or disagree with her, mystify her, or make her laugh — that is you showing her the firmness, strength, and resolve behind your handshake. You're showing her that you're a man. You're laying down and setting boundaries. The firmness, strength, and resolve is something that she can anchor herself to. Humor is a bit of an odd ball, but it's usually something said that was unexpected about a situation. You can see how this defies her expectations and breaks rapport in that sense.

When she breaks rapport — when she shit / fitness tests you, when she disagrees with you, when she is rude — that is her showing you the firmness of her handshake. She wants you to show your resolve and squeeze back. She wants you to call her on her rudeness. She is in effect "rubbing against your manhood" as some in the manosphere might say.

If you're a man and you're given a firm handshake you typically rise the challenge and squeeze back. But many of us know that many nice guys with the limp handshake will fail to rise to the challenge and allow their hand to become amorphous. Their hand conforms to any shape depending on how hard you squeeze.

The reason why nice guys are boring and uninteresting is because they (1) never break past the superficial and show their resolve as a man underneath, and/or (2) when tested to show their resolve they fail and instead become amorphous and conform to what everyone else is doing. They fail to show anything but superficial warmth and do nothing to show their resolve as a man to women. Or when they are shit/fitness tested or a woman is rude to them, they fail to squeeze back and call her on her actions and instead allow themselves to conform to what the woman wants.

Respect to a woman is a man to whom she is able to anchor herself. When he shakes with a firm handshake, she can be assured that as she squeezes back he will maintain his grip on her. If she starts getting pulled one way or another by her emotions or other people, her boyfriend or husband will be able to tighten his grip to hold her safe. She knows that when he squeezes and she squeezes back he will not conform to her, but rather will set boundaries himself and she will anchor herself to him.

When she tests your boundaries through fitness test, you need to show her the strength behind your handshake. This is why you do not want to conform to what she says, nor allow yourself to get sucked into her frame.

The Bible is clear as to why this is the case:

> Genesis 2 (NASB)
> 18 Then the Lord God said, "It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper[or helpmeet] [o]suitable for him."

The helpmeet — woman — will anchor herself to the man to help him in his mission. Likewise,

> 1 Corinthians 11 (NASB) — on Christian order
> 3 But I want you to understand that [a]Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman, and God is the head of [b]Christ. 4 Every man who has something on his head while praying or prophesying disgraces his head. 5 But every woman who has her head uncovered while praying or prophesying disgraces her head, for she is one and the same as the woman [c]whose head is shaved. 6 For if a woman does not cover [d]her head, let her also [e]have her hair cut off; but if it is disgraceful for a woman to [f]have her hair cut off or [g]her head shaved, let her cover [h]her head. 7 For a man ought not to have his head covered, since he is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of man. 8 For man [i]does not originate from woman, but woman from man; 9 for indeed man was not created for the woman's sake, but woman for the man's sake. 10 Therefore the woman ought to have a symbol of authority on her head, because of the angels. 11 However, in the Lord, neither is woman [j]independent of man, nor is man [k]independent of woman. 12 For as the woman [l]originates from the man, so also the man has his birth through the woman; and all things [m]originate from God.

In the same way, we as Christians anchor our souls and anchor our emotions to Jesus Christ, and Jesus is our intercessor to God as a high priest in the order of Melchizedek (Hebrews 6). Likewise, husbands are to anchor themselves to Jesus, and wives are to anchor themselves to both Jesus and their husbands. Man was not created for woman but woman for man.

The vectors of attraction — power, status, athleticism, looks, money — are all tangible or intangible things that men possess that women can anchor themselves to which may bring security or provision in some measure. This is why women are attracted to them. Some attraction vectors may matter more than others depending on the woman and the environment in which she was raised, though power/personality is always #1.

This is why money is a waning attraction factor (aside from millionaires or billionaires) because money can now be provided by the government as a security blanket in the event of a child out of wedlock, loss of a job, and a woman can provide for herself.

Going back to some of my previous posts let's see how they fit within the framework. Some of my practical posts such as Be Decisive focus on showing her your conviction — the firmness, strength, and resolve behind your handshake — is attractive because you show her that there is something behind your superficiality that she can anchor herself to.

This is why I've been hammering it home on many of the Foundational Posts on Christian Masculinity that you need to know what you believe and have the resolve to speak up and act on it. If you don't show a woman anything past the superficial niceties and commonalities between yourselves in conversation then you're forgetable, boring, and uninteresting. If you don't squeeze back when she squeezes, then you're forgetable, boring, and uninteresting.

Most nice guys never want to disagree with a woman for fear of upsetting her. In this way they are amorphous and there is no resolve behind their will. They are unattractive. If someone says something that you disagree with then speak up, especially in regard to spiritual matters. This shows both men and women the firmness behind your handshake, and they will almost always respect you even if they disagree.

This is also why bad boys are attractive. They don't care what anyone thinks of them and are able to speak their mind with impunity. They only care about themselves, but this shows a woman a resolve that she is able to anchor herself to… for at least a time. They aren't afraid of taking risks, break rules or do things the way they want consequences be damned.

Now, not all of these are things that Christian men should emulate. However, being about to speak your convictions as a Christian, be firm in resolve for your boundaries, being able to take risks, and do things differently from others but still serve God are all things that are part of being a Christian masculine man. Each of us has our own mission in life and a different way to carry it out.

Don't be afraid to speak your mind about what you like and especially what you don't like to set boundaries. Then back them up with actions as a Christian masculine man. Aim to please God rather than men.

Christian men — remember your handshake and everything that is behind it the next time you are afraid to speak up, act, or disagree.

Ed note: special thanks to JoJ for all that he has done in the Christian manosphere.

The teacher and the student

February 1, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I wanted to explore the teacher-student dynamic as it regards to my most recent post Understanding Attraction.

I've always been a huge fan of this dynamic because I have specialized knowledge in a few fields, and it's easy for me to slip in to that role to instruct men or women in my expertise.

Almost invariably all Christian women say they want their husband to be a leader in the household and especially to be a spiritual leader to them. While you can't necessarily trust what a woman says, this is actually the case that she wants you to teach her more about God. Therefore, the conclusions we learn in this post apply on a broad level.

This is why setting a standard of spiritual leadership such as in Leave her better than you found her is so important.

Now, in Understanding Attraction, we talked why women find breaking rapport attraction. We broke them down into two categories:

1. You break rapport — teasing her, disagreeing with her, mystifying her (riddles/jokes/making her guess), humor, etc.
2. She breaks rapport — shit/fitness testing you, she disagrees with you, she is rude

In the previous post, we talked about how you need to build comfort first to actually have rapport so you can break it. However, we're going to assume that you already built comfort because she is accepting instruction from you already, which means she has at least some level of comfort with you already. Women typically don't accept instruction from creepy guys.

So let's go through all of the dynamics of the teacher-student relationship and see how they apply:

You break rapport

- Teasing her — comes naturally when she makes a mistake or does something unexpected but funny. Teasing overlaps very well with humor/laughter in the situation.
- Disagreeing with her — again, comes naturally when she makes a mistake. She is expecting you to catch her mistakes, and when you correct her it shows you that you know what you are talking about.
- Mystifying her — Since you're instructing her, you don't want to give away the answers for free. You make her critically think through the topic(s) on hand and guide her path in coming to the correct conclusions. There's a fine line between keeping her guessing and frustration, but it's usually worth the payout.
- Humor/laughter — likewise, if she makes an egregious or otherwise hilarious error you can both laugh at it together. Similarly, if you make a dumb mistake and point it out, it shows your expertise in finding your mistakes and correcting them while being light hearted.

She breaks rapport

- shit / fitness testing you — usually doesn't occur during the teacher-student dynamic, but may happen if she questions your authority. Usually needs a firm hand to guide her back into line by reversing the situation — "oh, if you're the expert now, why don't you teach me instead?"
- she disagrees with you — Sometimes this does come up with certain situations. If you know she is wrong in a certain instance and can prove it there's no need to rub it in her face, but it goes well with a light teasing about how she thinks she is an expert but still has a little while to go.
- she is rude — the best way to punish rudeness is almost always withdrawal of attention. Telling her that if she is rude to you when you're trying to help her and that you'll just let her figure it out on her own and leave is one of the best options unless you can use the situation to tease her or make her laugh such as the fitness testing situation.

As you can see, the teacher-student dynamic creates situations where you can break rapport with her very easily and very naturally. It follows that often she will be naturally attracted to you from it, or at the very least she will respect you for teaching her. Attraction naturally follows after a woman respects you.

I very highly encourage that all Christian men delve deeply into the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, and fasting so that you can become a "spiritual leader." This assists you in guiding a potential wife on the path of righteousness to deepen her relationship with God and with yourself. That is the first and foremost thing that we as Christian men want to be doing with potential wife candidates.

Christian nice guys are abused

February 3, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As I stated in life is transactional, the most important resource that all Christians have is our time. What do we do with our time is the most important thing that we do on this earth. Are we using that time for godly purposes or are we using it for naught?

Consider that if an average life is 75 years that means we only have 27,393 days on this earth. However, if you consider that most of the men that will eventually marry will marry before 40, then you only have 14609 days. Then if you look at the actual potential of when you have the availability to meet and marry a wife, for most men it will be from 20-40 years of age or 20 years which is only 73o4 days.

If you parse that down into men in the manosphere who are already in their late 20s or early 30s and previously floundering Christian nice guys, you may find that we have about 3652 days. But when you look at the time we spend on our days — 8 hours of those days we sleep, and 8 hours of the day we work and potentially more spent on commuting, food, and exercise — so you really only have about 1/4 of that time or 913 days or 2.5 years to find a wife.

My point in breaking down the numbers is definitely not to discourage, but instead to show you that you shouldn't waste your greatest resource.

One of the biggest ways Christian nice guys get abused is for their time.

When a woman asks them to do X or Y or Z, Christian nice guys will almost inevitably say yes.

Now, there's nothing wrong with this because helping out your brothers and sisters in Christ is indeed good, BUT you must realize that if you do you're doing it out of charity (agape). Never expect anything back from it.

There becomes a point where you will be abused for your time. If you continually accept you should know that your help with almost always be abused because you'll become that "guy" that all women go to for help.

There are certain circumstances in which you should NEVER accept.

- If a woman has a husband or boyfriend who can do the task she asked you then you should never accept. Even if she says he is busy she should still not be asking you. It is the husbands duty to find someone else to help if she has a problem, and the husband should not be asking you to help his wife either. That's what family is for, or asking the church itself. They're almost always just going to be abusing your time as a nice guy.
- If a woman wants to talk about emotions — especially after a break up, or an attractive guy they are talking to — they are just using you as an emotional tampon. Yes, gross. Never accept.
- Likewise, if a woman comes to you about any issues she is having with men and working things out with him just don’t do it. She should be talking to the man in question instead — not you or her girlfriends.

- If a woman in a ministry asks for your help, and you know you aren’t called to that ministry. Just say no.
- A Christian woman (non family) asks you for money, housing, or any type of other big deal. If they have an issue, they should take it through the church first. Most churches have some type of thing where they can help those in need.

These are just some examples, so if you can think of any other instances where you’re being abused for your time where it’s not right for you to be there you need ot step out.

It’s important not to allow your time, money, or other resources to be abused by women who are looking for help in places where they should not be asking for it.

You should have your own mission from God that you need to put your time, money, and resources into instead. You are not a helpmeet to some other Christian woman, especially a Christian woman to whom you are not married.

Christian masculinity, mindset, and fitness testing

February 3, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In God doesn't owe you anything, I discussed how mindset is the #1 limiting factor of Christian nice guys. They place women on the pedestal over God, and thus their additional time goes into pleasing women over pleasing God.

In context, the PUAs have codified categories of responses to fitness tests show us what type of mindset not to have when interacting with women. For example, there are many types of quintessential no-win questions that women ask men:

- Does this dress make my butt look big?
- Do you notice anything different about me?
- Do you think I'm putting on weight?
- Did you like ____? (especially when she already has an opinion on it herself).

Any type of question where she is searching for you to validate her concerns and/or agree with her are almost always fitness tests, especially when you can tell she is invested or getting emotional about it.

Thus, the PUAs codified four major categories of responses that these fall into which are:

1. Agree and amplify
2. Ignore
3. Misinterpret (joke, compliment)
4. Reframe

Examples of the above categories with the questions above are:

1. An agree an amplify response would be something such as "yep, your butt is so huge it fills up this whole room!"
2. An ignore response changes the subject to a related topic or non-related topic. "What do you think of this dress?" or "what do you think of my clothes?"
3. A misinterpretive response can take two forms which are close to synonymous synonymous — joke, sarcasm, and compliments. For instance, if she say "Does this dress make my butt look big?" and you say "yes" then she may respond with "wow, that's rude" in which case you can respond with "wow, thanks for the compliment" or "wow, no one has ever said such nice things to me before."
4. A reframe response basically tosses the accusation or statement back on her, often with another question or statement. If she says "Does this dress make my butt look big?" then you would say "What would you do if I say it does? (with a wink or smirk).

The key point behind the codification techniques is to be able to easily pull up a response. But that doesn't teach most men about how to think about the situation and build the proper mindset when interacting with women.

If you think about all of the responses above, the key point that runs through all of them is that you're not taking the woman too seriously.

When nice guys validate the concerns of a woman or agree with her what does that say to her in her mind? Who are the other people that often express concern for her and agree with her?

That's right: other women.

When you validate a woman's concerns and agree with her you are basically being a friendly woman to her. You are not a man to her but only a friendly woman. That's why she is not attracted to you, and another reason why nice guys are boring and uninteresting. You're only telling her what her other girl friends tell her. That's the logical conclusion, and no doubt for most men will absolutely shatter their world view.

The reason why men today fall into this trap of thinking like women is that we are told by feminism, society, and even churches that men and women are the same except for their ding dongs and vajayjays.

Thus, the mindset that men must learn to take on is that women are different. God created men and women differently. Who would've thought.

In fact, it is almost always better look for points to disagree with women because breaking rapport is the key to developing attraction in women.

Any time that as a Christian man you think a woman is trying to use you for validation of her emotions, words, or actions you should never take her seriously. That's not something you should be giving her because it is selfish of her to ask you in the first place.

For instance, if a woman comes up to you asking you if some clothing makes her look good. If she has a husband or boyfriend she's abusing your time for validation as a nice guy as I discussed here. Even if she doesn't, she has other women she can talk to if she wants to discuss the merits of getting compliments for her clothes.

But it is an almost irresistable temptation for women to seek validation from men. Why else do so many women dress up? It's definitely not for other women or themselves, even though they may keep saying it is. They like the validation and compliments they receive from men. Christian women are no different from non-Christian women in this regard. The validation they should seek is from God — His joy and peace in their lives.

You as a Christian man should not be validating her choice of clothes on her terms because that is self seeking, although it may seem innocuous. However, what she is actually doing is fishing for compliments. No one likes someone who is fishing for compliments, yet men give the compliments all the time anyway.

When you respond seriously to a woman's selfish need for validation you are only pushing her further away from God. It is the antithesis of being a loving brother in Christ.

This is the type of mindset that Christian nice guys need to internalize. You aren't here on this earth to validate women and agree with them. You are here on this earth because God has put you here to carry out your mission with your time, money, and resources.

To note if you are going to give a compliment do it on your terms. Without her having mentioned it first. That way it’s genuine, and it doesn’t validate her.

Discerning the mission

February 3, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To accurately carry out a mission there needs to be a deep understanding of what the actual mission is. This seems to be a big problem in the Christian manosphere because there are a lot of particular views on what the mission is to be.

The mission of the men who desire a wife or have a wife:

> Genesis 3:18 Then the Lord God said, “It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper [o]suitable for him.”
>
> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself,
>
> Colossian 3:19 Husbands, love your wives and do not be embittered against them.
>
> 1 Peter 3:7 You husbands in the same way, live with your wives in an understanding way, as with [c]someone weaker, since she is a woman; and show her honor as a fellow heir of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.
>
> 1 Corinthians 7:Now concerning the things about which you wrote, it is good for a man not to touch a woman. 2 But because of immoralities, each man is to have his own wife, and each woman is to have her own husband. 3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control. 6 But this I say by way of concession, not of command.
> […]12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she consents to live with him, he must not [f]divorce her
>
> 1 Corinthians 11:3 But I want you to understand that [a]Christ is the head of > every man, and the man is the head of a woman, and God is the head of [b]Christ.

The first distinction that must be made is there is no “get of out obligations” free card. What you see is what you get. The same is true for wives as well.

Just because a wife is rebellious does not give a man permission to:

1. To not love her by washing her with the water of the Word (teach and show her Christ-likeness from the Scriptures through your words and actions)
2. To not love her by not treating her as his own body (violence; though if a couple agrees on domestic discipline that’s up to them and God).
3. Not lead (or be the head),
4. Become embittered toward her,
5. Deny sexual relations,
6. To not be understanding/considerate to her
7. Even if she is an unbeliever, BUT she is willing to live with you then you must not divorce her.

Her submission is not dependent on you leading. It is independent. You must do to which you are called regardless of what she is doing.

This is what being a Christian means. Even if all forsake you and turn to their own ways, you must still strive to follow God’s commands. That’s what Jesus did for us on the cross. That’s His command to us: love one another as I have loved you.

It may be hard. It may be difficult. But that’s when the transforming power of God works in your life, and shows others the love of God.

The second point is to realize that EVEN IF you do what God has called you, your wife still may not respect you or submit to you and she may even divorce you.

This should not deter you from what is righteous. Again, we are called to do these commands irrespective of what we think that the wife or any others should be doing. Our call is from God, not from ourselves, wives, or others. A husband should not be asking his wife “how can I make this marriage better for you?” or “how can I lead you better?” or “how can I be more romantic so that you will have more sex with me?” or “how do you think I can better serve God?” which puts her up on a false pedestal.

God directly tells us in Scripture what to do above; you should not be asking her for direction. You should ask her for opinion regarding decisions you will make, but not for confirmation on what you should do. If you are asking her for confirmation or direction then she is leading the relationship, and you are the helpmeet. This is unbiblical.

The correct mindset is this: I care about you and want to lead you, but if you don’t follow where I’m going with my mission from God then I am not responsible for your actions and the resulting consequences. Your unhappiness is your own.

If you don’t know what you mission is in terms of career, service in the church, outreach and/or missions, hobbies, or whatever else then you had better start praying about what God wants you to do. Not ask your wife.

For the single Christian men: This is why vetting a woman who is willing to be led is so important.

Hard mode

February 4, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Hard mode

I occasionally puruse the TRP reddit. Most of the focus of TRP is focused toward casual sex and to never marry, so it has very limited applicability. However, there are things to be learned from there occasionally.

One of the things that comes up is that “relationships” for a red pill aware man is playing life on hard mode. It’s an apt analogy, and one that should be shared with any Christian man who wants to be in a relationship.

In fact, the essence of Christianity is like playing the game on hardcore mode. There are no extra lives, and there are no take backs. What you see is what you get, and if your marriage ends up failing then there is no re-do button. Reality is much like this. This is why it is important to be mindful of the decisions you make, yet not to live in fear. There’s a balance.

This is why as a Christian I have never been against “taking the red pill” in terms of having it open up your eyes to the reality around you. Hosea 4 is particular is apt in describing what happens to Christians who ignore the truth of reality, especially verse 6:

> Hosea 4:6 My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because you have rejected knowledge, I also will reject you from being My priest. Since you have forgotten the law of your God, I also will forget your children.

If you read through the entirety of Hosea, it is playing out in reality today as churchianity — Israel turned away from God to false idols and prostituted themselves before them, and likewise the church is doing the same today. The exceedingly sad part is that pastors call what they are doing good.

Going back to the red pill, there is limited utility in using “game” for what to learn for building a healthy marriage.

First and foremost, the fact that the mission of a Christian man who desires marriage and family is different from that of the players and PUAs. It even seems harder for Christians who desire to be married than non-Christians who desire to be married. A married non-Christian can be a man who exhibits dark triad traits and is selfish and women will love him for it. On the other hand, we are also called to think not just of ourselves but to love others as Jesus loved us. This may seem hard, but we know in reality it is not. As Jesus says in Matthew:

> Matthew 11:28 “Come to Me, all [a]who are weary and heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. 29 Take My yoke upon you and learn from Me, for I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. 30 For My yoke is [b]easy and My burden is light.”

The reason why it seems hard is that it seems like our options are limited. Instead of having the options to be selfish and selfless as a non-Christian, we only have the option to be selfless as a Christian. However, this is not the case.

I explained in the fundamental nature of Christianity that instead of having our options limited, we actually have freedom from our free will. As Roman 8 says, we are set free from the law of sin and death by receiving Christ. And with Christ, we become completed so that we have the fullness of His life.

The "limiting" of options is actually freedom from the things of this world. And that allows us to anchor our emotions and anchor our souls to Him, and by the same measure anchor our mind and strength to as well.

We are promised in this life that it will be hard by Jesus. This is the nature of overcoming the flesh and instead walking by the Spirit. In this way, we can think of the Christian walk to be life on hard mode. But understand that the freedom we have in Christ will allow him to be a strength in our weakness. As Paul said about his thorn,

> 2 Corinthians 12:7 Because of the surpassing greatness of the revelations, for this reason, to keep me from exalting myself, there was given me a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to [b]torment me—to keep me from exalting myself! 8 Concerning this I implored the Lord three times that it might leave me. 9 And He has said to me, "My grace is sufficient for you, for power is perfected in weakness." Most gladly, therefore, I will rather boast [c]about my weaknesses, so that the power of Christ may dwell in me. 10 Therefore I am well content with weaknesses, with [d]insults, with distresses, with persecutions, with difficulties, for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then I am strong.

Yes, marriage is hard mode for Christians, but we have God to assist us during hard mode. He allows us to overcome our struggle with the flesh.

Mind set and hard mode

As I explained in discerning the mission, the difference is all in the mindset.

We each have our own strength and weaknesses as men (see: my analysis of parable of the talents). We know that some men are more intelligent. We know that some men are better looking. We know that some men have a gift for conversation. We know that some men have leadership qualities. We know that some men build muscle easily. We know that some men are born into riches. We know that some men are born into status. There's a lot of differences between all men, and that's how God created us. That's the nature of life.

Do I despise my fellow Christian men who just get it and are successful with women?

No, because I understand that God created them with that gift. They will each have their own struggles that they have to deal with even if it's not women.

When you resent naturals for being gifted with women you resent God for giving them the that natural aptitude. You also place a premium and importance on women, which means you are setting women up on a pedestal.

It's a fair criticism to say that you may not be able to learn as much from naturals because they cannot adequately explain the behaviors which make them successful. But, on the other hand, naturals exhibit behaviors with women even though they may not understand why. In that line of thinking we know that God has given us the ability to think critically about behaviors to see what works and what doesn't. At the very least we have an example.

For most men the correct mindset is forged both through guidance and experience. This was previously passed down from fathers to sons in a society that was conducive to it. But that does not happen anymore. The fact that there is very little of the Christians in the world is disheartening, and similarly there is not much on the manosphere either. But we are working to change that.

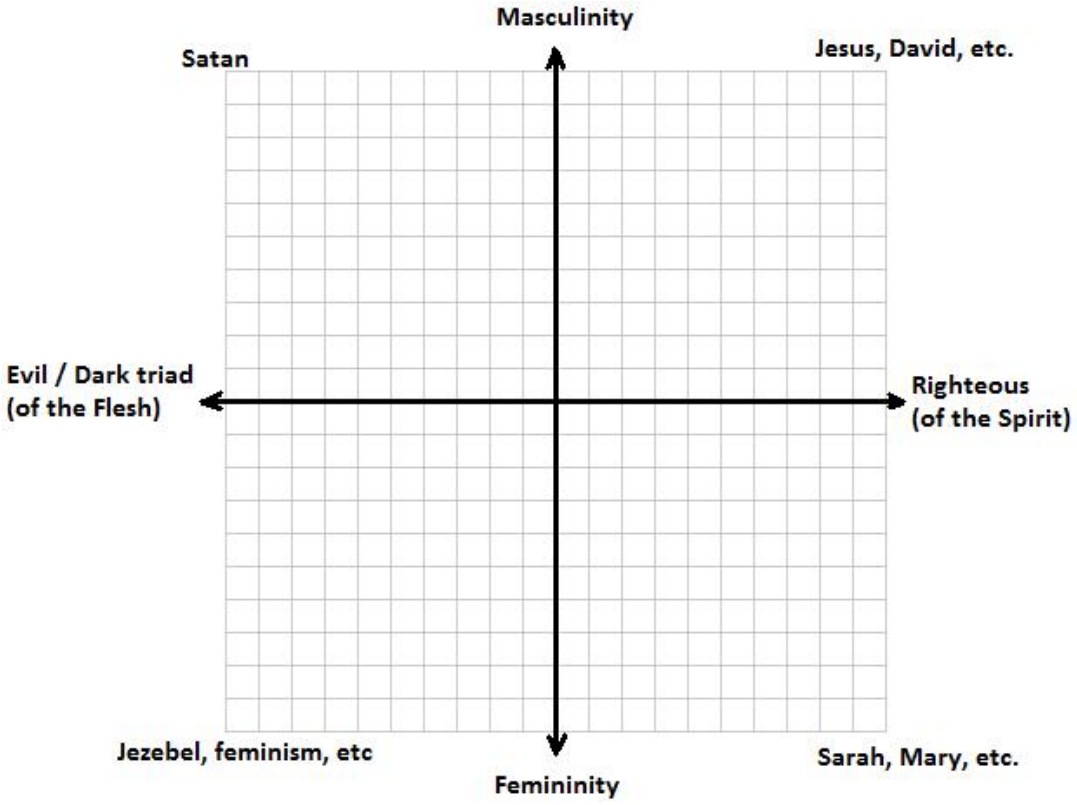
It is going to be a difficult journey to learn how to be a Christian masculine man of God. Changing mindset and behaviors is difficult. But we know that God is strength in our weakness. We know that He will help us on hard mode. We seek daily be transformed for His glory.

Carol Dweck's two mindsets illustrate this beautifully, though it's not from a Christian perspective.

God has said the world is not deterministic, and He has given us free will to change. God created us to grow in the richness of a relationship with Him and with others. So change for His glory.

Note: if you can't see the image here is an alternative.

Understanding the world and the mission

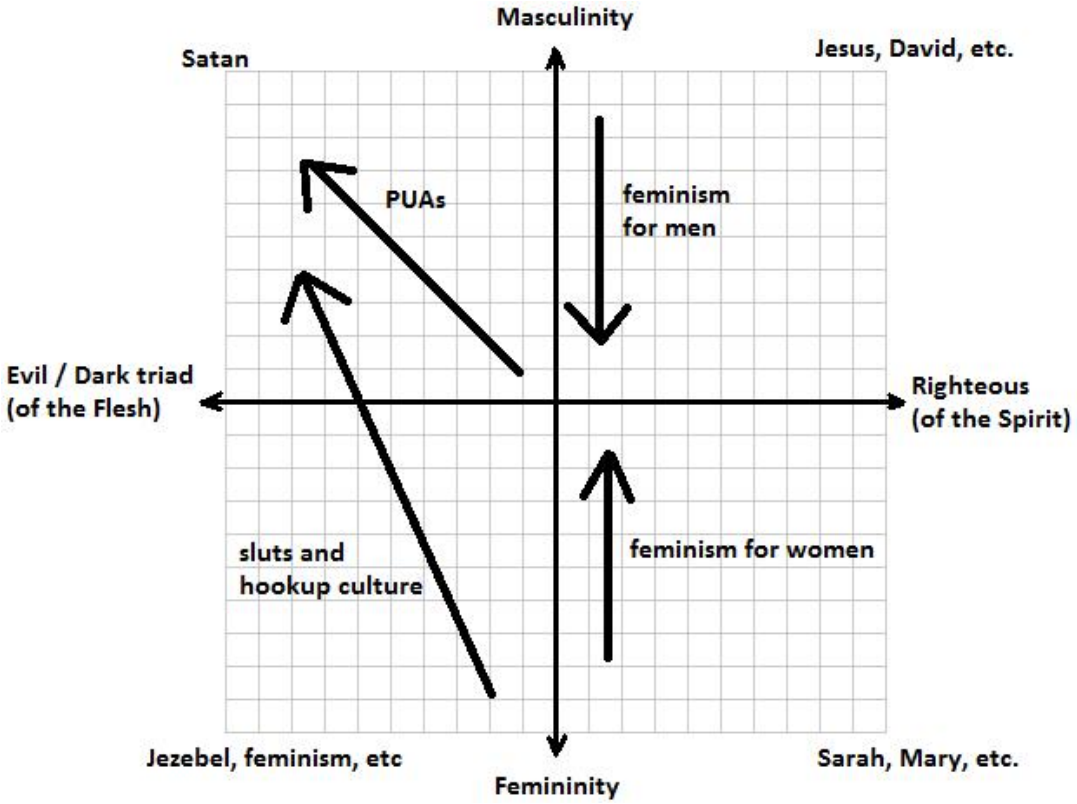


February 4, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To truly understand what is happening in both secular society, the church, and the manosphere I've decided on visual representations.

To illustrate this we need to see the dichotomy of:

1. The Masculine versus the Feminine
2. The Spirit versus the flesh

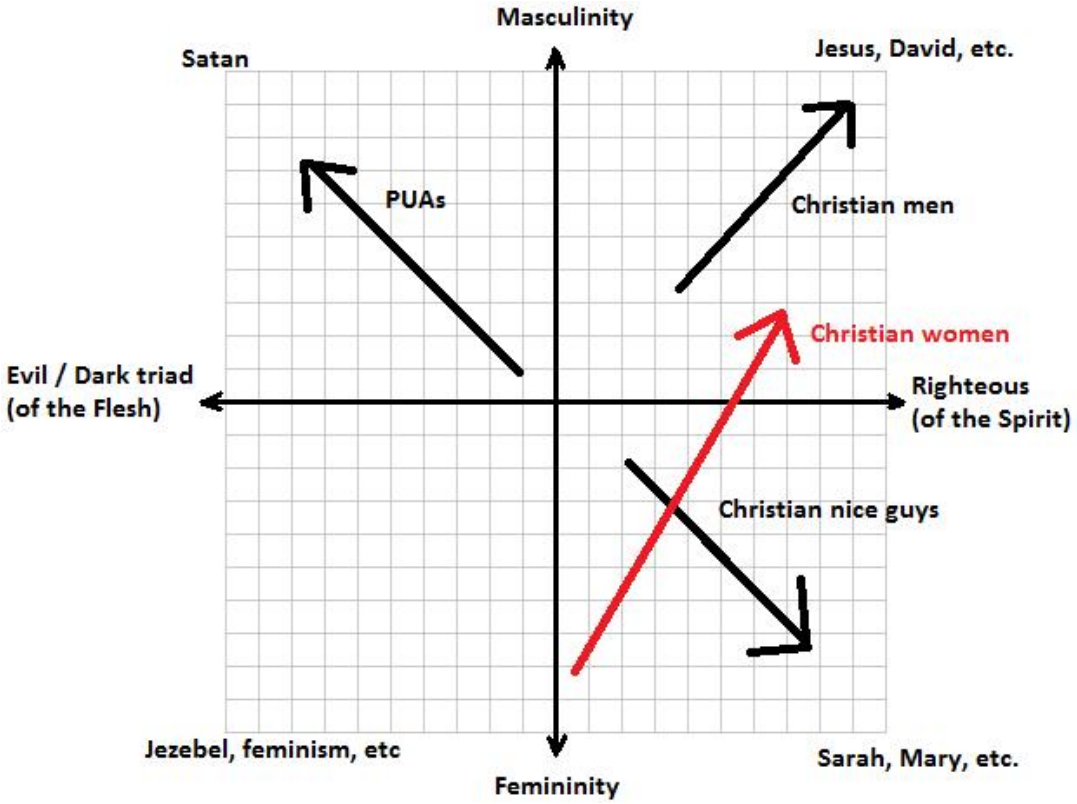


Here is a graphical representation:

On this sample chart, I threw out some names of who may be "representative" of particular maximizations of each. Obviously, Jesus and David are excellent examples of men who walked with God and were masculine, while Satan is the devil and the tempter. On the other hand, we have femininity of women of the Bible who were commended by God such as Sarah and Mary, and on the other hand you have Jezebel and feminism which are intimately tied together.

Now, feminism isn't exactly clear cut because we know that it pushes women to be more masculine and men to be more feminine. So feminism could potentially be androgynous where the evil/dark triad words are. But that's for another debate.

This next chart depicts what is happening in society:



We know that as feminism pushes women to become more career oriented, independent and aggressive, and it pushes them to obey their feelings and have casual sex. They are pushed towards the lusts of the flesh (to the left) and to be more masculine (to the top).

The PUAs/players figured out that they needed to be more masculine than the “masculine hedonistic women” to be attractive to them. Through field reports they codified different methods of counteracting the B-shield masculinity of women to pass shit / fitness tests. Thus, PUAs and players indulged their hedonistic tendencies (to the left) and were able to become more masculine (to the top).

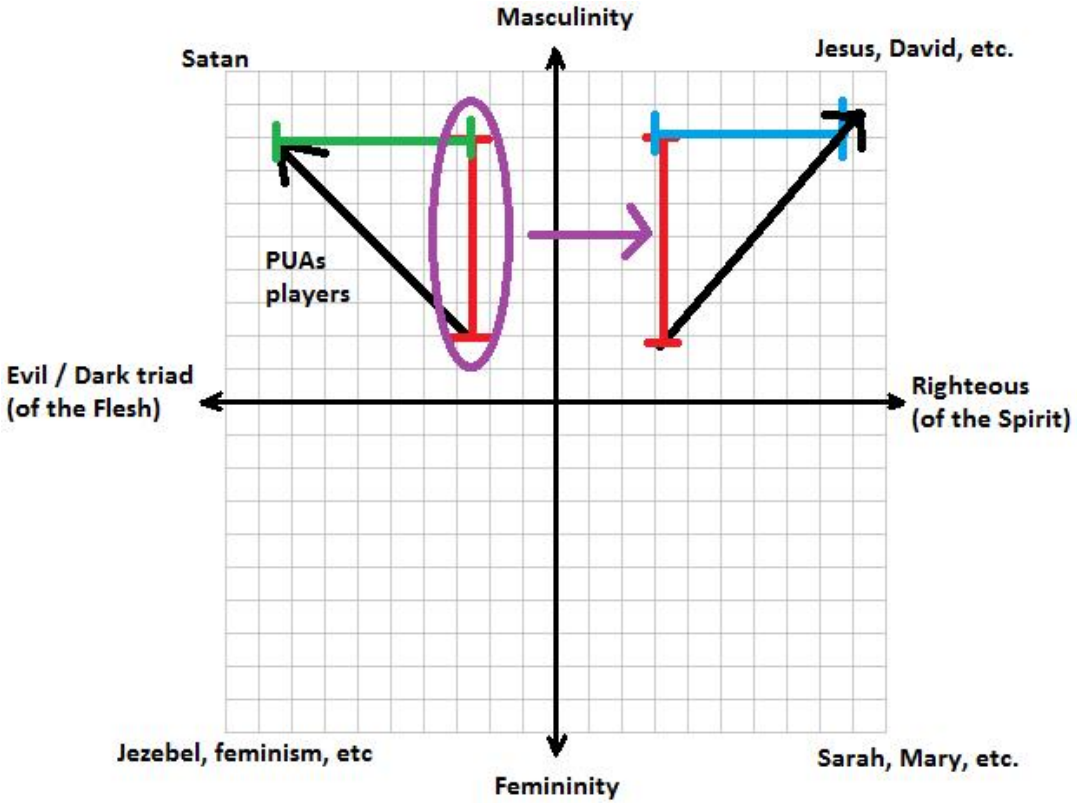
Since the masculine attracts the feminine and vice versa, the higher you are towards masculinity the more easily you will attract the feminine below you. This is one of the examples of why effeminate men look up to PUAs and players. They see them as above themselves in the hierarchy and assume it is because they are jerks and assholes as opposed to the masculine behavior. They don’t know they can act masculine but not have the jerk and asshole connected to it. Both feminine and masculine women look up to them as well.

Feminism seeks to masculinze women (to the top) and feminize men (to the bottom) to create a more androgynous society. I would even say that 3rd wave feminism may indeed seek to make women into men and men into women taking it to to the extreme.

Now let’s discuss what is happening in the church.

Although JoJ is “pro-game” and Donal, Chad, FN, and I are “anti-game” we have the same goal. In reality, we may even just be caught up in semantics on what “game” is and what constitutes a “toolbox.”

Our main goal is this — to build Christian (to the right) masculine (to the top) men that are walking to what God has called them to do including a wife if that’s in his mission.



Unfortunately, the church has taken cues from society and pushes women into careers and away from marriage — don’t marry too early, get a career before marrying, wear casual clothes instead of feminine clothes, etc. — but is still “trying” to push them towards God. This results in women following the red arrow path where they become more masculine (to the top) but also seeking towards God (to the right).

However, the church also feminizes men telling them to be nice, to lead without power, to practice servant leadership (aka serve the wife), cater to women, put women on pedestals, men bad/woman good, and all other sorts of lies. This results in men become more effeminate (to the bottom) yet still seeking after God (to the right).

Unfortunately, when men become more feminine than women, the women are not attracted to them at all. The more effeminate and nice a man is and the bigger disparity between them, the more likely a man is to get a nuclear rejection if he asks a woman out.

On the other hand, the only examples of masculinity that these Christian women see that are attractive to them are PUAs and players. These Christian women see that is going to lead them in a wrong direction (to the left), but they may go along with it anyway since attraction! There aren’t enough masculine Christian men, and/or they are too masculine themselves.

Now, here’s where we’re headed with vector plot representation:

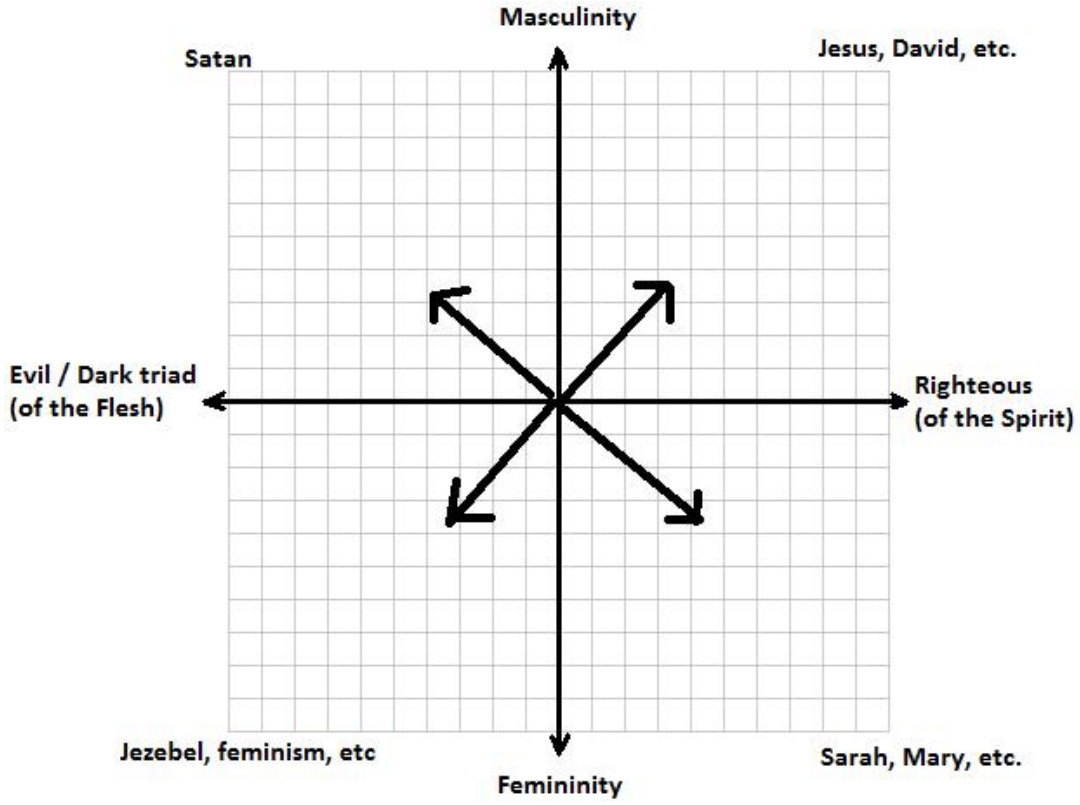
The red component represents becoming more masculine. This is composed of two variables:

1. Unlearning feminine behaviors and mindsets (this drops off the negative component).
2. Learning masculine behaviors and mindsets (this adds a positive component).

Game knowledge and implementation is excellent for learning what not to do as a man (e.g. unlearning feminine behaviors and mindsets). Some examples would be don't treat her as an equal, don't take her too seriously, don't put her on a pedestal, don't seek validation or be needy, etc.

Game as knowledge and implementation is both excellent and poor for learning what to do as a man (e.g. learning masculine behaviors and mindsets). This is because some behaviors and mindsets such as thinking only of yourself and how to get what you want from women using any type of coarse language and sexual temptation are not of God. However, there is some utility in learning some behaviors and mindsets that do indeed line up with the Scriptures such as becoming a more effective communicator, working out, eating right, etc. that I discussed in Self improvement versus God improvement.

While PUAs and players may filter their world view through the GREEN which is of the lusts of the flesh and self satisfaction/happiness, Christians must instead filter their world view through the BLUE which is Scriptures, prayer, meditation, fasting, agapao love, and the fruits of the Spirit.



The main thing that Donal, Chad, and I have been harping on in the past month or so is the importance of developing the BLUE component over the RED component. Without first the pursuit of righteousness, any other thing is worthless.

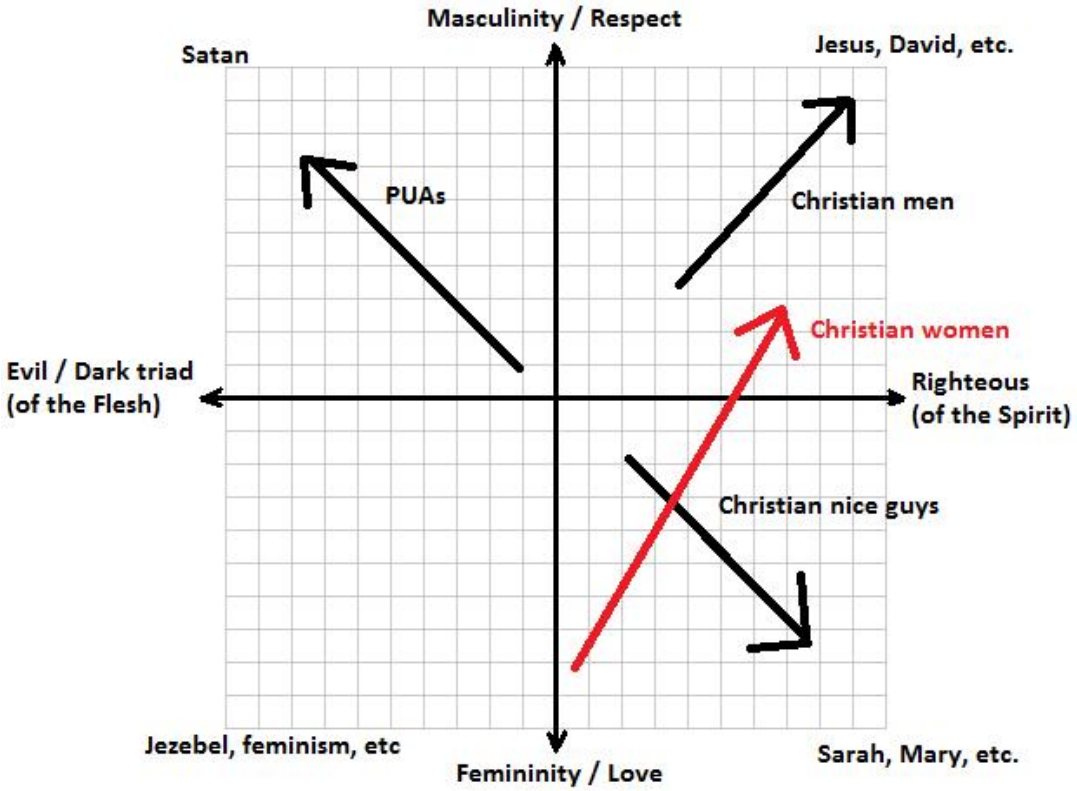
This isn't to say that the pursuit of righteousness is attractive because it's not, but the things you may do to pursue righteousness such as leading a small group may be attractive because of the leadership and status components.

I know that JoJ agrees with this particular sentiment because when we talked he specifically said to me that you need to be spending as much time on the Scriptures, prayer, etc and more devoted to God than you do on women. Likewise, a man must first develop a heart that seeks after God then after on development on the attributes of masculinity. We are on the same page even if we are on the opposite sides of the "game debate."



The main reason why it is important to understand that the godly component comes first is because actions are never neutral (either up, down, right, or left). Actions are always on a diagonal. This is because we do not operate in a moral vacuum.

As a player, all your actions from your heart are self seeking — How can I be happier (even at the expense of others though it may be nice if others benefit)?

But as a Christian, all your actions from your heart need to be selfless — How can I act that brings both myself and others closer to God?

Update: see role reversal for how masculinity ties into respect, and femininity ties into love:

Conclusions

I really hate arguing the game debates because they are fruitless. We are on the same page as long as you:

1. Have a heart for God and the things He desires, and
2. Walk towards being an Christian masculine man

The fact that God created masculinity to be attracted to femininity and vice versa is something that we all need to recognize. The PUAs and players do not have a stranglehold on what it means to be masculine. It is the masculinity in evil actions to which women are tempted, but if you can act masculine in good actions then that is also attractive to women. Leadership in teaching a Bible study, or in the worship band, or preaching are all good examples.

The point now is how do we cultivate a masculinity in men that is worthy of who God has called us to be. That is the main purpose of this blog.

Game knowledge and analysis is one good way to do that, but it must fit in a framework of what is good. If that is a “toolbox” to some then so be it.

The Scriptures are obviously another. The Bible is rife with examples of how not to act as men interacting with women. There are also really good examples of how to act masculine from Jesus, the patriarchs, and the prophets.

We are called to be in the world but not of the world. It is possible to be a Christian masculine man of God and to find a wife through it, and I look forward to walking this journey with any that are willing.

Never beg and never plead

February 5, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Begging and pleading is unattractive to both men and women. It shows that you know you've done something wrong, and are trying to make up for it. Pleading and begging also do not show that you have grown in the nature of humility and kindness in your life from the fruits of the Spirit to which God has called us.

The reality is that we do things wrong and can't make up for it. That's why we need Jesus as a Savior. We need His grace and mercy as sinners because we cannot do enough good works to make up for our sin, and we cannot be religious enough to make up for our sin. We love because He first loved us.

Coming from a standpoint of humility and kindness tells a man (or woman) that you've made mistakes, and you know that there's nothing you can do to make it up. This is a component of two actions:

1. You tell them that you have made a mistake, and
2. That you are apologizing for your actions.

An optional component is to say that you would like to reconcile but you understand if they refuse.

> Matthew 6 (NASB)
>
> 9 "Pray, then, in this way: 'Our Father who is in heaven, Hallowed be Your name.
> 10 'Your kingdom come. Your will be done, On earth as it is in heaven. 11 'Give > us this day [e]our daily bread. 12 'And forgive us our debts, as we also have > forgiven our debtors. 13 'And do not lead us into temptation, but deliver us > from [f]evil. [g][For Yours is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever.
> Amen.']

The reason why we ask forgiveness from God is that we know that we can ask God and He will give it. This is because it is written in His Scriptures that He offers it as a free gift to us through His Son Jesus.

However, we as humans should not ask for forgiveness from others. We must understand that forgiveness is freely given. This is not guaranteed from other humans. We know intuitively that if a person is going to forgive us they will let us know usually through their words or actions. We don't want to cajole them or coerce them into forgiving us. They must do so of their own free will.

This is one of the more difficult things to understand and perform in relationships both romatically and with other people:

We want to be able to make up for the mistakes that we have done either advertently or inadvertently. But thinking that we can make up for our mistakes to others is self serving. It is an attempt to assauge a guilty conscience. It is not of God and should be eliminated.

We are humans that make errors, and all we can do is note those errors and apologize. This is full realization of the grace and mercy that God has afforded to us, and the grace and mercy that we should grant to others. Forgiveness is from the offended, not the offender.

This is also one of the flaws of Christian nice guys and Christian nice girls. In relationships they make mistakes and either beg or plead for forgiveness. As I stated before this is unattractive. Most people instinctively know, but could not put it into words, that begging and pleading is more for the guilty party that it is for them — the one who was actually wronged. Because of this, begging and pleading for forgiveness from others is almost a surefire way for them to start to resent you.

There are both Christians and non-Christians who will continue to bring up your mistakes after you apologize. Don't continue to apologize for your mistakes. Your word is your word as a Christian. This is the time where Romans 12:18 "If possible, so far as it depends on you, be at peace with all men." is very applicable:

"I made a mistake and apologize. I understand that I hurt you, and that you may not forgive me. There is nothing I can do to make it up. But if you are willing I want to reconcile."

Therefore, when you make mistakes you should admit them and apologize with humility. Never beg and never plead. And respond in a manner worthy of Christ.

Christianity in the western world

February 5, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is an accurate portrayal of most Christians in the western world.

But the real interesting parallel is that the same analogy can be made to sum up the mindset of fear in most Christian nice guys.

3 methods Christian women can implement to become attracted to a Christian man

February 6, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a brief interlude to focus on some aspects of what women can do to help them build attraction for a godly man.

You're a Christian woman. You see many Christian men who are godly to a fault, but you're not attracted to them.

This seems to be the case for a lot of women in the church. It's a very common theme as men have become increasingly feminized in the church. However, there are ways to counteract this so that you will begin to respect and be attracted to those godly men.

1. Ask him to share or teach you about what God has been teaching Him in His walk with God.

In the teacher and the student, I talk about why this builds attraction. A man who is able to stand firm on his convictions and reveal what God has been teaching Him is not going to be afraid if someone else disagrees with what he says.

2. Ask him about his passions and/or mission that God has given him to do in life, and how he foresees that playing out.

A godly man will typically be excited to share about the direction that God is taking Him, and his desire to facilitate that to see it happen. The excitement and passion behind it is typically contagious, and a woman will get a better idea of if she will fit with him as his helpmeet.

Likewise, the firm foundation upon which he knows what God's calling is for him will help a woman respect a man, and unconsciously feel that there is something there to anchor herself to which is the start of attraction.

3. Probe him for his convictions.

Most Christian men (or Christian nice guys) tend to be go-with-the-flow type of men which is why women aren't attracted to them. But if you can find out what he values and thinks is important then you will find that you will respect him more because of the way attraction works. I talk more about the tangible anchoring of a woman's attraction to man in understanding attraction.

For example, in April's story her husband Greg stood on his convictions — his character, the way he treated others, and his faith stood firm in application — and she became more attracted to him as time went on because the tangible aspect of him being a man living for God.

Her emotions

February 8, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a follow up post to Discerning the mission.

In that post I listed what the Scriptures say that a husband is responsible for in his walk with Christ and with his wife.

Just because a wife is rebellious does not give a man permission to:

1. To not love her by washing her with the water of the Word (teach and show her Christ-likeness from the Scriptures through your words and actions)
2. To not love her by not treating her as his own body (violence; though if a couple agrees on domestic discipline that's up to them and God).
3. Not lead (or be the head),
4. Become embittered toward her,
5. Deny sexual relations,
6. To not be understanding/considerate to her
7. Even if she is an unbeliever, BUT she is willing to live with you then you must not divorce her.

If you read through the above list, you will note that none of the Scriptures mention a the wife's emotions.

Likewise, as I discussed in the article Anchored Emotions, the main emotions that we are to anchor ourselves to as Christians are the peace and joy of the Lord. Any other emotions such as happiness, anger, sadness, etc are transient and nature and we are not to be significantly influenced by them.

This is not to say that happiness and any of these other emotions are bad. In fact, it's definitely a more pleasant home if a wife is happy over angry. However, this is often taken too far, especially in churchianity. Christian husbands and Christian nice guys get this very wrong.

Any words or actions that a husband takes in regard to his wife are not to be about making her happy but rather to draw her closer to Christ. It is important for husbands and men to realize that sometimes women are going to feel good and sometimes women are going to feel bad. Likewise, men will sometimes feel good and sometimes feel bad, but it should't get in the way of us doing what is righteous.

As Paul defends his ministry in 2 Corinthians 10 (NASB) we can take on the same knowledge about our thoughts and emotions:

> 3 For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war according to the flesh, 4 for the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh, but [b]divinely powerful for the destruction of fortresses. 5 We are destroying speculations and every lofty thing raised up against the knowledge of God, and we are taking every > thought (noema) captive to the obedience of Christ, 6 and we are ready to punish all disobedience, whenever your obedience is complete.

>
> G3540 — νόημα — noēma — no’-ay-mah
> From G3539; a perception, that is, purpose, or (by implication) the intellect, disposition, itself: – device, mind, thought.

However, husbands must understand that the Scriptures don’t state you have to make her feel differently, but as the head it is commanded to facilitate her on the right path which is toward God. It’s her decision on what to do with her feelings, though your words and actions can facilitate her away from her feelings in many cases.

When a husband tries to make his wife happy, he often attempts to do things to curry her favor. For example, doing the dishes, doing the laundry, thinking a woman needs romance, etc. This never, ever, ever, ever works.

When you attempt to make a woman feel happy, you are basically validating her bad feelings. You’re telling her subconsciously that she’s feeling bad, and you’re responsible for her feeling bad which is why you are doing all of these things to make it up.

If you read my previous article on Christian masculinity, mindset, and fitness testing, you will see how this all starts to fit together. When a woman asks you a question about her appearance expecting you to validate her, if you do actually validate her then you’re basically another woman to her. Women validate each other’s feelings.

When men do things to attempt to fix a woman’s emotional state they are validating that her emotional state was correct. This is very difficult for men, especially husbands to learn, because men are doers. If we see a problem, we like to do something to fix it. Unfortunately, that is the wrong approach.

Since wives are supposed to be submissive, respectful, and a helpmeet in the marriage relationship, you can see how this will start to make her feel less submissive, less respectful, and sets the husband up as the submissive in the relationship.

A woman’s emotional filter is complex. Sometimes her emotions will be from other people, and she will direct them at the husband. Sometimes her emotions will be because of husband. Sometimes her emotions will be from other things in the world, and she will direct them at the husband. A husband must determine why a wife is in a certain emotional state and respond accordingly.

Men and husbands — don’t try to take responsibility for a woman’s emotions. Take responsibility instead as the head to facilitate her lovingly towards God.

If she chooses to rebel against the headship in marriage because of her emotions, it is not your responsibility to clean up any of her mess. Her rebellion means the consequences fall on her. God does not take responsibility for rebellion and sins that Christians commit, and neither should husbands take responsibility for rebellion and sin that wives commit.

As the head of the marriage instead focus on:

1. Direct her away from them if they are inconsequential, typically by changing the subject. This can be towards Biblical principles, or
2. Allowing her to vent her emotions or frustrations without getting involved or vested in them (listen without attempting to fix), or
3. If she is venting her emotions at you which are caused by other people then firmly tell her that you are not the cause of her frustrations and taking it out on you is the wrong thing to do, or
4. If you were in the wrong then apologizing but never begging and never pleading and never attempting to fix it, but rather allowing her to work through the process of forgiveness herself.

If you understand that you need to treat women differently than you would treat a "problem" with interacting with a man, you are already halfway to a solution of having unity in your relationship.

The socialization of men and women

February 10, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I discussed in previous articles about how women tend to socialize by validating each others opinions. That's why they have such a herd mentality and why they are easily influenced to move in a similar direction as a group.

However, men tend to socialize on an entirely different wavelength. What men say and do to their friends is equivalent to mock insulting each other, ribbing each other, teasing each other, and giving each other sh*t for everything and anything.

Thus, we have these two axioms:

1. The tendency of women's socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other.
2. The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.

This is masculine behavior. We are men, and we are not afraid to challenge each other to be better men through some good natured ball busting. When you see something that looks like weakness, insecurity, or misbehavior in your friend, you will ream your friend out for it. That is how one becomes a man in this world; he is able to overcome challenges set before him, especially spurred on by other men.

Women are attracted to this masculine behavior, and it's one of the reasons why they want into men exclusive spaces. As much as being validated makes a woman feel good temporarily, a woman being challenged to stay on her toes by teasing, mock insulting, ribbing, and him giving her sh*t for her words and actions is much more "fun" and "interesting."

You can tell who the "men" are from the "nice guys" in that the men are not afraid to display this type of behavior to women. "Nice guys" are boring and uninteresting because they haven't been taught that they should display this behavior not just to their male friends but also to females. This is why when men hide their masculinity from women like this they become boring and uninteresting.

It's not so much that a man is a "jerk" or "asshole" in the sense of the words. It's that a man is able to show a woman his masculinity without holding back. Nice guys are men who are able to show their masculinity to other men but hide their masculinity from women.

As I explained in Understanding Attraction, men tend to instinctively know that they should rise to another man's handshake with a firm squeeze. Likewise, a man should show a woman that he can squeeze her handshake or that he can squeeze back against her firm handshake. He can criticize her when he sees that she is on the wrong path, he can call her out on behavior, he can disagree with her, he isn't there to agree with her views, etc. A man is supposed to be able to overcome challenges from other men, which is all the more reason why he shouldn’t back down from challenges from women.

This is the tangible aspect of men that is attractive to women. To women this behavior is flirting and attractive because of it’s inherent masculinity, and you will be able to help her grow as a woman in the Lord if used correctly.

When Christian nice guys put a woman on a pedestal, they are placing her above criticism, challenges, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting. Thus, the Christian nice guys is unable to show that woman his masculine side, and she becomes bored and uninterested by him because he falls into the trap of being like other women. Additionally, when a man places a Christian woman above criticism, he is unable to effectively accomplish the goal of bringing both himself and his girlfriend/wife closer to God.

This is the change in mindset that Christian men must have. We know almost instinctively as men that our challenge to other men will drive them on to be better men, but we must also learn that our challenge to women will also drive them on to be better women.

Men don’t become better men when they are validated nor do women become better women when they are validated. They stagnate and become complacent. The biggest example is feminism and the immense validation of women that it provides. We see the fruits of feminism in women with overall gains in unhappiness, obesity, poor self esteem, entitlement, decreased femininity, etc. Only negative fruits have come out of feminism.

Jesus said to judge by their fruits, and feminism comes up wanting.

Masculinity drives men to be better men and women to be better women. This is what civilization is built on, and why “patriarchy” builds civilization. Therefore, don’t be afraid as a man to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting to women just like you would be to other men.

The selfish and unselfish socialization of men

February 11, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Yesterday in the socialization of men and women, I discussed how many men know instinctively how to display masculine behavior to other men yet fail to do so with women. This is the behavior of "nice guys."

Classic socialization behavior between the two sexes follows these two axioms which I listed in that post:

1. The tendency of women's socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other.
2. The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.

Today I'm going to be talking about the selfish and unselfish nature in which masculine behavior can be utilized. This is where the differences in "game" and "Christian masculinity" are in my opinion. Most of "game" in terms of the major secular manosphere sites tells men to act selfishly (see: dark triad and psychopathy) with their own self interests in mind. However, this masculine behavior like the above can be applied unselfishly with God's interests in mind.

For example, if you tease a girl it's very easy to change the subject to sex, but as a Christian you shouldn't be doing that because of the temptations that may crop up in that line of thought. Likewise, it may be tempting to make everything about yourself and what you can get out of it, but that is also not what a Christian is called to do.

Instead, if you're going to tease a girl, you should focus in on things that she can improve on to become a better Christian. Here's some examples:

1. If you see that she's being rude or mean then rib her about it ("wow X, that wasn't very nice"),
2. If she's talking too much you can tease her about it with the Scriptures (Interrupt her "Hold on… you should be quick to listen and slow to speak" with a huge grin),
3. If she's only half heartedly doing something then challenge her to do it better ("Whoa, what was that? You weren't even trying. Put some more effort into it buttercup!" or if you want to put it into Scriptural context "Whoa, what are you doing?! I thought you were supposed to do everything as unto the Lord. What's with this half hearted effort?,
4. If she forgets to pray before a meal then say "hey, hold on a sec." and she's says "what?" And you give her a wink and say "You forgot to pray before your meal", or
5. If you catch women gossiping you can say "whoa girls… if you're going to gossip you should at least give me the juicy details too",
6. Another example, in the past was one of the women told me "wow, I didn't know you played the keyboard for church" and I replied "I've played it 5 to 6 times > already…" She said "yeah, but this is the first time I've seen you play" and I teased her immediately "maybe if you come to church more often you would've seen me play more" with a big grin.

There's many ways that men can give a woman a "hard time" by being critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting in a way that can direct them back on track in a Christian manner. Women tend to be very good at taking hints, so even though she knows you're teasing her there is some seriousness behind the words. This makes flirting fun between you and her, but also helps to keep her mind on the things of God which is what you would want to do if you were to date/court and eventually marry her.

Essentially, use your masculinity to challenge and tease her to seek after God first.

The expression of the fruit of the Spirit kindness (Greek: chrestotes) is critical in these types of interactions. If a man or woman knows that you have their best interests in mind they'll be more willing to take criticism, challenges, teasing, ribbing and mock insults as healthy and to improve on it in the future.

On the other hand, if they sense you're only looking out for yourself selfishly then they're more likely to resent you for it even if they're attracted. You can see the difference in that although women are attracted to the players, they still resent them in some fashion because they are selfish and they never care about her. It's a love-hate relationship that is ultimately ruinous when they break up. Such is the difference between a player and a Christian masculine man.

The big reason of why I've been harping so much on delving deep into the Scriptures is that a man must have an excellent knowledge of them to grow in his relationship with God. However, if a man is to have a wife on his mission and looks to set an example in loving headship, great knowledge of the Scriptures also allows a man to direct criticism, challenges, ribbing, teasing, and other masculine behavior at women in order to facilitate growth in their relationships with God and others. This is what masculinity does in the context of a being a Christian.

We're not out to game women for our own ends (selfish masculinity) but to become men who are focused on doing the things of God (unselfish masculinity). A helpmeet may be one of the gifts from God along the way.

It is masculinity that is spurs on men and women towards growth, and it is masculinity that is attractive to women. Masculinity can be used selfishly or unselfishly. The question is: will you grow into masculinity that God has designed you to and use it unselfishly or will you use it selfishly for your own ends?

Methods of exchange

February 12, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things I like is the variability of ways you can actually respond to women that fit within your personality.

For example, in Cane Caldo's recent post, one of the commentors Oscar writes,

> I've seen a meme bouncing around Face Book that says, "When a woman tells you 'do what you want', DO NOT DO WHAT YOU WANT." A Christian married friend of mine wrote, "I've been married long enough to know that 'do what you want' means 'you better figure out what I want you to do and do that.'"
>
> He's right. And – guess what? – that's a lie.
>
> But he also explains why women lie incessantly – because men let them get away with it. Because most men – most Christian men, who should know better – don't have the stones to look a woman in the eye and say, "You just lied to me, and that is unacceptable".
>
> I do. And my wife doesn't do those things anymore.

This is an effective way to call out a wife on her sinful behavior.

On the other hand, I tend to prefer the method of teaching that revolves around actions and consequences and exposing manipulation as such. Thus, I responded in this manner,

> The better thing is to actually do what you want and then when she complains about it then tell her in an amused voice,
>
> "you're upset at me because you lied to me? You better get your act together and apologize to God and me for lying."
>
> And then ignore any bad behavior and don't let it affect you until she apologizes. Then tell her "Don't do it again."
>
> Calling her out right away while effectively doesn't teach her a lesson, especially because women pull this stunt on other men and women all the time. It takes consequences for most people to learn not to do things.

I said "better" because that's what I would prefer, but it's not actually "better" because we would end up with the same result. It's just variability in our personalities that lends towards different methods of instruction to set a wife back on a godly track.

edit: Cane posted up how he would handle the situation which is different from both of ours, so this is even another alternative about how you can go about things:

> Personally, I went through both the tactics you and DS prescribe, but what I find the best answer is: "Ok, I will hold you to it. Now, you've got work to do. Get busy." If she doesn't actually have work to do I will make some up, but if you have kids then there's always work for a wife to do.

> Bad attitudes and braying are ignored as long as the work is being done, and done well. “Thou shalt not muzzle the ox as it treads out the grain.”, and, “If you love me, keep my commandments.” The bad attitudes can be addressed later, if need be, but many times the work exorcises them. In the meantime, I model joyful work; not letting her bad attitude determine whether I crack jokes, smile, or enjoy her.

For example, my method would probably involve more “drama” because the payoff is delayed quite a bit, but it will drive home the point further to a woman that if she tries to manipulate then it is her that is sinning and that she is angry for no reason. This fits my overarching personality in that I’m usually laid back in how I interact with women, but when they force an issue I will drive it home to the hilt.

On the other hand, Oscar’s method involves much less drama, but still calls out a woman on her behavior. This may be preferable for a man who may not have as much patience with women (or one who knows he is quicker to anger), and doesn’t like to have as much drama in his life.

edit: Cane’s responses is yet another way you can handle the situation which forces the drama away from you and onto her to work it out. It is taking her at her word which is straight from the Bible.

Each man has a different framework from which he operates in his masculinity, so if you don’t know how you would describe yourself it would be a good idea to sit down and figure out the overall themes within your personality. This then allows you to cater your interactions with both men and women towards your personality as everyone is going to be slightly different.

If you need a hint, going back to the socialization of men and women and figure out how you interact with your male friends and then see how that can apply to women. Most men act normally with their male friends, but their interactions with women are more clouded.

The game alternative

February 12, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm genuinely curious.

The debates continue to rage on at Dalrock's, Zippy's one and two, Cane's, Anarchopapist's and others even though I believe I've accurately described the difference between the two viewpoints.

For years the pro-game Christian manosphere proponents have stated something similar to:

> Well, if you're anti-game (or a natural alpha) why aren't you teaching these Christian men about how to attract women in a godly manner?

However, professed anti-game Christian manosphere bloggers such as Chad, Donalgraeme, and I (and FN?) have started to post on developing Christian masculinity, and we are summarily dismissed. And I would suspect it is because we profess that our goal is to develop a heart for God first as we grow into masculine men of God, and that attracting woman because of this masculinity is only a side effect.

As noted by Keoni, you could say that many of my posts "comparing" game to godly masculinity may be construed as a toolbox if you're pro-game (which would satisfy their requirements) even though I'm "anti-game." Keoni accurately concludes that despite whatever differences we think about "game" that the pro-game Christian manosphere proponents should be in favor of those seeking to develop this "alternative".

But it is clear that they are not. Both Christian men and women in the Christian manosphere have railed against us.

So which is it?

Do they even want an alternative?

Why do they continue push back on something that they wanted as an alternative?

Isn't this is a clear and obvious example of the idolization of game?

Masculinity is the truth

February 13, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Masculinity is the truth. Not the Truth, but the truth. The only masculinity that is the Truth is Jesus.

> John 14:6 (NASB) Jesus said to him, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father but through Me.
>
> Genesis 1:27 (NASB) God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them.

(Note: there is feminine truth too as women are also created in the image of God though it is different because of creation. I may examine this later.)

As I explained in the socialization of men and women and the follow up post the selfish and unselfish socialization of men, the axiomatic way in how men and women converse is this:

1. The tendency of women's socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other.
2. The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.

What men's socialization focuses on being critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other, but it is always based on the truth.

For example, when a man ribs another man about not approaching a woman calling him a coward he is exposing the truth of the situation. The man failed to act, and as another man we know that fear is something to be overcome. Overcoming challenges to be strong and courageous makes us into men.

Likewise, in the examples of teasing toward women I used there is truth evident: in the past was one of the women told me "wow, I didn't know you played the keyboard for church" and I replied "I've played it 5 to 6 times already…" She said "yeah, but this is the first time I've seen you play" and I teased her immediately "maybe if you come to church more often you would've seen me play more" with a big grin.

I know that many Christian men read Heartiste, and there was a post a couple days ago on a list of "negs" that a woman unintentionally made. Here's the first 6 from that list:

- You look really tired.
- Don't take this the wrong way, but…
- You remind me of my mom.
- Are you on your period?
- Are you wearing that?
- You might be able to fit into this.

Although some of these aren't exactly tactful or constructive, there is truth behind the statements if you're saying that to a woman. You're telling about what you perceive to be her current state through a declarative (tired, wrong way, remind me, fit in this), or you're attempting to find the truth behind her behavior through a question (on your period, wearing that).

Unsurprisingly, if you looked at Jesus' life you will see that He was a speaker of the Truth. He did not come to mince words or actions with the Pharisees but to do the Father's will. This is why Jesus said let your yes be yes and your no be no. As Christian men we are supposed to speak the truth. That one of the essences of masculinity.

What happens often times with Christian nice guys is that when they're asked an uncomfortable question from a girl such as "do you like me?" they often lie or obscure the truth. However, their actions say otherwise because they continue to hang around the girl like a lost puppy looking for a home.

What the players and PUAs call this is being "incongruent." When you say what you don't believe (e.g. you lie) or your words and actions don't match up (e.g. you lie), then women become vastly unattracted to that. They instinctively understand that masculinity is truthful.

For example, take a used car salesman. His words and actions are veiled behind half truths and lies. That's why they are universally disliked by male and females as scummy dirtbags. No one likes to feel like they're conned into something. Likewise, take the common Christiain nice guy. He doesn't act masculine because he veils the truth and acts passive aggressive. This is why Christians are disgusted with born again virgins. This is why the Christian manosphere is disgusted with the churchians. They say they're serving God, but they're not doing it in their words and actions. They are teaching lies. It is hypocrisy.

One of the other reasons why women are attracted to jerks and assholes even though they hate them is that these are men who are acting masculine. They are not afraid to say what they think or attempt to get what they want. They are truthful in what they say and want, although what they say and want are selfish and of the flesh. They may be lying at times, but since they have gotten good at lying it seems like they are telling the truth.

To be a masculine man around women you need to speak the truth in love.

Direct criticism in the way that you would say it to men ("Hey bro, stop being a [insert derogatory term here] and approach her") is often too harsh for women. This is because women tend to communicate indirectly.

Thus, indirect criticism — teasing, light ribbing, and challenging — is the way you communicate the truth in love to women. This is one of the ways husbands can communicate the truth in love to their wives, and one of the ways all men should learn to communicate with women.

Unsurprisingly, when I teased the woman above about not seeing me play because she was not coming to church my relationship with her improved and she started coming to church more.

Take the example of Jesus with the woman at the well in John 4 (NASB):

> 7 There *came a woman of Samaria to draw water. Jesus *said to her, “Give Me a drink.” 8 For His disciples had gone away into the city to buy food. 9 Therefore the Samaritan woman *said to Him, “How is it that You, being a Jew, ask me for a drink since I am a Samaritan woman?” (For Jews have no dealings with Samaritans.) 10 Jesus answered and said to her, “If you knew the gift of God, and who it is who says to you, ‘Give Me a drink,’ you would have asked Him, and He would have given you living water.” 11 She *said to Him, “[b]Sir, You have nothing to draw with and the well is deep; where then do You get that living water? 12 You are not greater than our father Jacob, are You, who gave us the well, and drank of it himself and his sons and his cattle?” 13 Jesus answered and said to her, “Everyone who drinks of this water will thirst again; 14 but whoever drinks of the water that I will give him shall never thirst; but the water that I will give him will become in him a well of water springing up to eternal life.”
>
> 15 The woman *said to Him, “[c]Sir, give me this water, so I will not be thirsty nor come all the way here to draw.” 16 He *said to her, “Go, call your husband and come here.” 17 The woman answered and said, “I have no husband.” Jesus *said to her, “You have correctly said, ‘I have no husband’; 18 for you have had five husbands, and the one whom you now have is not your husband; this you have said truly.” 19 The woman *said to Him, “[d]Sir, I perceive that You are a prophet. 20 Our fathers worshiped in this mountain, and you people say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship.” 21 Jesus *said to her, “Woman, believe Me, an hour is coming when neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem will you worship the Father. 22 You worship what you do not know; we worship what we know, for salvation is from the Jews. 23 But an hour is coming, and now is, when the true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth; for such people the Father seeks to be His worshipers. 24 God is [e]spirit, and those who worship Him must worship in spirit and truth.” 25 The woman *said to Him, “I know that Messiah is coming (He who is called Christ); when that One comes, He will declare all things to us.” 26 Jesus *said to her, “I who speak to you am He.”

Look at the indirect criticism that Jesus points out to the Samaritan woman. He doesn’t go to her and say “Repent sinner!” or “Oh wow, you don’t really have a husband but lots of men and you’re living in sin!” but rather says “this, you have said truly” and then guides her back on the correct path by indirectly talking about himself as a savior until she comes to that conclusion.

Additionally, you can even look at the initial stages of the interaction and imagine that Jesus was potentially flirting with this woman. I know there’s many interpretations of this Scripture that have suggested it (google it). Jesus presents an air of mystery to the woman about his intentions which causes her to seek and ask more. Mystifying a woman is one of the concepts that we explored in Understanding Attraction that makes a woman want to know more.

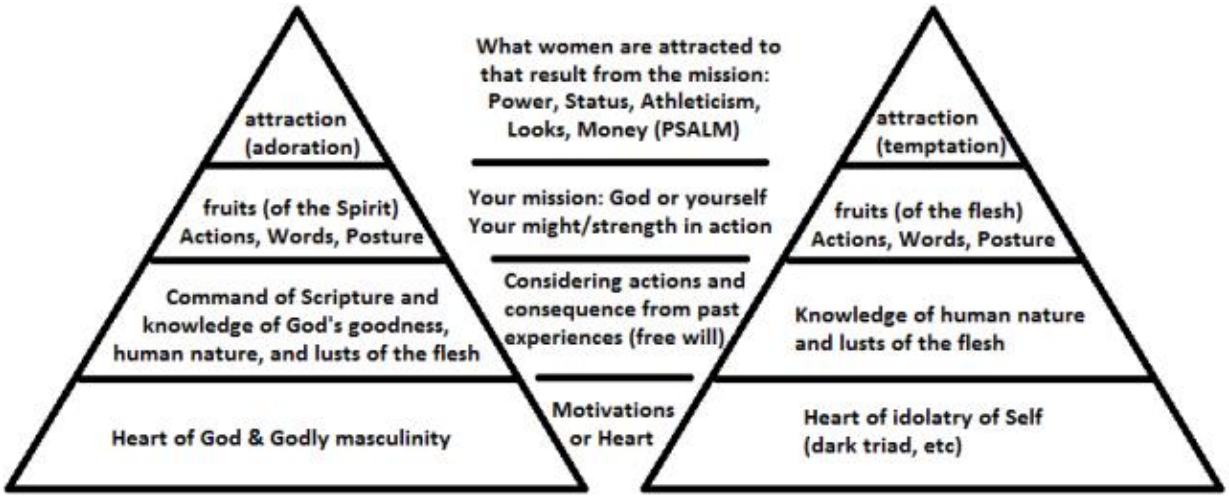
JoJ states here (on his revamped blog, check him out) that Game applied in a Christian manner (flirting/teasing/etc.) is for the short of it "stuff that will help make people respect you more." While ultimately it does make women respect you more, I think it's incomplete.

Flirting and teasing with women is an essential part of masculinity in that it is able to indirectly reveal the truth to women without being direct and harsh such that they will be closed off to God and you.

You can weild your masculinity in a godly manner by using flirting and teasing to spur women on towards righteousness like I explained in previous posts. Though, on the other hand, flirting and teasing applied in a poor manner such as to get a rise out of women or to bed them is using masculinity in an evil way.

A man's godly masculinity is shown through this indirect criticism of flirting and teasing. It shows you that you care about her and are invested in her well being by revealing to her the truth of her words and actions. Especially if it's used towards directing her back on the track to God.

You spur Christianmen on in righteousness when you use criticism, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting to help them overcome their fears, to put them back on the right track, to encourage them to read Scriptures and pray more, coming to church, serving in the church, etc. Men can tell other men to man up through this. However, indirect communication with women through flirting and teasing is the way you would do it with women.



P.S. One other thing I would like to note about the silly answers in JoJ's post above. Deflecting her criticism of your masculinity by giving silly answers is important because women cannot teach men how to be men. This is why women lose respect for men who take them seriously or lie to placate them. This will be the topic of another post.

Masculinity is the truth Part 2

February 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Yesterday in the post Masculinity is the truth I discussed that interactions with women that involve teasing and flirting with them is about revealing indirect truth about themselves. This is the way in which masculinity can be utilized either for godly purposes or for evil.

Let's take a trip back to the pyramid, and run through some examples.

For example, if I have a heart that desires what I want for myself (Heart) then I sexualize the conversation and touch her thus revealing truth about a woman's sinful nature (her desires for pleasure and fornication). This would be the same route that the players and PUAs take which is leading a woman down the road of temptation.

On the other hand, if I have a heart for God and good knowledge of the Scriptures then I can use flirting and teasing to reveal truths of where women stumble in their walks (whereas with men I don't have to sugar coat it). This would lead a woman towards a greater knowledge of the Father.

The dichotomy present here is the same one that is present in the word respect that is used in the Scriptures. A woman will never be attracted to a man she doesn't respect. You may recognize the root form of the word that is used for respect in Ephesians 5 (NASB):

> 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects (phobeō) her husband.
>
> G5399 — φοβέω — phobeō — fob-eh'-o
>
> From G5401; to frighten, that is, (passively) to be alarmed; by analogy to be in awe of, that is, revere: – be (+ sore) afraid, fear (exceedingly), reverence.

This word is used in multiple passages in Scripture in the New Testament. For example, all Christians are to have respect or reverence for God. We are to fear God. This is the same context that we use this for the word adoration in the above chart — it's ultimately about building respect. As you saw yesterday in JoJ's post on the definition of "game" it's all about building respect. You should strive to be a man worthy of respect through the character of your words and actions. In the hierarchy of creation where God > humans, we are in fear of God because of it. Likewise, God > Jesus > Spirit and Jesus talks about his submission and gives reverence to God (only God is good) on multiple occasions. Similarly, in marriage a man > wife in terms of headship and submission and wives are supposed to give respect or reverence to their husbands.

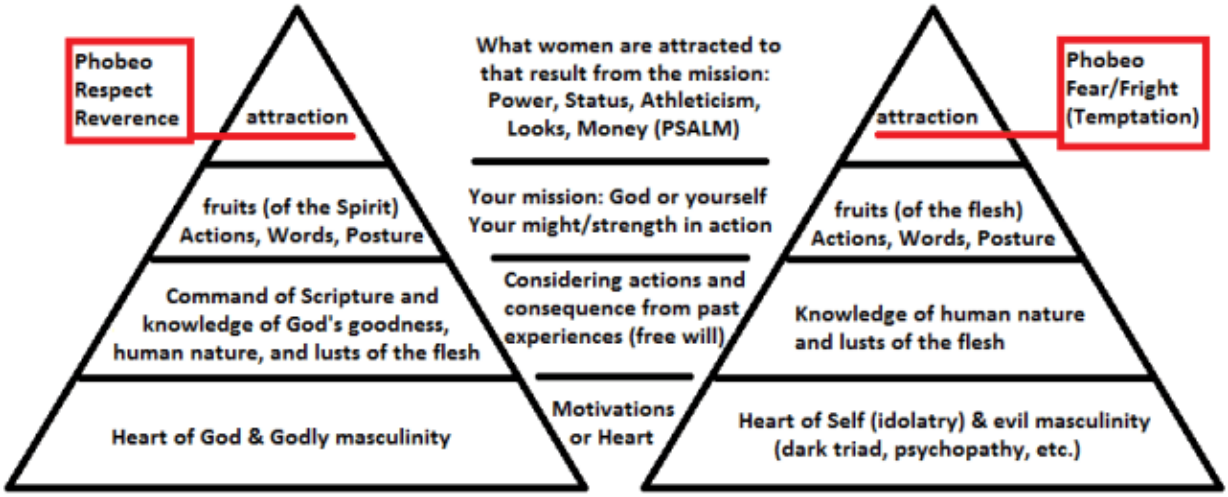
Now, here's where the dichotomy comes in. Phobeo is also used in the Scriptures where men are fearing for their lives from people, from the multitude, from their masters, and from other things.



If you weild masculinity to tempt women into sin, all you have left is fear. The fear of God's wrath. The fear of STDs. The fear of pregnancy. The fear that is gained from giving into temptation infects both parties. For women who are promiscuous, though they attempt to rationalize it, they almost always ultimately fear that they are going to get pumped and dumped. They fear that they will be found out and exposed to society or their friends and family of their promiscuity. These women fear their N-count getting out to their spouses. When you walk the road of temptation and sin all you have left is fear. You may have momentary pleasures, but all you have left at the end is fear. A void. A gnawing sensation that something is wrong.

Essentially, when you walk in the truth (masculinity) of the Truth (Jesus/Spirit) you are doing what is righteous and will have respect. But when you walk in the truth (masculinity) of the Lie (Satan/flesh) all you have left is fear.

> Luke 8 (NASB)
>
> 16 "Now no one after lighting a lamp covers it over with a container, or puts it under a bed; but he puts it on a lampstand, so that those who come in may see the light. 17 For nothing is hidden that will not become evident, nor anything secret that will not be known and come to light. 18 So take care how you listen; for whoever has, to him more shall be given; and whoever does not have, even what he [e]thinks he has shall be taken away from him."

Walking in darkness leads to fear, but walking in the light leads to respect/reverence.

Therefore, our remade chart looks something like this:

This is very similar in the way that Phobeo is used in Matthew 10 (NASB) when Jesus talks about Discipleship:

> 26 “Therefore do not fear them, for there is nothing concealed that will not be revealed, or hidden that will not be known. 27 What I tell you in the darkness, speak in the light; and what you hear whispered in your ear, proclaim upon the housetops. 28 Do not fear those who kill the body but are unable to kill the soul; but rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in [x]hell. 29 Are not two sparrows sold for a [y]cent? And yet not one of them will fall to the ground apart from your Father. 30 But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. 31 So do not fear; you are more valuable than many sparrows.

Jesus present discipleship in an analogy. This analogy parallels the Structure of authority between God and humans, humans and humans, and husband and wife (or man and woman).

We are not to fear the darkness for it will all be brought to light. Likewise, when we weild masculinity for evil we are not fooling anyone. Temptation is corrupting and such actions will result in fear of the truth. The fear of being exposed. God sees all and will judge all, though consequences may abound in this life and/or the next. God cannot be mocked.

Thus, we should live in fear of God and not men. To weild masculinity for God. To use masculinity in a godly manner in marriage. To strive towards using our truth (masculinity) for revelation of the Truth in all that we do. If it is in our mission to weild masculinity in a godly manner to search for that wife.

Clarity of purpose

February 15, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've already outlined the framework of what this blog intends to accomplish in two articles.

Discerning the mission and Understanding the world and the mission.

Read these if you have time because they are extremely informative, but this is the only article need to read to understand what this blog is about.

Now, we're going to lay out some foundational premises for this blog:

- The goal is for Christian men to learn what it means to be godly and masculine, and to walk it out in their lives. We are not to just be sayers but doers (James 1:22).

The godly and masculine — godly masculinity — components cannot be separated because none of our actions come in a moral vacuum. We are either walking with the Spirit or with the flesh (Gal 5:16-26). Thus, we must operate in a fashion that brings honor to God.

In Understanding the world and mission, we discussed that there are two components of godly masculinity we will look at:

1. Unlearning feminine behaviors and mindsets.
2. Learning masculine behaviors and mindsets.

And we understand that any learned masculine behaviors must bear good fruit. If an action does not bear good fruit then we are in error. The good fruit in our lives is shown in the ability to minister to others such that it will draw them and ourselves closer to God through the Holy Spirit working in us.

- Godly masculinity encompasses everything — a man and his mission (from God), his interaction with others (in drawing them closer to God), his service in the church, his hobbies, his free time, and whatever he does as He does it unto the Lord.

The goal here is to build a lifestyle that reflects God and can direct others towards God. For many Christian men, this will include having a wife — a helpmeet — on his mission. This may only be part of the mission, so continue to execute the mission that God has called you to while looking on the side for a wife.

All Christian men must understand that they are not promised a wife in Scriptures. This should not stop us from reading the Scriptures, praying, meditating, and searching for a godly wife, but we must understand that it may not happen. The Lord's will for our life be done.

- One of the components of godly masculinity that this blog will discuss is interacting with women.

The goal of being able to interact with women with godly masculine behavior is to be able to focus their attention toward God. It just so happens that a side effect of masculine behavior is that it is attractive to women.

Christian men must understand that it is not the godliness that attracts women. It is the masculinity that attracts women. We know this because God created woman for man (Gen 2, 1 Cor 11) and in doing so made them to be attracted to the nature He imbued in them. Most men understand instinctively that they are attracted to women that are feminine — beauty, youth, long hair, dresses and skirts, etc. Likewise, men should understand that women find the masculine attractive.

This is why women find godly masculine behavior attractive, but they also find evil masculine behavior attraction. It is the masculine behavior they find attractive, not the godly or evil portion of it. A husband killing a person to defend his family would be hailed as righteous, while a man randomly killing another (see: Aaron Hernandez) is just a thug. Both are attractive because women find the power of force attractive.

Unfortunately, it is impossible to separate godliness from masculinity, and it is impossible to separate evilness from masculinity. Thus, you walk in one or the other. So choose if you want to serve God or the devil.

- Masculine behavior in interaction with others — both men and women — is intimately involved with spurring each other towards growth by telling the truth.

I've explored this facet of masculine behavior in 4 recent articles: The socialization of men and women, The selfish and unselfish socialization of men, Masculinity is the truth, and Masculinity is the truth Part 2.

> The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.

Most men understand this innately in that when other men do these things to each other it is in a bonding way that spurs on the growth of each other. However, very few men understand that they are to interact in this way with women as well. Nice guys are men who are able to show their masculinity to other men but hide their masculinity from women [in the way that they talk to them].

In the subsequent posts, we explored the subtleties of the interactions of men with men and men with women. Men aren't afraid to literally abuse each other with the intent of growth (although this can turn into bullying if you aren't careful), but such harsh truth can be too much for women.

The masculinity is the truth 2 part series explored multiple examples of how teasing and flirting with women are masculine behavior framed in a such a way as to present the indirect truth to women. All men should learn how to tease and flirt with women because that is ultimately how you tell the truth in love to them. If you use this masculine behavior to direct their focus back to God then it is righteous.

Most men do not need to learn about how to talk to other men and how to challenge them to be more godly men. But most men do need to learn how to talk to women and how to challenge them to be more godly women. Masculine behavior is able to expose the truth (see Jesus' example in his interaction with the Pharisees and other women), but it must be done with subtle differences because of the communication differences between men and women.

- Thus, the rest of this blog will be focused toward three facets.

Ecclesiastes 4:12 And if one can overpower him who is alone, two can resist him. A cord of three strands is not quickly torn apart.

1. Understanding the Scriptures as it pertains to godly masculinity mindset and a godly lifestyle. This study will look at elimination of feminine behaviors and mindsets accrued from society, feminism and churchianity, and building godly masculinity in terms of a man on his mission and all that encompasses. This category will also explore the Greek and Hebrew words in Scriptures as they relate to our understanding of God and His will for our lives.
2. Learning godly masculine behavior by putting it into practice in terms of eliminating feminine behaviors and mindsets from society, feminism and churchianity, and building godly masculinity in terms of a man on his mission and all that encompasses.
3. Learning the subtleties of godly masculine behavior as it pertains to women with the intent of spurring them towards Christ. The fact that it is attractive to women is just a nice side effect.

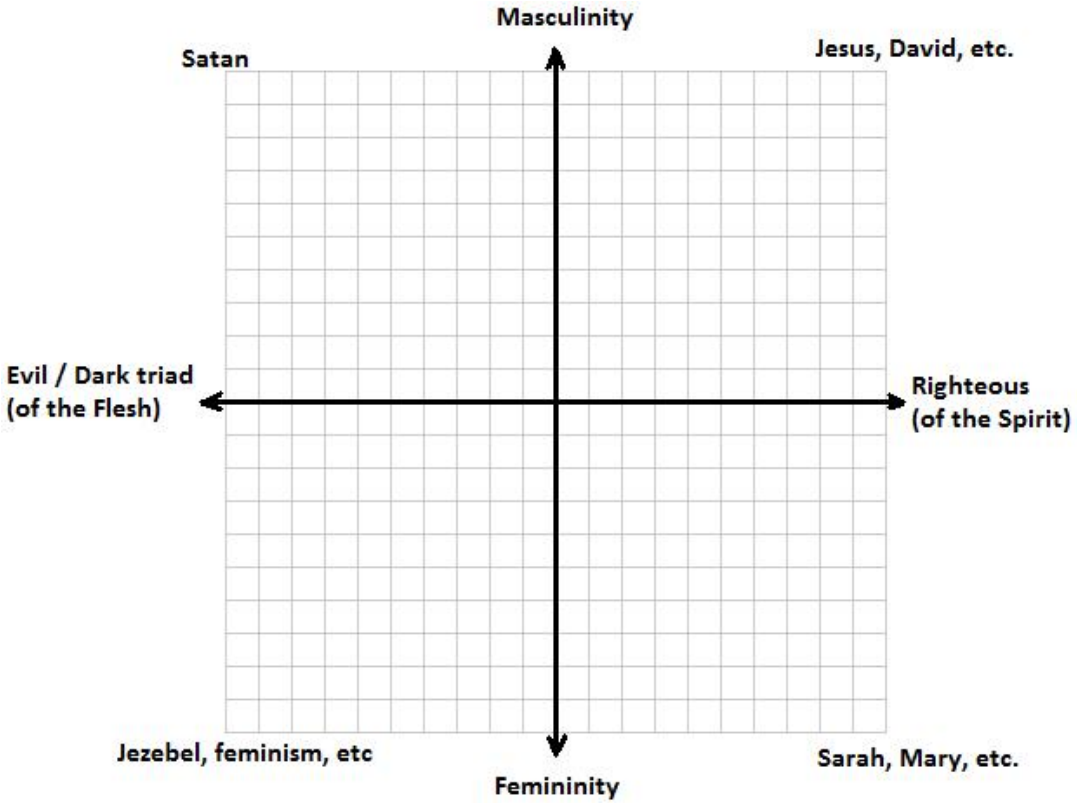
I reconstructed my Categorized lists of posts page to reflect these four facets.

Previously I had been haphazardly exploring many different topics, but I believe this will be able to give men the clarity in purpose.

The ultimate theme of this blog is the overall development of godly masculinity as it pertains to developing a lifestyle that accurately reflects God.

> Ephesians 4:22-24 (NASB)
>
> 22 that, in reference to your former manner of life, you lay aside the old [a]self, which is being corrupted in accordance with the lusts of deceit, 23 and that you be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 24 and put on the new [b]self, which [c]in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

I hope whoever joins me on this journey is ready to see what God will do in your life as you take off the old self and put on the new self.



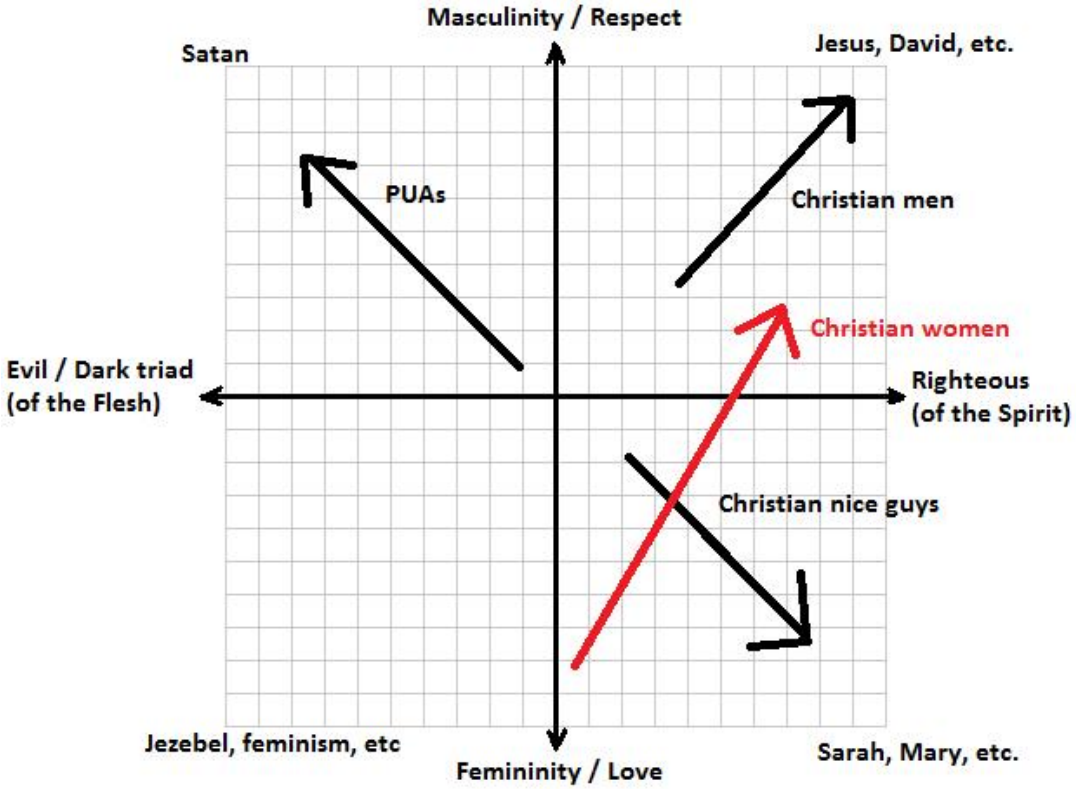
P.S. This has now been updated again in another redirection.

Role reversal

February 17, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things that stood out to me in JoJ's post on inner game: respect, is the nature of what we would call masculinity.

As you may recall, in understanding the world and the mission, we had this chart that seems to represent how God created masculinity and femininity:



The connection that I had yet to make is the notion of respect and love for the husbands and wives respectively in the Scriptures. Ephesians 5 is the oft quoted passage, so let's take a look:

> Ephesians 5 (NASB)
>
> 22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
>
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall > leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

I've already discussed the nature of love and respect, but I haven't talked about how that relates to masculinity and femininity yet. Obviously, God created men to be masculine and women to be feminine, so connecting the dots we can see that the masculine needs respect and the feminine needs love. These are what is commanded from each spouse to the other in Scripture.

Therefore, our adjusted graph with Christians on it looks like this:

As you can see above, the masculinity is defined by respect, and the femininity is defined by love.

The title of this post is "role reversal" so let's examine Christian nice guys and Christian women in the context of churchianity.

Christian nice guys

- The pedestalization of women which means they place her above him. He is placing her in a position of respect. She abhors him for this.
- Christian nice guys say they want a woman to love them for who he is. Love is something that women desire not men.
- Want every to think good of them = want everyone to love them.
- Validate women by giving them compliments or affirming their world view. They do it out of a false sense of love hoping they'll reciprocate, or they have been deluded by the church to think that it is “love.”

There are more, but this proves the point.

Christian (e.g. churchian) women (deluded by feminism)

- Think they need to have a degree and career before men will like them. They think they need to be respected by men to love them.
- Think their accomplisments will attract men to them. Again, they think they need to be respected by men to love them.
- Demand “equality” which is the same as demanding respect (which doesn’t work).
- Think first about how their feelings (are hurt) in response to things that offend them. They others to respected for their feelings.

Likewise, there are more, but this proves the point.

Fitness testing and role reversal

Remember, in Christian masculinity, mindset, and fitness testing, where I discussed how validating a woman’s concerns and/or agreeing with her was tantamount to making you being another woman to her. This plays into the respect/love equation as well.

For example, take some of the most common fitness tests:

- Did you miss me?
- You never listen to me.
- When was the last time you let me do X because other guys let their girlfriends do it?

The interesting thing about these questions is that they demand respect, but the intent behind it is that they are fishing for love. If a woman says “you never listen to me” she is demanding that you respect her by listening to her, but what she really wants is for you to show her love.

When you “fail” a fitness test, you agree that her concerns are valid. You are respecting her assertion that you actually don’t listen to her enough. And consequently, she absolutely will hate because she doesn’t want you to respect her but love her.

When you “pass” a fitness test like this, you do not validate her concerns for her demand of respect. By not doing this, you’re implicitly showing her that you love her because you’re in control, and someone in control is to be respected.

This is why wives who are submitted to their husbands have a reduction in the amount of fitness testing. They already respect their men, so they don’t attempt to fish for love by demanding you respect her.

This is the irony of fitness testing. When a woman attempts to make an assertion through words, it is always going to be about demanding respect or questioning her respect for you. That’s why fitness testing has non-serious answers. You can only show love through actions, or denying/accepting respect where respect is due (passing fitness tests).

The right roles and reverse fitness testing

Perhaps unironically is that the same phrases that are fitness tests from women work well as teasing/flirting from men. Take the three examples above and rephrase them from a masculine point of view:

- Did you miss me?
- You never listen to me.
- When was the last time you let me do X because other girls let their boyfriends do it?

If you use these phrases in a joking/teasing/flirting manner you can gauge the amount of respect that a woman has for you.

For instance, if you say to a woman jokingly with a grin “did you miss me?” if she does respect you she will almost always smile and say yes back or she will tease you back about it. If she does not respect you then she will usually say no and start to close off her body language.

Basically, you’re jokingly demanding respect from her and if she acquiesces or teases you back about it then you know she has respect for you. If she closes herself off from you then you know that she does not respect you.

Conclusions

1. Masculinity is about growing into a man that can be respected, and femininity is about growing into a woman that can be loved.
2. Feminism is evil because it pushes men to want to be loved and feminine, and women to want to be respected and masculine. These are contrary to God’s creation.
3. Fitness testing is about a woman wanting to be loved but demanding respect which is why they should not be taken seriously. By not taking them seriously, you implicitly show her that you are still in control which means she will feel loved.
4. Reverse fitness testing women is a way to gauge their interest in you and start to learn how to flirt and tease them if you don’t know how to do that. Remember, that learning how to flirt and tease women is essential for a masculine man that desires a wife because that is how you will ultimately speak the truth in love to her.

Framework for offense and defense

February 18, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's a lot of posts I want to write, but first I have to write an overarching post on how men interact with women. I've been holding off on this because it's a complex topic to explain, but explaining this will make everything much easier in the long run.

Understanding masculinity in relation to women

First, there are two main categories.

In Understanding Attraction, the analogy I used for attraction is the handshake. You squeeze her hand, or she squeezes your hand and you squeeze back.

1. Offensive — Squeezing her hand is the offensive way (pun intended) to build attraction, and
2. Defensive — Her squeezing your hand and you squeezing back is the defensive way to build attraction. These are always fitness tests.

These are the two overarching themes and you can see how all interactions with women fall into these two categories. Now, within these categories there are also two distinctions to be made in each.

- Offensive (self)
- Offensive (her)
- Defensive (self)
- Defensive (her)

Offensive

- (self) You tease her to respect you — This is where you make a comment that ultimately demands respect, usually veiled behind teasing or joking. One example that I used in Role Reversal is the concept of reverse fitness testing by saying to her with a grin "did you miss me?" or "you never listen to me."
- (her) You teasingly correct her — This is where you make a comment on the indirect truth. For a Christian man this means speaking the truth in love. I discussed this thoroughly in this series of posts: The socialization of men and women, The selfish and unselfish socialization of men, Masculinity is the truth, and Masculinity is the truth Part 2. If you see that her behavior is out of line then you call her on it. The concept of "negs" also falls under here. Knocking someone down for no reason at all isn't godly, but if a man or woman has inflated pride or is self righteous it is good to reveal the truth through your words. For instance, see all of Jesus' conversations with the Pharisees.

Defensive (e.g. Fitness tests)

- (self) She does not respect you — This is where a woman abuses Christian nice guys for their time or accuses you of something. For example, accusations may involve "You look funny/ridiculous", "Can you do X, Y, Z for me?", "You're not the jealous type are you?" etc[1]. Basically, if her behavior is out of line then call her on it.
- (her) She wants you to respect her — This is where a woman demands you respect her or wants you to validate her. For instance, "Do I look good in this dress?" Did I do a good job or what?" "Did you miss me?", "You never listen to me", "You never let me do X while other girlfriends can do it", etc.[1]

[1] Used some examples from Heartiste's compendium of shit tests.

As you can see, I've discussed examples from all of these categories in various articles before. However, having discussed them before is not enough because Christians are to speak and act in a manner worthy of Christ. Thus, I want to go through each of these categories and examine the framework of masculinity and what the Scriptures say on these particular situations.

- Offensive: You tease her to respect you — For husbands this is obvious (Eph 5:33). Christian men and women are called to have brotherly love (philadelphia, Rom 12:10) as well as charity (agapao) for one another (John 13:34-35; 1 John 4:7-21), though Christian women are not called to submit to men who are not their husbands. This is an easy separator for Christian men who are pursuing a wife as women that would more willingly submit to you in a courtship/engagement phase are going to be respectful of you. Don't pursue a woman who is not interested in you.
- Offensive: You teasingly correct her — For husbands again this is obvious (Eph 5:25-31). 2 Timothy 3:16 — all Scripture is God breathed for teaching, rebuking, correcting, and training in righteousness. Likewise, in Matt 18, Luke 17, 1 Cor 5:2, and 2 Thes 3:6 if a brother is in sin or error point it out to him. Utilizing teasing and flirting to spur women on towards righteousness and away from sin is a godly thing for any Christian man to do.
- Defensive: She does not respect you (or others) — This nebulous as Christian women are not called to respect Christian men that aren't their husbands. However, often these types of comments denote impropriety on the side of the man ("you're not jealous are you?") or are [harshly] judgmental without concern for correction ("why did you do that?", "why would you wear something like that?"). This violates the Scripture's clear teachings about edification and peace Rom 8:29, Rom 15,14, 1 Thes 5:11,14, Heb 3:13, 10:24-25, 1 Pet 4:10. See general body responsibilities here for more Scriptures on this. Likewise, Christian men can be abused for their time as I have discussed before because there are situations where men should not be involved with women who are not their wives because it is the woman's husband's or woman's significant other's responsibility. Additionally, Christian women are not to be teaching men (1 Tim 2:12), though the older women are called to teach the younger (Titus 2:3-5). Men are to teach men (Prov 27:17, Titus 2:6-8).

- Defensive: She wants you to respect her — The Scriptures state to love your wives (Eph 25-31), be considerate (1 Peter 3:7), do not be harsh (Col 3:19), etc. but not respect wives. Indeed, as we have seen repeatedly respecting wives is not what they need to be loved.

If you notice any Scripture verses that apply to these categories that I missed (and I'm sure there's many) then make sure to leave them in the comments. Similarly, if you notice anything off theologically about what I've said I would appreciate correction.

The sanitization of game?

If you see what I am doing as santizing game you're missing the mark. Game may have shown you what masculinity can look like albeit in an evil direction, but it is God who created masculinity. That's why I glorify God for helping me to better understand masculinity, even if my sources are the Scriptures and a "worldly thing" such as game.

> 1 Corinthians 1:27
>
> but God has chosen the foolish things of the world to shame the wise, and God has chosen the weak things of the world to shame the things which are strong,

I honor God not game. Instead of seeing game as something all Christian men to learn, I would rather see all men embrace masculinity (as opposed to femininity) in a godly manner. To see the masculinity that God created and grow into it. Getting caught up in defending game makes you miss sight of God and His creation.

> John 15:19 If you were of the world, the world would love its own; but because you are not of the world, but I chose you out of the world, because of this the world hates you.
>
> Romans 12:2 And do not be conformed to this [a]world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may [b]prove what the will of God is, that which is good and [c]acceptable and perfect.
>
> 1 John 2:15 Do not love the world nor the things in the world. If anyone loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him. 16 For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the boastful pride of life, is not from the Father, but is from the world. 17 The world is passing away, and also its lusts; but the one who does the will of God lives forever.

The main thing is fourfold in the overarching development of masculinity as it relates to women:

1. In teasing her to respect you this helps you to filter the women who are not suitable to be your helpmeet. Those that don't respect you will most likely have trouble obeying God's command to submit to you in marriage. While you can be a respected man, it is ultimately a woman's choice to submit to your headship in marriage. That's why this is a good filter for women who you are interested in.

2. In you correct her, the goal is to spur women on towards rigtheousness with your flirting and teasing. Not towards temptation.
3. When she does not have respect for you, this is also case where a woman can be off track and need correction as well. If a woman is accusative then throw it right back at her and call her on it. If she's being excessively judgmental then call her on it. If she's being rude then call her on it. Silly answers deflect the intended questions, but reversing to have them take a look at their own behavior is a Biblical thing to do.
4. With she wants you to respect her, she is not following Biblical principles and can be often fishing for compliments for her own pride or self worth. This is something worth correcting as well.

In most of these instances, one can use the masculine concepts in order to bring glory to God by taking the focus off of your and/or her and refocusing the situation on what God desires. Similarly, using the first tactic to filter for those who would be suitable for you in marriage and eventually as a Biblical command in marriage is a good thing.

If you're a "pro-gamer" think about your motives here. It's not about "creating attraction" with women although that's a nice side effect. It's about doing what God wants by learning the concepts of how to spur women towards righteousness. It's about seeing behind the deception of the devil in the relatively "innocuous" behavior of women and to call it out to help them grow into better Christians.

Therefore, have a heart for God, read the Scriptures, pray and meditate on the Word, and go forth and learn to use the masculinity that God created for His purposes. As it says in 1 Timothy 2 "[God] desires all men to be saved and to come to the [c]knowledge of the truth." Take care that such knowledge will not allow your pride to draw you away from God, but rather direct your steps and others towards Him.

Not what you feel but why you feel

February 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In anchored emotions we examined emotions and how they influence us. The major point of that article was that we should anchor ourselves to the joy and peace of the Lord. But how should we think of other emotions? The major problem in society is that what is heralded as the truth is what you feel. Of course, doing what you feel leads down the road to hedonistic tendencies of lust, gluttony, pride, sloth, wrath, envy and greed. However, the real question lies in examining why you feel a certain way. So let's take a look at an example.

1. I know that I will feel good if I sit down and eat junk food.
2. However, I know that God calls me to be a good steward of His temple of the Holy Spirit.
3. Even though eating healthy is difficult and the foods may not taste as good, I know that I will feel good about eating healthy.
4. Therefore, eating healthy delays a temporary pleasure for a pleasure that is gratifying in two aspects — I am able to exert self control, and I am able to please God.

Likewise,

1. I know that I will feel good if I sit down and don't workout.
2. However, I know that God calls me to be a good steward of His temple of the Holy Spirit.
3. Even though working out is difficult and I may get sore, I know that I will feel good about working out.
4. Therefore, working out delays a temporary pleasure for a pleasure that is gratifying in two aspects — I am able to exert self control, and I am able to please God.

In the above examples, if you looked through them did you see anything that was missing?

In the fundamental nature of Christianity, free will and the ability to be tempted is at the core of human nature. Freedom in Christ means that we can consider the actions and consequences of them, and overcome our sinful desires. The thing to keep in mind is that we're always tempted to gratify the nature of the flesh, and the flesh is about the here and now and the self. However, the Spirit is about things eternal and it is focused outwardly.

The thing that is often witnessed in the internal battle in ourselves is the nature of how our actions reflect outwardly on our character. If we truly desire to be witnesses for Christ, what will make a better witness?

The Christian who gives in all the time to junk food or the Christian who is able to exert self control to eat healthy?

The Christian who gives into idleness and sloth or the Christian who disciplines his mind and body to workout?

Or how about…

- The Christian who continues to fall into lust or the Christian who can master his lust?
- The Christian who continues to fall into wrath or the Christian who can master chastity?
- The Christian who continues to fall into gluttony or the Christian who can master showing self control or temperance?
- The Christian who continues to fall into greed or the Christian who can master showing charity and by extension love?
- The Christian who continues to fall into envy or the Christian who can master showing kindness?
- The Christian who continues to fall into pride or the Christian who can master showing humility?
- The Christian who continues to fall into sloth or the Christian who can master showing diligence?

You'll notice that many of these are fruits of the Spirit, and that they will be evident through our actions. Thus, the nature of Christianity is outwardly focused because we are not just of ourselves.

The outward focus provides a measure of meaning to the inward battle that is waged inside our bodies against the desires of the flesh.

To truly know what we feel, we must first consider why we feel that way and the consequences of acting in that particular way. And from there we can overcome temptation.

> Jeremiah 17:9 (NASB) "The heart is more deceitful than all else and is desperately sick; Who can understand it?

> Jeremiah 17:9 (KJV) The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?

Don't follow your heart. Don't follow what you feel. Consider why you feel and the nature of an intended action, and focus your vision not just inward but outward.

For it is the same measure by which you pour out that God will give back to you (Luke 6:37-38).

Change the mind change the man

February 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I actually wanted to name this article A prison of your own as it is the same analogy I'll be exploring today.

Theredpill on reddit often comes up as the #1 most hated sub, especially by other men. White knights and other men who curry to the favor of women are the most prevalent.

Why? They are trapped in their own minds. They want the world to work a certain way, and if it doesn't work the way they want it to they hate it. As the Matrix analogy goes, they want and stick with the blissful ignorance.

The problem has always been, and always will be, mindset.

How do you change someone's mindset? First, they have to want to change. Then they actually have to take steps to change.

It's fruitless attempting to try to convince someone who doesn't want to change. I have many obese friends who don't care if they're fat or not. They're slaves to their gluttony. It's not so much that they have a lack of self control (although that's part of the problem), it's that the food reward system in the brain releases dopamine when they eat something tasty and they "can't help themselves" to just eat more. This is not an excuse though; those on heroin and other addictive drugs have the same thing. Often times we must recognize that we cannot do things of our own will and ask God and others to be our 'êzer.

> H5828 — 'êzer — ay'-zer
>
> From H5826; aid: – help.

Some of you may recognize that êzer is the Hebrew word that is used twice for "helpmeet" when God created woman. The other 19 times it's used in the Old Testament from the Pentatuch to the Psalms and the prophets it that it is used in conjunction with God being our help in times of trouble.

Likewise, everything that Jesus taught is all about mindset.

Why does Jesus always talk about faith that can move mountains? Why does He talk about seek and you will find, knock and the door will be opened, etc? Why does He talk about you have to lose your life to gain it?

Do not kill? Much more than that don't even let the sun go down while you're angry. Do not commit adultery? Much more than that don't even lust after a woman (or look after her longingly). Cut off your limbs if they're causing you to stumble.

The mind is such a powerful thing that it creates within a person a prison of their own reality.

JoJ wrote in his post yesterday:

> What I have come to realize is that I was in a prison of my own making. All my > attempts to ignore or blame women caused me to fantasize about them more. By making them unapproachable in my mind, I had inadvertently placed them on the pedestal, made them into more than they were. Women had become this unknowable but deeply desirable thing that I would never have or truly understand. Sounds a lot like what God was supposed to be.

There's no tangible thing that makes someone "alpha" or that makes someone "beta."

The difference is all in the mindset, and the practice of the mindset. If I self believe that I'm terrible with women or that I don't understand women, that's probably going to be a self fulfilling prophecy.

In essence, this probably sounds like new age mumbu jumbo, but really if you can free the mind you can free the person. The reason why we are so limited (or have so little faith by Jesus' measure) is that we don't truly believe the power of God, or His purposes for our lives. We don't seek direction from Him, and we don't even think about what He wants us to do daily.

The curse of the bountifulness of Western Civilization is that we have the mindset of "I'm in control of my life, and God is just an accessory to my life."

This is the mindset of Churchianity. How else can wives justify to themselves that God wanted them to divorce? How else can so many in the Church believe that premarital sex is not wrong? etc.

Likewise, the deception that we grow up under is the thinking "how do I want my life to go?" or "what do you want to be when you grow up?"

Even among devout Christians I've very rarely seen Christian parents tell their children to read the Scriptures and pray what God wants you to do with your life.

I've personally gone through at least 5 changes in what I wanted to do from when I was a kid to make it where God is calling me in my profession today. I'm sure there are people with more. Indeed, I still really don't know what He has called me to beyond the couple of projects I have now. Likewise, my pastor has an engineering degree and an MBA, but after school God called him directly into ministry.

Was it a mistake for him to go to school for engineering and an MBA? Certainly not. He now has good opener to share the gospel. When we're not considering what God wants us to do, when He grabs a hold of us we often have these huge changes in direction from what we wanted to do as opposed to what He wants us to do.

This is part of the witness that we have to others. God can use any of us where we are, as long as we are willing to submit our lives to him. To place Him on our pedestal.

I never really thought about going on a missions trip nor did I want to, but last month I went on one. I never thought I'd be helping to lead a small group nor did I want to, but I'm now helping to lead one. God calls us to do different things, and we need to be sensitive to what He wants us to do even as we are stewards for Him in this world.

One of the stories I heard down on the missions trip to Central America is that several years back a young woman who had just graduated from college went to one of the remote tribes that had never had outside contact. She stayed there for a couple years, learned the language and served them and shared the gospel. Honestly though — who in their right mind would do that except God calling them to go and do it? That's the power of God moving in someone's life who is submitted to His will.

If you don't know what your mission is from God then pray to him that you receive it, and that He starts to open up doors for you. This is the reason why we pray in the Lord's prayer that "Your kingdom come your will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Not my will, Lord, but Yours.

Please

February 20, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Key concept behind this post — Be respectful of someone else's time — for someone else's time is also the Lord's.

This is a practical post the in the category of Offensive (self) from the Framework of Offense and Defense.

Basic manners are one of the things that has been lost as society, feminism, and churchianity has been more engrossed in the lie that men and women are the same, or even worse that women are superior to men.

Thus, the focus of this post is to create an atmosphere of respect around yourself as well as force women into more basic manners when they speak with men.

Anytime a woman asks you a question or asks for you to help her or someone with anything without saying "please" then tell her,

- You: "What's the magic word?" with a grin or
- You: "Aren't you forgetting something?"
- Her: "What?"
- You: "Your manners" with a grin
  or
- You: "Where are your manners, missy?" with a grin

Or any types of variations on that as you like.

Some will reply with a "yes, mom" to which you can reply with a "you need to go do your homework and laundry too."

There's three things to keep in mind with setting boundaries like this.

1. If they refuse to say "please" then you must absolutely refuse to help them or answer their question. They're being impolite, and you shouldn't acquiesce to someone who is being deliberately rude you.
2. If they do say "please" then you still have the option of deciding whether or not you can help her or not. As I talked about in Christian nice guys are abused, there are boundaries that you should not cross. It's good manners to for her to say please, but you shouldn't feel bad if you have to say no to her request after she says please. This is critical, or women will abuse you for this as well.
3. You can also call women on this when they speak to other men as well. This works as an excellent tease to them, and it will demonstrate how to interact with women to other men as well. Hopefully, it catches on.

If they whine that you don't say this to other men, all you have to do is smile and reply "men and women are different, sweetie." If she's huffy about it then you can add in some snark “Didn’t you take biology in school? Men and women are different, sweetie.”

Once women catch onto this they will start to do the same thing back to you. You’re asserting new boundaries, and they want to see if they can test the boundaries because they like squeezing your handshake back if you squeeze theirs. Women always like to test the boundaries because then they see who is a man and who isn’t.

The proper response to this semi fitness-testing attitude that they have is to defuse it with humor. Fortunately, there’s many, many, many, other magic words that you can use in this situation. Some of the ones I like to use are:

- Open Sesame
- Abracadabra
- Shazam!

The vast majority of women will laugh because it’s so unexpected that you don’t say “please” and instead say something totally unrelated.

If you do use a multiple word phrase, there are some women who will pick up on that as they will have said “what’s the magic word” with no “s” on the “word.” And a simple reply of “argh, you caught me” with a grin or “what are you going to do about?” with a grin is enough to tease her back.

Once you get counterplay from this where they start replying “abracadabra” to your manners demand, then you tell them

- “hey, you’re not supposed to say that!”
- “hey, you can’t do that back to me!”

And from there you have built up an atmosphere where you can tease each other about it, and you have made them aware of their bad manners for the better.

Remember, the interplay of conversation like this is first and foremost an easy way to make women more polite and respectful of you and men in general. That’s how Christian women should be treating their brothers and sisters in Christ anyway, and you’re just reminding her of it. The fact that it is teasing/flirting interaction is again a nice side effect.

Mark 7 and the socialization of men

February 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Mark 7 is an excellent commentary on the second axiom of the socialization of men and women:

> Thus, we have these two axioms:
>
> 1. The tendency of women's socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other.
>
> 2. The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.

Likewise, it has commentary on two different scenarios, one with the Pharisees and the disciples, and then it has commentary on what I talked about in Masculinity is the truth, Masculinity is the truth Part 2, and Framework for Offense and defense especially the art of the tease (in the form or what gamers would call a "neg" here).

Let's explore the Scriptures.

Jesus begins by ripping the Pharisees a new one. Instead of straight correction, this was a firm rebuke straight from the Scriptures.

> Mark 7 (NASB) — Followers of Tradition
>
> 1 The Pharisees and some of the scribes gathered around Him when they had > come from Jerusalem, 2 and had seen that some of His disciples were eating their > bread with impure hands, that is, unwashed. 3 (For the Pharisees and all the Jews > do not eat unless they [a]carefully wash their hands, thus observing the > traditions of the elders; 4 and when they come from the market place, they do > not eat unless they [b]cleanse themselves; and there are many other things > which they have received in order to observe, such as the [c]washing of cups and > pitchers and copper pots.) 5 The Pharisees and the scribes *asked Him, "Why do > Your disciples not walk according to the tradition of the elders, but eat their > bread with impure hands?" 6 And He said to them, "Rightly did Isaiah > prophesy of you hypocrites, as it is written:
>
> 'This people honors Me with their lips,
> But their heart is far away from Me.
> 7 'But in vain do they worship Me,
> Teaching as doctrines the precepts of men.'
> 8 Neglecting the commandment of God, you hold to the tradition of men."
>
> 9 He was also saying to them, "You are experts at setting aside the > commandment of God in order to keep your tradition. 10 For Moses said, 'Honor > your father and your mother'; and, 'He who speaks evil of father or mother, is to > [d]be put to death'; 11 but you say, 'If a man says to his father or his mother, > whatever I have that would help you is Corban (that is to say, [e]given to God),’ 12 you no longer permit him to do anything for his father or his mother; 13 thus invalidating the word of God by your tradition which you have handed down; and you do many things such as that.”

After that Jesus continues in His line of teaching to all who would hear Him. Except later, His disciples don’t understand the parable and He mock insults their lack of understanding.

> The Heart of Man
>
> 14 After He called the crowd to Him again, He began saying to them, “Listen to Me, all of you, and understand: 15 there is nothing outside the man which can defile him if it goes into him; but the things which proceed out of the man are what defile the man. 16 [[f]If anyone has ears to hear, let him hear.”]
>
> 17 When he had left the crowd and entered the house, His disciples questioned Him about the parable. 18 And He *said to them, “Are you so lacking in understanding (asunetos) also? Do you not understand that whatever goes into the man from outside cannot defile him, 19 because it does not go into his heart, but into his stomach, and [g]is eliminated?” (Thus He declared all foods clean.) 20 And He was saying, “That which proceeds out of the man, that is what defiles the man. 21 For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed the evil thoughts, [h]fornications, thefts, murders, adulteries, 22 deeds of coveting and wickedness, as well as deceit, sensuality, [i]envy, slander, [j]pride and foolishness. 23 All these evil things proceed from within and defile the man.”

The word Jesus uses for understanding is asunetos.

> G801 — ἀσύνετος — asunetos — as-oon’-ay-tos
>
> From G1 (as a negative particle) and G4908; unintelligent; by implication wicked: – foolish, without understanding.

Basically, he was calling them foolish because they couldn’t understand the parable of what He was talking about.

I think one of the interesting reasons men insult and criticize each other is that it helps to drive the point home that this is important to know and understand for us. It only works from men to other men, so women don’t try this to your men unless you want to be a nagging harpy.

Then after that Jesus goes on His way to a different region where he meets a woman:

> The Syrophoenician Woman
>
> 24 Jesus got up and went away from there to the region of Tyre[k]. And when He had entered a house, He wanted no one to know of it; [l]yet He could not escape notice. 25 But after hearing of Him, a woman whose little daughter had an > unclean spirit immediately came and fell at His feet. 26 Now the woman was a [m]Gentile, of the Syrophoenician race. And she kept asking Him to cast the demon out of her daughter. 27 And He was saying to her, "Let the children be satisfied first, for it is not [n]good to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs." 28 But she answered and *said to Him, "Yes, Lord, but even the dogs under the table feed on the children's crumbs." 29 And He said to her, "Because of this [o]answer go; the demon has gone out of your daughter." 30 And going back to her home, she found the child [p]lying on the bed, the demon having left.

Jesus goes straight to the heart with some indirect truth to the woman by using an analogy. It's basically an "artful neg" if I was to refer to a "game technique."

Jesus was calling her (and Gentiles) dogs. Dogs were not pets as we think of them now but scavenger animals and some of the lowest forms of life. Jesus stated in in Matthew,

> Matthew 7:6 "Do not give what is holy to dogs, and do not throw your pearls before swine, or they will trample them under their feet, and turn and tear you to pieces."

We instinctively have a revulsion of pigs because we know that they roll around in their own shit. Giving a pearl to pigs was akin to throwing it in the trash knowing that it would be dirtied beyond recognition and unsavable. Likewise, the same with dogs in those days.

In my opinion, Jesus was testing this woman to see if she had too much pride. It is a good test of pride because if women or men have an inordinate amount of pride then they will be offended, usually lash out, and leave. In this case, if the Syrophoenecian woman had too much pride and was lacking in humulity then she would get offended at Him for not helping her — as she was making the request of him — and not continue to believe and pursue healing for her daughter thinking that Jesus was "just another jerk." If I was to compare it to women in today's world, you can see how a "neg" would be useful for discerning pride and the entitlement factor in women.

The entirety of the Mark 7 passage also goes to show the difference between how Jesus speaks with men basically straight laying down the truth and berating them for not understanding, whereas with women He uses indirect truth to get his point across and test the faith of the woman.

Remember, masculinity was created by God. While "game" can indeed show us how some masculine concepts work in real life to women in this present age (albeit typically directed in an evil manner), we should know that it was not created by the gamers. Indeed, Jesus used many so-called "game techniques" in His ministry which was thousands of years before game was "invented." It's not game; it's masculinity.

Don't insult God by not giving credit where credit is due.

Instead of saying "hurr de durr, look Jesus was using game!" we can see how Jesus interacts with both men and women. We can learn from the best source of godly masculinity to see how to obliterate pride and spur each other on towards righteousness while learning how to be godly masculine men.

Masculinity is either godly or evil. Pursue godly masculinity.

Saved

February 22, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the concepts that gets lost in the English is the nature of what being “saved” is all about. The Greek word for “saved” is sōzō and you would be surprised where it shows up in the gospels.

For example, this word shows up in the woman with the bleeding issue for 12 years in Mark 5 (NASB). I’ve also highlighted the other words that are important in this passage.

> 25 A woman who had had a hemorrhage for twelve years, 26 and had endured much at the hands of many physicians, and had spent all that she had and was not helped at all, but rather had grown worse— 27 after hearing about Jesus, she came up in the crowd behind Him and touched His [i]cloak. 28 For she [j]thought, “If I just touch His garments, I will [k]get well (sōzō).” 29 Immediately the flow of her blood was dried up; and she felt in her body that she was healed of her affliction. 30 Immediately Jesus, perceiving in Himself that the power (dunamis) proceeding from Him had gone forth, turned around in the crowd and said, “Who touched My garments?” 31 And His disciples said to Him, “You see the crowd pressing in on You, and You say, ‘Who touched Me?’” 32 And He looked around to see the woman who had done this. 33 But the woman fearing (phobeō)and trembling, aware of what had happened to her, came and fell down before Him and told Him the whole truth (alētheia). 34 And He said to her, “Daughter, your faith (pistis) has [l]made you well (sōzō); go in peace (eirēnē) and be healed of your affliction.”

This passage is interesting because it brings together many of the concepts that we have talked about before:

- In God gives the force to everyone we saw that the power (dunamis) that went out of Jesus is the same power to do miracles that all believers have.

> G1411 — δύναμις — dunamis — doo’-nam-is
> From G1410; force (literally or figuratively); specifically miraculous power (usually by implication a miracle itself): – ability, abundance, meaning, might (-ily, -y, -y deed), (worker of) miracle (-s), power, strength, violence, mighty (wonderful) work.

- Likewise, the woman had fear (phobeō) because of what she had done in secret, whereas bringing it to light brings forth the truth (alētheia).

> G5399 — φοβέω — phobeō — fob-eh’-o
> From G5401; to frighten, that is, (passively) to be alarmed; by analogy to be in awe of, that is, revere: – be (+ sore) afraid, fear (exceedingly), reverence.

> G225 — ἀλήθεια — alētheia — al-ay’-thi-a
> From G227; truth: – true, X truly, truth, verity.

This is paralleled in many verses in John (NASB)

> 3:21 But he who practices the truth (alētheia) comes to the Light, so that his deeds may be manifested as having been wrought in God.”
>
> 4:23 But an hour is coming, and now is, when the true (alēthinos) worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth (alētheia); for such people the Father seeks to be His worshipers. 24 God is [e]spirit, and those who worship Him must worship in spirit and truth (alētheia).”
>
> 8:31 So Jesus was saying to those Jews who had believed Him, “If you continue in My word, then you are truly disciples of Mine; 32 and you will know the truth (alētheia), and the truth (alētheia) will make you free.”
>
> 14:6 Jesus *said to him, “I am the way, and the truth (alētheia), and the life; no one comes to the Father but through Me.
>
> 14:16 I will ask the Father, and He will give you another [b]Helper, that He may be with you forever; 17 that is the Spirit of truth (alētheia), whom the world cannot receive, because it does not see Him or know Him, but you know Him because He abides with you and will be in you.
>
> 15:26 “When the [h]Helper comes, whom I will send to you from the Father, that is the Spirit of truth (alētheia) who proceeds from the Father, He will testify about Me, 27 [i]and you will testify also, because you have been with Me from the beginning.

We analyzed the Phobeo in the context of righteousness and evil in Masculinity is the truth Part 2. The woman did her deed in secret, and Jesus knew. Even though He would have healed her, it was essential that her deeds be brought to the light and that she tell the truth of them. Bringing her deed to light eliminates the fear and allows us to fully walk in the truth.

Similarly, Jesus parallels the truth in regard to himself and the gift of the Holy Spirit to us as believers. We know the truth and the truth sets us free. We bear witness to the truth. The truth is not something we do in secret, but it is something that we show all men.

- Pistis is the same faith that is discussed in the fruits of the Spirit. I’ve discussed Pistis in regard to Christian masculinity and confidence as well as Anchored Souls. It’s an essential factor to be made well and whole because it forces us to abandon our own strength and to rely on His.

> G4102 — πίστις — pistis — pis’-tis
>
> From G3982; persuasion, that is, credence; moral conviction (of religious truth, or the truthfulness of God or a religious teacher), especially reliance upon Christ for salvation; abstractly constancy in such profession; by extension the system of > religious (Gospel) truth itself: – assurance, belief, believe, faith, fidelity.

- Likewise, eirēnē is the same peace discussed the fruits of the Spirit. That peace is the one discussed in Christian masculinity and confidence as well as Anchored emotions.

> G1515 — εἰρήνη — eirēnē — i-rah'-nay
>
> Probably from a primary verb εἴρω eirō (to join); peace (literally or figuratively); by implication prosperity: – one, peace, quietness, rest, + set at one again.

It's really interesting because Jesus is essentially saying to the woman that faith is not something that is internal. It's something that is external. We must do things in faith (pistis) and believing and keeping it in secret is not enough. It is only in the things we do that we can have the peace (eirēnē) of God. Even if it is a good thing that happened, and it is not brought to light we, like this woman, will have fear. But once the truth is brought to light there is peace. The fruits of the Spirit are things that are done.

> James 1:22 (NASB) But prove yourselves doers of the word, and not merely hearers who delude themselves.

- Now, going back to what this post was originally about: sōzō.

> G4982 — σώζω — sōzō — sode'-zo
>
> From a primary word σῶς sōs (contraction for the obsolete σάος saos, "safe"); to save, that is, deliver or protect (literally or figuratively): – heal, preserve, save (self), do well, be (make) whole.

This is obviously a direct parallel to salvation.

> Matthew 1:21 She will bear a Son; and you shall call His name Jesus, for [w]He will save (sōzō) His people from their sins."
>
> Matthew 10:22 You will be hated by all because of My name, but it is the one who has endured to the end who will be saved (sōzō).
>
> Matthew 16:25 For whoever wishes to save (sōzō) his [a]life will lose it; but whoever loses his [b]life for My sake will find it.
>
> Matthew 18:11 [[a]For the Son of Man has come to save (sōzō) that which was lost.]

Paul expounds upon this in Ephesians 2 (NASB)

> 5 even when we were dead [f]in our transgressions, made us alive together [g]with Christ (by grace you have been saved (sōzō)), 6 and raised us up with Him, and seated us with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, 7 so that in the ages to come He might show the surpassing riches of His grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus. 8 For by grace you have been saved (sōzō) through > faith; and [h]that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God;

Our faith is not something we can hide and still be saved. I'm convinced that this is why one of the few things that Jesus commanded for believers which is to be baptized is to be in public. It is a public declaration of faith of our trust in Him. The truth in our lives must be brought to light, otherwise if it is encased in darkness it is not real.

As I talked about in Masculinity is the truth men who want to live for God are to both speak and do the truth in righteousness. This congruence of masculinity within oneself to words and actions is what both men and women will respect.

This is the importance of being Christian who walk the walk and who bear good fruit from our walk by having the Spirit work inside us.

Helpmeet

February 23, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Women were created to be helpmeets to their husbands. Strong's dictionary for the word helpmeet is:

> H5828 — ʻêzer — ay'-zer
>
> From H5826; aid: – help.

This is used it the following passages in Genesis 2 (NASB):

> 18 Then the Lord God said, "It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper (êzer) [o]suitable for him." 19 Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the [p]sky, and brought them to the man to see what he would call them; and whatever the man called a living creature, that was its name. 20 The man gave names to all the cattle, and to the birds of the [q]sky, and to every beast of the field, but for [r]Adam there was not found a helper (êzer) [s]suitable for him. 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God [t]fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man.

And this is the context of the other 19 times that êzer is used in the Scriptures:

> Exodus 18:4 [c]The other was named [d]Eliezer, for he said, "The God of my father was my help (êzer), and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh."
>
> Deuteronomy 33:7 And this regarding Judah; so he said, "Hear, O Lord, the voice of Judah, And bring him to his people. With his hands he contended for [g]them, And may You be a help (êzer) against his adversaries."
>
> Deuteronomy 33:26 "There is none like the God of [p]Jeshurun, Who rides the heavens [q]to your help (êzer),
>
> Deuteronomy 33:29 "Blessed are you, O Israel; Who is like you, a people saved by the Lord, Who is the shield of your help (êzer) And the sword of your majesty! So your enemies will cringe before you, And you will tread upon their high places."
>
> Psalm 20:1 May the Lord answer you in the day of trouble! May the name of the God of Jacob set you securely on high! 2 May He send you help (êzer) from the sanctuary And support you from Zion!
>
> Psalm 33:20 Our soul waits for the Lord; He is our help (êzer) and our shield.
>
> Psalm 70:5 But I am afflicted and needy; Hasten to me, O God! You are my help (êzer) and my deliverer; O Lord, do not delay.
>
> Psalm 89:19 [o]Once You spoke in vision to Your godly [p]ones, And said, "I have

> [q]given help (êzer) to one who is mighty;
>
> Psalm 115:9 O Israel, trust in the Lord; He is their help (êzer) and their shield.
> 10 O house of Aaron, trust in the Lord; He is their help (êzer) and their shield.
> 11 You who [e]fear the Lord, trust in the Lord; He is their help (êzer) and their shield.
>
> Psalm 121:1 I will lift up my eyes to the mountains; From where shall my help (êzer) come? 2 My help (êzer) comes from the Lord, Who made heaven and earth.
>
> Psalm 124:8 Our help (êzer) is in the name of the Lord, Who made heaven and earth.
>
> Paslm 146:5 How blessed is he whose help (êzer) is the God of Jacob, Whose hope is in the Lord his God,
>
> Isaiah 30:5 “Everyone will be ashamed because of a people who cannot profit them, Who are not for help (êzer) or profit, but for shame and also for reproach.” (This was Judah’s warning against an alliance with Egypt.)
>
> Ezekiel 12:14 I will scatter to every wind all who are around him, his helpers (êzer) and all his troops; and I will draw out a sword after them.
>
> Daniel 11:34 Now when they fall they will be granted a little help (êzer) and many will join with them in hypocrisy.
>
> Hosea 13:9 It is your destruction, O Israel, [j]That you are against Me, against your help (êzer).

You can see the difference in help from the Lord especially in the Psalms contrasted to help from either earthly powers or those who disobey God in the prophets.

I’m not a woman, and I don’t know what it is like to be a woman. I suspect that most feminists would have vehement hatred to be called an êzer, but that’s the incorrect frame of mind. Christian wives should revel in being an êzer, as she is created to be the physical representation of the help of the Lord to her husband. Is there any higher calling than to walk in the will of the Father?

Just as husbands are to love their wives as Christ loved the church, so wives are to help their husbands as the Lord is our help in times of trouble.

Joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma

February 24, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Part 1 — Chairō

Chairō is a particularly interesting because it is the root word for two distinct concepts in the Christian faith.

> G5463 — χαίρω — chairō — khah'ee-ro
>
> A primary verb; to be full of "cheer", that is, calmly happy or well off; impersonal especially as a salutation (on meeting or parting), be well: – farewell, be glad, God speed, greeting, hail, joy (-fully), rejoice.

Let's explore the etymology of these words and how they relate to the Christian walk.

Part 2 — Chara (Joy)

One of the more prominent roots is in the fruit of the Spirit joy:

> G5479 — χαρά — chara — khar-ah'
>
> From G5463; cheerfulness, that is, calm delight: – gladness, X greatly, (X be exceeding) joy (-ful, -fully, -fulness, -ous).

Galatians 5:22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy (chara), peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law.

All Christians are called bear the fruits of joy that will exude in our lives as a witness all others.

Part 3 — Charis (Grace)

However, the really interesting parallel is that of it's reference to grace.

> G5485 — χάρις — charis — khar'-ece
>
> From G5463; graciousness (as gratifying), of manner or act (abstract or concrete; literal, figurative or spiritual; especially the divine influence upon the heart, and its reflection in the life; including gratitude): – acceptable, benefit, favour, gift, grace (-ious), joy liberality, pleasure, thank (-s, -worthy).

Romans 5:15 But [j]the free gift is not like the transgression. For if by the transgression of the one the many died, much more did the grace (charis) of God and the gift by the grace (charis) of the one Man, Jesus Christ, abound to the many. 16 The gift is not like that which came through the one who sinned; for on the one hand the judgment arose from one transgression [k]resulting in condemnation, but on the other hand the free gift arose from many transgressions [l]resulting in justification. 17 For if by the transgression of the one, death reigned through the one, much more those who receive the abundance of grace (charis) and of the gift of righteousness will reign in life through the One, Jesus Christ.

Ephesians 2:4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of His great love with which He loved us, 5 even when we were dead [f]in our transgressions, made us alive together [g]with Christ (by grace (charis) you have been saved), 6 and raised us up with Him, and seated us with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, 7 so that in the ages to come He might show the surpassing riches of His grace (charis) in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus. 8 For by grace (charis) you have been saved through faith; and [h]that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; 9 not as a result of works, so that no one may boast. 10 For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand so that we would walk in them.

The gift of grace that we have received from God is intimately connected with joy. I believe this is why Jesus says that His burden is light. Those of us who have received salvation have the weight of sin lifted up off our souls and we rejoice in Him that offered the gift freely to us. While we were still yet sinners.

Part 4 — charizomai (forgiveness)

One of the offshoots of charis is charizomai which is used in context of forgiveness.

> G5483 — χαρίζομαι — charizomai — khar-id'-zom-ahee
>
> Middle voice from G5485; to grant as a favor, that is, gratuitously, in kindness, pardon or rescue: – deliver, (frankly) forgive, (freely) give, grant.

Luke 7:40 And Jesus answered him, "Simon, I have something to say to you." And he [ad]replied, "Say it, Teacher." 41 "A moneylender had two debtors: one owed five hundred [ae]denarii, and the other fifty. 42 When they were unable to repay, he graciously forgave (charizomai) them both. So which of them will love him more?" 43 Simon answered and said, "I suppose the one whom he forgave (charizomai) more." And He said to him, "You have judged correctly."

Ephesians 4:32 Be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgaving (charizomai) each other, just as God in Christ also has forgiven (charizomai) [x]you.

The concepts of grace and joy are intimately connected with being forgiven. This is not surprising in the least, and it also extends to the forgiveness that we freely should give to others as the Father has forgiven us.

There are actually two words that Jesus uses for forgiveness, the other being aphiēmi (G863) which is different in context. Aphiēmi refers to the context of the act of the laying aside or remission of sins, whereas charizomai talks about the forgiveness of sins in the context of that which we have received freely and to give freely.

Part 5 — charitoō (highly favored)

The Catholics may also recognized charitoō which is one of the pillars for the Immaculate Conception. It's only used one other time in the Scriptures aside from Mary.

> G5487 — χαριτόω — charitoō — khar-ee-to'-o
>
> From G5485; to grace, that is, indue with special honor: – make accepted, be highly favoured.

Luke 1:28 And coming in, he said to her, “Greetings, [u]favored one (charitoō)! The Lord [v]is with you.”

Ephesians 1:3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ, 4 just as He chose us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we would be holy and blameless before [d]Him. In love 5 [e]He predestined us to adoption as sons through Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the [f]kind intention of His will, 6 to the praise of the glory of His grace, which He freely bestowed (charitoō) on us in the Beloved.

As a Protestant I can see how the connection is made here to take it all the way to birth, but it seems tenuous to me. However, that’s neither here or there as it is not critical to salvation, but it is something to look at if you are interested.

The important thing to note is that all Christians are highly favored by God and included in the inheritance of of Jesus.

Part 6 — charisma (gift)

Charisma is defined in Strong’s as:

> G5486 — χάρισμα — charisma — char’-is-mah
>
> From G5483; a (divine) gratuity, that is, deliverance (from danger or passion); (specifically) a (spiritual) endowment, that is, (subjectively) religious qualification, or (objectively) miraculous faculty: – (free) gift.

Here are some of the select Scriptures from the Bible which talk about charisma as it relates to Christians.

Romans 5:12 Therefore, just as through one man sin entered into the world, and death through sin, and so death spread to all men, because all sinned— 13 for [h]until the Law sin was in the world, but sin is not imputed when there is no law. 14 Nevertheless death reigned from Adam until Moses, even over those who had not sinned in the likeness of the offense of Adam, who is a [i]type of Him who was to come. 15 But [j]the free gift (charisma) is not like the transgression. For if by the transgression of the one the many died, much more did the grace of God and the gift by the grace of the one Man, Jesus Christ, abound to the many. 16 The gift is not like that which came through the one who sinned; for on the one hand the judgment arose from one transgression [k]resulting in condemnation, but on the other hand the free gift (charisma) arose from many transgressions [l]resulting in justification.

Romans 6:23 For the wages of sin is death, but the free gift (charisma) of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

1 Peter 4:7 The end of all things [f]is near; therefore, be of sound judgment and sober spirit for the purpose of [g]prayer. 8 Above all, keep fervent in your love for one another, because love covers a multitude of sins. 9 Be hospitable to one another without complaint. 10 As each one has received a special gift (charisma), employ it in serving one another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. 11 Whoever speaks, is to do so [h]as one who is speaking the utterances of God; whoever serves is to do so as one who is serving [i]by the strength which God supplies; so that in all things God may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom belongs the glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen.

I think charisma is the most interesting Greek word reference given that many game sources such as Heartiste say that game is applied charisma, and that it is one of the important concepts of the masculexicon from the Red Pill Room.

> Charisma — A primary attraction cue for both men and women. In men, Charisma involves projecting an attitude of calm self-assuredness combined with confidence and “coolness” — lack of perturbability.

Likewise, the common definition of charisma is similar:

> cha·ris·ma kəˈrizmə
>
> 1. compelling attractiveness or charm that can inspire devotion in others. (“she enchanted guests with her charisma” synonyms: charm, presence, personality, force of personality, strength of character;)
> 2. a divinely conferred power or talent.

If you can spot the irony you are not alone.

Charisma is the gift of grace to us from God. And by the same measure that we have that gift of grace, we as Christians are also to pour out by our actions and deeds into others. Because of this gift we don’t have to fear the world, but have assuredness and confidence in what God has called us to do in Him. We should not be perturbed by world.

This is the difference between the charisma of self (game) and the charisma that we freely receive from God and are to give to others.

All of these words tie together into one of the most important pillars in the Christian walk. It shouldn’t be any surprise to say that those who are walking the Christian walk will exude joy because of their faith, freely receive and freely give the grace that God has given us, forgive as He has forgiven us, know that we are highly favored by God, and will develop a charasmatic personality.

For men that includes growing into godly masculinity.

The masculinity of Jesus Part 1

February 26, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I have many partial posts written in queue, but I've been thinking over the past couple of days that I think a deeper study of the Scriptures is needed.

One of the biggest things that has always come up in the "great game debate" is that the anti-gamers have stated that masculinity is right there in the Bible if you look for it. On the other hand, the pro-gamers state that this is clearly not the case.

However, as I have shown in quite a few posts now such as Masculinity is the truth and Mark 7 and the socialization of men, Jesus asserts himself in a godly masculine manner that many Christians would claim now is "game." Game is only a codification of parts of masculinity that are attractive to women albeit in mostly in an appeal to the flesh instead of the Spirit. And as I have stated before don't give credit to game, give credit to God for allowing game to show you part of what masculinity is supposed to look like.

My goal for this blog is not game, but to show men how to step into godly masculinity. A side effect of that is acting in a godly masculine manner around women which will be attractive to them.

As sad as it is to say, Christian nice guys are effeminate with women and therefore NOT acting in a Christian manner around them. Indeed, putting women on a pedestal, not calling out non-Christian behavior from women, being afraid to approach or talk to women, and being afraid to express opinions around women are distinctly NOT Christian behaviors. They are not serving God through these behaviors. They are not acting in a godly masculine manner.

Remember, the part of godly masculinity that is attractive to women is the masculinity and not the godly part. However, since no action is in a moral vacuum we want to act in a godly manner rather than in an evil manner.

The reason why many of the Christian men think they need game is that they [unconsciously or consciously] pridefully believe that they were serving God around women before they found game. Thus, they NEED game to be attractive to women or their wife because faith is not attractive. This is incorrect.

The Christian walk has always been about DOING and not KNOWING (James 1:22). It is not the faith that is attractive but the walking out of faith in a masculine manner that is attractive. Thus, Christian men who act effeminate (nice) around women are in sin and need to repent of it. It is clear that placing women on a pedestal instead of God is idolatry. This is one of the clearest definitions of sin.

Yes, they may have been deluded or brainwashed, but we are all deluded to some extent or another by society, feminism, churchianity, and even our families. This is no excuse (Hosea 4:6). All have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God regardless.

The key is to believe that you were not serving God as a Christian nice guy. You cannot pridefully believe that you were right before God when being nice around women. This is difficult for many Christian nice guys and even Christian men to understand and accept, and I believe that it will undoubtedly be a stumbling block to them.

However, once you can admit that you were in sin and repent to God of that sin, you will start to understand why it is not “game” you need but to grow into the fullness of God’s creation for men which is masculinity directed by the Spirit. To become more like Jesus. This is to what we are called, and a man who truly does that will be respected and WILL be attractive to women as a side effect because God created women to be attracted to masculinity.

Anyway,

The path that I will be using is the Gospel Harmony on wiki starting from Jesus’ youth all the way to his ascension into heaven in chronological order. I will specifically be looking at his interactions with men, with women, and crowds, and will categorize the posts accordingly. It looks like there are about 145 parables and stories combined (subtracting the ~15 of the nativity), so this may take the greater part of this year. I probably will double up or more if some of the passages are short.

I will be interested to see what I learn about masculinity in the coming months from Jesus’ example, and I hope that any of you that are reading will be too.

the Masculinity of Jesus Part 2 (return and Jesus in the temple)

February 28, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Part 1 — Jesus returns to Judea

Jesus' return to Judea isn't particularly exciting for this discussion; however, the passage in Luke does display some interesting commentary in the last verse.

> Matthew 2:21-23 21 So [a]Joseph got up, took the Child and His mother, and came into the land of Israel. 22 But when he heard that Archelaus was reigning over Judea in place of his father Herod, he was afraid to go there. Then after being warned by God in a dream, he left for the regions of Galilee, 23 and came and lived in a city called Nazareth. This was to fulfill what was spoken through the prophets: "He shall be called a Nazarene."
>
> Luke 2:39 When they had performed everything according to the Law of the Lord, they returned to Galilee, to their own city of Nazareth. 40 The Child continued to grow and become strong (krataioō) [in Spirit], [r]increasing in wisdom (sophia); and the grace (charis) of God was upon Him.

Let's unpack this sentence because there's a lot going on here.

I've already discussed extensively the grace (charis) of God in the article Joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma, so take a look at it if you haven't already.

Sophia is just the Greek word for wisdom. Jesus talks about it in terms of the wisdom and Solomon and of God. It's also used when Jesus was in his hometown and the people were doubting because he has wisdom (sophia) and power (dunamis) and from then on He could do no mighty works (dunamis). I discussed Dunamis in God gives the force to everyone.

Krataioō (strong) is used only 4 times in the New Testament, but it refers back to the Old Testament. It's derived from two other words.

> 1. G2901 — κραταιόω — krataioō — krat-ah-yo'-o
>
> From G2900; to empower, that is, (passively) increase in vigor: – be strenghtened, be (wax) strong.
>
> 2. G2900 — κραταιός — krataios — krat-ah-yos'
>
> From G2904; powerful: – mighty.
>
> 3. G2904 — κράτος — kratos — krat'-os
>
> Perhaps a primary word; vigor ["great"], (literally or figuratively): – dominion, might [-ily], power, strength.

The word for strong in Hebrew is similar:

> H2389 — châzâq — khaw-zawk’
>
> From H2388; strong (usually in a bad sense, hard, bold, violent): – harder, hottest, + impudent, loud, mighty, sore, stiff [-hearted], strong (-er).

The biggest implication of the word “strong” in the Scriptures is how the anointing is passed down from leader to leader or from father to son. For example,

> The Lord speaks to Moses before working wonders in Egypt:
>
> Exodus 6:Then the Lord said to Moses, “Now you will see what I will do to Pharaoh: Because of my mighty hand he will let them go; because of my mighty hand he will drive them out of his country.”
>
> Moses to the Israelites before he was to die:
>
> Deuteronomy 31:6 Be strong and courageous, do not be afraid or tremble at them, for the Lord your God is the one who goes with you. He will not fail you or forsake you.”
>
> Moses to Joshua directly after:
>
> Deuteronomy 31:7 Then Moses called to Joshua and said to him in the sight of all Israel, “Be strong and courageous, for you shall go with this people into the land which the Lord has sworn to their fathers to give them, and you shall give it to them as an inheritance. 8 The Lord is the one who goes ahead of you; He will be with you. He will not fail you or forsake you. Do not fear or be dismayed.”
>
> Moses commissioning Joshua later in the chapter:
>
> Deuteronomy 31:23 Then He commissioned Joshua the son of Nun, and said, “Be strong and courageous, for you shall bring the sons of Israel into the land which I swore to them, and I will be with you.”
>
> The Lord speaks directly to Joshua, and reiterates what Moses said to Joshua:
>
> Joshua 1:6 Be strong and courageous, for you shall give this people possession of the land which I swore to their fathers to give them. 7 Only be strong and very courageous; [b]be careful to do according to all the law which Moses My servant commanded you; do not turn from it to the right or to the left, so that you may [c]have success wherever you go. 8 This book of the law shall not depart from your mouth, but you shall meditate on it day and night, so that you may [d]be careful to do according to all that is written in it; for then you will make your way prosperous, and then you will [e]have success. 9 Have I not commanded you? Be strong and courageous! Do not tremble or be dismayed, for the Lord your God is with you wherever you go.”
>
> The Israelites back to Joshua when they were about to go possess the land:
>
> Joshua 1:16 They answered Joshua, saying, “All that you have commanded us we will do, and wherever you send us we will go. 17 Just as we obeyed Moses in all things, so we will obey you; only may the Lord your God be with you as He was with Moses. 18 Anyone who rebels against your [i]command and does not obey > your words in all that you command him, shall be put to death; only be strong and courageous."

>
> David to Solomon on his death bed:
>
> 1 Kings 2:1 As David's [a]time to die drew near, he charged Solomon his son, saying, 2 "I am going the way of all the earth. Be strong, therefore, and [b]show yourself a man. 3 Keep the charge of the Lord your God, to walk in His ways, to keep His statutes, His commandments, His ordinances, and His testimonies, according to what is written in the Law of Moses, that you may succeed in all that you do and wherever you turn, 4 so that the Lord may carry out His promise which He spoke concerning me, saying, 'If your sons are careful of their way, to walk before Me in [c]truth with all their heart and with all their soul, [d]you shall not lack a man on the throne of Israel.'

The concept of strength in the Bible has less to do with physical strength (though it was used in reference to Samson multiple times), but strength and courage as a dual nature against doing things in fear of the world as opposed to the fear of God.

Free Northerner has recently addressed strength and courage (fearless) in his series on what it means to be masculine as well.

Jesus is no exception in the Scriptures as He was growing up as a child.

Part 2 — Jesus in the temple

> Visit to Jerusalem
>
> Luke 2:41 Now His parents went to Jerusalem every year at the Feast of the Passover. 42 And when He became twelve, they went up there according to the custom of the Feast; 43 and as they were returning, after spending the full number of days, the boy Jesus stayed behind in Jerusalem. But His parents were unaware of it, 44 but supposed Him to be in the caravan, and went a day's journey; and they began looking for Him among their relatives and acquaintances. 45 When they did not find Him, they returned to Jerusalem looking for Him. 46 Then, after three days they found Him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the teachers, both listening to them and asking them questions. 47 And all who heard Him were amazed at His understanding and His answers. 48 When they saw Him, they were astonished; and His mother said to Him, "[s]Son, why have You treated us this way? Behold, Your father and I [t]have been anxiously looking for You." 49 And He said to them, "Why is it that you were looking for Me? Did you not know that I had to be in My Father's [u]house?" 50 But they did not understand the statement which He [v]had made to them. 51 And He went down with them and came to Nazareth, and He continued in subjection to them; and His mother treasured all these [w]things in her heart. 52 And Jesus kept increasing in wisdom and [x]stature, and in favor (charis) with God and men.

This passage is interesting for a lot of reasons.

First, Jesus goes missing and they can't find Him for 3 days. One thing about the numbers in the Scriptures is that they're never by mistake. 3 days is obviously the time for the resurrection, and the fact that Jesus was in the temple understanding and answering questions is a direct parallel to Him being the temple.

Second, Jewish children when they were being educated when asked a question by the Rabbi they answered it with another question. For example, if the rabbi asked "what is 4+4?", the student may answer the question with "what is 10-2" to show his understanding. A rabbi may ask about a certain passage of Scripture, and Jesus would state the answer through another Scripture. This is the "questioning and answering" that Jesus is undergoing in this passage, and this is the Scriptural mastery to which the Jews would foster.

Third, Jesus was still not recognized as adult by Jewish law and tradition — bar mitzvah is at 13 years of age and Jesus is 12. Since He is not considered as an adult here Jesus ultimately submits himself to His parents as unto the Lord (5th commandment) in order to show His adherence unto the law. Jesus reports later that he has come to fulfill the law not abolish it (Matthew 5:17). His subjection to them (hupotasso) is the same word that is used in subjection of wives to the husbands.

Fourth, the word for wisdom (sophia) is the same one we looked at earlier. Stature has to do with maturity and growing in size (normal puberty). However, the favor with God and men refers to charis which we looked at in joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma.

> 48 When they saw Him, they were astonished; and His mother said to Him, "[s]Son, why have You treated us this way? Behold, Your father and I [t]have been anxiously looking for You." 49 And He said to them, "Why is it that you were looking for Me? Did you not know that I had to be in My Father's [u]house?"

Edit: Lastly, and actually most importantly look at the way Jesus interacts with Mary, His mother, as they question Him about not returning with them. Mary asks Jesus a question ("[s]Son, why have You treated us this way? Behold, Your father and I [t]have been anxiously looking for You.") He actually responds back here with another question ("Why is it that you were looking for Me? Did you not know that I had to be in My Father's [u]house?").

When a woman asks you a question to a man typically a man should reframe it on his terms. In Jesus' case, He doesn't answer His mother directly and "qualify" himself that he was "just trying to do the right thing." Rather, he sets the tone by requestioning His parents because He knows that He was doing the right thing by seeking to be with the Father. This is the type of strong presence that Jesus has even as a child, even though as it states in the next sentence that Jesus was subject to His parents.

Part 3 — Conclusions

To unpack this passage, the main points about Jesus' masculinity here seem to be thus:

- Strength/being strong in terms of becoming a man who does not fear men but only fears the Lord.
- Increasing in wisdom and understanding, especially in knowledge of the Scriptures
- The grace/favor (charis) of God was prevalent in His life, and you can see how that functions in one of my previous posts linked above.
- Jesus' subjection to the proper authorities in His life as the law requires due to His submission to the Lord.
- Parallels already to His mission on earth of the His death and resurrection even as a child.
- Lastly, and importantly, we can see the first of Jesus' interaction of His parents where He "holds His frame" against His mother's questioning by answering her question with another question. He doesn't "qualify" himself to her, but rather His mission is to seek His Father and it would be wrong of His parents to think otherwise. BUT even in knowing this, He is still submissive to His parents regardless.

I find it interesting that Jesus is unafraid of doing a bold thing such as leaving His parents at such a young age (not even an "adult") due to His zeal for the Lord. May we as Christians have such the Spirit of God rest upon us that we can do that too.

Wives will never win their husbands with words

March 1, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A brief interlude with more commentary for wives and husbands (and girlfriends and boyfriends as that seems to apply now). I want to get this out on paper because I see this playing out in my parents' marriage as well as in other marriages.

Introduction

The "trick" is to actually follow God's commands. What a surprise. But the answers are not always clear in the English, so let's take a look at a scenario.

Say God has revealed to a wife that she is unhappy in a relationship because she is overbearing and dominant (feminism, churchianity, society, etc.). The wife wants it change so that her husband is leading, but she is having difficulty because anytime she wants him to lead it is met with disdain, snark, and disagreeable behavior from her husband.

What can a wife do?

The answer is right there in the Scriptures:

> 1 Peter 3 (NASB)
>
> 1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive (hupotassō) to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word (logos), they may be won without a word (logos) by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste (hagnos) and [a]respectful (phobos) behavior. 3 Your adornment (kosmos) must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle (praus) and quiet (hēsuchios) spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive (hupotassō) to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed (hupakouō) Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [or good] (agathopoieō) [b]without being frightened by any fear (phobeō).

There's a whole measure of concepts to unpack in these 6 verses.

Part 1 — Word (Logos)

> 1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive (hupotassō) to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word (logos), they may be won without a word (logos) by the behavior of their wives,

Logos is used to refer to Jesus in John 1 (In the beginning was the Word), and it is also used in the Scriptures to refer to the Scriptures themselves. The Bible is the Logos Word of God.

> G3056 — λόγος — logos — log’-os
>
> From G3004; something said (including the thought); by implication a topic (subject of discourse), also reasoning (the mental faculty) or motive; by extension a computation; specifically (with the article in John) the Divine Expression (that is, Christ): – account, cause, communication, X concerning, doctrine, fame, X have to do, intent, matter, mouth, preaching, question, reason, + reckon, remove, say (-ing), shew, X speaker, speech, talk, thing, + none of these things move me, tidings, treatise, utterance, word, work.

What is really interesting is that through the Scriptures here God is saying that unbelieving husbands should not be lectured to with the Scriptures. This is because lecturing a man to do the right thing is nagging. And nagging never, ever, ever, ever works to change a man.

Likewise, the Scriptures are true, but do you beat non-Christians over the head with a Bible and expect them to believe? I’ve never ever seen that work. And you probably haven’t either.

It’s not particularly surprising that the Scriptures nor speech are to not used to evangelize. After all, what is Christianity about? It’s all about action. Faith in action. We are not to be hearers but doers of the Word (James 1:22).

The Scriptures are food for the Christian. They are not food for those who still walk in the darkness, but food for those in the light. God may use the Scriptures if non-Christians are agreeable to reading them, but using them to brow beat or manipulate those who are resistant never works.

Part 2 – Submission (hupotassō)

> 1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive (hupotassō) to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word (logos), they may be won without a word (logos) by the behavior of their wives,
>
> […]
>
> 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive (hupotassō) to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed (hupakouō) Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [or good] (agathopoieō) [b]without being frightened by any fear (phobeō).

Those of you familiar with Ephesians 5 will also be familiar with hupotasso in 1 Peter 3.

> G5293 — ὑποτάσσω — hupotassō — hoop-ot-as’-so
>
> From G5259 and G5021; to subordinate; reflexively to obey: – be under obedience (obedient), put under, subdue unto, (be, make) subject (to, unto), be (put) in subjection (to, under), submit self unto.

This word is also used in reference to Christians’ submission to God, and Christians’ submission to earth authorities.

Husbands are called to headship and the wives are called to submission in the Scriptures. Just as there is a hierarchical structure in God's nature (Father > Jesus > Holy Spirit) as well as between Christ > Church, so too God has laid down a hierarchical structure here on earth between the sexes.

When the wife is making the decisions and having her husband qualify to her whims she is going to be leading the relationship. Because she feels like she is leading the relationship, she is going to be stressed because the responsibilities of the marriage will fall directly onto her instead of her husband. This one of the reasons why wives will become unhappy, even though they desire power in the relationship.

Part 3 — chaste (hagnos)

> 2 as they observe your chaste (hagnos) and [a]respectful (phobos) behavior.

Hagnos is not a word that is used often in the Scriptures.

> G53 — ἁγνός — hagnos — hag-nos'
>
> From the same as G40; properly clean, that is, (figuratively) innocent, modest, perfect: – chaste, clean, pure.

However, it is used in Titus 2 to refer to wives, and it is used in reference to presenting the Church as a bride to Christ. It generally refers to "purity" such that there is no unclean thing within it.

Obviously, this is an indirect reference to the fruits of the Spirit (charity, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, and self control) against which is no law. This is the the Truth in the Spirit, as opposed to the lie and deception of the nature of the flesh.

Part 4 — Phobos and Phobeo (fear/respect)

> G5399 — φοβέω — phobeō — fob-eh'-o
>
> From G5401; to frighten, that is, (passively) to be alarmed; by analogy to be in awe of, that is, revere: – be (+ sore) afraid, fear (exceedingly), reverence.

I covered this topic well in Masculinity is the truth Part 2.

> 2 as they observe your chaste (hagnos) and [a]respectful (phobos) behavior.

The English translation in the NASB is particularly apt. When wives do what is righteous they have respect/reverence towards both God and her husband. However, when wives do what is evil, all she has left is fear both from God and her husband.

Verse 6 illustrates this best:

> 6 just as Sarah obeyed (hupakouō) Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [or good] (agathopoieō) [b]without being frightened by any fear (phobeō).

If you do what is good (and the only good that can be done is through the Spirit), then there is no reason to be afraid.

Part 5 — Adornment (Kosmos)

This is perhaps the most intriguing part of the passage. I did not expect this word here when I started to look at the Greek.

> 3 Your adornment (kosmos) must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle (praus) and quiet (hēsuchios) spirit, which is precious in the sight of God.

Kosmos is typically referred to in the Greek in reference to the Creation of God. However, it also refers to an orderly arrangement of God's creation.

> G2889 — κόσμος — kosmos — kos'-mos
>
> Probably from the base of G2865; orderly arrangement, that is, decoration; by implication the world (in a wide or narrow sense, including its inhabitants, literally or figuratively [morally]): – adorning, world.

"Merely" is not actually there in the Greek as pointed out by Anne in the comments.

The Scripture says to think first about the internal which is incorruptable/imperishable — humility and quietness/peaceableness being the desirable qualities.

When cross referenced with 1 Timothy 2, the Scriptures state the same as this passage although with clarification.

> 1 Timothy 2:9 Likewise, I want women to adorn themselves with proper clothing, [g]modestly and discreetly, not with braided hair and gold or pearls or costly garments, 10 but rather by means of good works, as is proper for women making a claim to godliness.

Generally, it was the prostitutes that wore a lot of jewelry, braided the hair, etc. so the emphasis culturally is not to dress immoral but with modesty.

Beauty is one of the ways wives respect their husbands. If they look pretty then they are being respectors of the "one flesh" even as a wife's body is not hers but also her husbands, and likewise the husband's body to the wife (1 Cor 7).

Thus, while the internal is the most important factor, I would suggest that wives should not disregard their physical appearance either but dress modestly and take care of their bodies unto the Lord.

Part 6 — Gentle (Praus)

> 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle (praus) and quiet (hēsuchios) spirit, which is precious in the sight of God.

Praus is one of the fruits of the Spirit. It is Gentleness / Meekness / humility:

> G4239 — πραΰς — praus — prah-ooce’
>
> Apparently a primary word; mild, that is, (by implication) humble: – meek. See also G4235.

Humility is one of the core traits of a Christian because we know that that we have been saved by grace, not of ourselves or good works so that no one can boast, but it is a gift from God. Therefore, let none of us be proud, but serve those in Love/Charity because of the Love/Charity that was first granted to us by God. This is obvious and needs bearing no repeating.

However, often times wives believe that by offering an olive branch with words and actions that they should have husbands reciprocate. Yet, they often find that it drives their husband even further away from them.

Why?

The simple fact of the matter is that men who are constantly abused by women or their wives know that her words often have a hidden subtext to them. A woman will say something and mean another and even if she does something she wants something back. Therefore, the best thing to do is ignore and disengage from the conversation or snark back first before he has her lash out at him.

This is why humility is needed in actions, and it goes along with the concept of charity. Wives must act with the expectation of receiving nothing back.

Remember, you CANNOT change your husband. The only person who can change a wife’s husband is God.

But the relationship that you can change is between yourself and God. And if you die to self, then this allows God to work through you.

Part 7 — Quiet (hēsuchios)

> 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle (praus) and quiet (hēsuchios) spirit, which is precious in the sight of God.

I always wondered why quiet was used here. This is one of two places that hesuchios is used in the Scriptures.

> G2272 — ἡσύχιος — hēsuchios — hay-soo’-khee-os
>
> A prolonged form of a compound probably of a derivative of the base of G1476 and perhaps G2192; properly keeping one’s seat (sedentary), that is, (by implication) still (undisturbed, undisturbing): – peaceable, quiet.

The other context in which this word is used is in terms of Christians’ subjection to earthly authories. That we should live a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty (1 Timothy 2:2).

This is a very difficult concept for most women to get. Women want to engage men with words because words are often the preferred communication type for those of feminine persuasion. However, consider the flipside. When a wife tells her husband she has a problem what does a husband typically do? He wants to go and fix the problem.

This is one of the communication difference between the sexes. Women prefer words and understanding, while men prefer action and doing.

The reason why the Scriptures tell women to behave with humility and quiet/silence is because precisely that is how you speak respect to the husband. The only way that you show a husband respect is through your actions. Your words mean nothing to him because he can see your actions and if you are hypocritical or not.

Part 8 — Right / Good (Agathopoieō)

> 6 just as Sarah obeyed (hupakouō) Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [or good] (agathopoieō) [b]without being frightened by any fear (phobeō).

Agathopoieo is a derivative from Agathos which is another one of the fruits of the Spirit.

> G15 — ἀγαθοποιέω — agathopoieō — ag-ath-op-oy-eh'-o
>
> From G17; to be a well-doer (as a favor or a duty): – (when) do good (well).

As I have explained in various posts such as God is good and the good and the good and the bad and the bad, the only way Christians can do good is to walk with the Spirit (Galatians 5). This is what it means to die to self, and to have God work through your actions.

This is also subtle reference back to Cain and Abel where Cain is dissatisfied with his offering to God not being accepted.

> Genesis 4:6 Then the Lord said to Cain, "Why are you angry? And why has your countenance fallen? 7 If you do well (yâṭab), [e]will not your countenance be lifted up? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire is for you, but you must master it."
>
> H3190 — yâṭab — yaw-tab'
>
> A primitive root; to be (causatively) make well, literally (sound, beautiful) or figuratively (happy, successful, right): – be accepted, amend, use aright, benefit, be (make) better, seem best, make cheerful, be comely, + be content, diligent (-ly), dress, earnestly, find favour, give, be glad, do (be, make) good ([-ness]), be (make) merry, please (+ well), shew more [kindness], skilfully, X very small, surely, make sweet, thoroughly, tire, trim, very, be (can, deal, entreat, go, have) well [said, seen].

The interesting part about the Cain and Abel analogy here is that the same words for "Desire" and "Rule" — "And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire is for you, but you must master [rule over] it." are the same ones in Genesis 3 of the fall where God curses woman and says “Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you.”

Submission is a RIGHTEOUS action because it you are obeying God first, and your husband second. It’s less about submission to the husband, but submission to God by obeying His law. Remember when David sins by having Uriah murdered after sleeping with Bathsheba in Psalm 51 David cries out to God and says “Against You, You only, I have sinned And done what is evil in Your sight.”

Conclusions

In the end, what we are left with is a set of 8 instructions on how wives are supposed to win their husbands, even those wives who are married to unbelievers.

Take a look at what we have, and think about what they mean:

1. Without a Word (logos)
2. Submissive (hupotasso)
3. Chaste (hagnos)
4. Fear/reverence (phobos/phobeo)
5. Adornment (Kosmos)
6. Gentle (praus)
7. Quiet (hēsuchios)
8. Right / Good (Agathopoieō)

If you noticed that they are all actions you would be correct!

Wives will never win their husbands with words. Only through actions can a husband be won. Because actions are speaking the language of men.

In particular, the Scriptures reiterate twice that (1) you should not try to lecture him with the Word or words and to be (7) quiet in and let your behavior speak for you. Any words, positive or negative, will be met with suspicion from a nagged husband. Thus, it is better to say nothing. Let your actions speak for you.

Then there are 5 reinforcing actions upon which your behavior is built. (2) Submit to his headship with (3) pure/chaste behavior, (4) respect, (6) humility, and (8) goodness which can only be done through the Spirit, and also to (5) adorn (orderly arrange) first with humility and quietness then external beauty (both are required!). A woman’s beauty is a physical expression of her respect to her husband.

Words mean essentially nothing to a husband that is brow beaten. Your words go in one ear and out the other because your behavior says everything. Behavior is not just doing things for him.

Non-verbal behavior is often referenced to approximately 85-90% of communication. Any time you eye roll, go off in a huff, have dominant body language such as hands on hips, treat him like he’s a child, etc. then you tell him that you are not submissive, your behavior is impure and rejecting, your behavior is disrespecting, without humility, and without goodness.

This is why counseling never works. Unless it is strictly Scriptural based recommendations where a counselor can walk a couple through a passage such as 1 Peter 3, words and compromises will never mean anything for a husband. Husbands often find out that he goes in willing to work on things, but the behavior of the wife never changes. He knows its fruitless and will withdraw. Counseling in the majority of cases is counterproductive.

Never beg and never plead provides a good mindset and semi-template for which a wife to apologize to her husband:

> "I've made many mistakes in this marriage and apologize. I understand that I hurt you, and that you may not forgive me. I know there is nothing I can do to make it up. But if you are willing I want to reconcile.
>
> I realize that my words mean nothing to you at this point, and that only thing that matters is that I behavior in a respectful manner to you. I know you're skeptical, but I want you to call me on it on anything that you perceive as disrespect so I can repent to God and apologize to you.
>
> If I start to blow up at you, remind me of this conversation and tell me to be quiet and I will."

The last sentence you actually have to follow through on. It is the high horse of pride to think that just because you mean something one way it may not come off the other way to another person. You are not seeking your own approval. You're seeking pray and do good to those who persecute you. Even if it's in your own home.

Husbands will inevitably skeptical, especially if he has been brow beatend nagginged for many years if not decades. Wives may have the upwards of years for God to undo all of the damage, so it is a long journey. The road is not always easy, but it when we overcome trials that we grow in our faith. It is when we struggle and overcome that we grow in our relationships with God and with others.

This is why charity is so important. No one can have charity except through God moving His transforming power in our lives through the Holy Spirit. Thus, a wife must die to herself and allow God to move through her.

A wife cannot change her husband. Ever. Only God can do that. It's fruitless to attempt to do this.

A wife must cry out to God as her ezer, to help her be an ezer to her husband.

The Scriptures really have all of the answers to marriage. But 99.99% of the time Christian wives choose not to listen to God's Word and wonder why they are unhappy.

The Masculinity of Jesus Part 3 (baptism and temptation)

March 3, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The Baptism of Jesus is spoken about in all 4 gospels, but it is only described specifically in 3 of them. John is only a general commentary. Only Matthew provides dialogue of what Jesus's actions and commentary.

For ease of reading I'm going to underline the actual spoken aspects.

Part 1 — the baptism of Jesus

> Matthew 3:13 Then Jesus *arrived from Galilee at the Jordan coming to John, to be baptized by him. 14 But John tried to prevent Him, saying, "I have need to be baptized by You, and do You come to me?" 15 But Jesus answering said to him, "Permit it at this time; for in this way it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness." Then he *permitted Him. 16 After being baptized, Jesus came up immediately from the water; and behold, the heavens were opened, and [i]he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove and [j]lighting on Him, 17 and behold, a voice out of the heavens said, "This is [k]My beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased."
>
> Mark 1:9 In those days Jesus came from Nazareth in Galilee and was baptized by John in the Jordan. 10 Immediately coming up out of the water, He saw the heavens [g]opening, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon Him; 11 and a voice came out of the heavens: "You are My beloved Son, in You I am well-pleased."
>
> Luke 2:21 Now when all the people were baptized, Jesus was also baptized, and while He was praying, heaven was opened, 22 and the Holy Spirit descended upon Him in bodily form like a dove, and a voice came out of heaven, "You are My beloved Son, in You I am well-pleased."
>
> John 1:29 The next day he *saw Jesus coming to him and *said, "Behold, the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world! 30 This is He on behalf of whom I said, 'After me comes a Man who [t]has a higher rank than I, for He existed before me.' 31 I did not recognize [u]Him, but so that He might be manifested to Israel, I came baptizing [v]in water." 32 John testified saying, "I have seen the Spirit descending as a dove out of heaven, and He remained upon Him. 33 I did not recognize [w]Him, but He who sent me to baptize [x]in water said to me, 'He upon whom you see the Spirit descending and remaining upon Him, this is the One who baptizes [y]in the Holy Spirit.' 34 I myself have seen, and have testified that this is the Son of God."

Mark and Luke only briefly cover the baptism by stating that Jesus was baptized and then the heavens opened and the Father talked about His Son Jesus.

John's testimony talks about what happened before Jesus' baptism when he saw him coming, and his testimony afterward of what had happened about John the Baptist's witness.

Thus, I'm mostly going to examine Matthew here.

> Matthew 3:13 Then Jesus *arrived from Galilee at the Jordan coming to John, to be baptized by him. 14 But John tried to prevent (diakōluō) Him, saying, "I have need to be baptized by You, and do You come to me?" 15 But Jesus answering said to him, "Permit (aphiēmi) it at this time; for in this way it is fitting (prepō) for us to fulfill all righteousness (dikaiosunē)." Then he permitted (aphiēmi) Him. 16 After being baptized, Jesus came up immediately from the water; and behold, the heavens were opened, and [i]he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove and [j]lighting on Him, 17 and behold, a voice out of the heavens said, "This is [k]My beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased."

The first thing about this passage is that John attempts to prevent Jesus from being baptized and rather would be baptized by Jesus. The word used here is diakōluō:

> G1254 — διακωλύω — diakōluō — dee-ak-o-loo'-o
>
> From G1223 and G2967; to hinder altogether, that is, utterly prohibit: – forbid

This is a much stronger word than the NASB translation. Basically, John wanted absolutely no part of baptizing Jesus. This will tie into what the analysis of the baptism later.

Secondly, Jesus replies back to John telling him to "permit it" or the KJV "suffer [it to be so]." The word used here is aphiēmi:

> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
>
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.

This is the primary word in the gospels which is used for forgiveness [of sins]. For example, in the Lord's prayer: Matthew 6:12 'And forgive (aphiēmi) us our debts, as we also have forgiven (aphiēmi) our debtors. Likewise, it is the same word used when the disciples were called and left (aphiēmi) their nets to follow Jesus.

Thus, as Jesus said it is properly fitting for this to occur because it parallels his whole ministry which is His sacrifice for us for the forgiveness of sins.

The word for fitting in this case is prepō.

> G4241 — πρέπω — prepō — prep'-o
>
> Apparently a primary verb; to tower up (be conspicuous), that is, (by implication) to be suitable or proper (third person singular present indicative, often used impersonally, it is fit or right): – become, comely.

This word is only used 7 times in the NT, and it is used in terms of what is fitting for the saints to do in Christ in avoidance of fornication and other sins (Eph 5), what it is fitting for women to do (1 Cor 11, 1 Tim 2, Titus 2), and in Jesus' fitting sacrifice for us (Heb 2, Heb 6).

The most interesting aspect of this word is the conspicuous nature of it. Baptism is indeed a public declaration of being a follower of Jesus. Likewise, baptism and communion are one of the few things that Jesus commanded us to do as believers, and they are two examples of public declarations of our faith in Him. Christianity has always been about faith in action, and this is no exception.

Finally, the word used for righteousness is dikaiosunē.

> G1343 — δικαιοσύνη — dikaiosunē — dik-ah-yos-oo'-nay
>
> From G1342; equity (of character or act); specifically (Christian) justification: – righteousness.

This word is only used for righteouness in the NT, and one of the most prominent examples is when Jesus states "seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness (dikaiosunē) and all these things shall be added unto you."

This synergizes with the word fitting above, as baptism is symbolic of dying to self and becoming a new creation in Christ.

This is the interaction between Jesus and John:

> But John tried to prevent (diakōluō) Him, saying, "I have need to be baptized by You, and do You come to me?"
>
> 15 But Jesus answering said to him, "Permit (aphiēmi) it at this time; for in this way it is fitting (prepō) for us to fulfill all righteousness (dikaiosunē)."

The dialogue shows that Jesus knows what must occur in His mission, and therefore does not allow John to stop him from it. There is some element of truth in John's words: John does need baptism from Jesus, but it is only a half truth. Jesus needed to be baptized to foreshadow and fulfill what He had come to earth to perform.

John is operating under an example of false humility in this case. His concern is not for what Jesus desires — the One who he claimed was greater than He and whose sandals he was not worthy to untie. But rather, he is concerned for himself and his unworthiness to baptize Jesus.

It's very easy for humans to be persuaded or convinced into half truths. Half truths seems like the full truth, but they have underlying elements of pride or other sins hidden within them which corrupt them fully.

One example of this is compliments to women. Of course, it is a good thing to compliment a woman. But the context in which it is performed matters significantly. In the post Her emotions, it is very easy for husbands to fall into the trap of complimenting a wife when she asks for it. Husbands fall into this trap because they understand that complimenting their wife is good, but they fail to realized that a woman fishing for a compliment is doing it out of her own pride or self esteem. Building up that which is selfish is not godly and indeed will not direct her towards the truth which is God.

Jesus' example to John here is one of rooting out false humility and to direct John on the path to do the right thing. The same thing should be done with both men and women.

Godly men should not validate selfishness, pride, or false humility.

Part 2 — the temptation of Jesus

The temptation of Jesus is only present in Matthew, Mark, and Luke.

> Matthew 4:1 Then Jesus was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil. 2 And after He had fasted forty days and forty nights, He [a]then became hungry. 3 And the tempter came and said to Him, "If You are the Son of God, command that these stones become bread." 4 But He answered and said, "It is written, 'Man shall not live on bread alone, but on every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God.'" 5 Then the devil *took Him into the holy city and had Him stand on the pinnacle of the temple, 6 and *said to Him, "If You are the Son of God, throw Yourself down; for it is written, 'He will command His angels concerning You'; and 'On their hands they will bear You up, So that You will not strike Your foot against a stone.'" 7 Jesus said to him, "[b]On the other hand, it is written, 'You shall not put the Lord your God to the test.'" 8 Again, the devil *took Him to a very high mountain and *showed Him all the kingdoms of the world and their glory; 9 and he said to Him, "All these things I will give You, if You fall down and [c]worship me." 10 Then Jesus *said to him, "Go, Satan! For it is written, 'You shall worship the Lord your God, and [d]serve Him only.'" 11 Then the devil *left Him; and behold, angels came and began to minister to Him.
>
> Mark 1:12 Immediately the Spirit *impelled Him to go out into the wilderness. 13 And He was in the wilderness forty days being tempted by Satan; and He was with the wild beasts, and the angels were ministering to Him.
>
> Luke 4:Jesus, full of the Holy Spirit, returned from the Jordan and was led around [a]by the Spirit in the wilderness 2 for forty days, being tempted by the devil. And He ate nothing during those days, and when they had ended, He became hungry. 3 And the devil said to Him, "If You are the Son of God, tell this stone to become bread." 4 And Jesus answered him, "It is written, 'Man shall not live on bread alone.'" 5 And he led Him up and showed Him all the kingdoms of [b]the world in a moment of time. 6 And the devil said to Him, "I will give You all this domain and [c]its glory; for it has been handed over to me, and I give it to whomever I wish. 7 Therefore if You [d]worship before me, it shall all be Yours." 8 Jesus answered him, "It is written, 'You shall worship the Lord your God and serve Him only.'" 9 And he led Him to Jerusalem and had Him stand on the pinnacle of the temple, and said to Him, "If You are the Son of God, throw Yourself down from here; 10 for it is written, 'He will command His angels concerning You to guard You,' 11 and, 'On their hands they will bear You up, So that You will not strike Your foot against a stone.'" 12 And Jesus answered and said to him, "It is said, 'You shall not put the Lord your God to the test.'" 13 When the devil had > finished every temptation, he left Him until an opportune time.

The passage in Mark is only a brief commentary. The Matthew and Luke passages are identical, except for the reversal of the 2nd and 3rd temptations.

This article is really long already and the Greek is not particularly illuminating for these passages as it is straight forward.

The most important thing to take note is the solid frame which Jesus presents to Satan. In a sense, frame as used in terms of game is about maintaining integrity to yourself. However, as Christians we are not called to maintain integrity towards ourselves but rather instead towards our Creator.

Satan: "If You are the Son of God, command that these stones become bread."
Jesus: "It is written, 'Man shall not live on bread alone, but on every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God.'"

Satan: "If You are the Son of God, throw Yourself down; for it is written, 'He will command His angels concerning You'; and 'On their hands they will bear You up, So that You will not strike Your foot against a stone.'"
Jesus: "[b]On the other hand, it is written, 'You shall not put the Lord your God to the test.'"

Satan: "All these things I will give You, if You fall down and [c]worship me."
Jesus: "Go, Satan! For it is written, 'You shall worship the Lord your God, and [d]serve Him only.'"

In this passage, Jesus shows an impregnable frame against the first and greatest temptor, Satan. Jesus is not wishy washy, but He knows who He is in God and will not compromise on what He knows is right. This is the same mentality that we as Christians should have towards one another.

God's message to the Church in Laodicea in Revelation 3 can be directed straight at Christian nice guys:

> Revelation 3: 15 'I know your deeds, that you are neither cold nor hot; I wish that you were cold or hot. 16 So because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will [l]spit you out of My mouth. 17 Because you say, "I am rich, and have become wealthy, and have need of nothing," and you do not know that you are wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked,

The common saying "If you don't know what you stand for then you don't stand for anything" is indeed true in regard to our interactions with both men and women. And to Christian women specifically being a wishy washy man, one who is an amorphous nice guy, is a surefire way to be unattractive.

This aspect of masculinity is the strong, courageous, decisive, opinionated, and disciplined personality that Christian men need to foster within themselves to be men of God.

It is important to be true to God, rather than be true to yourself.

Part 3 — Conclusions

The main themes of masculinity within the baptism of Jesus, and the temptation of Jesus are the following:

- Jesus is not afraid of reframing the attitude of John (John's false humility) in order to foreshadow and fulfill the path that was set before Him.
- Jesus is not afraid to stand up the temptor, Satan, and reframe the entire interaction from "how can Jesus give into his own desires" into "how can Jesus stay true to what God desires."

These are important points because in each case the strength and courage of personality shine through in Jesus' interactions with John and Satan. One meant for good, and one meant for evil; however, similar in their nature of interaction.

Jesus time and time again demonstrates the impregnability of his frame in his interactions with women, men, and non-human beings. He knows His mission and who He is serving, and is thus decisive, strong, courageous, opinionated, and disciplined in His personality to do what He was called to perform here on this earth. This shines forth in all of his interactions.

May the grace of God be on our lives as we aspire to become masculine men like Jesus.

God’s stance on sex in marriage is universal

March 4, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting things about the Greek is the the universal nature to how and why the prescriptions of the Scripture apply to life.

> 1 Corinthians 7:2 But because of immoralities (porneia), each man is to have his own wife, and each woman is to have her own husband. 3 The husband must [a]fulfill (apodidōmi) his duty (eunoia) to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority (exousiazō) over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority (exousiazō) over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving (apostereō) one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control. 6 But this I say by way of concession (suggnōmē), not of command (epitagē). 7 [c]Yet I wish that all men were even as I myself am. However, each man has his own gift (charisma) from God, one in this manner, and another in that. 8 But I say to the unmarried and to widows that it is good for them if they remain even as I. 9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion (puroō).

Before I get into any analysis of this passage, it is important to understand the cultural context of Paul’s writing. Paul was a self described Pharisee of Pharisees and one who upheld the law to the full meaning. So it’s interesting to see his perspective in Christ knowing the background behind how sex was treated in Jewish culture.

Here’s what JewFAQ has to say on the cultural aspects around how sex was treated in marriage:

> Sex should only be experienced in a time of joy. Sex for selfish personal satisfaction, without regard for the partner’s pleasure, is wrong and evil. A man may never force his wife to have sex. A couple may not have sexual relations while drunk or quarreling. Sex may never be used as a weapon against a spouse, either by depriving the spouse of sex or by compelling it. It is a serious offense to use sex (or lack thereof) to punish or manipulate a spouse.
>
> Sex is the woman’s right, not the man’s. A man has a duty to give his wife sex regularly and to ensure that sex is pleasurable for her. He is also obligated to watch for signs that his wife wants sex, and to offer it to her without her asking for it. The woman’s right to sexual intercourse is referred to as onah, and it is one of a wife’s three basic rights (the others are food and clothing), which a husband may not reduce. The Talmud specifies both the quantity and quality of sex that a man must give his wife. It specifies the frequency of sexual obligation based on the husband’s occupation, although this obligation can be modified in the > ketubah (marriage contract). A man may not take a vow to abstain from sex for an extended period of time, and may not take a journey for an extended period of time, because that would deprive his wife of sexual relations. In addition, a husband's consistent refusal to engage in sexual relations is grounds for compelling a man to divorce his wife, even if the couple has already fulfilled the halakhic obligation to procreate.

>
> Although sex is the woman's right, she does not have absolute discretion to withhold it from her husband. A woman may not withhold sex from her husband as a form of punishment, and if she does, the husband may divorce her without paying the substantial divorce settlement provided for in the ketubah.

The reason why culturally sex is a woman's right is based in Scripture. Childbearing is one of the important facets of marriage that God made in Creation, and those that were barren were often considered cursed by God.

You can see how in our cultural the perspect shift away from childbearing as being valuable to God, and our emphasis on birth control is one of the major factors that have drawn marriage away from how God intended it to be.

Regardless, the Jewish stance on sex in marriage through not denying each other is important because it already encapsulates much of what Paul is describing in the Scriptures.

> 1 Corinthians 7:2 But because of immoralities (porneia), each man is to have his own wife, and each woman is to have her own husband.
>
> G4202 — πορνεία — porneia — por-ni'-ah
> From G4203; harlotry (including adultery and incest); figuratively idolatry: – fornication.

Many of you probably recognize porneia from some of the words that it used for in English such as pornography. Most of the time this word is referred to in Scripture is for fornication, although it is an all inclusive word to generally mean any illicit sexual contact outside of marriage.

> 3 The husband must [a]fulfill (apodidōmi) his duty (eunoia) to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband.
>
> G591 — ἀποδίδωμι — apodidōmi — ap-od-eed'-o-mee
> From G575 and G1325; to give away, that is, up, over, back, etc. (in various applications): – deliver (again), give (again), (re-) pay (-ment be made), perform, recompense, render, requite, restore, reward, sell, yield,
>
> G2133 — εὐνοια — eunoia — yoo'-noy-ah
> From the same as G2132; kindness; euphemistically conjugal duty: – benevolence, good will.

Jesus uses apodidomi — fulfill, reward, pay, give, render — many times in his parables in terms of men giving an account in the day of judgment, the parable of the unmerciful servant to pay all, the parable of the vineyard labourers to give them hire, and rendering to Caesar what is Caesar's and to God what is God's.

Likewise, eunoia illustrates the intention of how and why it is supposed to be done. It's kind, benevolent, and good will to have sex with your spouse. It's from G2132 which is:

> G2132 — εὐνόεω — eunoeō — yoo-no-eh'-o
> From a compound of G2095 and G3563; to be well minded, that is, reconcile: – agree.

It's interesting that it means to be well mind, or reconciliation/agreement being that marriage was created by God in Genesis, and that the husband and wife are to be one flesh. That is the holiness to which God created sex in marriage is to affirm the one flesh relationship that they have.

We know that this is important because of the biochemical changes in the brain that occur when men and women have sex with each other. They bond together, and they literally become as one spiritually as well.

> 4 The wife does not have authority (exousiazō) over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority (exousiazō) over his own body, but the wife does.
>
> G1850 — ἐξουσιάζω — exousiazō — ex-oo-see-ad'-zo
> From G1849; to control: – exercise authority upon, bring under the (have) power of.

Exousiazo is from the root of exousia which literally means authority or power that one has over something. Jesus, after His resurrection, was given all authority (exousia) in heaven and earth.

Husbands and wives have no power over each other when it comes to sex. To weild sex as manipulation in marriage is indeed a sin, and the Jewish stance on sex in marriage agrees with this as you read earlier. To withhold sex is going against the nature of marriage that God created which is for the husband and wife to be one flesh.

> 5 Stop depriving (apostereō) one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.
>
> G650 — ἀποστερέω — apostereō — ap-os-ter-eh'-o
> From G575 and στερέω stereō (to deprive); to despoil: – defraud, destitute, kept back by fraud.

This reinforces the conclusions made above by stating that withholding sex is indeed defrauding a spouse of their marriage rights. Defrauding in the other Scriptures is referred to with lawsuits among believers, and being dishonest with wages or with the truth.

Marriage is a covenantal contract to which sex is to be offered and given freely as a reaffirmation of God's creation. To emphasize the fulfillment of the relationship between Christ and the Church.

> 6 But this I say by way of concession (suggnōmē), not of command (epitagē). 7 [c]Yet I wish that all men were even as I myself am. However, each man has his own gift (charisma) from God, one in this manner, and another in that. 8 But I say to the unmarried and to widows that it is good for them if they remain even as I. 9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion (puroō).
>
> G4774 — συγγνώμη — suggnōmē — soong-gno'-may
> From a compound of G4862 and G1097; fellow knowledge, that is, concession: – permission.
>
> G2003 — ἐπιταγή — epitagē — ep-ee-tag-ay'
> From G2004; an injunction or decree; by implication authoritativeness: – authority, commandment.
>
> G5486 — χάρισμα — charisma — char'-is-mah
> From G5483; a (divine) gratuity, that is, deliverance (from danger or passion); (specifically) a (spiritual) endowment, that is, (subjectively) religious qualification, or (objectively) miraculous faculty: – (free) gift.
>
> G4448 — πυρόω — puroō — poo-ro'-o
> From G4442; to kindle, that is, (passively) to be ignited, glow (literally), be refined (by implication), or (figuratively) to be inflamed (with anger, grief, lust): – burn, fiery, be on fire, try.

I find the last part particularly interesting. If you look up the two root words for suggnome you have:

> G4862 — σύν — sun — soon
> A primary preposition denoting union; with or together (but much closer than G3326 or G3844), that is, by association, companionship, process, resemblance, possession, instrumentality, addition, etc.: – beside, with. In compounds it has similar applications, including completeness.
>
> G1097 — γινώσκω — ginōskō — ghin-oce'-ko
> A prolonged form of a primary verb; to "know" (absolutely), in a great variety of applications and with many implications (as shown at left, with others not thus clearly expressed): – allow, be aware (of), feel, (have) known (-ledge), perceive, be resolved, can speak, be sure, understand.

The "concession" for men and women to be married if they burn is seen right there in the words themselves. It is knowledge of union and companionship and completeness that God may work in some men and women's lives if they are to be married. Yet, still unmarried is indeed good if God has delivered you from those particular passions.

I discussed charisma in Joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma on how it relates to our mission for God, and it seems that each Christian's mission is different. Some will have helpmeets, and some will not. Some women will be single and some will not. I hestitate to say that there is some "gift of singleness" since that is overplayed, but you must recognize that not everyone is to be married. In fact, most will eventually marry.

> Genesis 2:24 Therefore a man shall leave his father and his mother and hold fast to his wife, and they shall become one flesh.

Overall, this passage is most interesting because of the nature of the role of sex in marriage. Weaponizing sex by using it for manipulation or extortion is not how God creating it. Sex is an intimate bonding experience that is holy in the context of marriage. Thus, it is an affirmation of the one flesh relationship.

Nowadays, sex has mostly been weaponized by wives in marriage in attempting, often successfully, to get what they want. This imparts negative impacts on the manipulator (wife) as well as the manipulated (husband). Likewise, a husband withholding which may have happened more in ancient times imparted negative impacts on both the husband as well as the wife.

You can see how stepping outside of the will of God for marriage on both ends of the spectrum is detrimental to both parties involved. Sin is like that. No one wins when one sins.

This is why it is important to choose wisely and vet thoroughly who you marry, as well as have both spouses in marriage on the same page — wanting to serve God.

God's Truth has always been about unity in body, mind, and Spirit, and the marriage bed is one of the the primary examples of that.

Husbands win their wives with words

March 5, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A couple days ago, I wrote about how wives will never win their husbands with words.

Understanding the Greek allows us to see insight into why wives cannot win their husbands with words. Any words come off as preaching or nagging, even when meant as encouragement or in good will. Thus, Paul through the inspiration of God in Scripture tells women that they should win their husbands through 8 different aspects folded into her behavior:

1. Without a Word (logos)
2. Submissive (hupotasso)
3. Chaste (hagnos)
4. Fear/reverence (phobos/phobeo)
5. Adornment (Kosmos)
6. Gentle (praus)
7. Quiet (hēsuchios)
8. Right / Good (Agathopoieō)

Now, let's take a lesson from Ephesians 5 on how husbands are to win their wives.

> Ephesians 5 (NASB)
>
> 25 Husbands, love (agapaō) your wives, just as Christ also loved (agapaō) the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify (hagiazō) her, having cleansed (katharizō) her by the washing (loutron) of water with the word (rhēma), 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love (agapaō) their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves (agapaō) his own wife loves (agapaō) himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes (ektrephō) and cherishes (thalpō) it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined (proskollaō) to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love (agapaō) his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

There's a whole measure of concepts to unpack in these 9 verses.

Part 1 — Love (agapaō)

> 25 Husbands, love (agapaō) your wives, just as Christ also loved (agapaō) the church and gave Himself up for her,
> […]

> 28 So husbands ought also to love (agapaō) their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves (agapaō) his own wife loves (agapaō) himself;
> […]
> 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love (agapaō) his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.
>
> G25 — ἀγαπάω — agapaō — ag-ap-ah'-o
> Perhaps from ἄγαν agan (much; or compare [H5689]); to love (in a social or moral sense): – (be-) love (-ed). Compare G5368.

I'm sure most Christians have heard about agape love out the wazoo before. However, what most don't realize is that there's 3 distinct words for love in the Scriptures.

1. G25 — Agapao — Generally used a verb to describe action.
2. G26 — Agape — Generally used as a noun to describe the Love of God or a state of Love.
3. G27 — Agapetos — beloved (as in Jesus is God's beloved son, or Christians are the beloved of God)

As you can see in the above verse, the verb form of love is used — agapao. Thus, husbands are to love their wives as Christ loved the Church through some type of action.

But what type of action is it? What does this actually mean? Let's find out in the next parts of the passage.

Part 2 — Sanctify (hagiazō) through Cleansing (katharizō) by Washing (loutron)

> 25 Husbands, love (agapaō) your wives, just as Christ also loved (agapaō) the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify (hagiazō) her, having cleansed (katharizō) her by the washing (loutron) of water with the word (rhēma), 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.
>
> G37 — ἁγιάζω — hagiazō — hag-ee-ad'-zo
> From G40; to make holy, that is, (ceremonially) purify or consecrate; (mentally) to venerate: – hallow, be holy, sanctify.
>
> G2511 — καθαρίζω — katharizō — kath-ar-id'-zo
> From G2513; to cleanse (literally or figuratively): – (make) clean (-se), purge, purify.
>
> G3067 — λουτρόν — loutron — loo-tron'
> From G3068; a bath, that is, (figuratively) baptism: – washing.

The analogy that Paul gives here is that husbands should love their wives as Christ does the Church to make her holy. This is part of the responsibility of headship — for the husband to submit to God so that God can move through him to sanctify his wife to be more Christ-like. This cleansing is to be performed through washing. The washing is figuratively a baptism.

I discussed Jesus' baptism in my previous post on The Masculinity of Jesus Part 3 (baptism and temptation).

The actions of the husband are to be a baptism just as the baptism represents the death to self and washing away of sins, and reemerging in the newness of life in Christ. This is made clear in Romans 6:

> What shall we say then? Are we to continue in sin so that grace may increase? 2 May it never be! How shall we who died to sin still live in it? 3 Or do you not know that all of us who have been baptized into Christ Jesus have been baptized into His death? 4 Therefore we have been buried with Him through baptism into death, so that as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we too might walk in newness of life. 5 For if we have become [a]united with Him in the likeness of His death, certainly we shall also be [b]in the likeness of His resurrection, 6 knowing this, that our old [c]self was crucified with Him, in order that our body of sin might be [d]done away with, so that we would no longer be slaves to sin; 7 for he who has died is [e]freed from sin.

So husbands are to love their wives to make this happen.

But what is the nature of this love?

Part 3 — Word (rhēma)

> 25 Husbands, love (agapaō) your wives, just as Christ also loved (agapaō) the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify (hagiazō) her, having cleansed (katharizō) her by the washing (loutron) of water with the word (rhēma), 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.
>
> G4487 — ῥῆμα — rhēma — hray'-mah
> From G4483; an utterance (individually, collectively or specifically); by implication a matter or topic (especially of narration, command or dispute); with a negative naught whatever: – + evil, + nothing, saying, word.

I discussed rhema in 4 past articles including Leave her better than how you found her, and To game or not to game. The relevant passage of what I wrote in to game or not to game is quoted below:

> When I was looking at Scriptures there were two things that stood out. The Divine Expression or Jesus and His words which is Logos — John 1:1 in the beginning was the Word (Logos). You can think of Jesus and His fulfillment of the law with his teaching and actions as Logos. The all encompassing Scriptures themselves are referred to by either gramma (G1121 or graphe (G1124) (thanks to mdavid for the clarification). On the other hand, the spoken revelation of the Word is rhema.

> Rhema is powerful — as God (Logos) spoke the world into being (Rhema), and man shall not live by bread alone but from every Word (rhema) that comes from the mouth of God. This is why it's important to pray out loud because the spoken Rhema word is powerful. Likewise, to others it gives life and death. The power of the tongue is enormous as it says in James, yet it is easily corrupted. Going back to the passage from Matthew 12 that I referenced earlier: "But I say unto you, That every idle word (Rhema) that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."
>
> The goal of the leadership of the man in a Christian marriage is to spur his wife to have a deeper relationship with God. And it is through his Words (rhema) that he must speak life that washes and cleanses her as just as Christ does his Church.

As you can see through the analogy, husbands are to love their wives as Christ loved the church through sanctification and cleansing by washing of the water of the Rhema word. Thus, husbands win their wives through their speech.

Empirically, this agrees with the nature of fitness testing as I discussed in Christian masculinity, mindset, and fitness testing. When a woman fitness tests, she does through speech and she expects an answer. Thus, husbands must counter by understanding the truth. For example, if a wife is seeking validation and compliments, then a husband is not to validate her.

Fitness testing, in particular, comes in two different forms as I explained in Framework for Offense and Defense. A wife or woman will put a husband or man on the defensive with fitness tests.

Defensive (e.g. Fitness tests)

- (self) She does not respect you — This is where a woman abuses Christian nice guys for their time or accuses you of something. For example, accusations may involve "You look funny/ridiculous", "Can you do X, Y, Z for me?", "You're not the jealous type are you?" etc[1]. Basically, if her behavior is out of line then call her on it.
- (her) She wants you to respect her — This is where a woman demands you respect her or wants you to validate her. For instance, "Do I look good in this dress?" Did I do a good job or what?" "Did you miss me?", "You never listen to me", "You never let me do X while other girlfriends can do it", etc.[1]

"Passing" these fitness tests is Scriptural by the following passages:

- Defensive: She does not respect you (or others) — This nebulous as Christian women are not called to respect Christian men that aren't their husbands. However, often these types of comments denote impropriety on the side of the man ("you're not jealous are you?") or are [harshly] judgmental without concern for correction ("why did you do that?", "why would you wear something like that?"). This violates the Scripture's clear teachings about edification and peace Rom 8:29, Rom 15,14, 1

Thes 5:11,14, Heb 3:13, 10:24-25, 1 Pet 4:10. See general body responsibilities here for more Scriptures on this. Likewise, Christian men can be abused for their time as I have discussed before because there are situations where men should not be involved with women who are not their wives because it is the woman's husband's or woman's significant other's responsibility. Additionally, Christian women are not to be teaching men (1 Tim 2:12), though the older women are called to teach the younger (Titus 2:3-5). Men are to teach men (Prov 27:17, Titus 2:6-8).

- Defensive: She wants you to respect her — The Scriptures state to love your wives (Eph 25-31), be considerate (1 Peter 3:7), do not be harsh (Col 3:19), etc. but not respect wives. Indeed, as we have seen repeatedly respecting wives is not what they need to be loved.

Husbands love their wives as Christ loved the Church by quelling her rebellion with spoken word. This is one of the more difficult thing for Christian husbands to learn.

I will discuss this a bit more in the conclusion after we analyze the rest of this passage.

Part 4 — Nourishes (ektrephō) and Cherishes (thalpō)

> 28 So husbands ought also to love (agapaō) their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves (agapaō) his own wife loves (agapaō) himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes (ektrephō) and cherishes (thalpō) it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body.
>
> G1625 — ἐκτρέφω — ektrephō — ek-tref'-o
> From G1537 and G5142; to rear up to maturity, that is, (generally) to cherish or train: – bring up, nourish.
>
> G2282 — θάλπω — thalpō — thal'-po
> Probably akin to θάλλω thallō (to warm); to brood, that is, (figuratively) to foster: – cherish.

Nourish (ektrepho) is only used in the Scripture in one other passage.

Ephesians 6:4 Fathers, do not provoke your children to anger, but bring them up (ektrephō) in the discipline and instruction of the Lord.

Likewise, cherish (thalpo) is only used one other time in the Scriptures.

1 Thessalonians 2:4 but just as we have been approved by God to be entrusted with the gospel, so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God who [d]examines our hearts. 5 For we never came [e]with flattering speech, as you know, nor with a pretext for greed—God is witness— 6 nor did we seek glory from men, either from you or from others, even though as apostles of Christ [f]we might have [g]asserted our authority. 7 But we [h]proved to be [i]gentle [j]among you, as a nursing mother [k]tenderly cares (thalpō) for her own children. 8 Having so fond an affection for you, we were well-pleased to impart to you not only the gospel of God but also our own [l]lives, because you had become [m]very dear to us.

In these verses, two interesting parallels are made.

In “game” there is an analogy that men are to set boundaries for woman like a child. Perhaps it is not ironic that a man is to nourish himself (his own body) as he would a child, and that he is to nourish his wife (being that they are one flesh) as if she were a child, and that he is to nourish his children.

This fits the characterization of Christians in the New Testament as children of God. And it is the duty of the headship position in marriage — which falls on the husband — to provide this nourishment to himself, his wife, and his children as if they were all children of God. This duty is immense as Jesus states that it is better for a man to have a millstone hung around his neck and be thrown into the sea than to cause a child to stumble.

In the same way, the tender care of the husband’s own body, as to his wife (one flesh), is again fit to an analogy of a nurse tenderly feeding her children.

This is where I see the fruits of the Spirit externally exemplified to others. In Masculinity, mastery, the internal and the external, I discussed the internal and external characteristics of the fruits of the Spirit:

- Internal (6) — Joy, Peace, Patience/Longsuffering, Faithfulness, Chastity, Self Control
- External (6)– Charity/Love, Kindness, Goodness, Generosity, Gentleness, Modesty

Specifically, the external characteristics are in two different groups:

- Actions — Charity/Love to others, Generosity to others, and Modesty for others.
- Performance of actions — Kindness, Goodness, and Gentleness/humility

To nourish and cherish one must do it through charity, generosity, and modesty and in those actions they should be performed with kindness, goodness, and humility.

Part 5 — Joined (proskollaō)

> 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined (proskollaō) to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love (agapaō) his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.
>
> G4347 — προσκολλάω — proskollaō — pros-kol-lay’-o
> From G4314 and G2853; to glue to, that is, (figuratively) to adhere: – cleave, join (self).

The Hebrew in Genesis 2 is remarkably consistent with the Greek used here. The understanding of one flesh is that the two are joined or cleaved together.

However, the Hebrew word for joined or cleave actually explains why men are the pursuers whereas women are the pursued in the relationship.

> H1692 — dâbaq — daw-bak’

> A primitive root; properly to impinge, that is, cling or adhere; figuratively to catch by pursuit: – abide, fast, cleave (fast together), follow close (hard, after), be joined (together), keep (fast), overtake, pursue hard, stick, take.

The important point to note in the passage is the joining of the two to one flesh just as Christ is to the Church. This is performed through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and yet also Jesus is there when two are more are gathered in His name.

In Ecclesiates, Solomon unwittingly speaks an analogy to marriage in the chapter on the evils of oppression.

> Ecclesiastes 4:9 Two are better than one because they have a good return for their labor. 10 For if [c]either of them falls, the one will lift up his companion. But woe to the one who falls when there is not [d]another to lift him up. 11 Furthermore, if two lie down together they [e]keep warm, but how can one be warm alone? 12 And if [f]one can overpower him who is alone, two can resist him. A cord of three strands is not quickly torn apart.

You can see how this refers directly to marriage. Indeed, a cord of three strands made by the husband, the wife, and Jesus is not easily torn apart.

Conclusion

The major thing that stood out to me in this passage is the Truth of the Scriptures.

Most people know that the preferred communication style of women is through words, while the preferred communcation style of men is through actions.

Ultimately, the Scriptures speak to husbands in Ephesians 5 to love their wives through the preferred communication style of women — words.

On the other hand, the passage in 1 Peter 3 speak to wives to communicate respect to men through the preferred communication style of men — actions.

Indeed, husbands doing more things for their wives to curry their favor absolutely does not work. This is shown time and time again where a couple goes to counseling and it results in a man helping out more around the house, with the chores, with the kids, and with whatever else. But it does not fix the relationship and sends it onto the course of divorce.

This is why Scripture should never be called outdated, and woe to those Christians that speak those lies (Isaiah 5:20). The Scriptures speak Truths consistent from the creation of the world to this day and into the future until the heavens and earth pass away.

> Matthew 5:17 “Do not think that I came to abolish the Law or the Prophets; I did not come to abolish but to fulfill. 18 For truly I say to you, until heaven and earth pass away, not [h]the smallest letter or stroke shall pass from the Law until all is accomplished. 19 Whoever then annuls one of the least of these commandments, and teaches [i]others to do the same, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but whoever [j]keeps and teaches them, he shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.

> Matthew 24:32 “Now learn the parable from the fig tree: when its branch has already become tender and puts forth its leaves, you know that summer is near; 33 so, you too, when you see all these things, [u]recognize that [v]He is near, right at the [w]door. 34 Truly I say to you, this [x]generation will not pass away until all these things take place. 35 Heaven and earth will pass away, but My words will not pass away.

Now, this is not to say that men and women are to only speak words and do actions respectively, but it is important part of marriage to communicate to each other in the preferred style of the other spouse.

For men, the conclusion is that they should start to address a wife’s rebellion (which she will show using fitness tests) through speaking the Truth in Love.

The specifics of how a man is address these issues with his words is outlined fairly well in this 4 part series:

1. The Socialization of men and women
2. The selfish and unselfish socialization of men
3. Masculinity is the truth
4. Masculinity is the truth Part 2

The way to speak the truth in love to women is to communicate indirect truth to her and to never to validate her. You can see how Jesus does this to the Syrophoenician woman in Mark 7. Likewise, how Jesus addresses his mother when He stayed behind at thet temple. In the next few posts, I will explore how Jesus addresses His mother again with His interaction with her in the marriage at Cana.

The hard part for Christian husbands to see is the subtle difference between leadership and submission.

If a wife is telling a husband what to do that means she is control the interaction. The correct way to fix this is to set boundaries for her to respect you. Likewise, if a woman is fishing for a compliment, then she is in control of the interaction. This is why you never validate her. If you give in to her and do what she wants, then you are submitting to her whims and not being the head in the relationship. It is proper and godly for a husband to call out this rebellion of the wife with his words — call her out for being rude, or for fishing for compliments, or other unchaste or immoral behavior.

Figuratively, this cleansing (or baptism) through the Spirit working in the husband to call a wife out on behavior is performed in order to expose rebellion or sin and call her to repentance. This is what is meant by masculinity is the truth. The truth must be spoken into a particular situation in order be a revelation of God in her life. When Holy Spirit can speak through the husband, the husband is able to point her to the Way, the Truth, and the Life who is Jesus.

We can see an instance of this rebellion and Adam’s failure to call Eve out from it in Genesis 3 (NASB):

> 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.
> […]
> 10 [Adam] said, “I heard the sound of You in the garden, and I was afraid because I was naked; so I hid myself.” 11 And He said, “Who told you that you were naked? Have you eaten from the tree of which I commanded you not to eat?” 12 The man said, “The woman whom You gave to be with me, she gave me from the tree, and I ate.”

The sin of Eve was rebellion in action, and it is fitting that how wives return to respect and submission is through behavior in action.

The sin of Adam was failure to call out rebellion, and it is fitting that how husbands return to headship is through their words.

Thus, husbands must be vigilant to the position that God has called him in marriage, and it will draw both the husband and his wife closer to God. Not to mention it will make her more attracted to him as he is able to set proper boundaries and be a man who is respected.

Important note: Women are called to respect their husbands REGARDLESS of if her husband is one who can be respected. The Scriptures call women to respect and submit to the position of headship. Likewise, husbands are called to be loving, considerate, and not be embittered to their wives irrespective of if she is unsubmissive and disrepectful. Even if the husband is a horrible, meanie, nincompoop unbeliever, God may use the respect and submission of the wife to win the husband. Likewise, vice versa the husband to the wife who is not in submission and disrespectful.

The Masculinity of Jesus Part 4 (Marriage at Cana)

March 8, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Edit: Chad has written his interpretation of this passage here with slightly alternative views.

Edit 2: I've done some extensive thinking on this topic and I actually believe Chad's version is closer to correct now. I will leave this up as the lessons this post teaches are still applicable even though my analysis of the Scripture may be slightly off.

http://depthstowilderness.com/marys-request-and-leadership-of-christ/

The marriage at Cana is the first miracle of Jesus per the testimony of John, and another interaction between Jesus and his mother.

If we remember back to Jesus in the temple, this is his interaction between his mother, Mary, and himself:

Mary: "[s]Son, why have You treated us this way? Behold, Your father and I [t]have been anxiously looking for You.
Jesus: "Why is it that you were looking for Me? Did you not know that I had to be in My Father's [u]house?"

Instead of getting sucked into his mother's opinion of what He was doing, Jesus reframes the issue into one of what God wanted him to be doing. This is one example of where answering a question with a question allows Jesus to redirect the conversation towards spiritual things rather than earthly things. Away from his mother's concerns, and towards the Father's concerns.

However, even in this situation, Jesus submits to his parents — His earthly authorities — so as to be in full obedience to the law of Moses and to His Father in heaven.

Now, let's move on to the marriage at Cana in John 2 (NASB)

> On the third day there was a wedding in Cana of Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there; 2 and both Jesus and His disciples were invited to the wedding. 3 When the wine ran out, the mother of Jesus *said to Him, "They have no wine." 4 And Jesus *said to her, "Woman, [a]what does that have to do with us? My hour has not yet come." 5 His mother *said to the servants, "Whatever He says to you, do it." 6 Now there were six stone waterpots set there for the Jewish custom of purification, containing [b]twenty or thirty gallons each. 7 Jesus *said to them, "Fill the waterpots with water." So they filled them up to the brim. 8 And He *said to them, "Draw some out now and take it to the [c]headwaiter." So they took it to him. 9 When the headwaiter tasted the water which had become wine, and did not know where it came from (but the servants who had drawn the water knew), the headwaiter *called the bridegroom, 10 and *said to him, "Every man serves > the good wine first, and when the people have [d]drunk freely, then he serves the poorer wine; but you have kept the good wine until now.” 11 This beginning of His [e]signs Jesus did in Cana of Galilee, and manifested His glory, and His disciples believed in Him. 12 After this He went down to Capernaum, He and His mother and His brothers and His disciples; and they stayed there a few days.

The first concept we see in this passage at the wedding is that there is a problem. What does Mary do when they find out there’s a problem?

> 3 When the wine ran out, the mother of Jesus *said to Him, “They have no wine.”

She indirectly asks Jesus to fix the problem.

Now, I don’t know if she asked politely with good manners, but telling a man about a problem which implies that He fix the problem tends to be disrespectful in most cultures. However, I won’t say that it was sinful or disrespectfully because I don’t know, and I don’t want to call good evil or evil good.

Thus, Jesus replies curtly:

> 4 And Jesus *said to her, “Woman, [a]what does that have to do with us? My hour has not yet come.”

Jesus addresses other women by the term “woman” in the gospels, and this was not uncommon in the culture. However, it seems that most commentaries agree that it would be disrespectful for a man to address his mother as such.[1]

> [1]Analysis from Wiki — Mary told Jesus the wine was in short supply. Today his reply may seem curt: “Woman, what have I to do with you? My hour is not yet come.”[Jn. 2:4] Neither here nor elsewhere does Jesus renounce the mother-son relationship as such, but here, as in Luke 2:49, he declares his vocational (ministerial) independence of his mother.
>
> He has an “hour” to meet, and Mary, though his mother, can neither hasten nor hinder its coming.[4]:pp.103–104, 236 Most scholars believe that in Jesus’ reply to his mother there was no disrespect. According to Matthew Henry’s Commentary, he used the same word when speaking to Mary with affection from the cross.[15] Scholar Lyn M. Bechtel disagrees with this reading. She writes that the use of the word “woman” in reference to Jesus’ mother is “startling. Although it would not be improper or disrespectful to address an ordinary woman in this way (as he often does: see John 4:21, 8:10, 20:13-15), it is inappropriate to call his mother ‘woman'” (Bechtel 1997, p. 249). Bechtel further argues that this is a device Jesus uses to distance himself from Judaism.
>
> However, Bishop William Temple says there is no English phrase that represents the original “Woman, leave me to myself.” “In the Greek it is perfectly respectful and can even be tender—as in John 19:27…. We have no corresponding term; ‘lady’ is precious, and ‘madam’ is formal. So we must translate simply and let the > context give the tone."[16] Some versions of the Bible translate it as "Dear woman". [17]

The commentaries, unfortunately, do not look at Jesus' actions in light of male-female relationships or even mention Mary's prior comment which prompted the curt reply from Jesus.

The curt reply of Jesus was to address Mary's incomplete picture of the situation at hand.

Looking in the context of male-female relationships and conversation this could have two different meanings:

> "Woman, [a]what does that have to do with us? My hour has not yet come."

1. An exasperated Jesus replying as to a child that was testing his patience, "Come on, what does that have to do with us?" or "Why are you telling me to fix someone else's problem?"
2. An amused Jesus replying perhaps with a raised eyebrow, "So what? What does that have to do with us?"

When Jesus was at the temple, Mary was concerned about Him but Jesus redirected the attention off of her worry onto the fact that He had to go about His Father's business. It was an excellent redirection of the situation with another question, yet He still obeyed His parents and returned with them.

In this case, whether Jesus was exasperated or amused or something else, He was still in control of the situation by responding to Mary's assertion with another question. The type of reply Jesus made addresses Mary's incomplete picture of the entire situation which was twofold: (1) taking an issue that wasn't their problem and potentially making it their problem, and (2) not thinking about the consequences of said actions.

In other words, Jesus redirected Mary's statement from concern over the present into Spiritual matters again. Otherwise He would have just said "Okay mother, I'll turn some water into wine".

Likewise, this is a great lesson for husbands, as wives and women often bring problems up to husbands to fix. This is neither good or bad in itself, but sometimes the problems focus merely on the physical and ignore the spiritual. Or they didn't consider the consequences of said actions.

However, after Jesus redirected Mary's statement from earthly things to heavenly things, He does acquiesce and perform a miracle:

> 5 His mother *said to the servants, "Whatever He says to you, do it." 6 Now there were six stone waterpots set there for the Jewish custom of purification, containing [b]twenty or thirty gallons each. 7 Jesus *said to them, "Fill the waterpots with water." So they filled them up to the brim. 8 And He *said to > them, “Draw some out now and take it to the [c]headwaiter.” So they took it to him. 9 When the headwaiter tasted the water which had become wine, and did not know where it came from (but the servants who had drawn the water knew), the headwaiter *called the bridegroom, 10 and *said to him, “Every man serves the good wine first, and when the people have [d]drunk freely, then he serves the poorer wine; but you have kept the good wine until now.” 11 This beginning of His [e]signs Jesus did in Cana of Galilee, and manifested His glory, and His disciples believed in Him. 12 After this He went down to Capernaum, He and His mother and His brothers and His disciples; and they stayed there a few days.

edit: Thanks to Chad for pointing it out some of the corrections above, and prayer about changing parts of this post were Spirit inspired.

Conclusions

The key point in this passage is Jesus’ immaculate concern of the Spiritual over the physical. He doesn’t fall into the trap of pleasing those at the marriage or women, even his mother, but rather addresses her concern over a problem by curtly telling her the long term implications of such actions. We should be reminded to focus on spiritual as opposed to earthly things, and that all actions have consequences.

In terms of male-female relationships, winnowing out intentions is important as well as consideration of the Spiritual over the physical. These are both characteristics of masculinity in interacting with women: to reveal the intentions or truth behind women requests and to evaluate them in light of the Spirit and consequences that may result.

> Mark 4:21 And He was saying to them, “A lamp is not brought to be put under a [e]basket, is it, or under a bed? Is it not brought to be put on the lampstand? 22 For nothing is hidden, except to be revealed; nor has anything been secret, but that it would come to light. 23 If anyone has ears to hear, let him hear.”
>
> Luke 8:16 “Now no one after lighting a lamp covers it over with a container, or puts it under a bed; but he puts it on a lampstand, so that those who come in may see the light. 17 For nothing is hidden that will not become evident, nor anything secret that will not be known and come to light. 18 So take care how you listen; for whoever has, to him more shall be given; and whoever does not have, even what he [e]thinks he has shall be taken away from him.”

Likewise, one of the other lessons men can learn from this is that women, even your mother, are going to demand or tell men do things all the time to fix their problems or to fix someone else’s problem. Mary was essentially volunteered Jesus’ time and energy to fix a problem that was not His problem.

As you may recall, this is the same concept behind which I wrote Christian nice guys are abused [for their time].

Husbands and men should call out women for volunteering or telling them to do things. These are things that should be discussed by the husband before a decision is made. A wife volunteering time without asking her husband is not respectful behavior.

Key point for wives/women: Ask politely, don't tell men to do things. Don't abuse men to do things for you.

Key point for husbands/men: If women don't respect you and your time then call them out on it. It may be good to do the things that wives/women are bringing up to you as Jesus acquiesced and performed a miracle, but you must ensure that women are respectful of your boundaries as men by calling them out on disrespectful behavior.

Key point for all: Focus not just on the physical or earthly things but the Spiritual ramifications of actions. Indeed, consider both the action and the consequences of said action in light of the Spirit and not the flesh.

The Masculinity of Jesus Part 5 (Nicodemus and return to Galilee)

March 10, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Part 1 — Nicodemus

The Nicodemus story is an interesting story because he is one of the spiritual leaders of Israel and yet does not understand the Spiritual which is reflected in His earthly actions. If we understand our priority in the Spiritual, then we understand what must be reflected here in the physical.

> John 3:1 Now there was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews; 2 this man came to Jesus by night and said to Him, "Rabbi, we know that You have come from God as a teacher; for no one can do these [a]signs that You do unless God is with him."

Here's the first disconnect we see.

All of the Pharisees, the spiritual leaders of Israel, know that Jesus is from God because of the signs and wonders that He has done, yet Nicodemus comes to him in secret in the night.

This is the beginning of the spiritual parallel that Jesus begins to draw in the rest of this story. If a man's mind is closed off to spiritual things, then his earth actions will reflect His closed off spiritual state.

This is the analogy by which many Christians today see the world. We would rather believe in what we think we know, or what society, feminism, and our families tell us than test it against God and His Truth.

> 3 Jesus answered and said to him, "Truly, truly, I say to you, unless one is born [b]again he cannot see the kingdom of God." 4 Nicodemus *said to Him, "How can a man be born when he is old? He cannot enter a second time into his mother's womb and be born, can he?"

Nicodemus shows clearly that he does not understand the concept of spiritual rebirth when Jesus discusses it with Him. Note in the first two verses Nicodemus directly asks Jesus about himself, yet Jesus again redirects the conversation away from himself and to God instead. Even though Jesus is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, He constantly redirects the focus away from Himself and to the One that He submits to — the Father.

Likewise, Christian men are made in God's image that we should not reflect our own selfish nature but instead be a reflection of the Creator. And we understand that we can only do this by the working of the Holy Spirit in us that allows us to agapao love and do good.

We, like Nicodemus, believe the lies that we are told and our actions reflect the "nice guys" that many Christian men have become. We have become scared of standing out for God's truth and for speaking of it confidently. If we claim to be saved and born again then why aren't we confident in the truth that we know? Why are we afraid and timid of what others think about us? Why are we not strong and courageous?

> 5 Jesus answered, "Truly, truly, I say to you, unless one is born of water and the Spirit (pneuma) he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. 6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit (pneuma) is spirit (pneuma). 7 Do not be amazed that I said to you, 'You must be born [c]again.' 8 The wind (pneuma) blows where it wishes (thelō) and you hear the sound of it, but do not know where it comes from and where it is going; so is everyone who is born of the Spirit (pneuma)."
>
> G4151 — πνεῦμα — pneuma — pnyoo'-mah
> From G4154; a current of air, that is, breath (blast) or a breeze; by analogy or figuratively a spirit, that is, (human) the rational soul, (by implication) vital principle, mental disposition, etc., or (superhuman) an angel, daemon, or (divine) God, Christ's spirit, the Holy spirit: – ghost, life, spirit (-ual, -ually), mind. Compare G5590.

I love the double meaning in Scripture because it shows the nature of the revelation of Jesus' words. There's many things to note in this part of the passage.

- This is one of the sections of the Scripture to where baptism — both of water and of the Spirit — seems to be required for inheritance into the kingdom of God. Baptism of water is a physical testimony to those around you of acceptance of the Way (Romans 6:1-7), and Baptism by the indwelling of the Spirit is the spiritual testimony as a pledge of our inheritance that we were God's own possession (Ephesians 1:11-14).
- In English, it is not readily apparent but the same word for Spirit is the same word for wind. This is not a coincidence.

> Genesis 2:7 Then the Lord God formed man of dust from the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living [f]being.

When sin came into the world it corrupted man physically and spiritually. This is why there is physical and spiritual death. We lost that communion with God, and hence we do not understand how the Spirit moves. Yet, once we become Christians and start to walk by the Spirit we have a greater understanding of how the Spirit moves and works in us.

- Likewise, the word thelō is used in this passage to denote where the wind blows as it wishes.

> G2309 — θέλω, ἐθέλω — thelō ethelō — thel'-o, eth-el'-o
>
> Either the first or the second form may be used. In certain tenses θελέω theleō thel-eh'-o (and ἐθέλέω etheleō eth-el-eh'-o) are used, which are otherwise > obsolete; apparently strengthened from the alternate form of G138; to determine (as an active voice option from subjective impulse; whereas G1014 properly denotes rather a passive voice acquiescence in objective considerations), that is, choose or prefer (literally or figuratively); by implication to wish, that is, be inclined to (sometimes adverbially gladly); impersonally for the future tense, to be about to; by Hebraism to delight in: – desire, be disposed (forward), intend, list, love, mean, please, have rather, (be) will (have, -ling, -ling [ly]).

The context in which this word is also used in other Scriptures is important. Here's a few of the examples:

The Syrophonecian's daughter is healed: Matthew 15:28 Then Jesus said to her, "O woman, your faith is great; it shall be done for you as you wish (thelō)."

Discipleship is costly: Matthew 16:24 Then Jesus said to His disciples, "If anyone wishes (thelō) to come after Me, he must deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me. 25 For whoever wishes (thelō) to save his [v]life will lose it; but whoever loses his [w]life for My sake will find it.

The greatest and the least: Matthew 20:26 It is not this way among you, but whoever wishes (thelō) to become great among you shall be your servant, 27 and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be your slave; 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His [n]life a ransom for many."

The Spirit (pneuma) is not something that we don't know where it is going, where it blows, and can only hear about it as Christians. Those born of the Spirit know where the Spirit is when they follow God's commands — they are walking by the Spirit — and they know where the Spirit is when they do evil — they are walking by the flesh (Galatians 5).

> 9 Nicodemus said to Him, "How can these things be?" 10 Jesus answered and said to him, "Are you the teacher of Israel and do not understand these things? 11 Truly, truly, I say to you, we speak of what we know and testify of what we have seen, and you do not accept our testimony. 12 If I told you earthly things and you do not believe, how will you believe if I tell you heavenly things?

Nicodemus does not understand the meaning of spiritual rebirth, and his eyes are thus closed to the things of God even though he has born witness to the miracles and signs from Jesus. Indeed, Jesus criticizes Nicodemus for his supposed position as spiritual leader of Israel yet not understanding it.

One of the things that is often glossed over in Jesus' speech here is the "we" in speaking of and testifying. The we is what Jesus speaks of later on in Matthew when He lambasts the scribes and Pharisees:

> Matthew 23 (NASB)
>
> 29 "Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you build the tombs of the prophets and adorn the monuments of the righteous, 30 and say, 'If we had been living in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partners with them in > shedding the blood of the prophets.’ 31 So you testify against yourselves, that you are [x]sons of those who murdered the prophets. 32 Fill up, then, the measure of the guilt of your fathers. 33 You serpents, you brood of vipers, how [y]will you escape the [z]sentence of [aa]hell?

>
> 34 “Therefore, behold, I am sending you prophets and wise men and scribes; some of them you will kill and crucify, and some of them you will scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city, 35 so that upon you may fall the guilt of all the righteous blood shed on earth, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, whom you murdered between the [ab]temple and the altar. 36 Truly I say to you, all these things will come upon this generation.
>
> 37 “Jerusalem, Jerusalem, who kills the prophets and stones those who are sent to her! How often I wanted to gather your children together, the way a hen gathers her chicks under her wings, and you were unwilling. 38 Behold, your house is being left to you desolate! 39 For I say to you, from now on you will not see Me until you say, ‘Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord!’”

I assume that Jesus does not lambast Nicodemus here in John 3 is that because Nicodemus actually was humble enough to seek out the truth. Thus, Jesus told Him the harsh truth graciously instead of laying into him full blown. Indeed, as we can see from Nicodemus’ subsequent defense of Jesus (John 7) and his participation in the burial of Jesus that he was most likely influenced from this.

> 13 No one has ascended into heaven, but He who descended from heaven: the Son of Man. 14 As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; 15 so that whoever [d]believes will in Him have eternal life. 16 “For God so loved the world, that He gave His [e]only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him shall not perish, but have eternal life. 17 For God did not send the Son into the world to judge the world, but that the world might be saved through Him. 18 He who believes in Him is not judged; he who does not believe has been judged already, because he has not believed in the name of the [f]only begotten Son of God.

Jesus then starts into a monologue that includes one of the most famous verses in the Scripture. The parallel Jesus draws from the Scripture is obvious from the snake lifted up to Jesus’ future death on a cross.

“Lifted up” is a phrase that is used throughout Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation — 329 times — to focus not on earthly things but on things above or Spiritual things. It’s easy for us to get caught up in earthly things and yet we must lift our eyes up to the Creator and Author of our faith.

> 19 This is the judgment, that the Light has come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the Light, for their deeds were evil. 20 For everyone who does evil hates the Light, and does not come to the Light for fear that his > deeds will be exposed. 21 But he who practices the truth comes to the Light, so that his deeds may be manifested as having been wrought in God."

The main point Jesus is making here is that if we walk in the truth there is no need to obfusicate our intentions and actions. If we are called to love all the time — love our neighbors and even love our enemies and do good to those who persecute us — then is there really anything to hide?

I think that because we are Christians we often assume that we must be perfect or people might we are not a good witness. Likewise, we can gloss over not doing the right thing because we are afraid to make mistakes because God would want us to not make mistakes.

I admit I've been in those situations before many times where I hear something that is not theologically correct or I fail to call out men and women for gossiping or other such deeds. Indeed, I have sinned before, and I hate the fact that no one has called me out on it.

Are we that afraid of offending each other that we don't do what God calls us to do among ourselves which is to root out sin in one another (Matthew 18, 1 Corinthians 5)?

Likewise here, we should not miss the fact that Jesus ending analogy of light and darkness is also relevant to Nicodemus' own case here. Remember at the beginning of the passage the Nicodemus comes to Jesus at night and in secret. Likewise, Nicodemus feared that his deeds of speaking with Jesus would be made known to the Pharisees.

But this gets through to Nicodemus, speaks up for Jesus later:

> John 7 (NASB)
>
> 45 The officers then came to the chief priests and Pharisees, and they said to them, "Why did you not bring Him?" 46 The officers answered, "Never has a man spoken the way this man speaks." 47 The Pharisees then answered them, "You have not also been led astray, have you? 48 No one of the rulers or Pharisees has believed in Him, has he? 49 But this crowd which does not know the Law is accursed." 50 Nicodemus (he who came to Him before, being one of them) *said to them, 51 "Our Law does not judge a man unless it first hears from him and knows what he is doing, does it?" 52 They answered him, "You are not also from Galilee, are you? Search, and see that no prophet arises out of Galilee." 53 [[I]Everyone went to his home.

The context of the culture was that those from Galilee were scorned as ignorant, unclean, and unsophisticated. Nicodemus ended up being righteously defending Jesus from the crowd, and He was insulted for it.

Matthew 5:11 "Blessed are you when people insult you and persecute you, and falsely say all kinds of evil against you because of Me. 12 Rejoice and be glad, for your reward in heaven is great; for in the same way they persecuted the prophets who were before you.

Part 2 — Return to Galilee

This part is going to be very brief as the passages were very short.

> Matthew 4:12 Now when Jesus heard that John had been taken into custody, He withdrew into Galilee;
>
> Mark 1:14 Now after John had been [a]taken into custody, Jesus came into Galilee, [b]preaching the gospel of God,
>
> John 4:Therefore when the Lord knew that the Pharisees had heard that Jesus was making and baptizing more disciples than John 2 (although Jesus Himself was not baptizing, but His disciples were), 3 He left Judea and went away again into Galilee.

The main point behind masculinity I want to make here is to use your time wisely.

Baptizing is indeed a good thing. I'm sure there were many more who wanted to come out and be baptized by the disciples of Jesus. However, Jesus knows that there are many things to do in His ministry and He cannot get caught up in doing only one thing.

Likewise, we as Christians do not have time for everything. Indeed, we are only called to be stewards of the time we have been given for what mission God has given us.

I know in particular the places in which I am called to serve in the Church currently as well as with my talents. But I don't know if I should help out with other ministries currently and thus I pray and listen to God about it. I let Him put it on my heart and do the confirmation if He wants me to help in other places.

So there's two things to take home with this passage:

1. Know your mission from God and what you are supposed to be doing about it.
2. Be flexible for God to move and use you even in things that may or may not be in your mission.

Conclusions

Here are the main points that we can learn from these passages.

- Masculine men (and all Christians) should be doing what God commands in the Scriptures.
- We know where the Spirit is when we walk with the Spirit, and we know that when we fall into sin that we walk with the flesh and not with the Spirit. Walk in Spirit and in Truth as much as possible overcoming the lies of the evil one.
- We should have a boldness — be strong and courageous — in our faith, not hiding it in secret like many of us are prone to do. I am often guilty of this, and it's a big thing I need to work on in my own life.
- It's easy to walk your faith around those who are Christians, but it is difficult to do it around non-Christians. But that is the witness to which we are called. Overcoming these obstacles are when your faith will begin to shine just as acting rightously when you are wrong is hard but that will show your faith the most.
- We should not be afraid to call out sin graciously among those who are also looking to learn about what God wants.

- Use your time wisely. Read the Scripture, pray and listen from God about what you should be doing.
- Know your mission from God and what you are supposed to be doing about it. If you don’t know what your mission is pray and listen to God about it.
- Be flexible for God to move and use you even in things that may or may not be in your mission.

If there are any more thoughts on these passages let me know in the comments.

Fake it ’til you make it

March 12, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

“Fake it ’til you make it” is such an interesting phrase, especially when you consider that thoughts shape how your actions will be and actions shape how your thoughts will be.

I’m sure that most in the Manosphere has seen Amy Cuddy’s Ted talk about how posture shapes who you are and vice versa. Likewise, studies on posture have been performed and “power poses” have been associated with feeling better and increased testosterone, while “fearful poses” have been associated with uneasiness, worry, and increased cortisol.

However, we already know that this is talked about in the Scriptures extensively in Proverbs and other places. When you do what is right and good it shapes how you feel and leads towards more upright and good behavior. It’s a positive feedback loop.

Likewise, let’s talk about this in one of the fundamental aspects of Christianity.

> Hebrews 11:1 (NASB) Now faith (pistis) is the [a]assurance (hupostasis) of things [b]hoped (elpizō) for, the [c]conviction (elegchos) of things not seen (blepō).

You can see in this short passage there’s a lot to unpack here.

> Hebrews 11:1 (NASB) Now faith (pistis) is the [a]assurance (hupostasis) of things [b]hoped (elpizō) for,
>
> G4102 — πίστις — pistis — pis’-tis
> From G3982; persuasion, that is, credence; moral conviction (of religious truth, or the truthfulness of God or a religious teacher), especially reliance upon Christ for salvation; abstractly constancy in such profession; by extension the system of religious (Gospel) truth itself: – assurance, belief, believe, faith, fidelity.
>
> G5287 — ὑπόστασις — hupostasis — hoop-os’-tas-is
> From a compound of G5259 and G2476; a setting under (support), that is, (figuratively) concretely essence, or abstractly assurance (objectively or subjectively): – confidence, confident, person, substance.
>
> G1679 — ἐλπίζω — elpizō — el-pid’-zo
> From G1680; to expect or confide: – (have, thing) hope (-d) (for), trust.

Faith or pistis is basiscally one of the fruits of the Spirit that we have (faithfulness). We have faith because we trust in God to meet us in our need. As seen in the word hupostasis, we have a support under us — God — and his essence that we are confident in. This is similar to the same trust that we put in engineering when we drive over a bridge or a chair when we sit down on it. We have the knowledge that God is our support.

Likewise, this gives way to Hope and eventually to Love as I discussed in Anchored Souls. We have the Hope because we know that God’s nature is revealed to us in His creation,

His Scriptures, and many other ways, and that gives way to Hope that He will do what He promised to us IF we follow His commands.

Our faith is connected to hope which is connected to love. This is shown through our actions.

> the [c]conviction (elegchos) of things not seen (blepō).
>
> G1650 — ἔλεγχος — elegchos — el’-eng-khos
> From G1651; proof, conviction: – evidence, reproof.
>
> G991 — βλέπω — blepō — blep’-o
> A primary verb; to look at (literally or figuratively): – behold, beware, lie, look (on, to), perceive, regard, see, sight, take heed. Compare G3700.

Because we have the knowledge that God is our support — our help (ezer) and our shield — we don’t need to see what He is doing to know that He is working. Indeed, we typically don’t see evidence of God working in the midst of a situation, but we usually see in hindsight that when we do His will He works everything out for good.

> Romans 8:28 (NASB) And we know that [a]God causes all things to work together for good to those who love (agapaō) God, to those who are called according to His purpose.

The word used for love here is agapao — the verb — and not agape. Obviously, it’s those who are doing God’s will (Love) and those who are doing His purpose that have this promise. If you are not walking in what God wants you to do you do not have this promise. It’s conditional.

Faith is essentially what it means to “fake it ’til you make it” in spiritual terms.

It’s easy to love those who love you. We cry out to God in the midst of hard situations to do the right thing. It’s virtually impossible for any rational human to love your enemies without the help (ezer) of God. Yet, that is precisely to what we are called:

> Luke 6:27 “But I say to you who hear, love your enemies, do good to those who hate you, 28 bless those who curse you, pray for those who [o]mistreat you. 29 Whoever hits you on the cheek, offer him the other also; and whoever takes away your [p]coat, do not withhold your [q]shirt from him either. 30 Give to everyone who asks of you, and whoever takes away what is yours, do not demand it back. 31 [r]Treat others the same way you want [s]them to treat you. 32 If you love those who love you, what credit is that to you? For even sinners love those who love them. 33 If you do good to those who do good to you, what credit is that to you? For even sinners do the same. 34 If you lend to those from whom you expect to receive, what credit is that to you? Even sinners lend to sinners in order to receive back the same amount. 35 But love your enemies, and do good, and lend, [t]expecting nothing in return; and your reward will be great, and you will be sons of the Most High; for He Himself is kind to ungrateful and evil men. 36 [u]Be merciful, just as your Father is merciful.

When you take a step of faith into doing something that God has called it may feel like you're faking it because you're afraid:

- Whether it be speaking out in defense of Jesus,
- speaking out in defense of the unborn,
- calling men and women on their rudeness,
- calling other Christians out on their sin,
- loving your enemies and doing good to them,
- loving a wife who is contentious and rebellious,
- respecting your husband,
- stepping into uncomfortable situations expecting to grow
- or many others

But that is precisely what faith is because God will meet you in that need. Being Strong and Courageous is something that is built through actions.

Doing the righteous and good thing is always beneficial because it will reinforce good habits, and it will change you from the outside in. Even if you're doing it for the wrong reason or if you don't feel like it.

Faith is actions where you feel you may faking it, but you trust God will help you to do what is good and help you grow from that situation.

Faith in action is one of the greatest lies of our time because all faith is shown through action (James 1, James 2, Ephesians 2). I believe and my life is changed by His power to do what is right and good. The impression is that you can have faith with no actions is false because knowledge (about faith) puffs up but love (agapao) builds up.

No amount of thinking matters. Stand up for what you believe. It starts with the small things: everyday conversation and your daily habits. Examine them. Hate what is evil, cling to what is good.

Note: Credit to goes to my pastor for some of the insight.

Christian nice guys are abused part 2

March 13, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A second part to Christian nice guys are abused.

One of my commentors has graciously provided his story, and I think we can learn a lot of takeaways from it.

> A bit of background to start. My family life was fairly crappy in the emotional sense. My father was emotionally absent and wasn't the "life lesson" dad we all hope for/need. My mother was batshit crazy and not fit for motherhood. Her only saving grace is that she was quite competent as a home maker. With that said she was/is a tyrannical nutjob who strove to break our wills and make us subservient to her every desire/demand/wish rather than equip us for adulthood.
>
> I grew up going to church and was indifferent simply because church was boring. I became a Christian at the age of 17 after a "religious experience". After said experience I believed that I had found the meaning/hope/fulfillment I was looking for as a teen. And so it began.
>
> A brief outline of my christian life:

> ~ One year at the local church/ youth group where I was saved (17-18 yrs)
> ~ Three years at my para church ministry on my college campus (18-21)
> ~ Three years at a church post college graduation (21-24)
> ~ Three years at another church.(24-27)

Overall, seems to be fairly typical what what you would see in most non-Christian and Christian households now. The mother runs the family, and it seems to be some are worse than others on their children.

As far as the church experience goes, it sounds typical of what you'd expect after a conversion. A man finds faith, then goes off the college and is part of the ministries there, then graduates college and gets involved in another church and so on. Especially if he has had to move around a lot.

> My involvement in each church/ministry consisted of an average of 10 hours a week of ministry. Typical ministry activities – midweek service and Sunday service (plus prep time for leaders (I.E. tear down or set up etc), leadership/prayer meetings, outreaches and special events, helping single moms move, neighborhood clean ups etc. Of course there were plenty of mission trips, conferences, retreats in between as well.

Again, this seems typical of what men are taught to do in most evangelical churches across the nation. I can verify this from my experience as well.

Note that assisting in these are not bad things. In fact, they are very good things, and the church does need this help to run effective ministry.

What is bad lies underneath, and what is underneath is the reasons that men are told that they should do these things. The rot in the bones so to speak.

> I am trying to avoid being long winded so I'll try to bullet point some major highlights of what I learned/strived for.
>
> ~ The elevation of church/christian activities as the things most worthy of our time[1]
> ~ The celebration/emphasis of men being involved in ministry[1]
> ~ The emphasis that women wanted to marry nice Christian men who were involved in church[2]
> ~ The constant praise/affirmation from church leaders/members that I was a great catch and would make a great husband some day.[2]
> ~ The attitude of primacy that permeates christian culture [which is] the attitude that Christians have the truth, and know the truth in regards to masculinity, femininity, marriage, and relationships.[2]
> ~ The emphasis of dying to ourselves, carrying our crosses, putting Jesus first, not being a lukewarm and/or mediocre christian, not being a hyprocrite, etc.[1]
>
> So really I spent ten years thinking that I was on the right track as a follower of Christ. In fact, not only did I think I was on track as a Christian, but also as a man.
>
> So how was I abused/led astray in this process? A few ways:
>
> I was encouraged to be involved/serve because:
>
> ~ Serving/ministry/church were some of the most, if not the most important things I could be doing as a christian[1]
> ~ The level of my involvement directly correlated to my spiritual health/my level of commitment/my sincerity as a follower of Christ[1]
> ~ "Real men" "man up" and are involved at church[1]
> ~ Christian women desperately want to marry men who are "Nice Christian Guys™ who are active in church.[2]
> ~ I was lauded/encouraged/thanked for my service (which is what people pleasers do – they please people).[2]
> ~ Single people have more free time, so it only makes sense that they should serve more with that surplus of time[1]
> ~ There is always need for someone to do something regardless of the ministry, activity, church, etc.[1]
> ~ I was asked to not let self preservation/selfishness be the primary motivator in my life.[1]
> ~ I was given terrible advice in the context of women/relationships (typical blue pill stuff). The only redeeming factor was I learned how to state what I wanted and bail if a girl wasn't interested. No beta orbiter stage at any point in my life .[2]
> ~ I was encouraged/told to "seek" and "trust" the Lord to meet my needs Instead of being proactive about meeting them on my own.[3]

Overall, you can break these down into three different categories. Two are very prominent, and the third and fourth are smaller. The first [1] of which is that service is everything to the church, and the second [2] is that it improves your standing with women.

[1] Christians do this. Period.

The first is actually a half truth. It is indeed good to be involved with church ministry even from behind scenes, it is good for men to be in the ministry, and it is good not to be lukewarm and to sacrifice.

However, what the church has gotten to the point — with the disappearance of many men because of the rot of feminism — of manipulating people to serve.

What the church essentially tells men is that "you're not a Christian if you don't help out with X, Y, and Z."

As cliche as it is to say, humans need to have a purpose. If we don't have a purpose then we wander aimlessly and stumble. The church is not a one-size-fits-all purpose, but there are many different roles and responsibilities within it. This is why the church is referred to as a body.

I've been to several different churches, and there are all vary degrees of this. The part I find most disheartening is that most churches have almost no regard for men's gifts or talents. We're all parts of the body, and we have these different gifts and talents. The church should be cultivating these gifts and talents. In some places it's obvious such as with music. But in other places, men are just thrown into different positions without regard for what they are good at.

If the church could fit a man's gifts and talents to particular serve in the church it would be much more rewarding to all involved instead of the con men to do these other things for the church that seems to be prevalent now.

This is why I continually tell men to pray about your mission and how you can help the church in context with that mission. It's much more rewarding and easier to serve when you know this is something that God wants you to help out with as opposed to feeling like you were conned and manipulated into doing this because if you don't then "you're not a Christian."

[2] The nature of men and women

This is quite an obvious point that the church lies, perhaps inadvertently and I hope not advertently, about the nature of women:

- The emphasis that women wanted to marry nice Christian men who were involved in church
- The constant praise/affirmation from church leaders/members that I was a great catch and would make a great husband some day.
- The attitude of primacy that permeates christian culture [which is] the attitude that Christians have the truth, and know the truth in regards to masculinity, femininity, marriage, and relationships.

- Christian women desperately want to marry men who are “Nice Christian Guys™ who are active in church.
- I was given terrible advice in the context of women/relationships (typical blue pill stuff). The only redeeming factor was I learned how to state what I wanted and bail if a girl wasn’t interested. No beta orbiter stage at any point in my life .

There’s a couple of major things that I see with the destruction of masculinity in the church and society.

1. The Scriptures never command men to be nice. In fact, there are absoultely zero references to “nice” in the Scriptures. How’s that for a con job? This is why we are to test everything against Scriptures.
2. The Scriptures never command anyone to be happy. All of the places where “happy” is used in the OT or NT are about joy — which is a supernatural revelation of emotional state from the grace and forgiveness that God has given us — or being blessed. Jesus says in John 13 when He washes the disciples feet that we are blessed if we follow his commands. We should be happy that we follow His commands, but we are not happy all of the time that we follow His commands. However, we are blessed all of the time we follow his commands. Happiness, like any other emotion, is transient.
3. The churches ignorance and/or failure to discuss masculinity. I have never once seen a sermon about what masculinity is aside from in context to women and manning up to serve women.
4. The truth about intersex relationships. I find the lack of discussion about attraction disturbing to say the least. One of my practical posts on what men and women can do to be attracted to each other on Boundless, like many others, were deleted by their moderation team. The attitude that “we don’t want to offend” or “we don’t want to hurt anyone’s feelings” is distinctly not Christian.

Anyway, you’d think pastors would start to realize the rot that feminism has infested in their churches when they see that the single men and women are not marrying, and that the divorce rates between married are the same as the rest of the non-Christian population. Maybe they know, maybe they don’t. Maybe they live in fear of the women in the congregation. Maybe they’re addicted to money that flows in and are scared it will dry out.

All I know is that they don’t know about or don’t care about the Truth. Nor are they willing to discuss it. And that is scary.

[3] The half truth of God meeting needs

This is a different beast altogether, which is why I pulled it out and will address it directly.

> I was encouraged/told to “seek” and “trust” the Lord to meet my needs Instead of being proactive about meeting them on my own.

What we see in the Scriptures is that Jesus often retired from the multitudes to rest and especially pray. In fact, when Jesus was around the mount of Olives He does this at least 3 times — sometimes with His disciples and sometimes without — that were recorded in Scriptures.

Apparently, it was important for Jesus to go off many times throughout Scripture and recharge His batteries with God so to speak, but Christian men today are told that we are to have our needs met through service. This, like point one, is another subtle manipulation ploy to make men keep on serving.

It's true that God will meet us when we serve Him, but the lack of concern for men individually and their walk with God and more concern on what they can do for the church is dumbfounding.

> As I reflect, do I believe that my church leaders/mentors etc were malicously abusing me? No, but none of them truly understood how unsustainable my constant service was, and how I was neglecting the development of myself as a man by spending so much time serving. In sum, none of them really understood where I was at emotionally, because on the surface I had it together. I was responsible, hard working, stable, and involved at church. With that said I didn't have much of a life outside of church and work, and all of the nice guy issues remained underneath the surface (anxiety, people pleasing, lack of direction, lack of passion for life, insecurity, etc etc.). We have shitty metrics for what we deem as a "healthy" believer/Christian but I digress.
>
> My red pill awakening occurred when I completely crashed emotionally due to my unsustainable level of commitment/pressure I put on myself as a Christian. Swallowing the pill, I recognized few things. Namely that I've been living my life as a giant spineless people pleaser, and that I neglected my emotional/physical needs/desires/etc. I also recognized my deficiencies, and was utterly pissed of because I finally realized that all of the things I was told to neglect were the keys to my success with women. In fact, not only were they the keys to my success with women, they were the keys to my success at life. In sum the things of this world mattered very much so, and a lot of "Christians" that I was "Serving with" understood and lived this, while I was actively encouraged not to.

When you give a person an incomplete picture or lie to them of what it means to be a Christian in regard to service or women then you misguide them. This is very bad as stated in Isaiah 5:20 "Woe to those who call evil good, and good evil; Who substitute darkness for light and light for darkness; Who substitute bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter!"

When you misguide men we tend to get extremely angry because we feel that there was nothing that we could do about it. However, this is actually incorrect.

I understand this mindset, but this is where I disagree with it.

As Christians know the Truth was there all along in the Scriptures, but we instead decided to take the Churchianity's word for things instead of testing everything against Scriptures. We failed to see what God said about these topics and instead trusted those in Churchianity to guide us.

Don't get me wrong. There is responsibility that will fall upon church leadership who espouse half truths and lies. But there is also responsibility that falls on all of us former Christian nice guys who didn't read the Scriptures thoroughly and pray to God to help us understand these things.

> Matthew 15:12 Then the disciples *came and *said to Him, "Do You know that the Pharisees were [d]offended when they heard this statement?" 13 But He answered and said, "Every plant which My heavenly Father did not plant shall be uprooted. 14 Let them alone; they are blind guides [e]of the blind. And if a blind man guides a blind man, both will fall into a pit."

The current pastors of Churchianity may be blind men leading blind men, but we still stumbled into that pit by following the blind men.

This is why I thank God for the manosphere. We realized that God can use the things of this world to show us the Truth as much as His Word or prayer can. We must take responsibility for being sinners even if misguided.

This is why I started the series on the Masculinity of Jesus.

We must come to the point where we understand that we were in sin — fallen into the pit — because the Church incorrectly taught us to be Christian nice guys. There is more fault for those who guide men into the pit, but there is still fault for the man who walks into the pit at the guide of others.

We must repent of that sin and ask God for forgiveness. Then we must move forward into being masculine men of God who understand the full Truth of the Scriptures and aren't afraid to talk about it.

Conclusions

Just a few short conclusions since this is already long enough:

- Pray to God about your mission in accordance with your gifts and talents if you don't know what it is. This is what will help direct you in service with the church instead of them having you do everything and anything.
- Be a good steward of your time. Pray to God about what it is that He would have you to do. You cannot do everything, and there are many parts of the body. Men don't have to be involved with all aspects of service.
- Study the Scriptures thoroughly to understand what God says about topics. Test everything you hear, especially that which is from churches, through the Word of God.
- Repent of the sins that you made while being a Christian nice guy. This requires a lot of humility because it may seem like it wasn't your fault, but you still fell into the pit.
- Understand the nature of the roles and responsibilities of husbands and wives in the > Scriptures. This will start to give you clearer understanding of interaction between the sexes.

I would like to encourage men on it is that God gave us the ability to have free will so we can change. Don't keep living in a lie and believing in lies. We can step out of the darkness and into the light. We can speak the Truth and truth into situations as we become masculine men of God.

It's hard, but one of the fruits of the Spirit is patience or longsuffering. God promised that life will be hard for Christians, but we will also be blessed by doing what is right and good.

Is there mutual submission or not

March 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I figured I might as well address “mutual submission” because it’s a hotly contested topic and leads to a lot of misinterpretations and denial of Scriptures in churchianity.

This is part of a comment I made over at Donal Graeme’s on Sin of Omission 3.

> Ephesians 5 NASB
>
> Therefore be imitators of God, as beloved children; 2 and walk in love, just as Christ also loved [a]you and gave Himself up for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God [b]as a fragrant aroma.
>
> 3 But immorality [c]or any impurity or greed must not even be named among you, as is proper among [d]saints; 4 and there must be no filthiness and silly talk, or coarse jesting, which are not fitting, but rather giving of thanks. 5 For this you know with certainty, that no [e]immoral or impure person or covetous man, who is an idolater, has an inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and God.
>
> 6 Let no one deceive you with empty words, for because of these things the wrath of God comes upon the sons of disobedience. 7 Therefore do not be partakers with them; 8 for you were formerly darkness, but now you are Light in the Lord; walk as children of Light 9 (for the fruit of the Light consists in all goodness and righteousness and truth), 10 [f]trying to learn what is pleasing to the Lord. 11 Do not participate in the unfruitful deeds of darkness, but instead even [g]expose them; 12 for it is disgraceful even to speak of the things which are done by them in secret. 13 But all things become visible when they are [h]exposed by the light, for everything that becomes visible is light. 14 For this reason [i]it says,
>
> “Awake, sleeper,
> And arise from the dead,
> And Christ will shine on you.”

Paul, inspired by God, says here’s what you SHOULDN’T DO, and

> 15 Therefore [j]be careful how you walk, not as unwise men but as wise, 16 [k]making the most of your time, because the days are evil. 17 So then do not be foolish, but understand what the will of the Lord is. 18 And do not get drunk with wine, [l]for that is dissipation, but be filled with the Spirit, 19 speaking to [m]one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord; 20 always giving thanks for all things in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to [n]God, even the Father;

Paul, inspired by God, says here’s what you SHOULD DO with a few more shouldn’ts.

Then he follows up this passage with :

> 21 [o]and be subject to one another in the [p]fear of Christ.

It's clear that the context of this passage says we are to be "imitators of God" and that we are to expose the things of darkness to the light (v8-14).

If you remember back to Romans 12 where it talks about "no one should think of themselves more highly than they ought, but to have sound judgment [in the body of Christ]" this becomes more clear. The body is composed of all Christians, including the husband and the wife. Thus, Paul's reference to mutual subjection each other is the following:

If a believer is caught is in sin and a brother or sister points it out then we should "be subject" to their correction or rebuke in fear of Christ/God [in order to root out sin] so as to be imitators of God.

This aligns clearly with Matthew 18 and 1 Corinthians 5 on how to treat believers in sin.

> Matthew 18:15 "If your brother sins[k], go and [l]show him his fault [m]in private; if he listens to you, you have won your brother. 16 But if he does not listen to you, take one or two more with you, so that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every [n]fact may be confirmed. 17 If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as [o]a Gentile and [p]a tax collector.
>
> 1 Corinthians 5:1 It is actually reported that there is immorality among you, and immorality of such a kind as does not exist even among the Gentiles, that someone has his father's wife. 2 [a]You have become [b]arrogant and [c]have not mourned instead, so that the one who had done this deed would be removed from your midst.
>
> 3 For I, on my part, though absent in body but present in spirit, have already judged him who has so committed this, as though I were present. 4 In the name of our Lord Jesus, when you are assembled, and [d]I with you in spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus, 5 I have decided to deliver such a one to Satan for the destruction of his flesh, so that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord [e]Jesus.
>
> 6 Your boasting is not good. Do you not know that a little leaven leavens the whole lump of dough? 7 Clean out the old leaven so that you may be a new lump, just as you are in fact unleavened. For Christ our Passover also has been sacrificed. 8 Therefore let us celebrate the feast, not with old leaven, nor with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.
>
> 9 I wrote you in my letter not to associate with immoral people; 10 I did not at all mean with the immoral people of this world, or with the covetous and swindlers, or with idolaters, for then you would have to go out of the world. 11 But [f]actually, I wrote to you not to associate [g]with any so-called brother if he is an immoral person, or covetous, or an idolater, or a reviler, or a drunkard, or a > swindler—not even to eat with such a one. 12 For what have I to do with judging outsiders? Do you not judge those who are within the church? 13 But those who are outside, God [h]judges. Remove the wicked man from among yourselves.

Therefore, in parallel with these passages, this is the context to which there should be "subjection" to each other as believers in Christ in marriage:

If a Christian husband is in sin a wife should point it out respectfully so as to honor the roles and responsibilities in marriage. If he is indeed sin then he should "submit" to that correction in fear of Christ. In this a wife is her husband's helpmeet as to the Lord, and she is acting as a fellow believer in Christ to her husband.

If an unbelieving husband is in sin, then the passage from 1 Peter 3 and 1 Corinthians 7 applies. I discussed this thoroughly in Wives will never win their husbands with words.

The Christian husband is supposed to do this anyway through his duties of headship like Christ does the Church. This is only an reinforcement of the topic.

This is the only interpretation that I can foresee that aligns the mutual submission passage with all of the other Scriptures including the roles and responsibilities in marriage.

Any interpretation to which a husband submits to a wife as loving her or being coniderate of her or as part of marriage roles and responsibilities is not consistent with other Scriptures. Preaching this type of mutual submission of the husband and wife is heresy.

Husbands need remember that Adam's sin was from listening to his wife. So if his wife points out a potential fault, unless it is obvious careful examination with the Scriptures and prayer must be taken so as to make the correct decision.

Likewise, if a wife doesn't like something that a husband does or feels that her husband has done something wrong AND it is not sin, then none of this applies. Rather, she should respectfully ask permission to discuss the situation with him. If the husband continues with the situation, she should respectully submit to it. The wife does not get to make the determination of what she will and won't submit to unless it is blindingly obvious sin such as the 10 commandments. Any feeling based decision should be ignored.

One of the things that gets glossed over in most marriages is that if a husband or wife was in sin and the other spouse points it out then the other spouse should examine their behavior as well. Has the other spouse been doing something which may negatively affect the other?

One of the most clear examples of this is with porn. Most Christian husbands don't want to look at porn, and it is still their sin to look at porn. However, if the wife is constantly denying him sexual relations then per 1 Corinthians 7 she is in sin as well. Similarly, if a wife is constantly snarky and disrespectful or challenging her husbands decisions past when they are made.

On the flip side, if a wife is nagging and aggressive all the time the husband should examine his behavior to see if he has been living with her in an inconsiderate way or has become embittered toward her. Likewise, if he has been denying her sex or laying the headship on her instead of taking the mantle himself.

Self examination is important for both the husband and the wife when pointing out behaviors in the others that may be sinful so as not to be a hypocrite.

As a side note I don't believe a rebuke — which is harsher than a correction — should be used from a woman to a man or a wife to a husband. It's more than likely to turn a man away from doing the right thing because women who are brash and harsh with men tend to be "nagging" or "bitchy" and no man will listen to it.

Conclusions

Mutual submission only occurs in two instances:

- If a Christian husband is in sin a wife should point it out respectfully so as to honor the roles and responsibilities in marriage. If he is indeed sin then he should "submit" to that correction in fear of Christ (Eph 5:21). In this a wife is her husband's helpmeet as to the Lord (Gen 2:20-22), and she is acting as a fellow believer in Christ to her husband (Matt 18:15-17).
- That the husband's body is not his own just as the wife's body is not her own in regard to having sex with one another (1 Corinthians 7:1-5).

Responsibility

March 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

At the core of the cult of churchianity is the concept that men are to be the head and to take responsibility for their wives.

I would assert this is true if a wife is willing to submit and abide by the husband's decision. Most men learn to take responsibility for their decision making as they grow up.

Masculinity

I've been accused before on this site of saying something similar to the lines of "manning up" in regard to women which is not the case.

I believe manning up is good in the context of being the man of God that He wants us to be. He wants us to be His witnesses and make disciples of all nations. I can do that more effectively when I can speak well, lead, workout, have good nutrition, etc. If I don't have self control, give into lust, pride, envy, etc then I am not going to be an effective witness.

However, I believe that "man up" is never good in the context of women. This is because a wife is not promised to men from God.

On the other hand, for those that do acquire what is good then they must accept the responsibilities of being a husband as outlined in the Bible as I covered in Discerning the mission.

Discerning the mission is easily abused though in regard what a husband is responsible for and what he is not. So this is the topic of contention of the rest of this post.

Understanding responsibility

The difference is found in two distinct places:

- Christian men who are unwilling to take stewardship / personal responsibility for their lives refuse to believe in free will.

They want to continue believing the Churchianity/feminist half truths that "God loves them for who they are." Or that they should "just be themselves." Or considering and honoring feelings and the admiration of men over God.

It's true that we have God's love, BUT when you accept his love and grace He also calls us to take off the old self and put on the new self as new creations in Him. What is "taking off" and "putting on" but faith to do what is right in Spirit and in Truth. It is faith and faith is action by the transforming power of the Spirit.

- Taking responsibility for what is not your responsibility.

This is the big one most men, especially most husbands don't understand. And it is also one of the issues with Churchian marriage counseling today.

God does not take responsibility for our sins when we choose to disobey Him. It would be even foolish of us to consider that He would do that. That's why He gave us free will, so we would have the ability to choose Him or not. When we exercise a choice to disobey Him, we walk out from under the covering of the blood of Jesus and need to repent for our sin.

One of the foremost examples is spoiled rich kids. Rich kids that are not disciplined learn to be rebellious and cause trouble and are maladjusted. When they get in trouble with the law, their parents can cover over their sins with money. However, these children learn from the sparing of the rod that there are essentially no consequences for their actions. They never learn what responsibility is.

Likewise, if a wife decides not to submit to her husband, then it is not the husband's responsibility for any of the decisions she makes. Neither it is it his responsibility for any of the resulting consequences that result from her actions. If she creates a mess, she should clean it up herself.

This runs contrary to some of the typical churchian counseling advice that a husband being the head or leading and taking responsibility for her (and by proxy her actions) is the right thing to do. It is exactly the wrong thing to do. Denying free will to women when God has created women also in His image is one of the worst things you can do.

Most men have the tendency to say when a women makes a mistake that it "wasn't her fault" or "she's just new to the process" or similar comments. However, this is coddling women like they don't know what they are doing. Of course, they know what they are doing, even if they are new to the learning process. Men aren't coddled when they make mistakes and neither should women.

If you're coddled, then you won't learn from your mistakes.

The blame game

This is exactly why I am fond of using the teasing statements "well, whose fault was that?" or "hah, look what you did" or similar types of lines with women because it makes them consider the repercussions of their actions. I don't allow them to foist responsibility for their actions on to me nor will I clean up their mess. And they will respect you for that because you do not let them walk all over you.

The same thing works with men, although we will much more readily call each other out right away on our BS.

Fostering a sense of responsibility in both men and women is not "mean" or "not nice" or "being a jerk" as I've been called many times in the past year especially by some Christian women. It is teaching them to be responsibile for their actions. It is teaching them about free will and consequences so they can make better choices in the future.

In the same way, if a woman or wife makes a decision that goes against what you have said then let them figure it out on their own and explore the consequences of their actions on their own.

The weight of headship and leadership

Recently, I was put in charge of tasks of delegating different responsibilities to a larger group of women with a few men. Women like to talk a good game or mock complain of course. However, the best way to quell this line of thought is to bring up the choice of managing the project themselves. It typically ends up looking like this:

Her: Hey, how come a man was put in charge and not a woman? [Power/Actions]
You: Oh, so you want to take responsibility for this project? Be my guest! [Responsibility/Consequences]
Her: Haha, I was just kidding. You can do it.

As has been espoused many times before, women want to be in control but they tend not to like to have the responsibility that comes from being in control.

If women want to be rebellious against what you have to say whether you're single or married then make them aware of what will happen. It is love to tell them the truth just as Jesus did to us about loving Him and obeying His commands or loving the world.

A man/husband should not be there to help women with their actions that are not under his responsibilities and neither should a man/husband assist them in the resulting consequences.

Love is

March 22, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

> 1 Corinthians 13
>
> 1If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but do not have love, I have become a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal. 2 If I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but do not have love, I am nothing. 3 And if I give all my possessions to feed the poor, and if I surrender my body [a]to be burned, but do not have love, it profits me nothing.
>
> 4 Love is patient, love is kind and is not jealous; love does not brag and is not arrogant, 5 does not act unbecomingly; it does not seek its own, is not provoked, does not take into account a wrong suffered, 6 does not rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth; 7 [b]bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things.
>
> 8 Love never fails; but if there are gifts of [c]prophecy, they will be done away; if there are tongues, they will cease; if there is knowledge, it will be done away. 9 For we know in part and we prophesy in part; 10 but when the perfect comes, the partial will be done away. 11 When I was a child, I used to speak like a child, think like a child, reason like a child; when I [d]became a man, I did away with childish things. 12 For now we see in a mirror [e]dimly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then I will know fully just as I also have been fully known. 13 But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the [f]greatest of these is love.

Paul's exposition of love is one of the most quoted passages in the Scriptures. This is what and how we are to be loving. Jesus tells us where, when, who and why we are supposed to love — love everyone as I have loved you — all the time in every place. Ephesians details a different relationship of love in terms of husbands to wives.

The part I find most interesting is that Christians attempt to qualify love. What becomes lost in translation here is that the love is an essential part of YOU and not others. This is the transformation power of God in your life. God may be working in others and you can see His love radiating from other Christians, but it is not you that is inspiring this love.

I don't want to add to the Scriptures, but here's some facts on love that many men, even husband gloss over:

- Love is always given,
- it cannot be taken — from others essentially taking advantage of you,
- it cannot be coerced — from others saying you should do it as God gives love freely,
- it cannot be requested — by others including wives or ourselves from God,
- it meets a need perceived or not,
- it is of your own free will [you must choose to do it],

- it is an opportunity [to serve God and others],
- love is always an action,
- love is never a feeling though feelings may be associated with it,
- love represents a willingness of the giver
- love is performed without any expectations

Everything on this blog is a moot point if someone chooses not to love. I can't force them to. This is something that is between humans and God.

A wife cannot take love from her husband. She must receive it. She cannot coerce love out of her husband or it is not love. Wives cannot say do this to show your love to me as that is not love. "If you love me then…" is a false statement, and should be called out as such a lie.

This is why it is fruitless for a husband to pray to God to change his wife [to his expectations], or a wife to pray to God to change her husband [to her expectations]. If you remember back to the Lord's prayer it is a request that God changes you.

> Matthew 6 NASB
>
> 'Our Father who is in heaven, Hallowed be Your name. 10 'Your kingdom come. Your will be done, On earth as it is in heaven. 11 'Give us this day [e]our daily bread. 12 'And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. 13 'And do not lead us into temptation, but deliver us from [f]evil. [g][For Yours is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.']

Praying that God changes others misses the mark to some degree. Rather, it is through the change that He can work in us that a seed can be planted that will grow by His power (Parable of the Seed — Mark 4:26-29). The seed that is planted shows others how God is working through our lives. Thus, our prayers should be aligned with the fact that it is us who need to change to plant the seed, then God can use that to change others.

This is only part of the reason why doing what a woman/wife wants, even if it is good, is not love. It tends not to be out of a man or husband's own free will. If he is not giving of himself willingly then it is not love but something else. It may be obligation, duty, commitment, responsibility, or expectation which can be good things. But it is not love.

Men are innately resistant to nagging because it takes away our free will. It is a coercion of the other party in an attempt to get us to do what they want us to do rather than us giving of our own free will. As I discussed in Responsibility, it is not good when husbands don't allow wives free will to experience the consequences of their actions when they are rebellious, and this is one of the ways in which wives limit a husband's free will.

Marriage counseling and sermons that bash men over the head to love their wives don't help a husband give love. Instead, they should tell wives to back off and allow their husbands to give love freely by his own measure of his relationship with God and be a helpmeet by encouraging him. Likewise, to win their husbands without a word.

This is the half truth with self improvement and self help gurus. They espouse that you help yourself when in reality it is you having faith with God helping you. God is our ezer, our help. We take off the old and put on the new with the expectation that we cannot do it by ourselves but God helps us through faith. We know God is helping work that change in us through His Holy Spirit.

Essentially, the point I'm trying is that love is your relationship with God. If you understand how, why, what, when, where, and to who God gives His love then you understand as a Christian the same measure that we should pour out into others.

Pleasing a friend, or wife, or child is not necessarily a bad thing. But if it's not something freely given from you then it's not love. Don't let others tell you what you should be doing. Do because you know that God loved you first and that you should love others accordingly.

Love is something that YOU choose freely to do. Because you love God and want to obey His commands. Other reasons are far and away secondary — obligations, commitment, duty, responsibility, and expectations from yourself or others. This is the freedom we have in Christ.

Christian nice guys are not good

March 24, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a very brief post from a comment I made over at Free Northerners.

> I reject the notion that Christian nice guys are good guys. Good implies they were on the right track for being a man of God. Being nice is not Christian. It signifies that a man pedestals women (or womens' feelings) above God. This is an idol and a very subtle sin.
>
> The problem for men is that they first must realize that they are not good by being a nice guy. They are living in sin by being nice.
>
> It is when they are able to admit they were in sin by being nice (the idol of women or their feelings) and repent of it that they can start to become a man of God.
>
> The change in a man comes from within himself admitting he is flawed and asking God for help — taking off the old and putting on the new. This is the whole context of faith and becoming a new creation through God/self improvement.
>
> Likewise, this is the same process that must occur within women.

Ultimately, this is the realization that men have to come to in order to walk down the road of being a Christian man.

It is not a bad thing to admit you are a sinner living in sin. We are all sinners. It is a good thing. It is in this humility that you can accept the grace of God and be transformed. Lest we be reminded of two important facts:

1. Life is hard, and
2. You are your own problem

This is why self improvement is but a half truth. You cannot fix your own problem. You need for a Savior, and a transformed heart behind subsequent actions. See Self improvement versus God improvement for more details.

This applies for both men and women.

The Masculinity of Jesus Part 6 (Exorcism and the Growing Seed)

March 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Exorcism at the Synagogue in Capernaum

> Mark 1:21 They *went into Capernaum; and immediately on the Sabbath He entered the synagogue and began to teach. 22 They were amazed at His teaching; for He was teaching them as one having authority, and not as the scribes. 23 Just then there was a man in their synagogue with an unclean spirit; and he cried out, 24 saying, “What [a]business do we have with each other, Jesus [b]of Nazareth? Have You come to destroy us? I know who You are—the Holy One of God!” 25 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, “Be quiet, and come out of him!” 26 Throwing him into convulsions, the unclean spirit cried out with a loud voice and came out of him. 27 They were all amazed, so that they debated among themselves, saying, “What is this? A new teaching with authority! He commands even the unclean spirits, and they obey Him.” 28 Immediately the news about Him spread everywhere into all the surrounding district of Galilee.
>
> Luke 4:31 And He came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and He was teaching them on the Sabbath; 32 and they were amazed at His teaching, for His [a]message was with authority. 33 In the synagogue there was a man [b]possessed by the spirit of an unclean demon, and he cried out with a loud voice, 34 “Let us alone! [c]What business do we have with each other, Jesus [d]of Nazareth? Have You come to destroy us? I know who You are—the Holy One of God!” 35 But Jesus rebuked him, saying, “Be quiet and come out of him!” And when the demon had thrown him down in the midst of the people, he came out of him without doing him any harm. 36 And amazement came upon them all, and they began talking with one another saying, “What is [e]this message? For with authority and power He commands the unclean spirits and they come out.” 37 And the report about Him was spreading into every locality in the surrounding district.

I’m going to discuss the passage through Mark because they are essentially the same.

> Mark 1:21 They *went into Capernaum; and immediately on the Sabbath He entered the synagogue and began to teach.

V21 — Know your purpose. Jesus knew His purpose here on earth and on the Sabbath went immediately to the synagogue to teach.

> 22 They were amazed at His teaching; for He was teaching them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

V22 — Jesus’ teaching had authority. The Greek word used here is exousia, which is the authority that was granted to Jesus (“all authority in heaven and earth is given to me”), and by the same measure we are to submit to earthly authorities, and likewise, we have authority/liberty/freedom in Christ to do good.

I find this contrast between the Scribes and Jesus interesting because Christians have a similar authority for dunamis — ability, abundance, meaning, might (-ily, -y, -y deed), (worker of) miracle (-s), power, strength, violence, mighty (wonderful) work — as I talked about in God gives the force to everyone. That is to say that those who have faith will be able to move mountains.

This is one of the components of both masculinity and femininity to walk in faith without fear or doubt because God works His power through us with His Holy Spirit. So too are we to do everything as to the Lord with full measure of confidence that He will help us in all that we do. Strive for excellence.

> 23 Just then there was a man in their synagogue with an unclean spirit; and he cried out, 24 saying, “What [a]business do we have with each other, Jesus [b]of Nazareth? Have You come to destroy us? I know who You are—the Holy One of God!”

V23-24 — I highly doubt that the man with the unclean spirit was there in the synagogue by accident. In most cases, those with unclean spirits were kept in the homes, they were locked up or in ostracized communities, or they lived off alone like the man with legion in him. Thus, we can ascertain that this was not a coincidence here. That is why this confrontation is intriguing.

> 25 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, “Be quiet, and come out of him!” 26 Throwing him into convulsions, the unclean spirit cried out with a loud voice and came out of him.

V25-26 — Jesus confirms the authority of his teaching through signs and wonders.

> 27 They were all amazed, so that they debated among themselves, saying, “What is this? A new teaching with authority! He commands even the unclean spirits, and they obey Him.”

V23-27 — It seems to be that this confrontation was to back up the authority of Jesus’ teaching for those who were willing to listen. If you remember back to the Nicodemus, he says to Jesus coming to Him in the night,

> John 3:2 this man came to Jesus by night and said to Him, “Rabbi, we know that You have come from God as a teacher; for no one can do these [a]signs that You do unless God is with him.”

This is the difference between those that want to learn and those that don’t:

- Those that are looking for the truth see the authoritative teaching, and the signs and wonders only back up what the teacher is saying.

- In the Phariseical viewpoint, we see those that are set in their ways but recognize the power of the signs. But yet they don't understand the authority within the teaching nor do they understand the teaching.

Because Nicodemus was operating from the Phariseical viewpoint, he was confounded when Jesus started talking about being born again even as one of the spiritual leaders in Israel. However, he was humble enough to come learn from Jesus and it ended up that he seems to have followed Him in the end.

This is the power of a new teaching with authority.

> 28 Immediately the news about Him spread everywhere into all the surrounding district of Galilee.

V28 — News spreads about good things. This is what Christians are to exemplify in their lives so as to be living sacrifices. Remember, it is in the difficult situations that you respond not like the world but like Christ that makes a huge impact on people. Be bold for Christ especially in difficult situations.

Parable of the Seed

> Parable of the Seed
>
> Mark 4:26 And He was saying, "The kingdom of God is like a man who casts seed upon the soil; 27 and he goes to bed at night and gets up by day, and the seed sprouts and grows—how, he himself does not know. 28 The soil produces crops by itself; first the blade, then the head, then the mature grain in the head. 29 But when the crop permits, he immediately [a]puts in the sickle, because the harvest has come."

At first glance, this passage looks similar to the parable of the sower. But it is indeed a different parable altogether.

This parable seems to be writing about how we may not necessarily see how the kingdom of God is nurtured and grown as much of it may occur behind the scenes.

I've heard it said before that it takes on average at least 7-8 exposures of someone to the gospel before they come to Christ. If I'm one of the first people in that line of sharing the gospel with someone they may not seem receptive to the gospel and perhaps outright reject us, but the seed is sown and perhaps God will use it later down the road 5, 10, or even 20+ years.

I see a direct parallel here to who we are in Christ as well as to how we are to search for a wife.

Some days it may seem difficult to get out of bed to go to church, or to slog through the Scripture and to pray, or to fast and meditate on Scripture. There may even be ups and downs where it looks like the plant is not growing or even regressing. But over the long run there is going to be growth.

Likewise, planting the seeds now through this period of singleness with studying what the Scriptures have to say about godly masculinity may seem fruitless. However, as we grow day by day taking steps to become more out-going, building social skills, stepping into leadership positions, learning how to be considerate and not bitter, and many other details we learn more about it means to be a godly husband if we are proactive and can find the gift of a godly wife.

Conclusions

The conclusions for these passages about masculinity are straight forward:

- Know your purpose and execute it.
- Walk in confidence and faith in all that you do as we are more than conquerors through Christ. Speak and do with authority.
- There are no coincidences. I believe strongly in free will, but I do think that God gives us opportunities everyday to which we can choose to be responsible in the little things.
- As Jesus performed miracles, so we too are to use the power which He gave us to change others lives. This means directing focus away from yourself and learning how to build relationships with others. To see a need and meet it out of love.
- To be constantly willing to understand and adapt, but to test everything against Scripture. Once we harden our hearts we stop growing like the Pharisees, but if we understand that we don’t know everything there is a lot of room for growth.
- To be living sacrifices in all situations, so as to be a witness for the gospel. To be strong and courageous and bold without fear.
- To know that the kingdom of God does not operate on our timetable, but to be diligent in that which God has called us to do.

Complaining is a sin

March 26, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post is riding off the back of Allamagoosa's post as well as some of the discussions on Free Northerner's and Donalgraeme's.

I've stated before that I think man up is one of the useful tenents in the manosphere in terms of motivating men to do what they are supposed to do. But it's not useful in regard to women.

The point that gets glossed over is that complaining is indeed a sin. For example, here's only a few verses from the Scriptures that talk about complaining:

> Philippians 2:14 Do all things without grumbling or questioning,
>
> Ephesians 4:29 Let no corrupting talk come out of your mouths, but only such as is good for building up, as fits the occasion, that it may give grace to those who hear.
>
> James 5:9 Do not grumble against one another, brothers, so that you may not be judged; behold, the Judge is standing at the door.
>
> 1 Peter 4:9 Show hospitality to one another without grumbling.
>
> Numbers 11:1-4 And the people complained in the hearing of the Lord about their misfortunes, and when the Lord heard it, his anger was kindled, and the fire of the Lord burned among them and consumed some outlying parts of the camp. Then the people cried out to Moses, and Moses prayed to the Lord, and the fire died down. So the name of that place was called Taberah, because the fire of the Lord burned among them. Now the rabble that was among them had a strong craving. And the people of Israel also wept again and said, "Oh that we had meat to eat!
>
> 1 Corinthians 10:10 Nor grumble, as some of them did and were destroyed by the Destroyer.
>
> Exodus 16:8 And Moses said, "When the Lord gives you in the evening meat to eat and in the morning bread to the full, because the Lord has heard your grumbling that you grumble against him—what are we? Your grumbling is not against us but against the Lord."
>
> 1 Thessalonians 5:18 Give thanks in all circumstances; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus for you.
>
> Psalm 106:25 They murmured in their tents, and did not obey the voice of the Lord.

In cases where men complain, it is up to men to tell other men to man up and not complain. When women do it they are going to be seen as "nagging" and "bitchy" no matter what their intentions. Even so, women are to address this topic with their Christian brothers via Matthew 18, so choose your words carefully.

Likewise, sensitive issues need to be discussed in the manosphere in terms of the difficulty that Christian men and women who are looking to be married face. This is where I suggest that many posts should be prefaced with statements so as not to be seen as complaining. For example, “This has been my observation that…” or “This has been my experience of difficulties…” so as to state that you’re not complaining about it but rather bringing up a topic that needs to be discussed.

This is why I tend to stay away from the “woe is me” or “hardships of Christian men/women” topics now because it’s very easy for them to devolve into complaining fests.

One of the areas of which I am convicted is in terms of my fact that I verbalize my displeasure with certain situations in life. I do this because it’s oddly stress relieving, and I do this with myself without other people around as well. However, I realize that what I say can be taken as complaining and that it is in fact discouraging to others that hear it.

The stress relieving part is good, but the fact that if it affects other negatively as per the Ephesians verse should make me watch my words: Let no corrupting talk come out of your mouths, but only such as is good for building up, as fits the occasion, that it may give grace to those who hear. I need to consider not just myself but others as well in how I speak and act. Thus, finding another potential outlet for stress relief would be good, because to be seen as a complainer (even if you’re not trying to be) will toe the line of sin. We are not to even give the appearance of evil as believers.

Not to mention the fact that complainers are seen as whiners, crybabies and unattractive.

Ironically, as I was publishing this post, wordpress screwed up and deleted the whole thing. I was initially angry and frustrated and started to complaining to myself that I had to type the whole thing up again. But then I realized what I was writing about and was convicted again. In typing this up again it was my experience that the point further solidified in my mind after a period of frustration and overcoming that frustration so it was beneficial after all.

Don’t complain or even give the appearance of complaining because it’s a sin. Instead, be at peace, joyful, and with thanksgiving in all circumstances. It is in those hard difficult times where you do the exact opposite of what you are supposed to do that your witness is strong.

The Masculinity of Jesus Part 7 (Hometown rejection)

March 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Matthew, Mark, and Luke all talk about different parts of how this story occurred almost in sequence. So let's first read about what they say about Jesus' visit back to his hometown.

> Matthew 4:13 and leaving Nazareth, He came and settled in Capernaum, which is by the sea, in the region of Zebulun and Naphtali. 14 This was to fulfill what was spoken through Isaiah the prophet:
>
> 15 "The land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali,
> [a]By the way of the sea, beyond the Jordan, Galilee of the [b]Gentiles—
> 16 "The people who were sitting in darkness saw a great Light,
> And those who were sitting in the land and shadow of death, Upon them a Light dawned."

Jesus fulfilled Scriptural prophecy from Isaiah as He did so. If you look at the ministry of Jesus in terms of his overall movements, you'll see that this is Jesus' early ministry in the Galilee area but He hadn't yet begun His 3 ministry tours into the area. You'll notice if you look at some of the different maps charting Jesus ministry, they're slightly different than the harmony parallelization that I'm using.

I've noticed in particular the parallel harmonization may be slightly out of order because of the passages in John which may match up the Jesus meeting with the Samaritan at the well before his reentry into the Galilean area. Thus, it's good to keep in mind that all of what I'm going through may not be in perfect order depending on who you talk to, but the lessons are still excellent.

The Galilee and Samaria areas were seen by the Jews in Judea as repulsive and unclean, mostly because when the Assyrians invaded almost a thousand years earlier and deported many of the Israelites they also imported many foreigners to that area. Thus, the intermingling of blood of the Israelites and the foreigners and the mix of customs that was brought in were unclean. Thus, the prophecy is also in part because the Israelites were seen as wayward and contemptible but such was Jesus ministry to the poor and sick not to those who needed healing.

> Matthew 15:54 Coming to his hometown, he began teaching the people in their synagogue, and they were amazed. "Where did this man get this wisdom and these miraculous powers?" they asked. 55 "Isn't this the carpenter's son? Isn't his mother's name Mary, and aren't his brothers James, Joseph, Simon and Judas? 56 Aren't all his sisters with us? Where then did this man get all these things?" 57 And they took offense (skandalizō) at him. But Jesus said to them, "A prophet is not without honor except in his own town and in his own home." 58 And he did not do many miracles there because of their lack of faith.
>
> Mark 6:1 Jesus went out from there and *came into [a]His hometown; and His > disciples *followed Him. 2 When the Sabbath came, He began to teach in the synagogue; and the many listeners were astonished, saying, “Where did this man get these things, and what is this wisdom given to Him, and such [b]miracles as these performed by His hands? 3 Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, and brother of [c]James and Joses and Judas and Simon? Are not His sisters here with us?” And they took offense (skandalizō) at Him. 4 Jesus said to them, “A prophet is not without honor except in [d]his hometown and among his own relatives and in his own household.” 5 And He could do no [e]miracle there except that He laid His hands on a few sick people and healed them. 6 And He wondered at their unbelief. And He was going around the villages teaching.

The Matthew and Mark passages on Jesus visit are very similar like much of the synoptic gospel writing.

If you’re curious as to why this passage is in Matthew 15 rather than in Matthew 4 I believe it is generally held that the historical narratives from this area aren’t necessarily in chronological order (which seems obvious at this point) but stories are told in a way to make certain points about the character of Jesus and His ministry. That is why it may seem like there are contradictions with Jesus and a certain order or events. Wintery Knight has good posts on scholarly explication of details like this.

- Jesus enters another town and immediately goes to the synagogue to do His Father’s will. His ministry.
- Jesus again performs teaching, and back it up with miracles much like in the previous post on the synagogue exorcism.
- The part I find most interesting here is that Jesus did perform miracles and the people were amazed. BUT after they realized He was part of the family there and thought He was ordinary they were “skandalizō” at Him. After that, He could do no more miracles.

> G4624 — σκανδαλίζω — skandalizō — skan-dal-id’-zo
> To “scandalize”; from G4625; to entrap, that is, trip up (figuratively stumble [transitively] or entice to sin, apostasy or displeasure): – (make to) offend.

- The word for miracle is dunamis, and the word for lack of faith is apistia (pistis being one of the fruits of the Spirit) which we are familiar with.
- Jesus condemns their unbelief by comparing Himself to the prophets.

Those people who saw the teaching and miracles were able to believe, and thus more miracles could be done. But once our belief is limited for reasons such as these, then even Jesus’ ability was limited.

This parallel is not unexpected. I’ve stated before that the difference between masculine men and nice guys is but an issue of mindset. From the mind our actions flow, and from our actions our mind becomes. Thus it is important to cultivate a proper mindset in terms of our beliefs and interactions with others. This is why it is important to keep delving deep into the Scriptures because what you believe becomes your reality.

> Luke 4:16 And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up; and as was His custom, He entered the synagogue on the Sabbath, and stood up to read. 17 And the [a]book of the prophet Isaiah was handed to Him. And He opened the [b]book and found the place where it was written,
>
> 18 “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me,
> Because He anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor.
> He has sent Me to proclaim release to the captives,
> And recovery of sight to the blind, To set free those who are oppressed,
> 19 To proclaim the favorable year of the Lord.”

Luke starts off by telling us some of details of Jesus’ return to His hometown which included a reading of the Scripture. We can learn a lot from the interactions between Jesus and the people.

> 20 And He closed the [c]book, gave it back to the attendant and sat down; and the eyes of all in the synagogue were fixed on Him. 21 And He began to say to them, “Today this Scripture has been fulfilled in your [d]hearing.”

Jesus then proclaims that He is the fulfillment to this Word in Scripture. This is the second fulfillment of Scripture including the one in Matthew.

> 22 And all were [e]speaking well of Him, and wondering at the [f]gracious (charis) words which [g]were falling from His lips; and they were saying, “Is this not Joseph’s son?”

If you remember back to Joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma, charis is the root word of all of these Christian concepts:

G5485 — χάρις — charis — khar’-ece
From G5463; graciousness (as gratifying), of manner or act (abstract or concrete; literal, figurative or spiritual; especially the divine influence upon the heart, and its reflection in the life; including gratitude): – acceptable, benefit, favour, gift, grace (-ious), joy liberality, pleasure, thank (-s, -worthy)

They are able to hear the gracious nature of the Truth, but their minds are limited because they are not focused on Spiritual things but on earthly things. Thus, they begin to doubt rather than examine and explore the spiritual implications.

> 23 And He said to them, “No doubt you will quote this proverb to Me, ‘Physician, heal yourself! Whatever we heard was done at Capernaum, do here in your hometown as well.’”

Jesus responds by addressing their unbelief. Because they don’t believe Jesus claims that they will want and request signs to verify that He is speaking the Truth. But requesting signs are just a cover. If someone already has their mind made up on a topic, there is no way they will be convinced even if Jesus appeared in person to them.

This is a lesson that everyone must learn in terms of dealing with people and relationships.

> 24 And He said, “Truly I say to you, no prophet is welcome in his hometown. 25 But I say to you in truth, there were many widows in Israel in the days of Elijah, when the sky was shut up for three years and six months, when a great famine came over all the land; 26 and yet Elijah was sent to none of them, but only to [h]Zarephath, in the land of Sidon, to a woman who was a widow. 27 And there were many lepers in Israel in the time of Elisha the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, but only Naaman the Syrian.”

Jesus continues that those who are open to the Truth and repentence will receive it, even the Gentiles and backs it up with examples from the Scriptures. Those who are not open to the Truth and repentance, even if they are the chosen people (Israelites), will not receive it.

> 28 And all the people in the synagogue were filled with rage as they heard these things; 29 and they got up and drove Him out of the city, and led Him to the brow of the hill on which their city had been built, in order to throw Him down the cliff. 30 But passing through their midst, He went His way.

The Truth will always rile people up. When the Truth riles someone up in a good way, it is used as motivation to do good. However, when the Truth riles someone up in a bad way, it is used by that person as motivation to do what they want which is often evil.

For example, take the whole series on the socialization of men and women:

The Socialization of men and women
The selfish and unselfish socialization of men
Masculinity is the truth
Masculinity is the truth Part 2

For example, if I criticism, mock insult, and generally berate my brothers in Christ to do what is right then it is as if we were encouraging each other in Christ. We take the criticism in stride to where we want to improve in on our walks. However, if someone rejects the truth then they will often take any of this criticism and attempt to throw in back in our face or do harm to us.

We see this many times in Scripture where Jesus is harsh with His disciples, but they take it on the chin and keep going because they want to learn and grow and become like Jesus. But the Pharisees who were already hard in their hearts take Jesus’ criticism and double down on wickeness instead of repenting. They eventually end up conspiring and hand Him over to be killed because they refused to accept the Truth of His Words and repent.

I see this all of the time in the Christian manosphere. Christian men turn to game because they think it can solve their woes instead of turning to God. What you end up with is embittered and inconsiderate men which do the exact opposite of what the Scripture teaches on how to treat their wives. And you have to wonder why they don't realize this and repent and change.

This is the same exact concept of rebellious wives who are trying to become submissive wives. When they try to do it on their own they will inevitably fail.

The correct answer is always going to be repentence and the humility that comes with it. Then crying out to God to help you do the right thing in all situations even when it is hard. Blaming your wife or your husband will never get them to change because the only person you can change is yourself.

Note 1: men and women need to learn whose responsibility is what.
Note 2: Doing what is right does not guarantee that the other person will change. It is still their choice to rebel against Scripture or not.

The second lesson I think we learn from this passage is Jesus' dealing with rejection. Obviously, none of us are in everyday positions where we rile people up and they want to throw us of a cliff. However, we will face rejection everyday as men from society, friends and family, and even women. Thus, Jesus portrays the correct answer here which is to express interest in helping others, but if they don't want to accept then walk away and don't let others affect you. You can only help those who want to change. You can only go ona date with women who are also interested in you.

Conclusions

The conclusions are thus,

- God does not require us to be perfect. For example, I often feel bad because I sin, but it is for the sinners and the sick that Jesus came. Accept His grace and walk into the forgiveness. But you still need to be working on changing because that's what grace and repentence should lead to.
- It's often easier to minister to those who don't know us well because they have no preconceived notions of who we are.
- Words are often useless. Convincing people who have already made up in their mind what they believe almost never works. It is only actions that matter in terms of being a witness.
- Always bring back matters from the earthly to the Spiritual as Jesus does. Why be concerned about earthly things which pass away when we can be concerned about Spiritual things which are eternal?
- Don't be afraid to call out unbelief or focus onto earthly things rather than Spiritual, especially among Christians. This is extremely important because we are to care about our relationships with others.
- Don't have preconceived notions about those you talk to. They may surprise you when you minister to them.
- The Truth will always rile people up. The key is to find those who are willing to accept the Truth and be willing to change for the better. These are the people you want around you as friends because you can spur one another on to righteousness.

- When dealing with rejection shrug it off. In many cases, it’s not about you but about their acceptance or denail of the subjects at hand. However, remember that it is about you in the sense that you can continue on your journey to become a masculine man of God, so that should not deter you from continuing on to be more like Jesus.

All Scripture and the self

March 28, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

All Scripture is...

> 2 Timothy 3:16-17
>
> (NIV) 16 All Scripture is God-breathed and is useful for teaching, rebuking, correcting and training in righteousness, 17 so that the servant of God[a] may be thoroughly equipped for every good work.
>
> (ESV) 16 All Scripture is breathed out by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, and for training in righteousness, 17 that the man of God[a] may be complete, equipped for every good work.
>
> (NASB) 16 All Scripture is [a]inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for [b]training in righteousness; 17 so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work.

One of my observations in all walks of life is that many people are willing to be want to be trained or taught in their walks of life. However, they are very resistant to the idea of being corrected or rebuked / reproofed.

Correcting and rebuking /reproofing are necessary parts of being able to learn, but it feels like an attack on ourselves most people deflect such topics from themselves and gloss over them completely.

Likewise, the same trend continues even in the Christian manosphere where “improvement” is touted as king. Christians say that it is great to workout, eat healthy, learn great conversation skills/charisma, learn how to talk to women, learn “game”, etc and it is good to install these good habits and skills.

Nonetheless, there tends to be a lack of inward introspection to any sort of correction or rebuke. In my opinion, this is part of the self hubris which is an inward nature of the original sin, but is cultivated by the stroking of the selfish pride that can come from either game or even doing righteous actions.

We often think that because we are acting righteously by studying the Scriptures in depth, praying continuously day and night, meditating on the Word, and generally discipling ourselves to live healthy and fruitful lifestyles that we are doing what is good and those other people aren’t on the right track. Even if we don’t it’s a very easy pit to fall into every once in a while.

This is precisely the reason why I keep harping that Christian nice guys need to repent of their sin of pedestalizing women and their feelings.

You can do God/self improvement all you want, but if you never repent of your sin then how are you going to take a step forward in your faith? You may indeed become a “better you” or even a “better steward of your body” but if your mind is still trapped by sin and a lack of repentence then are you even going to be growing spiritually?

It’s the spiritual growth that matters because when our minds are transformed the rest of our thoughts and actions will follow.

> Romans 12:1 Therefore I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living and holy sacrifice, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service of worship. 2 And do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may prove what the will of God is, that which is good and acceptable and perfect. 3For through the grace given to me I say to everyone among you not to think more highly of himself than he ought to think; but to think so as to have sound judgment, as God has allotted to each a measure of faith.

Likewise, it is in the correction and rebuke that is going to make the most change. Utterly destroying the bad habits and sins leaves room for good habits and actions to fill their place.

However, if you only receive training and teaching and you add on good habits with the bad habits that you have you will frequently become exhausted because you are going to be torn in half trying to make everything happen.

This is part of the cognitive dissonance that many men new the the Christian manosphere have. Instead of the inward introspection to eliminate all of the feminism ingrained in their minds, they add the God/self improvement on the top. This seems to work for a time, but you eventually hit a plateau where you’re stuck in the inbetween world of God and self.

You become lukewarm, and you have to choose who you serve. And I see many Christian men leaving and serving the world rather than God. They take women off the pedestal and instead of putting God there they install themselves.

This is why many of my posts on Christian nice guys focus specifically on correction and rebuke for certain behaviors in the context with training and teaching.

Eliminating the sin via correction and rebuke is one of the most beneficial things to Christian men and women alike because it is the first step in the process of taking down idols from the pedestal and installing God on it.

Of course, it is always a choice for whether the Christian men and women will accept it.

Rather than becoming defensive it is best to examine in any correction or rebuke if there is any hint of truth there and acknolwedge it and repent if so.

Influence

March 31, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Become a man (or woman) who changes others. For God.

One of the concepts that I see espoused occasionally in the manosphere and/or viral social media is that you're the sum of the "5 people that are closest to you." There is an element of truth present in this because it is well supported by Scriptural verses about bad company and good company.

In the secular manosphere, this is the catalyst for many men (and women) to dump their own friends and make new friends with those on the same journey.

However, this is not exactly something that a professed Christian should be looking to do — namely dump their friends and get new ones. Indeed, because Christians are supposed to be united as one as brothers and sisters in Christ as the body, we should have no delusions that we are to leave any behind.

On the other hand, it is true that people of like mind will be more willing to stick closer to each other. You may find that in some cases you will start to drift away from others who may not be as serious in their walks with God as those who are more serious, but that should not be a dissuading factor of not encouraging and building up those who are less serious in their faith.

I would assert that as Christians the "sum of our faith" is not only how much we can improve in our own relationships with God, but also to how we can inspire change around us so that others will seek after God. This is the relationship nature of Christianity.

Of course, this is not such a new concept. In fact, it's just another perspective on what it means to evangelize not only to non-believers but to believers alike.

It is important to remember that by our actions we either show God's love or not. If we can truly show God's love through Him working in us, then our influence should grow and God can use that to inspire change in those around us.

This is a measure of charisma, and why it is related to joy, grace, and forgiveness.

I see that the men I interact with in the church are being strengthened in the faith. Their handshakes are firmer. Their resolve is greater. They are becoming stronger and courageous. They are learning how to speak more of their faith. Of course, not all of it is God working through me, but I know that at least a part of it is God's power working through me. And I know that I still have a long way to go myself.

The fruit of our Christian walk is not only of ourselves, but it is also in those around us by the power of the Holy Spirit. Look for it and be encouraged. I know that I am encouraged.

I'll pray about it

March 31, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There have been some recent discussions regarding unity around the 'sphere initiated I believe by Donalgraeme's Picky, Picky and Free Northerner's Female Fornication Fallacy and then followed up on various posts such as Ballista's keys post, something for nothing, and a few other private posts. and peripherally questioning understanding at Donal's.

This has made for some heavy thinking on my end simply because the direction of this blog is in some ways misguided.

What I mean by that is many of the concepts that I have "branded" here as masculinity are generally Christian concepts about conquering your fears, implementing good habits, etc. while only the things in regard to learning about how men should interact with women are really specifically about masculinity in particular.

This is why I haven't been posting as much because I want to decide how to take what I have currently and refocus it again like I did in Clarity of Purpose about a month and half ago. This may take a couple more days to figure out on my end, aside from being swamped with other work including taxes.

Emphasis

The emphasis on the above blog posts have been on unity as opposed to differentiation in terms of the body of Christ. Very understandable. We aren't here to fight each other as brothers and sisters in Christ but to live in unity.

I've discussed before in Husbands win their wives with words and Wives will never win their husbands with words about how the preferred method of men communicating is through actions while the preferred method of women communicating is words.

When you read through the rest of the secular manosphere, there is the undercurrent of selfishness and therefore manipulation. The question becomes how can a man assert mental dominance over a woman so that she will become attracted to me. Typically, this is performed first through words in the form of teasing/flirting and then through actions in seduction.

Obviously, if you take cues from the secular manosphere it is very easy to get into the thought process of us versus them or males versus females when it was not that way from the beginning.

This is why I have been very careful in my some the more practical posts such as Leave her better than how you found her, please, and Christian nice guys are abused, about not setting such as mentality of division but rather the opposite.

However, I realize that it is very difficult for many men to differentiate wanting to be a general overall giver and how to set proper boundaries. Most men, ingrained with feminism, tend to end up being nice guys who are people pleasers and pushovers rather than being men.

It’s not so much the things that they do for others that is the problem, but it is the way in which they do it and the mentality they have because of it.

This is why my refocus must be extremely deliberate because I want to not only teach the right mindset but also the right actions surrounding particular instances. For instance, I fully realize that most everything I say on this blog is a generality and there are exceptions.

I’ll pray about it

If you’re a self professed nice guy and you don’t know how to adequately maintain boundaries I would suggest using the phrase above when others, especially women, ask you for help.

“I’ll pray about it.” Then actually pray about it over the next few days.

The goal here is not to be super spiritual, although you will inevitable helping your relationship with God by praying about it. Neither is the goal here to get other Christians off your back from requesting too much of you though it will help do that.

The goal here is to get in the habit of not acquiescing to all of the requests set before you. No one can do all of the things asked of them by anyone. It is important to use your time wisely in order to do what God wants you to do.

This is asserting a boundary here that God is important above all else to you, and inevitably you will start to believe it as you walk it out. The people may be asking about favors or request may be anyone:

- The pastor asking for a favor. Tell him you’ll pray about it.
- A husband is asking you to help him with something. Tell him you’ll pray about it.
- A deacon wants you to help out in a ministry. Tell him you’ll pray about it.
- A single woman wants you to help her move. Tell her you’ll pray about it.
- A married woman wants help with a project. Tell her you’ll pray about it.

In some of the cases above, you know that the answer will immediately be no. In fact, you can say no instead of praying about it. But it is always good to pray about it anyway, even if you know you’re going to say no or even if you’re going to say yes.

Point being that you shouldn’t be doing something for a woman because you like her or want to help her. You should be doing something because God wants you to do it. Likewise, you shouldn’t be doing something because your pastor wants you to do it. Rather, you should be serving in the church because God wants you to do it. It is important to know how God wants you to spend your time.

This requires faith and requires an ear to listen to what God wants you to do. Likewise, there is ample support in the Scriptures for praying about everything.

If you’re just learning about how to set proper boundaries or having trouble setting boundaries in your walk with Christ, this is a good start.

Apologies

April 1, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a follow up to Never beg and never plead.

One of the most difficult thing to do well is apologies because you have to own what you are responsible for but also not take undue responsibility for what others actions were.

Note: To truly understand the full reasoning behind apologies please see my Apologies Part 2 article. This one is incomplete on its own. Read it after you have read this one.

Now, moving onto the article…

Your fault

In most cases, the easiest the apologies are the ones where you totally wrong someone. In this case, what I wrote in the other article is what you should do:

1. You tell them that you have made a mistake, and
2. That you are apologizing for your actions.

This is straight forward and simple, and you can read the previous article by clicking on the link above for how to do that.

Other situations

The hardest apologies involve actions where you both are at fault in some way, or even to where you are not at fault at all and it is their wrong that they are blaming on you.

I've struggled a lot with how to address this problem from these two perspectives because it is difficult. You don't want to take responsibility for something that you didn't do and rightly so. That is why many husbands are emasculated in their marriages.

However, God has been gracious enough to teach me these hard truths over the past couple months. Here are two simple Scriptural statements that should guide you through this process:

- Unity in the body of Christ is more important than what we may have against each other (1 Cor 1, Eph 4, Col 3, John 17, Psalm 133, 1 Peter 3).
- Turn the other cheek to non-Christians and enemies (Matt 5, Luke 6)

The true question becomes — is it more important to be right or is it more important to prioritize the things that God prioritizes?

Both of you are at fault

In the case where both of you are at fault, I've found the best way to approach this is to assume responsibility for what you did.

Sounds simple, right?

The problem however is also admitting that you may have misinterpreted their words and actions or that they have misinterpreted your words and actions. Thus, your words and actions may have been correct in some sense of the matter, but the other person took it the wrong way.

It is hard to admit that you need to apologize for someone else taking what you said the wrong way. Likewise, it is hard to admit that you should apologize for misinterpreting someone else's actions.

The intentions may be the best, but misinpretation goes both ways, and it's easy to do that in the heat of an argument or if the both of you are having difficulty explaining the side of your argument correctly.

From what I've experienced over the past few months just take responsible for what you have done including some or all of the below in your apology. It helps to categorize because you may see that there are more things that you have to apologize for that you initially thought.

- You to them: I want to apologize for any of the hurtful actions A, B, and C.
- Them to you + your response: When you said ___ I was hurt. I want to apologize for my poor response D, E, and F.
- You misinterpreted: I apologize because I misinpreted you and incorrectly responded in G, H, and I manner.
- They misinterpreted: I understand how my words came off as J, K, and L. It was not my intention to hurt you, and I didn't mean say things that way. I apologize for this misunderstanding.

One of the biggest things to keep in mind in an apology is to specifically not talk about anything they may have done wrong. Chances are they know they likely know they have done something wrong. If you accuse them of anything then it will just put you right back where you started.

Likewise, don't say "if" — I understand "if" my words came off as J, K, and L — and don't taking about perceiving what they thought. Even small changes in how you phrase it may come off as accusative or insincere because they may easily believe that you don't really believe their side of the story. The fact that they believe their side of the story should be enough for you to believe them.

The latter two are the most difficult because we know how we wanted to respond and we think we know what they were saying. But doing what is right and good matters more than the selfish pride involved with thinking that we were correct in these cases.

It's not about being the better man or woman, but to see that there are misunderstandings and admitting your fault in a misunderstanding because it takes two to have a misunderstanding. It takes two to have an argument. It takes two for mutual strife.

They are at fault and blaming you

This is honestly the most difficult case because you don't want to take responsibility for what happened because you didn't do anything wrong.

I find that many people have the most trouble with this, especially if they are Christians, because they don't want to lie and say it was their fault when it really wasn't their fault. Of course, I don't encourage anyone to lie about what they did or didn't do.

So how do we solve this problem?

I think the answer lies in a thrust for unity and accepting that something you may have done may or may not have done led to such a misunderstanding. Even if you are unaware of such.

- I can see that you're hurt. I want to apologize for any words or actions that may have led to this misunderstanding and conflict. I realize that there's nothing I can do to make it up to you, but I'd like to reconcile if you are willing.

The point here is to be gracious here. A statement like this avoids saying the conflicts and blame were on you. However, because they believe that it and some of your possible words or actions may have led to a greater misunderstanding of the conflict I believe that you can apologize here for the hurt even if you were not in the wrong.

Consider such an apology as taking the blame on you just as Jesus obeyed the will of the Father to take our sins on Himself. If we can take the blame so as to reconcile relationships then it is worth it, especially if it is a clear witness to that person and others around us. We ask the Father to forgive our debts just as we forgive our debtors.

The overall thing to keep in mind here is that even the body of Christ has disagreements. Through the council they were able to resolve them in most cases. However, in some cases there was an inevitable splitting, although perhaps not on bad terms and ended up well.

Apologies are hard because they require humility and culling the pride within ourselves, but if we are able to master it then unity in the body of Christ will grow and our witness to non-believers will be stronger. And we will grow.

Note: To truly understand the full reasoning behind apologies please see my Apologies Part 2 article. This one is incomplete on its own.

Apologies Part 2

April 2, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post is a follow up on yesterday's post Apologies.

Chad makes a good point in the comments:

> I honestly don't know how I feel about this post.
>
> I've been in relationships where the advice you give led me to crash and burn into arid land of the chump. However, I was a chump when I said it so I'm unsure if its because of who I was framing those words/actions in chump-land or if the words are inherently a poor choice.

To answer this question, I think it is better to state the facets surrounding an apology rather than what we perceive it to be.

Apologies:

- cannot be taken
- cannot be coerced
- cannot be requested
- meets a need perceived or not,
- is of your own free will [you must choose to do it],
- is an opportunity [to serve God and others],
- it's an action,
- it's never a feelings may be associated with it,
- represents a willingness of the giver [to repair harmed relationship]
- is performed without any expectations

If you recognize this list, it is because it's a list of other facets of what Love is.

Simply put, it is an act of the giver that signifies that you may have hurt someone and you want to let them know that you understand this and want tell them that you don't want it to get in the way of your relationship.

It is not an act of supplication where you are attempting to please others. If you are trying to please others with an apology then you have the wrong frame of reference.

Let me explain this further in the next section.

The two facets

Now, there are two sides of an apology.

The first is one that is given freely:

- You should not expect anything back from the giver, including forgiveness.
- You should not attempt to do anything in order to make up for it — unless this was a business proposal in which you made an error that you need to make up for.

However, this is not the case for most relationships.
- It is not meant to please others but to make things right.

The second that I only glossed over in the last post is that apologies are for YOU, the apologizer:

> James 5:16 Therefore, confess your sins to one another and pray for one another, that you may be healed. The prayer of a righteous person has great power as it is working.
>
> 1 John 1:9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just and will forgive us our sins and purify us from all unrighteousness.
>
> Matthew 5:23 Therefore if you are presenting your [s]offering at the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, 24 leave your [t]offering there before the altar and go; first be reconciled to your brother, and then come and present your [u]offering.

This second point of apology is important because — not only is it Scriptural — but it is an act that benefits you and your conscience.

It is essentially a confession. Not just between you and the other person but also between you and God. Indeed, this can be considered a gathering of beleivers if both of you are Christians — where two are more are gathered in my name there I am with them. It allows you to become right before God and other men.

This is the true nature of dissension and strife. It divides the body and may indeed prohibit the Jesus from being there, and the Spirit to work in the hearts of men.

Confessions/apologies reoriented

There are multiple elements that stem from confession which lead us to a place where God calls us.

The first is the confession of sin to God.

One of the ways this is done is performed in an apology to others that you have wronged as described above. It is only after we admit that we make mistakes and are sinners that we can receive the full measure of forgiveness and grace and that we can walk into repentence.

There is no forgiveness of sins without confession because without confession we do not admit that we are guilty and need a savior. This is where pride gets in the way of confessions and apologies to others:

- we may believe that we are right and do not need correction
- we may believe that apologies show weakness and make us unattractive
- we may believe that confessions expose certain parts of us that are unappealing and people won’t like us anymore

All of these are pride getting in the way of apologies/confessions.

Second, once we are able to confess and apologize for our sins, then we will be able to receive grace and forgiveness.

The key here is that we will definitely receive grace and forgiveness from God. We may not necessarily receive it from the other person. However, we must recognize that it is the choice of the other person whether to forgive or not. We should not be angry if they do not forgive because that is between them and God.

As I stated earlier, a confession or apology is as much for yourself as for the other person. It allows you to expose the parts of you which are sinful, and to allow the hurt, anger, and the bitterness to wash away.

This is why I always tie the fact that Christian nice guys are in sin. We must first admit the sin in order to allow God to work His grace and forgiveness in our lives. If we fail to confess this sin we wallow in our own hurt, anger, and bitterness as you see many Christians in the manosphere are prone to fall into when they realize they have been fed a lie and are walking in it. The anger is justified, but it should never be allowed to fester. And you must repent because you also followed the blind guide into a pit.

Third, is the healing through the joy and peace, and joy, (grace), (forgiveness), and charisma that we receive from the Father to ourselves through this grace and forgiveness.

It is important to remember that it is not others we are seeking to change through our actions, but it is God working His mighty power through us that allows us to change. God can then use this as a witness to win others to Him.

Remember that the Christian manner seeks to address men to be accountable for what they can be accountable — themselves.

Apologies should not seek selfish gain. Nor should they seek to manipulate others into forgiveness. Apologies, instead, address you and your faults, and seeking to understand those faults and become a better person.

This leads into the final point…

Fourth and finally, is the act of repentence.

Apologives and confession start this process by which brings us to repentence. And repentence is recognizing that we need to change because we may have done wrong or hurt others. It recognizes that we are imperfect and we make mistakes.

Conclusions

As you can see, the lens of weakness and unattractiveness is short sighted because we fail to see what God can do through our actions. Indeed, we think about what it may do to us — to focus on earth things instead of spiritual things — rather than what God can do through us.

Apologies are in essence a confession before God and men that we have done wrong or may have hurt others. They are indeed handed over freely to the other person, and we should not seek gain from them.

Rather, a confession or apology should start the process that leads to repentance:

1. Confession/apologies for wronging or hurting others.
2. Receive grace and forgivness from God. We may not receive it from others.
3. Walk into the joy, peace, and charisma we receive from God because of grace and forgiveness.
4. Then walk into the repetence in order to not repeat the same mistakes again.

This is the true nature behind what an apology does for YOU, the apologizer. It allows you to shed the anger, hurt, and bitterness and to walk into what God has called you to do which is bring unity to relationships.

Note: Continue reading for when to and when not to apologize in Apologies Part 3.

Apologies Part 3

April 3, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a continuation of the series on Apologies and Apologies Part 2.

This post is mostly going to be about what NOT to apologize for and instances of what may be proper times to apologize. Most men today are too apologetic for things that are not their responsibility or don't need to be apologized.

In fact, I would counsel men to never say the word "sorry" ever again. "Sorry" just has such a bad connotation because it is an ubiquitous word that is used by nice guys in reference to offending womens' feelings. This is why this series is named "apologies" rather than "sorries." Plus sorries looks like a weird word.

When not to apologize

The most often time I see nice guys apologize are in these circumstances:

- They're having trouble speaking properly.
- They're having difficulty constructing or setting things up.
- They make a simple mistake that only causes a minor inconvenience, if at all.
- They bump into someone or get in the way.
- They don't do something nice that they usually do (e.g. hold open the door).

None of these events are places in which you should apologize (and eliminate sorry from your vocabulary).

You can say "excuse me" if you bumped someone or were in the way. You can make a joke and say "it looks like I'm having trouble with pronounciations today!" You can say nothing. You can tease such as "excuse you" when it was you doing the bumping. There's lots of things you can do without apologizing because many of these aren't something that you should apologize about.

Obviously, these are just a few instances of when nice guys say sorry so take note when you apologize for such things and don't do it.

Also, don't act ashamed either. There's nothing to be ashamed about.

When to apologize

When you actually do something to create dissension or strife in a relationship. Now, this is one of the hard things for most nice guys to learn.

Being called mean, or a jerk, or not nice, does not mean that you should apologize.

The cues men should take from women are from their actions. For example, if they're smiling and punch you while calling you a jerk this is a good thing. If they want to be around you more, if they touch you more, if they smile more, if their interest level goes up, etc these are all signs that teasing or challenging is good.

Now, it is possible to be too harsh with teasing, and when that happens you'll tend to see a woman start to drift away and distance herself from you. This is your cue to turn it down. However, if you continue to do this and didn't realize it then it can sometimes create obvious dissension and strife within a relationship. This is at a point where you may tell her that you were being too harsh with her.

As Jenny/Sis noted in the bottom of the comments of the socialization of men and women, depending on how a woman was raised in terms of family dynamics a woman may shy away from too much teasing for whatever reason. This is where it is important to look for the action cues in the opposite sex.

The point that should drive this home is that while you are not responsible for her emotions, if you want to be married or are married then you are responsible for being considerate and/or understanding.

Thus, I would only apologize to a woman when there is a clear and obvious gulf between us that was created by something I said or did to where there is obvious tension and strife. This is going to be very rare for a nice guy, so I would generally avoid apologizing if you're a nice guy trying to become un-nice.

Therefore, keep in mind that we're not just to be aware of ourselves and our desires but to also be aware of our relationships and to foster them so that we grow closer to each other as brothers and sisters in Christ.

Unapologetic

We were all created by God with different preferences and hobbies and interest for occupations and the like. Never be apologetic about what you like and what you don't like. This is to be bold about what you prefer. There's nothing wrong with this. In fact, if you lie about it then that's a sin.

Likewise, we are to be unapologetic about our faith. Is there any reason to be ashamed of our belief in God and Jesus? Aren't we also to stand against the world?Part of what it means to become a man is to understand and get comfortable with yourself and who you are in Christ.

When you are apologetic or ashamed about the things that you enjoy or like then you're going to be timid, shy, and wishy-washy when confronted about it. No man or woman likes someone who is lukewarm about what they believe and what they prefer. It is better to choose what you like and what you don't like then try to compromise.

Not satisfied with your body? Do something about it with diet and exercise. Don't complain as it's a sin.

Not satisfied with your hobbies? Find a new one, but don't complain.

Don't have a good relationship with God? Read the Scriptures, pray, meditate, fast, etc.

The things that we potentially have reason to be unsatisfied about should be motivation to implement change in our life. You are a steward of the Temple of the Holy Spirit and thus you have a responsibility to treat it as such.

Learn how to talk about your faith and beliefs in a confident manner. Learn how to talk about your preferences in a confident manner. Learn how to do things in a confident manner, even if you’re just starting to learn them.

Then you will start to understand the mindset that is required that will bring you out of Churchianity — the cult of nice.

Scripture and sex roles

April 8, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I saw this link on the crisis of absent men in the church from a link off of Free Northerner's latest lightning round.

I went through some of the articles on the site, and they have some excellent analysis. There are a couple in particular that outline the gender/sex roles:

> Gendered distinctions in role [in the church]:
>
> * 1 Corinthians 11:4-5: 'Any man who prays or prophesies with his head covered disgraces his head. But any woman who prays or prophesies with her head uncovered disgraces her head'[2] [3] [4] [5] [6]
>
> * 1 Corinthians 14:33, 34: 'the women should be silent in the churches… it is disgraceful for a woman to speak in church'[7]
>
> * 1 Timothy 2:11: 'A woman must learn quietly with all submissiveness.'[8]
>
> * 1 Timothy 2:12: 'But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man. She must remain quiet.' [9] [10]
>
> * 1 Timothy 3:2, 4: 'The overseer then must be above reproach, the husband of one wife… He must manage his own household well'[11] [12] [13] [14]
>
> Gendered distinctions in authority [in marriage]:
>
> * 1 Corinthians 11:3: 'the man is the head of a woman' [15] [16] [17] [18]
>
> * 1 Corinthians 14:34: 'Rather, let them [the women] be in submission, as in fact the law says. If they want to find out about something, they should ask their husbands at home'[19] [20]
>
> * Ephesians 5:22-24: 'Wives, submit to your husbands as to the Lord, because the husband is the head of the wife as also Christ is the head of the church – he himself being the savior of the body. But as the church submits to Christ, so also wives should submit to their husbands in everything.' [21] [22] [23]
>
> * Colossians 3:18: 'Wives, submit to your husbands'[24] [25]
>
> * 1 Timothy 2:12: 'But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man. She must remain quiet.'[26] [27]
>
> * Titus 2:5: 'being subject to their own husbands'[28] [29]
>
> * 1 Peter 3:1: 'In the same way, wives, be subject to your own husbands.'[30]

These two articles are from here and here. Then there is also an article on the benefits of complementarism.

Out of the 260 total chapters in the New Testament, these are the only sex distinctions that we have to go on for our lives. I can see why it would be easy to get things confused for most men in the church, especially when the church goes astray on sex roles.

Now, half of the point of this article was to examine the sex roles, but the other half is to show that the general prescriptions to believers is almost universal. That we are all — male and female — to become like Jesus.

I've talked about "rebranding" this blog in a way to address the fact that most of the prescriptions on godly masculinity are indeed about godly men AND women in general.

Differentiation to a focus on unity

In general, when we talk about nice guys, it's not so much a problem about masculinity that it is a problem about idolatry. For example, the pedestalization of women and their feelings leading to nice guy syndrome is not solely destructive to men. It is also destructive to women in the sense that feminism "builds up" the women up into paragons of pride and entitlement.

The effect of feminism is different on men and women, but it leads them astray in different ways. Therefore, the response to the spirit of jezebel — feminism — is different by both sexes. I am addressing "masculinity" in the context that I am addressing men specifically on how to throw off the shackles of feminism's idolatry and lust of women.

This site will be continued to be geared towards teaching men, but the articles that don't address specific mindsets and lifestyles about women can also be applied by women as they will be godly concepts.

These were my previous 3 categorization of articles on this site.

> Understanding the Scriptures as it pertains to godly masculinity mindset and a godly lifestyle. This study will look at elimination of feminine behaviors and mindsets accrued from society, feminism and churchianity, and building godly masculinity in terms of a man on his mission and all that encompasses. This category will also explore the Greek and Hebrew words in Scriptures as they relate to our understanding of God and His will for our lives.
>
> Learning godly masculine behavior by putting it into practice in terms of eliminating feminine behaviors and mindsets from society, feminism and churchianity, and building godly masculinity in terms of a man on his mission and all that encompasses.
>
> Learning the subtleties of godly masculine behavior as it pertains to women with the intent of spurring them towards Christ. The fact that it is attractive to women is just a nice side effect.

To bring clarity to these topics, these categories are going to be changed to these instead:

> Understanding the Scriptures as it pertains to godly mindset and a godly lifestyle. This study will look at elimination of ungodly behaviors and mindsets accrued from society, feminism and churchianity, and building up a man on his mission and all that encompasses. This category will also explore the Greek and Hebrew words in Scriptures as they relate to our understanding of > God and His will for our lives.

>
> Learning godly behavior by putting it into practice in terms of eliminating of ungodly behaviors and mindsets accrued from society, feminism and churchianity, and building up a man on his mission and all that encompasses.
>
> Learning about the Scriptural roles and responsibilities of male-female interactions with the intent of spurring them towards Christ. The fact that it is attractive to women is just a nice side effect.

As you can see the changes are subtle, but I think it makes all of the difference.

For the first two categories the goal is eliminating the ungodly and putting on the godly. Most of my writing will indeed be directed to men, but women can learn and should use most of these concepts too albeit they may need to be modified to apply to women. Some concepts will be universal such as the focus on holistic godly improvement — good nutrition, exercise, time management, etc — but others will focus on the facets of feminine behaviors that are ingrained into men from feminism. These affect men differently than they do women, so some may not apply.

The last part I want to clarify strongly. The intent of the section is to learn how to learn how to behave around women, and I think that is slightly off. The clarification comes in that we first need to understand the roles and responsibilities of men and women have in marriage and apply these concepts towards the interactions. This makes it a much broader category than it was initially, and I think that is a good thing. Our understanding of the Scriptures and male-female interactions will lead to a godly mindset which will lead to godly behavior.

Everything is spiritual

April 10, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The insidious parts about our culture and feminism is that they drive us to think that our bodies, hearts, minds, spirits, and souls as separate entities. Indeed, nothing in the Jewish tradition or the early Church suggested this was the case. They are all inextricably linked together.

“Casual sex is just for pleasure” or “just this once” in terms of food and gluttony, neglecting exercise, not doing the right thing, not speaking up for the truth, etc. “It won’t hurt anybody [not even yourself].”

The fact that all such things are linked together into one person is in the same way that the church is the one mind, one spirit, and one body of Christ.

Now, I haven’t read “Pulling Back the Shades: Erotica, Intimacy and the Longings of a Woman’s Heart” only SSM’s review of the book, but this is the heart of the issue that is important to note.

I’ve driven home the Galatians 5 passage before, but I want to do so again.

> Galatians 5:16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not carry out the desire of the flesh. 17 For the flesh [g]sets its desire against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are in opposition to one another, so that you may not do the things that you [h]please. 18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the Law. 19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.

We can see that every act we undertake is spiritual in nature. It’s not just that sex which is or is not spiritual. When you do something, you either choose to give into the lusts of the flesh or you choose to please the Spirit.

All our actions are to have purpose behind them. If they do not have purpose, we are wandering aimlessly and not directing ourselves closer to the Truth.

I choose every second while I’m thinking about a meal, cooking a meal, serving a meal, and eating a meal about whether this is something I should be eating or not. Is it healthy for me or is this detracting from my health?

I choose every second while I go to the gym, while I lift weights or my bodyweight, etc whether I should be doing this or not. Is this healthy for me or is it detracting from my health?

Does not my good health also affect my mind being able to think more clearly, uplift by spirit through the pleasurable effects of endorphins through exercise and eating well, and not lift my spirits as well?

It is rather foolish as Christians walking in the world to assume that such things are trivial in nature. Rather, it is when we are faithful with a few things that we be put in charge of many things.

> Parable of the Talents — Matthew 25 (NASB)
>
> 14 “For it is just like a man about to go on a journey, who called his own slaves and entrusted his possessions to them. 15 To one he gave five [a]talents, to another, two, and to another, one, each according to his own ability; and he went on his journey. 16 Immediately the one who had received the five talents went and traded with them, and gained five more talents. 17 In the same manner the one who had received the two talents gained two more. 18 But he who received the one talent went away, and dug a hole in the ground and hid his [b]master’s money.
>
> 19 “Now after a long time the master of those slaves *came and *settled accounts with them. 20 The one who had received the five talents came up and brought five more talents, saying, ‘Master, you entrusted five talents to me. See, I have gained five more talents.’ 21 His master said to him, ‘Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your [c]master.’
>
> 22 “Also the one who had received the two talents came up and said, ‘Master, you entrusted two talents to me. See, I have gained two more talents.’ 23 His master said to him, ‘Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your master.’
>
> 24 “And the one also who had received the one talent came up and said, ‘Master, I knew you to be a hard man, reaping where you did not sow and gathering where you scattered no seed. 25 And I was afraid, and went away and hid your talent in the ground. See, you have what is yours.’
>
> 26 “But his master answered and said to him, ‘You wicked, lazy slave, you knew that I reap where I did not sow and gather where I scattered no seed. 27 Then you ought to have put my money [d]in the bank, and on my arrival I would have received my money back with interest. 28 Therefore take away the talent from him, and give it to the one who has the ten talents.’
>
> 29 “For to everyone who has, more shall be given, and he will have an abundance; but from the one who does not have, even what he does have shall be taken away. 30 Throw out the worthless slave into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

I covered other analysis of this passage in God doesn’t owe you anything, and the fact that we fail to really understand many of these things until we seek God is a horrible, horrible Truth. This is why Jesus said to seek first His kingdom and His righteousness and all these things will be added to you.

Likewise, I looked at the 2 Peter 1 passage in the Foundations of Christian Masculinity, but it indeed does not just apply to men but also to women.

> 2 Peter 1:5 Now for this very reason also, applying all diligence, in your faith supply moral [g]excellence, and in your moral excellence, knowledge, 6 and in your knowledge, self-control, and in your self-control, perseverance, and in your perseverance, godliness, 7 and in your godliness, brotherly kindness, and in your brotherly kindness, love. 8 For if these qualities are yours and are increasing, they render you neither useless nor unfruitful in the true knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9 For he who lacks these qualities is blind or short-sighted, having forgotten his purification from his former sins. 10 Therefore, brethren, be all the more diligent to make certain about His calling and choosing you; for as long as you practice these things, you will never stumble; 11 for in this way the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will be abundantly supplied to you.
>
> (P.S. If you want to see the analysis of this passage click on the above link)

Just as everything in life is transactional in nature — that is we spend our time for it whether significant or not — everything in life is also spiritual. This is the life that God created, and we are to indeed be stewards of it.

Sex in marriage is just one aspect of that. In this I agree with SSM that sex in marriage that it is not about being satisfied although that may certainly be the case that you are satisified by sex.

However, take it one step further. It's one of the things that was directly created by God and commanded. It involves the heart, mind, body, and soul/spirit. It's an act of worship to God. You honor God by having sex in marriage.

Are not our lives supposed to be as living sacrifices to God?

Unity and division

It may sound weird in direct reference to sex, but where two or more are gathered in Jesus' name there He is with them? Is not God omnipresent also? Why are we so uncomfortable speaking of sex which is holy in marriage?

Now, it only sounds weird because we have become so conditioned to our culture — and not only through feminism — that we would consider the spiritual natures and implications of our act to be separate from our actions. We only associate some things with being spiritual — church, prayer, meditation, fasting, serving, etc.

This is one of the beliefs that hinders not only our prayers but our relationships with God and with others.

Feminism is divisive. It sets men against women. However, that is probably the least insidious nature of what it does.

- It sets mind against body — to fit in you should get tattoos, cut your hair short, don’t have to worry about your appearance, go along with the crowd, give in to peer pressure, etc.

- It sets the heart against the body — follow your heart and enjoy casual sex, eat this because it tastes good without concern for your health, be lazy today it’s only just missing one workout, etc.
- It sets heart against mind — it’s OK to divorce because your husband/wife was already cheating on you by looking an pornography / having an emotional affair / not attracted / not the right one / etc. God wouldn’t want you to be unhappy, right?
- It denies the soul/spirit — there are no spiritual implications for your actions. Do what is right for you here and now and don’t worry about anything else. Consequences be damned.

Truly, this is the insidious nature of what feminism is.

It seeks to divide and conquer at all levels sowing dischord not just on a more macroscopic level of interpersonal relationships but also on the intrapersonal microscopic level of how we view ourselves and our relationship with God.

This is why I believe why so many men are suicidal and depressed in today’s society, and 25%+ of women are on some sort of mental or anti-depressant medication. The level of cognitive dissonance created through internal strife is not something that we were meant to live with.

Conclusions

Now, as Christians it is only in the Spirit that we are able to sync up and have true Unity, and it is in this Unity that we have joy and peace. The outside pressures of the world that will attempt to divide you between the Spirit and the flesh will melt away. It’s not so much about happiness but removing the internal dischord that we will find peace and joy.

When it feels weird or uncomfortable to talk about the Truth, that means you were beliving in and conditioned to a lie. This is not good. This is something that needs to be taken to repentence.

I think the rash of posts among the men of the manosphere has led me to this place of understanding a greater emphasis of what is going on at this fundamental level.

To me it’s not really about having it all together. None of us will ever have it all together.

Rather, it is about eliminating the seeds of destruction and dischord within ourselves from feminism as well as Satan and his demons. Removing the knives, the swords, the barbs, the flaming arrows of the evil one. Then, and only then can you allow God to come into those places and work His healing.

You can never do enough good to right your wrongs. This is the grace of God.
Rip out the evil from among you:

1. Confession/apologies for wronging or hurting others [and to God]
2. Receive grace and forgivness from God. We may not receive it from others.
3. Walk into the joy, peace, and charisma we receive from God because of grace and forgiveness.

4. Then walk into the repetence in order to not repeat the same mistakes again.

Repent of being ashamed for what you believe. Repent of pedestalizing women and their feelings. Repent of apologizing when you don't need to. Repent of not speaking up for the Truth. Repent of the porn. Repent of the erotica. Repent of the laziness and sloth. Repent of the lust. Repent of pride. Repent of the wrath. Repent of the gluttony. Repent of the envy. Repent when you weren't considerate. Repent when you weren't loving. Repent of everything that can come between you and God.

It is important to not only repent of the things that you did do but also of what you didn't do especially if you were fearful about talking about God's Truth.

Then allow God to work His healing power. Allow God to bring unity to your mind, heart, body/strength, and soul/spirit.

Then, if you have faith, moral excellence, and knowledge, then start exercising it in exhibiting self control, perseverence, godliness, brotherly kindness/love, and love.

Marriage

April 11, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been following the conversation on marriage and divorce on Empathological, and it has migrated over to More on marriage at moosenorseman's (thanks to Elspeth for cuing me into it).

The constituents of marriage

The root of the issue isn't the law itself but the Spirit of the law which Jesus makes abundantly clear in Matthew 5:

> 27 "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall not commit adultery'; 28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman with lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart. 29 If your right eye makes you [w]stumble, tear it out and throw it from you; for it is better for you [x]to lose one of the parts of your body, [y]than for your whole body to be thrown into [z]hell. 30 If your right hand makes you [aa]stumble, cut it off and throw it from you; for it is better for you [ab]to lose one of the parts of your body, [ac]than for your whole body to go into [ad]hell.

However, let's take a step back and examine what marriage is so we have a better understanding of what it means to "cohabitate" or "fornicate":

In Genesis 2, we can see that God acts as the first Father to give Adam his wife Eve:

> 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God [t]fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man.
>
> 23 "This is now bone of my bones, And flesh of my flesh; [u]She shall be called [v]Woman, Because [w]she was taken out of [x]Man."

Likewise, there is the aspect of separation and joining, and sex:

> 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

Thus, marriage is generally consistuted of:

1. Father giving the daughter to the man — God giving Eve to Adam
2. Separating from family(s) — leaving father and mother
3. Coming together [to be with and live with] — joined to his wife
4. Having sex — becoming one flesh
5. In the presence of witnesses [traditionally with a wedding celebration] — in this case, Father/Jesus/Spirit and potentially angels.

Not necessarily all in that order.

A wedding celebration tends to have all of these pieces together — the father gives the daughter to the man. The man and woman are separating from their families and coming together. They are doing it in the presence of witnesses [in a celebration]. And they will consummate — COMPLETE — the marriage with sexual intercourse. This is why the bloodstained sheets were held onto after the consummation as proof in many cultures.

Consummation is a completion of all of the acts that make up a marriage. Thus, sex in itself does not consistute what is marriage.

All are integral parts of a marriage including the permanence of it. Any of the piece of what consistutes a marriage or the dissolution of the marrige is to make a mockery of marriage and the design of what God intended.

When you mock marriage you mock God.

Cohabitation, thus, is a mockery of the institution of marriage and creates dischord when they separate and even when they stay together. Fornication, thus, is a mockery of the institution of marriage and ultimately creates dischord when you separate and even when they stay together. Disobeying the father of the daughter and running off is a mockery of the institution of marriage and creates strife and dischord within families. Disunity within the marriage where husbands and wives live apart is a mockery of the institution of marriage. There are consequences for sin both in this life and the next.

Note: it is impossible to get away from witnesses since God is everywhere, the state is a witness, church is a witness, or in tribes other people are witnesses.

It is the unity of concepts that make up the institution of marriage which are critical to its function just as the unity of the body is the bride of Christ.

It is important to understand that it is unity of the husband and wife as well as the rest of the immediate family that is important. Why else does Paul, inspired by God, make the analogy that the great mystery of marriage is synonymous with Christ and the Church?

God, through Paul, is telling us that all relationships, not just between the husband and wife, but between the family and the witnesses are important. The fullness of unity. This is the reason for the celebration, just as there will be a celebration in heaven when Christ is united with His bride, the Church. Just as there is a celebration when one lost sheep is saved.

Therefore, what is divorce?

You cannot have divorce when there is “just sex” just as you cannot have divorce when there is “just cohabitation.” The mockery of the institution of marriage is already there. There is already sin before God.

Would it be best for them to separate or to marry?

To be honest, I don’t know. This is what repentance and prayer to God are for. Become right before God and cry out to Him for help to show you the path of righteousness.

But what I can tell you is that there is sin there, and there will be consequences of that sin whether they decide to marry or not. I can tell you that there is sin there, and they will need to repent of it before God and to each other. I can tell you that there is sin there, and destruction of any part(s) of that union will have consequences. I can tell you that there will be less happiness and marital satisfaction because of fornication and cohabitation whether they decide to marry or not, and even the worldly studies have born this out.

When you mess with parts of marriage without marriage there are consequences. When you decide to step out of the Truth you will live in a lie. And there are dire consequences for living a lie and stepping outside the bounds of the Truth.

Cane Caldo's post on the Scripture as a handrail is particularly apt.

What, therefore, is good?

The question, however, remains is what is good?

I would assert that this is also found in the Scriptures:

- It is not a question of whether it is lawful.
- Nor is it a question of what is good [for you only].
- It is a question of what is good for your neighbor.

> 1 Corinthians 10:23 All things are lawful, but not all things are profitable. All things are lawful, but not all things edify. 24 Let no one seek his own good, but that of his [i]neighbor.

And who is our neighbor?

> Luke 10:25 And a [l]lawyer stood up and put Him to the test, saying, "Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" 26 And He said to him, "What is written in the Law? [m]How does it read to you?" 27 And he answered, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your strength, and with all your mind; and your neighbor as yourself." 28 And He said to him, "You have answered correctly; do this and you will live." 29 But wishing to justify himself, he said to Jesus, "And who is my neighbor?"

Your neighbor is everyone, even your enemy. It is no coincidence that the parable of the good Samaritan is told after this.

Therefore, how much more is it important for the father to give away the daughter and there be witnesses to join in the celebration of marriage? How much more important is it not to fornicate before marriage? How much more important is it not to cohabitate before marriage? The nature of the unity of marriage is not only symbolic.

It is the community-wide witness and celebration of the unity of marriage and not only of the husband and the wife. This is the all encompassing unity of what is marriage on this earth. And this is the all encompassing unity of what is the marriage of Christ and the Church.

It should come as no surprise or coincidence that it was marriage that was often used by rulers to unite kingdoms that had enmity between each other. Such is the strong pull of the community created by marriage.

The hand of marriage

Think of the grip of a hand. If you use one finger and tighten it then the bond is not strong. But it still hurts if you rip it apart. If you use two fingers and tighten the bond it is stronger. But it still hurts if you rip it apart. This is what happens when you fornicate, when you cohabitate, when you sow dischord between the father and daughter, etc.

You want to clasp the bond altogether with 5 fingers at once to get the strong hold, and you never want to rip it apart. This is the essence of the (1) father giving the daughter to the man, (2) the two separating from their families, (3) them joining/living together, (4) in the presence of witnesses, and (5) it is consummated with sex.

There is unity within a grip that requires all 5 digits of the hand to be working as one. This is synonymous with marriage on this earth and the eventual marriage of Christ and the Church.

Sex is the lynchpin of marriage just as the thumb is the lynchpin of the hand, but it doesn't make up the whole marriage. It is, however, one of the unifying aspects that brings forth the important characteristics of hand function just as sex brings forth the important characteristics of family function through one flesh, pleasure, children, etc.

Sex provides the locking grip to the hand that allows the strength of the hand to be multiplied many times over, and provides unique functions such as grip for fine motor tasks which enable writing and crafting. The same thing occurs with the formation and independence of a new family unit.

This is why the lack of sex destroys marriages because it severely weakens the cohesion of the family unit. This is why fornication before marriage has far reaching negative consequences to the married. When you rip your thumb off you severely weaken the whole hand and its entire function.

An ear or a hand

April 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm sure most of you have seen this video before:

Basically, the teachable lesson is that if you're not sure whether a woman wants you to listen or to actually help her then the question becomes:

Do you need and ear or a hand?

Utilizing such a question to differentiate between situations can assist you in determining the proper course of action.

If she says an ear that doesn't mean that you have to be the one to listen to her, especially if you're trying to unbecome the quintessential nice guy. Instead it may be a better idea to have her talk to her girl friends about such things. Likewise, if she says she needs a hand that doesn't mean you have to accept either.

Don't do things for the sake of being nice. If you're going to do them do them because you want to love the other person without any expectations.

In either case, take it with a grain of salt, make her say please, and add some teasing seasoning on top of it.

Edit: If you're not the person who is supposed to be discussing a particular topic with a woman send her to the appropriate person to talk with. For wives send them to their husbands first. For single women send them to the church or her Christian friends. Basically, don't be dumb and respect the authority structures that God has outlined in the Scriptures.

God allowed it

April 15, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the more interesting lines of thought throughout the entire Scriptures is the concept that God allows horrible things to happen to us.

Job is one of those quintessential stories:

> Job 1 (NASB) 6 Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and [b]Satan also came among them. 7 The Lord said to Satan, “From where do you come?” Then Satan answered the Lord and said, “From roaming about on the earth and walking around on it.” 8 The Lord said to Satan, “Have you [c]considered My servant Job? For there is no one like him on the earth, a blameless and upright man, [d]fearing God and turning away from evil.” 9 Then Satan answered the [e]Lord, “Does Job fear God for nothing? 10 Have You not made a hedge about him and his house and all that he has, on every side? You have blessed the work of his hands, and his possessions have increased in the land. 11 But put forth Your hand now and touch all that he has; he will surely curse You to Your face.” 12 Then the Lord said to Satan, “Behold, all that he has is in your [f]power, only do not put forth your hand on him.” So Satan departed from the presence of the Lord.

All his possessions get carried off by marauders. All his children die. All his friends desert him save 3 who want him to curse God. His wife wants him to curse God. Yet he doesn’t.

As Christians living in fairly affluent societies we tend to take troubling times as that we did something wrong or we did something such that God would punish us.

For example, if I went out and sinned by hurting another person I would simply have to reap the consequences. If I wanted to make it right I would have to offer an apology. God was not involved with such evil acts committed by myself, and the consequences of the evil acts fall on me alone.

However, when troubling circumstances or evil befalls you possibly for even no reason at all that’s not God which is causing your circumstances or temptations. But the comforting thing is to know that He allowed it to happen. We can stand firm that Jesus promised to Christians that we will have difficulty walking through life in His name.

Let me explain this through the alternatives.

1. If I’m a Christian and I’m walking away from God then what trouble will there be? Perhaps none in some circumstances. To those who would fall into apostasy that is only more proof that God doesn’t exist. There’s no reason for Satan or demons to attack those who are already going astray of their own will.
2. If I’m a Christian who is complacent or lukewarm then what trouble will there be? Life often goes swimmingly when we’re just moving through it minding our own business and only concerned about ourselves. But what growth is there in that?

While you could say that at least the person is not deserting their faith what credit is that to their relationship between God and others? Time is one of the resources that we all have and if we're squandering it then that's inevitably a bad thing. God hates the lukewarm and will spit them out of His mouth.

3. But when we follow God that's often when things are troubling. How hard is it to speak up for the truth among non-believers when they say bad things about you or the church? How hard is it to speak up in the midst of believers when they espouse equality or feminism in marriage rather than what God values? I know personally I have failed to speak up in such circumstances, but I am getting better.

The simple fact is that it's the easy way out in #1 and #2. Often times consequences won't be severe or there at all. You may be rewarded for acting unrighteous. But God cannot be mocked.

Similarly, the very nature of the Christian walk is that it is going to be hard. When you are doing what is right there is going to be troubling times coming your way. You will be disliked and hated by other people. You will become a target of attack. Paul did.

> 2 Corinthians 11 (NASB)
>
> 21 To my shame I must say that we have been weak by comparison. But in whatever respect anyone else is bold—I speak in foolishness—I am just as bold myself. 22 Are they Hebrews? So am I. Are they Israelites? So am I. Are they [g]descendants of Abraham? So am I. 23 Are they servants of Christ?—I speak as if insane—I more so; in [h]far more labors, in [i]far more imprisonments, [j]beaten times without number, often in danger of death. 24 Five times I received from the Jews thirty-nine lashes. 25 Three times I was beaten with rods, once I was stoned, three times I was shipwrecked, a night and a day I have spent in the deep. 26 I have been on frequent journeys, in dangers from rivers, dangers from robbers, dangers from my countrymen, dangers from the Gentiles, dangers in the city, dangers in the wilderness, dangers on the sea, dangers among false brethren; 27 I have been in labor and hardship, [k]through many sleepless nights, in hunger and thirst, often without food, in cold and [l]exposure. 28 Apart from such [m]external things, there is the daily pressure on me of concern for all the churches. 29 Who is weak without my being weak? Who is [n]led into sin [o]without my intense concern? 30 If I have to boast, I will boast of what pertains to my weakness. 31 The God and Father of the Lord Jesus, He who is blessed forever, knows that I am not lying.

My point is that it's always easy to play the victim. Woe is me. Why are these things happening to me?

"Christian" nice guys have this same mindset. Why is all of this so hard? Why do I have to do this and that? Why can't women love me for who I am? "Christian" feminist women do the same.

Was Jesus a victim? Was Paul a victim? Was David a victim? Was Abraham a victim?

Opportunities and challenges

I've somewhat discussed this peripherally on this blog before, but often the greatest witness is when you can act righteously when the situations are the most difficult.

Have a rebellious wife? God allowed that to happen. Have disobedient children? God allowed that to happen. The church has become ingrained with feminism to the point of churchianity? God allowed that to happen. Your boss hates you for no good reason? God allowed that to happen.

Some of the fault may lie with you because we are responsible for our own actions. But some of the fault may also lie with them because they are supposed to be Christians as well. However, regardless of how much "fault" there may be to go around, this does not change how you are supposed to respond.

As I stated in apologies one, two and three, it is important to confess your fault and move on to do the right thing. Even if the other person doesn't want to do it. Even if they maltreat you because of it. Even if try to goad you on to do the wrong thing. Even if they refuse to repent themselves. Even if they think they've done nothing wrong.

It is not they that matter, it is God that matters.

> Matthew 5 (NASB) 10 "Blessed are those who have been persecuted for the sake of righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. 11 "Blessed are you when people insult you and persecute you, and falsely say all kinds of evil against you because of Me. 12 Rejoice and be glad, for your reward in heaven is great; for in the same way they persecuted the prophets who were before you.

Instead, hardship is an opportunity to action. And opportunity to do what is right. To overcome adversity and do what is righteous.

I don't feel like reading my Bible today? I should read my Bible today. I don't feel like praying today? I should pray to today. I don't feel like talking to people today? I should talk to people today with love, joy, peace, and kindness. People are saying horrible things about me? I should pray for them and bless them. I don't want to eat healthy? I should eat healthy. I don't want to work hard? I should work hard.

The true test of faith comes when there are hardships. It separates the wheat from the chaff. Remember, God allowed such hardships to happen. There is always a choice. But the righteous choice is often the hardest choice.

- Difficulty and hardships and overcoming them are a sign of growth, especially in the maturity of Christians. A lack of difficulty and hardships is a bad sign because you are either stagnating or regressing.
- What are you going to do with the difficult situations that God allowed to happen? Will you be a blessing or a curse?

Not game but God

April 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As you may know, Heartise had a post about Jesus having game over the past week.

The reality is that Jesus had God (was/is God) not game.

This is what happens when your “truth” is game. Everything you see in reality becomes in reference to game.

This is not how Christians are supposed to think or act. Instead, we are to act like Jesus did in bringing everything in reference to God.

As the Scriptures state,

> Isaiah 5:20 Woe to those who call evil good, and good evil; Who [a]substitute darkness for light and light for darkness; Who [b]substitute bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter! 21 Woe to those who are wise in their own eyes And clever in their own sight!

Is the concern of Jesus over holding His frame… or rather what God wants Him to do and nothing can stop Him?

Is the concern of Jesus over social proof, or situationally aware, or not being boring… or reaching out to those around Him?

Is the concern of Jesus over being vulnerable… or rather using His situation and knowledge to connect with others to bring them to the faith?

Is Jesus a “dark triad” or instead pushing people to see Truth at all times?

This is why I continually say that Christians don’t need game but rather God. When you are willing to stand up for God then you have His joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma within you. And you will become a man or a woman who is attractive and desirable to other Christians.

It may be useful to understand some aspects of how to relate to other people, but at the heart of the matter is that we should be building up relationships with others in relation to Christ. When you can connect with people on a level of passionate discussion and are solid in what you believe then your mind is transformed and you will be transformed.

We’re not about emulating being attractive. Though, much of what we are called to do as Christians can be attractive as we attempt to emulate Jesus.

Unity

April 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As many are aware, there may have been things brewing between SSM and Lena, LGR, and others for a while. Matt Forney's post is a boiling over of that. Free Northerner addresses it peripherally, and again in the context of the manosphere.

This post is directed to all of the Christians embroiled within this affair both those directly involved and those who have brought themselves in on the sides.

Speaking up for the truth.

Who is right or wrong? I don't know. Does it even matter?

As a Christian, when strife and dissesion breaks out it is very easy to just say "not my problem" and just watch from a distance afar.

I believe this to be incorrect. In fact, there are times when not speaking up for the truth is obviously the wrong thing to do:

> Matthew 10 (NASB)
>
> 32 "Therefore everyone who [z]confesses Me before men, I will also confess [aa]him before My Father who is in heaven. 33 But whoever [ab]denies Me before men, I will also deny him before My Father who is in heaven.
>
> 34 "Do not think that I came to [ac]bring peace on the earth; I did not come to bring peace, but a sword. 35 For I came to set a man against his father, and a daughter against her mother, and a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; 36 and a man's enemies will be the members of his household. 37 "He who loves father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me; and he who loves son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me. 38 And he who does not take his cross and follow after Me is not worthy of Me. 39 He who has found his [ad]life will lose it, and he who has lost his [ae]life for My sake will find it.

In fact, I am beginning to think of the mindset of "if this makes life easier for me to just do nothing" is a completely wrong mindset to have. Christians should not be afraid of conflict, especially when speaking the truth.

This is one of the inherent problems with the Christian nice guy so learn it well. Speak up for the Truth.

One easy example of this is that it directly applies to husbands and wives. It's easy for the husband to let his wife's nagging go and not confront her about it. It's easy for the wife to not speak up her opinion about a situation. While that is "easier" in the short term, it leads to long term building up of resentment and overall increase of strife and dissession in a relationship.

Being able to face and overcome conflict is a necessary step of being a Christian.

Unity

The Scriptures speak to unity in many, many, many different places:

> 1 Corinthians 1:10 I appeal to you, brothers, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that all of you agree with one another so that there may be no divisions among you and that you may be perfectly united in mind and thought.
>
> 1 Corinthians 12:12-13 The body is a unit, though it is made up of many parts; and though all its parts are many, they form one body. So it is with Christ. For we were all baptized by one Spirit into one body–whether Jews or Greeks, slave or free–and we were all given the one Spirit to drink.
>
> 1 John 4:12 No one has ever seen God; but if we love one another, God lives in us and his love is made complete in us.
>
> 1 Peter 3:8 Finally, all of you, live in harmony with one another; be sympathetic, love as brothers, be compassionate and humble.
>
> 2 Chronicles 30:12 Also in Judah the hand of God was on the people to give them unity of mind to carry out what the king and his officials had ordered, following the word of the LORD.
>
> Colossians 3:13-14 Bear with each other and forgive whatever grievances you may have against one another. Forgive as the Lord forgave you. And over all these virtues put on love, which binds them all together in perfect unity.
>
> Ephesians 2:14 For he himself is our peace, who has made the two one and has destroyed the barrier, the dividing wall of hostility,
>
> Ephesians 4:3 Make every effort to keep the unity of the Spirit through the bond of peace.
>
> Ephesians 4:16 From him the whole body, joined and held together by every supporting ligament, grows and builds itself up in love, as each part does its work.
>
> Galatians 3:26-28 You are all sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus, for all of you who were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free, male nor female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus.

Let me be clear about this.

I am not in the business of promoting the manosphere. I am not in the business of promoting the red pill. I am not in the business of saying who is right or who is wrong in such situations. I am not in the business of trying to promote my own agenda. I am not in the business of fracturing the relationships of Christians.

Rather, I'm in the business of promoting God.

No Christian should be trying to promote their side. Instead, Christians should be promoting what God wants. God wants all Christians to dwell together in unity, love, and Spirit in order to be a witness in the world.

Right now we have a poor witness and lots of disunity. People are being caught up and taking sides. This is sinful.

Direct involvement

This is a clear example of where all of the Christians involved should be apologizing to one another (one), (two), (three) for any wrongs they may have committed.

Even if you were totally in the right, you should forgive the other person:

> Matthew 6:14 “For if you forgive others for their transgressions, your heavenly Father will also forgive you.
>
> Ephesians 4:32 Be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, just as God in Christ also has forgiven you.
>
> Colossians 3:13 bearing with one another, and forgiving each other, whoever has a complaint against anyone; just as the Lord forgave you, so also should you.

I find it disconcerting that Christians have such a hard time with this. I understand it’s really hard to forgive someone who you believe has wronged you deeply. But God calls you to do that.

I know because I have struggled with this over the past couple of months and finally come to a place where I can lay aside my pride of being right in favor of doing what is righteous.

> Galatians 5:19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.

Forgive the other person, apologize as necessary, and reconcile to bring unity in the body of Christ. This is what God commands.

Don’t let your pride strangle your heart and keep you in your sin or as the Scriptures state God won’t forgive you. Don’t pay lip service to God’s commands and make yourself a hypocritical Christian.

> Matthew 5:23 Therefore if you are presenting your [s]offering at the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, 24 leave your [t]offering there before the altar and go; first be reconciled to your brother, and then come and present your [u]offering.

Tomorrow is Easter. Don’t celebrate the resurrection of Jesus tomorrow without having attempted to reconcile. Don’t make a mockery of what Jesus has done for us.

I don’t believe public apologies are enough. The Scriptures state to go to the person directly and reconcile directly. Choose your words carefully that you don’t offend the other.

The supporters

There are supporters on both sides of this “schism.”

Quite frankly, almost every Christian taking a side is doing the exact opposite of what is righteous in this situation. When you take a side and show support you are showing yourself to be a promoter of dissesion and strife even inadvertently. You are providing judgment on who is “right” and who is “wrong” instead of promoting love and unity.

This is a sin. And those who engage in such sin will not inhereit the kingdom of God.

> Galatians 5:19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.

There should be no sides taken.

Instead, there should be promotion of repentance (if any) and reconciliation and forgiveness between the two parties as both sides claim to be Christians. Whatever the dispute it doesn’t matter. Even if someone is right or even is someone is wrong. Don’t promote anyone’s side except God’s.

> Matthew 5:43 “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.’ 44 But I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, 45 so that you may [a]be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. 46 For if you love those who love you, what reward do you have? Do not even the tax collectors do the same? 47 If you greet only your brothers, what more are you doing than others? Do not even the Gentiles do the same? 48 Therefore [b]you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.

This whole situation has only proven that most Christians are not on God’s side on this particular issue. They only care about themselves more than they do about God. They care more about helping their friends more than doing what God wants. They care more about supporting someone instead of calling them to unity, repentance, and reconciliation.

This is simply not what God has called Christians to be. I am deeply grieved by this.

Many of those involved are Christians who are doing a good work in persuading many to eschew feminism and instead seek God and His values. It pains me to see that the divisions here would so easily trip up these Christians.

Conclusions

This is actually an extremely good lesson for the Christian manosphere and related sites. God allows many things to happen. Even bad things among Christians.

Instead of taking sides and promoting sides we should instead be reaching out to one another in an attempt to forgive and reconcile. This includes Christians who are not directly involved with the situation(s) as well in order to provide support and encouragement for the Christians involved to forgive and reconcile.

Pouring more fuel on the fire in order to support your position or your friend's position does the exact opposite by creating more tension and strife. It's not about winning an argument. Lay aside the pride and put on humility instead. Understand that, whether you were right or wrong, by arguing you're hurting other people. By siding you are hurting other people. Being a Christian is not about being right.

We are human, and we sin. The difference is that we are humble enough to accept God's grace and forgiveness. This allows us to repent and transform our minds and thinking to be like God's and to desire what God wants:

- Forgive as God has forgiven you.
- Reach out to the other side and reconcile as best as possible personally not just publically.
- Pray to God that He bless your enemies even be they other Christians.
- Apologize for creating and fostering dissension and strife, even if you think you are right
- Repent and turn from enmities, strife, […] outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [and] [j]factions and live in unity.
- Don't take a side but rather encourage apologies, repentance, and reconciliation.

Sadly, I am seeing more human concern that godly concern in this situation. When God allows such things to happen, what you choose to do with it is the fruit. Allow God to work in you to have your fruit be good fruit.

As a Christian "bystander" I won't keep silent on the matter and instead encourage forgiveness, repentance, grace, unity, love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, humility, and self control to all of the Christians involved or commenting on this matter.

I pray that you will do the same.

P.S. Keep in mind that this is the same way you should be thinking as a single Christian looking for a spouse, and as a married Christian. This is one of the easiest ways that the enemy can insert himself into your life and distract you away from what God wants.

Unity Part 2

April 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As the situation continues to spiral out of control and also in the comments section of the Unity post has people arguing back and forth what is Christian behavior, I'm going to share about my experience with a similar situation.

The entire reason why I wrote the Apologies series (one), (two), and (three) is because of a personal situation that I had to go through recently.

The situation

Prior to writing that series, I struggled heavily with a situation over a 5 months period where I had greatly offended someone. It was a constant process of struggle between God and myself about what I should do about it. I didn't want to apologize and admit that I may have hurt that person because I hadn't really done anything wrong — the other person had misinterpreted my remarks.

The situation ended up devolving into a negative spiral like I am currently seeing now. I commented about how I was right and I didn't mean something like that. Then the other person got angry with me and criticized me. I didn't take the criticism well and became more defensive and lashed back against that person. Then the person lashed back against me. We continued into the spiral for a while ignoring each other at different places where we met up with groups.

I knew it was unhealthy for me. I was angry. I was hurt. I was bitter about the whole situation. I could see the same thing in the other person. They were angry. They were hurt. They were bitter. We wanted nothing to do with each other, and even though no one else in the group(s) may have noticed it was interfering with our faith in God. It was interfering with the fellowship of believers even if we believed it wasn't.

Coming to the place of grace and mercy

Over the past month before I wrote the apologies series (so ~4 months after the first instance), God was able to show me that of which my pride was interfering with my ability to care more about the other person than my own personal want to be right about the situation. I struggled and struggled against it. The other person was not willing to even make an attempt to lift a finger to right the situation and was even going so far as to act to make it worse. I didn't want to be the one to take the first step.

A couple of days before I started on the apologies series it took me multiples hours to think about how to apologize now that I decided to apologize. I kept thinking and writing down what I wanted to say and the rewriting it.

This was because I kept wanting to say that the other person did something wrong or misinterpreted what I said. They were doing something sinful against God. By continuing to allow the situation to devolve into that hot mess they were not doing what was right. And by and large it was true. They were in sin too.

However, this is one of the true contexts of what Jesus said about judging:

> Matthew 7:1“Do not judge so that you will not be judged. 2 For in the way you judge, you will be judged; and [a]by your standard of measure, it will be measured to you. 3 Why do you look at the speck that is in your brother’s eye, but do not notice the log that is in your own eye? 4 Or how [b]can you say to your brother, ‘Let me take the speck out of your eye,’ and behold, the log is in your own eye? 5 You hypocrite, first take the log out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to take the speck out of your brother’s eye.

Right now, in this situation, each side is going back and forth about how the other person is a liar and a manipulator and vile. Yet, they can’t see the plank in their own eye. They are doing the same thing to each other with accusations and vitriolic comments. They say they want to forgive, repent and reconcile, but they don’t do it in a manner worthy of Christ.

The place that God brought me to was that what the other person did wrong doesn’t matter. It is they that have to come to a place between God and themselves to apologize and you can’t make them. If you mention what they did wrong they’re more likely to think your apology isn’t sincere and it will destroy the relationship further even though you’re there to apologize!

Thus, the apology needs to be all about you and your mistakes only. This is what is meant by taking the plank out of your own eye. By taking out this plank without mentioning the speck, that is a powerful witness.

The apology

In my apology, I started with the encounter that it happened. I explained why I felt what I felt and why I wrong in doing that. I apologized for all of the nasty remarks that I said. I went to the next encounter and apologized for those remarks. I continued doing this for every encounter including my sins of omission — my lack of initiative to do what Jesus called me to do in Scripture which was to become right myself with my brothers and sisters in Christ. To forgive as God has forgiven me. To love and pray for others even when they hurt me.

Not once did I mention anything that the other person did. I didn’t mention any of their sins. I didn’t call them out on why they said what they said. I didn’t ask them why they didn’t take the initiative to make things right. I only focused on what I did.

And you know what? The other person accepted my apology. I didn’t expect it, but they did. I was able to take the plank out of my own eye. This allowed God to work in my heart to bring me to a place of peace and joy as opposed to holding onto the anger, hurt, and bitterness.

What they didn’t do was apologize to me for their actions. And that’s OK. That’s up to them and God.

Yes, it is my place as a Christian to call them out for their sins via Matthew 18, but I understand at this point in time that what matters more to God is grace, mercy, forgiveness, and reconciliation. If I go back and revisit recent past hurts and anger quickly is that going to allow our relationship in Christ to rebuild and thrive?Likely not.

Sometimes the best way is to set the example, even if the other person does not respond in a Christian manner. God may have to bring them to a similar place first before they are able to apologize themselves. You don't know what His timing is. Perhaps they may never apologize. That's OK too because the apology is not all about them but also about you and youre relationship with God.

That is the hardest part. To admit only your mistakes and apologize for them and not talk about how they other person may or may not have done something wrong. They may even hate you more for it. Such is is the strong temptation of wanting to accuse others and lay blame at their feet even if it was justified.

Conclusions

When I talk about how the apology is not about the other person I not joking in the slightest. Although being right with the other person is important because we are to dwell in unity with believers, it is quintessential that you be right with God. As I wrote in Apologies Part 2, the apology that you make is not just to the person whom you wronged by lashing out at. It is also part of your reconciliation with God.

The apology is part of your admission to God that you are a sinner. You sinned. You messed up. You made a mistake such that you worsened a situation creating dissension and strife even if the initial encounter(s) were right. You have come to a place of humility such that the anger you have, the bitterness you have, the hurt that you have you will admit to both the other person and Jesus that you are a sinner in need of forgiveness. This allows God to work in your heart in order to transform you through His grace and mercy.

As the manosphere has talked about in regard to marriage, the hardest time for a wife to be submissive is when she feels like she shouldn't. The hardest time for a wife to be submissive is when she adamantly disagrees with a husband's decision. The hardest time for a husband to love his wife is when she is in a state of rebellion against him and God. This destroys the unity within the marriage and often leads toward a downward spiral into divorce. And yet, the Scriptural commands are quite clear.

The advice we give in the manosphere to the men about Godly/self improvement is true — it's not about the other person… it's about you. You are the only person you can change, and you are supposed to reflect God if you call yourself a Christian. It's very difficult to think outside of yourself and your hurt and your anger at women, churchianity, society, and even family, but that is the power of God within us. He allows us to do things that are impossible for humans.

Likewise, if you can't imagine yourself apologizing, repenting, having mercy and grace, and reconciling with the other person that's true. You can't do it alone. It is only God in you that can work what we as humans deem impossible. Cry out to God for help to assist you do the right thing.

You always have a choice: Will you do what God wants you to do, or will you do what you want to do?

This being an Easter post, here’s a good song about turning away from sin to Christ:

Unity Part 3 — The Church

April 22, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Donal's One Body post, mdavid and Denise make good points about the schism and disunity in the Church.

Schisms

Specifically, if you're read up on the reformation there are some big points of disagreement between the Prostestants and the Catholic Church. These are normally described by the five Solas.

- Sola Scriptura (by Scripture alone)
- Sola Fide (by faith alone)
- Sola gratia (by grace alone)
- Solus Christus (Christ alone)
- Soli Deo gloria (glory to God alone)

I personally have mixed feelings about all of this.

Having been brought up in a Protestant non-denominational church it is quite obvious that it is my inclination to believe in the five Solas. However, the Protestant denominations as a whole do a very poor job passing the eye test (or rather, fruit test):

> Matthew 7 (NASB)
>
> 15 "Beware of the false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves. 16 You will [k]know them by their fruits. [l]Grapes are not gathered from thorn bushes nor figs from thistles, are they? 17 So every good tree bears good fruit, but the bad tree bears bad fruit. 18 A good tree cannot produce bad fruit, nor can a bad tree produce good fruit. 19 Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. 20 So then, you will [m]know them by their fruits.
>
> 21 "Not everyone who says to Me, 'Lord, Lord,' will enter the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of My Father who is in heaven will enter. 22 Many will say to Me on that day, 'Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in Your name, and in Your name cast out demons, and in Your name perform many [n]miracles?' 23 And then I will declare to them, 'I never knew you; depart from Me, you who practice lawlessness.'

Frankly speaking, the whole of Protestant Church's does not have good fruit today. It is espouses views of feminism rather than God. There is much bad fruit from those who claim they are Christians. Divorce, entitlement, factions, strife, and what have you are rampant.

Overall, the Catholic Church has done a much better job of this in that they hold fast to the Scriptures better than the Protestants, especially in terms of the importance of families. However, as some of the Catholics have told me there is the rot of feminism seeping into the Catholic church slowly as well.

Holistically speaking

Instead of delving into denominational differences, I'd like to present an alternative view.

One of the analogies I make for people is that in healthcare there are going to be lots of different people in every profession:

- There are lots of good doctors and there are lots of bad doctors
- There are lots of good nurses and there are lots of bad nurses
- There are lots of good chiropractors and lots of bad chiropractors
- There are lots of good physical therapists and lots of bad physical therapist
- There are lots of good athletic trainers and lots of bad athletic trainers
- There are lots of good personal trainers and lots of bad personal trainers
- Etc.

At a fundamental level, this is quite an obvious set of statements when you think about it. Most of them are looking to improve overall health, but not all of them do a good job. What separates them from the good and the bad is their interaction with patients or clients and the results that they get from them.

So too I regard the denominational differences in doctrine in the Church. This is one of the reasons why I have ceased to talk about denominations but rather focus on people's words and actions. As I stated in the One Body post:

It's my opinion that all of the divisions in the Church in terms of doctrine matter very little though. Those that are Christians follow Jesus' commands — they love one another as He has loved them (John 13:34-15; John 15:12). As Jesus stated many times throughout the gospels those that are in Him will bear good fruit (Matt 7, Luke 6). Those that bear good fruit (fruit of the Spirit Galatians 5) are Christians regardless of what "denomination" they are.

When I meet someone who claims to be a Christian, I can tell from their interactions with other people whether they actually believe in what they say and carry it out. I don't need to know what their denomination is. I don't need to know what they specifically believe whether it's Sola Scriptura or Prima Scriptura. I know they are following God because they are obeying Jesus' commands.

The ultimate futility of taking sides

Let me skip to a different example.

It's clear that both the Churches in China as well as in Islamic countries are being persecuted heavily. People are losing their property, their families, their money, their livelihoods, and even their lives for the sake of Christ.

No one from any denomination would assert that these Christians suffering and being persecuted for believing in Jesus are not Christians.

Yet, these Christians probably know nothing of Sola Scriptura or Prima Scriptura. They know nothing of different denominational differences. They don't know anything about Protestants, Catholics, or Orthodox. They have no inkling of what it means to have differences from other Christians.

However, these Christians are willing to give their lives for the sake of Jesus. That is a powerful statement and witness which transcends denominations.

Abundance and prosperity

Abundance and prosperity are from God although it is very easy to allow it to affect us in the form of entitlement.

As the Church grew through the middle ages the prosperity was immense. The Church had spread all throughout the known world including all of Europe. However, this growth ultimately resulted in the Reformation as there were "potentially" corrupt practices in the RCC.

From what I've read on Martin Luther's Theses, breach, and excommunication (here's a summary), it seemed both sides were not interested in unity aside from Karl von Miltitz to his credit. Luther was initially predisposed to reconciliation and concessions, but it devolved from there into an irreparable schism much like the current manosphere incident has now (See Unity and Unity Part 2).

I do not find it a coincidence that as the church has become more prosperous — especially in modern times — that there have been more schisms and splits within it.

> Mark 10:23 And Jesus, looking around, *said to His disciples, "How hard it will be for those who are wealthy to enter the kingdom of God!" 24 The disciples were amazed at His words. But Jesus *answered again and *said to them, "Children, how hard it is to enter the kingdom of God! 25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." 26 They were even more astonished and said to Him, "[b]Then who can be saved?" 27 Looking at them, Jesus *said, "With people it is impossible, but not with God; for all things are possible with God."

People can go make their own church rather than resolving the differences in the body of Christ. People care more about being right than they do about God's commands. People think they know what is right, but they fail to love.

> 1 Corinthians 8:Now concerning things sacrificed to idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge [a]makes arrogant, but love edifies. 2 If anyone supposes that he knows anything, he has not yet known as he ought to know; 3 but if anyone loves God, he is known by Him.

That God has blessed us has allowed us to do more to love and to serve, but instead many of us use the prosperity and wealth for our own ends rather than for God.

I believe this is why God put such a big emphasis on tithing and offerings. His Scriptures on tithing and offerings are also one of the few Scriptures that have promises associated with them. As we have more we tend to become less generous and more selfish, but that is not how God wants us to think or act.

Conclusions

As much as I think knowing and debating what doctrine and tradition is true is a good thing, it is very easy to lose the proverbial sight of the forest when you're among the trees.

It's more important for someone to believe in Jesus and the Scripture and then to walk it out in their daily life rather than having an opinion on whether it is faith alone saves or not. It's more important for the Church to understand what we can agree on and affirm than to focus on any differences that may be there. After all, Christians aren't defined by their doctrine or traditions; they're defined by if they're living out Jesus' commands.

How then are we to understand doctrine and tradition in the context of the Christian faith?

Doctrine and tradition, in my mind, are Good. It is like the Law. The meaning behind doctrine and traditions are to affirm our faith. Likewise, we observe the Law because the Law is Good. God gave the Law just as many doctrines and traditions spring forth from Jesus' instruction.

Jesus came not to abolish the Law but to fulfill it. Yet, we are not bound by doctrines or traditions just as we are not bound by the Law. We are bound by grace, and this is the freedom afforded to us by Jesus through the establishment of the New Testament by the shedding of His blood.

It is by this measure important to know the meaning behind many traditions and doctrines just as Jesus explained the intent of the Law.

> Mark 12:28 One of the scribes came and heard them arguing, and recognizing that He had answered them well, asked Him, "What commandment is the [q]foremost of all?" 29 Jesus answered, "The foremost is, 'Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one Lord; 30 and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength.' 31 The second is this, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' There is no other commandment greater than these." 32 The scribe said to Him, "Right, Teacher; You have truly stated that He is One, and there is no one else besides Him; 33 and to love Him with all the heart and with all the understanding and with all the strength, and to love one's neighbor as himself, is much more than all burnt offerings and sacrifices." 34 When Jesus saw that he had answered intelligently, He said to him, "You are not far from the kingdom of God." After that, no one would venture to ask Him any more questions.

Therefore, it is good to debate doctrine and tradition. But just as the Law-breaking requires sacrifice, we should never condemn those that live life in a manner worthy of Christ if they hold different doctrine or traditions:

> I desire [e]compassion (or mercy) and not a sacrifice

This is what is meant when Jesus states from Hosea in regard to Jesus dining with the tax collectors and sinners (Matt 9) and breaking the “laws” of the Sabbath (Matt 12) where the Pharisees were condemning the innocent.

God knows the hearts of all, and He is reflected in those that live according to His commands regardless of their tradition or doctrine.

I believe these are the common points that most if not all Christian denominations agree on in regard to Christianity and salvation, and those that believe and follow Him will be saved:

- Jesus was born of the virgin through the power of the Holy Spirit.
- Jesus lived a sinless life.
- Jesus was crucified and died [for our sins].
- Jesus was buried for 3 days.
- Jesus was resurrected on the 3rd day [overcoming sin, death, and which proved He is God].
- Jesus sends the Holy Spirit to believers.
- Jesus said all who follow Him should be baptized.
- Jesus said all who follow Him should take communion / Eucharist in rememberance of Him.
- Jesus said to make disciples of all nations.
- Jesus said those who love Him will obey His commands (Logos).
- Jesus said love one another as He loved us.
- Jesus said that there would be God’s judgment for that which we have done on earth.

Jenny Erikson did not test the spirits

April 24, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was going to write this a while ago, but I kept forgetting. I haven't seen any of the other Christian manosphere bloggers cover this.

If you remember back to when Jenny Erikson posted information about how God told her to divorice:

> Details aren't needed. Leif is the father of my amazing children, and I want nothing more than to be his friend again someday, regardless of what happens in our marriage. But things have been very broken between us for a very long time, and it took every ounce of courage I had to take the step that went against everything my religious culture told me but somehow I knew God was telling me was right.
>
> To be told that this beautiful, wonderful thing I have learned exists in my soul, this thing that gives me the strength to flip my life over when nothing else has worked, this thing that has made me braver than I thought possible, and made me rely on God more than I ever have in my entire life … to be told that this is a perversion of His plan for me? Well, it would suck, but things have been so full of suckage the past few years that all I can really do is roll my eyes.

Apparently, she didn't read her Bible enough to hit the passage in 1 John 4 (NASB):

> 1 Beloved, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits to see whether they are from God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world. 2 By this you know the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is from God; 3 and every spirit that does not confess Jesus is not from God; this is the spirit of the antichrist, of which you have heard that it is coming, and now it is already in the world. 4 You are from God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is He who is in you than he who is in the world. 5 They are from the world; therefore they speak as from the world, and the world listens to them. 6 We are from God; he who knows God listens to us; he who is not from God does not listen to us. By this we know the spirit of truth and the spirit of error.

SSM already had a post on why God hates divorce and why God never contradicts anything He says in His Scriptures, so I need go no further than that.

Suffice to say, Jenny was convinced by the spirit of the antichrist to divorce her husband. She didn't do what the Scriptures said to test the spirits, otherwise she would've confirmed that it wasn't God but an evil spirit.

Any time time that you're being told to say or do anything or get a feeling or sign that you think may be from God you should be testing the spirits in order to see if they are from God.

Unity Part 4 — the delicate balance of love in marriage

April 24, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to finish off this series on Unity by discussing the marriage relationship more extensively specifically from the husband's point of view. If you have missed the previous posts on Unity they are as follows:

1. Unity — on dissensions in the body of Christ
2. Unity Part 2 — on making things right with others
3. Unity Part 3 — in the Church

When considering how a husband should love in marriage, most people, even Christians, will jump straight to the verses out of Ephesians 5 — love your wife as Christ loves the Church.

However, let me talk about this from a slightly different perspective.

As the head in marriage, the husband is supposed to love 3 ways:

- Jesus/God
- Himself
- His wife

This may be a foreign concept to most churchian or feminized Christians. Heck, it may even be a foreign concept to many Christians in general. So let's look at why this is the case.

Jesus and God

We love God because we desire a relationship with Him. He is first. We have the Holy Spirit in us, and we have accepted the grace from God which Jesus paid for by His death and resurrection.

Thus, first and foremost our love must be with God. To be a good head we must align ourselves, by the Holy Spirit, to Him. We must put time into building a relationship and growing in Him.

This is pretty obvious, but it's often easy to put the self or others or material possessions and wealth ahead of God.

Himself

Simply put this is where most husbands who are nice guys or engrossed in churchianity or have feminist mindsets fail.

Think about how the God and the Scriptures view marriage:

> Genesis 2:24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh.

The husband and wife are as one flesh. The verses in Ephesians reaffirm this:

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body.
>
> 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

Note what the Scripture says about the husband loving himself. Although he is the head of the family/household the husband is to love his wife as himself and as his own body.

How does this conconcile with Christ loving the Church and giving Himself up for her?

Alternatively, another way to think about it is this: if a husband puts all of his time and effort into loving God and loving his wife then what happens to him?

He is likely to become run down, disoriented, and potentially even bitter and resentful. A husband must be able to know when he needs to “recharge his batteries” so to speak in order that he might be able to be refreshed. This allows him to be able to pour quality time and effort into his relationship with God and his wife.

Think about a career. If you’re forced to work overtime and you have no time for anything else you start to become massively stressed. This leads to deteriorating health and will eventually end up in sickness and/or depression.

A husband must be able to recognize this and make time to take care of himself because He is also a temple of the Holy Spirit. Similarly, because loving God, loving your wife, and loving others is more than a full time job. It is all all-time job.

I will further examine this line of thought in the next section.

His wife

One of the lies of churchianity is the issue of SERVANT-leadership.

I emphasized the word servant because most of the feminism infused church expresses that a husband must put his wife’s needs above his own. This is because the passage in Ephesians states that “Christ gave himself up for the Church.” By that line of thought, headship is therefore put on a backburner in order for the husband to be a SERVANT to his wife.

This is one of the most devastating lies in churchianity, and I believe it sets many families down the road to divorce. As you can clearly see in the previous analysis of the Scripture this is false. A husband is to strive to love his wife as himself or as his own body which is affirmed multiple times in the same passage per the analogy of Christ loving the Church.

Let's take a better look at the life of Jesus and his ministry — how Jesus gave Himself up for the Church — to make this point more clear:

> Luke 22 — Gethsemane (before betrayal)
>
> 39 And He (Jesus) came out and proceeded as was His custom to the Mount of Olives; and the disciples also followed Him. 40 When He arrived at the place, He said to them, "Pray that you may not enter into temptation." 41 And He withdrew from them about a stone's throw, and He knelt down and began to pray, 42 saying, "Father, if You are willing, remove this cup from Me; yet not My will, but Yours be done." 43 [i]Now an angel from heaven appeared to Him, strengthening Him. 44 And being in agony He was praying very fervently; and His sweat became like drops of blood, falling down upon the ground. 45 When He rose from prayer, He came to the disciples and found them sleeping from sorrow, 46 and said to them, "Why are you sleeping? Get up and pray that you may not enter into temptation."
>
> Mark 12:35 And He went a little beyond them, and fell to the ground and began to pray that if it were possible, the hour might [o]pass Him by. 36 And He was saying, "Abba! Father! All things are possible for You; remove this cup from Me; yet not what I will, but what You will." 37 And He *came and *found them sleeping, and *said to Peter, "Simon, are you asleep? Could you not keep watch for one hour? 38 Keep watching and praying that you may not come into temptation; the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." 39 Again He went away and prayed, saying the same [p]words. 40 And again He came and found them sleeping, for their eyes were very heavy; and they did not know what to answer Him. 41 And He *came the third time, and *said to them, "[q]Are you still sleeping and resting? It is enough; the hour has come; behold, the Son of Man is being [r]betrayed into the hands of sinners. 42 Get up, let us be going; behold, the one who betrays Me is at hand!"

There are a couple things to note here:

- He proceeded to the mount of Olives to pray as was his custom. Jesus often departed away from the multitudes to be alone or to pray. The fact that this was his custom means it was a habit or potentially even a daily ritual for him.
- He withdrew and prayed multiple times. Obviously, the purpose here was not necessarily to build His relationship with God (although it did), but as you can see the an angel came and strengthened Him. Likewise, this is the same as when Jesus was tempted by Satan in the desert — angels came to minister to Him.
- This is the calm before the storm and it shows the human nature that Jesus had to struggle with in order to humble Himself to submit to God's will. That which is left at the end is purpose. If Jesus does not love Himself then He disregards the importance of the purpose that God had set within Him to carry out His will.

The main point is that it is not the husband's duty as the head to serve his wife. Rather, to be the head of the marriage as Jesus loved the Church and gave Himself up for her, the husband must be willing to love her like himself. Jesus, Himself, was not all go, go, go all of the time during His ministry. He was a human, and He had customs where He needed to be alone or away from everything in order continue his ministry.

Likewise, husbands need similar customs to rest and relax in order that they may love themselves and also love their wives.

I believe the passages in Colossians 3 and 1 Peter 3 make this a bit more clear saying how the husband should love their wives and not become embittered to her (Col 3) and that husbands should be knowledgable (understanding/considerate) of his wife as the weaker vessel because she is a coheir in Christ so that your prayers may not be hindered (1 Peter 3).

The bitterness is actually straight forward. As in the manosphere, when men see what human nature in women looks like it's easy to become angry and bitter about it.

I find the 1 Peter 3 passage a bit more intriguing mostly because of the last part of the passage — so that your prayers may not be hindered. If a husband does not love his wife as himself he has done something against God such that his prayers may be hindered. That is a powerful statement of Scripture.

Side note for wives: This is one of the ways that Christian wives should be an encouragement — not a nag — when they see destructive habits in their husbands such as not visiting the doctor, not working out, and not eating healthy.

As Christian husbands, the husband must be able to love himself. If he does not love himself then he also is devaluing the love that he has for his wife, and he devalues his love for God because his body is also a temple of the Holy Spirit.

In order to be a loving Christian husband, the husband must consider all of these three facets — His relationship with God, his relationship with himself and how he treats himself, and also his relationship and how he treats his wife. A failure to love himself may result in unhealthy habits that may cause destructive things to happen to himself, and a loss of ability to properly love God and love his wife.

Furthermore, consider that when a husband wants to be alone or by himself in order to rest or relax, especially after work, that he is loving you and he is loving God because he is loving himself. Without his self love he may be more ineffective long term in loving God and loving you. If you want to inquire about his needs and how you can be an encouragement and help to them, respectfully ask him about it.

When wives nag their husbands about them spending time alone, it will drive their husbands further from them. Nagging is a sin because the wife is focusing on her selfishness rather than considering the needs of her husband. In fact, by increasing your husbands stress by nagging he may need more alone time which gets the exact opposite result you were looking for. Such is the nature of selfishness because it drives away those around you.

Conclusions

This is the delicate balance of love in marriage.

Because God created husbands and wives to become one flesh in marriage, the one with the responsibility of the head — the husband — is dealt the responsibility in the Scriptures to love the wife as himself in order to affirm the two as one. This is affirmed as Christ loved the Church and gave Himself up for her.

Christian nice guys and Christian nice husbands must learn how to set appropriate boundaries. These boundaries include knowing that you have to love God, love yourself, and love your (potential) wife. Most men fail to understand what loving yourself means. It is not a love based in selfishness as that is not love, but rather it is understanding how and for what purpose we are fearfully and wonderfully made (Psalm 139).

- Taking care of your earthly body — the temple of the Holy Spirit — and,
- Understanding your purpose or mission here on earth, and
- Knowing and growing in your abilities to be a good steward of the time that you have been given.

A husband that does not love God first does not love God. If the husband loves himself more than his wife he is not affirming the oneness of marriage. Likewise, if the husband loves his wife more than himself his is not affirming oneness of marriage.

Thus,

- The husband who loves God loves (and submits to) God.
- The husband that loves himself loves God because the Holy Spirit is within him.
- The husband that loves his wife as himself loves God because the Holy Spirit is within his wife, and He affirms the oneness of marriage which God has created.

This is the tripartate Unity of love in marriage. Husbands become like Jesus in the same way which models Jesus as part of the trinity:

- Jesus who loves God loves (and submits to) God.
- Jesus who loves himself loves God because the Holy Spirit is within Him (at baptism).
- Jesus that loves the Church as himself (and died for her) loves God because the Holy Spirit is within all believers (the Church), and He affirms the oneness of marriage which God has created.

Many Christians miss the love that the husband has for himself and thus miss the representation of the trinity. It is not an accident that God made man in His own image.

Note: Many Christians miss the love that the husband has for himself and thus miss the representation of the trinity. This is despite the “triangle model” for marriage, which is often depicted incorrectly as equality.

Neither oneness nor the husband loving his wife as himself (nor Jesus loving the Church) should be seen as “equality” because the roles and responsibilities of each sex in marriage are different. Nor are they “different but equal” — see the parable of the Talents. Purge “equality” from your language.

Additionally, there are other concepts of the “trinity” for marriage mostly focusing on Husband-wife-children as God-Jesus bringing forth/sending the Holy Spirit as well. I wouldn’t be surprised if the Scripture had multiple fulfillments.

The Godliness of Jesus Part 8 (First disciples of Jesus)

April 29, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Note: If you've read my post on Scripture and sex roles, you will know that this blog has now undergone some subtle direction changes.

In regard to the "masculinity" of Jesus I wanted to change it specifically to the godliness of Jesus because many of the concepts in these posts apply both to men and women. Nonetheless, I will still be noting in these passages specific masculinity point to men where they occur.

I've been putting off this post for a bit because I want to figure out how I wanted to approach this. There are a lot of good lessons here.

But let's examine the passages first:

> Matthew 4:18 As Jesus was walking beside the Sea of Galilee, he saw two brothers, Simon called Peter and his brother Andrew. They were casting a net into the lake, for they were fishermen. 19 "Come, follow me," Jesus said, "and I will send you out to fish for people." 20 At once they left their nets and followed him. 21 Going on from there, he saw two other brothers, James son of Zebedee and his brother John. They were in a boat with their father Zebedee, preparing their nets. Jesus called them, 22 and immediately they left the boat and their father and followed him.
>
> Mark 1:16 As Jesus walked beside the Sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and his brother Andrew casting a net into the lake, for they were fishermen. 17 "Come, follow me," Jesus said, "and I will send you out to fish for people." 18 At once they left their nets and followed him. 19 When he had gone a little farther, he saw James son of Zebedee and his brother John in a boat, preparing their nets. 20 Without delay he called them, and they left their father Zebedee in the boat with the hired men and followed him.

The Matthew and Mark passages are identical as Mark was the first gospel and Matthew likely used the text as he had nothing further to add to it.

The Luke passage actually adds a bit more detail, and it is similar to the drought of fishes after the resurrection as well. Likewise, John provides additional details of how the calling of the first disciples went down.

These are going to be the main two I analyze below.

There's two lines of thought I want to explore here. Since Jesus is calling his first disciples this tells us a couple of things of two different topics we should learn. The first for all, and the second for men.

- Evangelism
- Jesus and the Church

Evangelism

The way this applies to evangelism is that it is a model for Christians on how to approach others.

> Matthew 28: 18 And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying, “All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth. 19 [e]Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 20 teaching them to observe all that I commanded you; and lo, I am with you [f]always, even to the end of the age.”

I’m going to attempt to examine the two passages in chronological order which is why I may look like I am skipping around.

All right, so let’s look at the different ways Jesus call His followers:

> John 1:35 The next day John was there again with two of his disciples. 36 When he saw Jesus passing by, he said, “Look, the Lamb of God!” 37 When the two disciples heard him say this, they followed Jesus. 38 Turning around, Jesus saw them following and asked, “What do you want?” They said, “Rabbi” (which means “Teacher”), “where are you staying?” 39 “Come,” he replied, “and you will see.” So they went and saw where he was staying, and they spent that day with him. It was about four in the afternoon.

In the first part of the John passage, all it took was for John to say something about Jesus and those that were interested were willing to follow Jesus. That’s probably the easiest it is going to get for those who are ready and interested. They will talk to you and want to learn about the gospel.

> 40 Andrew, Simon Peter’s brother, was one of the two who heard what John had said and who had followed Jesus. 41 The first thing Andrew did was to find his brother Simon and tell him, “We have found the Messiah” (that is, the Christ). 42 And he brought him to Jesus. Jesus looked at him and said, “You are Simon son of John. You will be called Cephas” (which, when translated, is Peter[a]).

On the other hand, when Jesus first met Peter He gives him a nickname (Cephas means Rock). Nicknames are actually are really good way to build connections in relationships with others.

> Luke 5:1 One day as Jesus was standing by the Lake of Gennesaret,[a] the people were crowding around him and listening to the word of God. 2 He saw at the water’s edge two boats, left there by the fishermen, who were washing their nets. 3 He got into one of the boats, the one belonging to Simon, and asked him to put out a little from shore. Then he sat down and taught the people from the boat. 4 When he had finished speaking, he said to Simon, “Put out into deep > water, and let down the nets for a catch.” 5 Simon answered, “Master, we’ve worked hard all night and haven’t caught anything. But because you say so, I will let down the nets.” 6 When they had done so, they caught such a large number of fish that their nets began to break. 7 So they signaled their partners in the other boat to come and help them, and they came and filled both boats so full that they began to sink. 8 When Simon Peter saw this, he fell at Jesus’ knees and said, “Go away from me, Lord; I am a sinful man!” 9 For he and all his companions were astonished at the catch of fish they had taken, 10 and so were James and John, the sons of Zebedee, Simon’s partners. Then Jesus said to Simon, “Don’t be afraid; from now on you will fish for people.” 11 So they pulled their boats up on shore, left everything and followed him.

Then Jesus, having already known Peter (and nicknaming him), goes out on the water with one already familiar to Him to teach the crowds. It is possible that Jesus randomly picks Peter, but it is likely that He knew Him beforehand.

Indeed, after teaching others Jesus tells Peter and the others to let down their nets. This would be consistent with the fact that Jesus teaches and then confirms with miracles in many cases.

Christians are to do the same to those who they witness to: that is they share the gospel and then back up the gospel with their righteous behavior. Like I have been talking about in previous posts, typically the behavior that stands out the most will be when you have a Christ-like reaction to difficult or challenging situations in your life. Those tend to be the greatest witnessing situations where people can see the love of God in you.

> Luke 5:43 The next day Jesus decided to leave for Galilee. Finding Philip, he said to him, “Follow me.” 44 Philip, like Andrew and Peter, was from the town of Bethsaida. 45 Philip found Nathanael and told him, “We have found the one Moses wrote about in the Law, and about whom the prophets also wrote—Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.” 46 “Nazareth! Can anything good come from there?” Nathanael asked. “Come and see,” said Philip. 47 When Jesus saw Nathanael approaching, he said of him, “Here truly is an Israelite in whom there is no deceit.” 48 “How do you know me?” Nathanael asked. Jesus answered, “I saw you while you were still under the fig tree before Philip called you.” 49 Then Nathanael declared, “Rabbi, you are the Son of God; you are the king of Israel.” 50 Jesus said, “You believe[b] because I told you I saw you under the fig tree. You will see greater things than that.” 51 He then added, “Very truly I tell you,[c] you[d] will see ‘heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending on’[e] the Son of Man.”

Lastly, Jesus decides to leave the area finally and calls more disciples. It’s likely that this is the last thing Jesus did before leaving the area (having already called Peter and the others) because Philip specifically talks about the one Moses wrote in the law. He would’ve only done this if Jesus had been previously teaching and performing miracles in the area.

Jesus uses another tactic here to call disciples which is essentially to compliment his behavior. This is consistent with the exhortation of the Scriptures to bless others. Before Jesus even met Nathanael He observed his behavior, and then redirects the the conversation back to God.

Jesus and the Church

I also wanted to compare these passages to Jesus and the Church because I think this is one of the more important frame of minds that Christian men should have when approaching women.

As most Christians know, Paul makes the analogy in Ephesians 5 that husbands should love their wives as Christ loved the Church.

How does Jesus act when He first meets the ones who will become his Church (Ekklesia)?

Matthew and Mark summarize the mindset that men are to have when interacting with women who have the potential to be wives.

- “Come, follow me.”

Luke and John provide some more of the specifics in what Jesus said and did:

- John’s disciples were hanging around.
- Jesus: “What do you want?”
- John’s disciples: “Rabbi, where are you staying?”
- Jesus: “Come and you will see”

Simon Peter meets Jesus:

- Jesus: “You are Simon son of John. You will be called Cephas”
- Later, Jesus goes out on the water to teach using the resources of Peter and tell him to let down the nets.
- Peter is reluctant but does it, and is then convinced that Jesus is the Messiah.
- Peter: “Go away from me, Lord; I am a sinful man!”
- Jesus: “Don’t be afraid; from now on you will fish for people.”

Philip and Nathanael:

- Nathanael initially thinks poorly about where Jesus was from.
- Jesus: “Here truly is an Israelite in whom there is no deceit.”
- Nathanael: “How do you know me?”
- Jesus: “I saw you while you were still under the fig tree before Philip called you.”
- Nathanael: “Rabbi, you are the Son of God; you are the king of Israel.”
- Jesus: “You believe[b] because I told you I saw you under the fig tree. You will see greater things than that. Very truly I tell you,[c] you[d] will see ‘heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending on’[e] the Son of Man.”

Now, I don't really want to read too far into what Jesus is saying in all of these instances. However, we know that Jesus knows what He is here on earth to do, and He is out accomplishing it.

Jesus meets disciples at different points in time as they are going about their business. In most of these cases, it seems like Jesus' reputation preceded Him into an area. However, Jesus is able to make an impression on them through different combinations of methods: speech, speech and behavior, or behavior. In the course of the events Jesus builds a relationship with these men and called them from where they were to follow Him. These are His disciples… who then become the Church.

So too I think this is the frame of mind that Christian men should keep in their head when they are talking to women.

Jesus obviously doesn't NEED his disciples. He is saying: come follow me. He gives them the choice of whether they should follow Him or not. Likewise, He demonstrates qualities that make him a good leader — He is teaching the multitudes with wisdom, He is building relationships with nicknames, He freely compliments another by providing insight about his life (it wasn't a meaningless compliment), and perhaps best of all He backs up what He says with His behavior.

These are all things that Jesus does that many nice guys do not do.

Conclusions

This was one of the more interesting posts for me to write, especially because it's inherently relatable back to how men should be approaching other Christian women for marriage, and how all Christians should approach others for evangelism.

Jesus keeps thing positive and continues to direct things towards God. He isn't interested in putting down others for their beliefs. He isn't interested in preaching hellfire theology. Rather, He loves to build relationships with other people, and call those who are interested to Him.

This is rather consistent with the grace that God in His great love gives to us… but we must accept the gift of grace. God cannot force it on us just as we cannot force others to become Christians. Likewise, men cannot force Christian women to be interested in them.

Think of those of these situations how Jesus thought and taught: "Come, follow me."

For evangelism: Share the love of Godand allow others to make the decision for themselves.

For men interested in women: Show the love of God in your speech and behavior allowing qualities such as leadership, teaching, building relationships, nicknames, specific compliments, and others to shine through — then indicate interest — and allow her to make the choice.

Jesus is not taking some high level people knowledgable in the law of Moses. Rather, He is taking relatively untaught fishermen to be His disciples, His Church. What is consistent with His disciples is not necessarily their spirituality but their interest in God and willingness to learn. Of course, this isn't to say that men should marry the first woman that is teachable, but it is a good lesson on what is important to look for in a wife.

Jesus doesn’t need anyone, but He desires that all come to a relationship with Him. He puts himself out there with what He is living and sharing and allows others to decide if they want to follow Him or not. He is fearless, bold, and outcome independent (or not reliant on validation from others) in His mission from God even though He wants them to follow Him.

Excuses and explanations

May 1, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The basis of Cane's post A snowflake's chance in hell is predicated on the human nature of how we justify things to ourselves.

Excuses, by their nature, are an attempt to justify your actions to yourself or others excluding your faults.

Explanation, however, talk solely about what or why something happened including admitting things that you may have done that affected the situation.

If you look to the Scriptures, you can see that Jesus — who lived a perfect life — never made one single excuse for anything He did. Of course, it is because He was perfect that He didn't need to make any excuses. Excuses absolve any blame from yourself and thrust it onto someone else or your various circumstances.

On the other hand, often He provided His disciples with explanations of parables and why He made certain actions in particular.

One of the most difficult things to do is to understand when you're making an excuse, and why you shouldn't do it. For example, if you're late to work and there was an accident holding up traffic it's very easy to make an excuse: "Hey look boss, there was an accident which is why I was late."

Why is this an excuse? It is because even though there is an action out of your circumstance that you control, you're not admitting culpability for the wrong that you committed even inadvertantly. It's no wonder that if you admit some type of fault for missing your job start time — even though it may not have been your fault — often the others will be more gracious towards you. Compare these two responses to your boss at being late:

- Excuse: "Hey boss, there was an accident which is why I was late."
- Explanation: "Hey boss, I apologize for being late. There was an accident, but that's no excuse for me as I should've prepared for that (or got on the road earlier)."

In which case is a boss likely going to be more gracious? The first one where the employee thrusts blame on things outside of his circumstances? Or the one where the employee is willing to take some of the blame even though it may have been outside of his circumstances?

Thrusting responsibility away from yourself is the first step to pride and self righteousness.

Christians often incorrectly think that because someone else may have sinned that they are absolved from their behavior. This is the furthest from the truth because it builds up within that Christian the walls of pride and self righteousness — "The other person is obviously wrong and I'm just letting them know how wrong they are so they can fix it. I don't need to do anything about my own behavior because there was nothing wrong with it.”

This is not a Christ-like attitude, and it is devoid of both love and humility.

Simply put, to acknowledge truth is to acknowledge the whole truth. Excuses are excuses because they only acknowledge half of the truth — the other person’s potential fault. Explanations discuss the whole situation including your own faults.

A husband who says or even implies that a divorce, poor circumstances, and mistreatment talking solely about the other spouse will be seen as complaining or whining for good reason. It is because they are. When you only discuss half truths people almost instinctively know that they are being conned. You’re saying that you’re above it all and none of it was your fault. No one who has been in any type of relationship will believe that. There is always fault to go around even if it is 99.99% on one side and .01% on the other.

In reality, the reason why explanations come off better is because it shows that you are thinking about both your actions as well as another’s actions. You can see that there are things that both of you could have improved on in the situation. However, with excuses there is no self reflection but only pride and self righteousness, and no one likes people who think they are above everyone.

Pride

May 2, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a segue off of yesterday's post Excuses and Explanations.

The two-fold nature of pride or self-righteousness is as follows:

1. Whatever is "good" and can benefit me is for me alone. I should not have to share it with others.
2. Whatever is "bad" and does not benefit me is the fault of someone else. I do not have to take responsibility for anyone or anything because it's not my problem.

In the first example, authority and knowledge are held to the exclusion of others. In the second example, responsibility and accountability are shifted away from authority or knowledge.

In the non-Christian manosphere it is easy to see that the PUAs and players have the first one in spades. First, many of these men were nice guys, and they were abused by women who used them to suit their emotional, monetary, and other needs. They feel abused, and then they want "revenge" of sorts. Instead of weilding masculinity graciously, they pervert it into the evils of the dark triad. They use women for their own pleasure and bask in success while allowing it to harm the women they are using. Women are playthings to use as they want.

On the other hand, the latter one is what nice guys have in spades. My life is garbage but it's not because any of it is my fault. It's because I wasn't born into a better situation. It's because I didn't have a father to teach me how to be a man. It's not my fault that women are treating me like garbage and abusing me. It's not my fault that any of these situations I'm in is so poor. Likewise, it's not my problem that others are in sin. It's not my problem to speak up in this situation. Let someone else do it.

In the context of male-female relationships you will see that the worldly way of thinking is shifted from blaming others for your problems to taking responsibility for them. This is good. However, these same individuald do not understand that once you take responsibility for your own problems instead of being gracious it leads to pride and self importance instead of love. This is why the secular red pill embraces the dark triad traits. They consider themselves as paramount — "what's in it for me?"

All the nice guys who transform themselves into players do in these scenarios is exchange the pride of "not-my-fault" for the pride of "I'm-holier-than-thou" or "I-can-do-what-I-want." The same is true of Christian men who try to emulate the players.

Becoming like Jesus requires the destruction of all pride. Don't trade one pride for another.

Instead of approaching people — both men and women — to use as things. Instead, if you are indeed more mature in the faith use it as an opportunity to be loving and kind in order to help guide them on the correct path. Sure, you can lead by berating and kicking around others, but most of the best leaders lead by example to teach and correct.

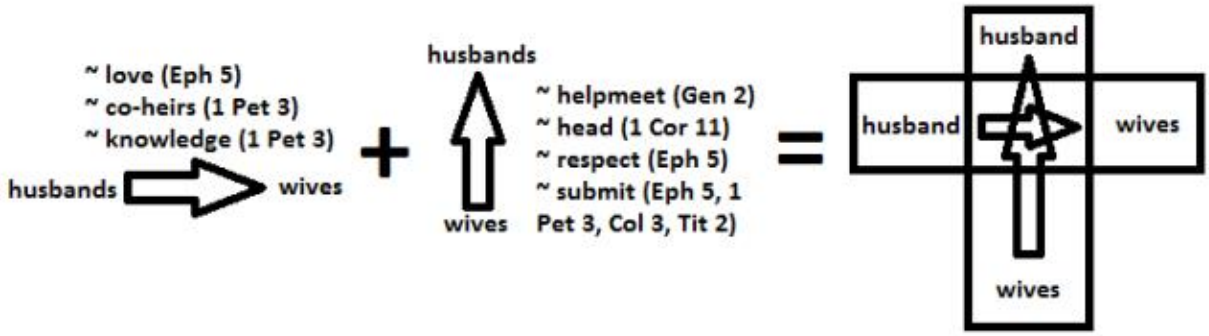
Husbands and wives summarized

May 3, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've written quite extensively on husbands and wives and what the Scriptures say about them, but I'd like to do a conclusive summary because it illustrates the different roles and responsibilities inherent in the marriage relationship.

- Husbands are called to treat their wives "as themselves"… as Christ loved the Church (Eph 5), as his own body (Eph 5), as himself (Eph 5), not embitterd or harsh (Col 3), and in knowledge as the weaker vessel and as co-heirs in Christ (1 Peter 3).
- Wives are called to treat their husbands as their "head" or "lord"… as a helpmeet (Gen 2), as the head (1 Cor 11), with respect (Eph 5, 1 Peter 3), and with submission (Eph 5, Col 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3).



Husbands incorrectly believe that if they treat their wives "as themselves" that they will lose respect for him and run roughshod all over him. They fear their wives. Wives incorrectly believe that if they treat their husbands as their "head" or "lord" that the husband will abuse this authority or get an ego trip. They fear their husbands. They do not know God because God is love and perfect love casts out fear (1 John 4:7-21).

Thus, instead of believing what God says, they believe the lies told to them by themselves, society, and churchianity. Rather than turning to God and obeying His Scriptures they double down on the fact that the other spouse may or will treat them poorly. Rather than admit fault they continue in their own sin.

They do not understand that the Scriptures never said that obeying God was easy. And they continue to take the easy way out and search for their own happiness instead of walking the difficult road of righteousness.

Predictably, wives who desire and achieve equality are unhappy and unfulfilled. Husbands who lord over their wives show no love and are unfulfilled.

However, those that follow that which the Scriptures affirm represent Him as One in marriage.

Wives — if you have an unloving or non-Christian husband.

Husbands — if you have a disrespectful or unsubmissive wife.

The godliness of Jesus Part 9 — Sermon on the Mount

May 7, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Background

While the Beatitudes themselves are the 9 “blessed” statements, the whole Sermon on the Mount teaching encompasses the entirety of chapters Matthew 5, 6 and 7. Likewise, the latter part of Luke 6 is also the same part of the teachings, which is referred to as the Sermon on the Plains because Jesus had just come down from a mountain.

It’s been debated whether the Sermon on the Mount and the Sermon on the Plains are the same. Based on the harmony of Scriptures that we’ve examined before, I would suspect that they are the same event told in different ways. Matthew says Jesus went up onto the mountain and preached. However, Luke identifies the events before this sermon as Jesus went up onto the mountain with the disciples to pray, but the next day He came down to a level place to preach. He may have come down to a level place on the mountain where He could preach so His voice would carry out over the crowd and they could see Him speak. That would be my most likely explanation for harmonizing them.

On the other hand, it’s quite possible that Jesus taught the same material many different times to many of the different multitudes that had come to Him for healing, instruction, and teaching. Whatever the case of whether they are the same or not matters little because the teaching is indeed consistent.

Sermon on the Mount

The teaching on this topic is expansive and covers much of what Jesus taught as the new law which fulfilled the old law. The Sermon on the Mount of Matthew 5, 6 and 7 cover these topics:

- Beatittudes — blessed are the poor in Spirit, mourn, gentle, hunger and thrist for righteousness, merciful, pure in heart, peacemakers, persecuted for the sake of righteousness, and those insulted and persecuted and lied about.
- Disciples and the world — salt of the world, light of the world, and no abolishment but fulfillment of law and prophets.
- Personal releationships — murder -> anger, adultery -> lust, divorce, turn the other cheek, love your enemy and pray for those who persecute you.
- Giving to the poor — Do it in secret not like the Pharisees.
- Prayer — Do it in secret not like the Pharisees., Lord’s prayer, forgive others as you have been forgiven.
- Fasting — Do it in secret not like the Pharisees.
- True treasure/wealth — store up treasures in heaven, eyes are the lamp of the body, serve God or mammon.
- Anxiety — Do not worry about tomorrow (eat, drink, clothing) for tomorrow will worry about itself. Seek first the kingdom and His righteousness, and all these things will be added to you.

- Judging others — judged back to you, measured back to you, speck in brother's eye while plank in your own, don't give to dogs what is holy or pearls before swine.
- Prayer — Ask, seek, knock and the door will be opened
- Golden Rule — treat those the same as you want to be treated; sum of law and prophets
- Narrow and wide gates — broad path lead to destruction, few find narrow way that leads to life
- Tree and its fruit — Good trees bear good fruit, bad trees bear bad fruit; know them by their fruits, only those who do the will of the Father will enter, sometimes not even those who prophesy, cast out demons, or do miracles.
- Two foundations — build the house on the rock or sand where floods and winds will not wash or wash it away respectively.
- Authority — Taught as one who had authority.

Basically, all of these summarize the New Covenant in Jesus: Love one another as He loved us. The foundation through which all these are laid in actions are also paralleled in the fruits of the Spirit — love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control.

We are to focus on that which is eternal and internal first because that is the heart of which we perform our external actions.

This leads us to the conclusion of many distinct points which many lukewarm Christians and Christian nice guys do not follow:

- Put God first (Seek first the kingdom, ask seek knock, two foundations, wide and narrow gates, God or mammon, etc.)
- Not seeking validation for even the spiritual actions we take (giving to the poor, praying, fasting),
- Examining ourselves first before speaking or acting (measures you judge will be judged back, golden rule, etc),
- Examine the fruits of others for discernment (tree and its fruit),
- Life will be difficult for those that follow him (blessed when persecuted, reviled, and scorned; love and pray for those who persecute you),
- Don't stress (anxiety).

In my opinion, here's the most difficult part of being a Christian. Jesus said those that love Him will follow His commands:

> John 14:15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.
>
> John 14: 23 Jesus answered and said to him, "If anyone loves Me, he will keep My word; and My Father will love him, and We will come to him and make Our abode with him. 24 He who does not love Me does not keep My words; and the word > which you hear is not Mine, but the Father's who sent Me.

However, I daresay that doing Jesus' commands is much easier than thinking like Jesus thought. For if we think like Jesus thought then we will do like Jesus did. But if we don't think like Jesus thought then it will be difficult for us to do like Him.

Conclusions

I find this to be one of the more troubling aspects for most Christians to understand. As I wrote in Unity Part 2, the concept of really internally examining yourself for fault is very difficult. Striping away the pride and accepting a mantle of humility is one of the hardest thing I believe we are called to by Christ because it is often the times that we are called to do this when another friend or even enemy wrongs us.

How easy is it to bless someone when you're emotional and it seems like they're intentionally trying to provoke you? How much harder is it to pray for and love your enemy when they're speaking maliciously and poisoning the well?

This is the concept that speaks to the overarching meaning behind what being a Christian is. When you can love, pray, and bless your enemies then you will begin to understand exactly what Jesus came to earth to do through the will of the Father. Humans, by choosing not to obey God through the fall became His enemies, much like Satan and his angels/devils. However, God in His great mercy sent His Son to His enemies in order that there may be redemption. This is the reason we are called to become like Jesus because we will be the same light as He is.

When you can do that you are able to (1) put God first, (2) not seek validation from others, (3) examine yourself thoroughly before acting or speaking, (4) examine the fruit of others, (5) understanding the patience/endurance in suffering, and (6) live without stress [as exemplified in the bullet points above].

For the sake of Christian nice guys let me point out some things applicable in regard to women from Jesus' sermon:

- Put God first — don't put women on a pedastal instead of God. Don't put her or her feelings before God. When she says or acts in an unChristian manner then call it out.
- Not seeking validation for even the spiritual actions we take — don't try to impress or attempt to curry favor women with what you do. Rather, do it for God. If you do it for women you already have your reward and chances are the women will see that as needy and not be attracted to you anyway.
- Examining ourselves first before speaking or acting — We all have power behind our words and actions, and it is easy to allow them to go astray. When you understand the responsibility of what you say and do then your mindset will change. There is some truth that nice guys essentially eschew responsibility and seek validation and thus are more like boys than men.
- Examine the fruits of others for discernment (tree and its fruit), — women are more than just a pretty face; seek a woman with good character and good report.
- Life will be difficult for those that follow him — Most men will understand this…

but to truly accept it is something that you must come to terms with. It is a motivation to action rather than a depressing fact of life.

- Don’t stress (anxiety) — Don’t stress about food, shelter, clothing, or…. women… it drives them away because you’re super serious all of the time and to them it feels like you’re putting a lot of pressure on them. Essentially, you’re making the woman be the man and you’re playing the part of a woman if you are the one with anxiety.

Exploring Modesty

May 13, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to examine modesty from a different angle than Donal Graeme.

Donal makes the point that there are two types of immodesty:

- Lust and sexuality — through the showing of skin or more.
- Envy and jealousy — through show of status, wealth, money.

Chad has made the point before that immodesty concerns two other mortal sins instead:

- Pride — the notion that "I can do what I want."
- Avarice — greed in terms of wanting excess attention or validation.

Obviously, I think that all of these views are correct in some way. The 7 deadly sins do apply to immodesty in a variety of ways because it puts what a person thinks is more important over what God thinks is important.

Specifically, the Scriptures talk about modesty on multiple occasions including peripherally:

> 1 Timothy 2:9-10 Likewise also that women should adorn themselves in respectable apparel, with modesty and self-control, not with braided hair and gold or pearls or costly attire, but with what is proper for women who profess godliness—with good works.
>
> 1 Peter 3:3-4 Likewise, wives, be subject to your own husbands, so that even if some do not obey the word, they may be won without a word by the conduct of their wives, when they see your respectful and pure conduct. Do not let your adorning be external—the braiding of hair and the putting on of gold jewelry, or the clothing you wear— but let your adorning be the hidden person of the heart with the imperishable beauty of a gentle and quiet spirit, which in God's sight is very precious.
>
> Proverbs 31:30 Charm is deceitful, and beauty is vain, but a woman who fears the Lord is to be praised.
>
> Proverbs 11:22 Like a gold ring in a pig's snout is a beautiful woman without discretion.
>
> 1 Corinthians 6:19-20 Or do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, whom you have from God? You are not your own, for you were bought with a price. So glorify God in your body.
>
> Leviticus 19:28 You shall not make any cuts on your body for the dead or tattoo yourselves: I am the Lord.

If you notice from the Scriptures, modesty and immodesty is almost always contrasted against a woman's behavior. This is the flipside of physical appearances versus the internal condition of the heart and its influence on behavior.

Contrast this against the ideology of feminism. Most of the 2nd and 3rd wave feminists push for immodesty, but subsequently complain about women becoming sex objects. Logically, modesty is about women being valued for their behavior rather than being sex objects. Yet, feminists are angered when they dress immodest because then they are treated as sex objects.

If feminists really wanted "equality" or "equal opportunity" they would encourage modesty because that would allow women to compete on equal footing and not be valued for their physical appearance. Of course, we know that isn't the case with feminists. They want to have their cake and eat it too.

Thus, we can see that modesty manifests itself in a dual nature:

- It shows the inward state of the heart of the woman and whether she takes what God commands seriously.
- It manifests itself outwardly to those around her — as part of her behavior — to see if she cares about others and relationships. If her desires are inward focused she gives into pride, envy, jealousy, greed, and the like rather than be focused on the Fundamental Nature of Christianity — unity in relationships with others and God.

Christians play the wrong game if we are inwardly focused as opposed to outwardly focused. Modesty is just but one indicator of selfishness versus selflessness. Also, this affects men too because women are definitely capable of lust.

> 1 Corinthians 10:23 All things are lawful, but not all things are profitable. All things are lawful, but not all things edify. 24 Let no one seek his own good, but that of his [i]neighbor.

Christians are supposed to be know for their actions — not for what they look like. However, taking care of the temple of the Holy Spirit is indeed a good witness.

Reactive, proactive, and Truth

May 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the Not game but God about 3 week ago, I explored why the Heartiste article was off point on the topic of Jesus.

I've been thinking heavily about the situation because this is a Christian blog first and foremost. Thus, all responses should be filtered through the lens that is Scripture and God's commands.

Since this is one of the Christian blogs that focuses on practical advice for men [and women] and may talk about such advice in relation to game and the mansophere, there must be a clearer delineation and understanding of what it means to be a Christian man or woman who are seeking first His kingdom.

I don't want to be in the business of leading Christian men or women astray. Therefore, the onus falls upon me to ascertain what the Truth is and how to make it clearer in terms of examining the Scriptures and how they apply to our understanding and behavior.

That is the topic of what this article will seek to address.

1. Reactivity versus proactivity

Padre made some interesting comments which I've been mulling over for a while now and wanted to post some thoughts on them:

> Reactionary, how unsurprising.
>
> What CH was showing, or rather exposing, is how "Christians" are wonderful at reacting, never implementing in Faith. Does that mean sleeping w/scores of women?
>
> Nope, our Leader has shown us how to NOT be speed bumps, and of course, it is rejected
>
> How are you going to ever be bold in our faith when being reduced to clucking hens? CH sees it far better than we do
>
> For example, how many here would rush to the defense of the condemned, instead of letting the waves of outrage wash over them and keep on keeping on.
>
> Few, or none

When we examine what "game" we find that it is a logical secular (evil) response to feminism. That is women have quote unquote liberated themselves to the point where they set themselves up as their own idols.

However, "game" as perpetuated by players and gamers seeks to tear down this pedestal of women, and instead installs themselves on the pedestal. That is they become their own idol through emulation of the dark triad traits — narcisism, machiavellianism, and psychopathy.

Studies have confirmed that the dark triad traits are nearly universally attractive to women. Thus, it makes sense that if you want to sleep with many women you would use this reactive response in order to build attraction with women and ultimately get them into your bed.

Christians, however, are not called by Jesus to be reactive. The command issued by Jesus to Christians are clear that we are to be the proactive and the initiators as our witness in the world:

> Matthew 5:2 He opened His mouth and began to teach them, saying, 3 "[b]Blessed are the [c]poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. 4 "Blessed are those who mourn, for they shall be comforted. 5 "Blessed are the [d]gentle, for they shall inherit the earth. 6 "Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for they shall be satisfied. 7 "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall receive mercy. 8 "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. 9 "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called sons of God. 10 "Blessed are those who have been persecuted for the sake of righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. 11 "Blessed are you when people insult you and persecute you, and falsely say all kinds of evil against you because of Me. 12 Rejoice and be glad, for your reward in heaven is great; for in the same way they persecuted the prophets who were before you.
>
> And the rest of the Sermon on the Mount.
>
> Matthew 28:18 And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying, "All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth. 19 [e]Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 20 teaching them to observe all that I commanded you; and lo, I am with you [f]always, even to the end of the age."
>
> John 14:15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.
>
> John 14:21 He who has My commandments and keeps them is the one who loves Me; and he who loves Me will be loved by My Father, and I will love him and will disclose Myself to him."

As you can see, we are not supposed to be reacting against different things that happen in the world. Rather, we are to take our stand on Jesus' commands which are exemplified through our witness and ultimately loving God with all our hearts, souls, minds, and strength and loving one another as He loved us.

2. Reactivity, Proactivity, Reasoning, and Attraction

If we were to explore the base level of the difference between what is reactive and proactive, I think we have to look at the difference in reasoning.

There are two types of reasoning: inductive reasoning and deductive reasoning.

Inductive reasoning is "is reasoning in which the premises seek to supply strong evidence for (not absolute proof of) the truth of the conclusion. While the conclusion of a deductive argument is supposed to be certain, the truth of the conclusion of an inductive argument is supposed to be probable, based upon the evidence given."

All scientific theories are based on inductive reasoning. Gravity, evolution, relativity, the big bang, etc are all types of inductive reasoning.

Deductive reasoning is "also deductive logic or logical deduction or, informally, "top-down" logic, is the process of reasoning from one or more general statements (premises) to reach a logically certain conclusion. Deductive reasoning links premises with conclusions. If all premises are true, the terms are clear, and the rules of deductive logic are followed, then the conclusion reached is necessarily true."

Mathematical proofs are considered deductive reasoning.

As you can see, reactivity is based on the bottom-up approach of reasoning. That is we have observations we can make in this physical world — that women are with X type of men and they like Y type of behavior — thus this is what attracts women.

On the other hand, proactivity is predicated on having statements that are true and using them to get to a logical conclusion. For example, the Scriptures state that the husband is to be the head of the wife, she is to be his helpmeet, he is not supposed to have anyone before God in his life (especially woman on the pedestal instead of God), etc.

As Padre points out, the main problem with Christians today is that we rely too much on inductive reasoning and thus reactivity in our interactions with the world. This makes us lukewarm — we don't have an opinion on something until we can figure out how to react to it. And most of the reactivity that lukewarm Christians do — especially Christian nice guys — may be hit or miss whether they follow the Scriptures or not.

Instead, as Christians we are called to be proactive and operate with deductive reasoning. Almost every single denomination of Christians hold the Scriptures to be the inspired Word of God to which we can instill those values inside of us in order to carry out our mission in the world. Our mission makes us proactive because we know what we are supposed to do.

This is the difference between the house build on the rock and the house built on the sand. Those that are proactive and utilize deduction via the Scriptures are embedded clearly upon the rock. Whereas those that are reactive and utilize induction have built their house upon the sand. It moves under them when they try to react because there is always some form of unsurity from inductive reasoning. Nothing is absolute.

This is not to say that reactivity and inductive reasoning are bad. They are indeed good because we need to be able to respond, but we are to always filter such things based on the proactivity and deductive reasoning of our mission first.

3. Truth

So where do we head from here?

Well, first we want to establish what is true through deductive reasoning:

1. The Scriptures establish commands via roles and responsiblities to both of the husband and wife in marriage.
2. Those that are unmarried that seek to live in a godly Christian marriage should strive to change themselves to conform to those roles ("take off the old and put on the new").
3. Therefore, those Christians that aspire to be married should be seeking to learn and grow into these roles now — while they are single — in order to prepare themselves for a godly marriage.

This may be quite obvious, but that which is obvious is easily overlooked by most Christians.

Now that we have established the route that the single Christians are to take, what and the roles and responsibilities that are to be adhered to? Let's look at the brief refresher.

Husbands:

- Love wife as Christ loved the Church and as his own body (Eph 5)
- Not be embittered to wife (Col 3)
- Head of wife (1 Cor 11, Eph 5)
- Provide for household (1 Tim 5) through work/toil (Gen 3)
- Do not provoke and discipline/instruct children (Eph 6)
- Live with in understanding way, and honor as co-heirs in Christ (1 Pet 3)
- Conjugal rights (1 Cor 7)

If a deacon/overseer:

> 1 Tim 3:2 [b]An overseer, then, must be above reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, prudent, respectable, hospitable, able to teach, 3 not addicted to wine [c]or pugnacious, but gentle, peaceable, free from the love of money. 4 He must be one who manages his own household well, keeping his children under control with all dignity.
>
> 8 Deacons likewise must be men of dignity, not [e]double-tongued, [f]or addicted to much wine [g]or fond of sordid gain, 9 but holding to the mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. 10 These men must also first be tested; then let them serve as deacons if they are beyond reproach. […] 12 Deacons must be husbands of only one wife, and [i]good managers of their children and their own households. 13 For those who have served well as deacons obtain for themselves a [j]high standing and great confidence in the faith that is in Christ Jesus.

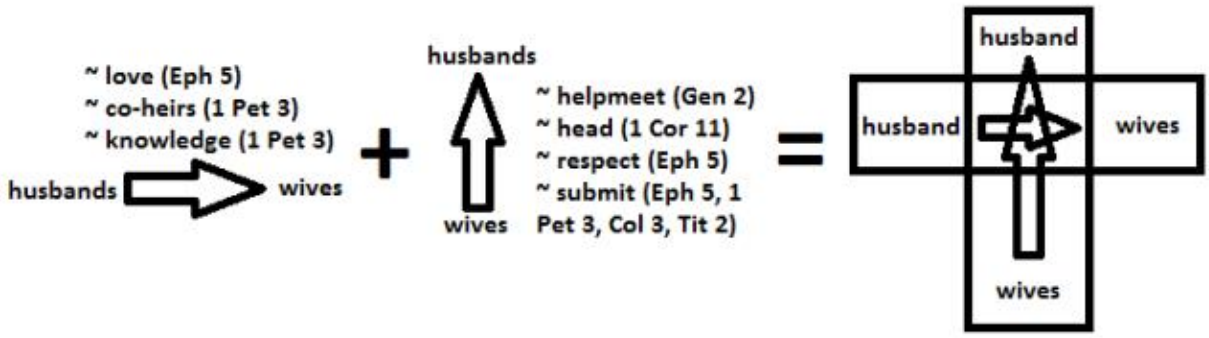
Wives:

- Helpmeet (Gen 2)
- Desire for husband, rule over her (Gen 3)
- Husband is head (1 Cor 11)
- Submission to husband (Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3)

- Respect husband (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3)
- Love (philea not agape) husbands, love (philea not agape) children (Tit 2)
- Sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored (Tit 2).
- Do not nag, be contentious, quarrelsome, or fretful (Prov 19, 21, 25, 27)
- Of noble character (Prov 12)
- Gains his trust, does him good, works with her hands, provides food for household, does business, clothes household, generous to the needy, smiles, is wise and teaching with kindness with her mouth (Prov 31).
- Conjugal rights (1 Cor 7).

Now that we know what is truth we can start to explore that from a Scriptural point of view.

I've already started the series on the godliness of Jesus, but I will start to incorporate the deductive reasoning with these Truths into what Jesus is discussing.



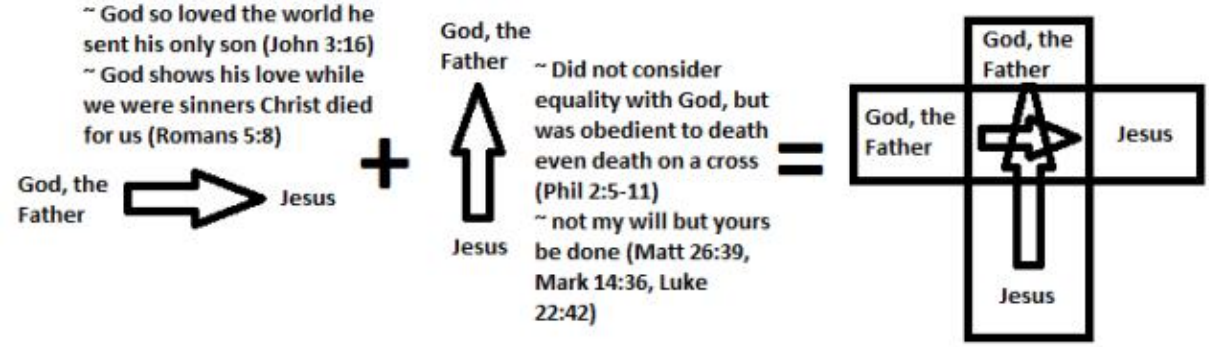
Specifically, Jesus' interactions with His disciples — not just the 12 or 70 but all of those who came to seek Him — which show the interactions of the Jesus-Church relationship before Jesus' marriage to the Church.

Structures of authority summarized

May 16, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Previously in Husbands and wives summarized and Reactive, proactive and Truth, I explored the concepts of Scriptural Truths.

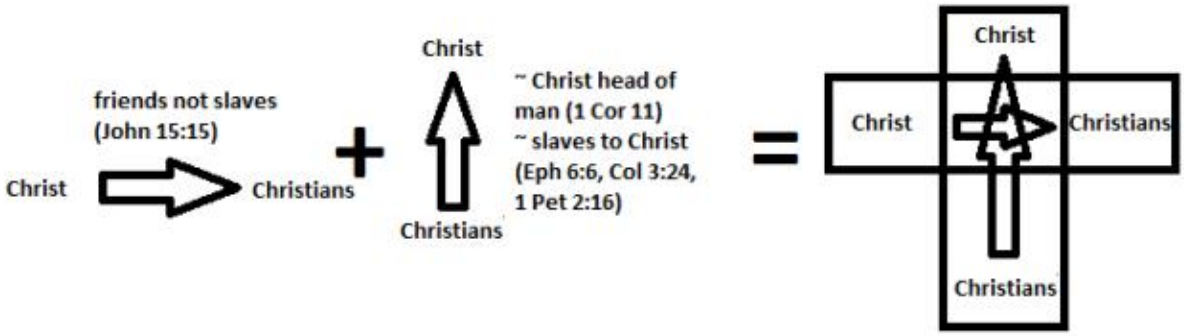
In particular, we understand as Christians that God has instituted various roles and responsibilities especially in the context of marriage.



It's not a coincidence that similar structures are modeled by God and Jesus, Jesus and the Church, and Government and the People/Christians.

In fact, the Scriptures speak of orderly conduct multiple times in the Scripture. This means order is something that is clearly important to God. My best guess as to why this is the case is that without order — or with disorder — that relationships tend to devolve into that which is the spirit of the flesh:

> Galatians 5: 19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.



As I discussed in the Unity series (one, two, three, four), it is very easy for situations to devolve out of control without order. When emotions run out of control or others do horrible things to us it's easy for us to lose sight of the love that God has called us.

Structures of Authority

The relationship between God the Father and Jesus also represents that which we see modeled in Husbands and Wives. After all, the first marriage was in Genesis 2, and God created man in His own image. It would make sense that which He created reflects Him.

Likewise, the relationship between Christ and Christians also models what Jesus has done on the cross. This is one of the understandings that I had a difficult time grasping because I didn't understand how Jesus would view us as friends, but we were to be slaves to Christ. Here is the whole passage:

> John 15:12 "This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you. 15 No longer do I call you slaves, for the slave does not know what his master is doing; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard from My Father I have made known to you. 16 You did not choose Me but I chose you, and appointed you that you would go and bear fruit, and that your fruit would remain, so that whatever you ask of the Father in My name He may give to you. 17 This I command you, that you love one another.

Jesus makes a series of bold statements about the relationship between Himself and His disciples. He models His love for us by laying His life down for us, His friends. Slaves don't know the Master's business, but we do. We did not choose Him but He chose us. These passages only make sense in the context of Jesus modeling His relationhip with God (God -> Jesus) and also the relationship Paul describes in marriage (Husbands -> Wives).

Most Christians have a difficult time understanding the marriage relationship because it is a relationship not a relationship between two perfect beings (God -> Jesus) and it is not a relationship between one perfect being and humans (Jesus -> Christians). It is a relationship between two humans (husbands -> wives) and yet somehow we think this makes it different. However, it is not.

- Husbands are to lay their lives down for their wives as Christ loved the Church (Eph 5).
- In this love like Christ and the Church, wives are not treated as slaves to the husbands as they know their master's business (even as Sarah called Abraham lord [1 Peter 3] she knew of Abraham's business [Gen 18+, etc.]).
- Wives do not choose their husbands but husbands choose their wives. (He who finds a wife finds a good thing [Prov 18:22]; wives are to be helpmeets to husbands and not the other way around Gen 2).

The latter two points in the three points above are going to be very difficult for most Christian nice guys (or men growing in the faith) as well as Christian women to understand having grown up in a post-feminist and churchian society.

Edit: Donal has pointed out that there were a few cases (exceptions?) that women in the Scriptures did choose their husbands in the comments. Obviously, it's not like the women had no choice in the matter as they did. However, in the vast majority of cases it is the men who are initiating the relationship.

When a man enters a marriage relationship with wife having choosen the husband he is in for all sorts of unhappiness and dischord. This is a fact. There is no respect for the husband in this case, and it is very difficult for the wife to break that habit even if she is a Christian. Likewise, it is easy for husbands to keep decisions and things to themselves, but this is not the way wives are to be treated.

Finally, Christians are to submit to governing authorities in a manner worthy of Christ. This is a structure of authority that is seemingly easier when it's Jesus -> Christians, but when it's governing authorities -> Christians it seems more difficult to us.

This is especially true when the governing authority is not "holding up it's end of the bargain" by having righteous judgment as seen on the left hand side of the image. This is also what is meant by loving your enemies and praying for those who persecute you. Having someone do us wrong, even those in authority, does not permit us to go and disobey.

Now, this is not to say we should not vote or attempt to change the government through our votes and other legal means, but we are to obey the authorities unless they tell us to commit sin. You don't get to pick and choose what you obey and don't obey.

The easiest example of this is the structures of authority that are set up in the occupational workplaces. You may not like your boss, and your boss may do evil to you. But you are still to respect him and obey what they want you to do even if you disagree with it.

Most people intuitively understand the boss -> employee relationship, but they don't understand that it is but another example of the God -> Jesus, Jesus -> Christians, husbands -> wives, authorities -> Christians, and other orderly relationships that are espoused in Scripture. We are not put into any of these relationships by chance, even as much as we may not like some of them.

Therefore, to honor God we must be willing to walk in the particular roles and responsibilities that God has called us in all aspects of this life. This will allow us to walk in the fullness of love, and allow us to be exemplary witnesses for Christ.

Evolving desires

May 17, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's an interesting tendency of the human condition on the process to becoming mature

- When you're pretty new to activity you gobble up all of the available information. This is the sponge phase.
- Once you get passed the sponge phase, you hit the hubris stage. You think you have it all figured out, and no one can tell you otherwise what you do and don't know even if they more experience than you. You believe that one size fits all. Many people never leave this phase of learning because their pride is so great.
- If you happen to make it out of the hubris stage you enter a stage of humility. You realize in fact that you don't know everything and that you want to be committed to learning more. You start to begin to understand the nuances of particular situations and how certain things may not apply to broad spectrum situations.
- Finally, you enter the maturity stage. You know what you know because it works. You can modify information or advice to a give person in their individual situation because you have experience. But you're still also open to being able to learn from others and accept criticism where indicated.

You see this all the time in every area imaginable. For example,

In the area of nutrition: someone starting to get into Paleo will start to read up on everything. Once they know most everything they think there is to know, they preach Paleo and only Paleo and how it will work for everyone no exceptions. Then if they are able to move on they start to admit that there's a lot they don't know about human gut health and individual conditions. Then after that they have obtained enough information and experience to actually problem solve the tough cases.

In the area of training/fitness: Someone starting with a program such as Starting Strength will start to read up on everything. Once they know barbells they think they know everything there is to know about training. However, they will hit the phase where the complexity of constructing programs overwhelms them and they feel like they know nothing. After they mature, though, they are able to tailor advice to all ability levels and different situations.

Likewise, I see the same thing in the manosphere. Aside from the stages of grief model (denial, anger, bargaining, depression, acceptance) there is a similar line of thought that occurs in terms of relationship to women.

Men who take "the red pill" will gobble up all of the available information and start to implement it. However, they will start to move into the hubris stage. For instance, even if you've moved into the "acceptance" phase of grief you may be still stuck in the hubris phase of learning. An example of this is the stubborn clinging persistance to the idea that “all women are like that” (AWALT). The fact that it is a good generalization means there are indeed exceptions, but there is a stubborn denial that anything else could be the case.

Once a man is able to mature, he is more able to appreciate the hard work and discipline that women take so that they are NAWALT just as men can overcome feminist society and churchianity in order to become masculine men.

Evolving desires

Now, the main reason I have chosen to write this post is because of evolving desires in what I look for in a wife. Previously, I had posted this list in what I look for in evaluating a potential wife, and a brief glimpse at the process of understanding that lists are just lists in the change.

> Evidence of a relationship with God — daily Scripture, prayer, meditation, and service in the Church or community. A heart that is seeking after God and is fruitful in it with her actions.
>
> Evidence of cultivated godly femininity — long hair, dresses modest, wears dresses and skirts, smiles often, enthusiastic, kind, gentle, humble, preferably knows how to keep a home and cook, etc.
>
> Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed — Christian men and women are called to this prior to marriage, and I’m uninterested in having to deal with the drama that surrounds a woman that has had previous intimacy with other men. I’d readily consider a low N-count woman who has shown though her actions and attitude that she has repented (and not just feels bad about what she did) over a virgin Christian woman who has done everything but sex.
>
> Evidence of attraction/chemistry — I work in the medical and fitness industries, and it is important for me to have a wife who is a good ambassador for Christ in how she looks. I’ve dated women before who don’t care about good nutrition and exercise, and it never ends well because this is an integral part of my life. A woman who strives to be attractive even though it takes work is going to be a better ambassador for Christ than one who gives in to sloth and gluttony. This goes both ways as my potential wife should be attracted to me too.
>
> Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization — God willing I hope to have many children (3-5+) and am looking to home school them. I don’t care if my wife has a career, but she should be willing to lay it aside for her family. Age is not a primarily consideration for me, but since I want to have many children younger is better.
>
> Evidence of submissiveness, especially to God — This pretty much sums up a Biblical marriage in that it encompasses the 3 major roles that a wife is called to: a helpmeet, with submission, and with respect. I tell women that my God given mission will put me in uncomfortable discussions and challenges, and if she’s coming along with me then it will be more of the same. If you’re not > growing in your heart, mind, soul, and strength for Christ then what are you doing?

It's a 6 point list and honestly I can't find anything that I would say is super wrong with it aside from what most feminists would say.

However, I can say that most of the above list would be preferences rather than requirements aside from a relationship with God and physical attraction/chemistry. God is obvious, but the lifestyle that comes with good nutrition and fitness is important because that is part of my mission. My helpmeet would need to be able to assist me in that, and if she has a similar vision in terms of business opportunities or hobbies I would be willing to help her build on that as well. We are one, and we work as one.

All of the rest — chastity, family prioritization, submissiveness to me, godly femininity — are preferred but not required. The power of God is there to change minds for those that are willing and almost everything else falls underneath of that.

For example, do I desire a SAHM like many others in the manosphere (although I didn't note that on the list above)? No, I can't say I do. I don't want a woman who is committed to her career over family, but I'm also not averse to a wife who wants to work outside the home. I have a flexible job that may allow me to stay at home with children if need be, and I want to spend a lot of time with any children I have.

Do I really care about homeschooling that much that it's a dealbreaker? No, I don't. I think it's generally preferable at least through the first ~7-10 years of life so as to instill godly values, but I'm not averse to putting my potential children into public school because we are called to be in the world though not of the world. (Note: ~6-7 years of age is the point by which most children develop their core personality that they carry with them for life).

Of course, that requires me to also be firm and confrontational to the children about why we disagree with many of the things taught in school. Most parents don't take the time to teach their children aside from "because I said so" which is not a good reason. Why is chastity a good thing before marriage? You should be able to answer this question with science and logic including Scriptural support.

Likewise, is chastity a must? I would say no, but of course we should all still be aware of the risks of women with too many partners. Repentance is clearly a big factor. However, none of us are without fault in one way or another.

Do I want a pushover wife? Haha, no way. I actually tend to mesh well with a moderate amount of sassiness from a woman. I'm not looking for someone who doesn't push back against me when I hip check her. However, I'm also not looking for a woman who will take sassiness to the extreme in that she gets upset over such things.

I suppose my point is that as I have moved passed the "hubris" stage into the humility and beyonds stages that I have admit that I have much to learn, so I need to be more open to what God can work in my life.

Of course, I can keep praying that my wife meet all of these preferences and that would be good, but the door should be open because God allows things to happen and I want to be on His side and not my own side.

Her Emotions Part 2

May 19, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

When I first wrote Her Emotions, I was writing from the context of understanding the roles and responsibilities of the husband in terms of the emotional state of the wife.

Here are the main points of that article:

> Any words or actions that a husband takes in regard to his wife are not to be about making her happy but rather to draw her closer to Christ.
>
> […]
>
> However, husbands must understand that the Scriptures don't state you have to make her feel differently, but as the head it is commanded to facilitate her on the right path which is toward God. It's her decision on what to do with her feelings, though your words and actions can facilitate her away from her feelings in many cases.
>
> […]
>
> Men and husbands — don't try to take responsibility for a woman's emotions. Take responsibility instead as the head to facilitate her lovingly towards God.
>
> If she chooses to rebel against the headship in marriage because of her emotions, it is not your responsibility to clean up any of her mess. Her rebellion means the consequences fall on her. God does not take responsibility for rebellion and sins that Christians commit, and neither should husbands take responsibility for rebellion and sin that wives commit.

The main reason why I am inclined to write this article is that I didn't explain some of the nuances of taking this Scriptural point of view.

Although the husband is supposed to take a "God's way or the highway" point of view, there are two diametrically opposed attitudes that this falls under. The dictatorial "God's way or the highway" is opposed to the loving "God's way or the highway."

For example, let's take a look at one of the examples I've used extensively before. A Christian can go up to a non-Christian and tell them "you're a sinner and if you don't repent and change your ways you're going to hell." While this is all indeed true from a Scriptural standpoint, it is not exactly kind or loving. For the majority of non-Christians who hear this from a Christian it will only harden their hearts. Rather, the way that works best for witnessing to non-Christians is to either show them by example through your own life what the love of God can do, or it is to explain and help them understand the love of God and why He sent Jesus to die for our sins.

Now, what does this have to do with emotions?

The very fact that there is a disagreement in the first place is essentially the same as witnessing. You have fundamental difference in beliefs about a particular thing, and emotions may already be running high.

If a husband goes with dictator “God’s way or the highway approach” yes it will cause some wives to turn back onto the righteous path, but in many cases it may actually cause more dissension and strife in the relationship because we often go with how we feel rather than what God wants. Even if the husband is taking the correct stand, he may be taking an incorrect approach. It is important to understand the fragility of human emotions from either sides of the male-female relationship. Specifically, a dictatorial approach does not consider the “embittered” nature (Col 3) and living in the knowledge (understanding/consideration) as the weaker vessel (1 Peter 3).

Instead, I think Jesus’ approach tends to be best in these types of situations in which He states what God says, and then he follows it up with a parable or analogy. Parables and analogies are excellent because they make both men and women step outside their own shoes and experiences force them to think about things from a different point of view.

I don’t think it is a coincidence that Jesus used parables often among His greatest opponents the Pharisees and Saducees. While a husband and wife are not supposed to be greatest opponents, it may sometimes feel that way when they disagree. Therefore, it would make sense use the methods which Jesus used to convey His thoughts to those He disagreed with.

My explanation in the previous post was incomplete. While the husband’s primary goal is to direct her to Christ, he is also to direct her to be one with him. He is also supposed to be facilitating unity in decision making. Thus, it is important facilitate the encounter in such a way that brings about both unity with God and himself. While her emotions are indeed for her to deal with, a husband needs to understand and consider where she is coming from in order that he may facilitate that goal.

This is a more nuanced position than the position of the previous article, but I believe it to be more clearly aligned with the Scriptures.

Strengths and weaknesses

May 20, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Cane's post yesterday on Hold Your Fire brings up an excellent point.

Essentially, all of us have inclinations on every aspect of human behavior. The easiest analogy to make from this is that of strengths and weaknesses.

Some people will never have to worry about becoming obese or out of shape because they naturally have an affinity for not eating a lot, or eating healthy and regularly exercising. However, with others they'd rather have their throats ripped out before they would eat healthy and exercise.

Likewise, some men have an easier time mastering their lust than others. Some men have an easier time not compulsively lying. etc. If a woman is more naturally submissive and will easily fall into a godly relationship with her husband that is great. A strength may be an excellent strength.

But all humans have weaknesses that they may need to address. The problem with feminists and nice guys is that they don't want to have to put forth effort to work on the weaknesses.

We focus on building good habits in order that we may continue to grow in knowledge, and wisdom, and stature with God and men. Some of us have an easier time building certain habits than others.

Our job is not to do what is easy. Our job is not to do what is hard. Our job is to do what is right. Doing right may be hard or easy depending on the circumstances.

The key is to continue to let our strengths be our strengths given that some of those are indeed talents that God has given us. We should let them shine and give glory to God for that (see: parable of the talents).

But we are also called to work on our weaknesses, and even in our weaknesses He is our strength and we give glory to God for that too (see: Paul's thorn).

Edit: Elspeth makes a good point in the article linked in the comments.

That which is unpleasant may be easy, and that which is pleasant may be hard.

Things that are often unpleasant and hard such as exercise may start hard and pleasant… or they may become easy and unpleasant… and finally as you do it enough it will become easy and pleasant.

Therefore, I would say,

Our job is not to do what is easy. Our job is not to do what is hard. Our job is not to do what is pleasant. Our job is not to do what is unpleasant. Our job is to do what is right. Doing right may be easy, hard, pleasant, and unpleasant depending on the circumstances.

But it is often the case that that which may start out hard and unpleasant may become easy and pleasant as we see to become like Jesus.

Fear, respect, honor, and truth (phobeo and timao)

May 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Back when I wrote on Masculinity is the truth and Masculinity is the truth Part 2, I discussed some important points that I want to revisit.

Specifically, there is a relationship between truth and lies that is intertwined with the dual aspect of respect/reverence and fear. This manifests itself differently in those that are believers as opposed to those that are not Christians.

Let's do a very brief review:

The root word for reverence, respect, and fear is the word phobeo:

> G5399 — φοβέω — phobeō — fob-eh'-o
>
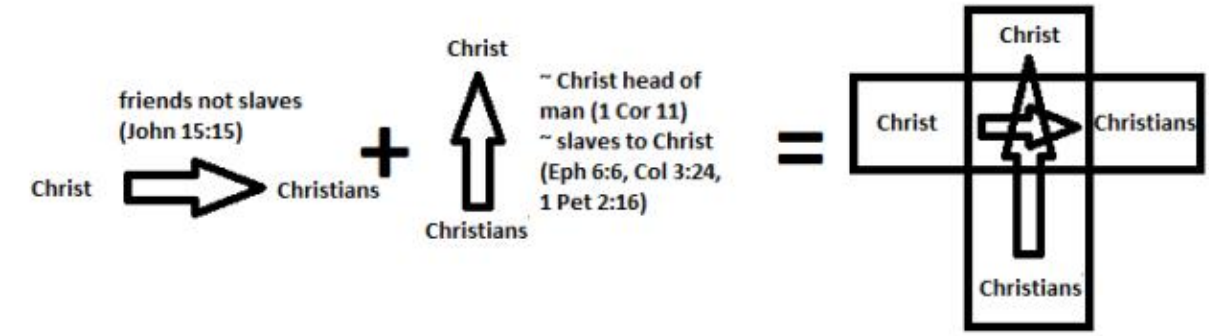
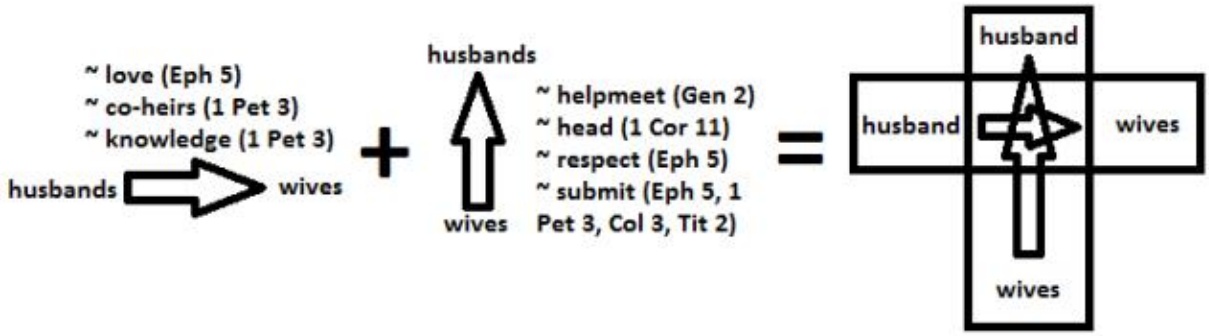
> From G5401; to frighten, that is, (passively) to be alarmed; by analogy to be in awe of, that is, revere: – be (+ sore) afraid, fear (exceedingly), reverence.



The dichotomy that I delineated in Part 2 is that those who are imbued in sin only have consequences to fear whereas those in submission to authority have reverence and respect for that authority. This is manifested in multiple ways:



> This word is used in multiple passages in Scripture in the New Testament. For example, all Christians are to have respect or reverence for God. We are to fear God. This is the same context that we use this for the word adoration in the above chart — it's ultimately about building respect. As you saw yesterday in JoJ's post on the definition of "game" it's all about building respect. You should strive to be a man worthy of respect through the character of your words and actions. In the hierarchy of creation where God > humans, we are in fear of God because of it. Likewise, God > Jesus > Spirit and Jesus talks about his submission and gives reverence to God (only God is good) on multiple occasions. Similarly, in marriage a man > wife in terms of headship and submission and wives are supposed to give respect or reverence to their husbands.
>
> Versus
>
> If you weild masculinity to tempt women into sin, all you have left is fear. The fear of God's wrath. The fear of STDs. The fear of pregnancy. The fear that is gained from giving into temptation infects both parties. For women who are promiscuous, though they attempt to rationalize it, they almost always ultimately fear that they are going to get pumped and dumped. They fear that they will be found out and exposed to society or their friends and family of their promiscuity. These women fear their N-count getting out to their spouses. When you walk the road of temptation and sin all you have left is fear. You may have momentary pleasures, but all you have left at the end is fear. A void. A gnawing sensation that something is wrong.

If we understand this in the context of the Structures of Authority, we see that the fear/respect dichotomy is that of those under authority.

- Christians are supposed to respect governing authorities. If we do not and become law breakers then we live in fear of the consequences.
- Jesus submits to God the Father perfectly, and thus never needed to have any fear of God because He was doing His perfect will.
- Christians submit to Christ as He is our bridegroom, and if we disobey His commands (not loving one another like He loved us) then we have fear of the consequences.
- Wives submit to husbands as to the Lord because otherwise they will live in fear.

Thus, the notion of reverence/respect and fear all hinges upon obeying versus disobeying the authorities set before us here on earth both in the spiritual and earthly realms.

Now, how does honor fit into this? The root word for honor is time and the verb is timao:

> G5092 — τιμή — timē — tee-may’
> From G5099; a value, that is, money paid, or (concretely and collectively) valuables; by analogy esteem (especially of the highest degree), or the dignity itself: – honour, precious, price, some.
>
> G5091 — τιμάω — timaō — tim-ah’-o
>
> From G5093; to prize, that is, fix a valuation upon; by implication to revere: – honour, value.

Timao is used multiple times in NT Scriptures in varying contexts:

> Matthew 15:4 For God said, ‘Honor (timaō) your father and mother,’ and, ‘He who speaks evil of father or mother is to [a]be put to death.’ 5 But you say, ‘Whoever says to his father or mother, “Whatever I have that would help you has been [b]given to God,” 6 he is not to honor (timaō) his father or his mother[c].’ And by this you invalidated the word of God for the sake of your tradition. 7 You hypocrites, rightly did Isaiah prophesy of you: 8 ‘This people honors (timaō) Me with their lips, But their heart is far away from Me. 9 ‘But in vain do they worship Me, Teaching as doctrines the precepts of men.’”
>
> John 5:23 so that all will honor (timaō) the Son even as they honor the Father. He who does not honor (timaō) the Son does not honor the Father who sent Him.
>
> Ephesians 6:1 Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. 2 Honor (timaō) your father and mother (which is the first commandment with a promise), 3 so that it may be well with you, and that you may live long on the earth.
>
> 1 Timothy 5:3 Honor (timaō) widows who are widows indeed;
>
> 1 Peter 2:17 Honor (timaō) all people, love the brotherhood, fear God, honor (timaō) the [a]king.
>
> 1 Peter 3:7 You husbands in the same way, live with your wives in an understanding way, as with [c]someone weaker, since she is a woman; and show her honor (timē) as a fellow heir of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.

These passages show that honor is distinctly different from respect and fear (phobeo). Honor is something that we all give to our parents, that we give to God, that we give to Jesus, that we give to all people, and that husbands give to their wives.

- It is something that is given to those in authority positions (parents, God, Jesus).

- It is something that is given to those everyone (all people).
- It is something given from those in authority positions (husbands to wives).

Perhaps the best explanation of what it means to honor someone is the other usage of the word timē from Matthew:

> Judas' remorse
>
> Matthew 27:3 Then when Judas, who had betrayed Him, saw that He had been condemned, he felt remorse and returned the thirty [a]pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, 4 saying, "I have sinned by betraying innocent blood." But they said, "What is that to us? See to that yourself!" 5 And he threw the pieces of silver into the temple sanctuary and departed; and he went away and hanged himself. 6 The chief priests took the pieces of silver and said, "It is not lawful to put them into the temple treasury, since it is the price (timē) of blood." 7 And they conferred together and [b]with the money bought the Potter's Field as a burial place for strangers. 8 For this reason that field has been called the Field of Blood to this day. 9 Then that which was spoken through Jeremiah the prophet was fulfilled: "And [c]they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price (timē) of the one whose price had been set by the sons of Israel; 10 and [d]they gave them for the Potter's Field, as the Lord directed me."

Honor is not something that is related to authority. Rather, it is something bought for a price. It is precious. It represents that which is valuable, and that which is supremely valuable is the blood of Jesus which is the sacrifice for all.

In this definition we can see that everyone is precious — those in authority, everyone, and those under authority — and to be honored because we are all God's creations. We all have been bought with the price of Jesus' blood even if others may not accept it.

Conclusions

So what does this all mean?

In today's age I often see men demanding respect from women (who are not husband and wife), women demanding respect from others, and women not respecting their husbands.

All of these are incorrect assumptions and understanding of what Scriptural teaching.

- Honor is to be given to all because we are all God's creations, believers and non-believers. We have all been bought with a price.
- Honor is something given to everyone regardless of who they are or what they have done.
- In fact, no one should even demand honor. Honor, like love, is something that is freely given from the giver.
- Respect/reverence or fear is reserved for those in authoritative positions over you — both earthly and spiritually. Believers are not called to respect each other but rather love each other. The only authority Christians have over each other is through correction/rebuke (Matt 18, Eph 5). Also see, is there mutual submission or not [in marriage].

- Respect is not conditional. It is given to authority. A wife must respect the position of husband, even if the husband is not acting in a manner worthy of respect. In this, she obeys God and God can use her to change her husband (1 Peter 3). See also, wives will never win their husbands with words.
- It is by our love that we show ourselves as Jesus' followers. Not our respect for one another.
- Love is an action to all whereas respect/fear is a state of condition based on our submission/obedience to earthly and spiritual authorities.
- Feminism teaches women to incorrectly demand respect. Respect is not something that can be demanded. It is something that is given by those under authority to those in authority.
- Women in marriage or seeking to be married should want to be LOVED and not RESPECTED. When you hear a woman talking about how she wants to be respected by a boyfriend or by her husband in marriage you know that she does not correctly understand Scriptural roles and responsibilities.

These distinctions are necessary because we have an extremely warped view of what the Scriptures mean because of how entrenched our society is in feminism. These concepts — fear, respect/reverence, love, and honor — from the Scripture are distinctly different from each other and imparted because of different reasons.

If we as Christians fail to understand them then how much more difficult is it to correctly understand the nature of authoritiative structures and the roles and responsibilities that come with them.

Structures of Authority before the fall

May 24, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Many Christians incorrectly believe that man and woman were equal before the fall.

Cane Caldo's argument on that which man names is in his authority is correct. Let me first summarize that argument, and then expand on it.

Sorry Cane I don't remember which post it was in, so I can't link it directly.

God gives dominion over the earth to humans

> Genesis 1:26 Then God said, "Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [ak]sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth." 27 God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them. 28 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth." 29 Then God said, "Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed that is on the [an]surface of all the earth, and every tree [ao]which has fruit yielding seed; it shall be food for you; 30 and to every beast of the earth and to every bird of the [ap]sky and to every thing that [aq]moves on the earth [ar]which has life, I have given every green plant for food"; and it was so. 31 God saw all that He had made, and behold, it was very good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.

This is a pretty clear cut passage.

God gives man the dominion over living creatures and his wife

> Genesis 2:19 Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the [p]sky, and brought them to the man to see what he would call them; and whatever the man called a living creature, that was its name. 20 The man gave names to all the cattle, and to the birds of the [q]sky, and to every beast of the field, but for [r]Adam there was not found a helper [s]suitable for him. 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God [t]fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man. 23 The man said, "This is now bone of my bones, And flesh of my flesh; [u]She shall be called [v]Woman, Because [w]she was taken out of [x]Man."

Notice the exact similarities — even between the Hebrew words — of the two passages.

- God creates

- Brings to the man
- The man names

That which was created, and brought to the man, and that which he names is his. The woman is man's. The man has authority over woman. The husband has authority over his wife.

Therefore, prior to the fall we can see that the authority structure is put in place where the husband has authority over the wife.

The fall and Cain and Abel

If you study the Hebrew, the same two words — desire and rule over/mastery — are used in Genesis 4 talking about sin in relationship to the curse placed upon woman and Cain's attitude toward Abel:

> Gen 3:16c Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you."
>
> Gen 4:7 If you do well, [e]will not your countenance be lifted up? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire is for you, but you must master it.

In both of these passages, Hebrew word for rule and master is the same.

The curse from Genesis 3 onto the woman is that the woman will desire for her husband. This means she will desire to usurp authority from her husband.

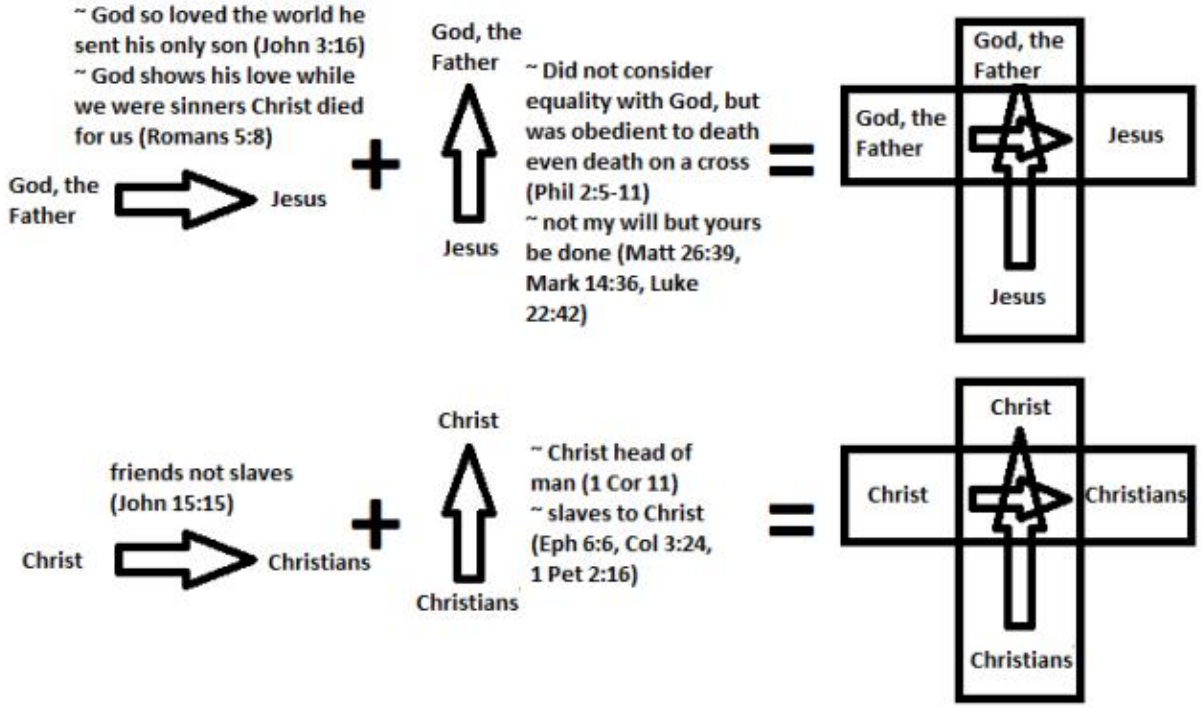
However, the he will rule over you, and the you must master it are reaffirmations of the authority that was there before the fall. Before the fall, humans were perfect in their relationship with God. If there is perfection in mastery there is no opportunity to sin. Likewise, there is already perfection in authority of the husband over the wife.

As you can see, the Adam naming passages as well as the fall and Cain parallel passages show us what creation was like before the fall: that perfect authority was already in place.

What is perfect authority?

The reason why many Christians believe that man and woman were equal is based on an incorrect understanding of what authority is all about. This is how far the rot of modern christo-feminist thinking has pervaded the church. Authority is always seen as something bad, especially in context of husbands to wives.

As I previously discussed in Structures of Authority Summarized, authority is good because it is instituted by God for the context of order. God commands us to obey authorities of all kinds.



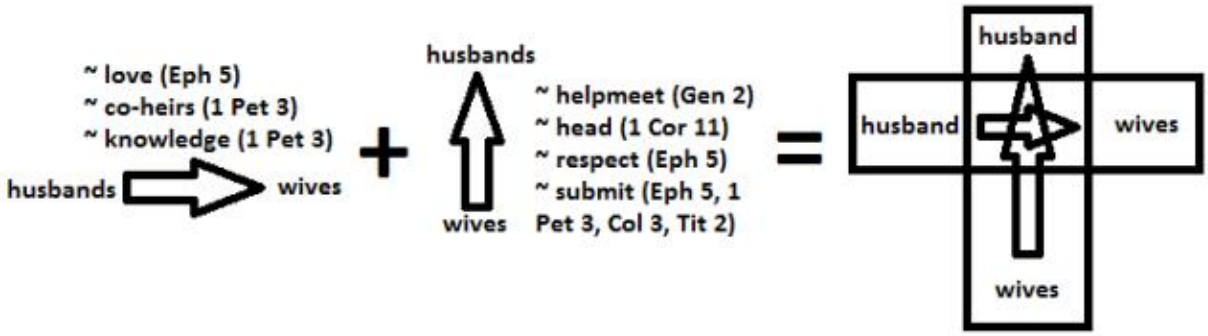
If we were to look at perfect examples of what authority looks like in action we have two easy examples to point to from the previous post:

- God's authority over Jesus and Jesus' submission to God's authority. John 3:16 For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him shall not perish, but have eternal life.

- Jesus' authority over the Church, and the Church's submission to Jesus' authority. That is Jesus laid His life down for the Church. Eph 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

Indeed, authority is a good thing because that means a perfect authority means a perfect love.

1. God is love, and His love for us is Jesus whom He sent to die for us.
2. Jesus is love, and His love for us is while we were yet sinners Christ died for us.



Perfect authority is love. So yes, husbands had perfect authority over wives before the fall. Perfect authority is the ability to love as God loves. Before the fall husbands had the ability to love their wives as God loves.

How amazing is that?

Yet, Christians would delude themselves into thinking that before the fall man and woman were equal. This is a laughable concept and a failure to understand the nature of God. They only know of God but they do not know God. They do not know love because perfect love casts out fear. But God is love, and in His perfect creation before the fall there is His love.

> 1 John 4 (NASB)
>
> 7 Beloved, let us love one another, for love is from God; and everyone who loves is [a]born of God and knows God. 8 The one who does not love does not know God, for God is love. 9 By this the love of God was manifested [b]in us, that God has sent His [c]only begotten Son into the world so that we might live through > Him. 10 In this is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins. 11 Beloved, if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another. 12 No one has seen God at any time; if we love one another, God abides in us, and His love is perfected in us. 13 By this we know that we abide in Him and He in us, because He has given us of His Spirit. 14 We have seen and testify that the Father has sent the Son to be the Savior of the world.

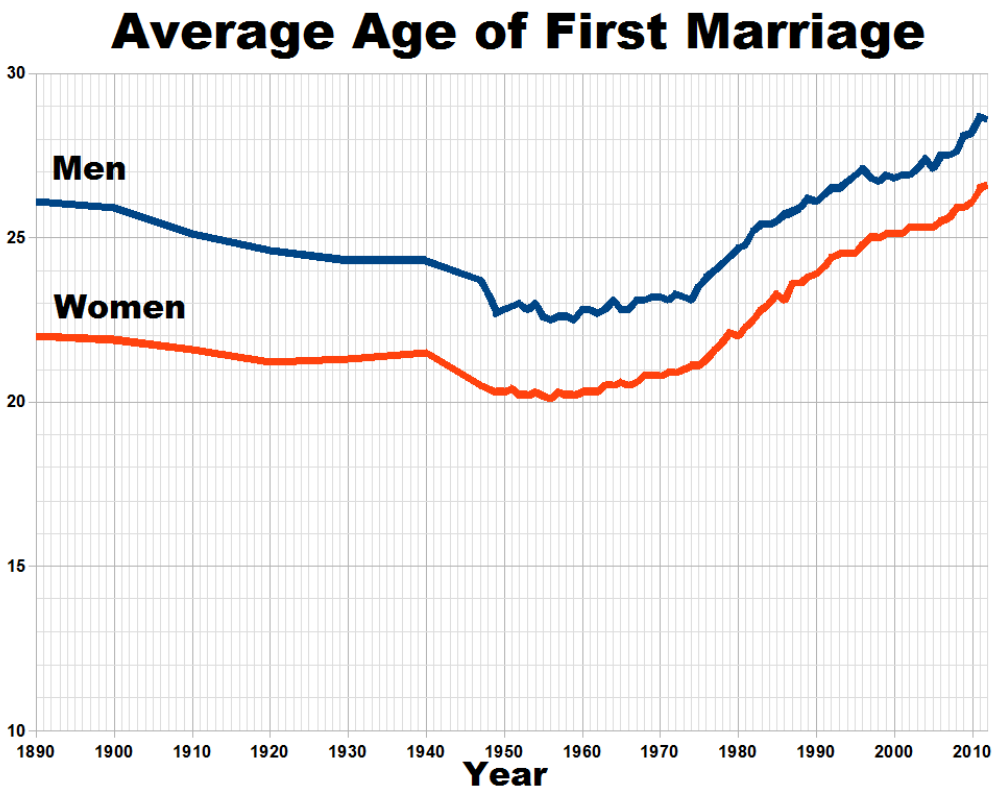
>
> 15 Whoever confesses that Jesus is the Son of God, God abides in him, and he in God. 16 We have come to know and have believed the love which God has [d]for us. God is love, and the one who abides in love abides in God, and God abides in him. 17 By this, love is perfected with us, so that we may have confidence in the day of judgment; because as He is, so also are we in this world. 18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casts out fear, because fear [e]involves punishment, and the one who fears is not perfected in love. 19 We love, because He first loved us. 20 If someone says, "I love God," and hates his brother, he is a liar; for the one who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen. 21 And this commandment we have from Him, that the one who loves God should love his brother also.

A husband's authority over the wife was there before the fall, and it was very good.



Double thunk

May 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Over at Dalrock's Double Think and Cane's Recoiling from Resounding Resentment, there's been some debate on the topic of what it means that women are divorcing less in early marriage.

There's two things I want to address with this post.

————————————————————————————————————

First,

Dalrock has covered this before but average age of first marriage has skyrocketed. It dipped down after the wars in the '40s and '50s because there were many less men because many had been killed. Thus, men were a commodity and they were scooped up. Likewise, divorce laws and other such nonsense were not passed yet.

However, since the '60s and '70s and the sexual revolution the age of first marriage has skyrocketed as feminism became more ingrained in society. You'll note that by 1980 that the average age of marriage for women climbed to a previous norm of 22 years, and in the next 10 years went to 24 years of age, by 2000 was at 25 years of age, and by 2014 will likely be 27 years old.

Note that average age means that half of the population is OLDER than this when they are married. So half of the women getting married are older than 27 which is very close to the proverbial "wall." There's only so far that women can put off marriage because of fertility, and we're already seeing the crunch on that.

- One factor of the decrease in divorice from 1990 to 2010 is likely due to women hitting the wall and wanting babies.

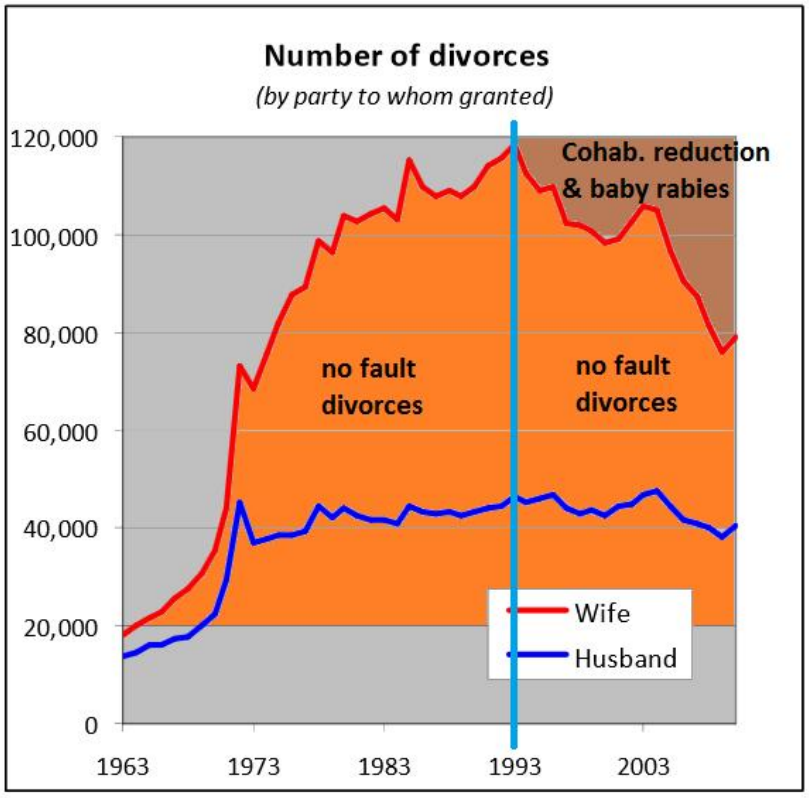
Women who married and divorced when younger often believe they can trade up whereas those reaching into their 30s tend to be looking for more security, commitment, and children.

- Likewise, with the rise in cohabitation the women who would “divorce” often will not make it to marriage.



[image]

We see a similar trend here with cohabitation rates increasing drastically since the 1970s. The divorce rates skyrocketed because many of the women who were married in 1970s, 1980s, and 1990s divorced their husbands. And now in the 2010 there are about 5-6 million more women who would’ve been married but instead cohabited which decreases the proportional amount of divorces by that much.

Thus, I would posit the “peaked” rates of divorce were because of non-commitment minded women wanting to get out of their marriage and ostensibly trade up because they were relatively younger and hadn’t felt the impact of the wall yet. This artificially drove the statistics up (aside from cash and prizes of no-fault divorce and child support).

I would also assert that the increase in number of cohabitations is driving the amount of divorces down because the less commitment minded women don’t make it to marriage or they put up with a man who doesn’t want marriage. Additionally, a later age of marriage and the more commitment mind of women with baby rabies. There are likely a few other factors, but I think this is the major one.

You can see how this plays out below by comparing the graphs above to this one.

What I do not believe is that men have significantly changed over the past 20 years except for becoming more feminized and more unattractive in general.

————————————————————————————————————

Second, the problem most Christian men are having is that they equate “loving wives” as only doing good to them or some garbage like that.

Lest they forget Jesus often corrects or rebukes the disciples when they are off course. He allows them to go their own way even after saying it was the case. For example, Jesus prophesies Peter’s denial and then allows Peter to go off and do it. He allows Peter to make those mistakes because He knew it would be a good lesson and potentially lead to repentance.

Jesus continues to ‘lead’ at all points in the Scriptures but He doesn’t take responsibility when the disciples make mistakes. 1 Cor 5 and 1 Tim 1 talks about handing those who would disobey to Scriptures over to Satan. It doesn’t say to take responsibility for them since we cannot control other Christians. Matthew 18 says to basically disavow Christians who aren’t willing to repent of living in sin.

In essence,

1. Husbands are to be the ‘head’ / love / treat as co-heirs / etc. You do this because God wants you to, not because the wife will or won’t.
2. Wives are to submit / respect / helpmeet / etc. You do this because God wants you to, not because the husband will or won’t.

It is a clear cut example that a wife does not take responsibility for what her husband does, especially if it’s wrong. However, the very fact that we are having this conversation means that feminist thinking is ingrained in us so much that we are assuming that a husband has responsibility for his wife's sin or mistakes because he is her 'authority' in marriage.

This is simply not the case. God and Jesus does not take responsibility for Christians when they go and sin. However, they are waiting with loving arms to welcome us back after we repent. BUT, the Father often does not clean up the mess we made when we went off and sinned. We often have to make restitution ourselves.

> Matthew 5:23 Therefore if you are presenting your [s]offering at the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, 24 leave your [t]offering there before the altar and go; first be reconciled to your brother, and then come and present your [u]offering.

Similarly, the problem is that many people are trying to do a 1 size fits all solution to the problem which doesn't work. You're going to handle a wife differently who:

1. Is submissive,
2. Says she wants to be submissive but isn't,
3. Is openly rebellious

Each situation requires different responses from the leader…. and love looks differently in each of these situations.

We, as Christians, need to understand that there are consequences for our actions. This is just a fact of life in the real world. It is something that God instituted with free will. However, we tend to want to insulate ourselves from actions and consequences when we really love or care about someone. But this is the worst thing you can do when you really love someone — see spoiled rich kids.

The problem is that feminist rot has so ingrained itself into mens' and husbands' heads that they believe they need to respond to a wife's rebellion with positive reinforcement.

The reason why I use "positive" reinforcement" is because it is distinctly NOT GOOD to reward people — Christians or otherwise — for bad behavior. The Scriptures say nothing about brushing people's faults or mistakes under the rug but rather unity through repentance.

It is NOT LOVING not to mention not honest, kind, or good to take responsibility for the bad or evil things that someone else is doing. We only do this for children because we need to teach them what is right. But wives are fully grown women with competent decision making. If they choose to stray from the Scriptures they can bear the weight of responsibility and consequences of actions themselves.

Now, Jesus is not about allowing those who are wallowing in consequences of their own actions if they cry out for help. This is the reason He often references the "I desire mercy, not sacrifice" verse from Hosea.

> Matthew 14:28 Peter said to Him, "Lord, if it is You, command me to come to You on the water." 29 And He said, "Come!" And Peter got out of the boat, and > walked on the water and came toward Jesus. 30 But seeing the wind, he became frightened, and beginning to sink, he cried out, “Lord, save me!” 31 Immediately Jesus stretched out His hand and took hold of him, and *said to him, “You of little faith, why did you doubt?” 32 When they got into the boat, the wind stopped. 33 And those who were in the boat worshiped Him, saying, “You are certainly God’s Son!”

But He does chastise those He loves (“You of little faith, why did you doubt?”) and allows them to at the very least experience the consequences of their actions (30 But seeing the wind, he became frightened, and beginning to sink, he cried out, “Lord, save me!”).

Nice versus love, goodness, and righteousness

May 28, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As I've matured with writing this blog, I've gained more clarity in terms of what it means to be loving and good as opposed to nice.

Nice is essentially a word that is used in our culture for "feel good." When something is nice it makes you feel good about yourself. Or it makes you "feel loved" or "feel appreciated" or "feel whatever."

Obviously, this is not what Christianity is about, and it's not anything that is really attractive either. I don't want to try to go around making people feel good about themselves when they're not doing what is right or God forbid if they are doing what is wrong.

Thus, in this article I'm going to try to outline the major differences between what is "nice" versus what is "love" or "good."

Responsibility

If I'm talking to another Christian and they're talking about they've been skipping exercise because of ___ excuse or they've been skipping their Scripture reading and praying should I be saying something along the lines of:

- That's ok you can always do it later, or
- That's fine you were busy that time, or
- Hey you'll do better next time, or
- It's alright there were other more important things

Certainly not! I'm going to tease them or chastise them because you always make time for the things that are important to you. You're just showing what your priorities are in this case.

I'm not going to give them some mindless platitudes to make them feel better about themselves when they're not doing what is right and when they're not doing what is good.

That is NICE but it is not LOVE.

Divorcing of actions and consequences

Husbands, in particular, often fall into this trap. A wife goes off and does her own thing, especially when she disagrees with a decision the husband has made.

Instead of saying, "that's unfortunate… you made your bed so you'll have to lie in it and clean up your mess" a husband will often clean up the mess that the wife made.

When this happens, no lesson is learned. The wife just learns either consciously or subconsciously that her actions have no consequences. "If my husband is going to clean up after me then I can basically do whatever I want including doing what he doesn't want me to do because I can get off scot free."

Likewise, if a wife constantly cleans up the messes of the husband instead of allowing him to experience the consequences they become lazy, entitled, stubborn, and unwilling to lift a finger to correct their own mistakes.

This is spoiled rich kid syndrome.

If people aren't allowed to experience the consequences of their actions then they will become entitled, spoiled, and a horrible pain in the butt. All humans are susceptible to this.

We want to attempt to be loving by helping clean up the mess but instead we are "nice." We don't want feelings to get hurt because the other person, even spouse, made a mistake. So we clean up after them. However, this attempt at loving is not love but it is nice.

That is NICE but it is not LOVE.

Positive reinforcement instead of negative reinforcement

This is a big problem in the church. Say a wife is acting contentious or nagging or generally unpleasant to be around. What does the marriage ministries and whatnot say to do?

Of course, it's do something nice for your wife! Buy her flowers, tell her how much you appreciate her, etc.

This is exactly the wrong answer. Should you be rewarding someone for unpleasant and sinful behavior? Should any husband reward his wife for her getting upset at him? Yet, this is what the church says to do.

Instead, if a wife is acting contentious it would be loving for the husband to say "hey, I don't like being around you when you're acting like this. I'm going to leave you alone to allow you to reflect on your poor behavior."

What if Jesus gave positive reinforcement to His disciples when He saw them doing something wrong?

> Mark 10:13 And they were bringing children to Him so that He might touch them; but the disciples rebuked them. 14 But when Jesus saw this, He was indignant and said to them, "Permit the children to come to Me; do not hinder them; for the kingdom of God belongs to such as these. 15 Truly I say to you, whoever does not receive the kingdom of God like a child will not enter it at all." 16 And He took them in His arms and began blessing them, laying His hands on them.

Instead of Jesus chatising (negative reinforcement) His disciples here if He gave them positive reinforcement it would look something like this:

> Book of Nice 10:13 And they were bringing children to Him so that He might touch them; but the disciples rebuked them. 14 But when Jesus saw this, He wanted to placate and said to them, "Don't worry about these children 15 Truly I say to you, let's go have a feast so you don't feel angry anymore about these > children coming here.” 16 And He took took aside His disciples and helped them get over their anger with food and drink to forget about the children who had angered them.

My main point with this is that both men and women are taught that they should be positive all of the time and negative reinforcement should not be used. This is incorrect. For as many times Jesus used rebukes and chastisement as the disciples so we are too in our relationships. This obviously ties back into responsibility and actions with consequences.

Positive reinforcement to a sinful action is NICE but it is not LOVE.

Accountability

Accountability is basically holding other responsible for their actions and giving a righteous response. Accountability essentially sums up the previous 3 points, except we do it with other people.

The Scriptures affirm this multiple times:

> Matthew 18:15 “If your brother sins[k], go and [l]show him his fault [m]in private; if he listens to you, you have won your brother. 16 But if he does not listen to you, take one or two more with you, so that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every [n]fact may be confirmed. 17 If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as [o]a Gentile and [p]a tax collector.
>
> 1 Corinthians 5:1 It is actually reported that there is immorality among you, and immorality of such a kind as does not exist even among the Gentiles, that someone has his father’s wife. 2 [a]You have become [b]arrogant and [c]have not mourned instead, so that the one who had done this deed would be removed from your midst. 3 For I, on my part, though absent in body but present in spirit, have already judged him who has so committed this, as though I were present. 4 In the name of our Lord Jesus, when you are assembled, and [d]I with you in spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus, 5 I have decided to deliver such a one to Satan for the destruction of his flesh, so that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord [e]Jesus.
>
> 1 Timothy 1:18 This command I entrust to you, Timothy, my [o]son, in accordance with the prophecies previously made concerning you, that by them you fight the good fight, 19 keeping faith and a good conscience, which some have rejected and suffered shipwreck in regard to [p]their faith. 20 [q]Among these are Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom I have handed over to Satan, so that they will be taught not to blaspheme.

Essentially, we are taught to keep each other accountable as Christians for sinful and poor behavior. We are to be above reproach as Christians.

However, it is often the case where Christian husbands, under the guise of love, actually reinforce poor behavior in their marriages. The same is true with wives living with non-faithful husbands.

This is also the troubling aspect that many men and women who are single fail to do in their Christian walk.

It's often been the case that I'm sitting around in an area, and there are two people gossipping about other people around me. As a Christian I have an obligation to go over there and chastise them for gossipping and set them on the right path. Yet, I often don't do this. I let my fear, my anxiety, my desire to not be confrontational, and the desire to not hurt people's feelings to interfere with doing what is righteous and good.

I see many times where a wife is being disrespectful of her husband or where a husband is embittered toward his wife yet I don't lift a finger.

This is the big problem we have in Christianity. Either we are too afraid to stand for what is righteous and good, or we don't want to hurt other's feelings, or we fear what other people may think of us. I pray for the ability to constantly overcome this because it is difficult but it is doable.

Conclusions

All of these different types of sentiments all tie into one another:

- Responsibility
- Divorcing actions from consequences
- Positive reinforcement instead of negative inforcement
- Accountability

These are common mistakes that nice men and women make because they think it is loving to be nice when in reality what they are doing is not love, nor good, nor right.

This is a warped view of "love" that we have in our feminized culture. "Love" in churchianity is always something that is going to make someone feel good. However, we know that love is not what makes someone feel good, but instead is about spurring those around us towards doing what is good and right.

It is never love — and thus never what is good and right — to excuse others for their poor behavior. Remember,

> 2 Timothy 3:12 Indeed, all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will be persecuted. 13 But evil men and impostors will proceed from bad to worse, deceiving and being deceived. 14 You, however, continue in the things you have learned and become convinced of, knowing from whom you have learned them, 15 and that from childhood you have known the sacred writings which are able to give you the wisdom that leads to salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. 16 All Scripture is [h]inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for [i]training in righteousness; 17 so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work.

It is an inevitability that all [true] Christians love or at least don't hate to be taught and trained in righteousness. However, what is lacking from churchianity is that we have eliminated correction and reproof.

The cult of nice is about making people feel better. When you're about making people feel better about themselves rather than doing what is righteous and good, correction and reproof/rebuke silently fade into the night never to be seen.

Correction and reproof require confrontation. Christian husbands and wives and those aspiring to be Christian husbands and wives ABSOLUTELY NEED to force themselves to grow comfortable with confrontation. It is in the confrontation of our weaknesses and faults and subsequent actions to repent and continue on a different path that direct us to grow into mature Christians.

Every time we let things slide we end up being nice. And being nice is neither loving, nor good, nor righteous. Nor will it garner respect because you don't stand up for what you believe. You become wishy washy and lukewarm. Like nice guys.

The trappings of the mind

May 31, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the readers has graciously provided his story from his journey through the secular manosphere and having since become a Christian. In general, I would say it's a cautionary tale because of the impact that game can have on Christians from the evil side and how difficult it can be to transition out of that into the good.

> First, I started out as the nice guy. I think its just beta behavior. I grew up cherishing and caring for women (maybe out of a needy way) and I had always taken the side a the girl. I thought that it was a mans responsibility to look out, protect and understand the gift God has made for us. Well, I learned PUA and that helped me become better with them. I never wanted to get a lot of girls to bed, I wanted to know how to find and keep an awesome lady in life. It turns out that yes, that it came down to self improvement. I better myself, then that makes me more desirable. Well, I had a bad break up. I went off just getting more and more girls this time, trying to fill that void. I started going out, meeting social drinkers and not the crowd God wants for me to be around.

I think this is generally a common theme for most men who enter the manosphere whether as Christians or non-Christians.

It's not a bad thing to want to cherish and care for women as that seems to be a trait that God has imbued into men. However, it often comes out as needy and validation seeking because most men expect some type of reciprocation when they interact with women. If it doesn't manifest at the start, it often manifests during a relationship which repels the woman leading to said breakups (aside from incompatibility in values).

I'm not going to comment on game as we've gone through that enough on this blog.

> God came to me one night, and I had an experience with him. An encounter, and it changed me. I no longer even worried if I had a girl, I was in Love with him and it was enough. Slowly, his presence has left me, and life has become full of trials. I guess you could say I lost my trust and hope in him for things to go good. I started to think of things like "God doesn't have a good one for me" or "Itll just be more trials following him, don't let him get ahold of your relationships" "God wont let you have anyone beautiful, he will be jealous since its an idol" I kept fighting these lies, but slowly I would see how I had no guarantees. and I started thinking these, everytime I would see a cute girl I would feel like God was mad or somehow didn't want that for me. I started despising them, and the rejections and negative attitude somehow turned me against them. Its like misogynist behavior, that's what Ive googled and match perfectly. I love them, but hate them at the same time. I have to question why do I hate this girl? Shes done nothing wrong, and I don't even know her? I lost my sense of feeling, just cold and distant now. I see women as sneaky and just a waste of time now. I cant be > empathic towards people in general, its just weird.

First, God isn't about feelings. He's about action: John 14:15 15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.

Although we may experience God emotionally in some circumstances, our emotions are not to dictate what our actions are. This is very difficult to learn because churchianity is the cult of nice. Nice is all about feelings. Feelings become churchian's god instead of the one true God.

Secondly, as we've talked before back a couple months ago, nowhere in the Scriptures are we promised a wife. That's one of the pedestals that all Christian men must learn to drop. Don't set women — or even the prospect of a wife — up on the pedestal as an idol. You must come to terms with following God because you know that Christianity is true and you want to please God.

Thirdly, I wouldn't necessarily say the manifestation of anger is misogyny although it may feel that way. This is part of the maturation process of what it means to be a man.

If you think about it from a man's perspective… why are you angry at women? Is it because you were lied to by family, the church, and whoever else? Okay, I can buy that. But Jesus told us in the Lord's prayer to pray that God forgive our debts just as we forgive our debtors. We also have that sin to repent for as well as even if we were led by blind men into a pit we still followed those blind men.

Is it because of some other reason such as rejection, or torment, or negative attitudes? Well, I would say you care too much. Why do you care what these women who may not want to be with you? The very fact that you care about their opinion — rejection or negative attitude — means you are seeking validation from them. You want them to be attracted to you, but they're not. Why else would you get angry?

This is the type of behavior that we are aiming to eliminate because it is the very start of both selfish pride and the start of setting women up on pedestals. You shouldn't require another person's validation to make you feel better about yourself. We are fearfully and wonderfully made by God and we each have our own abilities and talents. We don't need others' validation for what God has created.

> I struggled with seeing women as objects too, I hate to say that I have a porn addiction, and it made me see women as objects which I know is so horrible. I want to get back to just seeing them as people, the way God wants me to see them. Ive prayed so much for this to be healed from this and its only gotten worse. Its like Ill have a too high of a view of women, see them as beautiful and in control of everything. She doesn't need anything from me and I feel like a loser. almost jealous in a bad way. another view is that I despise them, for being hurt I see them as lower and not worth my time. I dont know how this is happening. God has impressed on me with sincerity "It didn't work the first time having a woman to be fulfilled, what makes you think it will happen again?" I think he was hinting towards me having him as my #1 again.

- Your brain on porn is not a Christian site, but it shows you the changes that your brain undergoes when you look at it. All of it bad. This is definitely a sinful habit that needs to be kicked away to the curb without even mentioning the negative effects it has on the perception of women.

There are ways to overcome things especially if you have an addictive personality. On the harsher end of the spectrum you can forgo internet or even a computer.

But all in all it depends on how much you are willing to give up for God. Are women or porn more important than God? That's a choice every Christian man must make for himself.

If you're seeing no progress even with prayer you have already made that choice in your heart.

> I feel depressed, I cant amount to getting back to where I was. I cant bring myself to believe God has a good one for me. I am not sure how this all ties in, Im just ranting and brainstorming right now.
>
> I just am wondering why I despise and don't have a proper view of women anymore? I dont trust God or have hope in him, the world is going to end soon, end times are here. God has forgotten me is the feeling. It probably goes a lot deeper then just women. I feel lifeless, my heart is closed and cold, especially towards women for some reason. I hope this helps, if there is anything else you want to know I will email back.

Ironically, I think this is one of the traps that game imparts to men.

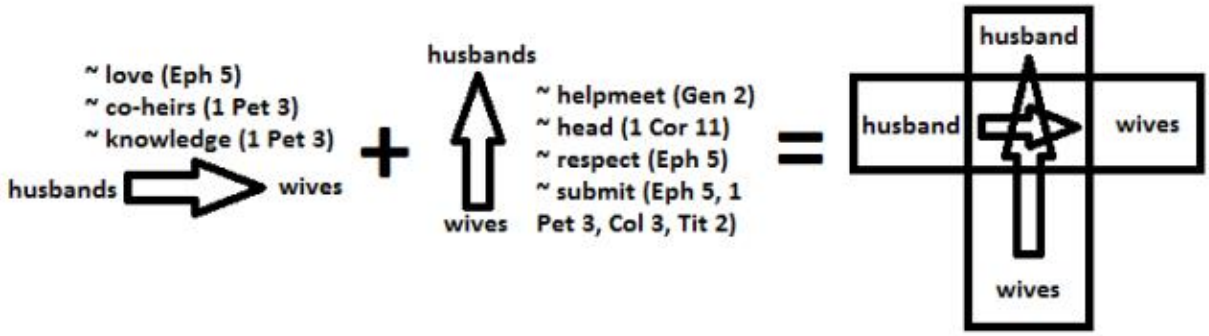
Because game allows you to raise their attractiveness to women, when you use it and women aren't as responsive as you think they should be you begin to seek validation from them. Your ego and pride are raised because you expect that success. The resentment and emptyness will build, even when you have success. Some men fall into this trap and some men don't. Of course, even if you don't fall into this one there are other traps with success with women as evidenced by the secular manosphere.

The main thing I would suggest is to reorient yourself with the Scriptures. The gospel of John is excellent for new Christians because it talks about the story and love of God, and I think it is a good refresher even for older Christians to read because it reminds us of what God is all about. That is where I would start with reading the Scriptures.

It's not about us and what we can get from women, but it is about God's love for us and what we can do for God. This is one of the missions as Christians that He has placed us here for, and being reoriented to that and away from the pedestalization of women is always a good thing.

Lastly, remember that everyone — not just yourself — is fearfully and wonderfully made by God. Even if they are vicious, malicious, and your enemy God still calls us to love them. We don't have to tolerate or put up with that type of behavior as that is not love, instead if they claim to be Christians we should indeed call them out on that behavior.

Conversely, if they are not Christians we should be praying for them and speaking good to them. Even if they are ones who reject us or throw us under the bus.



Both of these require good confrontational skills which are difficult to develop and very tough for most of us former nice guys. But character and virtue are built in overcoming such challenges. So seek God, confess your sins and repent, and continue to pray and do what is good regardless of how you feel about it.

Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives

May 31, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

While I'm on the line of thought of structure of authority I want to give more concrete examples of what it means as a husband to love a wife, treat her as a helpmeet, treat her with knowledge as a weaker vessel and co-heir, and not be embittered to her.

The rot of feminism has infested our thinking so much that we do not correctly understand what it means to love as Jesus loved. Instead, we have a temporal or even feeling based thinking of love. Love does not mean equal in any sense of the word even though the pictoral images may imply it:

You will see this in how Jesus treats His disciples.

How do we know that Jesus is a good example?

To answer this question, we need to look at how Jesus treated His disciples. We know that we have the correct analogy because:

1. Husbands:Wives::Christ:Church (Eph 5)
2. Church (ekklesia) = disciples of Jesus

I believe this is undisputed for any Christian denomination and thus it universally will apply to all husbands and wives of any denomination who call themselves Christians.

What does the interaction of Jesus to the disciples actually look like?

I think the best way to think of it is in terms of the Scriptures, and of the outlined roles and responsibilities set forth in the Scriptures of husbands and wives in marriage.

> 2 Timothy 3:16 All Scripture is [a]inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for [b]training in righteousness; 17 so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work.

Jesus teaches His disciples, He reproofs/rebukes them, He corrects them, and he trains them in righteousness.

1. Teaches — His disciples asked Him the meaning of parables (Mark 7; Luke 8, 18; Matthew 13).
2. Reproofs/rebukes — Rebukes Peter ("get behind me Satan" Matt 16; Mark 8), Disciples hinder the little children and Jesus rebukes (“Let the little children come to me” Matt 19; Mark 10; Luke 18), James and John for wanting to call down fire on the Samaritans (“You do not know what kind of spirit you are of, for the Son of Man did not come to destroy men’s lives, but to save them.” Luke 9).

3. Corrects — Jesus chastises His disciples for their lack of faith. Jesus calms the storm (Matt 8), walks on water (Matt 14), unbelief (Matt 17), lack of understanding discipleship (John 4, 6)
4. Trains — Jesus instructs them on discipleship and sends out the 70 (Luke 10).

These are a few examples from each category. I’m going to explore these more in depth in later articles.

Now, let’s examine these types of actions within the roles and responsibilities of the husband and wife:

- Love (Eph 5)
- Treat with understanding as the weaker vessel as co-heirs in Christ (1 Pet 3)
- Not be embittered (Col 3)
- Wife is a helpmeet (Gen 2)
- Husband is the head (1 Cor 11, Eph 5)
- Wife is to respect (Eph 5, 1 pet 3)
- Wife is to submit to the head (Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Tim 2, 1 Pet 3)

What does it mean to love, not be embittered, and treat as co-heirs?

> John 15:12 “This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you. 15 No longer do I call you slaves, for the slave does not know what his master is doing; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard from My Father I have made known to you. 16 You did not choose Me but I chose you, and appointed you that you would go and bear fruit, and that your fruit would remain, so that whatever you ask of the Father in My name He may give to you. 17 This I command you, that you love one another.

Now, let me clear up some misconceptions.

Love is not only delegated from authoritative positions. Jesus has given Christians the Holy Spirit for which to exercise His love through power (dunamis). However, love is one of the responsibilities that is given to those in authority. God the Father, an authoritative figure, is responsible for loving those under Him. And He does so perfectly by extending His love and allowing us free will to make our good or bad choices.
There is no difference in the execution of the love because of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in all Christians. However, the additional responsibility of an authoritative position is the direct care for those under you. 1 Timothy 5 presents this distinction:

> 1 Timothy 5:3 Honor widows who are widows indeed; 4 but if any widow has > children or grandchildren, they must first learn to practice piety in regard to their own family and to [a]make some return to their parents; for this is acceptable in the sight of God. 5 Now she who is a widow indeed and who has been left alone, has fixed her hope on God and continues in entreaties and prayers night and day. 6 But she who gives herself to wanton pleasure is dead even while she lives. 7 [b]Prescribe these things as well, so that they may be above reproach. 8 But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

For Christians to have charity for one another in the Church such as widows there is a requirement on the widows to live godly lives. This follows in the same line as Matthew 18 and other passages where we are to treat believers who are in sin with LOVE — correct or rebuke them and if they do not repent then hand the over to Satan by excommunicating them.

However, for those in an authoritative position such as husbands there is no requirement that if the wife doesn't live up to her end of the marriage that the husband should stop loving her. The husband must continue to provide for them because it comes with that position. In this case, if the husband loves her he SHOULD BE attempting to chastise or correct the wife if she is off track. But it also does not absolve him of his responsibilities in the marriage.

The disciples sin many times throughout the gospels or get off on the wrong track; however, Jesus never becomes embittered to them even when He has to correct and/or rebuke them. He proactively includes them in His and His Father's business. This is the same command that not just husbands but all Christians have. We have His Holy Spirit and we know the truth; thus, we are to move in power.

Likewise, how does the wife's (Church's) role match up with what the disciples are asked to do?

The Church is a helpmeet to Jesus — "16 You did not choose Me but I chose you, and appointed you that you would go and bear fruit, and that your fruit would remain, so that whatever you ask of the Father in My name He may give to you." Similarly, Jesus sent out taught and instructed the 70 before sending them out and Jesus and the Great Commission.

The Church respects and submits to Jesus by doing what He commanded — 12 "This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. […] 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you. […] 17 This I command you, that you love one another.

Personally, I have never seen myself any instances of where a husband actually has to command a wife to do anything. Sure, husbands will make decisions that may disagree with the wife, but most husbands will not command a wife to go along with it even if he is making that decision. However, the amount of fear from women or wives in marriage that a husband is going to "abuse his power" is prevalent. If any wives have these thoughts they are not of God and you should rebuke them.

How might this look for a modern Christian marriage?

One of the more difficult notions for Christian husbands to understand is that by being the head they have authority over their wife. Unfortunately, most Christian men are afraid of asserting authority because they have been shamed by feminism, society, and even the Church. Donal has a recent post about why authority is seen as something that is bad.

However, authority is in fact not a bad thing but a very good thing if handled in a righteous manner. God has authority over us and no Christian would deny that it is bad. Husbands need to learn how to accept this responsibility as the head and the authority that comes with it. You cannot show love unless you have the power to love. And to love you must be willing to give it freely as is required to each situation — teaching, training, correction and rebuke.

See: Husbands and wives summarized, Structures of authority summarized, Structures of authority before the fall.

> Matthew 7:9 Or what man is there among you [f]who, when his son asks for a loaf, [g]will give him a stone? 10 Or [h]if he asks for a fish, he will not give him a snake, will he? 11 If you then, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will your Father who is in heaven give what is good to those who ask Him!

As we have discussed before, the most difficult thing about authority is not about doing what is good. We instinctively know to treat others well who treat us well as the passage from Matthew states.

The big issue that husbands run into is what to do when correction/chastisement and reproof/rebuke are needed. Most Christian nice guys and nice husbands put feelings above what is right or wish to avoid confrontation. This is obviously incorrect and not what God wants. We are all sinners and we all go off track, so we need to be corrected and rebuked on occasion.

Fortunately, husbands and aspiring husbands have an example of how to act properly in the chain of authority, and likewise wives will also understand the role of Jesus and that of the husband when they have children:

- God/Father -> Jesus -> Disciples
- Jesus -> Husband -> Wife
- Husband -> Wife -> Children

When wives have children they will begin to understand the type of responsibility and role that the husband has for her, and that Jesus has for the Church, and that God has with Jesus. Her love for her children is such a representation. This is why I agree with the Catholic stance on birth control and lack of limiting children because children are indeed a blessing and attempting to take matters into our own hands is destructive. Feminism is a perfect example of the lack of love that women have now for their children with birth control and other “small issues” leading to encouragement of divorce, abortion, and other such atrocities. It is not of God.

Now, Jesus was so in-tune with the Father in terms of teaching, instructing, correcting, and rebuking His disciples that He did things perfectly. However, even He did have His instances where He needed to pray fervently about what He needed to do such as in the garden where He begged to have the cup be taken from Him.

Husbands and aspiring husbands need to understand that they need to be an authoritative head in the marriage. We find it easy to do good things for those that we like, even the wife or woman that we have chosen. However, if we neglect the more difficult responsibilities such as correction, rebuke, and provision/care for those under us then we are not loving God.

The series that I wrote back in Februry gives examples of how to do this in the context of Christian marriage. Jesus was quite direct in his correction and rebuke of His disciples, but we can tell from His interaction with women that He toned it down into more of a softer teasing interaction. If you need help understanding what that looks like then read through these posts:

The Socialization of men and women
The selfish and unselfish socialization of men
Masculinity is the truth
Masculinity is the truth Part 2

I will resume the godliness of Jesus series soon, and I will be planning some further analysis of Jesus' interactions with His disciples.

There is power in the Truth

June 4, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to explore this line of thought because you will see some common threads that pervade human thinking on a fundamental level.

There are a couple of ways to appoach this as you can compare and contrast what is “alpha” and what is “beta.” For example,

- An alpha tends to make his attraction to a woman known right off the bat, while a beta tends to befriend a woman before getting to know her better.
- When confronted about said attraction for a woman, said alpha will make it clear while the beta tends to deny it but covertly still want her.
- Alphas will tend to tease women about their mistakes, while betas will cover up a woman’s mistakes for her.

Essentially, “beta” is built on covert communication which is a woman’s world. That’s why betas are like women. They agree with her and are there for support. They are emotional tampons, and they don’t give her the truth.

The ability to confront the truth of reality, often without fear, is what makes a man a masculine man. A man that women desire.

Obviously, this is just but an analogy to what Jesus discusses in the Scriptures on the light on a lampstand, a city on a hill, and salt and its saltiness. That which loses touch with reality becomes a lie. And there is no power with a lie. There is only death. But there is power with the Truth.

This is the reason why nice guys and nice gals live in sin. It is the idol of feelings, or of fear, of the opposite sex, or of what people think of you rather than trust in the God of truth.

- Think of Abraham who twice told his wife to say that she was his sister in a foreign land. Now, God was behind Abraham even though he sinned, but it was his fear which made him fear bringing the truth to those around him.
- Think of David who covertly desired Bathsheba, had sex with her, and then had one of his mighty men killed. Then he tried to cover it up from the prophet.
- Think of Jonah who ran from the calling that God had for him, and then was eventually thrown overboard and swallowed by a whale before having to preach before the Ninavites.
- Think of every husband today who fails to stand up to his wife to placate her feelings, instead of correcting or rebuking her actions.
- Think of how women are lied to by society about birth control today that there are no side effects when it is clear that there is a link between hormonal birth control and increased incidences of cancer.
- Think of how feminism has lied to women about casual sex, the “oppression” of men/patriarchy, the importance of career, and other such things.

- It's why a slim waist is preferred to fat acceptance, it's why long hair is preferred to the lie of short hair, it's why no tattoos are preferred to tattoos, it's why caked on makeup is unattractive.
- It's why artificial foods are unhealthy as opposed to more natural foods.
- We know the importance of responsibility, not divorcing consequences from actions, positive/negative reinforcement, and accoutnability.
- We know the importance of roles and responsibilities.

Note: I am grossly simplifying many of the issues above but you get the point. What is real — the truth — is more attractive than what is fake — a lie. When men are self concious about things they like or when they shy away from certain things it's unattractive simply because they are lying to themselves and it shows in their body language.

When I wrote the masculinity is the truth series (one, two) a while back I had a vague inkling of what the truth was. But now I see it quite clearly.

It is no coincidence that God has made truth attractive to both sexes. After all, we are made in His image. And Jesus is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Truth is not needy, and it does not seek validation. You have full confidence in it. It shows in your body language and your attitude. Jesus was unlike the scribes and Pharisees for He taught as one who had authority.

The key, therefore, is to anchor yourself to the Truth of Jesus. If you anchor yourself to the truth of human nature — game — then you will become like the ultimate form of human nature — the dark triad. Instead, attach yourself to Jesus — the Truth of overcoming human nature — in order to become like Jesus.

Why modesty

June 4, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So we've discussed modesty in the past before, but this post is dedicated toward understanding the spirit of modesty. I examined this in the previous post, but there are many different lines of arguments for why God values it.

I think one of the interesting things is that God's word is univeral. It is applicable to everyone in society. That means it must address even the lowest common denominator.

When we consider this from the perspective that God's commands address humanity from the lowest possible denominator, we realize that the majority of the Scriptures is addressed to sinners and not saints. This is the good news. God is, first and foremost, concerned about salvation.

> Luke 5:29 And Levi gave a big reception for Him in his house; and there was a great crowd of tax collectors and other people who were reclining at the table with them. 30 The Pharisees and their scribes began grumbling at His disciples, saying, "Why do you eat and drink with the tax collectors and [n]sinners?" 31 And Jesus answered and said to them, "It is not those who are well who need a physician, but those who are sick. 32 I have not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance."

If this is true, then why a command of modesty? Let's hypothetically think about modesty from the lowest common denominator.

If you play dress up — not at a dress up party — as a nerd with out of date clothing, glasses, and a grungy appearance are people not going to think you're a nerd? Or if you plaster yourself with tattoos and worn out too short clothes are people not going to think of you as trailer trash?

Thus, it follows that if you dress like a slut or prostitute and act like slut or prostitute then people are going to think you are a slut or prostitute.

There is a reason why there are laws against impersonating people. For example, if you're impersonating a police officer or federal officer is illegal then people are going to think you are one when you're not. This can lead to all sorts of problems especially if there is an emergency situation.

Now, why would God be against judging people for dressing up like other people? Doesn't He say not to judge in his Word?

For all of the talk about feminism and women as sex desired there is some half truths in there. If you dress like a prostitute or slut then you're going to be viewed as a sex object. This much is true. However, feminism is but a half truth in that the action — dressing like a prostitute or slut — will never ever ever ever be divorced from the consequence — people thinking you're a prostitute or slut and sexually desiring you.

One of the filters that God built into humans (and I don't say this lightly) is that when we see scantily clad members of the opposite sex we tend to be sexually aroused. This is a fact.

If someone is dressing “how they want” by wearing scant clothing then it’s quite obvious that consciously they’re making that choice because they want attention. They want the opposite sex or the same sex in some cases to desire them. It obviously follows that they will be sexually desired.

All men and women know that there are really pretty dresses and skirts that are modesty but very feminine. Yet, those that want to go their own way away from modesty want to only wear scantily clad clothing. Thus, we know that immodesty is inherently about the sexual desires and not about dressing how you want.

For Christians this is sinful and unneeded validation. Why do we need the attention of others when God is the author and perfector of our faith?

Likewise, modesty is a command to force human attention away from sexual desire. God knows that we are all human beings created by Him — fearfully and wonderfully made — with varying talents and abilities. When you dress immodestly, people are going to often tunnel in on only one aspect which is physical appearance. And it is often of an ilicit nature because sexual desire is to be saved for the marriage bed only.

> 1 Thessalonians 5:22 Abstain from all appearance (or form) of evil.

Therefore, it follows that immodesty is inherently about overvaluing the outer appearance. It is about men and women placing an inordinate amount of their self worth into how they look rather than who they are on the inside. Because God values what is in the heart, His command for modesty is really about correctly valuing what God values. Inner beauty.

If men or women truly value what God values — inner beauty — then they will never dress immodestly.

Is there marital rape or not

June 4, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Note: Read the conclusion

I'd thought I'd weigh in on Elspeth's Divided Loyalties and Cane's Red Wedding on the topic of "marital rape" and whether it exists as a thing or not.

Step back for a second.

God's law is above the law of the land, so first an issue must be considered according to God's law. Though if something is not directly in God's law then we are to obey the law of the land. This is the basis of Structures of Authority that God has instituted on this earth.

In first consideration, the legal ramifications of the law of the land are irrelevant. The fact that there was no such thing as marital rape 50 years ago is irrelevant. The fact that marital rape is such a thing now is irrelevant. Our goal is not to be on the side of men but on the side of God.

Let's discuss this from the Biblical perspective.

First, is there established authority in marriage? The answer is undoubtedly yes.

> Ephesians 5:23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
>
> 1 Corinthians 11:3 But I want you to understand that [a]Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman, and God is the head of [b]Christ. […] 8 For man [i]does not originate from woman, but woman from man; 9 for indeed man was not created for the woman's sake, but woman for the man's sake. 10 Therefore the woman ought to have a symbol of authority on her head, because of the angels. 11 However, in the Lord, neither is woman [j]independent of man, nor is man [k]independent of woman. 12 For as the woman [l]originates from the man, so also the man has his birth through the woman; and all things [m]originate from God.

No one would doubt that Jesus has authority (or is head) over the Church. The same is true of husbands to wives. Jesus would never submit to the Church, yet loves it because it is His.

Second, are there exceptions to authority in marriage? The answer is undoubtedly yes. There are exactly two.

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority (exousiazō) over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority (exousiazō) over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote > yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

>
> G1850 — ἐξουσιάζω — exousiazō — ex-oo-see-ad'-zo
> From G1849; to control: – exercise authority upon, bring under the (have) power of.
>
> Ephesians 5:21 [o]and be subject to one another in the [p]fear of Christ.

The Ephesians 5:21 verse is often warped by modern Christians to say that the husband should submit to the wife. However, it is but the exception and only in the case of sin if you do a contextual analysis of Ephesians 5:1-21. In any other instance aside from sin, the wife is to submit to the authority of the husband. The fallibility of humans is the reason there is this exception between the parallel of Jesus' authority over the Church and husbands to wives.

Likewise, in the context of sex in marriage the husband and wife are not have control over their own bodies but submit to each other's desires. This is to affirm the joined together and one flesh of marriage.

Third, The exception to the authority in the matters of sex is that each spouse does not have control over their own bodies. They should not be depriving each other.

Therefore, it is sinful to deprive one another of sex in marriage.

On the other hand, is it sinful [to utilize force] to have sex with your spouse in marriage?

The correct answer is no. It is not sinful. As you can see from the above passage,

> 1 Corinthians 7:4 The wife does not have authority (exousiazō) over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority (exousiazō) over his own body, but the wife does.

It says quite clearly that the husband has authority over the wife's body, and the wife has authority over the husband's body.

However, we must make a note that this is but the letter of the law and not the spirit of the law. Let's examine that in the next section.

Fourth, there are two passages from Corinthians that apply well to this situation.

> 1 Corinthians 6:12 All things are lawful for me, but not all things are profitable. All things are lawful for me, but I will not be mastered by anything. 13 Food is for the [g]stomach and the [h]stomach is for food, but God will do away with both [i]of them. Yet the body is not for immorality, but for the Lord, and the Lord is for the body. 14 Now God has not only raised the Lord, but will also raise us up through His power. 15 Do you not know that your bodies are members of Christ? Shall I then take away the members of Christ and make them members of a prostitute? May it never be! 16 Or do you not know that the one who joins himself to a prostitute is one body with her? For He says, "The two shall become one flesh." 17 But the one who joins himself to the Lord is one spirit with Him. 18 Flee immorality. Every other sin that a man commits is outside the body, > but the [j]immoral man sins against his own body. 19 Or do you not know that your body is a [k]temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you, whom you have from [l]God, and that you are not your own? 20 For you have been bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body.

Paul talks of uniting with a prostitute which is both sinful and unlawful here. However, we know that having sex with your wife is both good and lawful.

The point being that if a spouse forces themselves on another, even though it is not sinful and lawful, it is very close if not at the point at which the spouse is mastered by their lusts and not love.

> 1 Corinthians 10:23 All things are lawful, but not all things are profitable. All things are lawful, but not all things edify. 24 Let no one seek his own good, but that of his [i]neighbor. 25 Eat anything that is sold in the meat market without asking questions for conscience' sake; 26 for the earth is the Lord's, and [j]all it contains. 27 If one of the unbelievers invites you and you want to go, eat anything that is set before you without asking questions for conscience' sake. 28 But if anyone says to you, "This is meat sacrificed to idols," do not eat it, for the sake of the one who informed you, and for conscience' sake; 29 I mean not your own conscience, but the other man's; for why is my freedom judged by another's conscience? 30 If I partake with thankfulness, why am I slandered concerning that for which I give thanks? 31 Whether, then, you eat or drink or whatever you do, do all to the glory of God. 32 Give no offense either to Jews or to Greeks or to the church of God; 33 just as I also please all men in all things, not seeking my own profit but the profit of the many, so that they may be saved.

Likewise, Paul exhorts the Corinthians to understand that it is not about them. The Spirit of Christianity is about relationships and not about yourself.

Conclusions

- Is there such thing as marital rape under the law of God? No.
- Is utilizing force in marriage to have sex with your spouse sinful? No.

That is what the letter of the law says. However, the spirit of the law is different.

Even if you seek what is good for both parties — sex in marriage — if one of the spouses adamantly refuses by the Spirit of Christianity, then it is not bad but it is also not good to force them to even when you have the authority.

The reason for this goes back to God's creation. We were all created with free will. When you force someone into doing something they don't want to do that negates their free will. The good news of the grace of God is for those who want to accept it. It cannot be forced upon anyone.

In summary, regarding the possibility of "forced" sex in a Christian marriage:

- One spouse is in sin (the one refusing) and one is not (the one doing the forcing),
- but both are not walking according to the Spirit of Christianity and one flesh.

In reality, what usually happens is:

- One spouse refuses sex (and is in sin), and the other spouse becomes indignant and responds not out of love (while lawful, not with the fruits of the Spirit) but doesn't force sex.
- One spouse is in open rebellion against Christ and their eternal soul is in danger (the one refusing sex), and the other is a Pharisee who holds the law over love even when they have the authority to do that what they want (the one who wants sex but responds not out of love).

What should happen is:

- The refusing spouse should know the Scriptures or be enlightened to the Scriptures and repent.
- The initiating spouse should respond out of love by correcting with the Scriptures, and explaining/teaching them if they are unaware. If they continue in rebellion then potentially meting out consequences as necessary.

This issue is complicated because it accurately highlights three different categories:

- Rebellion against God (the one refusing to have sex in marriage).
- The letter of the law of God (the non-sinful and lawful potential to force a spouse to have sex).
- The Spirit of God and Christianity (the desire to have both spouses choose to have sex willingly and enthusiastically of their own free will).

In reality, we are prone to thinking of life in context of only two categories: good and bad. However, often we want to do good, but we follow the letter of the law instead of the Spirit of God. This means it comes off as legalistic or mean-spirited even if it is the Truth.

> 1 Corinthians 8:Now concerning things sacrificed to idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge [a]makes arrogant, but love edifies. 2 If anyone supposes that he knows anything, he has not yet known as he ought to know; 3 but if anyone loves God, he is known by Him.
>
> 4 Therefore concerning the eating of things sacrificed to idols, we know that [b]there is no such thing as an idol in the world, and that there is no God but one. 5 For even if there are so-called gods whether in heaven or on earth, as indeed there are many gods and many lords, 6 yet for us there is but one God, the Father, from whom are all things and we exist for Him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we exist through Him.

> 7 However not all men have this knowledge; but some, being accustomed to the idol until now, eat food as if it were sacrificed to an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled. 8 But food will not [c]commend us to God; we are neither [d]the worse if we do not eat, nor [e]the better if we do eat. 9 But take care that this [f]liberty of yours does not somehow become a stumbling block to the weak. 10 For if someone sees you, who have knowledge, dining in an idol's temple, will not his conscience, if he is weak, be strengthened to eat things sacrificed to idols? 11 For through your knowledge he who is weak is ruined, the brother for whose sake Christ died. 12 And so, by sinning against the brethren and wounding their conscience when it is weak, you sin against Christ. 13 Therefore, if food causes my brother to stumble, I will never eat meat again, so that I will not cause my brother to stumble.

It is of first importance, even if we know the Truth, to minister to people where they are. Not impress upon them the Truth that they may not know or not be able to handle at that point in time.

Is it important to know that there is no such thing as marital rape? Sure. But it is more important that people don't divorce.

Note: If you couldn't understand what this post is advocating then here is the final conclusion:

If a Christian husband or wife wants to force themselves on their spouse then they are more like a Pharisee (obey the letter of the law) than Jesus (He who embodies the Spirit of the law). As Christians, even though we know it is lawful, we want to be like Jesus.

That's the reason why forcing sex on the spouse is a sin. It's a sin of hypocrisy.

I personally cannot think of any instance that I've heard of where Christians who are walking the walk have forced themselves on their spouses.

The end.

Ashamed

June 11, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been busy which is why I haven't been posting. However, this is an important topic to discuss.

Donal's post on Ashamed of the Faith today reminded me of it. I thought I wrote on this topic before. I just searched my blog, and it seems I didn't.

About 4-5 months ago I was in a Bible study, and we were discussing marriage roles specifically in context of submission and headship. One of the older men stated how uncomfortable he was with discussing submission, and kept going back to the error of mutual submission except in sex (1 Cor 7) and in sin (Eph 5).

At that time, I didn't speak up at that point because I didn't know what to say. It was probably around the beginning of Feb when this blog had just started, and I still hadn't perused the Scriptures in depth where I was comfortable speaking up in that situation on this particular topic especially to a married man.

However, this is not something that is uncommon with today's men.

After a couple of days of introspection on this topic, I came to the conclusion that people are "uncomfortable" with what God's word says. The way Escoffier, Donal and others put it is embarrassed or ashamed. In this situation, all of these words are synonyms for the same thing:

> Luke 12:8 "And I say to you, everyone who confesses Me before men, the Son of Man will confess him also before the angels of God; 9 but he who denies Me before men will be denied before the angels of God. 10 And everyone who [g]speaks a word against the Son of Man, it will be forgiven him; but he who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit, it will not be forgiven him. 11 When they bring you before the synagogues and the rulers and the authorities, do not worry about how or what you are to speak in your defense, or what you are to say; 12 for the Holy Spirit will teach you in that very hour what you ought to say."

I remember contemplating why we are uncomfortable, or ashamed, or embarrassed for God's Scriptures.

Every single denomination of the faith believes that the Scriptures are the inspired Word of God. So why are we afraid of what it says? What does that say about us and our beliefs?

A month later I helped to lead a discussing on the topic of sex and marriage in the same Bible study. Afterward, a couple of people came up to me and thanked me for leading that particular uncomfortable topic.

The way I responded to that assertion was that I had practiced speaking about these different subjects before. Specifically, I covered what I do here: Improving your public and conversational speaking and Improving your public and conversational speaking 2. I muse these topics out loud because I was to be confident speaking on what the Scriptures say.

If I'm uncomfortable talking about what is good then what am I doing? Every single Christian knows that God has created sex in marriage to be good. He created humans to be very good. Why should I be uncomfortable, or embarrassed, or ashamed to talk about what is good?

This is something I definitely still struggle with when talking about God, especially with my non-believing friends. This is something I am focused on working to improve. However, I have made great strides with talking about any uncomfortable topics with Christians which has been excellent for developing relationships and spurring one another on toward Christ.

Unfortunately, we live in a time where many are deceived.

This leads us to one of the more difficult verses in the Scriptures for many to accept:

> 1 Timothy 2:11 A woman must quietly receive instruction with entire submissiveness. 12 But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man, but to remain quiet. 13 For it was Adam who was first [h]created, and then Eve. 14 And it was not Adam who was deceived, but the woman being deceived, [i]fell into transgression. 15 But women will be [j]preserved through the bearing of children if they continue in faith and love and sanctity with [k]self-restraint.

I've heard my pastor explicate this passage well. Paul gives two reasons on why women are not to have authority (exousia) over men.

- First, it goes back to creation order. Adam is created first and then Eve. It could have been that God created humans the other way around, but He didn't. 1 Corinthians 11 back this up: God is the head of Christ, who is the head of man, who is the head of woman.
- Second, being deceived is worse than the alternative, which is that Adam knowingly committed sin.

The biggest problem with being deceived is that you don't know you're doing harm. Mark Driscoll, James Dobson (Focus on the Family), and all of the other Christian pastors who keep pushing Churchianity — with women or women's feelings as the decider of what is "love" or "how they need to be served" — simply are deceived. They think they are doing what is good, but they are not doing what is good.

The trouble is that most people who would consider themselves Christians believe that the message they preach is true. This is the insidious nature of deception. It is worse because it sounds like the truth but is in actuality a lie. The Scriptures are bent from the full truth to a half truth. This is why Jesus railed vehemently against the Pharisee's: it is blind men leading other blind men into a pit. This is what happened to Eve in the garden.

Alternatively, when you knowingly commit sin at least you know you are committing sin. You know there will be consequences. This is the choice that Adam made in the garden.

Now, this is not to say that men are never deceived. It is quite clear from Churchianity that many male pastors are deceived. This is not to say that women are always the ones being deceived as that is clearly not true either. However, I think it likely indicates that women may be more prone to being deceived than men. If I had to make a guess given what we know of Churchianity's alias — the cult of nice — I would say this is due to the more emotional nature of women.

Biological realities tend to lie on a continuum. For example, the average male is about 5'9″ whereas the average female is about 5'5″ the last time I checked. This means that the majority of men will be on average taller than the majority of women. However, there will obviously be some women who are taller than the majority of men (and they will end up playing in the WNBA) just as there will be some men shorter than the average women.

Likewise, the preference for emotional and logical thinking also lies on a similar continuum. I read some research a couple months ago that stated that a man has to be emotional in the 85th percentile to be emotional as the average woman.

This was the general point I was attempting to make when I wrote my since revoked post on "men are logical and women are emotional." It's not so much that you're one or the other, but there is definitely a continuum present in biology for a great many things. Height, sex drive, skin color, disposition, and many other traits that depend on multiple factors are just one. Even in the few differentiating one or the other splits such as sex there are exceptions such as hermaphrodites.

In any case, whether my reasoning above is true or not the reason doesn't really matter. The Scriptures state that the authoritative structure is this way because of the creation order as well as the deception of the women. At the very least we must take that at face value as difficult as that may be for some to accept. I'm not uncomfortable, embarrassed, or ashamed of that anymore.

Conclusions

- Let us not be afraid to speak of what is Good. The Scriptures speak of what is Good. We should not be uncomfortable, ashamed, or embarrassed of them.

If we are uncomfortable, ashamed, or embarrassed of them that is the same as denying Jesus before men. I don't particular want Jesus to deny me before the Father, so let us strive to do what is right by boldly proclaiming His truth.

- The deception is real in Christianity today. Both men and women are included in this deception.

I'm not sure how to fix this other than to perhaps bring up the Scriptures above more readily when I talk to other Christians, but we need to realize that this is the case where many are living in this deception. This is the reason I always speak on boldness and fearlessness aside from the fact that it is espoused in the Scriptures. We need to stand firm on the rock.

Most Christians are going to want to avoid what is uncomfortable, embarrassing, or what they feel ashamed of, and so we need to encourage them not to do that. We need to at the very least tell them, so they have that chance to open their eyes to the truth. Whether they take it or not is up to them and their choice.

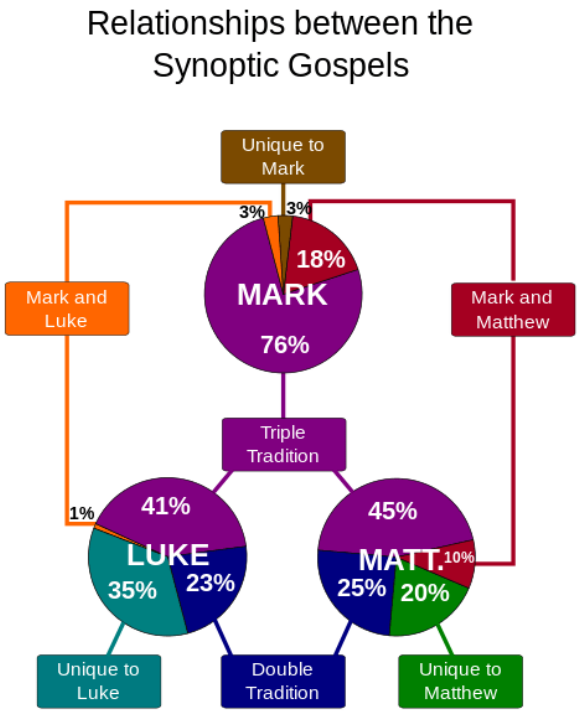
Independent testimony

June 13, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting things about the Greek is that you see differences in the texts of the gospels.

For example, Matthew and Mark primarily use the word “Hierosoluma” when referring to Jerusalem.

> G2414 — Ἱεροσόλυμα — Hierosoluma — hee-er-os-ol’-oo-mah
>
> Of Hebrew origin [H3389]; Hierosolyma (that is, Jerushalaim), the capital of Palestine: – Jerusalem. Compare G2419.



However, Luke and Acts (written by Luke) primarily use the word “Hierousalēm” when referring to Jerusalem.

> G2419 — Ἱερουσαλήμ — Hierousalēm — hee-er-oo-sal-ame’
>
> Of Hebrew origin [H3389]; Hierusalem (that is, Jerushalem), the capital of Palestine: – Jerusalem. Compare G2414.

Obviously, they are words for the same city in English, but they are written differently in Greek.

It’s probable that Matthew and Luke potentially drew from Mark’s gospel as Mark’s is generally recognized as that which was written first. This is but one of the illustrations of the unique features of each gospel.

Wiki has a great picture of how the synoptic gospels relate to each other:

In any case, many of you may have not have noticed that I added another section on the guide bar of this blog titled Evidence of the Resurrection.

That page goes over some of the logical, factual, and historical arguments for the resurrection of Jesus. Many critics call Christianity a “blind faith,” and many Christians perpetuate this notion that we are to have faith rather than logic and reason. This is a poor view of Christianity because it is reactionary rather than proactive.

> Hebrews 11:1 Now faith is the [a]assurance of things [b]hoped for, the [c]conviction of things not seen. 2 For by it the men of old [d]gained approval.

This is what Hebrews 11 discusses. I’m not a person to put my trust in blind faith for what I believe. Rather, I take His promises on faith because there is proof/assurance of what I believe. Fortunately there is ample evidence to suggest that Jesus did rise from the dead.

I recommend watching all of the videos in the above link if you have time, but if you don’t then this is a good one to watch:

Authority is good

June 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the realiziations that I have run across when I was discussing the concepts in the posts on Structures of Authority with “egalitarians” is the implicit notion that authority is bad and equality is good.

- Husbands and wives summarized
- Structures of Authority summarized
- Structures of Authority before the fall
- Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives

If we implicitly hold “equality” to be an ideal, then this necessarily assumes that authority is bad. You can’t have it any other way.

Unfortunately, this is obviously proved incorrect.

- The triune God — Father, Jesus, Holy Spirit — exists as 3 in 1 and has a clearly defined authority structure within Himself — Father > Son > Holy Spirit.
- God is good.
- God, who is perfect, cannot contradict Himself.
- Therefore, authority which is of God and in God is good.

Prior to the fall, we know that God gave man authority over three different aspects of creation which was good:

1. Man (humans) > animals
2. Man (humans) > earth
3. Husbands > wives

Ironically, the only one treated as “bad” is that of husbands > wives.

Post fall, we know that there are multiple structures that God delegates to earthly authorities in the Scriptures that are good.

- God > Earthly authotiries > Christians
- Father sends Jesus to die for our sins
- Jesus delegates/sends Holy Spirit to believers
- Holy Spirit > husbands > wives
- Husbands > wives > children, and also parents > children
- God > God inspired Scripture > Pastors (elders/overseers) > church (or flock)

Arguing with anyone with implicitly wrong assumptions will always result in failure. If they assume that “equality” is what is inherently good and thus by the same measure that “authority” is inherently bad, then they will never understand the nature of God. If they don’t understand the nature of God, then they will be prone to rebellion irregardless of logic.

I believe the reason why “equality” is held as the gold standard, aside from the insidious creep of feminism, is that “equality” is meant to be as an equivalent to “unity.” God definitely desires unity between all Christians, and desires that all may be saved that they may also enter into unity with Him.

However, unity and equality are not the same thing. We know that the triune God, perfect in His 3 in 1 unity, is also perfect in His authority (Father > Son > Holy Spirit), and by that nature He is also perfect in love and goodness.

Therefore, we base our assumptions not on equality but on authority. We base our hopes not on equality but unity. And we know that which brings together unity and authority is God whose banner is love and goodness.

This is the paradigm shift that is needed to truly understand Christianity. I will be exploring the different paradigms in upcoming posts.

A Christian understanding of attraction

June 15, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Update: New version with updates:
https://deepstrength.wordpress.com/2024/03/04/a-christian-understanding-of-attraction-and-the-role-it-plays-in-marriage-dominion-is-baked-into-the-cake-part-4/

Back in January, I wrote the post Understanding Attraction. It was somewhat based off of insight based off of what we see in the real world evidence from the PUAs and players. Donal Graeme has two excellent codified posts of what "vectors" are involved with attraction. 5 vectors of female attraction and going APE with a categorization of appearance/personality/externalities.

However, this didn't really sit right with me. I think material world analysis is good, but it's of the world. We know that God created the world and everything in it as good, but it's not the same thing as what God says in His Word. And we are supposed to base our actions, thoughts, and beliefs off of what God says, especially in His Word.

It was actually this past series on Authority and the argument in Authority is Good that has really opened up my eyes to understanding attraction from a Christian perspective. I think most of the Christian manosphere bloggers will kick themselves for not understanding this sooner.

---

1. Attraction

To understand attraction let's go back all the way to the creation of the world.

> Genesis 1:26 Then God said, "Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule (râdâh) over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [ak]sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth." 27 God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them. 28 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue (kâbash) it; and rule (râdâh) over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth." 29 Then God said, "Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed that is on the [an]surface of all the earth, and every tree [ao]which has fruit yielding seed; it shall be food for you; 30 and to every beast of the earth and to every bird of the [ap]sky and to every thing that [aq]moves on the earth [ar]which has life, I have given every green plant for food"; and it was so. 31 God saw all that He had made, and behold, it was very good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.
>
> H7287 — râdâh — raw-daw'
> A primitive root; to tread down, that is, subjugate; specifically to crumble off: – (come to, make to) have dominion, prevail against, reign, (bear, make to) rule, (- > r, over), take.

>
> H3533 — kâbash — kaw-bash'
> A primitive root; to tread down; hence negatively to disregard; positively to conquer, subjugate, violate: – bring into bondage, force, keep under, subdue, bring into subjection.

I think the best word for understand this authority or rule is dominion. God tells man to take dominion over all of the earth.

If you read the previous post on Structures of Authority before the fall, you'll see that that there are 3 arguments from Genesis that husbands had authorities over wives prior to the fall. Namely,

- God creates and brings the animals in front of Adam to name, and the same thing occurs with Eve.
- The comparison of Cain's temptation with sin and his decree to master it is the same as Eve's curse to desire her husband and the husband's rule over the wife.
- The fact that we understand that perfect authority, as exemplified by God -> Jesus and Jesus -> Church, is love. Adam, prior to the fall, could perfectly love his wife as Jesus does the Church.

God intentionally does not make men and women "equal" prior to the fall. Instead, God creates with the intention of a husband having the authority over the wife which is exemplified through being his helpmeet.

Therefore, by the same measure we understand that it is one of the innate characteristics of marriage — the dominion of the husband over the wife — that God has created to be attractive to women. Likewise, this is in agreement with God's command to take dominion over all of the earth.

Let's look at Donal's vectors of attraction which we know to be empirically true, and see if they fit within the paradigm that God has created and commanded — that man have dominion over the earth (which includes himself).

- Power/Personality — A man that has dominion over his person and thus power/personality is not needy or have any deficiencies. He does not have anything to prove. If he needs something instead of begging others for it, he goes out and accomplishes it.
- Status — Status is an indicator of man's dominion over social situations or social groups.
- Athleticism — Athleticism is a man's dominion over his body primarily physically but also psychologically and emotionally in action.
- Looks — While men cannot change what they are born with, they can exert dominion over how they look and how they appear by taking care of themselves with proper grooming, smell, clothes, etc.
- Money — Money is a dominion in itself because it can be exchanged for needs, goods, and services. It is literally a means by which a man can access that which he desires.

As you can see, each of these vectors show different aspects of what a man has dominion over here on this earth. This is expressed through a man's dominion over himself, and a man's dominion over his environment.

What is very interesting is that a man's lack of dominion results in sin. Think for a moment about the 7 deadly sins:

- Lust — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his desire for money, food, fame, power, or sex then he falls into sin.
- Gluttony — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his wants or needs then he overindulges or overconsumes.
- Greed — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his desire for material possessions.
- Sloth — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his own laziness.
- Wrath — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his emotions especially anger.
- Envy — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his desire for what his neighbor possesses.
- Pride — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over himself.

Pride, being the original and most serious sin, is what all of the other sins stem from. It is a lack of dominion over himself such that he loses control in any of the areas above such as lust, gluttony, greed, sloth, wrath, or envy.

Thus, the Christian definition of "attraction" is doing that which God has commanded in the beginning: to take dominion over the earth and likewise to his wife. A Christian man can do that by exerting dominion over himself and any environment he inhabits.

When a man fails to exert dominion over himself then he sins and will also generally becomes unattractive. Men who cannot control their own lust put women on a pedestal or become addicted to things such as pornography. Men who cannot control their gluttony will become obese or become addicted to things such as video games. Men who cannot control their sloth may quit their jobs and live in their parents basement. etc.

You can see this across the world as both non-Christian and Christian men become more feminized. There is a lack of responsibility for taking dominion over their own lives and their environments.

---

2. Sexual desire / arousal

Attraction is different than sexual desire or arousal. However, they are accomplished by similar mechanisms. Let's explore the Scriptures which speak to this.

As previously mentioned in Structures of Authority before the fall, God outlines the curse put on Eve, and it is contrasted against Cain's struggle against sin:

- Gen 3:16c Yet your desire (teshûqâh) will be for your husband, And he will rule (mâshal) over you."
- Gen 4:7 If you do well, [e]will not your countenance be lifted up? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire (teshûqâh) is for you, but you must master (mâshal) it.

> H4910 — mâshal — maw-shal'
> A primitive root; to rule: – (have, make to have) dominion, governor, X indeed, reign, (bear, cause to, have) rule (-ing, -r), have power.
>
> H8669 — teshûqâh — tesh-oo-kaw'
> From H7783 in the original sense of stretching out after; a longing: – desire.
>
> H7783 — shûq — shook
> A primitive root; to run after or over, that is, overflow: – overflow, water.

The two implications here are very interesting.

Teshûqâh comes from the root word shûq which denotes a manifestation of human desire such that it overflows overflow. I believe that it is directly related to the condition of the heart.

The first is the traditional interpretation of the verses here. This is that a wife desires (overflows with longing for) her husband in that she desires his authority. This is the evil state of the heart where desire is a temptation. This is the easiest interpretation to pull out because humans are naturally rebellious. Likewise, the desire of a wife to usurp the husband's rule is a temptation like sin. This the temptation that many Christian wives today have fallen to.

The mean here where desire is temptation agrees with the verse about Cain in Genesis 4. Sin lies at the door, and the desire (temptation or overflowing with long for) is there but Cain should master it.

The other interpretation is pulled out from the only other verse where teshûqâh is used in the Scriptures — Song of Songs.

- Gen 3:16c Yet your desire (teshûqâh) will be for your husband, And he will rule (mâshal) over you."
- Song of Solomon 7:10 — The Union of Love — "I am my beloved's, And his desire (teshûqâh) is for me. 11 "Come, my beloved, let us go out into the [l]country, Let us spend the night in the villages. 12 "Let us rise early and go to the vineyards; Let us see whether the vine has budded And its blossoms have opened, And whether the pomegranates have bloomed. There I will give you my love. 13 "The mandrakes have given forth fragrance; And over our doors are all choice fruits, Both new and old, Which I have saved up for you, my beloved.

From this we know that desire — teshûqâh — is also an overflow of sexual desire and/or longing for in both feeling or emotion that spurs one to action.

If we take this into context with the passage from Genesis, we see that the wife will sexually desire her husband when [when she submits to] his dominion over her. This is the good side of submission to authority for the wife — she will overflow with sexual desire for her husband. See the rest of Song of Songs for more details, or alternatively look no further than romance novels or 50 shades where the protagonist ravishes the woman.

The passage in Song of Songs is from the reverse perspective. When the woman — the Shulammite Bride — is possessed by her love (e.g. "I am my beloved's") then the husband's sexual desire will be for her. Thus, a husband's overflow of sexual desire comes from possessing his wife. In other words, the Shulammite wants to be her beloved's/husband's. There is probably no greater turn off, aside from obesity, than an unsubmissive wife. An unsubmissive wife does not want to be her husband's as she disrespects, nags, and otherwise in rebellion.

Therefore, following God's command of the husband's authority over the wife in the marriage relationship results in a husband's sexual desire for his wife (Song of Songs) and a wife's sexual desire for her husband.

These Scriptures unify what we have observed throughout the manosphere. Those wives that are rebellious and thus desire the authority of their husband instead of submitting to it will have no sexual desire for him. Those wives that submit to their husband's authority and his possession of them will overflow with sexual desire for him. And likewise, vice versa.

I am always amazed at the multiple meanings that can be found in the Scriptures.

Conclusions

This is a post I have been most excited to write since the inception of this blog, and I suspect that it will stay that way for some time. This is the paradigm shift from "PUA/player" understanding of attraction and sexual desire that I have been looking for ever I took the anti-game perspective.

I wrote in Reactive, Proactive, and Truth that currently the majority of the Christian manosphere is based off of neo-reaction style of thinking. Basically, the neo-reaction is that we see trends emerging from what has happened in society (namely feminism), and there is a rational, logical based response to it (e.g. players, PUAs, MRAs, Christians, etc). The problem with this is that God does not call Christians to be reactive but to be proactive by obeying His commands. Thus, a concept such as game is incompatible with Christianity.

However, the failure of the Christians to understand what the Scriptures state on attraction and sexual desire has impeded us from becoming proactive in our faith. This is the reason why I am excited because Christians now have a rational, logical, Scripture-based reason to understand the nature of attraction and sexual desire from a Scriptural standpoint.

Attraction

- The nature of attraction is rooted in God's command to humans to have dominion over the earth, and in a husband's dominion over his wife.
- A man that has dominion over his personal life and environment will be attractive.
- A man that lacks dominion over his personal life and environment will tend to be unattractive AND almost always in sin.

As you can see, this unites the commands of God with how Christians are supposed to live their lives. When Christians fail to do what God commands, not only are we generally more unattractive but we are also in sin.

Sexual desire

- A wife that desires to usurp dominion/authority from her husband will have no sexual desire toward him. This is typically involved in the context of nagging, disrespect, and otherwise inward or outward rebellion against authority.
- This desire — teshûqâh — is not mutually exclusive although often results in a mutually exclusive outcome. Either the wife will desire to usurp authority from the husband, or she will sexually desire him.
- A wife who submits to her husband dominion over her will have sexual desire toward him.
- A husband whose wife wants to be possessed by him — she wants to be under his authority — will have sexual desire toward his wife.

Post up any discussions, thoughts, or critique.

Where man up goes wrong

June 22, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I haven't disappeared completely. I've been thinking long and hard about where my post on Christian attraction should go because I think this is an important topic to define potential recommendations for young men (and women) wanting to marry.

However, I do want to briefly address why the Christian manosphere is so averse to the "man up" line.

I've discussed before that "man up" is a useful tool from other men to other men in order to fix problems in their lives. For example, if a man is afraid to public speak, or do something difficult for him, or is avoiding a conflict and being passive aggressive for any type of reason this is the type of line of thinking that men use for each other to motivate them to action. I spoke of this in masculinity is the truth.

Basically, Jesus does the same thing with His disciples very often. He criticisizes them for their lack of faith, or their lack of action, or getting things wrong such as worrying about who is the greatest, denying the little children from coming to Him, not allowing the sick and the hurting to speak with Him and receive healing, etc.

This is the positive aspect of "man up" where men can motivate other men to do the right thing or criticize each other to do the right thing.

- Men can use "man up" positively to other men in order to get such men to overcome their fears, adversity, or other difficulties in life.

However, the "man up" mantra gets hairy when you start to involve women into the picture.

"Man up" in regard to women is not necessarily a bad thing. For example, if a man admits that he wants to talk to a woman to ask her out on a date or some variation such as that it's a good thing to stimulate a man into action in this case if he has performed his due diligence in vetting her character and in prayer.

However, the place where the "man up" mantra goes off kilter is in traditional churchianity:

1. Pastor tells a husband or the dating Christian man, often from the pulpit, to "man up" and "lead" / "love" his wife.
2. Especially if the husband wants more sex, or the Christian man wants to get the woman to like him.
3. Pastor then gives some examples of what it means to "man up."
4. Examples include doing chores, give her compliments, buy her gifts, and of course the penultimate "make her feel loved" often by doing more things for her.

Dalrock outlines this well in Reframing Christian marriage.

Doing good things, compliments, and whatever else are not necessarily bad things. HOWEVER, when they're put in this context multiple things go wrong:

- The wife can hear the pastor telling husbands to do X, Y, Z for her. If the pastor is saying this and the husband doing it then it's not the husband leading.
- This "love" and "leading" is not love or leading. Love is given freely, and the pastor is teaching the incorrect notion that "love" and "sex" are something to be bargained for and of a transaction nature. They are not as taught in the Scriptures.
- Finally, as Dalrock states in the above the goal is of the man up is to "make his wife/girlfriend/etc. FEEL loved" and not actually about the husband actually leading himself.

I'm not one to criticize without giving answers, so I'd like to put forth an alternative presentation of what pastors can actually do in order to give men a good message that actually helps them lead their wives.

1. Stop worrying about how your wife is feeling. Instead, make decisions based on spiritual health rather than physical feelings. The very fact that men tunnel in on how their wife is feeling means that they start to make everything about how their wife is feeling which means they are following their wives instead of following God. Do not fall into this trap.
2. Take your wife's feelings/opinions/etc under advisement. She is your helpmeet. She is giving you advice which you can take in to make the decision.
3. Anything that you do for your wife you should not do it under the expectation that you will receive anything back for it. If you do anything under the expectation of tit-for-tat you are reinforcing poor behavior. You can't "buy" or "negotiate" respect, sex, or anything in a relationship. If you reinforce that behavior you're teaching your wife the wrong spiritual attitude in a relationship, and you will reap the consequences of such.
4. Remind husbands and wives (if this is a sermon) that there needs to be both grace and forgiveness from each side. Holding things over each other, like tit-for-tat, is entirely unChristian and going to lead to terrible relationship dynamics.
5. And last but not least, obviously reminder of the various Scriptural roles and responsibilities of husbands (head, love, not embittered, honor as co-heirs) and wives (helpmeet, respect, submission) in marriage.

All of these points are good start.

I think one of the biggest things that Christian husbands must be told to do is that if the wife is fighting for control of the relationship in marriage that he should stand up to her. Obviously, the wife should be told to stop attempting to usurp authority as that is a sin. However, a husband voluntarily acceding control of the relationship is a sin too. It is not a sin to fight for what God wants which is a husband led marriage.

This is what the real "man up" should be about. The husband should assert himself in the marriage. It’s better for a husband to be too strong of a leader than not enough.

edit: deti adds how “man up” is/was co-opted by feminists:

>  feminists appropriated the phrase “man up” to mean something very different from its original meaning, and Matt Walsh has fallen prey to it. It’s why a lot of men (myself included) bristle at the phrase, particularly when uttered nowadays.
>
> “Man up” was a rebuke and a correction from men to other men and boys who needed a good kick in the pants. They needed encouragement or sometimes just a stern reproof from another man to get with the program, stop being such a whiny b*tch, stop being a p*ssy, pull your weight, get your sh!t done, etc. “Man up, son! The rest of the tribe needs you to get with it!”
>
> Today, the phrase isn’t uttered to get men lined up with other men. Now, men are told to “man up” when they aren’t doing what women and feminized men want and expect them to. In this culture, “man up” is a demand that a man submit himself to the feminine imperative. He needs to hitch himself to a plow, get a job, make money and “put away childish things” not for his own good, but for the specific purpose of making himself useful to a woman. He needs to do these things not because it will sharpen him and make him into a man; but because they will benefit some woman in his preordained role as her husband and father to her (not their, HER) children.
>
> “Man up” used to mean “your tribe needs you”. Now, it means “marry the slut”. It means “a woman needs your money, services, and labor”.

You can see how men and women used it differently. Now men are using it on other men because of feminism and this is bad.

Dominion

June 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In A Christian understanding of attraction, we noted that both attraction and sexual desire is naturally created from God's command to take dominion/authority over the earth, and of the dominion/authority of the husband over the wife in marriage.

We also noted that a lack of dominion in the lives of Christian men often lends toward sin. Those that are unable to control their lust often pedastalize women or become entrapped in things such as pornography. Those that cannot control their gluttony may become unhealthy and obese. And the like.

Aquietmimic noted in the comments that this parallels with what Jesus did on earth. God sent Jesus in order to be a sacrifice in order that for their to be dominion over sins such that through Jesus there would be a way to the Father.

We also know how the story ends as well. Ultimately, Jesus will return a second time and will bring dominion over all of the earth. Then the old creation will pass away.

> Revelation 21: Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth passed away, and there is no longer any sea. 2 And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband.

In any case, the question we need to consider now that we understand the paradigm correctly is in what way should this impact our lives?

Fundamental assumptions

1. God does not promise a spouse to Christian men or women.
2. Regardless of whether we are married in this lifetime, God requires that all Christian men and women become mature Christians.
3. Being a mature Christian consists of walking out the Great Commission through loving God and loving others.

Dominion of the earth

I've spent a rather large amount of time attempting to discern where to head with this topic because it's important to know what God says about what we should be doing in this lifetime. This blog is primarily focused on teaching men, especially Christian men that want to marry, so that's a toughter topic to discern in the context of what we are supposed to do according to Scriptures.

In A Christian Understand of Attraction, I discussed that the nature of attraction from a Christian perspective is rooted in the concept of authority or dominion. This is because we understand that Authority is good.

This then is the sequence of events regarding dominion:

1. In the beginning, God gave man authority over the earth (Gen 1:26-31).
2. When man disobeyed God and obeyed Satan, the earth became the dominion of Satan (John 12:31, Eph 2:2, 2 Tim 2:26, 1 John 5:19, 2 Cor 4:4).
3. But God sent Jesus to become a sacrifice in order to redeem us from sin (John 3:16-21, Col 1:13).
4. After Jesus' sacrifice — death, burial, and resurrection — God redeemed the authority from Satan and granted it to Jesus. Thus, all authority in heaven and on earth was granted to Jesus, and His command to us as His disciples is to spread the Good News (Matt 28:18-20, 1 Cor 15).
5. Jesus retains this authority, although Satan is still allowed to act in this world, until He comes again (Matt 24:14, Rev 1:7).

I find this story particularly fascinating. The chain of authority was passed on through the series of events. Instead of man taking dominion over the earth, man is supposed to taken dominion over the earth in the name of Jesus.

> Mathew 28:18 And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying, "All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth. 19 [e]Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 20 teaching them to observe all that I commanded you; and lo, I am with you [f]always, even to the end of the age."

Now, let's take a look at the husband and wife relationship.

Dominion in marriage

The reason why I deemed a Christian understanding of attraction so important is because the quintessential nature of attraction in understanding the hierarchical relationship of marriage.

I started writing about this on Donal's Making it worth the Investment.

Essentially, I think the easiest way to explain this to those of you that read this blog is to understand Christian marriage from results oriented approach. Thus, we will examine the desire result — the truth of marriage — and using backward induction to examine the consequences.

- Optimal result: marriage
- Preparing for marriage: the best way to prepare yourself for marriage is to examine the roles and responsibilities of marriage and to cultivate within yourself the roles and responsibilities that are required.
- What are the roles in marriage?: From Scripture. We know, for men, that a potential husband is to develop himself into the head, who weilds his authority in love, not embittered, honor as co-heirs. We know, for women, that a potential wife is to molding herself into a helpmeet, is willing to be submissive to her husband, respect, etc. If you truly understand all of the aspects within these roles, everything flows out of the nature of this hierarchical relationship because authority is good.

- How to cultivate the roles: Here's where understanding a Christian nature of attraction rears its head. Men need to cultivate within themselves dominion or authority. This is the same authority that we see in Jesus' ministry (Matth 7:29, Mark 1:22), and in Him taking His disciples. Here's the question to ask yourself — would Jesus' disciples have been attracted to him and willing to become His disciples if Jesus was not moving in authority (exousia) and power/works (dunamis)?
- By another analogy: Romans 5:8 But God demonstrates His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

This is the reason why I was so excited by the Christian understanding of attraction.

Agapao love can only be demonstrated by those who have power. Christians are able to do this because of the Holy Spirit indwelling within us allowing us to do love and do good through the mighty working of His power.

By the same measure, if your goal is to be married then you need to be able to demonstrate dominion/authority in love. For women attraction is rooted in this dominion. If she respects/reverences (phobeo) you — that is she respects your authority just as we are in reverence and fear to God — then we know she is attracted. And attraction naturally lends itself to sex.

Put another way, it is a man's dominion/authority which initially attracts a woman to him — and makes her want to be his helpmeet and put herself under his authority — and in marriage this attraction helps to drive the lynchpin of marriage which is sex. Sex results in unity.

In this we understand the hierarchical nature of God (Father>Jesus>Spirit) even though He is unified in Himself, the trinity. This accurate reflects the hierarchical nature of marriage (Holy Spirit(indwelling)>husband>wife>children) and the unity of God.

When a woman rebels against the authority of her husband she will lose attraction for him and avoid sex like the plague. However, when she abides by her husband's authority over her and submits to her she is attracted to him and desires sex and unity with Him.

Everything flows out from the nature of authority. If you reject authority then you reject God and nothing about marriages makes any logical sense. You can see why as I came upon the true nature of authority I was able to more clearly see and understand the nature of attraction and marriage and how God created things to be.

Jesus and His disciples

Logically, it makes sense to examine Jesus and His disciples as an example of understanding and working your way toward marriage as a single Christian man or woman. Scripturally, this is supported by the gold standard set forth in Ephesians 5 for marriage. Husbands are to love their wives as Christ loves the Church.

What many fail to realize is that Jesus is not currently married to His Church, as His Church is not yet prepared (make disciples of all nations, gospel must be spread to the ends of the earth and then the end will come). However, it is not an incomplete analogy because we know that Jesus is perfect, and His perfect example prior to marriage will be continued when He actually unites with His Church at the second coming.

Logically, this means that Jesus' interactions with His disciples, His bride-to-be, are prior to marriage. Indeed, Jesus' death, burial, and resurrection, and sending of His promised Holy Spirit as a seal (Eph 1:13, 2 Cor 1:22) is of the same nature as an engagement. Christians, who have declared we will submit to Him and obey His commands, have been sealed in Him as His bride-to-be, and we have much work to do to prepare ourselves fully as His bride before His second coming (see: parable of the ten virgins, Matthew 25).

Chad makes an excellent point in Donal's thread linked above:

> I'm unsure if the disciples anf Christ works for what Donal is describing.
>
> The disciples had alread acknowledged through words and actions that they were Christ's, following his word, and becoming the men he desired them to be.
>
> Single women haven't done any of that. The closest you get before marriage is a very involved traditional courtship or engagement.
>
> Otherwise I think you'd have to fall back to the non-jewish believers who were healed by faith. They were not chosen, but 5heir devotion compelled Christ to act.
>
> How often do men feel compelled to act, not from their own desires, but from the objective actions, faith, and desire of the women they meet?

The reason why modern Christians will have trouble understanding this concept of Jesus and the disciples is akin to a potential husband to his potential wife is because the current world is so distorted that reality does not mesh with what the Scriptures command us to do. Men are to become like Jesus and women are to become like the Church if they desire marriage.

Understanding this analogy is simple. Christian men are to exert dominion/authority over themselves and in their envionment (which starts to build attraction) and then make women an offer if they are interested in her ("come follow me"). You let those that choose not to "follow you" go their own way. Jesus allowed those who didn't believe (Pharisees, etc.) and those for whom the commitment was too much (rich young ruler) to walk away too. But a woman that will choose to follow you and want to explore the possibility of marriage is like what Jesus had with His disciples.

Your potential wife essentially becomes one of your disciples. She sets herself on the path to become your — and not anyone else's — helpmeet.

If you're still having trouble understanding this then consider why the boss-secretary relationship often results in attraction and sex. It's akin to husband-wife head-helpmeet relationship.

What is discipleship?

I noted this before thoroughly in Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives:

> I think the best way to think of it is in terms of the Scriptures, and of the outlined roles and responsibilities set forth in the Scriptures of husbands and wives in > marriage.

>
> 2 Timothy 3:16 All Scripture is [a]inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for [b]training in righteousness; 17 so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work.
>
> Jesus teaches His disciples, He reproofs/rebukes them, He corrects them, and he trains them in righteousness.
>
> Teaches — His disciples asked Him the meaning of parables (Mark 7; Luke 8, 18; Matthew 13).
>
> Reproofs/rebukes — Rebukes Peter ("get behind me Satan" Matt 16; Mark 8), Disciples hinder the little children and Jesus rebukes ("Let the little children come to me" Matt 19; Mark 10; Luke 18), James and John for wanting to call down fire on the Samaritans ("You do not know what kind of spirit you are of, for the Son of Man did not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Luke 9).
>
> Corrects — Jesus chastises His disciples for their lack of faith. Jesus calms the storm (Matt 8), walks on water (Matt 14), unbelief (Matt 17), lack of understanding discipleship (John 4, 6).
>
> Trains — Jesus instructs them on discipleship and sends out the 70 (Luke 10).

Indeed, when Jesus speaks of what discipleship means we have two different takes from Matthew and Luke on the matter.

> Matthew 10:24 "A [v]disciple is not above his teacher, nor a slave above his master. 25 It is enough for the disciple that he become like his teacher, and the slave like his master. If they have called the head of the house [w]Beelzebul, how much more will they malign the members of his household!
>
> Luke 6:39 And He also spoke a parable to them: "A blind man cannot guide a blind man, can he? Will they not both fall into a pit? 40 A [x]pupil is not above his teacher; but everyone, after he has been fully trained, will [y]be like his teacher. 41 Why do you look at the speck that is in your brother's eye, but do not notice the log that is in your own eye? 42 Or how can you say to your brother, 'Brother, let me take out the speck that is in your eye,' when you yourself do not see the log that is in your own eye? You hypocrite, first take the log out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to take out the speck that is in your brother's eye.

There are two major points here.

The master-disciple relationship embodies the same hierarchical authority that is present in the triune God and in the marriage relationship. The disciple learns from and grows from the master and is not above Him. But, like the passage in Matthew states, it is enough that a disciple can become like his master. The is the Spirit with which 1 Peter 3:7 is written: husbands should honor their wives as the weaker vessels because they are co-heirs in Christ. As Jesus states in John 15, slaves don't know their master's business but now He has called us friends.

The Luke passage I find interesting because Luke apportions the judgment verses here in order to teach a different lesson. This is the nature of personal responsibility. In order to not be a hypocrite, a man must first examine himself. This is also a direct analogy to dominion/authority. If a man has not mastered himself or his envionment, then how is he going to be able to be the head of a wife?

The part I find quite ingenous is the nature with which God created these things to be in the physical world. The parable of the talents/minas provides a direct insight into this thought process. Those that were responsible with much will be given more and share in their master's happiness. Those that were not responsible had what they were given taken away.

Nice guys, who haven't mastered their pride, lust, envy, gluttony, etc., do not demonstrate dominion/authority in their lives or their environments. Obesity is the most straightfoward example. Hence, it should be a no brainer why women are not attracted to them. Whereas those that obtain more in their lives through dominion (themselves) may obtain a helpmeet (a wife) which may lead to more (children) along with the increased responsibility that is imbued in such a role. Of course, this is not to say that those married are ultimately more responsible than those who are single, but it is a general theme of life.

While you may not use "discipleship" in terms of what it means to have a "courtship" that is the type of concept you should be thinking about in terms of instructing a woman to be your helpmeet.

Conclusions

As you can see, the themes of dominion and authority runs through God Himself, the Scriptures and the earth, and through the marriage relationship.

The fundamental assumptions are important which is that God promises no one a spouse. However, as I desire a wife and I'm sure many of you do we recognize that the route to become a mature Christian and preparing ourselves for marriage is one in the same.

I think that the concept of master-disciple is a much better frame of reference for a man to have in regard to women if he wants to be married. When men typically think of women our feelings get involved, but what is more important is how we act. Instead of getting pulled into a frame of what we feel is right (which is often wrong), we need to get into the frame of doing what is right. For men that means cultivating dominion over your life and your environment as a witness for Christ, and extending an invitation to women if you desire them to be your helpmeet.

Understanding the nature of this authority and the relationship is also a good reminder to keep your mind on godly things rather than earthly things.

Comments and critique are appreciated.

What I believe regarding marriage

June 29, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Gabriella brought up some common refutations to “complementarianism” and “patriarchy” in A Christian understanding of attraction which signify to her that “egalitarianism” is correct. The comment is here if you want to read it, but it is too long to quote.

She brings up several points in regard to “patriarchy” or “complementarianism” which I do find fault with; however, I also find fault with her reverse assumptions of what that should look like under “egalitarianism.”

I would say the view that I most likely fall under is some form of complementarianism, but I don’t like using the terms because they are loaded. They also don’t signify my actual views about marriage, which are based on the Scriptures. Therefore, I’d like to actually lay out what I believe with supporting Scriptures as to what I currently believe about marriage.

Before I start I must make something clear. I am not “for” complementarianism, nor am I “for” patriarchy, nor am I “for” “egalitarianism” or whatever else there is.

I am “for” God and his Scriptures.

Recognize that I am not about compromising between any of these viewpoints — complementarianism, egalitarianism, patriarchy, etc — trying to find the “best” parts of each and harmonizing them. I am about first looking to Scripture for the Truth, and then finding the best possible scenario under which the husband and wife can grow in unity.

The main way I will do this is examine the Scriptures first, and then refute the common “traditional” viewpoints — e.g. sins — of egalitarianism, complementarianism, and patriarchy. Then I will expound the freedom that is afforded to us in such interpretation of the Scriptures focused on unity between the husband and wife.

- There is no way to get around submission of wives to husbands and/or authority of the husband to the wife.

Even selectively refuting Ephesians 5 (v21 vs v22-24, “omission” of hupotasso from the Greek in v21 even though it is present in some interlinear versions) or 1 Corinthians 11 (disputing “kephale”) there is still Colossians 3, Titus 2, and 1 Peter 3. The Scripture are consistent on this. Church teaching has been consistent on this until recently. Have the Scriptures or the Church magically changed? No. But society has, and we see the rot of feminism that has infested society.

The main sin that egalitarians have is that they believe that authority is bad. Authority is good. This leads them to discard God appointed authority in human institutions which is rebellion against God.

The main sin that many complementarians and patriarchal supporters believe is that authority makes men superior to women. Authority does not signify qualities of superiority or inferiority contrary to popular belief. It signifies a duty to subordinates as modeled by God. God is love, and God uses His authority to love: by sending Jesus to die for us. Likewise, while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. So too husbands have a duty to love their wives not to lord over them.

Women take an incorrect view of Scriptural authority when they think that a husband's authority is about them serving the husband. If Jesus' authority over the Church is to love the Church, then why do wives believe different about the authority of husbands over wives?

The reason is that they "fear" an imaginary situation of "abuse." I know of zero men who call themselves Christians and actually read their Bible and pray that don't want the best for their wives even at cost of their own expense. Yet, most wives would rather rebel against their husbands and thus God — especially by taking an egalitarian stance — rather than trust in them. It's very sad.

Authority, as exemplified by God and Christ, is given to love His creation: people. As such, authority is given to husband to love their wives as shown in Ephesians 5. Authority is given to the government or rulers to love their people (Proverbs 29). Authority is given to parents to love their children (Matthew 7, Luke 11).

- Authority is able to be delegated.

I have a post coming on this in the future, but let me discuss this concept now.

> John 17:10 So Pilate *said to Him, "You do not speak to me? Do You not know that I have authority to release You, and I have authority to crucify You?" 11 Jesus answered, "You would have no authority [c]over Me, unless it had been given you from above; for this reason he who delivered Me to you has the greater sin."
>
> Luke 10:1 Now after this the Lord appointed [a]seventy others, and sent them in pairs ahead of Him to every city and place where He Himself was going to come. 2 And He was saying to them, "The harvest is plentiful, but the laborers are few; therefore beseech the Lord of the harvest to send out laborers into His harvest. 3 Go; behold, I send you out as lambs in the midst of wolves.
> […]
> 10 But whatever city you enter and they do not receive you, go out into its streets and say, 11 'Even the dust of your city which clings to our feet we wipe off in protest against you; yet [f]be sure of this, that the kingdom of God has come near.'
> […]
> 16 "The one who listens to you listens to Me, and the one who rejects you rejects > Me; and he who rejects Me rejects the One who sent Me.”

In these Scriptures, Jesus acknowledges that authority is able to be delegated. Additionally, we know that from the Scriptures that God also delegates authority on several occasions to human institutions. Namely, Husbands-wives, government-Christians, parents-children, pastors-flock, masters-slaves, etc.

If a husband has a job that has him deployed overseas or away for extended periods of time is it feasible for the wife to be calling him up over every little decision? No, of course not! Like the delegated authority that God gives to human institutions, authority can be delegated from those who hold it to those they are responsible for. This is often seen in the military where in-field commanders have freedom to operate even though the general has the ultimate authority.

A husband would be wise to choose a competent, resourceful, wise, and knowledgeable wife who is as proficient or has even more expertise in matters especially where his weaknesses are. That way he can trust in her to give him godly advice, and if he is somehow incapacitated he can trust in her to do what is right in all areas in which he was responsible.

The sin that egalitarians fall to is they think authority is bad, and that the wife will never be able to make any decisions. This is simply not the case. Authority can be delegated as necessary so that the wife if she has expertise or talents so she can make decisions for the household (like via Proverbs 31). This is a common theme in the next few points.

The sin that complementarians and patriarchal advocates fall into is that they will never consider delegating authority their wives because they don’t trust them. This is not consistent with Proverbs 31 and many other Scriptures.

- Husbands are wise to listen to their wives in their talents and expertise.

This is an extension of the above point regarding delegated authority.

The sin most egalitarians fall prey to here is that they take a results oriented approach at the expense of rebellion and distortion of the Scriptures. They argue that “what if a woman has expertise that a man doesn’t have and the man ignores her expertise?” My reply to this is that such a man is foolish.

A wise husband should and does delegate authority to the wife to act on family matters in areas she has talents or expertise in to where the wife can make decisions for the entire household.

Likewise, if my wife was an expert in business, or web design, or other areas that would help me or my family I would certainly listen and act on her advice given her expertise and talents. However, I would make the final decision, and I would take responsibility for the decision. This is a win-win for wives because it is their advice that is being followed, and they will not have to worry about taking responsibility for the decision if something goes horribly wrong. They will also be praised if it goes well.

Now, some wives are find with handling responsibility and consequences. A husband would be wise to trust in a wife who wants such responsibility as in this she is his helpmeet. But to those wives that do not want to worry about decision making and responsibilities, the authority structure is put in place to protect them not to harm them.

Obviously, as stated in the above, most complementarians and patriarchal advocates fall into the trap of not listening to wise advice from their wives.

- There is considerable freedom in the roles and responsibilities of a wife.

The sin most egalitarians fall into is that they believe staying at home or other such things are about serving the husband or limiting the freedom of the wife. This is far from the case.

The sin that most complementarians and patriarchal advocates fall is that they arbitrarily constrain women for their own means. Proverbs 31 is fairly clear that a wife is able to (1) have the trust of her husband, (2) work in business, (3) work outside the house, (4) provide food for her household, (5) purchase property, (6) do physical labor, (7) can be wise in her business and other dealings, (8) make clothing, (9) is generous to the poor, (10) sells anything she makes, (11) is wise/kind/does well to her household, (12) is blessed by her children, and (13) her husband praises her.

Scripturally, I am neither for or against women who desire to choose to be in the home or be a stay at home mom. This is quite admirable. However, I am also not against women who desire to work outside the home either. This is also quite admirable.

What I do believe is that this must be an decision that should ideally be agreed upon by the husband and wife prior to marriage so that there will be no unrealistic expectations or conflicts pre- and post- children. The conflicts are both sides of the coin: the husband wants to the wife to work and the wife wants to stay at home, and the husband wants the wife to stay at home and the wife wants to work.

Currently, in my church I know of two couples among others. In one couple both wanted the wife to work after having children, but after having prayed about it God changed both their minds and the wife stays at home now and they are both happy and in unity with the decision. The other couple, if I remember correctly, both wanted the wife to stay at home after children, but the wife ended up going back to work after prayer. They are both happy and in unity with the decision.

These are both couples who are walking in godly marriage contrary to the typical traditional egalitarian, complementarian, and patriarchal viewpoints.

If you were unwise to marry a spouse to whom you didn't discuss such important topics prior to marriage so you knew what you were getting into, then 1 Corinthians 7 and 1 Peter 3 have answers for both spouses. You are walking a difficult road. Pray that God allows you to love your spouse through any conflict.

- My church takes the position that women are allowed in "leadership" positions in the church as long as the head pastor is a man.

In this instance, teaching of the flock may be delegated to women, which is via explicit or implicit endorsement of the Church as all decisions and material run through the head pastor.

This delegated authority, like in marriage, and it fulfills the verses from 1 Timothy. Indeed, it also utilizes the talents, experience, and wisdom from women and wives to impart to those in the Church just as wives are also called upon to teach their children. This also conforms with the nature that both men and women are to be disciples of Jesus and make disciples.

This may actually be a point of contention with my Catholic brothers in Christ, but I cannot deny that I have learned a great deal from both men and women outside and inside the Church (obviously filtered through the Scriptures).

However, I do recognize that the Catholic and Orthodox Churches have stayed more consistent to the Scriptures than the majority of Protestant ones. This does lend evidence that there is something to be said for a more strict interpretation to God's Scriptures. This is not only in a stricter interpretation of 1 Timothy but also in the sacraments and willingness to excommunicate those who willingly sin and are unwilling to repent of it.

Conclusions

It should be clear by now that my position on the roles and responsibilities of marriage is in direct alignment with the Scriptures (although point 5 is arguable), and it allows considerable freedom to both the husband and wife.

This is why I state that my current position is neither what is traditionally viewed as "complementarian" or "patriarchal" or "egalitarian" or whatever. It is a position that is pro God and the concepts that God stands for.

In summary, these are the main points:

- Authority in the marriage relationship of the husband-wife is consistent with the rest of the instituted hierarchies that God and Jesus have made here on earth. Authority is given to people or institutions you are responsible for to love them. Of course it an be abused, but Christians are called not to abuse it.
- Authority is able to be delegated in any of these institutions, especially in the marriage relationship
- Husbands are wise to listen to their wives who have considerably talents and expertise in any decision they make, and would also be wise to delegate authority to their wives where she has talents and expertise where she wants to take responsibility for her decisions.
- There is considerable freedom in the roles and responsibilities of wives in marriage via an understanding of Proverbs 31. Potential husbands and wives would be wise to discuss major life decisions prior to marriage both in the scenarios of pre- and post-children with extensive prayer.
- Delegated authority in the Church is allowed as women do have considerable > talents, expertise, and wisdom that men can learn from. While I agree with my church's stance that the head pastor is able to delegate this authority to women to teach, if a man feels uncomfortable with this via passages in 1 Corinthians where it causes him to stumble then it would be wise for him not to attend any such teachings from women or to go to a church without any women teaching.

These are all points that can be substantiated by Scriptural unlike most of the traditional understandings of "egalitiarianism", complementarianism", and "patriarchy" which often have bad feelings or connotations with them. I am not about compromising between any of these points trying to find the "best" parts of each and harmonizing them. I am about first looking to Scripture, and then finding the best possible scenario where the husband and wife can grow in unity.

Authority, submission, obedience, and servanthood

July 1, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to explore some concepts from the previous two posts which are What I believe regarding marriage, and A Christian understanding of attraction in regard to comments made by Gabriella.

All of these terms are interconnected but denote separate relationships. I want to clarify because there are some slight differences between “authority” and “headship” given further study into the Greek.

First, let me define each of the terms.

- Authority (exousia G1849, G1850) is the power to independently lead. However, as exemplified by God and Christ perfect authority is the responsibility to love others.

> G1849 — ἐξουσία — exousia — ex-oo-see’-ah
> From G1832 (in the sense of ability); privilege, that is, (subjectively) force, capacity, competency, freedom, or (objectively) mastery (concretely magistrate, superhuman, potentate, token of control), delegated influence: – authority, jurisdiction, liberty, power, right, strength.

- Head (kephale G2776) used in the context of the Scriptures is synonymous with headship — or determining/directing action — but, like the body, there is interdependence between the head and the body: or Christ:Church and husband:wife.

> G2776
> κεφαλή > kephalē
> kef-al-ay’
> Probably from the primary wordκάπτω kaptō (in the sense of seizing); the head (as the part most readily taken hold of), literally or figuratively: – head.

- Submission (hupotasso G5293) — a voluntary act either (1) under authority/headship or (2) not under authority/headship.

> G5293 — ὑποτάσσω — hupotassō — hoop-ot-as’-so
> From G5259 and G5021; to subordinate; reflexively to obey: – be under obedience (obedient), put under, subdue unto, (be, make) subject (to, unto), be (put) in subjection (to, under), submit self unto.

- Obedience (hupakouo G5219 & peitharcheo G3980) — an involuntary act under authority.

> G5219 — ὑπακούω — hupakouō — hoop-ak-oo’-o

> From G5259 and G191; to hear under (as a subordinate), that is, to listen attentively; by implication to heed or conform to a command or authority: – hearken, be obedient to, obey.
>
> G3980 — πειθαρχέω — peitharcheō — pi-tharkh-eh’-o
> From a compound of G3982 and G757; to be persuaded by a ruler, that is, (generally) to submit to authority; by analogy to conform to advice: – hearken, obey (magistrates).

- Slave/servant (doulos G1401) — is under the authority of his master.

> G1401 — δοῦλος — doulos — doo’-los
> From G1210; a slave (literally or figuratively, involuntarily or voluntarily; frequently therefore in a qualified sense of subjection or subserviency): – bond (-man), servant.

- Minster/servant (diakonos G1247, G1249) — synonymous with the English word deacon. Jesus uses this word in terms of serving/ministering (washing His disciples feet).

> G1249 — διάκονος — diakonos — dee-ak’-on-os
> Probably from διάκω diakō (obsolete, to run on errands; compare G1377); an attendant, that is, (generally) a waiter (at table or in other menial duties); specifically a Christian teacher and pastor (technically a deacon or deaconess): – deacon, minister, servant.

- Pastor/shepherd (Poimen G4166)

> G4166 — ποιμήν — poimēn — poy-mane’
> Of uncertain affinity; a shepherd (literally or figuratively): – shepherd, pastor.

- Overseer/bishop (episcopos G1985)

> G1985 — ἐπίσκοπος — episkopos — ep-is’-kop-os
> From G1909 and G4649 (in the sense of G1983); a superintendent, that is, Christian officer in general charge of a (or the) church (literally or figuratively): – bishop, overseer.

Now, there are relationships between all of these, so let’s look at them in order. The different meanings of words will denote different aspects of relationships.

Authority (exousia) — obedience (hupokouo/peitharcheo) — Jesus has this authority over heaven and earth given His statement at the Great Commission. This is the authority over another which is involuntary and must be obeyed. For example, Jesus calming the storm. This is also the relationship between parents and children. If there are instances in which authority is disobeyed, then the authority has the right to punish those under it in the physical world aside from the consequences of spiritual disobedience if any. Disobedience is sin.

Authority (exousia) — submission (hupotasso) — This is the relationship between Father-Christians, government-Christians, masters-slaves. In this relationship it is exactly the same as authority-obedience, but those under authority have the voluntary choice whether or not to obey. Thus, this is authority over another which is voluntary and must be obeyed. If there are instances in which authority is disobeyed, then the authority has the right to punish those under it in the physical world aside from the consequences of spiritual disobedience if any. Disobedience is sin.

This is also where doulos falls under in terms of we are slaves to Christ. Like the NT authors state, they are slaves (or bond servants) to Christ voluntarily submitted in order that they do His will which is to make disciples, baptize, and teach them what Jesus had commanded.

Headship — submission — this the relationship between the Church and Christ, and husbands and wives. In this relationship, unlike authority-submission Christ and husband has no ability to compel obedience from Church and the wife. The husband heads/leads of the marriage ideally as commanded through love, but the wife must choose to submit to this headship. In general, the Scriptures tell the wife to submit to the husband so the relationship operates in unity. But is the wife does not submit to the husband's headship she disrupts unity which is rebellion which is sin, but the husbands as the head has no right to punish in the physical world aside from the consequences of spiritual disobedience if any. Disobedience is sin. Though God/Jesus can override the physical world punishment with their authority over all but they don't because of free will.

Headship — minister — essentially, Jesus is to the Church, as husbands are to wives, as deacons, pastors, and overseers are to the Church.

> Matthew 20:25 But Jesus called them to Himself and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great men exercise authority over them. 26 It is not this way among you, but whoever wishes to become great among you shall be your servant (diakonos), 27 and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be your slave (doulos); 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served (diakoneō), but to serve (diakoneō), and to give His life a ransom for many."
>
> Luke 22:25 And He said to them, "The kings of the Gentiles lord it over them; and those who have authority over them are called 'Benefactors.' 26 But it is not this way with you, but the one who is the greatest among you must become like the youngest, and the leader like the servant (diakoneō). 27 For who is greater, the one who reclines at the table or the one who serves (diakoneō)? Is it not the one who reclines at the table? But I am among you as the one who serves (diakoneō).
>
> John 10:11 "I am the good shepherd (poimēn); the good shepherd (poimēn) lays down His life for the sheep.
>
> Acts 20:28 Be on guard for yourselves and for all the flock (poimnion), among which the Holy Spirit has made you [a]overseers (episkopos), to shepherd > (poimainō) the church of God which He [b]purchased [c]with His own blood.

In marriage, neither the husband is more important than the wife, or the wife more important than the husband, though both more than the children. But the meaning of to serve is to take into account the two as one. Put the needs of unity above that of the self. A husband that runs himself down caring for the wife is in error just as a husband who takes care of only himself: the husband treats his wife as himself (Eph 5).

However, in the context of deacons, pastors, and overseers to the Church, there is no submission of the Church to these positions. This is where the "mutual submission" verse also comes into context:

> Ephesians 5:15 Therefore [j]be careful how you walk, not as unwise men but as wise, 16 [k]making the most of your time, because the days are evil. 17 So then do not be foolish, but understand what the will of the Lord is. 18 And do not get drunk with wine, [l]for that is dissipation, but be filled with the Spirit, 19 speaking to [m]one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord; 20 always giving thanks for all things in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to [n]God, even the Father; 21 [o]and be subject (hupotasso) to one another (allēlōn) in the [p]fear of Christ.

Note that allēlōn is primarily used in reference to "one another" in context of the Church. As both husbands and wives are part of the body of Christ as well as being married, both roles and responsibilities apply as I explored in Is there mutual submission or not:

> If a believer is caught is in sin and a brother or sister points it out then we should "be subject" to their correction or rebuke in fear of Christ/God [in order to root out sin] so as to be imitators of God.
>
> This aligns clearly with Matthew 18 and 1 Corinthians 5 on how to treat believers in sin.
>
> […]
>
> If a Christian husband is in sin a wife should point it out respectfully so as to honor the roles and responsibilities in marriage. If he is indeed sin then he should "submit" to that correction in fear of Christ. In this a wife is her husband's helpmeet as to the Lord, and she is acting as a fellow believer in Christ to her husband.
>
> If an unbelieving husband is in sin, then the passage from 1 Peter 3 and 1 Corinthians 7 applies. I discussed this thoroughly in Wives will never win their husbands with words.

Thus, the only exceptions to headship are defined clearly through the Scriptures.
A husband is to submit to the wife is in the context of if he is in clear sin (via Eph 5:21, Matt 18, 1 Cor 5) or if he refuses to have sex with her (1 Corinthians 7).

edit: I forgot to look up elders (Presbuteros) and there is submission involved with that:

> 1 Peter 5:5 You younger men, likewise, be subject to your elders (Presbuteros); and all of you, clothe yourselves with humility toward one another, for GOD IS OPPOSED TO THE PROUD, BUT GIVES GRACE TO THE HUMBLE.

Submission of the younger to the older, because they are typically more wise and knowledgable.

Conclusions

In conclusion, there are different levels of hierarchies which I was mistakenly grouping together in some of my previous articles. In particular, the main 4 are as follows:

- Authority-Obedience

Who: Jesus-heavens and earth, Parents-Children
What: Authority may involuntarily (no free will) compel those underneath to do something, The authority may punish disobedience. Disobedience is sin.

- Authority-Submission — This is Father-Christians, Government-Christians, Masters-Slaves, and even things such as Boss-Employee.

Who: Father/God-Christians, Government-Christians, Masters-Slaves, and even things such as Boss-Employee. Christ-Church too (although Jesus chooses to exercise headship "If you love me you you will follow my commands" over compelling obedience).
What: Authority may compel those underneath to do something, and those under have a voluntary (free will) choice to submit to it. The authority may punish disobedience. Disobedience is sin.

- Headship-Submission — This is God-Jesus, Christ-Church and husband-wives

Who: God-Jesus, Christ-man, men-women, Christ-Church, husband-wives
What: The head leads through love and has no authority to compel obedience, and those underneath have a voluntary (free will) choice to submit. The head has no right to punish non-submission in the physical world, but non-submission breaks unity which is sin. (Though God/Jesus can override the non-physical punishment with their authority over all but they don't because of free will).
Exceptions: A husband is to submit to the wife is in the context of if he is in clear sin (via Eph 5:21, Matt 18, 1 Cor 5) or if he refuses to have sex with her (1 Corinthians 7).

- Headship/Mutual Submission — This is pastors/deacons/overseers/bishops and the flock/congregation.

Who: Pastors/deacons/overseers/bishops and the flock/congregation
What: The head leads through love and has no authority to compel, and those all of those involved have a voluntary (free will) choice to submit to each other.

edit: submission of younger to the older (presbuteros) is present in the Scriptures 1 Peter 5:5.

I found this study pretty informative to say the least. I realized how many structures were present, but I didn't consider the different roles, responsibilities, and consequences until I looked closer at the Scriptures. This slightly changes the way I'm looking at marriage currently.

However, I still don't agree with the Gabriella that a husband is to ever submit to the wife except if he is in sin or if he is denying her conjugal rights. Also, if the wife goes against the headship of the husband she is in rebellion and thus sin just as if the husband's headship is not born out of love he is in sin.

There is no "equality" present in any of these structures. Just different roles, responsibilities, and consequences. Even in mutual submission there is nothing about equality but rather maintaining unity through building each other up (one another) or helping others (one another) away from sin.

God and marriage

July 8, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In my previous post on authority, submission, obedience, and servanthood, infowarrior1 raises a good point about the nature of submission in marriage:

> The “voluntary” aspect rubs me the wrong way unless it refers to the choice of the wife to submit to her husband upon marriage. I am troubled by the potential wriggle room though to pick and choose which submission is convenient or inconvenient. How can it be sin if submission is voluntary?
>
> What would be your suggestion to the husband if his wife is consistently rebellious?

The choice to become a Christian is much like the choice to enter into the contract of marriage.

When we become Christians, we become children of God. However, Christianity is not a one time deal that we reach with God upon salvation:

> Ephesians 2:8 For by grace you have been saved through faith; and [h]that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; 9 not as a result of works, so that no one may boast. 10 For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand so that we would walk in them.

We, who become Christians, submit our lives to God in order to do His will. As James so eloquently puts it: Faith without works is dead, and as Jesus states in John “If you love me you will obey my commandments.”

Likewise, so too marriage is of a similar contract.

The wife, upon CHRISTIAN marriage, pledges to become her husband’s helpmeet, to respect him, and submit to Him as unto the Lord.

However, as Christians, we still have the choice — the free will — whether to obey God or not. We fight this battle everyday:

> Ephesians 4:22 that, in reference to your former manner of life, you lay aside the old [a]self, which is being corrupted in accordance with the lusts of deceit, 23 and that you be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 24 and put on the new [b]self, which [c]in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

So too the wife has the same battle everyday whether or not she will be her husband’s helpmeet, whether she will respect him, and whether she will submit to him. The same is true of the roles and responsibilities of the husband in marriage in headship, love, not embittered, and to honor as co-heirs.

God doesn’t want to coerce Christians into serving Him. It is a willful, joyful choice to do so. The same is true of the modeling of Christ-Church and husband-wives. God wants wives to have the free will to submit to their husbands in marriage.

Just as when Christians fail to do what is right or don't call out sin, we fail to submit to God and instead hold ourselves or the world as more important. The same decisions are made by the wife to submit to her husband in marriage.

Now, what should the husband do? Two things.

- The husband SHOULD do as the Scriptures state which I elaborated on in this article on Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives.

Essentially, just as the Scriptures are useful for teaching, rebuking, training, and correcting to too husbands have that same role as Jesus does with the Church.

- The husband should also continue to do what God has said the roles and responsibilities are for the husband in the marriage. There is no "get out of my duty free card" if someone else isn't obeying God. We want to obey God because we love God. Donal posted this link in the comments which elaborates on this.

Husbands should never attempt to force compliance to his will as that is never what Jesus did. Jesus always gave those under his care the free will to choose whether to follow Him or not.

> John 6:59 These things He said in the synagogue as He taught in Capernaum. 60 Therefore many of His disciples, when they heard this said, "This is a difficult statement; who can listen to it?" 61 But Jesus, conscious that His disciples grumbled at this, said to them, "Does this cause you to stumble? 62 What then if you see the Son of Man ascending to where He was before? 63 It is the Spirit who gives life; the flesh profits nothing; the words that I have spoken to you are spirit and are life. 64 But there are some of you who do not believe." For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were who did not believe, and who it was that would [j]betray Him. 65 And He was saying, "For this reason I have said to you, that no one can come to Me unless it has been granted him from the Father."
>
> 66 As a result of this many of His disciples withdrew and were not walking with Him anymore. 67 So Jesus said to the twelve, "You do not want to go away also, do you?" 68 Simon Peter answered Him, "Lord, to whom shall we go? You have words of eternal life. 69 We have believed and have come to know that You are the Holy One of God." 70 Jesus answered them, "Did I Myself not choose you, the twelve, and yet one of you is a devil?" 71 Now He meant Judas the son of Simon Iscariot, for he, one of the twelve, [k]was going to betray Him.

The most difficult thing, which I have talked before, is that when wives choose not to submit to their husbands then the husbands should allow the wives to take responsibility for their own decisions. This is the same as God and Jesus do when Christians sin: He doesn't stop us from going off the reservation, but He makes His position clear through His Scriptures in regard to sin.

Given that the husband tasked with headship, in some more destructive behaviors to the whole family such as compulsive spending or overeating or whatever the husband may need to protect the wife through management of finances or other resources.

However, the wife still has the choice whether or not to submit and therefore love God and her husband, or to not submit and sin against God and her husband.

Those who claim to be Christians and do not follow God's commands and wives who claim to be Christians and don't submit to their husbands will be punished more than unbelievers:

> Luke 12: 41 Peter said, "Lord, are You addressing this parable to us, or to everyone else as well?" 42 And the Lord said, "Who then is the faithful and sensible steward, whom his master will put in charge of his [u]servants, to give them their rations at the proper time? 43 Blessed is that slave whom his [v]master finds so doing when he comes. 44 Truly I say to you that he will put him in charge of all his possessions. 45 But if that slave says in his heart, 'My master [w]will be a long time in coming,' and begins to beat the slaves, both men and women, and to eat and drink and get drunk; 46 the master of that slave will come on a day when he does not expect him and at an hour he does not know, and will cut him in pieces, and assign him a place with the unbelievers.
>
> 47 And that slave who knew his master's will and did not get ready or act in accord with his will, will receive many lashes, 48 but the one who did not know it, and committed deeds worthy of [x]a flogging, will receive but few. From everyone who has been given much, much will be required; and to whom they entrusted much, of him they will ask all the more.

Be forewarned, if you call yourself a Christian but don't do what God says or submit to the roles and responsibilities in which God's Scriptures say you have in marriage or other areas then you heap judgment upon yourself.

Romance

July 30, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal has a post on Romance, and I have a brief bit of time for a commenatary.

As a man growing up, and reading most of the stories of the men in the manosphere, and hearing about how things work in real life this is my observation.

Romance is going beyond loving others (for Christians) and showing a woman with special affection. If I wrote a poem to a woman who was attracted to me then it is romantic, but if I'm a person who wrote a poem to all woman regardless of whether they were attracted to me it loses its significance. Showering special affection through doing things (flowers, gifts, chivalry, etc.) — which is romance — after you win/attract them with words is fine. Doing them before is often just a fruitless waste of time.

I would say that men in general are taught to do things for women, typically romantic gestures. Men respond to this logically because we naturally are doers. We like action because it's something that is straight forward and easy to accomplish, especially in terms of affection (e.g. buying gifts, holding open doors, or other "chivalrous" gestures). But romantic gestures are misguided if there is no attraction from the side of a woman.

As a man consider romantic affections from an obese 5'6″ 300 lbs woman and a 5'6″ 110 woman who looks like a model. Obviously, a man would be attracted to one and not the other, and it is not that hard to guess which one is which. Most men would be repulsed by the obese woman who showered affections on him, and be receptive to the woman who showered affections on him. The same is true with women, except that attraction is different between the sexes. Women will respond positively to attractive men that shower them with attention or gifts, and they will respond negatively to unattractive men that shower them with attention and gifts.

Interestingly enough as I noted in this post, the Scriptures speak to the point that husbands win their wives with their words and not their actions. Likewise, wives win their husbands with actions and not words. It all goes back to preferred communication style.

If a woman isn't responsively attracted to you through your words then it's pretty much fruitless to try to "impress her" with romantic actions because they will be seen as trying to gain validation and it is repulsive to her. The actions are seen as trying to buy her affection which is a huge turn off.

The only way actions will impress her is if it's indirect such as say playing on the church worship team, or she sees your athleticism on the field of action, or she sees you teaching/coaching others through leadership. Although you may have the intent to impress her through what you do in such instances, it's part of something greater so she will naturally be "attracted" to it rather than be "repulsed" by trying to prove your worth.

Specific advice to a Christian man who wants to date/court a woman is this. Love because God first loved us. But don't give any special treatment of doing things — romance — unless you are interested in the woman and know she is attracted to you. If you do it to a woman who isn't attracted you are wasting your time by being a nice guy.

Christian men, especially in the manosphere, need to understand this distinction. We love everyone because that is what we are command to do by Christ. But we should not be under the illusion that it does anything for attractiveness (though other actions can sometimes increase attractiveness peripherally). Rather, attractiveness is rooted in dominion, then if you want to display any type of romance it must be beyond the love that you show all others.

Romance in itself is fine. However, the main problem is that it is taught to men as the "main" step of winning a woman when, at best, it is the second step far and away.

Given that women typically don't understand what is "attractive" to them like men do, I think the "romance" which is the overt gestures of affection were seen by most women as what attracted them. Thus, that's why women say they want romance, but in reality only from men they are attracted to. Thus, romance isn't wrong, but it's often misdirected.

Jesus "romances" His Church per se in that He lets them into His world and business by giving them insider info on parables, teaching them personally, allowing them to participate in His ministry, and other such goodies.

edit: Ballista makes a good point that "romance" is not "love" and vice versa in the comments and the link posted. It would be wise to understand this because it is easy to get sent off on false doctrines if not.

Idols

August 6, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting things about root words in the Greek is that they can be informative of how many of the Christian concepts are interrelated with each other. One such example I explored is the relationship between joy, grace, forgiveness, and charisma.

Today I was reading through Acts 7 in the Greek which is the first time idols in the New Testament are mentioned in specific form. Jesus obviously talks about idolatry (e.g. can't serve God and Mammon) but does not specifically mention idols.

> G1497 — εἴδωλον — eidōlon — i'-do-lon
>
> From G1491; an image (that is, for worship); by implication a heathen god, or (plural) the worship of such: – idol.

An idol literally refers to an image of worship:

> G1491 — εἶδος — eidos — i'-dos
>
> From G1492; a view, that is, form (literally or figuratively): – appearance, fashion, shape, sight.

This is derived from the primary verb eidō:

> G1492 — εἴδω — eidō — i'-do
>
> A primary verb; used only in certain past tenses, the others being borrowed from the equivalent, G3700 and G3708; properly to see (literally or figuratively); by implication (in the perfect only) to know: – be aware, behold, X can (+ not tell), consider, (have) known (-ledge), look (on), perceive, see, be sure, tell, understand, wist, wot. Compare G3700.

Eidō is used by Jesus and many other NT authors to discuss seeing and knowing the works of God and the works of man. However, that's why eidō is not used in reference to seeing (or rather discerning) the nature of God:

> 1 John 4: 19We love him, because he first loved us. 20 If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen (horaō), how can he love God whom he hath not seen (horaō)? 21 And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.
>
> G3708 — ὁράω — horaō — hor-ah'-o
>
> Properly to stare at (compare G3700), that is, (by implication) to discern clearly (physically or mentally); by extension to attend to; by Hebraism to experience; passively to appear: – behold, perceive, see, take heed.

That is to say that it is not only enough to know but to also experience through action. In other words, faith without works is dead.

When we walk without deliberation and spend our time and money on things that are only seen — not for the benefit of God but for ourselves — we give ourselves over to idols. We idolize that which we see rather than that which we do not see.

This is something that all Christians know but it is worth repeating.

Seeds of manipulation

August 8, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things that most women do — whether they are aware or unaware of — is tying their feelings and emotions to decisions.

For example, if a husband or boyfriend is making a decision such as picking a restaurant other other financial choice, there are some ways that a wife can subtly affect his behavior.

Him: “Let’s go to X restaurant.”
Her: “Are you sure?”
or
Her: “I don’t know how I feel about that”

A question like “are you sure” is a subtle affront to decision making which implicitly says the women doesn’t trust you or that she can sense that you’re seeking approval from her. This is something to quash.

The statement about her not “feeling it” is even worse than that because she is basically giving her opinion that she doesn’t like it in a passive-aggressive manner. This is something to quash even more firmly.

However, there are situations that seem better, but in reality may lead to insidious rebellion.

Him: “Let’s go to X restaurant.”
Her: “I’m happy with anything you choose”
or
Her: “I’m comfortable with what you’re comfortable doing”

The simple fact of the matter is that women often tie their emotions to a man’s decision making. This is bad because it implicitly tells a man that his decisions are tied to her emotions.

It is easy for a woman in this state of mind to go down the feminist route to say that is she is unhappy or displeased with a decision. Then you have a boyfriend or husband who is in a dilemma where he is second guessing himself or stuck in a conflict when there shouldn’t be one. He either caves to her unhappiness which is destructive to the relationship. On the other hand, the other choice is that he has to engage in that unnecessary conflict which most men are going to want to avoid, and it can easily escalate into a fight or something else that is out of control.

What is inevitably better is for a woman to affirm a man’s decision making instead without tying her feelings to it:

Her: “That’s great. I trust your decision making.”
or
Her: “That’s great. I trust your judgment.”

Doing this will bring the relationship between a husband and wife closer because there is trust built here rather than a husband being implicitly a slave to his wife's emotions. I would say this is best used for small decisions that don't really matter in the large scheme of things. To be faithful in the small things means that a man will start to trust a woman in large things.

> Matthew 25:23 "His master said to him, 'Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your master.'"
>
> Luke 16:10 "He who is faithful in a very little thing is faithful also in much; and he who is unrighteous in a very little thing is unrighteous also in much."

That way when a man has to make a large decision to make his faith in his wife or girlfriend has already been boosted by her trust in the small things. That way her input, even her feelings in a large decision, will have more weight in his decision making. He will not feel that the his wife or girlfriend is trying to manipulate him because the trust is there, and his decision making has not been prematurely tied to her feelings as in the small things.

Obviously, this is very subtle behavior that appears innocuous but has the ability to head down the path of the destructive unhappy wife. Both Christian men and women should take heed of a woman tying her emotions to a man's decision making.

individual and societal responses in civilization

August 9, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Wintery Knight has a great post recently about some of the same old controversial topics that have plagued the manosphere for years. Specifically, should women who get pregnant after premarital sex expect the men to marry them?

The irony is that this topic plagues conservatives because they are blinded to the answer of their own question, or they just flat out refuse to accept actual solutions that work because they favor the status quo. In regard to abortion and politics, I think it is willful blindness coupled with the fact that an unpopular sentiment will literally destroy their position with most of the voting base.

Even a poster Lynn cannot see the answer, and she has worked at a crisis pregnancy center:

> Hey, long time reader first time commenter. Greetings!
>
> I have worked at a crisis pregnancy center as a volunteer counselor, and I can confirm mike's sentiment and reasoning. Most of the women that I worked with told me that they did not expect the father to remain in the picture. Occasionally we would have a couple who would show up together and go through the process together, but that was a rare (and refreshing) occasion. Men were designed to be leaders. When you leave a woman alone in an unplanned pregnancy situation, logic leaves, and fear takes over. I have NEVER had a client who wanted to abort. Those that moved towards abortion, in spite of our efforts, did so because they saw it as their only option. If they had a man in the picture, I believe their cases could have turned out differently. But men nowadays have been programmed to see abortion as a woman's decision – as in they don't have the right to get involved. If that changed, and men stepped up, I believe we would see fewer abortions.
>
> Ultimately, men were designed to be leaders, and women were designed to be responders. You can preach at women all you want, but any positive changes in this culture, on that front, are going to have to start with the men, not the women.
>
> Also, I should add that I don't actually believe that 80% of the abortions would have been prevented by male involvement. That sounds like blame shifting to me. But, maybe half that number?

Here's my comment that I posted over there with some additional analysis.

Praytell. How would you convince these immoral men (e.g. non-Christians) to act morally?

Immoral men won't suddenly become moral and "take responsibility" and neither will immoral women. This is like asking a dog not to bark or a cow not to moo. It ain't gonna happen.

In fact, do you know what worked prior to the 1960s:

1. There was no such thing as no-fault divorce.
2. If you divorced you were shunned.
3. Virginity was prized.
4. Women policed women on sex: keep your legs shut until marriage because giving men sex before marriage decreases the incentive for men to be married.
5. Women and their bastard children were shunned.
6. I'm sure there are some I've missed.

All of these things actually led to stable families, men getting married to women and staying married, the vast majority of women were virgins at marriage or had less than 1-2 partners, less unhappiness, etc.

How many women would actually want to go back to this model? Very few. Most women now want to have their cake and eat it too: pre-marital sex galore and lots of fun. Then marriage, children, and settling down. They don't want to go back to "antiquated and outdated values."

The majority of actual Christian men who practice what they preach keep it in their pants and won't pressure a woman into sex. Yet, like our blog host Wintery Knight here no women want to marry someone like that, and they will even go out of their way to have sex with cads and players and so-called "Christian" men.

There are precisely two models that work:

1. Societal standard — where women police other women and shun those that do not comply.
2. Biblical standard — the daughter is the possession of the father, and all suitors must go through him to his daughter. The daughter is kept safe from making mistakes when she is blinded by her attraction to cads and palyers. Subsequently, this is why the father gives away the daugher to the man at marriage which models Genesis 2.

As you can see in the two models that work, it is both men and women that are involved in the marriage process so as to not allow cads and players to violate their daughters. Fathers are responsible for their daughters, and women police the women who want to get out of line and break the status quo.

Incentivizing divorce ensures that less men want to marry because women can take their stuff, and men that do get married may be robbed of half their stuff and lose the children anyway. Fathers are not there to protect and teach daughters what masculinity is and it's proven in the statistics that fathers without daughters are substantially more promiscuous. Likewise, no one but Christians and Muslims would say that daughters are the possession of their fathers.

Women policing other women is obvious. Social stigmas are there for a reason, and the reason that "slut", "whore" and other now-called "sex-negative" names exist for women is because they were used to enforce compliance of non-sex onto women who were not married.

> Galatians 5:9 “A little yeast works through the whole batch of dough.”

Nothing will work except reversion of everything the feminists have done since the 1960s, and a society wide acceptance of the societal standard of women policing women, and fathers protecting daughters. Good luck getting all of those laws repealed and for that morality to happen.

We’re past the point of societal wide changes happening. Yet, we can still make prescriptions to individual women who are willing to accept advice.

Thus, the best advice to an individual woman who doesn’t want to be pregnant outside of marriage — keep your legs shut.

No amount of shaming is going to make a man stick around in a pregnancy if he doesn’t want to. The best way to ensure that a man sticks around for a pregnancy is actual marriage prior to sex and the pregnancy.

A lack of joy or peace

August 11, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Donal in his Sunday Scriptures posted this:

> I am not a joyful person. Never have been. Just not part of my overall personality. Not that I cannot be happy from time to time, but I have never really been joyful as it is properly understood. I've long recognized my trouble finding joy is a real weakness of mine, but its been one that I've not been able to quash. I have tried for a long time, and will continue yet to embrace a spirit of joy. God willing I will find it eventually.

I want to give this a post on its own because this is something that God has been revealing to me over the past few months about myself. Not that I walk without joy and/or peace, but there are things that have held me back from experiencing His joy and peace.

Remember that joy is directly related to grace and forgiveness. Joy and peace are not part of our personality, but it comes from God.

We often say to women who become Christians that were formerly promiscuous that just because they are a new creation in Christ doesn't mean the past has gone away. In this, we don't mean that the blood of Christ hasn't covered all sins. But it is our perception of ourselves that we continue to cling on to things in our past. We allow things to continue to shackle our soul and our mind.

Fear is a big one. Why are we, as Christians, still so afraid to speak about Jesus in public. Or how about for nice guys to go and ask a Christian woman out? Or reveal things in our past to others?

In the same vein you can think of confession as like this. Even by just talking to a priest revealing your sin before God and man, there is a freedom that is present from allowing the chains to fall off of yourself. You're not accepting God's grace again because we have already received it once and for all, but confession(s) are for us to allow us to walk fully into what God has for us. Who can't be joyful and peaceful after confession? A weight on us has been lifted, and it's not because God has suddenly forgiven us again. He already has as Christians.

For me there has been many things in my life that I've held onto maybe in terms of false humility or pride that I should have give to God a while back. And confessing them to Him allows freedom to happen.

It's often the case that as serious Christians we are our own worst critics. If I sin I know I have the grace of God. But I sometimes catch myself internally beating myself up because of that sin. "I should've known better" or "I should have been able to overcome this temptation" or "I'm weak."

I know God has forgiven me but have I forgiven myself?

Self condemnation is a really bad thing to walk in because that is not what Christ came for or how He wants us to live. The bitterness of the lies of feminism and that which we have seen in the manosphere are a hard pill to swallow. Can you forgive others and forgive yourself?

The past is the past, and I can't change the mistakes I've made. I can only learn from them. But I know that I have received His grace and I know that He does not condemn me and I shouldn't condemn myself either. That is why I walk with peace and joy. Yet, still bearing the consequences of my actions if any in the present and the future. God is good.

Thus, deep down I know that if I am not experiencing peace or joy within my life there are chains that I have allowed to bind me where God has already broken them loose. We sit in those chains asking God why won't He take them off, but He has already done so. Stand up out out of them and walk free.

In the moment

August 13, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is one of the more difficult things that I have personally encountered, especially with social situations. As an INTJ, it's very difficult to live "in the moment" as opposed to have multiple lines of thought running through your head at all times.

For example, I could be talking to someone. But I'm also acutely aware of things going on in the background of the situation such as other conversations. I may be thinking about what is next for a meal, or how I need to do something when I get home, or what I should say next, or tons of other lines of thought at the same time.

This is generally not good for social interactions, and it's something I want to vastly improve on. I have over the past year, but it's still been a rough process.

The division of my time I tend to think of is two fold:

1. When I am with other people I need to focus 100% of my efforts and thought on them. This way I can love others as Christ has loved me. Engage direct eye contact with everyone you are talking to. No exception. Don't stare, but don't let your gaze wander around much either.
2. When I am by myself, I am free explore my relationship with God and reflect on the past which I may learn from or plan/pray about the future and others. I can explore as many lines of thoughts with God and others that I need to improve my abilities.

Basically, it boils down to the fact that when alone focus on putting God first, learning from the past successes and failures, and planning as much as possible for the future.

> Proverbs 16:9 The mind of man plans his way, But the LORD directs his steps.

When interacting with people focus on loving them and being there in the moment at all times.

These two sum up what Jesus says are the two greatest commandments:

> Matthew 22: 36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law? 37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. 38 This is the first and great commandment. 39 And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 40 On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

This is the way I approach all interactions now because it sets boundaries for myself in order that I may love God in my time and have Him help guide me in reflection and planning, and that I can do all that I can for people when with them in order to love them as He has loved us.

Basically, this is Dominion over time management and relationships.

You'll find that relationships will start to flourish more when people know you're paying 100% of your attention to them. People will become more interested and interactive with you because you have shown them that you prioritize them over yourself. This is one of the first steps that many introverts need to learn in loving others and being a good communicator.

Men who get it and men who don’t

August 13, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The reason why most men think women are confusing or hard to get is all a matter of perspective. To get the right perspective, you have to look at your actions. Your actions matter because that is what a woman is interacting with and how she responds.

For example, take your average man who gets it. This will be a man who acts, speaks, and breathes masculinity. The only responses that a woman can give to a man who is acting masculine are these:

1. She will act feminine around him
2. She will act adversarial to him, like a witch with a capital B.

On the other hand, for your average “nice guy” which is a man acting in a more feminized manner you’ll see than such a man will get a huge amount of disparate responses. This is because the women run into the issue of — do I respond to the man as a man or as a woman? — and you don’t know what you’re going to get out of it:

1. She could treat him as a beta orbiter only for validation
2. She could treat him as just a friend
3. She could be disgusted at his lack of manliness
4. She could try to lead the relationship
5. She could use him for time and money
6. She could use him as an emotional sponge for her other man problems
7. And many more.

A man will get a whole gamut of responses ranging from happy to sad to bored to disgusted to anything else. The types of responses that a feminized man will get from a woman basically depends on how she is feeling at the moment. Obviously, if the responses a man gets from his interactions with women are based off the fickleness of emotions then it’s going to be confusing for most men.

Then they proclaim that women are impossible to understand like this is some universal knowledge that can’t be figured out. Women can only be understood from the lens of being a man. If you are are essentially another woman to them as a nice guy or feminized man, and then you try to apply logic to that you will always be confused.

This is the difference between men who get it — women react to them — and the men who don’t get it — they react to the woman. If you’re a man and you are continually being confused by women then you’re not acting like a man.

Men who get it

It is easy for a man who gets it because she will act feminine around him. All is right in the word if the man is acting in a masculine manner, and the women will usually follow suit by acting in a feminine manner.

However, if it comes to the point where she's acting like a witch with a capital B then there are two scenarios that follow:

1. About you — she's testing your boundaries, typically in your mistakes or in the newness of a relationship
2. About others — which means it's not about you and she's being embroiled by some emotions from other situations.

If it's about you then you have to learn to lay down the law. I discussed this in a Framework of Offence and Defense about the various things that you may become embroiled in when it's about you.

When it's about others generally speaking you shouldn't involve yourself. Just grab her and hold her close and let her get over it.

Remember, if you, as a man, are upset about something someone else did, and your friends ask you about it you tell them you don't want to talk about it. If they keep pestering you about it then you're definitely going to get angry at them as well. That same human experience applies to women.

However, while men often times just want to be alone to think through the experience or make plans to make it better, women are a bit different in how they respond. This is the say that men often think through an issue like this in terms of headship — what needs to be done to fix the issue. On the other hand, women tend to think of it in terms of the body — this is happening to me and I need to process everything.

Hence, why when men want to go fix the problem it's often not the solution. Most of the time, women just want you to listen or be that calming force in her life.

Thus, when it's about others a man must recognize when to be the rock that she needs to weather the storm.

Conclusions

Don't be a man who doesn't get it. If you don't get it then you will always be confused by women.

Men who get it understand their behavior matters. Masculinity is such that women will react to it. They will react in two different manners:

1. She will act feminine around him
2. She will act adversarial to him, like a witch with a capital B.

If she's acting feminine all is well, but if she's acting like a witch then:

1. About you — she's testing your boundaries, typically in your mistakes or in the newness of a relationship
2. About others — which means it's not about you and she's being embroiled by some emotions from other situations.

If it’s about you then defuse it by maintaining Dominion over your boundaries. If you let her run roughshod over you then expect the relationship start to disintegrate.

If it’s not about you then don’t try to fix the problem unless she specifically asks for solutions, but rather be her rock to help her weather the storms of her emotions. If you need clarity then you can metaphorically ask if she needs an ear or a hand.

If she too often acts like a witch and is otherwise unable to act in a feminine manner then she’s not relationship material. Point blank. Even the most manly of men cannot “make” women feminine. She has to decide that for herself through her conscious actions.

The nature of man and woman before the fall

August 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Cane Caldo has an excellent post today on the topic of the difference between the nature of temptation of men and women.

> This is wrong. Men and women are even more different than that. Women are headstrong and challenging because they want what they want and they don't give a damn about the whys and whatfors. In the female soul desire is mainlined. They want differently than we men do. The typical desire of a typical man is weighed thus: "Can I get the goods without getting in trouble?" A woman says to herself, "How do I get the goods without getting in trouble?" While the difference in words is subtle to the ear; the meanings are widely separated. The thought of doing without is a secondary consideration at best. That's just in the nature of a woman, and why they need a leader.

Highlighting mine. I encourage you to read the whole post because it is short and extremely concise.

In particular, in the comments chokingonredpills and Oscar related this back to Genesis 3:16 which is God's righteous judgment upon women. This is part of my response, and then I'm going to expound on it more.

> "Genesis 3:16″ ~ chokingonredpills
>
> Exactly! It's a consequence of Original Sin and the Woman's Curse that followed.

Be very careful because this is incorrect.

I would argue that hypergamy existed before the fall, and I would also argue that headship of the husband over the wife existed before the fall. Likewise, temptation existed before the fall as well or else how could Eve have been persuaded to be deceived lest she be tempted first.

The fact that Eve was able to be tempted and deceived by this specific phrasing:

> Genesis 3:5 "For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil."
>
> 6 And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her; and he did eat.

It is clear that before the fall that the woman already had the capacity to be tempted to literally "become like God" which means that this is a part of her nature before the fall. It is not a consequence of sin but rather the way which woman was created.

Remember, it is the capacity to be tempted that gives us free will. Both men and women were created this way in order that we might choose God of our own free will rather than sin. This is the fundamental nature of Christianity.

Gen 3:16 gives the husband authority to rule — headship is different from authority — and then the New Covenant through Jesus takes back the authority and changes it to headship (Eph 5, 1 Cor 11, etc.) in order for the models of God-Jesus and Jesus-Church to be what husbands-wives strive for.

Nature of headship

The very nature of woman being able to be tempted in this way — a power play for power — means that headship before the fall must have existied. First, we must establish that authority is good. We know that is true because is the Creator and has all authority. His nature is that of love and goodness. Thus, by logical extension, authority is good.

Headship of the husband to the wife is meant for love, good, and edification of the woman just as God is the head of Christ and Christ the head of the Church.

> 1 Corinthians 11:3 But I want you to understand that [a]Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman, and God is the head of [b]Christ.

Therefore, the logical conclusion is that of headship existing as an trait of creation of man and women, and not an extension of a curse of the fall. There are, of course, other logical arguments that argue headship before the fall as well.

We know that Adam failed in his headship for multiple reasons which God has outlined in Genesis 3:

> 17 And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; 18 Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; 19 In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

~~Note the "and" in the middle of the statement.~~

1. ~~Adam's first sin is of not being the head — Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife.~~
2. ~~Adam's second sin is disobedience to God — and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it.~~

Note: the Hebrew does not have conjunctions such as "and" so the above is incorrect. However, the point still stands because Adam listened to his wife rather than God.

If there was no headship and man and woman were "equal" before the fall, would Adam be punished because he listened to his wife? No, because they would have been "equal." Yet, God punishes Adam because he listens to his wife.

Likewise, it was only until after both of them ate the fruit that their eyes were opened. If Adam and Eve were equal then why wouldn't their eyes have been opened after only Eve had eaten? This goes back to the command that Adam is put in charge of the garden, and then his wife is made a helpmeet for him (Gen 2). But they are both overall tasked to the garden (Gen 1).

Instead of being the head of his wife and chastising her when she brought him the fruit saying "God said don't eat this fruit," he instead ate of it and disobeyed. Then Adam later plays the blame game:

> 11 And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?
>
> 12 And the man said, The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.

The main point that I'm trying to make with this section is that we don't truly understand the nature of God's creation because we don't look closely at the Scriptures.

If we fall into the trap of "woman's nature" is that way because of the original sin, we miss the importance of free will.

Yes, God created man and woman with the ability to be tempted. What He created was very good because it gave us free will.

Instead of exercising our free will to choose good, we often blame our sin upon the first sin. This is another way in which we don't embrace how God created us to be, and instead play the blame game just as Adam did. "Well, they're only acting that way because Adam and Eve sinned."

No. Men and women sin because they CHOOSE to act that way. To play the blame game like this is to choose the female hypoagency that the manosphere often decries. The ability to be tempted for power grabbing is a part of how God created women to be. Women choose to disobey God and give into temptation rather than follow God and do what He says. Likewise, the ability of husbands to fail to act as the head in marriage is husband giving into temptation rather than choosing to obey God.

Churchianity is based on hyperagency of husbands and hypoagency of wives and children. This is the say that the husband is responsible for making his wife happy, and he is responsible for the choices of his wife and children. This is false.

We are responsible for choosing what is good and right according to God for what we are responsible for. For single men that is ourselves. This is the very nature of dominion. For married men that is choosing what is good and right for you, your wife, and your children. However, if they choose to not submit or disobey respectively then those consequences do not fall on the husband — they fall on the wife and children.

In the case of children, the father often takes responsibility for the children because it is his duty to correctly train up his children. But if he does and they continue to make the same mistakes it is on them. Continuing to absolve others of responsibility will lead to spoiled child syndrome.

Paul's exhortation on women

This is one of the most difficult passages in the Scriptures for most modern Christians because most Churchians and egalitarians try to eliminate these verses or attempt to twist them to mean something else:

> 1 Timothy 2:12 But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man, but to remain quiet. 13 For it was Adam who was first [h]created, and then Eve. 14 And it was not Adam who was deceived, but the woman being deceived, [i]fell into transgression. 15 But women will be [j]preserved through the bearing of children if they continue in faith and love and sanctity with [k]self-restraint.

Like in 1 Corinthians 11, Paul affirms the headship model here. However, the most interesting part is verse 15. Why would women be preserved through bearing children in faith, love, sanctity, and self restraint?

Note the nature of verse 12 and compare it to verse 15. Women were/are power grabbing within the church and marriage. Obviously, this goes back to the creation order and how the original sin took place.

The interesting part if the solution. The solution is based on the greatest commandment and the second which is like it. Women are not exhorted in the Scriptures to agapao love their husbands, and it has been some debate within the Christian manosphere blogs if this is even possible. This is a debate for another time. However, we know that women are able to love their children with agapao love.

> Matthew 22: 36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law? 37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. 38 This is the first and great commandment. 39 And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 40 On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

When women have children they are able to understand what it means to love another person unconditionally. This is the reason why they are saved through childbearing in faith, love, sanctity, and self restraint. It is this understanding of loving another unconditionally through experience which changes their mindset so that they can truly understand what it means to love God with all of their heart and love their neighbors as themselves.

I would say that women have this capacity, but it is not fully realized until they have children. Hence, why I believe that the married manospherian women are correct that it is possible for women to love unconditionally, but they need to have that revelation through the experience of childbearing and children.

Women that only "love" selfishly are those that abort their children, or they divorce which rips apart their childrens' lives. They are not Christians and not of God. They are not preserved through bearing children in faith, love, sanctity, and self restraint because they eschew them all in the name of selfish power grabbing.

Conclusions

1. God created humans — male and female — with the ablity to be tempted, often by different things because of different responsibilities.
2. Headship of the husband to the wife was present before the fall, and it was good.
3. Adam's sin is of non-headship (listening to his wife) and eating of the fruit of the tree. Take this lesson from Adam because this was before he ate of the tree. Be the head in your marriage because that is the way men and women were created.
4. For women, power grabbing is one of those things that they were created with the ability to be tempted with. Saying part of the created nature was a result of original sin is to say that God's creation was not good. Don't do this.
5. Churchianity is based on hyperagency of husbands and hypoagency of wives and children. This is false. Husbands have the responsibility to be the head and to call out sin and not give into it, but they don't have responsibility for the choices of their wives.
6. Wives learn how to love unconditionally because they are preserved through bearing children in faith, love, sanctity, and self restraint as per 1 Timothy 2. Abortion and divorce are selfish power grabs.

These are all essentials that need to be learned in order to have a correct view of what is GOOD and what is NOT GOOD. We know that which God created is GOOD and that which man stepped into when he sinned is NOT GOOD. But it is easy to get some of what is GOOD and NOT GOOD confused. If we confuse GOOD and NOT GOOD we deceive ourselves.

Why I don’t respect women

August 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Aside from the sensationalist title, this is going to be an interesting post.

When I first wrote on fear, respect, honor, and truth (phobeo and timao), I only hinted at this reality. However, I want to be exceedingly clear on this point because it has the potential to change the mindset of many men in their interactions with women.

> Ephesians 5:33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects (phobeō) her husband.
>
> G5399 — φοβέω — phobeō — fob-eh’-o
>
> From G5401; to frighten, that is, (passively) to be alarmed; by analogy to be in awe of, that is, revere: – be (+ sore) afraid, fear (exceedingly), reverence.

Out of the 93 times that phobeō is used in the NT, this is the only time that it is used in reference to reverence or respect. The rest are in either fear of God, fear of the king, to be afraid of things, and the like.

Interestingly, it is also used in 1 Peter 3 which talks about how wives are supposed to act even if their husbands are unbelievers:

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right (agathopoieō) [b]without being frightened (phobeō) by any fear.
>
> G15 — ἀγαθοποιέω — agathopoieō — ag-ath-op-oy-eh’-o
>
> From G17; to be a well-doer (as a favor or a duty): – (when) do good (well).

The phrase for women stems from what is doing right. Or rather, agathopoieō is a conjunction of agathos and poieō. Agathos is a fruit of the Spirit for goodness, and poieō is a verb meaning to make or do. In other words, agathopoieō literally translates to mean one who does what is good. One who does what is good is like God because God is good. What is good in reference to the husbands is outlined in the prior verse which is to operate in submission to their husbands.

This is the dichotomy with which women operate:

- Women are to respect their husbands in that they submit to them. Women who submit to their husbands fear God and fear their husbands, and thus are paradoxically cleansed of their fear because they do what is good.
- Women who do not respect their husbands do not submit to them. Women who do not submit to their husbands do not fear God or their husbands, and thus have only judgment from God and their husbands for not do what is good.

This is a rational fear from a lack of submission and obedience to the headship and authority structures that God has implemented on the earth.

This is one reason why husbands are not to respect their wives. They are called to love them.

Respect in other forms

It is sufficiently clear that respect in terms of the husband-wife relationship in the Scriptures leads a man to never respect his wife but to love her instead. But what about with other people?

Here are some other verses where respect is used on occasion, but it does not mean the same thing.

> Romans 2:11 For there is no respect of persons (prosōpolēpsia) with God.
>
> Ephesians 6:9 9 And, ye masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening: knowing that your Master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons (prosōpolēpsia) with him.
>
> Colossians 3:25 25 But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and there is no respect of persons (prosōpolēpsia).
>
> James 2:1 My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons (prosōpolēpsia).
>
> James 2:9 But if ye have respect of persons (prosōpolēpsia), ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors.
>
> G4382 — προσωπολημψία — prosōpolēpsia — pros-o-pol-ape-see’-ah
>
> From G4381; partiality, that is, favoritism: – respect of persons.

God does not “respect persons” in terms of favoritism. Not respect in the sense of headship or authority.

> Matthew 21:33 “Listen to another parable. There was a [i]landowner who planted a vineyard and put a wall around it and dug a wine press in it, and built a tower, and rented it out to [j]vine-growers and went on a journey. 34 When the [k]harvest time approached, he sent his slaves to the vine-growers to receive his produce. 35 The vine-growers took his slaves and beat one, and killed another, and stoned a third. 36 Again he sent another group of slaves larger than the first; and they did the same thing to them. 37 But afterward he sent his son to them, saying, ‘They will respect (entrepō) my son.’ 38 But when the vine-growers > saw the son, they said among themselves, ‘This is the heir; come, let us kill him and seize his inheritance.’ 39 They took him, and threw him out of the vineyard and killed him.

>
> Titus 2:8 sound in speech which is beyond reproach, so that the opponent will be put to shame (entrepō), having nothing bad to say about us.
>
> Hebrews 12:9 Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence (entrepō): shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?
>
> G1788 — ἐντρέπω — entrepō — en-trep’-o
>
> From G1722 and the base of G5157; to invert, that is, (figuratively and reflexively) in a good sense, to respect; or in a bad one, to confound: – regard, (give) reverence, shame.

I including the Hebrews passage given that the author of Hebrews is an excellent orator and uses words clearly and concisely. Entrepō is an interesting word in the sense that it’s primarily used to show a contrast in behavior. As you can see above, it is used in both terms of authority, between generations, and between peers. It’s not a unversal based respect in terms of the one that exists with headship and authority.

Why I don’t respect women

It’s common for many feminist women to demand respect. Such women demand respect because they are disabused with the notion that they want equality. As we all know, there is no such thing as equality.

Respect in the Biblical sense is never between peers. It is always between a headship or authority figure and the one submissive to the headship or authority figure. It is given specifically only by the one in submission.

We can see how this plays out in relationships. If a husband begins to respect his wife instead of love her, he starts to question his own decision making and he will start to cater to his wife. He will inevitably base his decisions off of her input and her feelings. Thus, the husband starts to live in respect, reverence, and fear of the wife. This creates an inverse to the relationship such that the woman becomes the husband and the man becomes the wife. The woman is throw into the position of loving her husband and the man is thrown into the position of respecting his wife. This is unScriptural and it makes the vast majority of couples extremely unhappy.

However, what we forget is that we see the same notion play out between a woman and her beta orbiters and white knights. The beta orbiters and white knights respect the woman they are after. Thus, they cater to her needs and feelings. They wonder why the woman will throw all they’ve done for her away in an instant when she meets a man who does not respect her. The answer by now should be quite obvious. Men should not respect women in general.

There two exceptions to this:

- Parents — we honor (timao) and respect (phobeo) our parents because they have been endowed by God with such authority. This is why we as men should respect our mothers.
- However, as we become of age our parents do not have authority over us anymore which means we do not endow them with respect, but we still honor them because they are our parents. This is difficult for most to understand. For those of age, it's easy to disregard our parents advice often brutally because we are responsible for ourselves, but we still need to honor them as it is God's command with a promise that does not expire.
- The only other exception is an institution in which you are submitted to. For example, if we were living in the time of the Victorian era with Queen Victoria then men would be required to submit and have respect for the queen because she has the authority appointed by God.
- Likewise, if you submit yourself to an intitution such as a university you are required to respect those appointed as teachers. This is why we are to respect the female teachers lest they hand down punishment upon you or expel you from the university.

As a rule, however, I do not respect women at all. Ever.

If I were to rephase this, what it means to respect or reverence another is to place them in authority or headship above yourself. This is the essence of what it means to pedelstalize a woman. You set herself up to have headship or authority over you — married or unmarried — and, thus you are setting up a false idol over yourself in place of God.

The authority I submit to is God, and He has outlined in His Scriptures which authority and headship structures to which I am to submit myself to and thus also respect, reverence, and fear.

Additionally, I respect men because the Bible submits:

> 1 Peter 5:5 You younger men, likewise, be subject to your elders; and all of you, clothe yourselves with humility toward one another, for GOD IS OPPOSED TO THE PROUD, BUT GIVES GRACE TO THE HUMBLE.

In other words, submit to those who are elderly because of their wisdom in the faith. This is a specific kind of submission and respect that is given.

Otherwise, I generally am not a respector of other men. What I mean by this is that I acknowledge a common existance between myself and other men such that we face the same trials and hardships to become men in this life. However, I do not set them up with authority over myself unless I am an institution to which I submitted myself to learn. Outside of these institutions, I submit and therefore do not respect any man or woman regardless of their experience or expertise. Instead, I acknowledge their expertise and experience to learn from them.

Respect/reverence/fear in the Scriptures is directly associated with authority or headship.

It should only be given in the instance of certain circumstances, and rarely if ever to women except in the case of mothers while you are still under your parents authority and in submission to earthly institutions.

Every time a woman demands respect from men or from me, especially Christian women, it is a good idea to remind yourself of this face. Women who say such things want to put themselves on a pedestal, and if you respect her you are complicit with setting her up as a false idol in your life and complicit in building up her pride which is sinful. You would be wise to avoid such sin.

In the context of courtship

This post is a long time in coming, but Free Northerner recently had an experience where this is highly applicable in regard to courtship.

> Fourth, for those of you saying I should have not have submitted to the father, but instead taken the girl agains. t the father's wishes, you are wrong. If she was the kind of girl who would disobey her father and abandon her family for a man she had known for only a month, she is not the kind of girl I would want to marry. The woman who will rebel against and abandon her father under the influence of passion is the same woman who will rebel against and leave her husband under the influence of passion. Once the father had denied the relationship, the only way we could have had a relationship is if she was the type of girl I would not want to have a relationship with.

FN is indeed correct to submit to the father's decision. This goes along with the part of the Scriptures about submission to elders, especially with things in their jurisdiction such as family.

Prior to this, the relationship between the father and the suitor is that of peerage which some of the commentors mentioned and he agreed with. The husband is eventually going to be the one that the father passes his daughter off to, and thus it is important to operate with him on the level of a peer.

This is what it means to talk to someone man to man. However, it is also important to acknowledge that he is an elder over you and he is responsible for his daughter. Thus, it behooves you to speak man to man but clothed with humility.

Conclusions

Respect/reverence/fear is clearly delinated in the Scriptures by God to be given only in specific circumstnaces.

- Men should never respect women, except in two situations:
  - If they are under the authority of their mothers, and
  - If they are submitted to earthly institutions such as the government, school, or the like.
- Stay far away from women demanding respect, unless you want to enlighten them.
- Giving respect to a woman is akin to pedestaling them and setting them up as a false idol. Single men, boyfriends, and husbands beware. You are the wife in the relationship if you respect your wife.

- Men should respect their elders.
- Men shouldn't respect other men or peers. They should acknowledge common hardship and trials especially in this life.
- Men should acknowledge expertise and experience from which to learn in a humble manner, but not submit themselves or pedestalize themselves to the person. This is where the classic logical fallacy "Appeal to Authority" comes from.

Love and respect

August 26, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things I mentioned in yesterday's post on Why I don't respect women is the notion that is prevalent in men who find the manosphere:

> I just want a woman to love me for who I am.

Often these men aren't Christians, but there are some who are. But it provides an insight into the stark truth into the feminization of men. The Scriptures have it correct:

- Men are to love, not become embittered to, and honor women as co-heirs.
- Women are to respect and submit to men.

Men are not to respect women nor submit to them except in the specific instances I noted in the post from yesterday, and the same with women to men. Understanding the notion of which sex should love versus respect tells you of the mindset of the person. They are either brainwashed by feminism and disney fairytales or they know God's truth.

Additionally, Christian men have it better than secular men. We know a God who pours out His love for us. He loves us so much that He sent His son into the world to die for us while we were still sinners (John 3:16, Romans 5). We know we are loved. We aren't exposed to the harsh reality that agnostics and atheists are exposed to: that no one will ever "love" them for who they are except potentially their parents. Even that seems not to be the case with the rampant selfishness in today's modern women.

As a man understanding that you don't need a woman to love you in any sense of the word is freedom from the prison of your own mind. It is the expectation of love from women that drives most men to bitterness and resentment. It is the expectation of love from women instead of respect which will drive her away from you. Such a man will incorrectly desire love from the woman while respecting the woman. This puts enormous strain on the relationship as it is the inverse of what it was meant to be.

Conversely, when you realize that you don't need love from a woman but rather respect allows you to see that her feelings do not drive your decisions. Rather it is you running the show, and she is along for the ride. It is not about her happiness but rather making decisions for the family falls into its proper frame of bringing you both toward Christ and living in the world but not of the world. It frees you to stand firm when she's emotional or you need to chastise, correct, or teach.

When a woman is coming at you with full fury of her emotions in an argument will you be the one that expects respect or expects love? Would someone that expects respect willingly engage themslves in the argument and lose self control in it? Or, in other words, would you respect a leader that got constantly embroiled in petty arguments and emotions? Surely not.

Men need to first set themselves into the correct frame of reference as it will do wonders in order for them to understand how to interact with women and other people. This is why I constantly reinforce aligning with a correct Scriptural perspective in order that we interact correctly with others in love and in truth. Men will become men if they can understand and implement the Scriptures in its fullness.

I want you versus I need you

August 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a continuation of why I don't respect women and love and respect.

I think love and respect are difficult concepts for most men and women to put into practice because they seem like vague concepts to us.

I have struggled for a long time to understand what love actually looks like in action because it varies heavily depending on the context of different situations. No doubt many men have too in regard to their girlfriends or wives. Likewise, I think many girlfriends and wives have struggled with how to understand what it means to respect their husband. Submission is more straight forward, but it can be performed without respect.

Thus, I've been mulling these concepts over time and time again in my head over the past few months in order to find the attitude that underlies them. If we can correctly dicipher the attitude, it is much easier to implement the fundamental priciples even in disparate situations.

I want you versus I need you

- I want you is the underlying attitude of love.
- I need you is the underlying attitude of respect and submission.

A want implies a desire for a particular thing. In the case of God, it is that God desires us to come to Him.

> 1 Timothy 2: First of all, then, I urge that entreaties and prayers, petitions and thanksgivings, be made on behalf of all men, 2 for kings and all who are in [a]authority, so that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and [b]dignity. 3 This is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior, 4 who desires all men to be saved and to come to the [c]knowledge of the truth. 5 For there is one God, and one mediator also between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, 6 who gave Himself as a ransom for all, the testimony [d]given at [e]the proper time.

What does God do in His want or desire?

> John 3:16 For God so loved the world, that He gave His [a]only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him shall not perish, but have eternal life.
>
> Romans 5:8 But God demonstrates His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

He demonstrates His love through the action of sending His son as a sacrifice to die for our sins while we were yet still sinners.

God doesn't need us. But He shows His love for us in His desire for us. Likewise, does Jesus need His disciples? Certainly not. But Jesus still called the 12 disciples because He wanted them specifically. He told them to "Come, follow me" out of that desire. Husbands can demonstrate their love/desire/want for their wives through their words and actions.

On the other hand, a need implies that one cannot function or may cease to function effectively without it being met. This is the underlying attitude of respect and submission.

The reason why we, as Christians, respect and submit to Jesus is because without Him we can do nothing.

> John 15:1 "I am the true vine, and My Father is the vinedresser. 2 Every branch in Me that does not bear fruit, He takes away; and every branch that bears fruit, He [a]prunes it so that it may bear more fruit. 3 You are already [b]clean because of the word which I have spoken to you. 4 Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit [c]of itself unless it abides in the vine, so neither can you unless you abide in Me. 5 I am the vine, you are the branches; he who abides in Me and I in him, he bears much fruit, for apart from Me you can do nothing. 6 If anyone does not abide in Me, he is thrown away as a branch and dries up; and they gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned. 7 If you abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ask whatever you wish, and it will be done for you. 8 My Father is glorified by this, that you bear much fruit, and so [d]prove to be My disciples. 9 Just as the Father has loved Me, I have also loved you; abide in My love. 10 If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love; just as I have kept My Father's commandments and abide in His love. 11 These things I have spoken to you so that My joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full.
>
> Deuteronomy 8:3 "He humbled you and let you be hungry, and fed you with manna which you did not know, nor did your fathers know, that He might make you understand that man does not live by bread alone, but man lives by everything that proceeds out of the mouth of the LORD.

In the second quote, Jesus also references that in His temptation with Satan.

A need is also the nature of the relationship between a teacher and his disciples. A teacher without any disciples is but a preacher. However, a preacher has the capacity to be a teacher once he takes on disciples under him. This is the entire essence of Christianity which is to go and make disciples of all nations.

> Matthew 28:18 And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying, "All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth. 19 [e]Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 20 teaching them to observe all that I commanded you; and lo, I am with you [f]always, even to the end of the age."

However, the relationship between that of the disciple to the teacher is one of need. You cannot be a disciple or student without a teacher. What is a student without a teacher but an aimless wanderer? A student needs the teacher much like we need God. It is in this need that the teacher provides instruction and guidance to the student.

This is the essence of the relationship between God and Jesus here on earth. The Father does not need Jesus, but Jesus needs the Father in order that He may accomplish His will. The same is true of Jesus and the Church. Jesus does not need the Church rather He wants the Church. However, the Church needs Jesus otherwise it becomes an the abomination known as churchianity. The Church does not merely want Jesus. It needs Jesus.

In the same way, a husband does not need his wife. But to truly love her he must want her and desire her to seek after the Father and him. Conversely, the wife does not merely want her husband but she needs him. Without a husband she is no wife. She cannot be a helpmeet to no one. It is for this reason that God created Eve for Adam.

This is men look at vulnerability as a highly prized attribute in women. It demonstrates that a woman is willing to lay herself bare such that the man will take up the mantle of headship. She will be able to put her trust in him. She needs him, and he will flourish in her need to protect and provide for her. On the other hand, a strong and independent women is a turn off for most men. If a woman can do everything by herself why does she need a man? She has indicated she clearly does not need a man. She places her trust in herself and is not willing to be open to trust in a man.

Promiscuity, especially in women, damages her ability to be vulnerable. The vast majority of women who are promiscuous put up barriers because their trust has been destroyed by many men. This changes her underlying attitude to be one of strength and independence rather than that of trust which makes her a poor prospect in terms of being respectful and submissive in marriage. Pair bonding does not even need to be mentioned even though it is important to a healthy marriage as well.

When women divorce their husbands they are ridiculing God. They are stating that they don’t need God who created nor do they need their husbands. They know better than God or their husbands, and they can get along fine on their own.

Hypergamy

Hypergamy is one of the most discussed topics in the manosphere, and I am on record stating that I don’t believe it to be sinful in nature but as a facet of God’s good creation. However, like all facets it has the potential to go awry and become an idol. The nature for us to be able to be tempted is good because it allows us free will, but when we use free will for evil it gives rise to sin.

Hypergamy, at its core, belies a state of need. As Christians we recognize that we are sinners and can do nothing by ourselves. We need Jesus and accept Him as a perfect sacrifice for our sins. Given the nature of the relationships between God-Jesus, Jesus-Church, and husband-wife, it should come as no surprise that women are hypergamous in their search for a husband. When a woman meets her hypergamy, she is meeting a state of need. She is marrying into a better position via money, social status, or the like. This is the same as Jesus meeting our need as broken sinners and lifting us up out of our depravity to become sons of God.

This is why I don't complain about hypergamy because complaining is a sin. Complaining about something that is created as good is evil. However, it is good and right to make the statement that unrestrained hypergamy often leads to sin, and to call out others if they go down this road toward entitlement syndrome.

Conclusions

For many men learning to be men, it is important to understand these two concepts. If you have had an attitude that you:

- need a woman/wife
- need sex
- need a woman to love or desire you [for who you are]
- or need anything

Then you are operating in the wrong frame of reference. This is the importance of Dominion over what you consider your needs. I don't need a woman, but I desire to have a wife. I don't need sex, but I want sex. I don't have a family, but I desire to have a family.

Wives who don't respect or submit to their husbands would be wise to understand that they need their husband, though not above their need for God. Without him they are no wife, and they are no helpmeet as long as they foster a strong and independent attitude. This will help to cultivate a godly respect and submission which honors God and her husband.

There is a difference between a need and desperation. Prior to marriage in the dating/courtship range wants and needs have to be moderated very carefully. A woman who comes across as desperately needing a man is as unattractive as a strong independent woman. The reason for this is because it is an idolization of a husband over God.

Likewise, having a wife having a need for her husband does not mean she does not have her own opinions or is a doormat. But I'm sure most of you understand that.

I'm going to continue the Dominion series — A Chistian understanding of attraction and Dominion — with my next post.

Being a Christian can be offensive

September 2, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting lines of thought that popped up in the comments of Why I don't respect women is the use of language in the Scriptures versus in the current culture. Jenny also had a good take of the mindset behind my post in understanding it from a woman's perspective.

GeoffSmith and Mrs C bring up a valid argument in the use various semantics:

> Sure, and while that may be the case, why not just use the word fear rather than respect due to the connotation that respect tends to carry in English? I'm not trying to be trollish or anything like that. And I understand the difference in the Greek and even the distinction to be made in English, but it seems that in Christian parlance, fear already has been explained to typically mean "reverence," so that average reader and hearer would already be primed to understand the distinction without needing to use controversial language in a purely dialectical (read: non-rhetorical moment). I understand the need for utilizing confusing terms for a point as in the parables, the prophets, etc. But when we're breaking things down to the minutiae, I just wonder how helpful that is.
>
> Maybe this answers my own question: Saying "why I don't fear women" might also sound like something it isn't.
>
> […]
>
> I'm aware of the utility of Greek. But, in general, even among very conservative men, if you told one of them, "I don't respect your wife" the average understanding, unaffected by feminism, but more affected by general usage, would be a punch in the face.
>
> The Scriptures do reveal God's truth, but they don't (as you know by using Greek) determine English word usage. I just typically try to avoid confusion when I can when talking about potentially life threatening matters.

And

> I see your point in trying to make clear what respect means in the Bible and I completely agree. However, in the great scope of human history, language is only as good as the context it's taken in. Each place and time down through the ages has given words their meaning.
>
> In our culture today, to respect someone generally means to honor their basic dignity as another human person or, better, if you are a Christian, to acknowledge their dignity as created in God's image.
>
> So while I think that for the importance of correct Biblical interpretation of scriptures, it's good to study, as you did, to come to the meaning of the language > of that time period, we need to acknowledge the time and place in which we find ourselves in human history, and explain things in language that is commonly used today lest we be misunderstood.

>
> That's just my feminine and very wordy way of saying what the other guy said above about "you could get your lights punched out." LOL

I don't think I made a good Scriptural argument in the comments of the post for why semantics matter, so I'm going to do it in this post instead.

At the core of Christianity is the understanding that it is offensive to other people. Aside from the respect discussion you can look no further than the roles and responsibilities of Biblical marriage and other such social issues that are offensive:

- Husband is the head of the family
- Wife should submit to her husband and be his helpmeet
- Christians are "against" abortion — e.g. a woman's "right to choose"
- Christians are "against" gay marriage — e.g. other people's "right to choose"
- Christians are "against" [insert opinion here] — e.g. other's "freedom"

I've written about Christians being Ashamed before. The vast majority of ~~Christians~~ churchians are afraid of voicing their opinions on the things above. They are fearful of the persecution that may follow for standing up for what the Scriptures say. I've related before that I've led Bible studies where the other Christians have a very difficult time talking about submission, sex, and other "sensitive" topics. They have to apologize for it like it's something bad that the Scriptures are saying.

This should not be so!

So when there is a topic such as respect popping up in conversation you should not be afraid from approaching it from a Scriptural point of view instead of a cultural point of view. This is always the correct way to approach every conversation where you see cultural truths elevated above Scriptural truths.

When I talk about respect with other people I'm not going to say:

- "Hey man, I don't respect your wife"
- "Wow, of course I don't respect women. What man would do that?"

Rather, I'm going to point out a Scriptural truth:

- "I don't respect women; I love them and honor them instead."
- "The Bible doesn't say I should respect women."

In the responses above, you can see that the first two responses are offensive for the sake of being offensive. I tend to avoid this line of confrontation normally, though you could make the case for it because Jesus does rebuke Peter with a "Get behind me Satan! You are a stumbling block to Me; for you are not setting your mind on God's interests, but man's."

In the latter responses, I would give another person some hooks on which they would be intrigued about why I don't respect women. It invites a conversation without being in-your-face that their opinion is wrong. In both cases, the most likely question that would be asked back is:

- "What is the difference between respect, love, and honor [in the Bible]?"
- "Where does the Bible say that you shouldn't respect women?"

From there a productive discussion can be had keeping in mind these things:

> Romans 12:1 Therefore I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living and holy sacrifice, [a]acceptable to God, which is your [b]spiritual service of worship. 2 And do not be conformed to this [c]world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may [d]prove what the will of God is, that which is good and [e]acceptable and perfect. 3 For through the grace given to me I say to everyone among you not to think more highly of himself than he ought to think; but to think so as to have sound judgment, as God has allotted to each a measure of faith.

Although verses 1 and 2 would make my point, I included verse 3 because of the emphasis on humility and sound judgment in being in the world but not of the world. The reason why I would bring up such a discussion on such an offensive topic is because I do love and care about other people understanding what God says about certain topics, especially one that is critical for understanding marriage and relationships.

> James 4:17 Therefore, to one who knows the right thing to do and does not do it, to him it is sin.

The main point is that then you have encouraged productive discussion about the semantical properties of words in the Scriptures verses the cultural context for how they are used. Yes, it's a semantics issue. But we all know there is only one that is Truth. The Scriptures outline THE Truth while the cultural context is deceptive.

Yes, there will be some that are offended even when you point out this deception. Yes, they may even be Christians. However, that still doesn't absolve you from discussing and proclaiming the Truth. The Truth may at times be offensive. That is a burden you should be willing to bear as a Christian.

I'm more than willing to be slapped for it.

Attraction, desire, chemistry, arousal, and marriage

September 8, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post is for men although women are welcome to read, learn and comment. I'm writing this because with recent discussions on Donal's blog it would be good to have a place of commonly defined terms and how we use them.

The mansophere and related subset of blogs uses the following terms in such a manner:

- Attraction — What is attractive to the opposite sex is what draws them to get to want to know them better. For men this is primarily physical appearance, and for women tends to be classified in terms of Donal's 5 criterion acronym PSALM: Power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. That which is attractive is only approximation for a man's dominion.

- Desire — Desire describes traits that are preferable in a mate, although not necessarily attractive because they can overlap. For example, being a Christian is not attractive, but for a Christian man or woman looking for a spouse it is a desirable trait. And it should be a dealbreaker if a man or woman is a serious Christian. The vast majority of the fruits of the Spirit are desirable traits — love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self control as well as intelligence, industriousness, fidelity, good with kids, and the like. However, occasionally these overlap with attractiveness.

- Chemistry — The common term for chemistry is when "two people just click." Chemistry is a vaguely defined term. Although Myers-Briggs is somewhat pseudo-scientific, it does generally describe people well. There are certain personality types that mesh well with each other in terms of how well they get along and want to be around each other. This is one part of chemistry. Another part of chemistry is the senses around other people. For instance, there have been various studies on smell and sexual attraction. One of the factors involved with this is major histocompatibility complex differences which tend to smell good to the opposite sex.

- Arousal — Attraction and desire are not arousal although they overlap. Arousal is commonly referred to as "sexual desire." This is what Paul refers to in 1 Corinthians 7 "9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion." This is also what is meant in Song of Songs where it says "Do not awaken love before its time."

Nemesis commented in Donal's like that attraction and arousal taken to the extremes of each other represent the madonna/whore complex.

For Christians, attraction, desire, and chemistry before marriage aren't sinful. However, the Scriptures consistently warn of stimulating arousal before marriage as this is unchaste. It leads down to the slippery slope of hugging -> kissing -> inappropriate hand placements -> clothes coming off -> masturbation -> oral sex -> sex.

In other words, it's not wrong to feel the way you do, but it is wrong to stimulate the body to physiological arousal outside of marriage. As many a man may attest, this is quite difficult. It is also one of the areas in which a man must learn to exert dominion over his body. Attraction and chemistry all make a man want to be around a woman and vice versa, but it is escalating it in an unchaste manner which is the sin.

Attraction and desire relationship

From what we've seen in the manosphere, women tend to have the inability to recognize the difference between attractiveness and desirability.

There are some women who do recoginize what they find attractive, but it is usually mixed in with other traits. For example, common attractive [personality] traits that some women would be privy to saying are confidence, knows-what-he-wants, not-afraid-to-speak-up, being a leader, etc.

However, rarely do women discuss, with men at least, that they are also attracted to the status of a man, his athleticism, abilities or talents (unless directly complimenting him), his looks, or money. Rarely do they talk about that they are attracted to and respect a man when he is willing to stand up for what he believes in rather than cave to her demands. Perhaps this is due to not wanting to be seen as shallow [like men who value physical attractiveness].

There are times when attraction overlaps with desirability which can be confusing. For example, a Christian who is willing to go out and witness to people confidently is going to be attractive to a Christian woman. Is it because he is a Christian that he is attractive? No. It is because he is confident to willingly go out and do something about his faith.

Likewise, is a Christian leader of the worship team attractive because he is a Christian? No, it is because he is exhibiting leadership in a group of people (status), and as talent to place at that level (talent is grouped under athleticism).

Desire

Desirable traits tend to be disqualifiers.

For example, a man who is not a Christian is going to (or should be) disqualified by a Christian woman. Similarly, the fruits of the Spirit, intelligence, industriousness, fidelity, and the like are examples of disqualifiers. If a man does not have these, he may be disqualified as a mate choice even though he may be attractive.

The same is true from a different perspective as a man. If a man sees an attractive woman acting in an unchaste manner he may be attracted, even sexually attracted, to her. But he is very likely going to disqualify her as potential marriage material because such unchaste or slutty behavior consciously or subconsciously tells him that she is unlikely to have fidelity during marriage. It also shows a deficiency in character in that she is starved for attention, and the only way to get it is to act out with promiscuous behavior.

Attraction and chemistry

Attraction and chemistry are two factors that are often molded into one, aside from the confusion of attraction and desire. If a woman doesn't meet a man's attraction threshold but they have crazy chemistry together then he may consider her as a potential mate.

There is some interplay between these two in that a man may choose to marry a woman who he has exceptional attraction for and little chemistry, or he may choose to marry a woman he has somewhat attraction for and crazy chemistry. Normally, these spectrum outliers are quite rare, and it is combination of both that a man is looking for in a partner.

Sex differences

Nemesis brings up a good point in the comments that we may see a difference in preference for certain traits.

- Men seem to tend to prefer attraction and chemistry in regard to potential mating prospects.
- Women seem to prefer attraction and arousal in regard to potential mating prospects.

I suspect this may be an intrinsic facet of initiator versus receiver of mating where men have to approach and women receive the approach. For women, attraction/arousal is more important to signal a man is higher quality and dominant. For men, attraction/chemistry signals that a woman is high quality mating prospect and will likely follow his leadership.

Attraction for women signals high quality in terms of abilities for men (dominion) which keep women provided for, safe, and the like. Attraction for men signals high quality in terms of physical beauty that a woman is less likely to have children with birth defects. Chemistry signals compatibility, and arousal is the psychological and physiological submission of a woman to the man's dominion.

The temple analogy

The analogy I like to use to explain the difference between attractiveness and desirability is a house, although I changed it to temple since we are temples of the Holy Spirit. I discussed this briefly in my first post, which was a portion of what was deleted from a Boundless post.

A temple that has a very well taken care of lawn and a beautiful exterior is going to attract many people to look at it and want to take a look at it. This symbolizes attractiveness.

Once you enter through the door, you get a view of the interior of the temple. You can see well does the owner of that temple actually takes care of it. This symbolizes desirability.

The reality is that unless the temple looks good most men and women are not going to take the time to investigate the inside of the house. Yes, man looks at the outward appearance, but the Lord looks at the heart. That valuation (time/timao) is true, but it doesn't take away from the fact that the first part is important to know as a reality: man looks at the outward appearance. Likewise, it would be unwise to upkeep only the inside at the expense of the outside. The whole building is the temple not just the inside. We recently discussed at Donal's that an exterior deficiency often shows an internal deficiency as well.

Attraction is the drawing force, and the desirability traits are the disqualifiers.

Chemistry comes into play where maybe the particular architecture of the house, the smell of the house, or the interior decorations mesh with you on a fundamental level where you really enjoy it even if it's not the best looking.

My thoughts

As a Chrisitian man my goal is to aim for 3-fold improvement in all of the areas above in order to please God. If there is attraction and and chemistry there will be no problem with arousal in marriage.

Obviously, the things that are "desirable" are the most important because they represent serving God with all my heart and women are by far and away secondary. However, in the process of serving God I'm not going to neglect becoming an expert in my field, learning how to lead groups of people in the Church, working out, eating well, and the like because they will also help me to show discipline and grow in my faith.

This is the meshing of a life that is devoted fully towards Christ where because your heart is fully set on Him everything starts to blend together in terms of attractiveness and desirability. You become confident talking about Christ and what He has done for you. You take the initiative to go help other people, and lead other people in worship or in small group or in serving. You live out the Christian life fully and in doing so become a man that is both attractive and desirable.

I'm not perfect, and I still sin. But I repent. I am growing and learning and allowing Him to become strength in my weaknesses. By the same measure, a woman to marry only becomes a want and not a need, and it allows me to love women and not respect them.

You don't want to get to marriage and find out that you had the time to prepare and you didn't prepare. That's the analogy Christ used for His second return.

> Matthew 25:1 "Then the kingdom of heaven will be comparable to ten virgins, who took their lamps and went out to meet the bridegroom. 2 Five of them were foolish, and five were prudent. 3 For when the foolish took their lamps, they took no oil with them, 4 but the prudent took oil in flasks along with their lamps. 5 Now while the bridegroom was delaying, they all got drowsy and began to sleep. 6 But at midnight there was a shout, 'Behold, the bridegroom! Come out to meet him.' 7 Then all those virgins rose and trimmed their lamps. 8 The foolish said to the prudent, 'Give us some of your oil, for our lamps are going out.' 9 But the prudent answered, 'No, there will not be enough for us and you too; go instead to the dealers and buy some for yourselves.' 10 And while they were going away to make the purchase, the bridegroom came, and those who were ready went in with him to the wedding feast; and the door was shut. 11 Later the other virgins > also came, saying, ‘Lord, lord, open up for us.’ 12 But he answered, ‘Truly I say to you, I do not know you.’ 13 Be on the alert then, for you do not know the day nor the hour.

The goal is to ultimately become a man who is growing in the roles and responsibilities of marriage before marriage.

Dominion Part 2

September 12, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

These are previous two posts that feed into this post.

A Christian Understanding of Attraction
Dominion

If we don't understand the commands that God gave us in the beginning, and that which was restored through Jesus and His sacrifice then we cannot be godly masculine men.

I had been struggling with how to write the follow up post because I couldn't quite tie everything together. Let me explain. The goal of a Christian man is not about becoming attractive, but rather about the pursuit of God in such a way that attraction is a natural side effect. It takes a certain kind of boldness and confidence that we all should have as Christians to match the disciples preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ even unto their death as martyrs.

In reality, I had just been overthinking it. The teaching of Jesus is so simple with word-picture parables that any child could understand, but so laced with deeper meanings that most adults couldn't get it unless they accepted grace and faith from God.

Sometimes it takes worldly things to remind you of that. A couple days ago, this was posted on the RP subreddit. The seven deadly sins of a BP beta. This intruiged me because I intentionally wrote about this in A Christian Understanding of Attraction:

> What is very interesting is that a man's lack of dominion results in sin. Think for a moment about the 7 deadly sins:
>
> - Lust — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his desire for money, food, fame, power, or sex then he falls into sin.
> - Gluttony — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his wants or needs then he overindulges or overconsumes.
> - Greed — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his desire for material possessions.
> - Sloth — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his own laziness.
> - Wrath — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his emotions especially anger.
> - Envy — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over his desire for what his neighbor possesses.
> - Pride — When a man is uncontrolled (or lacks dominion) over himself.
>
> Pride, being the original and most serious sin, is what all of the other sins stem from. It is a lack of dominion over himself such that he loses control in any of the areas above such as lust, gluttony, greed, sloth, wrath, or envy.

If you read the comments of the thread you understand that the 7 deadly sins don't really make sense in any context but a Christian one. For example, a non-Christian man who isn't ruled by his lust is able to free himself from the neediness of women. But all of this is performed in order that he eventually fulfill his lust by having sex with many women.

It's a series of never ending steps of denial and gratification. In other words, it's ultimately about you. Become a better version of you, so you can indulge yourself in things you want. Pride goes through the roof as you engage in greater levels of sinful behavior. We have seen this before:

> Genesis 6:5 Then the Lord saw that the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every intent of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. 6 The Lord was sorry that He had made man on the earth, and He was grieved [e]in His heart. 7 The Lord said, "I will blot out man whom I have created from the face of the land, from man to animals to creeping things and to birds of the [f]sky; for I am sorry that I have made them." 8 But Noah found favor in the eyes of the Lord.
>
> Matthew 24:36 "But of that day and hour no one knows, not even the angels of heaven, nor the Son, but the Father alone. 37 For [y]the coming of the Son of Man will be just like the days of Noah. 38 For as in those days before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, 39 and they did not [z]understand until the flood came and took them all away; so will the coming of the Son of Man be. 40 Then there will be two men in the field; one [aa]will be taken and one [ab]will be left. 41 Two women will be grinding at the [ac]mill; one [ad]will be taken and one [ae]will be left.

In any case, I'm going to hash this out further in the next few sections.

Hierarchy of responsibility

God is no fool. I don't believe it to be a coincidence that God made PSALMs — power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money — to be attractive to women. As has been stated before, all of these things signal that a man is able to move within a community to provide for her and her children.

It is also no coincidence that as the wealth of a society increases, the reliance of women for men as providers also decreases. Women are not reliant on a man's money for a decent quality of life, and it becomes less of a factor in her wanting to marry. However, power/personality, status, athleticism, and looks all still very much apply.

The responsibility of a man of God only increases as more has been added to him:

- If a man cannot take dominion over himself is he going to be able to take dominion over himself and a wife?
- If a man can take dominion over himself how much more ready and prepared will he be for a wife.

You become a man by systematically taking dominion over your pride, your lust, your gluttony, your greed, your sloth, your wrath, and your envy. Doing this consistently eliminates neediness and dependence on others which changes you into a man that is attractive to women.

Likewise, if a man is able to take dominion over himself, and find a wife there is increase in responsibility within the family itself:

- One of the fruit of sex is intimacy. If you don't have dominion over yourself, then intimacy is going to be hindered as deep rooted aspects of yourself come to the surface.
- Another fruit of sex is children: If you don't have dominion over yourself and your wife, how are you going to be responsible for more life?

If I'm not comfortable taking control over myself and my actions, then I'm not going to be comfortable when interacting with others especially into an extremely intimate and revealing act as sex.

I've gone over the parable of the talents multiple times but it bears repeating:

> Matthew 25:29 "For to everyone who has, more shall be given, and he will have an abundance; but from the one who does not have, even what he does have shall be taken away. 30 Throw out the worthless slave into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

This is one of the primary principles in life that extends to every part. God made creation in such a way that as you become a better steward over yourself and the things you have been entrusted with then He often gives us more to be stewards over.

This isn't to say that if I master everything about myself that I will have a wife. But I will be significantly more attractive to women that I should have no trouble finding a wife if I desire, and it is God's will.

Reciprocality

It's important to understand that mastering yourself in terms of the Christian walk is to become more like Jesus. Showing that you have boundaries for your own life in terms of the Christian ideal will spill over into your interactions with others.

For example, in Donal's most recent post on reality versus reason is a discussion of what expectations are reasonable and realistic for look for in a spouse. My view has naturally shifted towards a more reciprocal nature:

> My take on my "lists" or "expectations" is that I won't ask my wife to do anything I won't do (except for have kids since I technically can't do that myself).
>
> I seek God daily in the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, worship/songs and I would expect my wife to do the same. I care about nutrition and fitness daily and I'd expect my wife to do the same. Obviously, there is going to be some differences in roles and responsibilities in marriage, although they tend to have opposite > counterparts — love vs. respect, headship vs. submission, etc. Both of us are bringing our all to it.

>
> Max attraction and chemistry is nice but not necessary. It's just past the threshold I'm looking for, though granted it seems I have a higher attraction filter than most males which is unfortunate for me.

When you have a clear ideal that you're striving for in terms of the Christian walk, and you hold yourself to that standard you will also start to hold others to that standard. This is a good thing. Christian women that we may consider to be potential wives we need to be able to hold to a standard — Jesus' standard — so that when they are off track we can be a loving Christian by calling them back.

The common term named for holding yourself and others to a standard is called boundaries. I'm not willing to marry a Christian woman that is not willing to hold themselves to the gold standard outlined in Scriptures because I don't accept that for myself and neither does God. This is why it is important to express displeasure or correction when other Christians are not following the Scriptures because it reinforces that you have boundaries, and that your boundaries are along Scriptural lines.

Judgment

I wanted to briefly delve into this because it is important to understand in the context of dominion.

> Matthew 7:1 "Do not judge so that you will not be judged. 2 For in the way you judge, you will be judged; and [a]by your standard of measure, it will be measured to you. 3 Why do you look at the speck that is in your brother's eye, but do not notice the log that is in your own eye? 4 Or how [b]can you say to your brother, 'Let me take the speck out of your eye,' and behold, the log is in your own eye? 5 You hypocrite, first take the log out of your own eye, and then you will see clearly to take the speck out of your brother's eye.

Obviously, this is one of the most abused Scriptures in the Bible in terms of churchian and non-Christians as well as potential many Christians as well. I highlighted the second verse because it brings the whole passage into context. The measure you use will be poured back to you.

In the context of marriage, the husband who has headship to the wife needs to be one who is able to judge his wife's behavior without being a hypocrite.

The head determines the course and needs to be able to guide both himself and her [and children] in the relationship. The reason why dominion is important in a man's life is because it helps him define himself, and it allows him to be a leader or head without being a hypocrite. No one likes a hypocrite.

For instance, it is going to be very difficult for a Christian wife to submit to her Christian husband who has poor control over his lust such that he watches pornography. This does not absolve a Christian wife from submitting to her husband out of reverence for Christian even when he sins (Eph 5, 1 Peter 3), but it is certainly not a good witness and it will put immense strain on the relationship.

Likewise, if a man has problems with wrath and emotional outbursts, how is he going to be able to be the head of his wife and tell her to have a calm discussion with him about emotionally charged topics? He is not acting as the head in this case, but he has demoted himself by his own actions to her level.

Judgment falls in line with the principle of reciprocality that I described in the previous section. It is not wrong to judge; rather, it is wrong to judge others when it makes you a hypocrite.

The reason why I will hold my wife to the boundary of daily seeking of God in Scripture, prayer, meditation, and the like is because I also hold myself to that same standard. I'm not going to compromise my relationship with God, and she shouldn't either.

In a more realistic aspect of judgment fitness and nutrition are a good one. I hold myself to a high standard in regard to fitness and nutrition because I want to respect God's temple. I am going to hold others to the same thing. However, what this looks like in my life is that I'm not going to berate others for eating a piece of cake. After all, I do that once in a while so it would make me a hypocrite to tell someone not to do it because I do it occasionally.

However, it we get talking on the concept of fitness and nutrution I'm not afraid to state my boundaries on the topic. I'm not going to date/marry someone who isn't interesting in fitness and nutrition. Similarly, if a woman expresses interest in fitness and nutrition, but then doesn't execute their plans I'm going to call them out on it. I'm going to mercilessly tease them for it. I'm going to raise my eyebrow at them or give them a knowing smirk.

Women say they don't want to be judged and they don't, but they will respect a man who holds them to boundaries even if they become angry or emotional over it. In fact, such a man is often called a jerk by women. But they will respect him because he is firm in his boundaries, and he calls them out when their yes is no and their no is yes.

Conclusions

- God has established attraction, marriage, and responsibility such that to more will be given more and to less even what they have will be taken away. We need to learn how to be men to whom much is given much will also be required. First of ourselves, then of others.
- Reciprocality is important. We need to first hold ourselves to boundaries based on the Scriptures and excellence in every facet of areas. Then we need to examine how that lines up with our relationships with others.
- Dominion over yourself in accordance with the Scriptures allows you to judge righteously without being a hypocrite. This ties into reciprocality in that to be the head in a marriage relationship you have to set the tone by knowing who you are and what you are about and holding your wife to the same standards.

I will continue this series in the future as I more fully understand it in application.

Understanding submission

September 13, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Donal's post reality versus reason there is a discussion going on about submission. Part of this post is a comment I made, but I'm making this its own post because it is important to understand the theological concept of submission and its importance.

> Mrs. C writes:
>
> The thing that concerns me around these parts is phrases like "willing to practice it" (submission) and "demonstrates submission to her father." The reason it concerns me is because if she has to "practice" submission or "demonstrate" it, it implies that one is looking for signs of obedience from an otherwise willful child. Submission in marriage to another Christian who holds the same values as you, isn't like that. You won't have to manage your wife or request obedience unless you marry unwisely by choosing a shrew. I'm not saying this is you, but I've read some supposedly Christian "red-pill' sites run by men that look like, by what they say, that they might have an underlying domination-submission fetish that they try to give a Christan veneer to so they can convince themselves it's ok. If you are courting or engaged, that is the time to ask the questions about her values, her views on family life and to see if she can give you basic, decent courtesy that all Christians give to each other. If you are having long talks about the really important things like faith and family life and she believes the same thing you believe and seems really firm and solid in that belief, then you have a keeper. There will be submission because there is agreement. You won't have to ask for it. This will be the biggest indicator. If a guy's test for submission is seeing if she gives 100% compliance in things that fall under the 5% small stuff rule, then he doesn't have a grasp on what true submission is.

Emphasis mine.

Sounds good in theory right? You agree on most things, but don't sweat the small disagreements even if she doesn't comply 100% of the time.

I respond with the following comment.

> Quite frankly, this tells me you don't know what "true submission" is.
>
> It's clear in Ephesians 5 is that marriage — the husband and wife relationship — is analogized to Christ and the Church. Christ should expect 100% compliance from Christians especially in areas where they don't like it or disagree with it. Don't like loving your enemies? You do it anyway because it honors God.
>
> Imagine if Christ said, "well, DS, I think you should love your enemies 100% of the time but because you disagree here and don't want to do it that's OK." That is the absurdity of what you're saying by "If a guy's test for submission is seeing > if she gives 100% compliance in things that fall under the 5% small stuff rule, then he doesn't have a grasp on what true submission is."

>
> TRUE submission is only shown in disagreements. Why? Because submission is not about "compliance" or "agreement" but it is about respecting and honoring the decision of the one in the authority or headship position. It's easy to do something when you want to do it. But it is mighty hard to honor and respect headship and authority when you don't want to do it.
>
> The reason why people divorce is because they don't respect and honor God's laws when they are "unhappy." I don't like the government but I honor the laws of the land and respect the president and our leaders. I don't have to like it. I don't have to enjoy it. But I do it because God states that in His Word, and I want to honor Him. A Christian unwilling to submit to Christ in all things is no Christian. A wife unwilling to submit to her husband in all things (even if she doesn't like it) is in for a very unhappy marriage and likely divorce.
>
> This is why many of the Christian men here RIGHTLY take this view.

Let me drive this point home to any Christian men out there.

Compliance and agreement are a half truth and half lie of submission. Submission is honoring and respecting the decision of those in headship and authority, even when you don't agree or don't like it.

Compliance is the half truth of submission. While this is right, it can be done with a poor attitude. You don't have to like it, but you still honor and respect the decision. However, it's always better to do the right thing with the wrong attitude, and pray that God change your attitude while you do it.

Agreement is the half lie of submission. I can be submissive to my parents 100% of the time and NEVER agree with any of the decisions that they made. I can obey the laws of the government 100% of the time, and NEVER agree with any decisions they make. Yet, I'm doing the right thing. Agreement is unnecessary for submission.

There are very few Christian women who are going to be willing to submit to their husband in all things. When you are married to a woman who will not submit 100% of the time in all decisions what she is telling you through her actions is this:

She is unwilling to submit to you — a fallible human — in this decision because she is unhappy or emotional. Do you think she is going to be willing to submit to God — who is perfect — and you in honoring her marriage vows when she becomes unhappy at other times in marriage?

Fat chance. Those unwilling to submit to fallible humans in relationships or organizations are not going to submit to a perfect God when they don't like it. It should not surprise you that the divorce rate if 40-50% among "Christians."

Rebellion only grows. Feelings trump submission to fallible husbands, and this leads to rebellion bad enough that feelings trump submission to a perfect God.

> Malachi 2:16 For [a]I hate [b]divorce," says the Lord, the God of Israel, "and [c]him who covers his garment with [d]wrong," says the Lord of hosts. "So take heed to your spirit, that you do not deal treacherously."

That is the hard question you need to ask about yourself as a man when deciding to marry a woman. A woman unwilling to submit to a fallible human whether you, her father/family, or the government or other headship or authority structure, shows a lack of honor and disrespect worthy of ejecting her as potential wife material.

Practical advice

Women are not obligated to respect and submit to a man prior to marriage. However, I would very strongly suggest to Christian women who want to be married to consider the implications of not honoring a man's request or decision prior to marriage: Are you putting your happiness over the relationship? Is it an inconvenience to you or something you disagree with? Is it worth making a fuss over?

In making these types of decisions you are giving him information whether you will be a respectful and submissive wife or not. Do it too many times without a reasonable explanation and you have established a pattern of behavior that will continue when you are married. This will make or break if he is willing to move forward with the relationship.

If he thinks you're being disrespectful to him then he may eject you as a potential marriage candidate.

Men: it is important to examine a woman's relationship with her father. Additionally, how she respect other headship or authority structures in church, at her job, or other areas is important is determining is she asserts her own happiness above a relationship.

Like I said earlier, if a woman is unwilling to submit to other fallible human relationships or headship and authority structures, what makes you think she is magically going to start doing that when she marries you?

Other related thoughts

Note that I am not saying men and women should not be reasonable. There are places and times to choose what matters and what doesn't. I would say to most men that you shouldn't sweat the small things and be willing to compromise. However, beware the woman who is unwilling to submit to your decision when you make one.

Granted, she may be unhappy with the decision. She may get emotional over the decision. But at the end of the day she should submit to the decision because that is what honors and respects you and God. We are allowed to express our emotions and be unhappy, but that doesn't excuse us from doing the right thing.

It goes without saying that I am not advocating being domineering. Submission is not being a doormat and not voicing your opinion. Etc. I know I'm probably going to get some troll comments about that given the topic title, haha.

The sexual marketplace and marriage marketplace

September 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I haven't written on the sexual marketplace (SMP) and marriage marketplace (MMP) before so this would be a good time to write about it.

The rest of this post after this section is going to explain the SMP and MMP and review material that has been covered on this blog in the past into one clean post.

Donal in random links and musings writes:

> Something that I want to address as well is the Looks/Athleticism versus Personality debate that seems to show up all the time in the comment section at The Rationale Male. A lot of folks there place too much stock in Looks, as compared to the other LAMPS/PSALM attributes. My suspicion is that the reason why is because Looks and Athleticism are obvious to everyone, whereas Personality/Power can be much more difficult to pick up. Not sure when I will get to writing it, but would love to finish it sometime this month.

There is also some bias in the [Christian manosphere] view because we understand that personality/power is not just related to attraction but to traits that would make a good husband as well. It's easy to say that power/personality is more important from our perspective because we are trying to cultivate men and become men who display dominance in our lives (attraction) and are also going to display industriousness, fidelity, the fruits of the Spirit, etc (desirability). In this respect, it's comparison of the SMP versus MMP.

Looks and athleticism are thus more highly elevated because the Power is not the full Power that we are trying to develop. In essence, Power takes up less of the "pie" and by the very nature the other pieces of the pie will expand.

Additionally, if you're a typical non-Christian male and trying to get laid from any avenue then online dating, tinder, and the like represent a vast opportunity to meet women to connect with that want sex as well. What matters in these types of settings is displayed through photographs: it is strictly athleticism, looks, and status if you use some type of preselection. That's because words on a page are much different than an interactable personality.

Looks and athleticism do play a big part in inspiring lust in women especially if they are open to just having sex. It's one of the first things we notice about others even before we talk to them. As men we should understand this very well.

I would also suspect there is a correlation between the commenters on blogs and the frequency of their use of the internet related opportunities such that online dating, tinder, and such will be more frequently used among this crowd.

The SMP and MMP explained (to those unaware)

I believe Rollo Tomassi's post on Navigating the SMP was one of the first posts on this topic in the manosphere, but I may be wrong. Since that post mainly talks about the SMP, I'm going to discuss that as well as the MMP as well since that pertains to Christians.

Like many systems and domains, human behavior on a population wide scale can be statistically categorized in terms of the economics of supply and demand and incentives.

Basically, the SMP is what we term as the hook-up scene. This is where the only thing that matters in a hook-up is attraction. Men want to hook up with what men find attractive in women — beauty. Women want to hook-up with what they find attractive in men — PSALM (power/personality, status, athleticism/talent, looks, money). In a hook-up both women and men want to maximize the attraction of the opposite sex because obviously it tends to lead toward more passionate sex.

The problem that occurs in Christianity and other religions that advise no sex before marriage is that the SMP destroys the bargaining value of women in the MMP which is sex. When men can freely get sex from women, they are more likely to not marry at all. The classic statement that embodies this phenomena is as follows:

> Why by the cow when you can get the milk for free?

The MMP is a delicate balance of two traits. Finding a spouse with adequate attractiveness and desirability. Attractiveness is the main commodity in the SMP, and desirability is the main commodity in the MMP. Desirability includes personality traits such as fidelity, industriousness, fruits of the Spirit (for Christians), and other traits that would make loyal, faithful, spouses and good parents.

Attractive people who don't have enough desirable traits are not marriage material because they tend to be more prone to divorce and getting what they want rather than putting their spouse's needs before their own. On the other hand, desirable people who don't have enough attractive traits to the opposite sex tend not to get married because they don't inspire passion (see: 1 Corinthians 7).

Advice in the current MMP

The advice that makes the most sense to give to Christians is along the lines of:

> Men need to become the man of the woman of your dreams. And women need to become the woman of the man of your dreams.

This ties into the concept of reciprocality that I discussed yesterday in Dominion Part 2.

If you're the "stereotypical" man who plays video games and lives in his mother's basement with a beer belly and reads the Bible once a week, do you think that the supermodel lookalike Christian woman who is fit and reads the Scriptures daily, prays continually, and serves in the church is going to be interested in you as a spouse? Certainly not.

It's important to understand what attracts the other sex and what is desirable to the other sex so as to cultivate all of the qualities that the spouse of your dreams may be looking for.

- Attraction

For men looking to attract women — maximizing PSALM attributes. Power/personality you need to understand in terms of attraction and dominance (initial, part 1, part 2). Status tends to depend on your profession, hobbies, and social groups. Be excellent and/or innovative in your profession. Have at least one hobby that you excel in (if you don't have one learning a musical instrument such as guitar is always a good one). Learn how to socialize effectively in any situation (some ideas 1 and 2). Athleticism and looks are pretty obvious — eating right, workout, and focus on putting on muscle mass. Wear fitted shirts. Find a style that works for your complexion and body type. Always dress about 1 level above where you are going. Money comes with being excellent in your profession, but always look at alternative ways to earn money as well. I wouldn't rely on this as a way to attract women though.

For women wanting to attract men — physical beauty. You can't do much about your bone structure of your body or face, but you can easily work on physical beauty. Nutrition is integrate in losing weight if you are overweight or obese, and going to a non-processed food diet can help clear up health issues like acne. Proper fitness — especially strength training — can help you develop a good hour glass figure that men are attracted to. Tastefully applied make up is good as well. Wearing feminine clothing that is chaste and modest such as dresses and skirts tend to appeal to men, and so does shoulder length hair or longer.

- Desirability

Desirability is similar for both Christian men and women. Obviously, a committed Christian is one of them, but also cultivating the fruits of the Spirit, letting your yes be yes and no be no, industriousness, and other such desirable traits.

Some more sex specific inclinations. Women may want to learn how to run a household, learn how to cook, and do other traditionally feminine activities related to that. Men should look to learn how to be handy and fix things around the house and with cars and electronics. Obviously, you can learn all of these as it will make you more flexible in terms of meeting potential mates.

Summary: attraction gets your foot in the door, and desirable traits will keep them around. You need both.

I wrote a bit on this material before in Practical ways to improve your attractiveness and desirability for a Christian spouse. Free Northerner has also written his Omega's guide going into more specifics about various topics.

Reciprocality, again

Lastly, on the concept of reciprocality. You are who you attract.

As a man, if I asked out a spectrum of women and only get replies from say 5/10 women who tend to be more masculine in their behavior then it's clear that I'm of average attractiveness and I'm more feminine in my actions.

Attractiveness tends to be reciprocal in that 10s attract 10s, 9s attraction 9s, and the like. There is some variation where you may see about 1 point of difference, but usually you won't see 2 or more points of difference unless there are some extraneous factors involved such as abnormal amounts of charisma, status, looks, athleticism, or money for men or a woman is extremely humble about her physical attractiveness.

Likewise, the masculine tends to attract the feminine and the feminine tends to attract the masculine. If you're only attracting ball busting, nagging women who want to get their way all of the time to boss you around then it's likely you have a feminine personality. Vice versa also applies.

If you're a churchian then you'll attract other churchians. Someone who is an extremely serious Christian will not be desirable to a churchian because all of their life is devoted to God whereas the life of the church will be devoted to themselves and only God peripherally. They won't get along well in the short term or the long term.

This a good review of general concepts on this blog. I don't think any new ground has been broken, but is a good review since I've picked significantly more readers since I started writing the dominion series.

Looks in regard to facial attractiveness

September 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to discuss this topic from the perspective of a man's attractiveness to a woman because there are different factors that feed into a woman's perception of attractiveness of a man. I will briefly comment on women as well since it provides a good contrast of the differences between the sexes. I'm only going to discuss the face because it's obvious that the body is changable to a large extend through diet and exercise.

I haven't written on many specific non-Scriptural topics, but this is something I haven't seen discussed to an extent anywhere else in the 'sphere and it's interesting to see all of the things that go into what it means to be facially attractive.

Note: I'm not going to bother to link to other posts because I don't want to go dredging for links at the moment. If you see a concept that you didn't know was a fact then google it, or if you want to dispute one then link me to another page that shows I'm wrong. Otherwise, this is just a discussion of facial attractiveness in general.

What follows may be non-PC, but when did I ever care about being PC.

Objective facial attractiveness

There is evidence along the lines for objective attractiveness features in both men and women. Women it's pretty clear that beauty is fairly objective (to the degree can be argued) as well as having good skin and symmetry in the face.

The same is true with men's attractiveness. I believe back about maybe 3-4 years ago there was some hubbub about Denzel Washington being attractive because of the symmetry in his face. Other traditionally attractive features that women tend to like in men are a wide and defined jaw line, and the "Greek God" look in terms of darker hair with a tanned complexion.

Facial attractiveness can also be changed to some extent by weight loss and weight gain. If you're overweight or obese losing weight can help significantly. Likewise, working out will get the testosterone flowing which may make minor changes to your facial structure, especially if you are in your teens still.

Subjective facial attractiveness

Subjective attractiveness is really interesting.

I would tend to put race under here because it depends on location. In the Western hemisphere, being white is traditionally considered the most attractive because of the status that goes with it. In other countries outside of the western hemisphere attractiveness tends to default along the usual status lines such as government jobs or wealthy businessmen. Obviously, being white does carry some amount of status into other countries because of the influence of the western hemisphere on other 1st, 2nd, and 3rd world countries, but it is not as strong as in the hegemonic white countries. The race which is "high status" in a country lends more to attractiveness of the population as a whole to the women there.

Facial hair tends to be fairly polarizing. The women that like it really like it, and the women that don't like it don't like it. For men that can grow good facial hair it makes attracting the women that really like it easier.

Hair style tends to fall into this category too. Depending where you are in the world, and where you are in time this changes. Some of the hairstyles from the 1900s were crazy, but that is what was popular at the time. Usually, you can't go wrong with some type of clean cut look, but if you find something for your particular hair that works well then go with it.

Another part of subjective attractiveness has to do with facial expressions. Facial expressions aren't a traditional part of how a man looks, but they do influence his attractiveness.

For women a "resting bitch face" is unattractive as opposed to a smile, but the opposite is true of men. Men that tend to have no smile are more attractive than men who smile from what the studies say from initial impressions. Additionally, since a major part of attractiveness is conveyed by the personality of a man, facial expressions such as direct eye contact, smirks, raised eyebrows, winks, or the like will convey a greater attractiveness than a man who displays more more submissive facial expressions such as eyes that quickly dart around or look down after looking at a woman,

Such examples tend to fall under body language and personality; however, it is power/personality that is displayed in body language which influences the attractiveness of your looks. This is why women can say that a man looks handsome after she gets to know him even though he may not be traditionally objectively attractive. His personality/power shines through his body language and facial expressions such that he looks attractive because he conveys his dominance.

Conclusions

Obviously, you want both to be maximally attractive as a man or woman; however, only subjective attractiveness tends to be changable to a large extent.

Hair style is changable although facial hair you're more at the mercy of what you can grow. Find a style that suits you. Status within a particular country is also a factor as well. Being white in western countries helps significantly, although if you choose to leave primarily hegemonic white countries to a racial country of origin you may have better success.

The impact of personality on both sexes on facial attractiveness cannot be understated. For women it is smiling and a king and pleasant demeanor which is expressed in her face. Men would agree with me that a smile literally lights up a woman's face. For men it is the dominance of their personality expressed in their face and body language which improves his looks to become more "handsome."

Anyone's looks can be increased in your face to some extent by cultivating a personality that matches the stereotypical pre-feminism masuline and feminine roles.

In regard to reciprocality it’s highly unlikely that a man without objective model facial attractiveness is going to marry a woman with objective model facial attractiveness (9-10 range) unless he has an overwhelming charasmatic personality, exceptionally high status, or is living a millionaire lifestyle. However, that’s a different topic altogether.

Questions and topics to learn about your prospective spouse

September 14, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

While we are on the topic of expectations, I think now is the time to publish this as a post.If you're a man or woman and don't know what the heck you are doing in a dating/courtship relationship that you want to move toward marriage, I've been compiling a list of various questions I use to ascertain their knowledge of the Scriptures and their character. Both men and women can use these because there are going to be both a male and female in the relationship.

Some of them are from Dalrock's Interviewing a Prospective Wife, and I've also expanded it significantly.

Standard Christian questions

1. What is your testimony?
2. How have you seen God work in your life recently
3. Do you fast?
4. What is the value of prayer?
5. How have your prayers been answered?
6. What have you been learning from your Scripture reading recently?
7. Are you chaste / virgin?
8. What do you think of equality between the sexes?
9. Tell me about your past relationships
10. What's your favorite hymn and favorite Bible verse and why?
11. What story about Jesus when you first read it blew your mind that you knew this was no ordinary man but the son of God?
12. What are your thoughts about missions / are you called to missions?
13. What are your spiritual gifts?
14. Do you believe in speaking in tongues, prophecy, miracles, etc.?
15. Does God speak to you? If so, what has He told you?
16. Should women be allowed to be pastors?
17. Should women be allowed to teach in church?

Standard marriage questions

1. Will she take your last name?
2. After a wife has kids in marriage what are her priorities (order them from highest to lowest): Children, husband, herself, her work/career, her hobbies, God, other family relatives, friends, Church obligations. And then justify your answer.
3. What happens if we have mismatched libidos?
4. What are your expectations with frequency of sex in marriage?
5. What does submission mean to you?

6. What are your expectations of the husband in spiritual leadership?
7. What are your expectations of the husband in household leadership?
8. What are your expectations of teaching children spiritually and mentally?
9. How do you plan to teach the children?
10. How do you feel about adoption?
11. What would you do if you disagreed with a decision I made, and I went along with that decision anyway?
12. What would you do if I made a decision and you disagreed and it turned out to be that I was wrong?
13. What are acceptable reasons for divorce?
14. Do you believe in soulmates?
15. What do you think about the sexual double standard where men are studs and women are sluts?
16. what do you think about a marriage in the church with witnesses and a signed covenant, but not a marriage license from the state
17. If your female children wanted to get married at 20 years old would you encourage her/them?
18. What are your thoughts on egalitarian marriages?
19. Should women have the right to vote?
20. Who manages the money? Should women have access to the family's money?
21. What do you think about polygamy?
22. What are your thoughts on the distribution of labor in the house. Cooking/cleaning/yard work/etc.?
23. If we get into an argument, how would you suggest we resolve it?
24. Do you run away from conflict?
25. How should a husband handle his wife when she is feeling emotional?
26. What do you think the age of responsibility is for children?
27. What is a helpmeet?
28. Should you ever be alone with a man who is not your husband after getting married?
29. What does happiness mean in a marriage? Should marriages strive for happiness?
30. Are there any topics that are off limits in marriage?
31. Should there be full disclosure about your sexual past in marriage?
32. Should you share your passwords to your e-mail, facebook, etc. when you're married?
33. Do you think a husband should check up on his wife if she is out different places with friends or away from home?
34. What should a wife do if her husband has a pornography addiction?
35. What should a husband do if his wife has a romance novel or emotional affair with another man?
36. What would you do if your husband asked you to use birth control?
37. What would you do if your husband asked you to have an abortion?
38. What should a wife do if she has more expertise in an area, but her husband refuses to listen to her advice?

39. How should a husband handle a situation where his wife is hit on by another man? What if they are mutually flirting?
40. What do you think makes women feel loved in marriage? What would make you feel loved?
41. What do you think makes men feel loved in marriage? What do you think makes me feel loved?
42. What are you attracted to in a man?
43. What are men attracted to in a woman?
44. Should men/women date more than one person at the same time?
45. What would you tell women who want to have it all?
46. What would you say to women who are having trouble getting interest from men?
47. What would you say to women who can get interest from men but can't sustain any relationships?
48. What would you say to men who cannot get any dates at all?
49. What would you say to men who can get dates but cannot sustain relationships?
50. Why do you think men prefer virgin women?
51. Why is lying about sexual history such a big deal to men?
52. What is your ideal frequency of sex?

Deep thought questions — asking them as if she were talking to a Christian wife or single, and if she was talking to a non-Christian wife or single.

1. How do you explain submission (to a Christian wife if she is in rebellion, or a Christian single that believes in egalitarian marriage, or a non-Christian wife or single)?
2. How do you explain self esteem to your kids?
3. How do you explain divorce to your kids?
4. How do you explain gay marriage to your kids?
5. How do you explain abortion to your children?
6. How would you explain feminism to your children?
7. How would you explain why feminism is bad to Christian wives or non-Christian wives?
8. What does peter mean when he talks about women being a weaker vessel?
9. What does it mean in Timothy when it says women are saved by childbearing?
10. What would you tell your female children if they wanted to have a career and travel before getting married?
11. Is sex in marriage different from sex outside of marriage (as in the same act, just different context)? Why? See Cane's post and my post for details.
12. How would you explain why God allows suffering in the world to your children? Or Christians? Or non-Christians?
13. What are your thoughts on free will and/or predestination?
14. Can you explain the relationship between faith and good works?
15. What would you do if you were married and found out you couldn't have kids, or your husband was sterile?

16. Should a husband or wife have close friends who are divorced? (The statistics do show that if you are friends with someone who is divorced it increases your chances of being divorced).
17. What should be a husband's response to his wife if she lies to him, and he finds out behind her back about it and confronts her?
18. What should a husband do if his wife denies him sex? What should a wife do if her husband denies her sex?
19. What should a husband/wife do if his wife/husband is unhappy in marriage?
20. What should a husband/wife do if his wife/husband is not attracted to him/her anymore?
21. What should a husband/wife do if their spouse wants a divorce?
22. What should a husband do if his wife goes behind his back to do something he told her not to?
23. What should a husband do if his wife lies about her sexual past before marriage?
24. In what type of circumstances should a husband apologize to the wife? A wife to the husband?

Other personality questions + your preferences

1. What do your closest friends say about you?
2. What are your life passions?
3. What are your pet peeves?
4. What piece of playground equipment did you play on the most?
5. Favorite childhood memory?
6. Earliest childhood memory?
7. Nutrition
8. Fitness
9. Other habits
10. homeschooling versus private school versus public school
11. Cooking
12. Chores at home

If you have any more that are stimulating questions that you've seen work well then add them in the comments and I'll add them up here.

The backwardness of the church

September 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Free Northerner posted on Diana Anderson recently. Basically, she is a “Christian” who rails against purity culture and exalts sex before marriage.

The main point I want to make is in this quote:

> My doubt had taken a toll on me; I didn’t know how to process this new perspective of God that I was developing. I was beginning to see the cracks in the armor of the evangelical church, especially as my views on politics became more progressive and I began to be more concerned about loving LGBT people than condemning them to hell.

Technically, she is correct. We are supposed to “love our enemies” and “do good to those that persecute us.”

The actual change comes that when God uses our loving behavior to bring them to salvation, after they have been saved it is then that we help them leave their old lifestyle behind. And that’s when it gets messy.

That’s the main distinction. We are called to love others unconditionally outside of the church, but we are called to police ourselves inside the church. You will see this problem crop up in many separate instances.

For example:

- Premarital sex is seen as good, and sex within marriage is bad.
- Christians condemn the LGBT community and gay marriage, while not calling out divorce in their own community.
- Christians are more concerned with political issues, than teaching their children good values.

When you look at any issue and how the church approaches it now, it is almost always in an incorrect manner. What we can see is that Satan has a foothold such that the truth is twisted to be evil, and evil is twisted to be good. That’s why in the manosphere we see happiness and other feelings becoming truth rather than what God and the Scriptures say is truth.

We shouldn’t be surprised at this, yet most of the time we are when we see someone doing something that is wrong. The lies are there and are meant to twist us from the truth.

The truth of the matter is that Christian doctrine is focused on the self but not selfishness. That is we have a responsibility and stewardship of our lives to become like Jesus. When we become like Jesus, God uses our lives as an example to witness to others.

The truth is that when we fail to realize this, our reality of the truth becomes twisted. We start to judge others instead of ourselves first, and in doing so we become hypocrites. No one listens to hypocrites or takes them seriously, and thus the witness of the Church is destroyed.

Diana is correct in that the Church should not be railing against gays and instead loving them. However, she employs it as an overarching principle when it is only one of many, and thus she throws out the responsibility of Christians to adhere to the Word of God.

Rational and irrational fear

September 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is the difference between rational fear and irrational fear. I discussed generalized irrational fear in fear the final frontier, and I've discussed rational fear in greek word study comparing respect and value as well as in why I don't respect women.

Rational fear — fearing the consequences of when you do evil — is a healthy fear. This is the fear of God that we all have in our hearts. We should fear and tremble when we commit sin because God is Righteous/Just and abhors sin. Rational fear is an encouragement to do what is right, and to avoid doing what is wrong.

This is the same notion that underlies the concepts of authority and headship. That's why the Greek word phobeo is used synonymously with fear/respect/reverence in terms of these earthly structures.

Irrational fear — is unhealthy and to be eliminated. This is when you fear/worry about necessities (as Jesus talked about) or have an irrational fear about what "may" happen to you in marriage. Irrational fear is a discouragement. It is often to avoid doing what is right and to do what is wrong (such as speaking out for your faith).

This is an extremely important disctinction to make because often people swing to one end of the pendulum or the other. Men and women when they eliminate "fear" completely from themselves have a tendency to be rebellious against authority. On the other hand, you have nice guys who are paralyzed in the face of women, Christians who are afraid to talk about Jesus and the Scriptures as the Truth, women who live in fear of strangers, rape, creeps, and the like.

I find that it is rational and irrational fear that underlies many false Christian beliefs, and I will continue some of this discussion in my next post on identity.

How to treat rebellious spouses

October 5, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Infowarrior brings up a really interesting comment in Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives.

> Would you say this would be an appropriate disciplinary measure should any one of the spouses sin:
>
> Matthew 18:15-18
> 15“If your brother sins against you, go and tell him his fault, between you and him alone. If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. 16But if he does not listen, take one or two others along with you, that every charge may be established by the evidence of two or three witnesses. 17If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church. And if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as a Gentile and a tax collector. 18
>
> Whether the husband fails to love his wife as Christ loves his church or the wife rebels against her husband’s headship?

My answer is yes.

However, the reasoning is interesting and always brings everything back to God’s truth. First, let’s start by analyzing the situation here.

Jesus’ comment was specifically about general (ekklesia / Church) matters in that instance. We have instances of when Jesus speaks specifically of divorce/adultery in Matthew, Mark and Luke. Mark and Luke record no exceptions for dissolution of marriage. Matthew confirms only infidelity as a reason. Paul in 1 Corinthians 7 permits remarriage from abandonment. However, we know God’s heart:

> Malachi 2:16 For [a]I hate [b]divorce,” says the Lord, the God of Israel, “and [c]him who covers his garment with [d]wrong,” says the Lord of hosts. “So take heed to your spirit, that you do not deal treacherously.”

Those specific instances are like Paul’s exhortations to general believers and to husbands and wives — submission of the wife to the husband supercedes that of submitting to one another out of reverence for Christ. I wrote extensively on this in is there mutual submission or not.

In John 17, Jesus prays to the Father that even as they are One that the Church be the redemptive power of God to bring all believers as one. This is part of the New Covenant whereby the indwelling nature of the Holy Spirit in concert with Christians is able to make the Church one as the bride of Christ.

However, marriage as an institution is already perfect as it unites the two as one fully. It was created before the fall. As Jesus states in Matthew:

> Pharisees came up to him and tested him by asking, “Is it lawful to divorce one’s > wife for any cause?” He answered, “Have you not read that he who made them from the beginning made them male and female, and said, ‘For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh’? So they are no longer two but one flesh. What therefore God has joined together, let not man put asunder.” They said to him, “Why then did Moses command one to give a certificate of divorce, and to put her away?” He said to them, “For your hardness of heart Moses allowed you to divorce your wives, but from the beginning it was not so.” (Matt. 19:3–8; cf. Mark 10:2–9; Luke 16:18)

Divorce was only allowed under the old covenant due to hardness of heart; however, that is not the way it was created to be and the way it should exist. Thus, excommuncation via divorce of the wife in regard to Matthew 18 is impermissible because of the specific stipulations of Jesus in regard to marriage and also in regard to how marriage as an institution was created.

However, what should a husband to a disobedient wife since he is not permitted to divorce his wife? How are Christians supposed to treat Gentiles and tax collectors? Jesus has words for that as well:

> Matthew 5: 43 “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.’ 44 But I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, 45 so that you may [ap]be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. 46 For if you love those who love you, what reward do you have? Do not even the tax collectors do the same? 47 If you greet only your brothers, what more are you doing than others? Do not even the Gentiles do the same? 48 Therefore [aq]you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.

All in the all, the Scriptures are remarkable consistent with the same prescriptions with no stipulations in Ephesians 5:

> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh.

Husbands have the command to love their wives, even if they are enemies under their own roofs.

Wives to husbands

Wives have a similar prescription for unbelieving husbands outlined in 1 Coritniahsn 7 and 1 Peter 3.

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she consents to live with him, he must not [f]divorce her. 13 And a woman who has an unbelieving husband, and he consents to live with her, she must not [g]send her husband away. 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through [h]her believing husband; for otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 15 Yet if the unbelieving one leaves, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called [i]us [j]to peace. 16 For how do you know, O wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, O husband, whether you will save your wife?
>
> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

I covered how both of these might look in Wives will never win their husbands with words and husbands win their wives with words.

The great thing about being a Christian is that we get to love. If it's an obligation where you feel like you have to love then pray to Him for grace, mercy, compassion, patience/endurance, and faith. You should want those who are closest to you follow Christ!

Conclusion

Love your spouse, even if they are acting like an enemy.

Fear and marriage

October 5, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A quick note: I've been really busy for the past month or so which is why I have not been posting. This will likely continue for another 2-3 months, so I'll post when I can. I have tons of topics I want to write on just not the time. I haven't disappeared, and I will continue blogging as I continue to grow as a Christian and search for a godly wife.

There were some comments in my previous post about my classification of fear of marriage as an irrational fear.

> "[o]r have an irrational fear about what "may" happen to you in marriage."
>
> I might agree with you if we didn't know that at least half of Western marriages end in divorce, but we do. I won't go to the mall if I know there's "only" half a chance that someone will walk in and spray the place with an AK-47, or get into a car that "only" has half the chance of winding up in a ditch.
>
> A Western man's fear of matrimony is wholly justified these days.

and

> Although marriage is good. The state sanction of marriage has caused it to become a meatgrinder of 50% divorce and the general culture of female rebellion.

My general response is that marriage is good, but it is important to count the cost.

I want to expand on this because this is one of the examples where God has created innately as good, but the world has twisted it and made it into something in our minds that is wholly evil and risky at best.

When I wrote Being a Christian can be offensive and the backwardness of the Church the idea presented is that Satan, the powers of darkness, and the world all come together to distort, twist, and revile the Truth. At the very heart of all of this is one of the strongest forms of deception — believing that something which is good is actually evil.

> Isaiah 5:20 Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!

When we're talking about how humans process they use 3 distinct yet co-mingled methods which lead to behavior:

- Thoughts
- Feelings
- Values

Values are by far the strongest factor which influence behavior because we compare our thoughts and feelings against our values before taking action.We are called to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all of these things will be added unto us. Reading the Scriptures, prayer, meditation on the word, fasting, and the like all focus our core values and strengthen them to where we are more likely to stand firm on the Word when temptations come rather than fall prey to them. The stronger the perceived values, the easier it will be to resist temptation even when thoughts and/or feelings are telling you otherwise.

> Proverbs 22:6 Train up a child in the way he should go, Even when he is old he will not depart from it.

Values are trained up, and the primary duty of parents as stated throughout the Scriptures are to instill godly ones in their children. The most famous being that [Joshua] and my household will serve the Lord.

What is happening in our culture today shows me through my thoughts and feelings that marriage has a considerably higher count the cost in it. However, I know that God created marriage to be good, and thus I consider the value I place on marriage as always good no matter how bad the odds.

My thoughts and feelings will dictate that I take a long hard look to see if any woman is worth it. But I know God is good in marriage if it is for me and if it is not for me. I know that God is good in marriage even if others divorce and break their vows. Others actions don't dictate God's value, nor His compassion, nor His grace, nor His love, nor His righteousness, etc.

Our value system, like our identity, needs to be firmly rooted in Christ. Otherwise, we start using both our written and spoken word to speak lies about what God has declared as good. It's a subtle form of evil and sin, but it's still sin. We need to root out every sin from ourselves so that we can walk in His righteousness and holiness.

I know I am guilty of this on this blog in some cases which is why I take any type of feedback seriously and compare it against the Scriptures. I don't want to be on my side but rather God's. I don't want my values but rather God's.

This is why if I do decide to get married I will walk into it knowing that I have counted the cost and accepted any potential consequences thereof. I will not fear that my wife may divorce me. I will stick to the roles and responsibilities as a husband by the grace of God, and I will love God with all my heart and love others as [Jesus] has loved me.

Note: John 13:34 "A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another: just as I have loved you, you also are to love one another" replaces "love neighbor as yourself". This should be obvious because "love your neighbor as yourself" can fail because we often don't value ourselves as God values us; however, that will be discussed in another post.

The etymology of a rebuke

October 7, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the words that I hadn't examined as closely in the Scriptures was the word for rebuke.

> G2008 — ἐπιτιμάω — epitimaō — ep-ee-tee-mah'-o
>
> From G1909 and G5091; to tax upon, that is, censure or admonish; by implication forbid: – (straitly) charge, rebuke.

You'll notice that it's a conjunction of two words, epi and timao.

> G1909 — ἐπί — epi — ep-ee'
>
> A primary preposition properly meaning superimposition (of time, place, order, etc.), as a relation of distribution [with the genitive case], that is, over, upon, etc.; of rest (with the dative case) at, on, etc.; of direction (with the accusative case) towards, upon, etc.: – about (the times), above, after, against, among, as long as (touching), at, beside, X have charge of, (be-, [where-]) fore, in (a place, as much as, the time of, -to), (because) of, (up-) on (behalf of) over, (by, for) the space of, through (-out), (un-) to (-ward), with. In compounds it retains essentially the same import, at, upon, etc. (literally or figuratively).
>
> G5091 — τιμάω — timaō — tim-ah'-o
>
> From G5093; to prize, that is, fix a valuation upon; by implication to revere: – honour, value.

Typically, when the prefix epi- is used, it signifies the fullness of, perhaps completeness, or something that is upon or higher than. For example, gnosis and epignosis are used many times in the Scriptures to refer to knowledge, but epignosis refers to the abudance/fullness of knowledge in Christ.

> G1108 — γνῶσις — gnōsis — gno'-sis
>
> From G1097; knowing (the act), that is, (by implication) knowledge: – knowledge, science.
>
> G1922 — ἐπίγνωσις — epignōsis — ip-ig'-no-sis
>
> From G1921; recognition, that is, (by implication) full discernment, acknowledgement: – (ac-) knowledge (-ing, -ment).

I've written on the difference timao before on this blog in Fear, respect, honor, timao, (phobeo and timao) and compared and contrasted respect/reverence/fear and valuation in why I don't respect women. The Scriptures use timao in terms of valuation that is given to all humanity as creations of God.

Thus, the conjunction of epi-timao as a "rebuke" is to literally call someone to reconsider the valuation of their behavior. If their behavior is not in alignment with Christ then it is to call them out to the standard of who they are in Christ. To show them that you care about them and want to help them live in the fullness of their worth as a creation of God.

Calling other Christians out in rebuke in conflict is hard, but it’s not that we are to be mean to them but to show them that they are not their behavior and guide them back onto the path of Christ. This is useful for understanding rebuke in the context of women as I wrote in Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives.

Free will

October 11, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Recently I came across an incident I knew how to respond to, but I couldn't articulate it well in the moment. So that got me to thinking about the spiritual implications of such a matter.

In Christian nice guys are abused I discussed the nature of requests to the nice guy and how the nice guy feels and thinks like he is obligated both spiritually and lovingly obligated to help out other women or men with the tasks they desire of him.

In the discussion of love is and please, the blinders are pulled back and we know how to approach love and the nature of asking instead of demanding love.

When we examine a moment such as a woman telling you to do a task we have entered into an interaction where there is an imposed demand on another human being. Imposing a demand on another human being is inherently limiting to free will, which is basis of the fundamental nature of Christianity. The fundamental nature of Christianity is loving God and loving others and the unity that springs forth; however, there can be no unity without free will which is the decisions to walk into that unity.

Normally, I'm more than happy and willing to serve others in their needs, especially when they are having difficulty with things. However, when someone else imposes a need on me it rubs me the wrong way. Before this encounter I had, I had previously thought that even though it rubbed me the wrong way that it was only my human fallibility of not wanting to love others. However, that was incorrect.

It SHOULD rub you the wrong way. The need or burden is being imposed without consent. This is a disregard of free will, and the action you take if you agree with it is not of love but of obligation. Even if the obligation is good, it's an obligation and not love. There is nothing wrong with performing obligations because you want to, but you need to understand that they're obligations and not love.

God brought to mind Jesus' rebuke of Peter, and you can see a similar instance of what is happening here with imposing what we perceive to be "good things" on other people.

> Matthew 16:21 From that time [r]Jesus began to show His disciples that He must go to Jerusalem, and suffer many things from the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised up on the third day. 22 Peter took Him aside and began to rebuke Him, saying, "[s]God forbid it, Lord! This shall never [t]happen to You." 23 But He turned and said to Peter, "Get behind Me, Satan! You are a stumbling block to Me; for you are not setting your mind on [u]God's interests, but man's."

Peter thinks that "this isn't the way it should be" and that Jesus "should do this instead."

It's funny that when you understand this concept, it necessitates that the Christian walk must be out of desire to have a relationship with God. When you eliminate forcing others to do what is good, it MUST come from their heart to want to do good and follow God.

This is not only a problem for women to men in this day and age, but it is also a problem from men to men, women to women, and men to women.

One of the biggest things that falls into this category is the concept of duty sex either for the wife to the husband or the husband to the wife. Telling a spouse to have more sex with you is literally going to rub them the wrong way and kill their desire to actually have sex just as if an obligation was placed on you to help set something up at the church without your consent. I think in the past on this blog I've been siding more along the lines of legalism rather than desire to please God.

At the core of these concepts is that all we can really do is ask nicely and not put an obligation on others to obey the word of God. As we know, the only person we can control is ourselves, and it is out of our desire and love for God that He can use that to inspire others to change.

It's very easy to miss this important concept because personal stewardship isn't taught as much anymore, and we're taught to be selfish by society. We have our own demands and priviledges without any responsibility, and it is others' responsibility to meet those demands. Getting out of that thinking is extremely difficult, and God has shown me that even having been in the manosphere for a while I still have missed some parts of this as you have seen in this post.

Going back to the example of the obligation placed on me instead of saying no, declining, or going along with it my plan is to using it as a teaching moment on the interaction between love and free will.

God hates chivalry

October 21, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I alluded to this in my previous post on free will that God hates chivalry.

Chivalry is a societal expectation imputed upon men and women to act in a certain manner, often in a polite and exaggerated manner, in order to impress or attract the opposite sex.

What happens when there is “chivalry” in a society, there becomes an expectation of men and women to follow and act in such a code. This places a coercive force on both men and women to act in a certain way.

When such expectations are unmet, the ones with the expectations have their image of what is “supposed to be” shattered and with thus become angry about it. This is the same thing that I discussed in the free will post where women expect that men hold doors open for them, carry luggage, or other favors for free or just because they are a women. This is why men assume that women should act like ladies and when they don’t they get angry at them.

The interesting part of the concept of chivalry is that it is more of an implied social contract rather than a law. Much of this societal based thinking is imputed as Christian because they may be good things to do, but that doesn’t make them good when it’s a coercive force rather than an act of someone wanting to help out someone else. Ballista has written on this a bit, and chivalry was some random concept that came out of the 1700s or knights if I’m not mistaken.

I’m not averse to conforming to such a standard because I want to help people, but guilt tripping someone into doing what is right is not the answer either. They’ll hear from me on that.

Brief post. I’m still working on a longer one as I get more time.

Institutions and relationships

October 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is an important concept that should define your thinking in terms of both Christianity on an intitutional level and a relationship level. In addition, it applies to interactions of institutions with institutions, and institutions with individuals.

The primary core of institutional interaction is that of a transactional nature. The easiest way to conceptualize transactions is to think of business. When an institution such as a bank interacts with a store there is a contract drawn up where one provides money typically in exchange for goods and services. A similar occurrence happens with an institution and and individual such as a customer. The customer provides money and exchanges it in a transaction for goods and services.

However, God's kingdom — based on relationships — is based in a much different train of thought:

> Matthew 10:1 Jesus summoned His twelve disciples and gave them authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal every kind of disease and every kind of sickness.
>
> 2 Now the names of the twelve apostles are these: The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; and [a]James the son of Zebedee, and [b]John his brother; 3 Philip and [c]Bartholomew; Thomas and Matthew the tax collector; [d]James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddaeus; 4 Simon the [e]Zealot, and Judas Iscariot, the one who betrayed Him.
>
> 5 These twelve Jesus sent out after instructing them: "Do not [f]go [g]in the way of the Gentiles, and do not enter any city of the Samaritans; 6 but rather go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. 7 And as you go, [h]preach, saying, 'The kingdom of heaven [i]is at hand.' 8 Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons. Freely you received, freely give. 9 Do not acquire gold, or silver, or copper for your money belts, 10 or a [j]bag for your journey, or even two [k]coats, or sandals, or a staff; for the worker is worthy of his [l]support. 11 And whatever city or village you enter, inquire who is worthy in it, and stay [m]at his house until you leave that city. 12 As you enter the [n]house, give it your [o]greeting. 13 If the house is worthy, [p]give it your blessing of peace. But if it is not worthy, [q]take back your blessing of peace. 14 Whoever does not receive you, nor heed your words, as you go out of that house or that city, shake the dust off your feet. 15 Truly I say to you, it will be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city.

One of the major problems in the Church at large currently is that it thinks of itself as an institution. Part of this thinking stems that they have instititutional status as a religious organization in the US tax code. The same is true of most Christian charity organizations as well. The Church should be thinking of itself as the literal body of Christ. It is a organic, living, breathing human with Jesus at the head that is made to operate on a relationship level rather than an institutional level and thus transactional nature.

We see this transactional level of thinking in the current Churchianity. Churches are more concerned about bringing in new members to get more tithes and offerings rather than to serve and build relationships with the people in the community. Churches are more concerned about avoid conflict and not challenging their members to be more Christ-like in fear that their members will leave and their money with them.

I was recently talking to a man who left the Church about 5 years ago. He told me a story of how he had helped multiple church plants. A church in the [South] area wanted to plant a church in the [Northeast] (locations generalized). They did and he was literally on the ground floor. They used a company to provide metrics of the population in terms of where there were the least churches, average income, and the like. The church grew quickly and was able to start paying back the church that planted it. However, there was a problem. He is a numbers man and ran the numbers that they could pay everything within 12 months. He discussed this with the pastors, and the pastors said that they would be continuing to pay back for 20-24 months. Eventually he got to the bottom and they were just sending money back well past what they paid back. Instead of having a successful church plant where they could use the money to send out missionaries, community outreach, and serving the people in the local area they were extracting money from the area for the head church.

This should not be. Obviously, this man that I talked with was disillusioned with the church and slipped into more of a hedonistic lifestyle. He's one of my better friends now, and the impact that churchianity has had on him is going to be difficult to show him the love of the Father. But God is the God of the impossible, so there is hope.

However, aside from this story this is common thinking in the church now. Everything has been made transactional in nature rather than relational. I have been guilty of this myself.

One some level, it's easy for Christians to begin to think that we need to work and do good for the love of the Father rather than already knowing that He loves us even before we do anything. Jesus is loved and the Father is well-pleased with Him even before He begins His ministry.

> Mathew 3:16 After being baptized, Jesus came up immediately from the water; and behold, the heavens were opened, and [a]he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove and [b]lighting on Him, 17 and behold, a voice out of the heavens said, "This is [c]My beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased."

The same is true of all of us as children of God. This will play into the identity post I am working on next.

I do not believe that institutional and transactional thinking is wrong on any level. In business, you must be able to think in terms of transactions and contracts. This is true in any sense of the term, especially if the church is going to interact with society and the government on the level of social programs. Government run social programs devolve into a toxic wasteland of inefficiency and greed. The church does a much better job of running programs that actually benefit individuals in a society such as many of the Catholic initiatives. The Church must be able to interact with the government and charities on a transactional level, but the care they provide must be on an individual relationship level.

It is through the experience of relationships that men and women are broken. Maybe you came up from a divorced home. Maybe there was alcohol or substance abuse in your family and it spilled over to you. Maybe your parents treated you horribly. Maybe you were fatherless and Fatherless.

And it is through the experience of relationships that men and women come to know the Love of Christ and are able to be changed by the work of the Father in their lives. Though the relationships of broken people interacting with those who have the Holy Spirit working in them.

One of the most important concepts to learn on any level of business is that you need to know your target population and how best to serve it. The Church is failing at this because they don't understand that we should not be seeking transactions but rather relationships.

If I were to relate this to the manosphere there are obvious concepts that apply to this:

- Husbands in marriage knowing that sex is due them. It is true, but when it comes off in a transactional nature it tends to be a recipe for failure. Rollo's ubiquitous quote applies "desire cannot be negotiated."
- Wives in marriage thinking that if they do X their husbands will do Y and they will be happy again. Being submissive is not merely an action; it must be coupled with the attitude of respect. Without respect you can be submissive and have the worst attitude. You are doing the right thing, but your heart is not in it and it won't reinforce positive behavioral change.
- Single men beliving that they have to become "alpha" in order to attract a wife. There is the law of reciprocality in that you want to become the ideal spouse of your ideal spouse, but employing your thoughts and actions in a transactional nature will come off as neediness. Crazy, no?

There's more examples, but to truly understand relationships you need to understand them as the Father and Jesus exemplify them. They give without expectation of receiving back because it is this love which attracts us to Him. There will be those who abuse this, and you have to set boundaries for that. However, in the same vein as the Father's unwavering, unyielding love for us we must apply to others.

There is a truism that often goes unnoticed in the manosphere. It is not what we do which is considered attractive, but it is how we do it. The same is exemplified by the Father's passion for us, and it must be reflected in our desire, attitude, passion, and heart for others.

Headship is not authority in marriage

October 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ballista recently commented on some of my posts in regard to what I have written on headship, authority, and the like in terms of treatment of rebellious wives.

My defense is Jesus and the Church is Husbands and Wives. There is a difference between headship (kephale) and authority (exousia).

The command of the husband to love is exemplified in what the Scriptures are used for, since in marriage the husband and wive become one exemplifying the Jesus and the Church, and since they are also part of the bride of Christ they are also to be conformed in the likeness of Jesus. Thus, Jesus and the Church are one. All Scripture is God breathed and is useful such actions as how Jesus instructs His disciples:

> 1. Teaches — His disciples asked Him the meaning of parables (Mark 7; Luke 8, 18; Matthew 13).
>
> 2. Reproofs/rebukes — Rebukes Peter ("get behind me Satan" Matt 16; Mark 8), Disciples hinder the little children and Jesus rebukes ("Let the little children come to me" Matt 19; Mark 10; Luke 18), James and John for wanting to call down fire on the Samaritans ("You do not know what kind of spirit you are of, for the Son of Man did not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Luke 9).
>
> 3. Corrects — Jesus chastises His disciples for their lack of faith. Jesus calms the storm (Matt 8), walks on water (Matt 14), unbelief (Matt 17), lack of understanding discipleship (John 4, 6)
>
> 4. Trains — Jesus instructs them on discipleship and sends out the 70 (Luke 10).

I am not saying, in any of my linked posts on Ballista's blog or mine, that "love" is to cater to the wife or only "good." I know the difference. Although I can see how it can be read as such. I think it's a general mischaracterization of my posts.

However, based on the Greek word study I did it seems that the headship-submission model puts both husbands and wives in a position where they must fully trust in the Lord and not rely on "authority" or "consequences" or the "state" in order to win their spouses to Christ even if they say they are Christian but don't act like it.

Just as we don't see "abuse" (of any sort) as a legitimate reason for divorce for wives, we also don't see the ability to impose direct consequences on wives as the husbands as the headship model does not confer such authority. The OT Scriptures patriarchy did based on dominion, but the NT model does not. Paul would have explicitly mentioned "exousia" instead of "kephale" in terms of husbands and wives if he did mean that. Thus, what happened was:

1. Prior to the fall, the relationship between the husband and wife (Adam and Eve) is that of headship-submission

2. After the fall, the Eve was cursed to be under the dominion of her husband hence the so-called feminist “Patriarchy relationship” where the husband rules over everything in the house. This is the authority-submission model.
3. Jesus fulfills the law through his death and resurrection such that we are not bound by the law but called to the law of liberty in Christ. That is the restoration of headship-submission as shown in 1 Corinthians 11 and Ephesians 5.

The Father isn’t interested in compelling those who are adult — husbands and wives — to obey as one might a child. He is interested in those who are under such circumstances to love as he would (which means teaching, correcting, rebuking and training as husbands) and winning husbands without a word (1 peter 3) as wives. I disagree with most of the red pill mantra coming out of the secular manosphere that has bled over to the Christian manosphere to treat women like children as a means to an end here. The goal is to be a disciple of Jesus and disciple her to be a disciple of Jesus so she can make correct choices of her own free will.

The New Covenant restoration analysis

I get the sense from the Christian manosphere that it should not be this way. However, if you think about it logically, then it is considered freedom for the husbands to be in a headship-submission relationship rather than an authority-submisison relationship.

For example, the husband is not bound by the actions and thus consequences of the rebellion of his wife. In the OT, the husband is responsible for the actions of both his children and wife and has to bear the consequences when they act out. But with the restoration of headship-submission if the wife gets herself into consequences of her own choosing the husband does not have to bear the burden of such responsibility. This is how it is supposed to be from the beginning.

Each spouse has free will to act and bear the burden of their own consequences: Eve is cursed for choosing to eat the fruit, and Adam is likewise cursed for listening to his wife and choosing to eat the fruit.

This is one the critical errors I have made in the past with analysis of husbands and wives, and I have been finally able to discern this. You can’t have it both ways.

Essentially, if you place authority (“exousia”) upon the husband in accordance with the old covenant (“the law”) then you will be living under the law and not under the new covenant (“grace through Jesus”). If this authority is true, then the husband must bear the consequences of the wife’s actions in accordance with the old law. More authority delegates more responsibilty.

Because headship does not have the burden of authority to directly punish, this also logically follows that the husband is therefore not responsible for the wife’s actions. A wife cannot both be responsible for her own actions, and also simultaneously be under the authority — as opposed to headship — of her husband. This is a conflict of God ordained free will, and thus is therefore null and void.

What Jesus has done through his sacrifice is set us free from the law. This has set us free from being judged by the law and allowed us to come under grace. There was nothing we could do before that pleased God; however, through the sacrifice we come under the law of liberty which allows us free will again. We can choose to sin, or we can choose to partner with the Holy Spirit to do what is good. We are not conformed to the old covenant, but instead act under the new covenant. With this comes the responsibility of both the husband and the wife to act in accordance with grace in the marriage. They are responsible for their own actions.

This is not to say that the husband has no influence over the wife — he is still tasked with headship and thus responsibility of the home and possessions. If the wife abuses or goes against that then he can do with them as he sees fit in order to manage the household correctly.

Either way, lack of authority or not, under the law of this current government the husband can be called out for “abuse” on this. However, this is inconsequential as the husband can already be divorced out of nowhere anyway. It’s quite a trifling matter the reason of divorce. The bigger problem is that anyone who is choosing divorce as an option and making an excuse for it is not acting in a way that pleases God. You can’t make others please God.

You can only control your own actions. Yes, sometimes the consequences of other actions bleed over to us. Yes, this is injustice and God sees it and judgment is His. No, that does not change the specific roles and responsibilities in marriage.

I fully suspect that we may have to have another debate with many comments over this. This is a subtle paradigm shift that has far reaching consequences on how those of us in the Christian manosphere understand Biblical marriage.

Also, I may not be able to reply for a while as I’m working on the post on identity, and I will be away for the next week or two.

Headship is not authority in marriage Part 2

October 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ballista has posted a reply to my previous Headship in marriage is not authority. I'm going to comment as fast as I can because I don't have that much time.

Let me start by saying this. We are talking past each other somewhat. Ballista is assuming that the husband has authority in marriage. If there is authority in marriage, then he is absolutely correct and I am wrong. However, the issue that is amassing contention is that he is analyzing the headship of the NT with the lens of authority being the same as headship. These two frameworks are different, and they lead to completely different consequences.

They are incompatible. You have to examine them as two separate fraweworks. Most of this post will be on distinguishing between the two framworks, with reasoning on why headship is not exactly authority as stated from the Scriptures.

> Deep Strength espouses the typical religious feminist model of marriage, and only furthers it in his current post. If such a distinction is to be taken as he describes, then the natural next step from women is "I don't have to submit to that evil evil man!". There's no force stopping her either, as the Church has recognized the right of woman to be in rebellion to God, using rationales much like Deep Strength's. No chastening can come from either the husband or the Church, in other words. I've dealt with several feminists that have used the exact arguments in his post, that the requirement to submit is an artifact of The Fall and is negated with Christ, to completely negate Ephesians 5 and other Scriptures that define marriage. DS puts himself on very dangerous ground, as well, to indicate the dynamic of marriage has changed in any way from the days of Adam and Eve, especially since the dynamic has not changed by God's directive (it has changed by man's doctrine). Deep Strength goes on to write:
>
> "However, based on the Greek word study I did it seems that the headship-submission model puts both husbands and wives in a position where they must fully trust in the Lord and not rely on "authority" or "consequences" or the "state" in order to win their spouses to Christ even if they say they are Christian but don't act like it."

This analysis is an incorrect summation of my post.

The Scriptures explicitly state that wives should submit to their husbands as unto the Lord. If a woman is abusing her free will by saying that "[she doesn't] have to submit to that evil evil man!" then she is directly disobeying the Lord and her husband. She will be held accoutable on the day of judgment for that.

The incorrect analysis stems from the fact that I am discussing the only responsibilities of the husband and it is being directly applying it to the actions of the wife. While the responsibilities of the husband are interdependent on the responses of the wife as humans — male and female, husbands and wives — we only have control over our own actions.

Likewise, the fact that feminists and christo-feminists are wrong has no bearing on the fact that God commands me to love them even though they are my enemies.

> The point of issue when it comes to authority is the man over himself and his possessions. This was my primary concern in that post, not that the husband was the one to "call the shots". The feminist model has removed these things, as Deep Strength's first post illustrates. All these are hers without question. This is "fully trusting in the Lord" as Deep Strength puts it. The husband has no authority over himself, much less the marriage as head.

This is not what I have said at all. In my previous post I explicitly stated that husbands still retain authority and thus responsibility over their possessions and children.

> This is the whole issue with respect to marriage – such arguments invert the marriage relationship, rendering the wife as head and the husband as the one who submits. But this leads to the real problem that Deep Strength has with his theology:
>
> "Just as we don't see "abuse" (of any sort) as a legitimate reason for divorce for wives, we also don't see the ability to impose direct consequences on wives as the husbands as the headship model does not confer such authority.
>
> The Father isn't interested in compelling those who are adult — husbands and wives — to obey as one might a child."
>
> This literally constitutes a direct denial of the Scriptures that I posted previously about chastening. The Greek word used in Hebrews 12:5-8 is paideuo (G3811), which indicates this same chastening as a child receives from a parent (a derivative of the word occurs in Ephesians 6:4, paideia (G3809). It also occurs in 2 Timothy 3:16 in relationship to the Scriptures. The function of chastening is a very real New Testament function – after all, why would God be referred to as the Father if He is to not function as such?

This is a misapplication of G3811 paideuo.

Paideuo is only used in the context of a parent-child relationship which is an authority-obedience relationship and not of the husband-wife which is a headship-submission relationship.

However, as I stated in my previous post, what a headship relationship is called to is what Jesus does with His disciples. Likewise, husbands are called to correct and rebuke their wives if they go astray. This serves the same purpose as chastisement, except that chastisement carries with it the weight of the rod while headship does not.

- Authority = rebuke, correction, and chastisement = direct on the right path AND ability to directly punish

- Headship = rebuke and correction = direct on the right path AND inability to directly punish

As husbands retain authority and responsibility for the household and its possessions he can limit the use of those as an negative incentive in the case of a disobedient wife. However, the difference in authority and headship lies in the fact he cannot directly punish her such as with the rod or by telling her to obey him or face punishment.

> "He is interested in those who are under such circumstances to love as he would (which means teaching, correcting, rebuking and training as husbands) and winning husbands without a word (1 peter 3) as wives."
>
> DS recognizes these things, but then doesn't recognize the authority of husbands to do these things as head. If Jesus and the Church is Husbands and Wives, then surely the husband has the right to give and take away from his wife and children, as much as God has the right to do so with His children. This was the whole issue of the last post. Does the husband have the right to chasten his wife the same as the Lord God has the right to chasten His children? God's the same yesterday today and tomorrow right? Deep Strength says no. Perhaps he doesn't recognize the issue at hand for husbands. Walk a mile in one's shoes, right?:

Again, this is a misapplication of what authority means versus headship.

Consider the examples that Jesus has shown as the head of His disciples in John 6 when He talks about Himself as the bread of life. They would have thought as "cannablism":

60 Therefore many of His disciples, when they heard this said, "This is a difficult statement; who can listen to it?" 61 But Jesus, conscious that His disciples grumbled at this, said to them, "Does this cause you to stumble? 62 What then if you see the Son of Man ascending to where He was before? 63 It is the Spirit who gives life; the flesh profits nothing; the words that I have spoken to you are spirit and are life. 64 But there are some of you who do not believe." For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were who did not believe, and who it was that would [j]betray Him. 65 And He was saying, "For this reason I have said to you, that no one can come to Me unless it has been granted him from the Father." Peter's Confession of Faith 66 As a result of this many of His disciples withdrew and were not walking with Him anymore. 67 So Jesus said to the twelve, "You do not want to go away also, do you?" 68 Simon Peter answered Him, "Lord, to whom shall we go? You have words of eternal life. 69 We have believed and have come to know that You are the Holy One of God." 70 Jesus answered them, "Did I Myself not choose you, the twelve, and yet one of you is a devil?" 71 Now He meant Judas the son of Simon Iscariot, for he, one of the twelve, [k]was going to betray Him.

Certainly, both the Father and Jesus have the authority to compel those under Them to chastise and obey like children. However, that is not how they work with us as believers. He gives us free will whether to choose to obey him or not. We have to actively submit to Him just as Jesus did with the Father, and just as the Church does with Christ.

> "For example, the husband is not bound by the actions and thus consequences of > the rebellion of his wife. In the OT, the husband is responsible for the actions of both his children and wife and has to bear the consequences when they act out. But with the restoration of headship-submission if the wife gets herself into consequences of her own choosing the husband does not have to bear the burden of such responsibility. This is how it is supposed to be from the beginning."

>
> Being bound as tightly to another person as one flesh, the husband can not help but be bound to the actions and consequences of the rebellion of his wife. This was the whole issue with dvdivx, and the issue that requires a good husband to take action in authority over himself and his wife as head of the marriage. The money issue I mentioned in the last post is another. If he doesn't have the right to act in response to the wife as the head of the marriage, then he is just sunk along with her.
>
> Ultimately this is the true difference between headship and simple authority – simply the state of the union between the members involved. If there was ever a thing called authority in marriage, it has always existed in God's plan.
>
> Furthermore, DS has a very skewed view of how marriage and family life works. As a child, my parents were very bound by the consequences of my actions. If I went around throwing rocks through windows as a young boy, they were the ones that had to pay for the repairs. Of course, my parents were free to then chastise me as they saw fit, but I wouldn't have been the one that would have had to answer to the others (and the cops) for the vandalism.

Ballista is correct in that the issue here is completely exposed. First, we must understand the relationships via 1 Corinthians 11 and Ephesians 5:

- Headship — God-Jesus, Jesus-Church, and husband-wives
- Submission — Jesus-God, Church-Jesus, and wives-husbands

God and Jesus show us the perfect dynamic of the divine-divine relationship of headship and submission. They are ultimately working as one.

The Jesus/Christ-Church relationship shows us the dynamic of the divine-earthly relationship of headship and submission. It is readily apparent that Jesus does not use authority to chastise the church and compel it to obey like the paideuo relationship above.

Rather, it is the kephale headship relationship. However, in this headship relationship the Father and Jesus do rebuke the Church for its errors in accorandance with the Scriptures' teaching to rebuke and correct those in error. This is performed through Scriptures, prayer, mediititation, fasting, and other Christian believers. This is what a Christian husband SHOULD be doing when his wife is off track, which I believe we both agree on.

> Before the feminist reforms, marriage used to work in this same way for 1900 years after Christ. One of the more interesting discussions in Men On Strike was the idea of coverture. This idea presupposed that the wife acts under the husband's direction under the law, meaning he had both authority and responsibility over her assets – if any decision was made in the family, he was to make it or approve of it. This is because the marriage unit was considered one person under the law with the husband as head, fitting Biblical teaching. Interestingly, wives hold coverture rights over husbands now, partly because of the erosion of authority illustrated in these posts.
>
> Historically, husbands have been very responsible for their wives. Even to the present day, this could be argued. While "separate responsibility" is a laudable idea, it is just not workable in the idea of marriage. She will act, and he will feel the consequences of those actions, regardless of who is "responsible" for them or not. Marriage is "one flesh" after all – in such a situation, responsibility becomes irrelevant. If one is to judge in terms of "responsibility", as was stated in the comments, then justice is required. Ideally and practically, the husband functions as first agent to accomplish such justice since he is the head of the marriage, and then the Church. Yet Deep Strength would leave husbands crying out for justice, and the sin would fall on their heads because all the Lord would say to them is "go take care of it, you're the head of the marriage." But under DS's ideology, they can't.
>
> Ultimately, the message that seems to come out of this is how corrupt things have gotten in marriage, simply because of the skewed idea of what headship entails. The authority (or rights, if you want to use another word) indicated by the headship has been completely eroded, while the historical responsibility indicated by it remains. The calls of the religious feminists to men to "man up and lead their families" ring hollow simply because they do not have the authority behind it. In the end, the wives are the ones doing the leading. This is the whole goal behind the erosion of husbandly authority. All that results is the inversion of marriage roles, creating an abomination to God.

I would disagree that the law ever aligned with what the Scriptures say on headship. If you make the assumption that headship is authority — they are slightly different — then that is the case. However, headship has never been exactly what authority was otherwise Paul would've used exousia instead of kephale.

One thing I want to make mention of here is the bolded.

Ballista is assuming that husbands have authority over their wives in marriage. If they had authority over their wives in marriage what he says is indeed correct and I would be wrong. It logically follows that if the husband has authority over his wife in marriage then he does have the ability to chastise her like a child and impute direct punishment. However, this is not what the Scriptures say as I have already pointed out.

This is what the Scriptures say about being married to unbelievers, which is essentially the same as being married to a Christian who says they are a believer but doesn't follow the Scriptures:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 But to the married I give instructions, not I, but the Lord, that the wife should not [d]leave her husband 11 (but if she does leave, she must remain unmarried, or else be reconciled to her husband), and that the husband should not [e]divorce his wife.
>
> 12 But to the rest I say, not the Lord, that if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she consents to live with him, he must not [f]divorce her. 13 And a woman who has an unbelieving husband, and he consents to live with her, she must not [g]send her husband away. 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through [h]her believing husband; for otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 15 Yet if the unbelieving one leaves, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called [i]us [j]to peace. 16 For how do you know, O wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, O husband, whether you will save your wife?

The headship-submission relationship between the husband and wife makes it so that the wife is able to choose to submit or not of her own free will. If the husband has authority then he can force his wife to submit and obey to him with the rod and other such chastisements. He would also be responsible for her actions. This is not the case. If she choose to leave, the believer is not in bondage anymore.

The difficult part to accept is that others' free will may hang consequences over our heads. The important part to understand is that those consequences are not always ours to clean up. If you take responsibility for them then you are teaching the other person that they can be irresponsible and someone will clean up their mess.

It is good stewardship for a husband to limit credit and lockdown money in the case of a spending wife because he is tasked with stewardship of the household and thus money. However, it is not his job to explicitly clean up any of the consequences of behavior such as debt that the wife made of her own free will; she should answer those consequences. The law may not say this, but that is what free will is in the Scriptures, and we already know that the law does not necessarily align with the Scriptures.

As Donal eloquently sums up in the comments of the first post:

> This approach squares with my understanding of Sacred Tradition. I've linked to Chrysostom's interpretation of the relationship between husband and wife before on your blog, and it basically states the same thing. If either party in a marriage fails to uphold their end of the bargain, that is on them. The virtuous spouse must maintain their own duties as best as they are able until the recalcitrant spouse mends his or her ways. [ed: or leaves like 1 Cor 7]

Conclusion

Under the authority model of headship:

- Husbands have headship (and thus authority) over their wives. They can chasten and punish them like they would children.
- The husband is also responsible for the actions of the wife in this scenario, as she is under his authority.

From what I have read of the Scriptures this is false. I think the confusion lies in that as I already stated the sin consequences of the fall morphed it from a pre-fall headship-submission to post-fall authority-submission to a post-Christ headship-submission relationship.

Additionally, the secular red pill manosphere advocates treating wives as they would children. It does work, but that is not the way it should be in mature relationships.

- Husbands have headship (not authority) over their wives. They should rebuke and correct them as necessary if they are off track of the Scriptures. They have stewardship over the household and its possessions and ability to use and limit them as necessary. However, they cannot directly punish a wife with the rod or compel obedience.
- The husband is responsible for ONLY for his own actions, and the wife is responsible for her actions. However, one of the most difficult parts to understand is that actions of one spouse may have consequences over the family. This does not absolve you from what the Scriptures command each spouse though.

Doing in the right thing, in hard circumstances, is never easy.

Headship is not authority in marriage Part 3

October 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

And so we continue with this discussion headship and authority.

> One reason I've continued these posts, and made the original response, is that it is truly a formative issue. As I discussed before, if a woman is to submit, she needs something worthy to submit to. In other words, she needs a man that carries himself with authority and holds authority well. When a man doesn't, you end up witha supplicating beta. Instead of holding authority in his life, he begs to others and holds back in the name of being nice. Instead of holding authority, he begs and bargains with his wife to not rebel against Him.

This has to do with the discussion as unbelieving husbands — "beta" or otherwise — don't negate the commands put forth in Scripture to wives. Wives are commanded by Scripture to be their husband's helpmeets as well as respect and submit to them.

> This is only furthered by such things as Deep Strength has been writing:
>
> "They are incompatible. You have to examine them as two separate fraweworks. Most of this post will be on distinguishing between the two framworks, with reasoning on why headship is not exactly authority as stated from the Scriptures."
>
> To cut to the chase, the issue with his posts is the creation of a separate model out of whole cloth (authority-submission), which is not consistent either with the meanings or usages of the word. In the process of complicating matters and giving women free license to rebellion, he confuses the issue of status with action. He would do well to see how words are used in the Scriptures, instead of staying in the Greek concordances. This is further illustrated here:
>
> "Paideuo is only used in the context of a parent-child relationship which is an authority-obedience relationship and not of the husband-wife which is a headship-submission relationship."
>
> Note that I plainly stated that the word is used in application to the Scriptures as well. This decouples the use of the word from any relationship that is specified.

The problem here is incorrect conference of the that which is God's with that which is the husband's.

It is specifically Scripture that is used for teaching, rebuking, correction, and training (Paideuo). It is the Scripture that is God-breathed, and it is God the Father who disciplines His children as parents can disciple their children.

The husband, as the head, has the role and responsibility to point out where the wife is in violation of the Scripture, thus fulfilling the Jesus' headship role of the Church as a husband to the wife. But he doesn't have a paideuo relationship with his wife.

> Now I will explain the error in play. Headship reflects one kind of status. “Boss” represents another. Generically, we can call that a “leader”. As I posted here, the word “head” is best understood as master, ruler, chief. Barnes goes on (1 Corinthians 11:3) to say that Christ is the ruler, director, or Lord of the Christian man. The verse then extends things to the man and the woman, which makes it legitimate to also say that the husband is the ruler, director, or Lord of the Christian wife.
>
> This is consistent with the dictionary as well:
>
> > noun 1. the position of head or chief; chief authority; leadership; supremacy.

> So headship is a noun (a person). Authority is quite different though in nature:
>
> 1 the power to determine, adjudicate, or otherwise settle issues or disputes; jurisdiction; the right to control, command, or determine.
> 2. a power or right delegated or given; authorization: Who has the authority to grant permission?
>
> So a head, ruler, or leader possesses authority – a person is never simply “an authority” in the hierarchy of things. Simply seeing how the word is used brings this to light. Scripture is clear that Christ, as head, has authority over His Church. He then delegates that authority to husbands in Christian marriage. The “head” is a status, “authority” is something to be exercised as part of the privilege of being “head”.
>
> Authority is best thought of as an authorization from a leader or head to do something.
>
> Christ is head over all things to the church. If Jesus and the Church is husbands and wives, then husbands are head over all things to their wives. This comes with a commensurate authority

I agree that authority can be delegated as I have quite a few posts on this, but the Greek gives no indication that kephale is exousia. If Paul meant that husbands would have authority over their wives in the exousia sense then he would have used that word. This is a stretch.

More specifically, if Jesus refuses to submit to the Father’s plan for Him to die on the cross in the garden would the Father have compelled Jesus to obedience? No, because otherwise Jesus would not have been a willing sacrifice to endure the cross for the joy (us) set before Him.

Likewise, does Jesus as the bridegroom compel the Church to obey Him? As I have already pointed out in the first post headship is not authority in marriage, Jesus allows those who did not want to be his disciples anymore to walk away. He’s not going to compel or punish anyone who doesn’t want to be with Him to continue to follow Him.

These examples show that headship/kephale is different than authority/exousia when you compare them to the husband-wife relationship.

> Finally, the Scripture that applies directly to the issue:
>
> Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. (1 Timothy 2:11-12)
>
> Most of the other Bible versions translate this section very similarly. A woman shall not usurp authority, exercise authority, or exercise dominion over the man. If authority is not a factor in Christian marriage, then this Scripture becomes nonsensical. If a woman can usurp authority, then that must mean that the man/husband possesses it as a component of the DS's correct headship-submission model.

I would agree if this was used in terms of husbands and wives. However, this is used in congregational setting where apparently women were attempting to teach and taken authority over men. That is specifically what Paul is writing about.

Also, authenteo is only used once in Scriptures, and it is not exousia either:

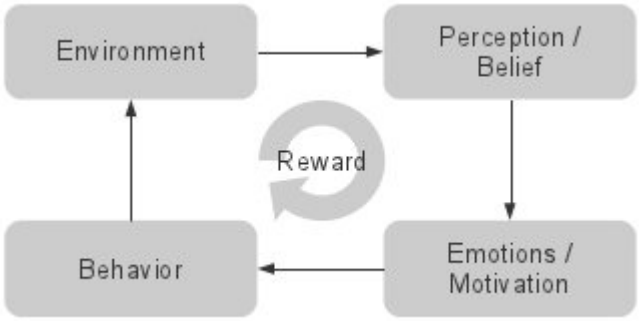
G831 — αὐθεντέω — authenteō — ow-then-teh'-o

From a compound of G846 and ἕντης hentēs (obsolete; a worker); to act of oneself, that is, (figuratively) dominate: – usurp authority over.

> Simply put, as the Centurion illustrates, and described here, submission can not exist in and of itself and must be performed to those in authority. DS's separate model encourages authority to not be exercised and therefore eroded. This only results in an inversion of the marriage roles. If a husband does not hold authority over his wife, his wife will hold authority over him. Genesis 3:16 guarantees this.

This is a mischaracterization of my position.

I've encouraged that headship be exercised which includes rebuking and correcting wives (in love, kindness, and humility as necessary). Additionally, for instance if a wife is out of control with spending the husband should be a good steward of that which is in his household and money and shut it down.



> There is one other major error that has existed throughout all of Deep Strength's post: Everyone has free will. We are never forced into obedience in any capacity, ever. Not in the Old Covenant, not in the New Covenant. We can refuse to obey God, the government, His word. Wives can refuse to obey husbands. Husbands can refuse to obey Christ. Everyone has free will. However, those in authority (God, bosses, husbands) can (and ultimately must to keep their authority) respond to disobedience with certain measures. The presence of this authority explains my observation of how wives submit to their bosses more faithfully than their own husbands, as well as the erosion of the fitness of marriage for the average man today.

> Why are there so many supplicating betas in the churches? This is why. Men are taught from a very young age that they are not “loving” if they exercise any authority, are never supported as heads of their families, and then actively cut down in that capacity. Since authority has been decoupled from Christian marriage, as well as the Church, all a husband is reduced to is begging and pleading and hoping that his wife will lead the family in the way that is right before God, submitting to her all the while.

This is also a mischaracterization of my position.

Everyone has free will and may choose to disobey (at their own peril), but as it states in the Scriptures they should be submitting to proper headship and authorities.

I’ve stated all along that headship has all of the weight of authority in regard to the husband-wife relationship except the ability to directly compel to obey especially through direct punish. That’s the only difference between headship and authority. It’s this way because Jesus works out of love and not fear.

The love of Jesus works through environment/experience when we love other people. When we change the environment/experience of someone, we show others the love of God (John 17) and it leads to different thoughts, emotions, and behaviors.

The problem with a fear-based model is that it strikes at the heart of behavior instead of experience. Only those with sufficient humility and/or strong core Christian values will be able to see their behavior and correct it when rebuked. Most so-called Christian would rather never admit they’re wrong and disobey God.

This is why judgment of behavior (albeit often in an unkind manner) only serves to force others to double down on their folly. This is why 1 Peter 3 is extremely wise in advice to wives with unbeliving husbands essentially saying to win your husbands without a word. This love through their behavior changes the environment. It is the environment which is affected in their husband’s life which starts to change his perception/beliefs and emotions/motivations and may bring them to the saving knowledge of Jesus.

Ending

This will be my last post on this. If ballista has any else I probably won’t reply as I want to get to other posts, especially talking about identity and behavior cycles like the above.

I figure that most men reading the manosphere blogs may need a hard line approach to marriage which means that Ballista’s point about nice guys is correct. I wouldn’t say there’s anything wrong with taking a more authoritative husband role to marriage. Going through this post again, I can see that the Scriptures are quite vague on exousia versus kephale. Thus, I can see how both interpretations may be true to the measure of faith that you have (see Romans 14 and 1 Corinthians 8 on food sacrificed to idols).

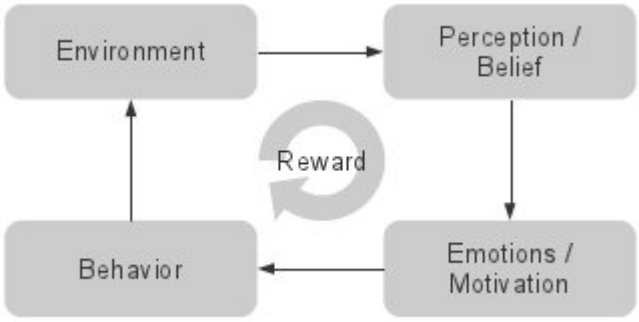
In any case, we can keep quibbling on the details, but at the end of the day Donal's summation of Chrysostom's interpretation is what I agree with as an end result:

> This approach squares with my understanding of Sacred Tradition. I've linked to Chrysostom's interpretation of the relationship between husband and wife before on your blog, and it basically states the same thing. If either party in a marriage fails to uphold their end of the bargain, that is on them. The virtuous spouse must maintain their own duties as best as they are able until the recalcitrant spouse mends his or her ways.

As I stated in the sexual marketplace and the marriage marketplace, there are elements of reciprocity in terms of personalities. If you're looking for an authoritative headship-submission relationship you will most likely find what you are looking for.



Personally, I'm pursuing marriage in the vein of headship-submission like in the Chrysostom's interpretation. As I've grown in my relationship with Jesus I don't see the hardline authority in headship anymore.

Take it or leave it. Feel free to mention why in the comments.

Behavioral cycles and identity

October 28, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I briefly mentioned behavioral cycles in my previous post. I want to expand on that.

Behavioral cycles are basically self reinforcing patterns that imprint either good or bad into us. For example, a cycle of depression might look like this:

- Environment: You are alone in your room
- Perception: I'm alone all the time
- Emotions: Nobody wants to be with me or nobody wants me
- Behavior: Stay in your room alone more
- Environment: You are alone in your room

As you can see, the reward for each of the various stages of a behavioral cycle is basically reinforcing the pattern that you're alone by yourself, then you're alone all the time, then nobody wants to be with you, which makes you feel like you need to be alone more, etc. Such a cycle leads to constant inforcement of behavior such that a depression may excessively worsen over time and may lead to thing such as suicide.

With that in mind, here's the excerpt from the previous post that I mentioned.

> The love of Jesus works through environment/experience when we love other people. When we change the environment/experience of someone, we show others the love of God (John 17) and it leads to different thoughts, emotions, and behaviors.
>
> The problem with a fear-based model is that it strikes at the heart of behavior instead of experience. Only those with sufficient humility and/or strong core Christian values will be able to see their behavior and correct it when rebuked. Most so-called Christian would rather never admit they're wrong and disobey God.
>
> This is why judgment of behavior (albeit often in an unkind manner) only serves to force others to double down on their folly. This is why 1 Peter 3 is extremely wise in advice to wives with unbeliving husbands essentially saying to win your husbands without a word. This love through their behavior changes the environment. It is the environment which is affected in their husband's life which starts to change his perception/beliefs and emotions/motivations and may bring > them to the saving knowledge of Jesus.

It is important to realize that the primary way to bring about effective change in people is through environment/experience. Criticizing someone's behavior, beliefs, or feelings is unlikely to make them even want to change. This Scriptures speak to this fairly thoroughly, and this is why Christians are called to love one another and love their enemies.

It is primarily through your behavior, which changes the environment, that the love of the Father can be shown to those around you which He works through to induce changes.Ideally, as Christians we walk in enough love, kindness, and humility, that when we admonish or rebuke other Christians we can confront each other about our sins and that we need to repent. This is the ideal because the repentence is instant.However, for those that fail to pull down their own pride, it is only our behavior that will be able to show the love of the Father to others.

Looking at the bigger picture

Now, whether we all realize it or not we are constantly imprinted by behavioral environments on us from the time we were born all the way up until this moment.

Forasmuch as the old kids rhyme speaks that words never hurt us — sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me — it is completely false. As it says in James 3 the tongue is a deadly fire and a world of iniquity.

> James 3:1 Let not many of you become teachers, my brethren, knowing that as such we will incur a [a]stricter judgment. 2 For we all stumble in many ways. If anyone does not stumble in [b]what he says, he is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body as well. 3 Now if we put the bits into the horses' mouths so that they will obey us, we direct their entire body as well. 4 Look at the ships also, though they are so great and are driven by strong winds, are still directed by a very small rudder wherever the inclination of the pilot desires. 5 So also the tongue is a small part of the body, and yet it boasts of great things.
>
> See how great a forest is set aflame by such a small fire! 6 And the tongue is a fire, the very world of iniquity; the tongue is set among our members as that which defiles the entire body, and sets on fire the course of our [c]life, and is set on fire by [d]hell. 7 For every [e]species of beasts and birds, of reptiles and creatures of the sea, is tamed and has been tamed by the human [f]race. 8 But no one can tame the tongue; it is a restless evil and full of deadly poison. 9 With it we bless our Lord and Father, and with it we curse men, who have been made in the likeness of God; 10 from the same mouth come both blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not to be this way. 11 Does a fountain send out from the same opening both [g]fresh and bitter water? 12 Can a fig tree, my brethren, produce olives, or a vine produce figs? Nor can salt water produce [h]fresh.

I'm sure most of us can recall moments where we were bullied, called various names, insulted, revile, and the like. Maybe it was done to us by our parents, our siblings, or friends, and our relatives. Likewise, specifically for men it can be said that feminism in society, churchianity, and even our families is ubiquitous. Thus, men are constantly being torn down, called worthless, been told to do this and that, and been punching bags for whoever.

The constantly reinforcing environment eventually takes its toll and leads to beat down, down trodden men who are essentially worthless because that is what they believe:

- Environment: tells men they are good for nothing.
- Perception: men think they are good for nothing.
- Emotions: 'why should I even try I'm not good for anything.'
- Behavior: only gives half effort or no effort in school, church, or other activities.
- Environment: tells men they are good for nothing.

Such things start as small insults and jabs but are eventually self fulfilling prophecies as it is ingrained in their psyche. If society keeps proclaiming dads are deadbeats, then you will eventually get the majority of dads as deadbeats. The expectation is set. Humans tend to conform to them.

Identity background

If I were to pull out a root cause for the majority of what is wrong with society I would say it is fatherlessness. Wintery Knight has documented this (one, two, three, etc.) on many different occasions so I need not bring up any quotes. It would not be an exaggeration to say that a lack of identity in a child's life gives rise to a whole host of dysfunction — poverty, drug and alcohol abuse, emotional and physical health, educational achievement, crime, sexual activity, teenage pregnancy, and the like.

J4G and FBNF also covered this recently.

The cause of this is multifaceted, but it has to do in large part to feminize and governmental involvement. Feminism brought about a societal wide shift in how sex and families are viewed, and the government disincentived marriage through no fault divorce. The courts simultaneously implemented incentives for divorce often drastically in the terms of division of assets and child support, and laws on poverty made entitlement programs able to support single motherhood.

In a culture such as ours, even those with fathers are affected. Since there are multple lines of dysfunction involved throughout society, it makes it more likely that all fathers are affected rather negatively or don't want to be involved with their children as much in terms of working. My father was fairly emotionally distant and didn't do that much in terms of teaching me about women. The church didnt want to talk about sex because it's an uncomfortable topic, so men are left to fend for themselves.

On a large scale level, because of fatherlessness, absentee fathers, or distant/overbearing fathers all of us as children are affected by it. We seek to drown the needs that we have as children learning about the world by filling it up with things of the world. It's no wonder outcomes such as poverty, drug and alcohol abuse, emotional and physical health, educational achievement, crime, sexual activity, teenage pregnancy, and the like increase when there is a lack of fatherlessness.

Identity with the Father

So why am I talking about identity? The concept I explored in the gospels is what is the primary way in how Jesus, the son of God, talks about God?

The primary way Jesus talks about God is that He is our Father. He could have talked about God in any other way… love, goodness, righteousness, justice, mercy, grace, humility, joy, peace, patience/endurance, self control, or any other of the ways that God is described. However, He chose Fatherhood as the primary attribute. Romans 6, 7 and the culmination in 8 addresses the Father's adoption of Christians through Jesus' blood as children of God.

From what I've explored over the past year within myself I think it's the foundation that has been unaddressed in the Christian manosphere. I'm speaking this even as a long time Christian who hadn't addressed such issues of childhood with the care that is needed in terms of connecting in such a way with God.

I've talked about the house analogy before:

- Outside of the house is what appears to others.
- Inside of the house is the values we cultivate.

However, what I think I've been missing on a fundamental level is the foundation of the house. The easiest analogy to make is the Jesus' parable of the house on the rock and the sand:

> Matthew 7:24 "Therefore everyone who hears these words of Mine and [o]acts on them, [p]may be compared to a wise man who built his house on the rock. 25 And the rain fell, and the [q]floods came, and the winds blew and slammed against that house; and yet it did not fall, for it had been founded on the rock. 26 Everyone who hears these words of Mine and does not [r]act on them, will be like a foolish man who built his house on the sand. 27 The rain fell, and the [s]floods came, and the winds blew and slammed against that house; and it fell—and great was its fall."

By digging into why we process our core values as Christians as we do, and why we react to certain things the way we do we will be able to shift our paradigm from that of one of exploring ourselves in relationship to Father into exploring the Father in relations to ourselves.

What spurred my line of thought on this is the expansion of my post on a lack of joy and peace. In that article, I discussed the reason why often we don't have a lack of joy and peace comes from our how we view ourselves… in other word identity.

> We often say to women who become Christians that were formerly promiscuous that just because they are a new creation in Christ doesn't mean the past has > gone away. In this, we don't mean that the blood of Christ hasn't covered all sins. But it is our perception of ourselves that we continue to cling on to things in our past. We allow things to continue to shackle our soul and our mind.

>
> […] It's often the case that as serious Christians we are our own worst critics. If I sin I know I have the grace of God. But I sometimes catch myself internally beating myself up because of that sin. "I should've known better" or "I should have been able to overcome this temptation" or "I'm weak."
>
> I know God has forgiven me but have I forgiven myself?
>
> […] Thus, deep down I know that if I am not experiencing peace or joy within my life there are chains that I have allowed to bind me where God has already broken them loose. We sit in those chains asking God why won't He take them off, but He has already done so. Stand up out out of them and walk free.

If you put very careful thought into what I said in that article, you can understand that it was on the right track of thinking; however, it's wrong in that there are a lot of things we still walk in as Christians where we don't know the full measure of the grace and mercy of the Father.

The primary question that growing in the love of the Father is this… how do you love someone that is your enemy? Maybe even someone that claims to be a Christian but doesn't read the Scriptures or blatantly ignores them?

When I look at a single mom how can I feel mercy and compassion for them rather than revulsion and judgment?

When I look at the brokenness of divorce on families, how can I see that both the divorced and the divorcee are both hurting and that both need the Father? Sure, one may shoulder more "blame" and "responsibility" but they are both in need of the Father. Christ died for both of them.

How can I stamp out any bitterness, anger, resentment, and the like out of myself and learn to love?

The goal is not to hate them or even yourself when you sin, but to help them turn back to the Father in their sin. To help them become the prodigal son, and eradicating the mindset of lies that still exist within ourselves as Christians.

My next post will be primarily focused on identity which will delve into more into processing behavioral cycles with the help of the Father to get out of them.

Identity — Foundations

November 6, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So there's multiple concepts I want to discuss with identity in coming to terms with your own identity, but also in regards to discussing it in terms of others. Such a post is likely to become very long so I'm going to break it up into multiple parts. I want to dig into the concept of what identity actually is to us.

What is Identity

Wikipedia has this to say on what identity is in terms of analyzing it from multiple views:

> In psychology and sociology, identity is a person's conception and expression of their own (self-identity) and others' individuality or group affiliations (such as national identity and cultural identity). The concept is given a great deal of attention in social psychology and is important in place identity.

That's a decent naturalistic way to explain it, but as Christians we know that naturalism is definitely not everything. It is also most assuredly not the ultimate Truth which is the Father/Jesus/Holy Spirit or the Scriptures which speak of God.

There are many concepts that we can hold onto in terms of identity. For example, I would describe myself as a Christian. That is one form of identity. I can describe myself by my job in the fitness industry. That would be another form of identity. I can even to something as simple as being male.

I think the more nebulous part of identity involves not just who we are in the world but in terms of our core personality in how we interact with the world. When I talk about personality I'm talking in terms of not behaviors which can be learned and unlearned but moreso the core facets which we have been created with. The Myers-Briggs or the more accurate Big Five personality test attempt to sum up some of the traits of personality where each person is fairly unique in how they manifest on a spectrum scale.

Likewise, I would in this our hopes and dreams as well within the set of core personality. Some people want to be teachers, some people want to be engineers, some people want to do whatever else. There are realistic and unrealistic dreams, so this has to be taken into account as well.

Identity foundations

Thus, identity is the core view that we have of ourselves. How we view ourselves affects how we interact with the Father, and how we interact with others.

In this respect, if our identity is off but we have up the perfect facade it is like building a house upon the sand. The wind and the rain can blow it down.

This is the way I have come to view that which we call "game" both the male and female versions. It's essentially building the facade of a house. You don't see any of the interior, and you don't see any of the foundation. Sure, you can build something up to look really attractive and beautiful — if you're a man or a woman — but ultimately if the inside looks like garbage you're in trouble. Even more so if the foundation is garbage.

However, the way Father wants us to build ourselves is much different. We are to align our core values, our foundation, with the Father. Then we are to assess the interior of the house to make sure it can support the structure, and only then are we free to make it look attractive. Applying the backward approach using game is tenuous at best and soul damning at worst.

Prodding identity yields defensiveness

Donal recently posted an analysis about a the blog post of a girl who is discussing singleness. Now, my intention is not to dump on the girl writing about singleness or being content about it but to use it as an example because it shows clear what I am talking about.

When something becomes the identity that you associate yourself with you will try to convince yourself that you're right, especially inadvertantly using emotional language, grammar, and bolding.

The woman in question is currently single and really wants to be married; however, she has written a whole article trying to convince herself that singleness is OK. Well, that's an identity crisis right there and it shows. Fortunately, she got some of it right in that she is supposed to be looking at the positives of singleness; however, as Donal analyzes in the article it could have been better if she had stated she was specifically using the single time in preparation for marriage.

If you're single and want to be married, you should be using your single time to actually prepare to be the ideal spouse of your ideal spouse. What if your ideal spouse shows up, and you're not their ideal spouse? They'll pass over you in a heart beat. That's the only major issue I saw with her post.

This present a major problem if you root yourself in an identity that is not in the Father.

There's various of other examples such as being a fan of sports teams, your career or occupation, your hobbies and activities, or even being "alpha" or "red pill." This is not to say that having a vested interest in such things is bad. But rather, is such a thing worth having significant investments of emotions, time, and energy expending in defending them?

As I've grown as a Christian I find myself less defensive about things that ultimately don't matter that much. Sure, my job is important but it doesn't define who I am. I am, at the core, a son of the Father. Do I need to be defensive if someone thinks I'm wrong? Or can I just let it go because in eternity that doesn't matter. What matters more is the person in front of me and not what we are talking about.

Revelation

I build a case for these in the previous section because they are good indicators of things that we hold onto tightly that have become or may even become idols in our lives even unknowingly.

Revelation is the key to understanding not just our identity, but to be able to read, understand, and apply the Scriptures. This is made manifest through the unveiling of the revelation of Jesus in our lives. Paul discusses this many times throughout the New Testament that he is writing by his revelation with Jesus. The Greek word for revelation is apokalupsis:

> G602 — ἀποκάλυψις — apokalupsis — ap-ok-al'-oop-sis
>
> From G601; disclosure: – appearing, coming, lighten, manifestation, be revealed, revelation.

A revelation occurs when you read the Scriptures where the verses come alive to you or resonates with you. Likewise, a specific Scripture may have specific meaning in your life. It is a moment where you understand more of who the Father, Jesus, and/or the Holy Spirit are and are able to be molded and conformed to be more like them.

One such example that is non-Scriptural by some measure is the red pill. When you take it, your eyes are unveiled and you can see past the lies that feminism, society, and virtually everyone have fostered. There's nothing wrong with taking the red pill; however, the problem is when it becomes part of your identity to which you need to become defensive about it when it is bashed. If you truly are comfortable in your knowledge there is no need emotionally to defend erroneous statements.

What happens with revelation is that the "old" is taken off and the "new" is put on. You replace a lie, a half truth, or even an inferior understand of something with a new understanding that gives you greater knowledge and forms how you view the world.

Digging deep into your identity

Let's look at some practicals.

As I mentioned in the previous post Behavior cycles and Identity one of the major reasons how this got started was that I was looking at the lack of joy and peace. In particular, the thing that stood out the most to me is that ultimately the lack of joy and peace stemmed from an identity issue.

For example, even if I understand that God has forgiven me, I also need to understand that I also need to forgive myself. I need to walk free from the chains that are already broken. Whereas the Father sees me in the light of my true identity — made free to be His son — I still see myself as one who has to perform on some level before I am worthy to be His son.

This is the contrast between the grace and mercy that have been made freely available to us, and my own perception of a works or performance based model where I have to strive for the Father's love.

In particular, this is where stubborn sins may have hold over our lives. Pornography is one great example of this. Prior to my rebaptism last year, I was trapped in a cycle where I was addicted. I was trying to escape such a thing myself, walking into a false identity of who the Father says I am in Christ. I was turning the "take off the old and put on the new" into a works based performance type of issue where I thought I need to be better or earn my salvation in a sense by not sinning.

I'm here to say that is backward thinking. When you know that the Father is already pleased with you that drastically changes your perception of who you are in Christ.

> Matthew 3:17 and behold, a voice out of the heavens said, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased."
>
> Matthew 17:5 While he was still speaking, a bright cloud overshadowed them, and behold, a voice out of the cloud said, "This is My beloved Son, with whom I am well-pleased; listen to Him!"

The Father is well pleased with Jesus even before He begins His ministry. However, you would think that the Father would say that He is more pleased as Jesus is carrying out His ministry; yet, the Father says the same thing affirming Jesus' identity in Him. The only addition being that they should listen to Him.

Old Covenant versus the New Covenant

This is the shift in transactional nature thinking from the Old Covenant to that which is freely given in the New Covenant. The mindset that we have where we have to be better, or we have to be able to stop sinning so that the Father will be pleased with us, or that we need to do this or that in order to have the Father be pleased with us is a false works-based performance mindset.

When you truly understand this, the weight is lifted off you because you know that the Father is pleased with me without doing anything. He is still pleased with me when I sin, because Jesus' blood covers over that sin. He is pleased with me when I do what is right — not because I did what was right but because Jesus redeem me to be His son. Of course, I am not saying this to abuse grace as Paul talks about in Romans, but understanding this true identity is key.

The weight that is lifted off is not just the performance based or transactional thinking that we have but it changes our mindset as well.

No longer do I have to labor under the weight of my own sin. It's already covered by the grace. Therefore, it has not bound me any longer in any sense of the guilt that comes with doing it. I can ask for forgiveness and move on. When sin ceases to become a big deal — like a weight that drags you down — your mindset completely shifts. You don't have to be a slave to it any longer. You can more easily put it aside. The Goliaths are slain with a stone to the face because of the grace and mercy of the Father.

I don't have to prove my worth to the Father by keeping the law or stopping from sinning because I am covered by His grace and mercy. This mindset changes how you think and leads you not to abuse the grace and mercy but lifts off the burdens in order to allow you to live in the freedom of Christ. This is what Jesus means by his statement that His yoke is easy and His burden is light.

Yet, it is so easy to fall back into the mindset of Old Covenant thinking.

Multi-modal application

So the topic I want to address now is how does this apply to us as Christians?

I'm not sure how the Catholics or Orthodox view it, but my understanding of general Protestant denominations is that Jesus tore down the veil so that we can have a "personal relationship" with the Father, Jesus, and the Holy Spirit.

Specifically, I'll provide one of the examples where I had a revelatory moment of the love of the Father. It was a couple months ago that I started digging deeper on the lack of joy and peace post. As I explain in the revelation section, our perception of God the Father is limited by the unveiling of His Word in our lives.

Over the past couple months, one of the true revelatory moments for me was going way back into my childhood. I'm not an easily offendable type of person, so forgiveness is pretty easy for me. Likewise, if I know where I have sinned it's easy for me to come to the Father and admit my sin. However, there are parts of the "relationship" that are missing more than just forgiving and admitting/confessing sin and repenting.

Personally, I realized that while I was eager to talk to the Father and thank Him for my successes in career, hobbies, or other areas of life, I was extremely hesistant to pray to Him about that which I felt was "off" or "wrong" especially when it was not sin. There was a sense that as a man I had to suck up things and deal with them myself rather than taking everything to the Father because He knows all and He cares for me and you.

Thus, it was in those moments that I started to take everything in my childhood that I felt like was my burden to carry as myself as a man. I gave to Him all of my thoughts both positive and negative. I gave to Him all of my feelings both positive and negative. I poured out my heart to Him on the level that I never would have for a human.

Now if you're a non-Christian, if such a thing is solely a psychologically cathartic experience in itself is readily applicable explanation. I believe that part of it is like that. But overall, the fact that the Father does know and He does care when you pray to Him in this manner is freeing.

Example of David

I think David is the most illuminating example of the Scriptures of this. The Psalms are a conglomeration of poetry, songs, and prophecies all mixed into one.

David cries out to the Father as though he is speaking directly to Him in everything. The victories and defeats. The exhilaration and depression. The joy and the sorrow. The anger and patience. The mercy and justice. The righteousness and unrighteousness.

Many of these Psalms were sung in the tabernacle and thus made public before the whole nation. Imagine having Psalm 51 which was written after He committed adultery with Bathsheba and had Uriah killed broadcasted before the nation?

My main point is this.

If you want to go beyond the surface with the Father and truly understand His love for you then you have to allow yourself to be completely vulnerable with Him. He alreadys knows all, and sees all, and understands you better than you know yourself. But it takes two to have that relationship.

Personally, it's from this place of intimacy and personal relationship with the Father that He's begun to show me what I started talking about in Behavioral Cycles and Identity:

> The primary question that growing in the love of the Father is this… how do you love someone that is your enemy? Maybe even someone that claims to be a Christian but doesn't read the Scriptures or blatantly ignores them?
>
> When I look at a single mom how can I feel mercy and compassion for them rather than revulsion and judgment?
>
> When I look at the brokenness of divorce on families, how can I see that both the divorced and the divorcee are both hurting and that both need the Father? Sure, one may shoulder more "blame" and "responsibility" but they are both in need of the Father. Christ died for both of them.
>
> How can I stamp out any bitterness, anger, resentment, and the like out of myself and learn to love?
>
> The goal is not to hate them or even yourself when you sin, but to help them turn back to the Father in their sin. To help them become the prodigal son, and eradicating the mindset of lies that still exist within ourselves as Christians.

Overall, I believe that this is the direction that this blog will be headed as that was my original intent: To become more like Christ which should prepare me for marriage and all that it entails.

Conclusion

At the core of Christianity is the relationship with the Father, and it's out of the outflow of this relationship that we learn to love and interact with others. Having a much clearer understanding of these concepts has allowed me to make incredible progress in the development of relationships (not just romantic ones) because of the confidence and compassion that is brought from them.

Knowing that the Father knows you and is well pleased with you is big. But knowing that you can come to Him with anything is one of the first steps that takes you down the road to becoming a Christian who is unashamed, bold, and confident in who you are in Christ. If you could easily go up to anyone and talk to them about Jesus then how easy is it to be confident with women.

It's not often about what you say but how you say it and do it.

I will be continuing this series with my next posts. Stay tuned.

Things women can do to signal interest

November 9, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I wrote this over in response to FNBF's asking what women can do to signal interest to a man [for marriage]. I figured I'd post it here because I have written a bit on this before along the lines of a brief commentary to Christian women who desire a husband and 3 methods Christian women can implement to become attracted to Christian men.

In this case, I wanted to delve into some specifics that single women can use in conversation to signal interest. The majority of what I wrote on before has been specifically about improving attraction and desirability outside of conversation. Initiating and maintaining good conversation is where a man is really going to get the feeling that he really wants to ask a woman out, especially if it's really engaging and you're really clicking with each other.

So let's get to it.

Pre-conversation

1. Make sure you isolate yourself from other men and women and are simultaneously are in close proximity to the man you are interested in. Very few men are going to want to ask out a women with lots of friends around. I would even go so far as to isolate and then start up a conversation with him yourself. A semi-private location like the corner of the room, or grabbing a couple seats off to the side is solid.

2. Make sure you have a decent amount of privacy. If you're the type of woman who is almost always conversing with other women much of the time, give the other women a heads up that you want to have a private conversation with said man. Private conversation may imply that you're interested in him which you may or may not tell your girlfriends so you can reword it to be as innocuous as you want.

In conversation:

1. Ask about his interests, goals, and especially dreams. The goals and dreams of a man are going to be what he is actually passionate and willing to talk about, and you also get a glimpse of his life and what he is working toward and if you as a potential wife may fit into it.

2. Dance around the issues (e.g. flirt with them). For example, you can bring up something about reading an article about dating versus courtship and how you're a bit puzzled what to think about it and simply NEED a male perspective to help clarify it. The majority of men actually do indeed like helping women out, so most men would be exceptionally willing to give his perspective on such matters especially if he likes you. This can work with any topic in regard to dating/marriage/etc.

3. Deep eye contact. Light physical touch on the arms, back, and other safe zones. Don't let any distractions: read cell phones, friends, and the like take away from your conversations. Men see women are fickle. Even if she is interested in you but gets sucked into something else easily well apparently she wasn't interested enough.

4. Try to move things along. Always express how you enjoyed your time with him at the beginning, end, and whatnot. Basically. it preempts anything he has to do about guessing about whether she/you is enjoying spending time with him.

5. Employ the old compliment bait and switched with a statement after he makes you laugh or other moment that brings some form of intimacy. For instance, “wow you’re really funny… just the type of man I like.” You can be more bold with this in semi-escalating ways such as: “wow you’re really funny… just the type of man I like [to get to know better]” or “wow you’re really funny… you know, I wouldn’t say no if a man like you asked me out.” If you do it in a coy manner especially with a big smile that lights up your face most of the time it’s not taken as forward.

6. If all else fails and you’re too shy to employ 5 you can employ the faithful middle school tell a friend to tell the man that she might be interested in you.

If you have anything to add to this, feel free to post it here and/or on FNBF’s site as well.

Identity Part 2 — Subtle rebellion

November 15, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a continuation of the series on Behavior cycles and identity and Identity (Part 1).

In those two articles I discussed how personal experiences ultimately filter our view of how we see the world. It's almost impossible for most humans to imagine experiences outside of what they have either seen, felt, or experienced for themselves. Hence, why we have idiomatic expressions such as "you have to see it to believe it."

I do not believe it is a coincidence that all of the books from the Scriptures were written by men who had experienced the Father or Jesus for themselves. Thankfully, we have the same opportunity as they did today as Jesus' sacrifice tore the veil of the temple and allowed us full access to the Father.

Since I'm an INTJ and we like systems, I've started to put together a Christian world view of things that can help solidify identity in God. Solidifying identity in the Father is important because it grounds the heart to values. If the values are not of the Father then they are of the world. From this perspective you can see how easily such things can mislead people onto the incorrect path.

I hestitate to throw around terms like "inner healing" or whatever, but a correct identity is important because from the heart the mouth speaks. We see this all over the Scriptures. The heart, by itself, is full of evil and wickedness: Jeremiah 17:9 "The heart is more deceitful than all else And is desperately sick; Who can understand it?

However, a heart that walks with the Spirit and in tune with the Scriptures has the ability to come into alignment with what the Father wills. Thus, we are able to walk in Spirit and in Truth and not be ashamed in anything — even our past — but walk with confidence in all that we do.

Corrected view of the world

Rebellion is an interesting concept.

There are exactly 3 distinct types of rebellion that shape our thoughts. The more we can eliminate our rebellion from the Father, the further we come into alignment of who the Father created us to be. When we come into alignment with how He created us to be, we live in the Truth. When we live in the Truth, we ultimately display the confidence that we so long for. There's another idiomatic expression "[blank] is being comfortable in your own skin." The most common terms I have seen in [blank] are beauty, sexy, or any other such descriptors. However, the mark of being comfortable in your own skin is precisely what is unveiled by walking in inner truth: confidence.

Now, the 3 types of rebellion are evident:

1. Rebellion against the Father or any of His other established structures.
2. Rebellion against yourself.
3. Rebellion against others.

I'm going to discuss all of these in context but mostly 2 and 3 since I've discussed the majority of 1 on this blog already.

1. Rebellion against the Father or any of His other established structures.

I've discussed rebellion against the Father or any of His other established structures of authority or headship quite extensively in terms of government-Christians, husband-wife, parents-children, or other institutions that you submit yourself to voluntarily. I have already discussed these in various contexts: Structures of authority summarized, Structures of authority before the fall, Authority is good, Authority, submission, obedience, and servanthood, Headship is not authority in marriage, Headship is not authority in marriage Part 2, Headship is not authority in marriage Part 3.

It is important to note in the realm of relationships there are differing roles and responsibilities of each party in the relationship.

The heart of the Father in creation of authority and headship as roles with respsonsibility is to ultimately love. Love is an overused term which means virtually nothing today in the English language. However, if I were to put words to it I would simply state that love's ultimate goal is to bring out the full richness of value or honor (Greek: time/timao) of those under its care.

> G5092 — τιμή — timē — tee-may'
>
> From G5099; a value, that is, money paid, or (concretely and collectively) valuables; by analogy esteem (especially of the highest degree), or the dignity itself: – honour, precious, price, some.

Value — Fear, respect, honor, and truth (phobeo & timao) and The etymology of a rebuke — is directly related and assigned by God because all people are God's creation. Jesus paid the price (time) with His blood for our sins (Matt 27:6, 9). Husbands are to honor (time) their wives as co-heirs in Christ (1 Pet 3:7). The etymology of a rebuke is interesting because as I showed in the above link it's a conjunction of "epi" and "timao." In other words, a rebuke is to call someone out of missing the mark or going astray in order to walk into the fullness (epi-) of their value (timao) in Christ. As God demonstrates in his love for us who were yet sinners as Christ died for us (Romans 5:8), any type of rebuke must be tempered with kindness as that is what leads us to repentance (Rom 2:4).

On the other hand is the flipside of authority and headship which is respect and submission/obedience (depending on the relationship). It is not the responsibility of the one in headship or authority to cause to fear/respect/reverence, even though they may have that ability to do so. It is the responsibility of the one in submission or obedience to do so with the atittude of fear/respect/reverence.

This is the difficult part to understand for most people. The attitude and thus desire is as important as the deed in identity because with the Father the heart matters and actions matter. For example, I cultivate an attitude of fear/respect/reverence for God in my daily life through a relationship with Him in reading the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, and the like. This is a rational fear as opposed to an irrational one. However, I don't do it because I live in fear of punishment or condemnation if I sin as I know His grace already covers that, but I do it so that I can continue to desire to do the right thing daily.

Living in fear of punishment of if/when I sin is not a proper identity in Christ. I realize that I am still human and I sin, but I can immediately repent of my sin and let the burden of it fall off my back when I do. This correct view allows me to spend my time focusing on cultivating a desire to go after God and do what is right instead of spending my time worrying about potential punishment. In regard to identity, mindset is everything.

2. Rebellion against yourself.

Rebellion against yourself is a revelation that was brought up to me recently in some teachings. Self acceptance is an overused term, but underneath it is the reality that rebellion against yourself is to reject yourself. I find this interesting because this is one of the major themes that we see in the Christian manosphere not just from the Christians but from the non-Christians as well. Let me explore this in more detail.

First, we have to go back to the immutable truth about who we are. There's at least 50+ Scriptures that attest to the fact that we aren't an accident but are wonderfully made, He loves us, has a plan for us, and that all of this was part of the plan all along. Before the foundations of the world, in our mother's womb, and after as we are growing.

It is no accident that I am here today. Nor is it an accident that you are here today. Nor is it an accident that you are reading this. We are fearfully and wonderfully made. We have a purpose. We are His.

What rejection of yourself looks like is along the lines of the "I wish" or "If only" statements:

- I wish I was more outgoing.
- I wish that I had talents like X person.
- I wish that I had Y opportunity.
- If only I had done better at that.
- If only I had enough money to do things.
- If only I was taller, or more handsome, or more charismatic, I would be able to get the girl of my dreams.
- If only I could do A so that B would happen.

Rejection of yourself ultimately manifests into a victim mentality and entitlement. It turns into a reactive complaining fest about your weaknesses and problems rather than being proactive about doing something about them.

Ultimately, this was one of the revelations I had in the previous post on Identity. We all have our various weaknesses. As an INTJ I am pretty aware of mine. I don't enjoy socializing that much because small talk is boring. I struggle with communication because I'm merely reading body language as I don't have a good empathic sense for how people are going to be feeling and reacting. I'm easily judgmental and often want to be "right" over “relationships.”

However, is any of this a mistake? Do I really believe that God made a mistake in making me? Or should I consider that God has made each and every one of us with our own sets of strength, weaknesses, talents, gifts, and abilities? Should I consider that He is glorified in my weaknesses when I overcome them (2 Cor 12)?

I think the hardest part of examining yourself is the humility aspect. 5 months ago I would’ve told you that I thought I was on the right track with this blog. However, I was wrong.

The more I examine myself the more crappy thoughts, feelings, and attitudes surface from my memories. Do I actually resent my parents for not setting me up to be successful as a man to find a wife? No? Even a little bit? Well, yeah, probably. I need to repent for that and give it to God. Do I truly believe that God created me the way He wanted my personality to be? Yes. Well, then why would I ever complain about having issues about myself such as poor communication skills. Well, maybe a little then. That’s something to repent for and give to God as well.

My overall point is that when you go through all of these places in your heart and talk with God about them, repent of them, and give them all to God is when you start to experience the peace and joy which are the fruits of the Spirit. It’s not just confessing things that I have done wrong or bad attitudes that I need to be forgiven of, but it is also talking to God that He knows all of you and He wants you to tell Him about it. It alleviates the burden of you carrying all of these things that make you uncomfortable in order that He may give you rest.

I don’t know how much better I can explain that. It’s something you truly have to do in your own time with God to know what I’m talking about. And to be honest, don’t take my word for it; many atheists support meditation because it works. How much more does a loving Father want you to talk to Him.

Rebellion against others

This type of rebellion takes a lot of different forms.

For me I’d often say that when push comes to shove when discussing various topics, the need to “be right” takes precedent over the “relationship.” This is something that I’ve been heavily working on over the past few months because ultimately, “being right” doesn’t really mean anything eternally. This is an important object lesson to grasp because you don’t have to “be right” in terms of many theological things that are a result of the divisive splits in the Church itself.

For example, do any of us truly know whether this earth is billions of years old or only thousands? This is a hotly contested debate in regard to if Genesis is allegorical poetry or a literal account of creation. I tend to lean in a certain direction, but is one belief or another going to hinder salvation? I believe not. I discussed this in Unity, Unity Part 2, and Unity Part 3 — the Church, and Unity Part 4 — marriage.

That’s one of the things I find most disconcerting about how such beliefs play into all of this. For example, even across the Christian manosphere there are certain instances where commentators solely focus on being right “theologically” over helping other Christians become more like Jesus.

I don’t think I’ve ever met anyone who has ever said people from the persecuted churches in Asia won’t be saved. However, do they have theological basis of understanding to where they can make an informed decision about the context of salvation and how it is given or potentially taken away? No. They may not even be denominations in some cases; they may have just received a Bible somehow and started to live to serve God.

What’s the point of debating a concept such as “once saved always saved” when you could instead be using such time to actually teach the good news and how to live it out. OSAS is a marginal concept even at best because Christians are not called to “get people saved” but to “make disciples of all nations.”

To be honest, I don’t understand this. Humans like to complicate things with laws and traditions. The heart of the gospel is pretty simple: Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength and love your neighbor as yourself. If Christians can’t love each other through disagreements what hope does the world have? If you can’t love your own brother or sister how can you love your enemy? What is the point of Jesus’ prayer in John 17?

I say all of this to say this.

> Philippeans 2:1 Therefore if there is any encouragement in Christ, if there is any consolation of love, if there is any fellowship of the Spirit, if any [a]affection and compassion, 2 make my joy complete [b]by being of the same mind, maintaining the same love, united in spirit, intent on one purpose. 3 Do nothing [c]from [d]selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; 4 do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others. 5 Have this attitude [e]in yourselves which was also in Christ Jesus, 6 who, although He existed in the form of God, did not regard equality with God a thing to be [f]grasped, 7 but [g]emptied Himself, taking the form of a bond-servant, and being made in the likeness of men. 8 Being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death [h]on a cross.
>
> 1 John 4:20 If someone says, “I love God,” and hates his brother, he is a liar; for the one who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen. 21 And this commandment we have from Him, that the one who loves God should love his brother also.

It is important to understand at the end of the day that through debate, through disagreements, and through whatever else that I’m looking to help those around me advance in their faith and walk with God. This is the essential core to what I’m looking to do with this blog.

If I can't see others the way God sees them then I am not there yet. If I can't value others the way God sees them in how He created them to be then I am not there yet. If someone tells me I'm wrong, and I can't direct them back to God regardless of how I feel I'm not there yet. If I can't love my enemies and do good to them that persecute me then I'm not there yet. If I take the hardest thing to come my way, and see how I responded to it — if I didn't find joy and peace in Christ in that moment to spur me on to do the right thing then I'm not there yet.

I am not there yet, but I am improving as He teaches me day after day. And I walk with the expectation that I will be able to get there.

Conclusions

The 3 types of rebellion are evident:

1. Rebellion against the Father or any of His other established structures.
2. Rebellion against yourself."
3. Rebellion against others.

In the context of our relationships, it encompasses everything in the greatest commandment:

> Mark 12:29 Jesus answered, "The foremost is, 'Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one Lord; 30 and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength.' 31 The second is this, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' There is no other commandment greater than these."

Love God. Love your neighbor [as] yourself — in other words, know how to love yourself, and by that measure you should also love your neighbor. In reality, it's interesting because Jesus upgrades the Love your neighbor as yourself to John 13:34 and John 15:12 "This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you." This means that we love the Father with everything, and then we similarly love ourselves and our neighbors as Jesus/the Father loves. Amazing.

This means throwing down your own pride to walk in humility to constantly cultivate an attitude of fear/reverence/respect toward the Father in order that we might walk in His ways. Doing so will prevent rebellion against God and His established structures of authority. Likewise, this encourages a constant process of self examination, repentance, and restoration of the knowledge and revelation of His identity, your identity, and the identity of others.

How we value or identify value in God, ourselves, and others is how we will treat God, ourselves, and others.

Identity Part 3 — internal and external

November 25, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The previous posts in this series focused on:

Behavior cycles and Identity — Understanding how we the interactions between our identity, experiences, and behavior.

Identity Part 1 — Foundations of how we identify with certain values and tenants of this life and how they affect us and what we should look for instead.

Identity Part 2 — Understanding rebellion against what our Identity should be in Christ.

Today I'll be writing on internal and external identity, differences, and recalibration thereof.

Internal and External Identity

Internal and external identity can also be thought of in terms of innate qualities versus external qualities. Likewise, I would suspect that the most common way that most people view it is "nature" veresus "nurture." In the terms of 'game' I suppose you could reference in terms of "inner game" versus "outer game" although most PUA/player blogs don't make such a distinction. They're really all variations of the same thing; however, I'm going to be approaching this from a Christian point of view obviously.

Forasmuch as the PUA blogs tend to talk about cultivating inner game and faking it 'til you make it obviously it works to a larger extent. The human body, spirit/soul, and heart/mind are interwoven into one and thus the confidence extracted from learning and getting better at things is indeed attractive. Such things to a long extent can be internalized and where expertise is concerned produce a confidence that is overwhelmingly attractive to women.

However, the problem with the outward in approach is that it will never develop the ultimate anchors of internal confidence that extends past women, past your career or job, past your relationships with family, and is firmly rooted in God. This is what allows you to surrender to the Holy Spirit and receive the joy and peace of God which passes all understanding:

> Philippeans 4:4 Rejoice in the Lord always; again I will say, rejoice! 5 Let your gentle spirit be known to all men. The Lord is [c]near. 6 Be anxious for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God. 7 And the peace of God, which surpasses all [d]comprehension, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus.

Understanding correct valuations in identity will help us to develop the internal mindset and confidence from which to work. This along goes along with the internal and external spiritual qualities that we are looking to develop.

Internal versus external valuation

Let’s take a look a specific example.

In the context of Christian men desiring a Christian woman and our search for a wife, ultimately it is important to realize that we have been created with an innate sexual desire for women. The only people who haven’t been have obviously been given the “gift” of celibacy, although there is some debate what that means I won’t go into it further.

From what I have seen in the ‘sphere and other places, most Christian men lament they have a sex drive. It is seen as a curse rather than a gift to be stewarded appropriately. I believe that the majority of the lament stems from the observation that non-Christian men have it so good that they’re able to have sex outside of marriage and do what they want with women. This is clearly an incorrect view as a Christian. The fact that they’re endangerous their souls should be more than reason enough to challenge that view in a Christian’s mind. However, the more insidious part of adopting such a view is that basically you’re idolizing sex and/or women over the nature of what God has created sex and marriage to operate in.

When the lie is exposed for what it is then it is able to be corrected. However, I’ve even fallen prey to it in some of the earlier posts on this blog and in my comments around the ‘sphere as well. There is no reason for lamenting the fact that I can’t have sex out of marriage. Why would I want to value something what is bad over that which is good? However, realizing this fact is the beginning.

There is an incorrect valuation on the external identity as a means for developing confidence rather than an internal identity as a means for being confident in who you are.

One of the things that most men struggle with is lust. The drive to have sex is interesting because it has been created by God, but the value in examining it is that it is one of the most easily abused. As I discussed in the Dominion Part 1 and Part 2, mastering and being disciplined in your life and your sphere of influence is God’s command over taking control over the earth. Lust is one of the things that both unmarried and married men have to master lest it control them.

However, mastering and disciplining yourself is often taken too far in the wrong direction. Instead of harnessing the drive for sex in order to signal to women that you’re interested in potentially seeing if they can be a spouse, the sex drive is seen more of in the context of a negative or even neutral manner rather than positive.

The drive to have sex is a positive desire all the time. Both before marriage and after in marriage. The faulty mentality arises from a few sources.

- Most have the mentality that sex before marriage is a sin and thus bad, and sex after marriage is not a sin and thus good. However, this external valuation (sinful vs. non-sinful) of the act of having sex prior and after marriage is often construed or imprinted upon the unmarried as an internal valuation of the desire to have sex. Thus, the desire to have sex before marriage is bad, and the desire to have sex after marriage is good. This mentality is false, and this is often the one you see in Church.

- In terms of feminism, the sex drive of women is treated as good and the sex drive of men is treated as evil regardless. This is more a commentary that feminism itself is rooted in evil as the majority of it's valuations compared against the Scriptures are false.
- A complete warping and distortion of God's intention for sex. The desire for pre-marital sex is good and overwhelming to the point of compromise; however, in marriage the desire for licit sex is bad and underwhelming. This is the issue you typically see in Christian marriages where the husband and/or the wife has "lost attraction" for each other.

Thus, you can see how important internal valuation of the way the Father has created things to be is important and must be separated from the external valuation of what is good and what is evil.

What happens when you have the mindset that the sex drive is "bad" outside of marriage and "good" inside of marriage is that when you're single you feel guilty about having a sex drive. This creates conflict between the body and mind/heart. Your body naturally has a sex drive which has been internally created by God to be good, and your mind/heart is assuming it is bad this creates a large amount of cognitive dissonance within most Christians. When the body and the mind/heart and spirit are not in alignment this cognitive dissonance creates confusion, timidity in expressing what you believe, lukewarmness, and the like.

It should be no surprise that you have a culture where "Christian side hugs" become the norm because "purity" is pushed. Men lack confidence in expressing desire to marry. Men lack assertiveness to even ask women out. Christian women think Christian men are sinning if they express sexual desire or attraction for them.

Such a culture is a misrepresentation of what God designed to be good both inside and outside of marriage.

Recalibration of internal identity and valuation

I'm going to keep using the same example since it is an obvious area where single Christian men and women have issues with identity.

The key as I mentioned in the previous section is to sync the body, mind/heart, the spirit, and soul all into alignment. This is exemplified in the first commandment: Love God with all your heart, mind, soul, and strength. When everything is in one accord there is no confusion. There is no timidity. There is no lukewarmness. There is no lack of confidence.

Personally, I feel like most of my earlier writing on this blog has been more about cultivation of external behavior. It's only after I started digging in the past ~3-4 months that this has become more clear to me that the foundation and internal qualities must be realigned correctly. This is not to say that cultivation of external behavior isn't good; however, it shouldn't be the primary method of what you're aiming for. It's funny that this is all coming to a head because of what I talked about with David in Identity Part 1:

> 1 Samuel 16:6 When they entered, he looked at Eliab and thought, “Surely the Lord’s anointed is before Him.” 7 But the Lord said to Samuel, “Do not look at his appearance or at the height of his stature, because I have rejected him; for [b]God sees not as man sees, for man looks at the outward appearance, but the Lord looks at the heart.

What is the heart of this man David that God was looking at?

If you read the very next chapter, the heart that was cultivated in David that God was looking at was David’s internal confidence that was showed exteriorly. Chapter 17 of 1 Samuel is about David rising to Goliath’s challenge and slaying him in the name of the Lord. In essence, that which David was cultivating internally to ground himself to God comes out even as confidence in war.

Jesus reiterates this in Luke as well as Matthew:

> Luke 6:45 The good man out of the good [aa]treasure of his heart brings forth what is good; and the evil man out of the evil treasure brings forth what is evil; for his mouth speaks from [ab]that which fills his heart.

It is not just spoken words that come from the heart, but it is also the actions we take.

As we’ve gone through previous times on this blog, it’s often not what you say as a man that a woman responds to but the confidence behind it that is attractive. If a man is not confident in expressing the sexual desire that God has given to him then what does that say about His belief in who God created him to be?

The main gist of this Identity series has been to continue to evaluate and reevaluate yourself in context of what God says about us. As I stated in Part 2 of this series, if what I think about myself doesn’t match up with how God views me then I live in rebellion to Him. This is going to lead to dissonance as a Christian. If we use our previous example of sexual desire then we see that our mind/heart fights against our sexual desire whereas it was created to be good in the body. Likewise, as Christians we know the Holy Spirit living inside of us also values our sexual desire as good, but we resist that. It’s rebellion against our bodies and the Holy Spirit.

Those of you who have kept up with Donal’s and my blog for a while know that I typically bring up discussion of sex within a couple weeks of meeting a woman that I either ask out or am interested in. The reason why I bring it up is because it is one of the most important discussions to actually have with a woman you want to be married to. Sex is one of the lynchpins of marriage like the thumb is to the hand.

I received a bit of pushback on that from the women stating it was “too early” but at that time I had not delved deep enough into the Word to explain why I was fine with it. I hope that I have now given you a correct mindset through how to evaluate things in this post that it’s not to early to discuss sensitive topics such as sex early when meeting women. Why?

It’s not that it is “just an important topic” to discuss for marriage; however, it is the views behind what it internally versus externally good and evil. From what I have found the women that are going to be more prone to being loathsome about discussing sex are those that have improper attitudes toward sex. That is they believe sexual desire is wrong, and it should be kept in the context of marriage. Well, do you think a switch is suddenly going to flip when you say "I do" to where a woman is comfortable with discussing and having sex? Certainly not. A nagging woman before marriage is still going to be a nagging woman after marriage.

The key reminder here is the concept of reciprocality. You tend to attract the things that you are like in personality. If you're uncomfortable with sex before marriage and discussing it then you're also likely going to attract women who are uncomfortable with sex before marriage and discussing to it. It's going to bleed over into your marriage as well unless those things are addressed.

This is the majority of the reason why I am not shy about discussing sex with women I'm interested in, and why I'm also not uncomfortable bringing it up in a discussion. It's obvious that I'm not going to discuss sex in the context of pre-marital relations unless we're talking about something such as hook up culture. However, is there anything wrong with discussing sexual desire and sex within marriage? Certainly not. Sex in marriage is holy and pleasing to God. Sex is a Sacrament.

Thus, recalibration is obvious. Instead of reading this article and comparing it against your internal framework and seeing how it fits you have to go deeper than that.

To truly recalibrate, you have to:

- Go deep into the framework and behavior within your mind and heart.
- You have to examine what your identity and values are.
- You have to compare what values you hold if they are correct with what the Scriptures say about God, yourself, or others.
- If they are wrong you have to repent of them, and accept God's values.

This is along the lines of repentance but it goes far beyond repentance. Repentence is typically used in the context of confessing sin. This is going to the extent that there are areas in your life that may not necessarily be sinful. God's not going to come and tell you that you have to be able to discuss sex with a woman you're interested in marrying. However, it would be a very unwise thing to do for you not to.

This is the difference between living life and the abudant life.

Testing a recalibrated internal identity and realizing it into confidence

In Part 1 I also discussed the uncomfortability test. Basically, the uncomfortability test is what I would term as and outside to inside look at your level of identity and confidence in believing what the Scriptures and the Father say about you.

When you're uncomfortable you're being challenged by an outside factor. It has two parts to it.

- If what is being said is false, and you're uncomfortable with it then why? If you know the Truth inside of you why do you have to be uncomfortable if something untrue is said about you. This is the fear of man in terms of having to prove others wrong, rather than the fear of God. It is rooted in pride.
- If what is being said is true, and you're uncomfortable with it then why? If you know the Truth then do you not truly believe it? Do you care about what others think about you more than what God thinks about you? This is the fear of man in terms of wanting to fit in, rather than the fear of God. It is a fundamental insecurity about who you are.

As you can see, when such things manifest as fear and especially as an irrational fear of man rather than a rational fear of God, typically the uncomfortable feeling manifests itself into a lack of confidence, lukewarmness, capitulation, and the like. It is not so much about what is being said; women respect and are attracted to men who stick to their guns even when they disagree with them.

The part about the recalibration and realizing the confidence is two fold.

1. Internally you have the correct identity. I'm comfortable with discussing sex with women I'm interested in simply because God says that my sexual desire is good, both inside and outside of marriage.
2. Externally you have to have the ability to express your identity. This is where concepts like improving your public and conversational speaking come in (Part 1 and Part 2). External factors do have practice components to them. If I never talk about sex out loud I'm generally not going to be comfortable talking about it because knowing what is True on the inside is slightly different from a Truthful expression.

Thus, I must first come to terms with a correct identity about sex. Once I recalibrate my internal identity to that of God's in the realm of sex and all of the facets that it talks about then I am good internally. Then it must be practiced. Personally, I first practice at home alone or in the car. When discussing sex practically I'd aim for the topics that you feel most uncomfortable about:

- Do you have trouble expressing your preferences in a mate out loud?
- Do you have trouble talking about why sexual desire is good outside and inside of marriage, but why that is different from why sex outside of marriage is a sin and inside a marriage is holy?
- Do you shy away from a discussion on the holiness and sacrament of sex in marriage?
- Are you afraid to correct people when they have an incorrect view?

Topics can manifest in a large number of ways. Generally speaking, as a man since we control the conversation you can guide them down any path you like. However, it must be noted that if you're shy in discussing them — your words trail off at the end of your sentences, you end your sentences like a question, you speak quickly rather than measured and slow, and the like — then you have things to work on.

Likewise, can you confidently express your dreams for the future? Can you articulate your ambition for your career or hobbies? Do you have a view for how you want your family to be and can talk about it firmly? Can you talk about your testimony confidently?

All of these factors are involved with the root of what is attractive.

“Just be yourself” is really a half truth for as much flack as it gets. Yes, you have to be willing to be an individual and express your views confidently. You don’t have to try to become like a PUA or player. We as Christians know that we know the Truth — that Jesus died for our sins and invites us to be His disciples and enter into communion with the Father, the Son, and Holy Spirit. So why don’t we act like it.

Conclusions

Assuming the correct valuation of internal identity is the most important. Otherwise, those in the Christian manosphere are trying to emulate PUAs and players while still be Christians. This cannot be done. It is an external to internal framework.

However, being a Christian is an internal to external framework. The inside must align with God, and confidence arises from living within the Truth of God and then is fostered externally by practice.

Recalibration of the internal must go through several prospective steps, including analyzing thoughts, feelings, beliefs, and actions that may not necessarily be sinful but not living in abundant life:

- Go deep into the framework and behavior within your mind and heart.
- You have to examine what your identity and values are.
- You have to compare what values you hold if they are correct with what the Scriptures say about God, yourself, or others.
- If they are wrong you have to repent of them, and accept God’s values.

This is along the lines of repentance but it goes far beyond repentance. Repentence is typically used in the context of confessing sin. This is going to the extent that there are areas in your life that may not necessarily be sinful. God’s not going to come and tell you that you have to be able to discuss sex with a woman you’re interested in marrying. However, it would be a very unwise thing to do for you not to.

The abundant life is living in the fulness of our identity in Christ. I know that my hopes, my dreams, and my visions align with what God has said they do in His Scriptures, and they align with my desires as well. I can speak about them confidently in a public setting.

You will notice that once your internal identity and values are calibrated correctly you receive greater measures of peace and joy from the Lord.

Then you will begin to live unashamedly for the Lord, and that which you seek being confidence that is attractive to women will be manifest.

It’s that simple. In the next post on Identity I’m going to discuss more about recalibration of internal identity in terms of the Scriptures.

Wrestling with God

November 27, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

FBNF elaborates on an interesting question about what it "is" to wrestle with God:

> What does it look like to wrestle with God, when we don't have Him physically in front of us to wrestle with in the literal sense of the word like Jacob did? Is fervent prayer all it takes? Or is there something else we must do? How should we know when God wants us to ask Him just one more time, to hold out in faith just a little bit longer… and when no really does mean no?

Apparently, most of us missed the point, so here is the follow up clarification:

> You're missing my point in writing this post in the first place. Perhaps I didn't write it clearly enough because it seems everyone missed the point. I didn't write it as an outlet to complain. Like I said in my first comment, I'm looking for answers to the questions I asked at the end of the post. The fact that the verses about Jacob popped so clearly into my mind that day tells me that I probably need to be doing just that. But I don't know how to. I've already prayed to the point of begging God-knows-how-many times, so I wonder if there's more to it than prayer, if there's something else we should also be doing in addition to praying. Which is why I wrote this post – to get a theological discussion going about what that means, not to talk about myself and my own situation (I tried to keep it general rather than personal for that reason).
>
> Also, there's something I meant to include in the post but just realized I missed when I read back over it to check my clarity… This whole idea of wrestling with God is so very different than that of all those other Bible verses about how we should be content in all things. I say that because nobody would have any reason to wrestle with God if they were content in those circumstances. Only a very high level of contentment in the circumstances would cause someone to do something like that. And yet, Jacob was blessed (and even praised) for doing so. There seems to be a disconnect between the two concepts, but since Scripture can't contradict itself, that must mean there is something more to figure out here. Any ideas?

This story is indeed applicable in some ways to the questions posed, but in other ways it is not. But that's getting ahead of ourselves. Let's look at Genesis 32.

Jacob wrestles with God

> Genesis 32:1 Now as Jacob went on his way, the angels of God met him. 2 Jacob said when he saw them, "This is God's [a]camp." So he named that place [b]Mahanaim.3 Then Jacob sent messengers before him to his brother Esau in the land of Seir, the [c]country of Edom. 4 He also commanded them saying, "Thus you shall say to my lord Esau: 'Thus says your servant Jacob, "I have sojourned > with Laban, and stayed until now; 5 I have oxen and donkeys and flocks and male and female servants; and I have sent to tell my lord, that I may find favor in your sight."'

>
> "6 The messengers returned to Jacob, saying, "We came to your brother Esau, and furthermore he is coming to meet you, and four hundred men are with him." 7 Then Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed; and he divided the people who were with him, and the flocks and the herds and the camels, into two companies; 8 for he said, "If Esau comes to the one company and [d]attacks it, then the company which is left will escape."

So if you remember in previous chapters Jacob has this whole conflict with Esau along the lines of Esau despising his birthright and selling it to Jacob, and then Jacob and Rebekah tricking Isaac into giving his blessing to Jacob instead of Esau. Thus, here Jacob is distressed and prepares himself for the coming conflict with Esau. Next,

> 9 Jacob said, "O God of my father Abraham and God of my father Isaac, O Lord, who said to me, 'Return to your country and to your relatives, and I will [e]prosper you,' 10 [f]I am unworthy of all the lovingkindness and of all the [g]faithfulness which You have shown to Your servant; for with my staff only I crossed this Jordan, and now I have become two companies. 11 Deliver me, I pray, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau; for I fear him, that he will come and [h]attack me and the mothers with the children. 12 For You said, 'I will surely [i]prosper you and make your [j]descendants as the sand of the sea, which is too great to be numbered.'"

Jacob prays to God reminding God of His promises (v9). Then He thanks God for His loving-kindness and faithfulness in humility (v10). Then He presents His request to God and reminds Him again of his promises (v11-12).

> 13 So he spent the night there. Then he [k]selected from what [l]he had with him a present for his brother Esau: 14 two hundred female goats and twenty male goats, two hundred ewes and twenty rams, 15 thirty milking camels and their colts, forty cows and ten bulls, twenty female donkeys and ten male donkeys. 16 He delivered them into the hand of his servants, every drove by itself, and said to his servants, "Pass on before me, and put a space between droves." 17 He commanded the [m]one in front, saying, "When my brother Esau meets you and asks you, saying, 'To whom do you belong, and where are you going, and to whom do these animals in front of you belong?' 18 then you shall say, 'These belong to your servant Jacob; it is a present sent to my lord Esau. And behold, he also is behind us.'" 19 Then he commanded also the second and the third, and all those who followed the droves, saying, "After this manner you shall speak to Esau when you find him; 20 and you shall say, 'Behold, your servant Jacob also is behind us.'" For he said, "I will appease him with the present that goes before me. Then afterward I will see his face; perhaps he will accept me." 21 So the > present passed on before him, while he himself spent that night in the camp.22 Now he arose that same night and took his two wives and his two maids and his eleven children, and crossed the ford of the Jabbok. 23 He took them and sent them across the stream. And he sent across whatever he had.

The next day Jacob follows through on his promise to send Esau a present for reconciliation. This is the background for which Jacob is going to wrestle with God:

> 24 Then Jacob was left alone, and a man wrestled with him until daybreak. 25 When he saw that he had not prevailed against him, he touched the socket of his thigh; so the socket of Jacob's thigh was dislocated while he wrestled with him. 26 Then he said, "Let me go, for the dawn is breaking." But he said, "I will not let you go unless you bless me." 27 So he said to him, "What is your name?" And he said, "Jacob." 28 He said, "Your name shall no longer be Jacob, but [n]Israel; for you have striven with God and with men and have prevailed." 29 Then Jacob asked him and said, "Please tell me your name." But he said, "Why is it that you ask my name?" And he blessed him there. 30 So Jacob named the place [o]Peniel, for he said, "I have seen God face to face, yet my [p]life has been preserved." 31 Now the sun rose upon him just as he crossed over Penuel, and he was limping on his thigh. 32 Therefore, to this day the sons of Israel do not eat the sinew of the hip which is on the socket of the thigh, because he touched the socket of Jacob's thigh in the sinew of the hip.

The important part of this passage is not that Jacob is wrestling with God. The important part is to understand what Jacob is wrestling about. Jacob is wrestling for the blessing of the Lord as he declares that He won't let go until God blesses him (v26).

If we go back to the background of the passage we see 3 distinct parts:

- Jacob initiates conflict resolution with Esau, and wants to reconcile and tells Esau he is sending gifts.
- Jacob hears Esau is coming with lots of men. He is afraid and prays to God reminding Him of His promises and thanking Him for His loving-kindness.
- Jacob follows through on sending a reconcilatory gift to Esau.

Thus, Jacob is wrestling not just with God but also men. This is seen in the conclusion of verses 27-29:

> 27 So he said to him, "What is your name?" And he said, "Jacob." 28 He said, "Your name shall no longer be Jacob, but [n]Israel; for you have striven with God and with men and have prevailed." 29 Then Jacob asked him and said, "Please tell me your name." But he said, "Why is it that you ask my name?" And he blessed him there.

Jacob ultimately receives the blessing of God.

What does wrestling with God mean?

The story of Jacob wrestling with God illustrates the New Testament reality come alive. There's a reason why in Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews that Paul and the author if Hebrews discusses why Abraham is the father of our faith, and that God is the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob. In Galatians 4, Paul talks about how how the children born of Hagar is the Old Testament Covenant of Sinai, and how the children born of Sara is the New Testament Covenant by faith. In other words, the children of the promise are the ones that live by faith, and the children of the law are the ones that are slaves to the law.

This perfectly illustrates the model that Jesus lays out for us in the Sermon on the Mount:

> Matthew 5:23 Therefore if you are presenting your [s]offering at the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, 24 leave your [t]offering there before the altar and go; first be reconciled to your brother, and then come and present your [u]offering.

This verse is often misinterpreted because we read through it so fast that it doesn't mean what we think it means. Most people think it says if you "remember you have something against your brother go reconcile with him" however when you look closely at the the wording it says if you "remember that your brother has something against you." Jacob does not necessarily have something against his brother, but he knows that Esau ultimately has something against him because he tricked him for the blessing.

The complexity of this verse shows that it is the will of the Father that the first and second commandment are ultimately tied together:

> Matthew 22:37 And He said to him, "'You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind.' 38 This is the great and [o]foremost commandment. 39 The second is like it, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' 40 On these two commandments depend the whole Law and the Prophets."

Jesus says that if you really want to worship me and the Father with a sacrifice, you will start the reconciliation process. If you love me then you will love your neighbor and desire peace and unity with him.

Israel: he prevailed with God and men. The point that most people miss is that Jacob's wrestle with God ultimately gives him the courage to actually go and face Esau and reconcile. The blessing that God gives to Jacob is ultimately prophetic. Jacob in his heart purposed to do the right thing and in so wrestling with God he prevailed. However, he had not yet prevailed with Esau. When Jacob purposes in his heart to do the right thing, he has prevailed with God. The prophetic is that he will prevail with men or in this case Esau.

Finally, if you finish reading the story in Genesis 33 you will see that indeed Jacob does reconcile with his brother. Their relationship is restored, and that the blessing that he fought for that he received in the name change is fulfilled.

What does wrestling with God mean for us?

The process that Jacob goes through in wrestling with God applies extremely broadly to the Christian walk. It's clear to me that knowing what we know now of the New Covenant in Jesus that our wrestle with God is made manifest in our walk with the Spirit and desire to see God work in our lives.

> Galatians 5:13 For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. 14 For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 15 But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another. 16 This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh. 17 For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. 18 But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

Our "wrestle with God" is to align our spirit to the Holy Spirit in order to walk out by faith which He has called us to do by the manifestation of the fruits of the Spirit rather than the fruits of the flesh. This is how we walk in the New Covenant just as Jacob does in the vein of the faith of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. So then we show our love for God by loving others.

I'm going to follow this up with another post on prayer as explaining the overarching goal behind prayer brings this whole issue crystal clear into focus. Although you may be able to guess that from this post.

Parents training children

November 29, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was reading through Ephesian 6 in the Greek today, and I came across some interesting Greek words. As you may know Colossians 3 is the only other place where Paul speaks about instructing children.

> Ephesians 6:1 Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. 2 Honor your father and mother (which is the first commandment with a promise), 3 so that it may be well with you, and that you may live long on the earth. 4 Fathers, do not provoke your children to anger, but bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord.
>
> Colossians 3:20 Children, be obedient to your parents in all things, for this is well-pleasing [t]to the Lord. 21 Fathers, do not exasperate your children, so that they will not lose heart.

1. The first thing I find interesting is the word used for parents (goneus) is different from the word used for father (pater). The command to discipline and instruct children is specifically given to fathers. I've already talked about the impact of fatherhood and impartation of identity that fathers give in behavior cycles and identity, so I don't want to go off on a long tangent.

Discipline and admonition from a father is going to be very different than that from a mother. When you look into how children react to it, I think that's also similar reasoning on why Paul says that women shouldn't be pastors. This is discussed somewhat in Elspeth's post on why the Bible was penned by men. Discipline primarily performed by the father which the wife/mother will refer to her husband if something happens when she is watching the children will reinforce roles and responsibilities of the husband and wife. I can't say for certain because I have no data, but I would expect such marriages to be more stable when the father alone takes care of that duty.

2. The wording of provoke (parorgizo) children to anger and exasperate (erethizo) your children is different in the Greek.

> G3949 — παροργίζω — parorgizō — par-org-id'-zo
> From G3844 and G3710; to anger alongside, that is, enrage: – anger, provoke to wrath.
>
> G2042 — ἐρεθίζω — erethizō — er-eth-id'-zo
> From a presumed prolonged form of G2054; to stimulate (especially to anger): – provoke.

You may recognize that parorgizo is a conjunction of para- and the root orge/orgy which means anger/vengeance/indignation/wrath. In other words, the verse from Ephesians is instructing fathers not to provoke their children to anger when they are angry themselves. You may have heard it said that you should never discipline your children when you're angry. This is the Scriptual support for that.

Similarly, erethizo is from the root eris which means to "quarrel, that is, (by implication) wrangling: – contention, debate, strife, variance." In other words, parents should not be arguing or debating with the children about what is right and wrong. Obviously, when you engage a child in an argument you are stepping down to their level and engaging in a power struggle when you're the adult and you need to be taking responsibility for the situation at hand. The end of the sentence is followed with "so that they do not lose heart," and this agrees with the fact that if children see you as on their level they are less likely to trust you because you don't know what you're talking about.

Thus, Paul sums up how not to parent in two verses. Don't engage children when you're angry as you'll also make them angry, and don't debate with your children as it will give them a foothold that will cause them to be angry and lose their trust in you.

3. Finally, fathers are to discipline (paideia) and instruct (nouthesia) children in the Lord.

> G3809 — παιδεία — paideia — pahee-di'-ah
> From G3811; tutorage, that is, education or training; by implication disciplinary correction: – chastening, chastisement, instruction, nurture.
>
> G3559 — νουθεσία — nouthesia — noo-thes-ee'-ah
> From G3563 and a derivative of G5087; calling attention to, that is, (by implication) mild rebuke or warning: – admonition.

These two are necessarily coupled together because you can't do one without the other. Paideia is about instructing a child in what is right, and if necessarily using discipline/punishment to reinforce the point. This is to be coupled with nouthesia which you may recognize another -thesia conjuction which is G5206 huiothesia which is the word Paul uses for us being "adopted" in Romans 8 as sons of God. The Nou- part of the conjunction is derived from nooce or the mind. In other words, to direct or call attention to what is right and wrong based on engaging their thoughts.

Training up a child in the way they should go without engaging them and telling them why certain things are the way they are is a good way to lead them towards apostasy. If they don't know why they are being taught certain things or have a firm foundation in God then they are more likely to easily go astray. This doesn't apply for when children do wrong, but in all phases of life. It's why ignorance about the faith is so destructive to children.

 Analysis of conjunctions generally give a bit more clarity in what the conjunction means. However, I use it as a general statement because it is an exegetical fallacy as words both in Greek and English sometimes mean more or differently than the sum of their parts. For example, huiothesia is a conjunction of "huios and tithemi" which means "son and placement" respectively. However, huiothesia is translated as only "adoption" in the NT and refers to both adoption of sons and daughters.

In terms of nouthesia, it is important to realize that the admonition should be engaging the “mind” rather than the “emotions” because although emotions do play a role in decision making it is always going to be the mind that makes the decisions. With that said, the Hebrews made no distinction of the emotions and thoughts and called them all “heart” whereas the Greeks made a distinction of the “feelings with heart” and the “thoughts with mind.” So you have to keep this in mind when reading the OT and NT.

See Semitic Totality Concept for more information.

Illustrating identity issues

December 1, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As I discussed in Identity Part 2, rejection of yourself is one of the ways we rebel against God. I think the dialogue on two of the latter posts illustrates what I am talking about very well. I'm not picking on the commentors, but I'm bringing it up because it illustrates a common line of thought that is present all throughout the manosphere.

> That said, I would gladly have traded 20 IQ points for a few inches in height. That would have probably given me a better chance to be a husband and father.

Normally, we tend to see these statements as fairly innocuous and ubiquitous given our culture. However, that's not how it is supposed to be. It doesn't align up with the Scriptures of God and thus should be rejected as an idea on a basic fundamental level.

> "That said, I would gladly have traded 20 IQ points for a few inches in height. That would have probably given me a better chance to be a husband and father."
>
> I disagree. Those 20 IQ points should enable a man to understand how female attraction works. Of course, as said man learns about modern women and modern marriage…he necessarily becomes less enamored about marriage. Problem solved.
>
> I would argue any man willing to give up 20 IQ points to increase his attraction to women would make a terrible husband and father. As bad as women these days are, they deserve a husband who can lead with some level of outcome independence.

This is an inadvertant post hoc justification. An answer such as "This is better for these reasons" dances around the root of the issue but doesn't address it directly.

Revealing the lie against the Scriptures is good — the rebellion against the idea that God created you exactly as He wanted.

The struggle

Both men and women struggle with this albeit for different reasons.

Men, in particular, have a difficult time with this because we think in terms of generalizations the majority of the time. When we see a generalization that is true across the board, and we don't meet that standard we tend to wish the opposite.

Women, alternatively, struggle with the issue of conformity. If they don't fit or live up to a certain [societal] standard then they will often wish the opposite.

Very similar but also very different as Cane illustrates with the thought process.

Revealing the roots of the lie

A mindset like this reveals the passivity of victimhood and is reactive at the core. If only what? What is that type of mindset going to gain you? Nothing but bitterness, jealousy, and envy.

A rejection of how God created you creates disunity between the body, heart, and spirit. All of these are bestowed by God to us when He created us in our mother's womb.

When we receive Christ we are sealed in Him with the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit communes with our spirit. When Adam and Eve ate from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil their eyes were opened and they were a slave to sin. However, as our spirit aligns with the Holy Spirit in our devotion to God through the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, etc, it realigns our conscience to prick us and remind us that we have the freedom to choose good from evil.

Saul's conversion in Acts 9 illustrates this well:

> Acts 9:4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? 5 And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. 6 And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

Thus, we believe the lie that we are "better off" if we were only "___" our heart, mind, and body rejecting themselves and are rejecting our spirit. This disunity brings on all manner of evil as there is nothing behind it except for the aforementioned bitterness, jealousy, and envy.

On the other hand, unity within the body, heart, and spirit in communion with the Holy Spirit brings joy and peace. There is no place for rejecting who God is, or who we are created to be in God, and showing others the love of God that all may come to know Him.

And you wonder why Christian men now lack confidence. Jesus, Himself, said:

> Luke 11:17b "[a]Any kingdom divided against itself is laid waste; and a house divided against [b]itself falls.

You are the temple of the Holy Spirit. If you're divided against yourself and the Father how can you stand?

As petty as it may be to think about and do, the reason why we give thanks in what we believe are difficult circumstances or even ones where we don't like it is because giving God praise.

> Psalm 100:4 Enter His gates with [d]thanksgiving And His courts with praise. Give thanks to Him, bless His name. 5 For the Lord is good; His lovingkindness is everlasting And His faithfulness to all generations.

We literally draw near to God when we praise Him in our weaknesses. Even earlier this year I would've been the one to make similar comments about myself. I wish I had been born with less of an IQ and better social skills. Or I wish I would've been born a different way. However, the gifts and talents that God has given me He has done so for a reason, and the same with the weaknesses. It is to His glory that I use my strengths, and it is to His glory when I overcome my weaknesses.

Thus, call out the lies, and you will notice that you will become free indeed. Exposing the lies and embracing the truth really does bring His peace and joy.

Why women aren't allowed to teach men in Church

December 2, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

If you've been following the comments on Elspeth's on why the Bible was penned by men, and Donal's selected Sunday Scriptures on the verses that prohibit women from speaking and teaching in Church then you would know there is some interesting debate going down over the course of what it means to "teach" men.

I was going to comment. However, since my comment was getting long I felt that it deserved its own post, and I haven't discussed the full nature of this topic yet before on this blog. So let's get down to it.

First, the verses:

> 1 Corinthians 14:34 the women should keep silence in the churches. For they are not permitted to speak, but should be subordinate, as even the law says. 35 If there is anything they desire to know, let them ask their husbands at home. For it is shameful for a woman to speak in church. 36 What! Did the word of God originate with you, or are you the only ones it has reached?
>
> 1 Timothy 2:11 Let a woman learn in silence with all submissiveness. 12 I permit no woman to teach or to have authority over men; she is to keep silent. 13 For Adam was formed first, then Eve; 14 and Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived and became a transgressor. 15 Yet woman will be saved through bearing children, if she continues in faith and love and holiness, with modesty.

At first glance, the problem to me extends beyond these two passages. This is because we need to know what definitions we are using with Greek words. If we don't understand exactly what we are talking about it is easy to make mistakes.

1. First, what is the definition of "church" setting (or rather ekklesia) in which women aren't allowed to teach? Is it only in say mass or other Sunday services? Does that include any other type of events that the Church has including classes on catechism or the like?

> G1577 — ἐκκλησία — ekklēsia — ek-klay-see'-ah
> From a compound of G1537 and a derivative of G2564; a calling out, that is, (concretely) a popular meeting, especially a religious congregation (Jewish synagogue, or Christian community of members on earth or saints in heaven or both): – assembly, church.

It's very difficult to discern what exactly ekklesia means because it is used in multiple different forms in the NT. The early Church which was a compilation of people meeting in houses was called the ekklesia. Likewise, the establishment of different churches within different buildings as the population has expanded is also referred to as the Church.

If we take the straigtht definition it would seem to be that in general it's any gathering of believers. This would be my take on it. After all, Jesus Himself states that whether two or more are gathered in His name there he is with them (Matt 18:20).

2. Second, what is the definition of “teach” (didasko) compared to say “preach” (kerusso, euaggelizo) or compared to giving a testimony (matureo) and the lessons learned from it? This is much more of a gray zone because women are not allowed to “teach” but they are allowed to “preach” and spread the gospel, and they are allowed to give “testimonies.”

> G1321 — διδάσκω — didaskō — did-as’-ko
> A prolonged (causative) form of a primary verb δάω daō (to learn); to teach (in the same broad application): – teach.
>
> G2784 — κηρύσσω — kērussō — kay-roos’-so
> Of uncertain affinity; to herald (as a public crier), especially divine truth (the gospel): – preach (-er), proclaim, publish.
>
> G2097 — εὐαγγελίζω — euaggelizō — yoo-ang-ghel-id’-zo
> From G2095 and G32; to announce good news (“evangelize”) especially the gospel: – declare, bring (declare, show) glad (good) tidings, preach (the gospel).
>
> G3140 — μαρτυρέω — martureō — mar-too-reh’-o
> From G3144; to be a witness, that is, testify (literally or figuratively): – charge, give [evidence], bear record, have (obtain, of) good (honest) report, be well reported of, testify, give (have) testimony, (be, bear, give, obtain) witness.

What distinguishes teaching from preaching and giving a testimony? Pure explication of the Scriptures? But where exactly is the line between teaching and sharing the gospel because the gospel will also be told using the Scriptures?

Let’s get straight to the point then. I’ve learned a lot about God from women on what some would consider teaching. For example, they’re relating their experiences me in terms of how God is working in their life supported with Scriptures to back it up. However, in my view that would mainly be considered giving a testimony — ‘here is what God is doing in my life and showing me in these Scriptures.’ Is that fact that I learned from that make it a teaching? Or is it still only a testmony?

Let’s look at all of the variations of what it means to “teach” in given in the Greek NT:

> G1317 — διδακτικός — didaktikos — did-ak-tik-os’
> From G1318; instructive (“didactic”): – apt to teach.
>
> G1318 — διδακτός — didaktos — did-ak-tos’
> From G1321; (subjectively) instructed or (objectively) communicated by teaching: – taught, which . . . teacheth.
>
> G1319 — διδασκαλία — didaskalia — did-as-kal-ee’-ah
> From G1320; instruction (the function or the information): – doctrine, learning, teaching.
>
> G1320 — διδάσκαλος — didaskalos — did-as’-kal-os

> From G1321; an instructor (generally or specifically): – doctor, master, teacher.
>
> G1321 — διδάσκω — didaskō — did-as’-ko
> A prolonged (causative) form of a primary verb δάω daō (to learn); to teach (in the same broad application): – teach.
>
> G1322 — διδαχή — didachē — did-akh-ay’
> From G1321; instruction (the act or the matter): – doctrine, hath been taught.

Based on how the words are used, in my estimation the ban on women “teaching” men refers to women instructing men how to live. Women should not be telling men how to live because they don’t understand what it is to be a man. Not only have we seen this time and time again in the manosphere that instruction , but we see the same thing in marriage where women nag their husbands because they want him to basically tell/instruct him on how to live.

This seems to be the correct context in which the word is used. When the sinners, tax collectors, Pharisees, and even the rich young rule come to Jesus they are coming to Him for more than just teaching. They want to know how His teaching affects the way they live. For example, in a large portion of the sermon on the mount in Matthew 5:21-48, Jesus leads off all of His teaching with the phrasing “You have heard it said ___, but I tell you ___.” This seems to be the context of what it means to teach versus all other forms of learning — in practical application.

There is a stark difference from a woman sharing her experience about what God has been teaching her (testimony), from the experience of preaching the gospel (kerusso, euaggelion), and instructing/teaching a man about how to live their life. The difference I see in where women are giving their testimony it is first and foremost an encouragement. Secondarily, men can glean principles from that woman’s life in order to incorporate that into their own lives. However, it is not teaching where a woman is instructing men how to live.

When it crosses the line from the woman relating her own experiences (about her) to being about the men she is talking to (to instruct them) then it ceases to be a testmony and it becomes teaching.

Conclusion

edit: thanks also to jonadabtherechabite for some commentary on theology that changed the conclusion here.

Given the context of some exegesis and more research into what other theologians taught on the topic including Chrysostom, the prevailing thought is that the passage in 1 Corinthians 14 and 1 Timothy 2 hinge multiple specific matters:

- The fact that women tend to be more easily deceived means that it would be questionable to let them teach.
- Women are to keep silence in the church which is predicated on eliminating gossip thus encouraging modesty of the mouth just as earlier in Corinthians Paul other outward appearance of modesty such as veils for the hair.

- The subjection of women to men in the church (ekklesia setting) brings about order much like in the marriage relationship in Genesis.
- Chrysostom has an interesting interpretation parallel of Romans where since Adam fell into sin the mankind fell, and to where Eve fell into deception so also women. This manifests in that Adam was deceived by another human whereas Eve was deceived by a lesser, and women are banned from teaching because her salvation is not of herself yet rather of childbearing.

Overall, it seems as if the Scriptures do not ban women from sharing testimonies or spreading the gospel outside of the Church setting (e.g. Samaritan woman at the well, Mary after the resurrection, etc.), and it doesn't seem to give a prescription on women teaching outside of the church setting. However, it would be wise to follow the Scriptures in the Church setting due to all of these reasons.

In general, I think the majority of men can tell that when they are being "lectured" or "taught" by women on how to live that uncomfortable feeling you get that signifies that something is wrong probably means it is wrong even if their message is right. It's also possible that nudging is your conscience and/or the Holy Spirit, but I haven't thought about it too extensively yet to make a declaration.

When women start instructing men how to live, run far far away. Unfortunately, this is what feminism tells men, and men unknowingly or knowingly accept it to their own detriment. There is a reason why single mothers cannot effectively raise men, and why it is the father's role to discipline and instruct the children of the house.

Effectively, I would say that it is "at your own risk" for men to accept teaching on how to live from women. Feedback is always good, but implementing practical advice is haphazard at best.

Identity Part 4 — Submit to the process of loving yourself

December 17, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The previous posts in this series focused on:

Behavior cycles and Identity — Understanding how we the interactions between our identity, experiences, and behavior.

Identity Part 1 — Foundations of how we identify with certain values and tenants of this life and how they affect us and what we should look for instead.

Identity Part 2 — Understanding rebellion against what our identity should be in Christ.

Identity Part 3 — Understanding how internal and external identity shapes who we are and how we can recalibrate it correctly to be in line with the Scriptures.

Today I'll be discussing deception in understand concept of unselfishness and selfishness as Christians and how exposing the lie allows us to submit to the process of developing into godly Christians.

Submitting to the process

In God doesn't owe you anything and not personal responsibility but stewardship, I talked about the nature of how God entrusts us with certain things to steward. Specifically, those who are responsible with little are given more to handle as they are found trustworthy to handle the little they have been given.

In more recent posts such as Dominion and Dominion Part 2, I discussed the hierarchy of responsibility that we are all given. Specifically for men, it is first to be entrusted with dominion and mastery over yourself, then a wife, then a wife and children. This is the process that men must undergo.

I think for those of us that are single we are short sighted in our understanding of what it means to be selfish and unselfish.

Two years ago I could say that I desired a wife and that I would be unselfish in marriage and able to serve her needs. However, looking back now what I could say is that I had very little mastery and dominion over myself. I had very little concept of how to love myself properly in line with God's Word. How then much of a disaster would it have been for me to attempt to love another, treat her as a co-heir in Christ, and not be embittered to a wife that is going to be different than me? Surprise: men and women are different.

There is an interesting Sun Tzu quote that speaks to this in terms of war, but the concept can easily be applied to human relationships in general:

> "If you know the enemy and know yourself, you need not fear the result of a hundred battles. If you know yourself but not the enemy, for every victory gained you will also suffer a defeat. If you know neither the enemy nor yourself, you will succumb in every battle." – Sun Tzu

Successful marriages are relationships that are forged out of good conflict management. Those that do not have good communication and the willingness to approach conflict as an opportunity to grow and become closer will have their marriage inevitably fail. In other words, if you don't understand yourself — your desires and needs — then you will be confused and it will only add to the confusion in times of conflict.

This is the interesting dichotomy present. The vast majority of Christians would call it selfish to focus on how to love yourself, to discipline yourself, to master yourself, and to take dominion over yourself to focus only on your desires and needs in the context of your relationship with God. However, this is the most unselfish thing to do in the kingdom of God because prior to marriage you only have responsibility over yourself and generalized relationships.

Understanding selfishness and unselfishness

I was even deceived into this thinking except through revelation of growth in God in the past few months. All the church tells you is that it is selfish to focus on loving yourself, and that the most glorious thing in the world is to love others.

However, Christians think that it is selfish to focus on yourself ignoring what is said about the greatest commandment(s):

> Mark 12:28 One of the scribes came and heard them arguing, and recognizing that He had answered them well, asked Him, "What commandment is the [q]foremost of all?" 29 Jesus answered, "The foremost is, 'Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one Lord; 30 and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength.' 31 The second is this, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' There is no other commandment greater than these."

How can you love your neighbor, except to the extent that you love yourself?

The most common objection that is brought up to this is that it is arrogant or prideful to love yourself. This is indeed true, if loving yourself meant loving yourself at the expense of others, even so far as putting them down or esteeming yourself better than them.

> Galatians 5:25 If we live by the Spirit, let us also [I]walk by the Spirit. 26 Let us not become boastful (or strive for vain glory), challenging one another, envying one another.
>
> Philippeans 2:3 Do nothing [c]from [d]selfishness or empty conceit, but with humility of mind regard one another as more important than yourselves; 4 do not merely look out for your own personal interests, but also for the interests of others. 5 Have this attitude [e]in yourselves which was also in Christ Jesus,

It is clear that the Scriptures do not sanction "pride" given the reading above. We are to love others as we love ourselves or even in humility better than ourselves. However, this says nothing about the love that we should have for ourselves.

This is the common deception in churchian line of thought that because one thing is stated as potentially having more importance than another that the other thing is bad. Humility comes to mean an action of being "unselfish" and treating others better than ourselves all the time. In reality humility is an attitude that tempers our pride so we can more fully love God, ourselves, and others without becoming outwardly boastful and unwilling to serve others.

The essence of the Father, Jesus, and Holy Spirit is love, which means that the trinity is fully in love and thus unity with themselves. Insomuch that God is love, they are able to love us unconditionally. God is perfectly secure in His ability to love Himself that He isn't put off when people scream obscenities at Him, or deny His existence, or hate Him for whatever reason. Yet, in His love while we were yet sinners He sent Christ to die for us.

This is somewhat of a re-explanation of a similar concept to what I talked about in Identity Part 2 — Subtle rebellion where there is rebellion against God, yourself, and others. This is the key point because yourself comes before your neighbor. If you don't love yourself, how are you going to love your neighbor?

Think of all of the broken people in your life. I know people that are fatherless, drug addicts, porn addicted, divorce riddled, liars, cheaters, thieves, and the like. They do not know how to love God, nor themselves, or others. Yet, the change you see in the godly is first internal.

Those who are secure in loving God and loving themselves have internalized their identity. They have developed a value system for which they interact with the world based on the Scriptures. It is only then after loving God and understanding how to love themselves, that they are able to love others more fully. When others respond negatively to them they can realize that it is not them that the others are offended at the majority of time but the life experience which as colored their perception of the actions of others.

They aren't insecure in themselves and who God made them to be that they have to respond in anger, or in frustration, or in mistrust, or any other conflict of relationship. Instead, they can seek to understand and help the other person grow and strengthen the relationship.

Indeed, the gold standard is set three times in Ephesians 5:

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife > even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

The standard is set for a man to love His wife as Christ loves the Church. But what does that mean? The analogy that applies to Christ's love for the Church is reiterated as how a husband loves himself. Then it is reinforced again saying that a husband should love His wife as himself.

This is a direct parallel to the greatest commandment "love your neighbor as yourself" and Jesus' new command He gives us in John 13:34-35 and John 15:17: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

Thus, the standard is set. Love Jesus -> Love yourself -> Love your wife. All three as one.

Conclusion

The tripartite greatest command has a flow to it. Although no parts are more important than the other, the flowing action of understanding how to apply the Truth has far reaching consequences for Christians.

- Love God -> Love yourself -> Love your neighbor

It's a sound concept, but crazy to those of us who were indoctrinated with churchianized theology. As we seek to love God by developing our relationship with Him in the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, fasting, and the like, we more fully understand His great love for us. As we more fully understand His great love for us and learn how to love ourselves as He loves us, then we are more fully able to love our neighbors. This is the beauty of the logical nature of the Scriptures and responsibility hierarchy.

If this could be put a different way, it is prioritizing the personal relationship with God-yourself over that of yourself-neighbor. For out of the relationship with God we learn to love others as we are conformed to His image. It is in no way selfish to understand that you absolutely need to love yourself in order to more fully realize the responsibility of being a Christian, and ultimately the responsibility that comes with marriage if you desire to marry. If you cannot fully master your desires and needs with God and with yourself, then it is virtually impossible to love your neighbor without a full measure of grace.

Prioritizing others above your needs works for a time but leads to burn out. This is doing ministry without the love of God. Those who neglect God and themselves will burn out trying to love others because the Spirit of God is not working in them; they are subsisting off only their gifts and talents which are without repentance (Romans 11:29).

I know that as I more fully comprehend how to love and serve God and how to love and take responsibility for myself, the more fully ready I will be for the responsibility of marriage. It is not selfish to love yourself rather unselfish; it is part of the process that develops and prepares you for marriage. Love for God and for ourselves in mastery and discipline — tempered in kindness, long-suffering, and humility — allows the Spirit to work through us to love as God has loved us.

Understanding in regard to attraction

This is somewhat of a rhetorical question that again answers the “attraction” mythos: The vast majority of Christian men don’t know how much God loves them nor do they love themselves. If they don’t seek God and love and value themselves, then what woman will?

- Responsible for loving God -> Responsible for loving yourself -> responsible for loving your wife.

I’ve seen much confusion in the Christian manosphere as to why women are attracted to certain dark triad traits being that they are “evil.” Let me be clear: God did not make any mistakes in that women are attracted to narcissistic-like attitude.

Ultimately, we were created to fully love God, to fully love ourselves, and to fully love others. Women love narcissists because they fully love themselves. They see a man that fully loves himself and has placed high value on himself and they love it. However, the problem with narcissists is that they don’t love God nor do they love others. Thus, women in general are attracted to narcissists but are ultimately unfulfilled by them becaue they are selfish above all.

Narcissism is based solely off self interest whereas the love that Christians must exhibit is the tripartite love. The love of the self is not complete except with the Love of God and obedience to His commands and loving your neighbor as yourself. The love of God and the love of others is what tempers Christians from becoming narcissistic. Thus, it is good to love yourself as God loves you and created you, but not at the expense of a failure to love God and others.

This is yet another angle on identity in Christ and internal unshakable confidence that should result from it. Loving God results in loving yourself and loving yourself allows you to love your neighbor as yourself. All are to be conformed to loving one another as Christ has loved us.

On divorce

December 18, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Update: Last post in the series – Part 8 Actual Final

Divorce is an extremely divisive topic in Christianity and for good measure. So I'm going to parse the Scriptures today based on some research that I found and looked up which presents an interesting case. FN had a post today on recourse in marriage and listed the adultery clause which is false, and I was already planning to write this anyway.

About a month or two ago, one of the commentors on I believe Donal's blog post this in the comments on what "fornication" is before marriage. We recall that only Matthew has a fornication clause that permits putting away a wife whereas Mark and Luke do not. This article is 135 pages long.

I also came across another well researched article on divorce and mistranslation in divorce. I went back through the Greek and found it to be true. So given these two articles, I'm going to piece together what the Scriptures say on divorce given the context of what was being said when the Scriptures are written.

Passages on divorce in the Scriptures

To fully understand what Jesus is talking about we first have to analyze the OT Scriptures in which He is discussing. These are important in historical context because Jesus always refers back to the law, and then explicates His position on the fulfillment of the law.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.
>
> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
>
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against > her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.

>
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

There are two parts of "divorce" required of the husband in the OT covenant:

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

This is important to realize when we get to the New Testament where Jesus and Paul both discuss divorce in this context. Now, let's look at the New Testmanet Scriptures.

Note: I'm specifically using the KJV because almost every English translation has the wrong wording of the text from the Greek. Even the KJV has one mistranslation of the word as well.

> Matthew 5:31 It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement (apostasion): 32 But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, saving for the cause of fornication (porneia), causeth her to commit adultery (moichaō): and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced (apoluō) committeth adultery (moichaō).
>
> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
>
> 7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth > adultery (moichaō).

>
> 10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

Here are Strong's words for each of the highlighted wording:

> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.
>
> G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on > Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.
>
> G4202 — πορνεία — porneia — por-ni'-ah
> From G4203; harlotry (including adultery and incest); figuratively idolatry: – fornication.
>
> G3429 — μοιχάω — moichaō — moy-khah'-o
> From G3432; (middle voice) to commit adultery: – commit adultery.

Now let's look at the passages from Matthew in context starting with Matthew 19:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

You will note here that the Pharisees are intending to trick Jesus. When the Pharisees come to tempt Jesus, it is almost always about pitting Roman law against Jewish law and the discrepancies that crop out of out it.

This is very similar to other tricks that the Pharisees try to play with Jesus such as with stoning the adulteress woman. Roman law forbid the Jews from executing capital punishment; thus, if Jesus said not to stone the woman then He would be in violation of the Jewish law, but if Jesus said to stone the woman He would be in violation of Roman law. Jesus comes up with the elegant solution of let he who has not sinned cast the first stone.

Another example is when the Pharisees asked Jesus if they should pay taxes to Caesar. If Jesus said not to pay taxes to Caesar then He would be in violation of Roman law, but if He said that they should pay taxes to Caesar then he would be affirming Roman rule over the Jews. Hence, Jesus' elegant solution of rendering to Caesar what is Caesar's and to God what is God's.

Thus, in this case, if you know your Roman history the Romans considered "divorce" just sending the wife away out of the house. However, compared to Jewish law which we see from Deuteronomy, the husband must provide a writing of divorcement and then send the wife away. If Jesus says that a writing of divorcement is required before sending away, then He is subverting Roman law and they could accuse Him to be sentenced to death. If Jesus says that it is lawful to put away a wife without a writing of divorcement, then Jesus would be in violation of Jewish law and could be disregarded and stoned. Jesus provides the elegant solution that was from the beginning: that there should be no divorce.

> Matthew 5:31 It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement (apostasion): 32 But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, saving for the cause of fornication (porneia), causeth her to commit adultery (moichaō): and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced (apoluō) committeth adultery (moichaō).
>
> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
>
> 10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

First, you'll notice that in Matthew 5 that the KJV translator(s) and even Strong's dictionary put "divorce" in the context of apoluo. However, this appears to be false. You'll note that the wording of Matthew 5:32 is the exact same wording in the Greek as Matthew 19:9 except in Matthew 19 it is translated as "putting away" instead of "divorced" as it has been the other time.

Additionally, of the 69 times that apoluo is used in the NT, this is the only time that it is used for divorced in the KJV. The other 68 times it is used in the context of putting away, or Jesus dismissing/sending away the crowds, or Pilate releasing Barabbas from prison instead of Jesus. Thus, this appears to be a mistranslation in the KJV, and a mistranslation in almost every other English Scripture text. Even my preferred NASB has fallen prey to it.

Second, in Matthew 19:7 the Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly side-stepped their trap on pitting Roman law versus Jewish law. It follows then, given Jesus answer that there should be no divorce, that they question why Moses gave the law that they could divorce. Jesus responds that it is out of the hardness of their hearts which is clearly the case given what we see in the OT with Israel.

Third, Matthew 5:32 and Matthew 19:9 clearly state that husbands cannot put away their wives except in the cause of fornication, otherwise they commit adultery and she commits adultery. Fornication refers to pre-marital sex only. This case is built in the article I linked earlier, and Jesus is referring back to Deuteronomy 22 where the wife may be put away without a certificate of divorce if she was not a virgin (in the OT she would've been stoned).

This also agrees with Matthew 1:19 where Joseph was going to put Mary away.

> Matthew 1:19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

In this specific case, Joseph was not married to Mary (only betrothed), but Jesus is saying in this instance that if a husband did marry a woman who was not a virgin he could put her away without a bill of divorce.

Fourth, Israelite husbands could not claim a wife was not a virgin and then put her away if there was proof of their virginity. They could put her away if she was not a virgin though as per Jesus' words because there was no blood spilled — the cloth with the blood being the proof of the binding covenant of marriage and of virginity.

Fifth, this means that divorced men and women who are remarried do not commit adultery. However, their prior divorce means they are going against God's original design for marriage and sinning. The remarriage itself is not sinning. However, establishing a behavioral pattern of divorce and remarriage is quite questionable at best for a Christian.

We can see this in the disciples response to Jesus' instruction that what God put together let man not separate that it is better not to marry. This is because Jesus is implicitly stating here that there should be no divorce ever. There is no exception clause for adultery or any other reasons. Jesus responds by saying that most men cannot receive what the disciples have said.

Sixth, this unifies what Jesus says in Mark and Luke about there being a no exception clause for divorce given that what God has joined together let no man separate:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote > you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

>
> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (moichaō).
>
> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
>
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

Mark uses time compression in this instance to get right to the point of the story rather than Matthew's more long winded response. Lest you think this is a discrepancy in the gospels, Mike Licona explains the various rhetocal devices that authors from that historical period used. It wasn't only writers of the Bible that used them but also other Roman and Greek writers.

Luke pairs Jesus' comments on putting away with the parable of the unjust servant/steward. This is a direct analogy to, but different teaching than, to the trickery that the Pharisees tried to pull on Jesus in Matthew. The Pharisees loved their outward appearance and vain glory and obedience of the law. However, in their quest to be just and gain favor toward men, they were acting unjustly toward their Master which is God.

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

We can see here that Romans 7 talks specifically about a woman having a husband. A woman cannot have 2 husbands or she commits adultery. That brings up two points.

1. A woman that has been divorced does not have a husband and is free to remarry, albeit a man marrying her would best take heed because past behavior is indeed indicative of future behavior.
2. A woman whose husband has died is free to remarry.

Obviously, a widow is often a better choice that to marry a woman that has been divorced.

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
>
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid'-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
>
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee'-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
>
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

Paul could've just made it easier on us and used the word apoluo like Jesus did in the gospels; however, you can see they are pretty much synonyms here. This is consistent with what Jesus has said in Matthew, Mark, and Luke and what Paul has already stated in Romans. Don't be conformed to the law of the Romans/world and put away your spouse and marry another. However, if they do separate/leave the options you have are to remain unmarried or reconcile. This is also consistent with Jesus saying that there should be no divorce.

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou > shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

Note that Paul is referring to what He referred to earlier in 1 Corinthians 7: that the bondage that the spouse is under was putting away specifically and not divorce. This is the so-called exception clause. However, this seems to be only applicable in the times of the Romans since almost all countries, if I am not mistaken, require formalization of divorce.

The main question is then what if a believer is married and an unbeliever departs but there is no bill of divorce. Technically, given this Scripture the bondage is broken and that would allow the believer to remarry without a bill of divorce. Obviously, the in most cases the believer can file a no-fault divorce, but in the cases where they can't that may be an issue. It would be best to follow the earthly laws if at all possible.

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.
>
> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

You will notice in Malachi 2 that it is referring to the same circumstances as was during Roman occupation. The law of Moses basically gave the Israelites the right to divorce if they wrote up a bill of divorce, handed it to her, and then sent her away. However, the Israelites were dealing treacherously by sending their wives away without a bill of divorce.

The reason behind this is because if a wife was divorced she would receive back the dowry and the bride price which may have also included land. The Israelite husbands were sending away their wives without the bill of divorcement which allowed them to keep the dowry and bride price but also left the wife destitute and on the street.

Additionally, with a bill of divorce the wife would now be single and able to be remarried. However, as Jesus discussed with putting away without the bill of divorce the woman would be unable to be remarried without committing adultery which is a grievous sin before God. Since the wife was left destitute without the bride price and dowry back and unable to be married again to support herself, the Israelite husbands were basically condemning the woman to poverty and begging in a treacherous manner.

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast > thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach, and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

This is one of the reasons why Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity, and why Samaritans were treated like garbage by the Jews. They were no longer Jews because they have been divorced by God. This passage in Jeremiah 3 shows that God Himself divorces the Israelites, gives her a bill of divorce, and sends/puts her away into Assyrian captivity.

However, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away:

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord, Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement (sêpher 'êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. Thus, even though the Lord puts away Judah into captivity for their transgressions, He brings her back out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra, and remakes the covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

Conclusion

Judging from the understanding of the Scriptures it is clear that what they say on the topic of divorce is not actual common Christian — or perhaps specifically Protestant — thinking. A reading of Deuteronomy 22 and 24 in conjunction with Isaiah 50, Jeremiah 3, and Malachi 2 along with the NT Scripture references of Matthew 5, Matthew 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, Romans 7, and 1 Corinthians 7 paint this picture.

1. Christians should not divorce at all. What God has put together let man not separate (Matt 19, Mark 10).

2. There is no “adultery clause” for those who are married to divorce. (Matt 19, Mark 10).
3. Reconciliation is the only option for those separated/put away. Remarriage constitutes adultery (Isaiah 50, 1 Cor 7).
4. There was legalistic OT recourse for putting away if the spouse fornicated prior to marriage. This applies to zero Christians today as we do not live by the old law (Deut 22, Matt 5, Matt 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, Romans 7).
5. Abandonment by an unbeliever allows remarriage due to not being under bondage (1 Cor 7).
6. Remarriage is not considered adultery and is thus not sinful. However, reconciliation is better than remarriage. We know this by similar analogy: Judah versus Israel. Given what we know, previous divorce — whether believer or unbeliever — should be a big red flag warning. All believers should be wary of this (Matt 5, Matt 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, Romans 7, 1 Cor 7).

Jesus’ reference to fornication and putting away is His answer to the OT law on putting away without a bill of divorce. Following this today is legalism and not walking in the grace to which He has called us. His NT statement on divorce for Christians is “What God has put together let no man separate” which is why the disciples were taken aback and said it was better not to marry. Jesus said you shouldn’t divorce period, and there is no way to do it without sinning.

I’ve read up a fair bit on the Catholic tradition regarding marriage as a sacrament and how they handle annulments/divorce and remarriage. I think this model is probably the best in terms of holding to #1 even though it doesn’t specifically talk about some of the cases in #2-6. The statistics on divorce also bear this out with Catholics having the least of any form of Christian, even though there are substantially more annulments in the US than anywhere else. However, I suppose from the Pharisaical angle you could argue that “it’s the tradition of men” but such a tradition appears to be honor God more than other traditions.

There is more evidence and historical background than what I have presented here in the two articles at the top if you think that what I’ve presented is not convincing. Thoughts and critique are welcome.

Identity Part 5 — roots and heresies of identity

December 28, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The previous posts in this series focused on:

Behavior cycles and Identity — Understanding how we the interactions between our identity, experiences, and behavior.

Identity Part 1 — Foundations of how we identify with certain values and tenants of this life and how they affect us and what we should look for instead.

Identity Part 2 — Understanding rebellion against what our Identity should be in Christ.

Identity Part 3 — Internal and external aspects of identity, the differences, and the recalibration of their facets.

Identity Part 4 — Understanding that loving God -> loving yourself -> loving others, and that to truly understand the responsibility of others you have to love yourself.

Today I'll be discussing the roots and heresies that develop out of a wrong sense of identity.

Roots of identity in Christ — we become what we behold

Undering the roots of where our identity comes from is easy. To understand this, we need to understand how this concept works in the Scriptures.

> Exodus 33:7 Now Moses used to take the tent and pitch it outside the camp, a good distance from the camp, and he called it the tent of meeting. And everyone who sought the Lord would go out to the tent of meeting which was outside the camp. 8 And it came about, whenever Moses went out to the tent, that all the people would arise and stand, each at the entrance of his tent, and gaze after Moses until he entered the tent. 9 Whenever Moses entered the tent, the pillar of cloud would descend and stand at the entrance of the tent; and [e]the Lord would speak with Moses. 10 When all the people saw the pillar of cloud standing at the entrance of the tent, all the people would arise and worship, each at the entrance of his tent. 11 Thus the Lord used to speak to Moses face to face, just as a man speaks to his friend. When [f]Moses returned to the camp, his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, would not depart from the tent.

Moses speaks to God face to face which is pretty much unheard of because typically beholding the face of God would mean certain death. However, that's not the point here. The benefits of knowing God face to face are different than that of seeing what He has done.

> Psalms 103:7 He made known His ways to Moses, His acts to the sons of Israel.

David makes the same distinction here when prophetically talking about Moses. All of Israel knows His acts — the miracles, the signs, the wonders, and deeds — but Moses knew God's ways in His character, nature, and His identity.

We finally see the fulfillment of this come to pass in the New Testament in John 15 as Jesus speaks of our relationship with Himself and the Father:

> John 15:12 “This is My commandment, that you love one another, just as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this, that one lay down his life for his friends. 14 You are My friends if you do what I command you. 15 No longer do I call you slaves, for the slave does not know what his master is doing; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard from My Father I have made known to you. 16 You did not choose Me but I chose you, and appointed you that you would go and bear fruit, and that your fruit would remain, so that whatever you ask of the Father in My name He may give to you. 17 This I command you, that you love one another.

Likewise, Paul in 2 Corinthians 3 and 4 reveals the same truth to us, albeit in a way we can better understand:

> 2 Corinthians 3:12 Therefore having such a hope, we use great boldness in our speech, 13 and are not like Moses, who used to put a veil over his face so that the sons of Israel would not look intently at the end of what was fading away. 14 But their minds were hardened; for until this very day at the reading of the old covenant the same veil [e]remains unlifted, because it is removed in Christ. 15 But to this day whenever Moses is read, a veil lies over their heart; 16 but whenever a person turns to the Lord, the veil is taken away. 17 Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. 18 But we all, with unveiled face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are being transformed into the same image from glory to glory, just as from the Lord, the Spirit.

The most important part to realize here is a fact that I have only realized over the summer of this year — when I read the Scriptures I am looking at God’s unveiled face to us. Thus, when I am looking at God’s unveiled face, I want to see my reflection become like His reflection. Therefore, I need to challenge the beliefs and values that I hold dear to myself and put off any that are unrighteous, and instead take up His mantle of grace, mercy, and love instead.

Heresies of identity — the personal Jesus

The major probem that the vast majority of “christians” (or rather churchians) have when they read their Bible is they look through the lens of themselves. When they do this, they are not being conformed into God’s image but rather they are conforming the image of God to themselves. In other words, they look for the truth of what they see within themselves to be what is “right,” and they use the Scriptures as a justification unto themselves. They become the “truth” and God backs up what they say.

This is the most clear way to see what the “personal Jesus” or “personal God” is about. When something challenges their world view and they become uncomfortable, instead of examining themselves to see if there is anything wrong they look to externally justify their beliefs through whatever means necessary.

For feminists this is exemplified in holding up the “worst” parts of masculinity and using it as a blanket attack against men. Likewise, for seeing what the “ceiling” is for men in the fortune 500 and applying it as a blanket statement towards the vast majority of men who work blue collar jobs. In marriage both in society and and churchianity, whatever the other spouse did wrong is given as a reason for exiting the marriage. Whatever the person doing the divorce did wrong is inconsequential. Both God and others are abandoned at the expense of personal happiness.

The Father, Jesus, and the Holy Spirit become personal accesories that people go to when they are feeling down to lift up their spirits. The fact that God loves them means that their view of themselves is justified. The reason why this view is pervasive is because it is simply a half truth. Yes, the Father loves us even before we loved Him. However, He loves us so that we can become more like Him and desire to become His disciples.

The feeling of love that we receive from the Father is a true manifestation of His Spirit in us; however, the “feeling of love” becomes the truth rather than the Truth of “His love.” When feeling loved becomes the truth, you have people chasing the feeling of love in the world. This means that unhappiness is an indicator of a lack of truth, and in this deception the feeling of unhappiness is used to justify divorce, pride, lust, gluttony, wrath, envy, sloth, greed and all manner of evil.

Beholding the Truth

Thus, we must understand that the attributes of Him are the Truth to us. His love is truth. His mercy is truth. His grace is truth. His kindness is truth.

You can see this throughout the beautitudes in the wording that Jesus uses.

> 3 “[b]Blessed are the [c]poor in spirit, for (hoti) theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
> 4 “Blessed are those who mourn, for (hoti) they shall be comforted.
> 5 “Blessed are the [d]gentle, for (hoti) they shall inherit the earth.
> 6 “Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for (hoti) they shall be satisfied.
> 7 “Blessed are the merciful, for (hoti) they shall receive mercy.
> 8 “Blessed are the pure in heart, for (hoti) they shall see God.
> 9 “Blessed are the peacemakers, for (hoti) they shall be called sons of God.
> 10 “Blessed are those who have been persecuted for the sake of righteousness, for (hoti) theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
>
> G3754 — ὅτι — hoti — hot’-ee
> Neuter of G3748 as conjugation; demonstrative that (sometimes redundant); causatively because: – as concerning that, as though, because (that), for (that), how (that), (in) that, though, why.

Those who seek after truth with ‘causitively because’ or ‘demonstratively’ obtain either here on earth or as an inheritance that by which they seek. In other words, beholding the Scriptures, seeking Him in prayer, meditating on Him and His word, and the like is what will transform us to be like Him.

We can see this demonstrated all throughout the passage of 1 John 4:

> 1 John 4:7 Beloved, let us love one another, for (hoti) love is from God; and everyone who loves is [a]born of God and knows God. 8 The one who does not love does not know God, for(hoti) God is love. 9 By this the love of God was manifested [b]in us, that (hoti) God has sent His [c]only begotten Son into the world so that we might live through Him. 10 In this is love, not that (hoti) we loved God, but that(hoti) He loved us and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins. 11 Beloved, if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another. 12 No one has seen God at any time; if we love one another, God abides in us, and His love is perfected in us. 13 By this we know that (hoti) we abide in Him and He in us, because (hoti) He has given us of His Spirit. 14 We have seen and testify that (hoti) the Father has sent the Son to be the Savior of the world. 15 Whoever confesses that Jesus is the Son of God, God abides in him, and he in God. 16 We have come to know and have believed the love which God has [d]for us. God is love, and the one who abides in love abides in God, and God abides in him. 17 By this, love is perfected with us, so that we may have confidence in the day of judgment; because (hoti) as He is, so also are we in this world. 18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casts out fear, because (hoti) fear [e]involves punishment, and the one who fears is not perfected in love. 19 We love, because (hoti) He first loved us. 20 If someone says, “I love God,” and hates his brother, he is a liar; for the one who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen. 21 And this commandment we have from Him, that the one who loves God should love his brother also.

For as much as we understand the love of God, that is how much we love others.

If we don’t understand the nature of God, then we don’t reflect God. Thus, all of the things we do as Christians to have a personal relationship with God is to become more like Him, so that we reflect Him in our actions with others. This is all summed up in verse 19 — We love because He first loved us.

To the extent that we know the love of God we can demonstrate it to others.

This is nice to know, but why is it important?

Let’s take a look at a scenario or two that most of us recognize as familiar in the manosphere. I would say the vast majority of men that end up reading this blog have had “beta” fathers or absent fathers. Thus, most fathers don’t teach their sons about women or how to become a man anymore. That’s one of the major problems we see in society with the lack of masculine men coming up.

Because we are impressionable as children and we look up to our fathers, the way that our father acts is one of the ways that we acknolwedge how our heavenly Father is because we aren’t taught otherwise. Thus, if your father was a workaholic who never had time for you, then you may think of your heavenly Father as not having a lot of time for you or that He would be too busy to talk to you and understand you. If you had a father that was an authoritarian who focused on the rules and kept everyone in fear of him lest they be punished, then the majority of children under such a father will also think of their heavenly Father as that way.

This is one of the ways in which our past experiences interfere with our knowledge of who God is and how we view the actions of others.

If my father was a hypocrite to me saying that you should do what I say and not what I do then my impression of God and of others will be that of hypocrites. I will think that everyone is being deceptive, or trying to get their own way, or trying to hold me back, or doing things out of selfish gain. I will see the God of the Old Testament and of the New Testament and think: 'Wow this "God" is inconsistent because He was vindicitive and violent in the OT and now He is trying to be loving? What a joke.'

This is always magnified in any type of conflict. In conflict, our own personal biases become magnified to the extent that we relate what we are feeling and thinking through the lens of past behavior and experience. Knowing this is why I have come to personally calm myself down and not blame others. I attempt to understand why another person is feeling that way, and examine myself to see if I had any fault in the matter.

Another instance of this is "battered woman syndrome." As I alluded to in other posts, there is a innate reciprocality in personality types. A man who is physically violent will often be attracted to a woman who he can hit, and a woman who accepts physical violence will be attracted to a man who likes to hit women. The same is true of women who hit men and the men who accept it.

When you take these battered women out of the physical violent situation, there is a very high likelihood that they will end up in that situation again. Thus, you can see that the issue itself is not the violent man. The violent man she is with is just a symptom. The actual issue is within the woman herself. However, the difficult part about treating women like this is that they have internalized physical violence against them as part of their identity. Helping someone rewrite their identity is extremely difficult and even the best psychologists cannot do it well. The person themselves must want to change.

As I noted in behavior cycles and identity, these types of situations are reaffirming. There is an extensive psychological component in the vast majority of everything we see "wrong" with society that needs to be overcome. For example, obesity, resistance to exercise, chronic sleep deprivation, battered women, unmasculine men, masculine women, and various treatable diseases. While some people have the "willpower" to stop themselves, the psychological components via reward centers of the brain 'trap' people into realities of their own making. Breaking this is often extremely difficult. However, the power of Christ is one of the definite ways that this can be accomplished seen from first hand experience of others.

If you think you are all alone you will most likely end up all alone. If you think that people are out to get you then you will see all people as out to get you. If you hate exercise and never want to do it then you never will. Opening up the mind is one of the most difficult things to do because it is hard to look outside of past experiences and behaviors. This is the nature of the difficulty of changing the mind and changing the man.

Fixing these types of issues

The primary identity that God makes Himself known as in the New Testament is as a Father. The primary attribute that God imbues to us is Love. None of us have a fully understanding of the Father's Love because our earthly fathers could never display the full extent of the Father's Love to us.

Thus, to some degree we have to understand that we need to forgive our fathers for what they didn't teach us about the Father and His love. And we also need to understand that we need to give them grace and mercy because they are human like us. This will grab hold of the expectations and contrary views of things that we hold against our fathers and to love and understand them. Likewise, the same impressions that we had of our earthly fathers we need to know that our heavenly Father is so much more than we understand. This is why we seek after His kingdom and His righteousness.

This is the way to approach transforming the situations you are in that are not of God. I have struggled extensively with loneliness when I was a teenager, and it was only in the past couple years that I truly started to understand that loneliness is only of your own making. Even though God is always there and we can talk to Him and any time, I was in a prison of my own loneliness because I felt like I was lonely and it was self reinforcing. My body language told everyone that I was lonely and pushed people away.

If you've never realized that you hold everything to the standard of your experiences and the past behaviors of others this should be an epiphany moment for you.

When I realized this was the case for me over the summer, I started to take every one of my experiences and thoughts about others captive to Christ. It's very easy for us as human beings to focus on the negative. If someone did something bad or mean to me from my perception, I could think that they were being intentionally mean to me. However, what I've realized is that most people, even non-Christians, are rarely trying trying to be intentionally mean, deceptive, or underhanded. Rather, my perception was colored my other things in my past, and I projected my feelings and experiences onto them. This is why communication is so difficult. It's very easy to assume things in the midst of emotions and conflict.

For me it meant going back in my past to every one of my negative experiences and taking them all to Christ. This requires two parts:

1. Confessing things that we have done wrong to Christ.
2. Confessing things that others have done to us to Christ.

Most Christians have done most of the first thing. However, talking with various people in my fellowship during the summer and fall I've found that most Christians have not done the second. It is the things that others have done to us that color our perceptions the most on how people interact with us. Thus, releasing all of those things to God allows us to move past them and interact lovingly with those who may even be our enemies.

If you need a quick guideline, the easy way to handle these things as a Christian is to take everything against our source of Truth: God and His Scriptures. Additionally, this is what one of the specific areas of meditation is about — focusing on God's Truth to replace the lies in our lives.

Conclusions

It is important to realize these Truths that we become what we behold. I mentioned in Identity Part 2 — Subtle Rebellion and Identity Part 3 — Internal and external: when we take external experiences and internalize them as how things are this is often false. As I noted in this article, the Truth is from God and that is the only source we should be taking externally to internally to transform us from the outside in. All other transformation occurs from internal to external.

Strive for:

- God's Truth — Scriptures, prayer, meditation, fasting, etc — filtered through the lens of the Holy Spirit to build an internal unshakable foundation.
- External -> Internal — anything other than God's truth is from the world and should not be internalized as Truth otherwise you have to do some deep cleaning to be rid of those lies. This is reactive type of thinking and action and leads to destructive tendencies.
- Internal -> External — this is how God wants us to interact with the world. We are being proactive in our responsibility for our relationship with God and with others.
- Past experiences and behaviors — we need to understand that what is in our past should not reflect on how we view and interact with the Father and others. The Father can overcome this with His truth, but we need to acknowledge such things before Him and accept His grace, mercy, and healing from it.

We need to take our past experiences and behaviors that color our perceptions of God and of others to Christ to crucify on the cross. Then we need to replace them with His Truth in our lives that leads us to be proactive and responsible with them.

This is essentially what "taking off the old" and "putting on the new" is all about.

Headship is authority in marriage Part 4

December 30, 2014 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ballista will enjoy this post, although I still disagree with some of his arguments.

I wrote previously on the argument that kephale in particular is not exousia in marriage: Headship is not authority in marriage, Headship is not authority in marriage Part 2, Headship is not authority in marriage Part 3.

Having done more research on all of the instances used on kephale in the Scriptures (of which there are 76 times it is used), I conclude that headship is authority in marriage.

God brought to mind a clarification on the argument I was discussing. The "ability to punish" which is an innate part of the authority-obedience relationship of parents and children is quite different from the authority-submission and kephale-submission relationships. This is where I disagreed with ballista's use of paideuo which I still do regarding the authority-submission and kephale-submission relationships.

However, having already understood that authority is good, the fact that authority may be abused is not a rational reason to dismiss authority. Though, my argument was not based on dismissing authority but rather clarifying the intent, even though you can make the argument that Christ does the same thing with His humility toward us in Phil 2. Hence, why I still believe it to be a sin for a husband to directly punish his wife.

Thus, understanding where the line or boundary of a specific position is drawn does not change whether something is good or bad as that has already been determined by the heart and actions. For example, I could say that the position of sales clerk has X, Y, and Z responsibilities. That changes nothing with the fact that the clerk would never be permitted to steal which is a moral issue unrelated to such responsibilities. The two actions are unrelated to each other and relating them to one another is implying a relationship where there is none. Therefore, understanding the nature of headship and all of that entails is directly related to understanding the nature of God irrespective of any actions.

Thus, headship and authority are one in the same, and they are both good.

Additionally, regardless of whether a husband weilds the authority to punish or not in marriage or even whether it is a sin itself, the wife is still to submit to her husband as the head. This is why it does not matter in regard to the relationship if the husband weilds such authority or not; the duty of the wife is to be in submission to her husband out of respect for God and her husband.

This is why sovereignty of the husband means nothing in marriage: you can't force someone to submit. Which is why it is of supreme importance that a man vet a woman thoroughly prior to marriage.

 Note: there is a difference between consequences and punishment. Consequences are directly proportional to the actions. Authorities have the right to impose consequences. For example, the government imposes speeding tickets for speeding. Elspeth provides the example below in the comments about husbands removing credit cards because of the fiscal responsibility that is placed on the husband. On the other hand, punishment is unproportional to the act, and often done out of spite. Obviously, doing things out of spite is not what the Father is about nor should Christians be about.

A Christian understanding of relationship dynamics

January 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post is inspired by some of the commentary over at Donal's End of the Year off topic post.

A correct understanding of relationship dynamics is very difficult to see if you're a man who is not conventionally attractive to women and charismatic. Thus, I'm going to outline some concepts about the correct frame of view.

The "blue pill" / false reality

Nemesis' post is something I am intimately familiar with. I admit fully that this is how I understood things until I was more educated in relationship dynamics from the Scriptures and seeing the most successful relationships:

> Okay here is the thing about power dynamics in a relationship. The person who has shown the most interest and investment in pursuing the relationship is placed in the position of less power and must work to attain the other person's interest. The other person is put in the position of being the chooser. Now in the secular realm, the level of interest and investment see-saws between the male and the female like so:
>
> First, a guy approaches a woman and asks her out, or sometimes if they know each other, he attempts to kiss her. At this point it is the girl who is in the position of chooser.
>
> Second, if the girl accepts and all goes well, eventually the girl sleeps with the guy (either with or without "commitment" in the form of a prior offer of a boyfriend-girlfriend relationship). After this point she has invested more in the relationship and the guy is in the position of the chooser.
>
> Third, if the relationship continues well, the guy proposes marriage, once again putting the girl in the position of chooser, as she now has the ability to accept or turn down marriage, and is the one to generally exercise subsequent power of divorce if she so chooses.
>
> Now, if we're talking about a chaste guy who is waiting-till-marriage, this see-saw doesn't occur. He is placed in the position of pursuer throughout the courtship and must constantly work to demonstrate himself as a suitable mate to the girl who can sit back and decide at each point whether to continue the courtship or reject the guy's advances. The only way the guy can have any semblance of power in the courtship process is if the girl showed clear signs of interest prior to him asking her out.
>
> I contend that those of you who avoid showing IOIs to guys do so not out concern that it puts you in a dominant frame and the guy in a supplicant frame (it does not). Rather, you do so because you prefer to have the position of power and > choice and don't want to have to put yourself on the line. You wish to make the guy do all the work in courtship.

Although this view is false, for men who were raised by weak fathers or absent fathers this is absolute incontroverible a fact of life. Most of us men came to understand this world of view:

- We had to "risk" rejection to put the ball in the woman's court.
- We had to romantically attract the woman with flowers, gifts, and the like.
- We had to continually pursue her in some neverending chase.
- We had to "risk" rejection again asking her to marry us.
- If the woman is unhappy she can divorce (or in Christian circles the husband is blamed for marital failures and told to do better).
- And the like.

However, this is false given what we know of women who are indisputably attracted to their man. It only describes the feminist's fantasy: the so-called egalitarian relationship. In this, there is the guise of "equality" but in reality as you see by the bullet points the woman has all of the power while the man is qualifying himself to her. If this is your reality or how you perceive reality, you are already operating from the wrong perspective.

If you're stuck in it then you're doomed to repeat it.

The "red pill" reality and Christian's the Scriptural reality

First, let's look at the most successful relationships. This is the case for the type of man that most women want:

Women desire an "alpha" — a man with perceived value above hers — to court her. Depending on the woman she may or may not feign having the "choice" to choose whether she accepts him or not, but it is the man who has the real power because he can just move on and choose another woman and she knows it. All of the other actions are just superficial games to play, but the man has the real power always.

If women want an alpha they have to have the personality and ability to bring value to the relationship. Bringing value to the relationship is different between the sexes. But we already knew this. If women who are dating an alpha don't meet or exceed his expectations he'll just dump them for someone else.

I discussed this in I want you versus I need you. The beta NEEDS the woman. The alpha wants/desire the woman, but doesn't need her. One is unattractive and the other is attractive. I'm sure you can guess which is which.

For Christians, the Jesus-Church relationship is one of headship-submission as is the husband and wife. This is reflected in the above where the man is the alpha: she may or may not feign choosing him, but all of the power resides with Jesus or the man (who will become the husband).

Thus, we understand that if a man is ever in a relationship with a woman where he is worried about if she wants to be with him and desires him then he's doing it wrong.

This being the critical part for most Christian men to realize. If you don't have that knowledge — with the knowledge being power in this situation — then you're in trouble. Also, this must be tempered by the fact that this knowledge should not lead to puffing up but to actions of love.

However, let me first go back to one of the finer points that most men don't realize about rejection.

Rejection

The rejection in which a man approaches a woman to ask her out is not indicative of a loss of power. Rather, it's the extension of a desire. It's fine if women reject your desire to get to know you better because it's not a loss of anything at all. Desire is just that: it is not always met kindly by others except for God. Where a man's power resides in elsewhere.

A man's power resides in his commitment.

This should be an obvious analogy for Christians. Those who are committed to following Jesus are going to forsake everything they hold dear for him. No one is going to be more important than Jesus. Not a woman, not a girlfriend, not a wife will be more important than Jesus. Asking a woman out is in no way committing you to anything. You aren't risking anything of value to ask a woman out.

If anything, it is only in an engagement and marriage where a man is risking anything because that is where the commitment is involved. However, at this point the man should have the correct frame of reference above. If a man does not know if the woman he is with will absolutely 100% say yes to a proposal then he is operating from that incorrect frame of reference. A man should know that she wants to be with him and desires him. Thus, the commitment is truly trivial at this point.

Attitudes belie actions

To understand this we need to look past the actions and at the underlying attitudes in people. A woman who truly wants to be with a man will display it in her attitude and by extension of her attitude her actions. The attitudes you will typically see of women who strongly desire to be with their man are:

- humility
- respect
- gratefulness
- appreciation
- enthusiasm
- desire

She may do the right thing in a relationship, but if she is not displaying these attitudes then her heart is questionable. In a godly marriage, the attitude of respect towards the husband is what facilitates submission. If you truly respect/reverence authority then you will submit to it.

Of course, the direct analogy is that these are also good traits to look for in Christians who are willing to serve God. Christians are to act out of humility, respect, gratefulness, appreciation, enthusiasm, and desire toward God to love and serve others.

This, of course, is not a coincidence but rather an intention creation by God. The Father gives men the experience of the Christ-man relationship in order that man might be able to experience and see the cultivation of characteristics that he should be looking for in a wife.

Conclusion

Having understood this false reality before I truly encourage Christian men desiring to marry to read and reread if necessary to understand both what the Scriptures say on the Christ-Church relationship and the husband-wife relationships.

If at any point in the relationship where there is any question to who is in the headship seat or understand of who weilds the authority in the relationship then there is a massive black hole issue. Any man who ignores this ignores it to his own detriment. Women with control in relationships will almost invariably become the rebellious and nagging type.

Look for these attitudes both in women, and in your own relationship with God as a Christian:

- humility
- respect
- gratefulness
- appreciation
- enthusiasm
- desire

These characteristics tend to let you know if you're on the right track. It will reveal those who are earnestly seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness. And it will also reveal the type of attitude you should be looking for in a wife. These types of women will bring the most value towards the marriage, just as a Christian who operates in humility, respect, gratefulness, appreciation, enthusiasm, and desire to God will be fruitful for the kingdom.

- Behavioral cycles and Identity
- Identity – Foundations
- Identity Part 2 — Subtle Rebellion
- Identity Part 3 — Internal and External
- Identity Part 4 — Submit to the process of loving yourself
- Identity Part 5 — roots and heresies of identity

For Christians, this is why identity is important. Our identity is solely in Christ, and all of these things come out of Him. This way, we understand that we can operate in accordance to women from desire rather than need. If you haven’t been following I would suggest reading the whole series.

The basics

January 5, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

---

6 months ago a commentor contacted me about potentially writing a red pill primer for boys like Ian Ironwood's but in the context Christianity.

As far as I know, on the Christian manosphere there is only collections of posts discussing various topics typically spread out through multiple blogs. Thus, it's very hard for people to learn what are the basic premises and responses that Christians should have when looking at the "red pill."

I'm willing to do this in this new year, and I'd like people to contribute to it so it's not only me. If there is anyone interested, go to the about page and send me an e-mail and we'll talk about various topics that should be included in it.

Understanding faith and authority are critical to Christians

January 15, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There are only two times in the Scriptures that Jesus marveled.

> G2296 — θαυμάζω — thaumazō — thou-mad'-zo
>
> From G2295; to wonder; by implication to admire: – admire, have in admiration, marvel, wonder.

The more I understand Scripture, the more I understand that a relationship with God is about understanding it in the context of faith and that of authority.

> Mark 6:Jesus went out from there and *came into [a]His hometown; and His disciples *followed Him. 2 When the Sabbath came, He began to teach in the synagogue; and the many listeners were astonished, saying, "Where did this man get these things, and what is this wisdom given to Him, and such [b]miracles as these performed by His hands? 3 Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, and brother of [c]James and Joses and Judas and Simon? Are not His sisters here with us?" And they took offense at Him. 4 Jesus said to them, "A prophet is not without honor except in [d]his hometown and among his own relatives and in his own household." 5 And He could do no [e]miracle there except that He laid His hands on a few sick people and healed them. 6 And He wondered at their unbelief.
>
> Matthew 8:5 And when [e]Jesus entered Capernaum, a centurion came to Him, imploring Him, 6 and saying, "[f]Lord, my [g]servant is [h]lying paralyzed at home, fearfully tormented." 7 Jesus *said to him, "I will come and heal him." 8 But the centurion said, "[i]Lord, I am not worthy for You to come under my roof, but just [j]say the word, and my [k]servant will be healed. 9 For I also am a man under authority, with soldiers under me; and I say to this one, 'Go!' and he goes, and to another, 'Come!' and he comes, and to my slave, 'Do this!' and he does it." 10 Now when Jesus heard this, He marveled and said to those who were following, "Truly I say to you, I have not found such great faith [l]with anyone in Israel. 11 I say to you that many will come from east and west, and [m]recline at the table with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven; 12 but the sons of the kingdom will be cast out into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth." 13 And Jesus said to the centurion, "Go; [n]it shall be done for you as you have believed." And the [o]servant was healed that very [p]moment. (Also, Luke 7)

Faith, many would say, is an obvious one. That is at the core of Christianity itself. Wintery Knight has had some good posts on what "faith" is composed of namely: (1) notitia, (2) assensus, and (3) fiducia. In other words, (1) information such as Christ is risen, (2) confidence that the notitia is correct, and (3) conviction of its truthfulness or trust. This is why I specifically have a page dedicated to the veracity of the resurrection on this blog.

However, the other thing that Jesus marveled at is not so obvious at first glance. Jesus marvels again at faith, in particular the Centurion's faith; however, the centurion's faith is based on his understanding of the power of authority. I've alluded to this in the past few posts on Identity Part 6 Performance and desire and the 50 Shades of Grey analysis. It also builds off of the other posts that I would consider foundational concepts to understanding marriage such as structures of authority summarized, structures of authority before the fall, and authority is good.

The reason being that exousia is often referred to in the Scriptures as the "state of being" of authority whereas dunamis is the working out of authority in power. Dunamis is often translated as "power" or "miracles" or "mighty works" that were performed by Jesus and the disciples which obviously includes the one performed for the Centurion by Jesus. Here's a little bit on the translations if you want to know more.

> G1849 — ἐξουσία — exousia — ex-oo-see'-ah
>
> From G1832 (in the sense of ability); privilege, that is, (subjectively) force, capacity, competency, freedom, or (objectively) mastery (concretely magistrate, superhuman, potentate, token of control), delegated influence: – authority, jurisdiction, liberty, power, right, strength.
>
> G1411 — δύναμις — dunamis — doo'-nam-is
>
> From G1410; force (literally or figuratively); specifically miraculous power (usually by implication a miracle itself): – ability, abundance, meaning, might (-ily, -y, -y deed), (worker of) miracle (-s), power, strength, violence, mighty (wonderful) work.

There are two concepts within authority that need to be understood.

1. There are words and actions that are assumed with the roles and responsibilities of authority and submission.
2. There are words and actions that transcend authority.

For example, I explored two of the main concepts in Fear, respect, honor, and truth (phobeo & timao).

Respect/reverence/phobeo is an example of an attitude that is supposed to be assumed when you both involuntarily and voluntarily are placed under authority. Respect or reverence for to the authority because you want to please God and not men. Hebrews 13 makes it particularly clear why we should, even if we don't like it such as the way with which our current government is headed:

> Hebrews 13:17 Obey your leaders and submit to them, for they keep watch over your souls as those who will give an account. [e]Let them do this with joy and not [f]with grief, for this would be unprofitable for you.

On the other hand, honor is something that transcends authority. It is given from those under authority to those in authority — from children to parents, to the king (Eph 6:2, 1 Peter 2:17). It is given to all men regardless of status (e.g. 1 Peter 2:17). It is given to those who are disadvantaged such as widows (1 Tim 5:3). Is is given to those under authority such as from husbands to wives (1 Peter 3:7).

The vast majority of concepts in terms of Christians transcend authority. Such examples would be the fruits of the Spirit — love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness/meekness, and self control. These are concepts that should be applied in all manner of life regardless of if those are under your authority, you are under authority, or if there is no authority.

This is why it is all the more important to understand authority. If you know the boundaries in which authorities in this world operate then you will not walk out of the bounds of the Scripture but rather in it. Our faith is intimately tied with understanding the power of authority and walking within its bounds.

Christian women and the rationalization of attraction

January 17, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This was an interesting exchange over at Donal's post on what women find attractive in men. First, I write as a response to a woman's response to Donal's post:

> Donal, what I would have discussed is the difference between attraction and desire. Women typically get these confused because they don't know what they find attractive, and thus they associate what they find desirable with what they find attractive. Yes, we've gone over this many times before.
>
> For example, if being a Christian was considered attractive then all women — Christian and non-Christian — would be attracted to all Christian men. This is obviously empiracally false.
>
> What Gabriella describes is such traits that she finds desirable:
>
> "In my experience, after becoming a full out Christian (I was brought up in a Christian home) by brain did suddenly change and I certainly found different things attractive so there goes your "it doesn't happen" it happens all the time! I grew taste for things like humility, godliness and love for God, the depth of love he exhibits and truthfulness, basically, how much is this guy like Jesus was the question?"
>
> Let's be clear. Many Christian men have these traits. Except not all of these Christian men are attractive.
>
> I'm not going to say that these traits cannot be attractive. In some instances they are attractive. For example, a man willing to stand up to a woman in order to oppose her if she is off track in terms of a theological point or sinning is going to be attractive to a man because he will display to her that he is dominant and can be respect. Not because he is telling the truth. Discussing the truth is merely a byproduct of a man who has set God before women.
>
> On the other hand, a Christian man who tells a Christian pretty woman she is pretty is telling the truth. But that does not make a Christian man attractive to that Christian woman. Indeed, it may repulse her if the man says it in such a way that he is setting her up on a pedestal or thinks she is too good for him.
>
> Attraction and desire are two separate things. However, attraction and desire can overlap in certain circumstances. However, the majority of the time women talk about what is attractive to them they are telling you what they find desirable. Occasionally, you will get a woman who is knowledgable of what she finds attractive: confidence, knows-what-he-wants, looks, his talents, etc. I find this to be rare though.
>
> To men: the list in Donal's OP is true. Don't listen to women about what they find attractive. They're mostly wrong.

Then the reply:

> Okayyy, I was gone DS, but this went to my email and I saw my name in the preview and your post just HAD to be commented on. In case you weren't aware deepstrength, Christians and non-Christians alike, don't find arrogance and obstinance attractive in a man unless they have abuse issues, which you often find, and only after time goes by do they realize what is truly being displayed. However, the more worldly or carnal a person is, the more susceptible and inclined they are to be drawn to sinful or ungodly attitudes, mindsets and behaviors.
>
> In all honesty DS, you don't seem to know what true confidence is. People can foolishly be attracted to or confuse worldly "confidence" with true confidence. I always hated pride that was aired as "confidence" because I could see it for what it was. I think a lot of people don't understand sometimes the true nature of a quality they think they're observing or qualities that they seem to be drawn to. But as for confidence, true confidence can only be rooted in truth. It can only be found in Christ and is very different from what most people think confidence is, most people barely ever witness true confidence. What most people think is confidence and what is usually displayed, is extreme pride caused by deep rooted insecurity due to lack of identity. And honestly, no offense, the majority of the male population has serious problems here (not that females don't too). Ego/pride is completely repulsive and unbearable, the most unattractive trait ever.
>
> True confidence is knowing who you are in Christ, as our identities are hid in Him. A person only comes to true knowledge of themselves and thus security rather than insecurity by first knowing God . Every person has a deep longing to know, "Who am I" and someone who seems to know "the way" or the answers, makes for a good partner. The two major signals of confidence is a lack of fear and insecurity. Fearlessness and self assuredy are attractive for many reasons but fundamentally it is because it makes the person seem to possess the ability to love, as love is the absence of fear, an insecure person is self focused and unstable. Insecurity is driven by fear by not knowing God's true character and who you are in Him, it's a lack of identity. So you want someone who is secure and has a sense of self, this person has something to offer or bring to a relationship. They can give of themselves by being themselves. That's the key. Someone who is insecure is unable to exhibit love and affection to others as they're always worrying about themselves and are self-focused even when they seem to be doing acts of kindness, as their true underlying motive is self serving. They subconsciously "serve" or do nice things for others so they will like them and not feel rejected and possibly get something in return ect. So a guy who tells a girl she's pretty can be either repulsive or attractive based on his intent. Usually if it's a pedestal thing the guy is deathly insecure and thinks very little of himself so that is why pedestals don't work. But if he just felt like sincerely, > without selfish motive kindly and respectfully acknowledged “wow, you’re pretty” the girl would be flattered. You can feel the difference between a creep, an insecure people-pleaser and a truly nice guy.

>
> An insecure person also doesn’t make a good life partner because they’re uncapable of facing the challenges of life well. Confidence/faith again is the absence of fear, perfect love casts out fear, so someone who has a revelation of God’s love for them and knows God intimately will walk with this kind of confidence because they trust God and are not afraid. Therefore, they’re not trying too hard to control their life (or the people in them) and that is attractive because people were designed to be loved and therefore, find the qualities of God’s love attractive. Sometimes people who haven’t undergone transformation are attracted to the counterfeit or unsanctified qualities of a good partner. For instance a man who “knows-what-he-wants” can be found attractive because we were created to be creatures of purpose with destinies. Such a person knows who they are clearly which gives them and their partner a sense of direction and purpose and brings a greater sense of security. Someone with vision is hence attractive because everyone is longing for purpose ect.
>
> Also, truth be told, not many Christian men have those traits I listed. You said many non-attractive Christian men have those traits and that’s where you’re wrong. It seems you lack discernment and judgement. Exhibiting a characteristic or trying to practice it every so often doesn’t mean it’s really part of you. So I’d have to say, barely any men truly have such character. And being “Christian”, does not make you godly or Christ-like. It’s truly rare to find a Christian man who walks in a substantial depths of humility, purity and love ect. It’s clear to me that you operate primarily out of a carnal mind and have failed to renew your mind casting down thought patterns and reasonings that are of this world as your logic is based world views. It’s no wonder you’re single DS… I mean I was in utter unbelief when I read “Don’t listen to women about what they find attractive. They’re mostly wrong.” How prideful and foolish and deceived are you???? Please objectively reflect on your words. Like I can believe you could say something like that and not say ‘Hey, this is a ridiculous statement, let me rethink this’. You can never truly love someone that you don’t consider an equal or “as yourself”. One of the main issues of relationships… and one problem you obviously have. You think women want to be dominated and corrected from some pretentious jerk? No, a wise man who can humbly bring my errors to my attention can catch my eye because he is not afraid to be honest and can help me grow in life where a man pleaser isn’t showing me true love but hurting me in the long run. I dont need a butt kiss I need someone who will sharpen me. That’s a true partner. But a man who thinks I can’t be taken seriously and that he know more about me and my sex than I do because I’m an inferior silly woman is completely abhorrent. =you sadly.. Good luck finding a wife…

1. First, let’s get down to the nitty gritty. Quite a bit of shaming tactics in said post above. Sadly, I think she hits most of them, which indicates her egalitarian mindset is ingrained in feminism:

> 'The Catalogue of Anti-Male Shaming Tactics'

Women have a difficult time separating an argument from a personal attack although the vast majority of men have difficulty with this too. Having to resort to shaming tactics shows insecurity in an argument, which is ironic because it is the same thing that I am accused. This is psychological projection which has been pointed out in the 'sphere for a while.

However, I'm curious why women tend to resort specifically to shaming tactics in particular. Whereas men tend to use many different logical fallacies if they don't have a firm argument, women tend to resort to shaming tactics which falls under ad hominem.

Is it because women want to put down the other person in order to feel better about themselves? Or is it because they instinctively know there are innate sex differences, even if they tell themselves that there aren't? Or is it some other reason(s)?

2. Second, the part I find most interesting is the ability of the female mind to rationalize attraction the way they want.

It's quite obvious that there are many non-Christian men who are attractive. Why else would many Christian women try to missionary date? Or come back to God after they have had their fun? Or get seduced by the big bad jerk? Or say there are no good [attractive] Christian men? Really, there is no shortage of stories of 'Christian' women who do this, so reality clearly disagrees with what she is saying.

On the other hand, it is true that a godly Christian women SHOULD be unattracted to these men. However, it's not because these men are unattractive; they are attractive. Lack of desirable traits should destroy attraction. The lack the desirable traits for marriage such as the fruits of the Spirit — humility, patience, kindness, goodness, etc. as well as fidelity, loyalty, commitment, and the like — kill any latent attraction for ungodly men if a woman is truly following after Christ.

In this respect, this becomes the faulty assumption that because such non-Christian men are "unattractive" that is taken to mean that godliness is attractive. This is clearly shown to be false as if godliness were attractive you would see non-Christian women lining up to date Christian men.

3. Third, she does make some good points on confidence, identity, and insecurity which I have written on before. The vast majority of Christian men are not firmly rooted in Christ. However, these are muddled by the incorrect conclusion.

Note that the premise is initially good and then it goes off the rails in the conclusion. God created men and women to be firmly rooted in Him: to have full confidence and no insecurity in their dreams and passions. However, this segues incorrectly to God created godliness to be attractive.

In reality, God created these "facets" of human nature — personality/power, status, athleticism, looks, money — to be attractive to women. And it was good. The fact that both non-Christian men and Christian men can exhibit those facets is not a knock against God. After all, what He created is good. It is a knock against humans that don't choose to follow Him and instead use their talents and attractiveness for nefarious purposes.

I think Christian women who argue for that attraction is based on godliness forget that God created humans and human nature to be good and pure in the beginning. It is only through the fault of humans that it was derailed. It's an observational truth if I admit say Jessica Alba or Scarlett Johansson is attractive although she may not be a Christian. Likewise, if a woman says Ryan Gosling or George Clooney or whoever is attractive that's true. It is not a "sin" against God to admit that godliness is not attractive in itself nor to admit that non-Christians are attractive either.

Attractiveness is neither good or bad. However, when you equate godliness and other desirable [Christian] traits as attractive, you assume that attractiveness is good. When you assume that attractiveness is good, this leads to other heresies. For example, wives divorce their husbands because they feel unloved or unhappy when that is only a symptom of a lack of respect and attractiveness for their husband and for God's Word. You can see how creating false equivalencies can undermine the Scriptures.

> It's clear to me that you operate primarily out of a carnal mind and have failed to renew your mind casting down thought patterns and reasonings that are of this world as your logic is based world views. It's no wonder you're single DS...

Because godliness is equated with attraction when the Scriptures say no such thing, the logic is twisted into shaming tactics for not being "Christian" in my thought processes.

4. Fourth, to drive the absurdity home there is one easy example to make about status and talent that is unequivocably true.

The man who plays guitar for the worship team is more attractive than the man who helps out with parking in the parking lot or helps set up the seats for sunday service.

Why? There is an inherent status and talent (which falls under athleticism) that comes with playing music and leading the congregation in worship as opposed to serving in other capacities. While they are both playing roles in the body of Christ to ensure that a Church functions at full capacity, one is more attractive than another.

This is not an example that most Christian women who falsely believe that godliness is attractive can deny. However, they may rationalize it to be something different than it is.

5. Lastly, talking about attraction seems to flip a trigger in women that it doesn't in men.

I would say from my discussions with the vast majority of men that we understand that we are sexually attracted to women who dress like sluts and prostitutes, but that it would be unwise not to take these thoughts captive to Christ. Likewise, since men are attracted to physical appearance primarily there are many non-Christian women that are attractive but that we would not consider marriage prospects because of their lack of faith.

For some reason, this goes out the window in a discussion with the vast majority of non-red pill initiated Christian women. They cling to the fact that they believe that godliness, humility, and the like are attractive even when it has been empirically proven false nor does the Scriptures state that this is the case. The Scriptures are indeed Truth to teach us how to live, but they don't contain all truth. God is simply immeasurably more than even His Word, and His Word is more than enough to teach us how to live. However, the Scriptures don't really discuss attraction at all from a female's perspective unless you count phobeo — fear, respect, reverence — from Ephesians 5 and 1 Peter 3 as the attitude that starts to stimulate attraction which may be the case.

I remember a while ago about a discussion, I think at Donal's place, where women were relating their experiences when being around attractive men. They said it was almost impossible to resist an attractive man, especially if they were alone with him. Perhaps this is why Christian women are so sensitive about attraction because they know how overwhelming it may be if they don't resist non-Christian men on their walk with God?

Alternatively, the most logical explanation may be that Christian women may want to paint themselves as pious and religiously devoted at all expenses. Ironically, even going so far as to lying to themselves and others about it. This is a performance based mindset which is simply not a correct identity in Christ, but I think it may be evidenced in the post above because of the amount of shaming tactics and psychological projection involved. However, although they may be "lying" to themselves I can't tell if it's conscious or unconscious and with or without intent. Know presents an interesting response because it ranges from everything to rebellion against God, to missing the mark, to deception. All of these things are bad, but the degree differs.

Discussion is welcome on this as I haven't seen this topic explored that heavily from a Christian point of view. I'm curious about any other thoughts about my observations and questions here.

P.S. Whatever the case, I still would not recommend listening to women on what they find attractive as it seems they cannot consciously or unconsciously distinguish what is attractive and desirable to them. The obvious analogy being that a fisherman asks other fishermen how to catch fish not the fish.

10 women Christian men should not marry

January 17, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I saw this post on facebook, and clicked on it expecting the usual trope. It actually turned out to be pretty good given what we know about about the nature of women:

http://nycpastor.com/2014/12/29/10-women-christian-men-should-not-marry/

Corollary: http://nycpastor.com/2014/10/23/ten-men-christian-women-should-not-marry/

The comments are particularly enlightening if you want to see a variety of typical emotional responses.

His main mistake is attempting to engage the “Christian” feminists and the like in logical debate regarding the Scriptures. I’ve made this mistake before, even on this blog. They don’t care about what the Scriptures say. Rather instead they say the Scriptures support their opinions without referencing any, and the typical ‘don’t judge’ passage. What they “feel” is right is their truth and not what the Bible says.

However, he does seem to understand that this reaction is normal because of Scriptural quotes from all throughout the NT in defending his points. Likewise, he doesn’t give in to any of it. Kudos.

If I lived in NYC I’d check out the church.

Everything you see is a symptom

January 18, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There have been some female comments (well, months ago now) on deciding to be happy, stop being so afraid, husbands neglecting wives, and husbands not helping around the house. All of them dance around the same issue.

As you more fully understand human nature, you should begin to understand that everything expressed is a symptom. After all, remember what Jesus says:

> Matthew 15:15 Peter [f]said to Him, "Explain the parable to us." 16 [g]Jesus said, "Are you still lacking in understanding also? 17 Do you not understand that everything that goes into the mouth passes into the stomach, and is [h]eliminated? 18 But the things that proceed out of the mouth come from the heart, and those defile the man. 19 For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, [i]fornications, thefts, false witness, slanders. 20 These are the things which defile the man; but to eat with unwashed hands does not defile the man."

There are alway two sides of the same coin in relationships where things go haywire. The heart of one and the heart of another. In marriage, it is the heart of the husband and the heart of the wife.

Happiness and contentment are relative experiences. External emotions are solely cultivated in how we act and in how we respond to others. It is our attitude which filters the so-called positive or negative emotions as good or bad respectively. In other word, it is the glass half full versus the glass half empty. However, these are not the be-all-end-all. I've discussed before about anchored emotions and anchored souls in terms of how we are to view our emotions in light of God.

Everything that human eyes see is a symptom of the state of the heart,

I had written parts of this post up a while ago, but the post on TRP about ideology and art brought it up to the forefront again. Essentially, feminism comes up with disturbing art which reveals the state of the underlying heart and attitudes that come with it.

The same is true of almost everything that we see in broader culture. For example, I heard this one a while ago that when you examine it more closely is true. Rap music. It arose out of the black culture in america. When you examine its themes, you can clearly see that rap music combines various themes such as lamentation, heart break, jadedness, and the do-what-you-gotta-do violence mentality that has sprung up from a lack of fatherhood and positive male role models.

Art, at a base level, is expression of the state of the soul.

If you ever wondered why you "like" with certain music, paintings, writing, and other art forms its because we recognize and connect with the expressions of the content therein. Humans were made for connection and relationships which is why God walked in the garden with Adam, and why He said it was not good for Adam to be alone and created Eve.

Thus, when we listen to music that we "like" at the fundamental level there is the implicit acknowledgement this was produced by someone we can relate to. They went through the same experiences, and their experiences stimulated them to authentically recreate them in this art form.

In my opinion, this is also why the Christian music industry suffers compared to the secular one. The secular one is authentic about their human experiences, while the Christian one is rooted in a lot of churchian heresy and inauthenticity.

David's Psalms are so relatable and hence authentic because he was real with His life. He wrote about not just His good experiences and uplifting nature of His walk with God, but he also wrote about the dark times of his life including his sin.

Likewise, actions that we engage in only reveal what is in our heart. For example, I've personally struggled with pornography in the past, and lust is still something I have to fight very hard against. The sex drive itself is good but when not exercised in the proper context it is evil — the proper context being marriage. And exercising what is good in improper contexts is a symptom of a lack of self control and generalized idolatry of elevating selfish desires over God.

In other words, I feel — in this moment — that my soul needs something I can provide to it on this earth that is more important than God. Even simply coming to this realization should help you in your struggle with any sin that you have. It is likewise the understanding of needs versus wants. There are truly no things we need other than God, but elevating wants to needs makes them into idols.

On complementarianism versus egalitarianism

I think I've made this point before in some comments, but never written it up formally in a post.

Complementarian is not about "equality." Obviously, if you are in any way familiar with the manosphere and associated blogs you should already know this firmly. However, what is the true reason?

We know that God is good, and God is the ultimate authority. It also stated in the Scriptures such as Romans 13 and 1 Peter 2 to obey earthly authorities without even mentioning the Scriptures on husbands-wives. The fact that egalitarians almost always go straight to the "what if there's abuse" is the underlying assumption that authority is bad rather than good. If authority is good, then what the Bible says about authority is also good. However, is authority is bad, then they can throw out what the Scriptures say to live in fear of abuse of authority and not love (1 John 4).

Thus, the root issue is almost always that Christians who believe in egalitarianism have had experience(s) in their past where authority was abused. This means that they feel, on a fundamental level, that authority is bad.

When feelings based on previous experiences collide against knowledge — even knowledge of the Word of God — the feelings almost inevitably win in the vast majority of circumstances.

Thus, it is futile to argue with egalitarians unless you examine the root issue. Some will be responsive to it, but others will hate that they're being "psychoanalyzed." You can only do what you can and leave the rest up to God, but knowing and shooting for the root of the issue will at least bring it to the forefront in their mind. Maybe God will use someone else later or the Scriptures or prayer or other things to change their mind in the future.

Conclusions

The main thing I want to point out is that if you have ever prayed to see people as God sees them you now have a logical way to implement this in your life. The vast majority of actions and attitudes that you see are only symptoms of the state of the heart. To examine the state of the heart, you have to use backwards induction on the behavior cycle.

> Experience -> feelings -> thoughts -> behaviors -> expererience

Starting with experience and working backwards:

- Experience: egalitarian relationships are so much better than headship-submission because I'll never be able to be abused.
- Behaviors: Only seek out an egalitarian and equal relationships.
- Thoughts: egalitarianism and "equality" as opposed to headship-submission.
- Feelings: have bad feelings about authority
- Experience: had past bad experience(s) with authority figures who abused their power.

As you can see, the underlying issue is not that someone has chosen a Scripturally incorrect view. It is that they have experiences and feelings that have showed them authority is bad because it can be abused, and then it sends them down the path of believing what they have felt and expereinced over the Word of God.

Thus, we could say that effective leadership and/or headship is not about fixing symptoms, it is about examining the roots of the issues and facilitating their removal.

The key question is to keep asking why. Why do they have thoughts that egalitarian relationships are better than complementarian? It's not about looking for a Scriptural answer: they already disagree with the Scriptures. It's about looking into their past to see why they are going to affirm feelings and experiences above the Scriptures.

You can see that arguing about logical thoughts about Scripture is fruitless against the emotional outbursts of churchians in my previous post about NYC pastor's 10 women men should not marry. Feelings and experiences have become their truth. But the true question is why.

Once you can expose the lie, it can be dealt with.

Expectations of Christian and secular women

January 20, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was talking to one of my friends a week or two ago about some of the differences between Christian women and secular women. We were talking about the past couple months of our interactions with Christian women and seeing where attraction led as we are both looking to get married.

To preface this he's not RP, but he does understand women to some decently good degree. Although I have talked with him before and we disagree on some of the understanding of male-female interactions in terms of Christianity which does still reveal somewhat of a BP and/or feminized mindset. Whatever the case, I would estimate he's at least 80% better off than the average Christian man with women.

The conversation eventually turned to expectations.

Expectations

Expectations play a major role in the phases of initial attraction when meeting a potential spouse because they serve as disqualifiers. Obviously, some are "red flags" while others can be "yellow flags." A red flag for a Christian would be dating a non-Christian (2 Cor 6). If someone doesn't meet expectations right off the bat, we as humans tend to categorize them into the won't marry ever category.

Obviously, the filter that Christian women have when they meet a man is the old "is this man husband material" versus a secular woman's "insert expectations here" where it may range from is he attractive enough to have sex with, or is he boyfriend material, or other types of things like that. The point being that Christian women compare to a higher standard right off the bat which makes expectations harder to achieve.

Don't get me wrong. As a Christian man and talking to various Christian men, we all do this too to some extent as well. However, we know that attraction is more nebulous for Christian women and not tied directly to physical appearance like it is for men. Thus, it's more detrimental for Christian women to initially dismiss men right off the bat for marriage material if they lack attraction to them.

Given the state of the men in Christianity, the majority of the dismissals would probably be considered right in the overall scheme of things if we are telling Christian women to only marry men they are attracted to. However, there is some sizable minority of men that don't make the cut.

Sadly, I find myself experiencing the sad fact that I often enjoy talking to non-Christian women more because there isn't the expectation that things must be focused on God either overtly or subconsciously. Even in this atmosphere, a sizable amount of my conversations with non-Christian women do involve some aspect of how I live my faith. Ironic, no?

However, the really crazy expectation with [the majority of] Christian women is that there is some non-verbally expressed barometer of how much she expects you to talk about God — too much or too little and she's not interested. I've been on both ends of that one before. Interesting how some people think they can determine how "spiritual" or "religious" someone is about how much they talk about God. I don't really want any part of that one.

Obviously, I don't think I'm alone in this experience.

Expectations and atmospheres

Anyway, aside from that analysis I made the point to my friend that because women are women, the fact that Christian women have additional Christian expectations on men aside from being also attractive means that it is much easier for Christian men to talk to secular women. Men generally can sense a pressurized atmosphere of expectations when they are talking with a woman, even if they don't overtly recognize shit/fitness tests.

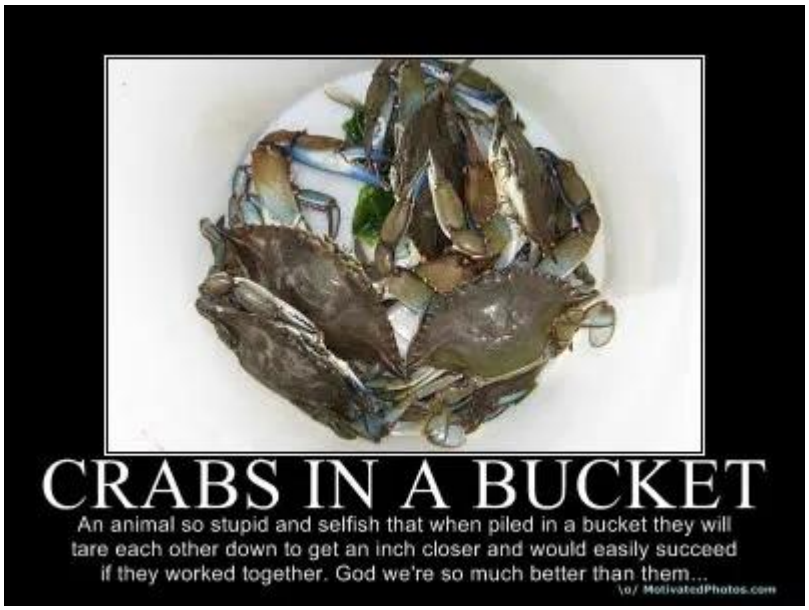
This leads to the interesting phenomena that expectations that are set change the atmosphere into one where the expectations trend towards being met. For example, most men don't have the ability to ignore expectations with pure outcome independence, so often the case is that because of the perceived expectations Christian men will end up not expressing themselves with as much confidence as they usually do moving throughout life (however much that may be). Thus, the high expectations create and warp the atmosphere around Christian women's interactions which set up an environment for failure for men.

In other words, the more expectations you have the more likely you are to be discontent. Expectations aren't bad in themselves. We have faith and trust in God that He will far exceed our expectations with His love, grace, and mercy. However, the majority of Christians have taken on a performance mindset which is at odds with the Scripture. Expectations combined with a performance mindset creates negative atmospheres and leads to said discontent, complaining, whining, and the like which are summed up in:

> Where have all the good men gone?

"Good" being the signal that there are expectations and that men are failing to perform up to those expectations. Performance based mindsets will never be satisfied much like unrestrained hypergamy.

I'm not going to say that Christian men are immune from this as I have been guilty of doing this exact thing as well. It's definitely something to take into account for both Christian men and women looking to get married. But as I said earlier because a woman's sexual attraction is rooted in PSALM and not primarily looks as it is with men that women need to be aware that they can more easily self-select out Christian men without giving them a shot.



The real purpose of Ephesians 5:21

January 21, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've already written on the context of why the mutual submission passage does not apply to marriage. In marriage, there is already the structure of authority of headship and submission.

However, the real reason that this verse exists is because it is directed at the heart of human nature:

> Ephesians 5:21 [a]and be subject to one another in the [b]fear of Christ.

I didn't even make this photo, and it fits perfectly. Aside from that "tare"/"tear" spelling mistake. Can't tell if it's intentional or not.

Crab bucket mentality. If you remember back to my summary of Eph 5:1-20 passage from the mutual submission post, in one line it's about exposing the unfruitful works of darkness and instead walking in the light.

Thus, the two choices when there is no authority present among believers in Christ are:

- Undergirding each other in love, or
- Pull each other down.

Given the prayer of Jesus to God of John 17 for believers to be as one, we understand that when there is no authority structure present Christians are to build each other up and not tear each other down. This is of primary importance acting out and becoming one as Jesus prayed.

Harvard Business School advice

February 4, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Stumbled onto a list of advice from Harvard Business School graduates in 1963 from one of the financial subreddits or TRP. Not sure which. Doesn't really matter. Overall, pretty good advice in most categories. There is a bit of bad advice such as the appearance of "happy wife, happy life" and obviously if you're a Christian take the spirituality section with a grain of salt. But overall, great advice to learn how to be successful in a lot of different areas. Check it out.

- Chapter 1 Careers
- Chapter 2 Marriage & Family
- Chapter 3 Business
- Chapter 4 Leadership
- Chapter 5 Wealth
- Chapter 6 Growing Older
- Chapter 7 Charity & Spirituality
- Chapter 8 Happiness & Success
- Chapter 9 Turning Points
- Chapter 10 Life's Lessons

In other news, I'm still around but I've been really busy. Not posting much might continue for another month or two. I am working slowly on posts and hopefully can get some time in the future to work on the primer as well.

Attitude and variable answers

February 4, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Another brief post. I think this one is informative from an attitude stand point. One commenter on this TRP thread comments:

> What should he have answered if she directly asked him if he would mind her cheating?
>
> I know the “correct” TRP answer is yes, but why?

One of the TRP endorsed commentors responds:

> Wrong. The correct answer is “no”.
>
> When you tell your girlfriend that you don’t care if she cheats, what you’re sub-communicating is that she is insignificant and replaceable.
>
> Women understand implicitly that their fidelity is their most valuable resource. It’s why they go to the greatest lengths to deceive and defy you when exploiting it.
>
> Women also understand that sex is an inexpensive commodity for powerful men. If she won’t give it to him the way he wants, he’ll easily get it elsewhere.
>
> Here’s an example of a guy doing just that. Note how the girl backpedals when her boyfriend gives her the boot. She tries to backwards-rationalize her slutty inclinations as innocent curiosity and open-mindedness. Also note how boyfriend’s indifference makes him seem so much more powerful:
>
> http://www.redditlog.com/snapshots/32294

In general, men need to learn how to be flexible with any situation. The “correct” answer here is “it depends.” Obviously, you can say no and women will implicitly pick up on the psychology like the other commentor explained.

However, if you do say yes then there also needs to be non-chalance and implication that the relationship will be terminated. For example, “Sure you can cheat honey. But to me when trust is destroyed relationships inevitably evaporate.”

The “threat” is not “yes or no” but male revocation of commitment whether implicit or explicit coupled with a lack of neediness.

In this case, as Christians the more assertive and truthful answer is the second one as opposed to lying to her and hoping she’ll pick up why. If she cheats, the relationship is over but phrased in such a way that it’s subtly explains the consequences. Blunt answers often come off as too harsh for women as seen in the OP of said reddit post. However, blunt answers are sometimes needed, but thi is not one of those cases. Though if you’re a Christian and your girlfriend/wife is asking about cheating you’re already probably sunk.

My main point being from an exchange such as this is that attitude matters whether you choose the explicit or implicit route. A situation where a girlfriend/wife tests her man could just as easily come in the form of “does this make my butt look big?” or “is it OK if I go out clubbing?” or some other “permission” based test where the correct answer is neither “yes or no” but the attitude behind it. In more serious cases, it may be that the relationship is important but if she violates your trust that there will be consequences. In other cases that are smaller you can tease her about it and not answer seriously.

Your attitude tells me everything I need to know

February 8, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Having discussed this obliquely in the previous posts, understanding this statement is one of the most critical to understanding people.

> Your attitude tells me everything I need to know

Heart -> heart postures/attitudes -> actions

Since we cannot see into someone's heart, the attitudes that they have towards themselves and others are going to be the tip of the iceberg closest to the water. I can see someone do something incorrect and wrong, but if I know they have the right attitude toward it they can improve. An incorrect attitude toward learning will be the result of pride: they will not accept change. However, a correct attitude toward doing something incorrect is out of humility: they are willing to be corrected and able to make changes from there.

This is the understanding will change what you look for in a prospective spouse from focus on the external actions to the underlying attitudes of them.

For example, in a Christian man's search for a wife, obviously he's going to want to look for a woman who is solid in her foundation with Christ.

1. Heart — wants to honor God by being obedient to his Word to love others.
2. Attitudes — patience, kindness, goodness, humility.
3. Actions — manifested in her desire to serve at church and other functions.

The reason why actions are less important than attitudes is because you can have similar women such as EAPs in the church with this line of thinking:

- Heart — is self absorbed and is looking for a husband
- Attitudes — may display impatience, lack of kindness, lack of humility especially when she doesn't get her way.
- Actions — crosses the I's and dots the T's serving at church and other functions.

As you can see, on the surface the actions may look the same, but the underlying attitudes show the true story. This is the difference between submission and respect. Respect is the attitude and/or understanding of the nature of how authority works. Submission can be performed with or without respect.

As Christians our fear/respect/reverence of God motivates us to desire to follow His laws including submission to earthly authorities where it is due. The same attitude should be present in those that fear God in any relationship they are in whether it is Christians to the Church, wives to husbands, or us to any institution or workplace in which we are present. When we lose the attitude of respect, this starts us down the road to rebellion. After all, if we don't respect those above us in authority we are more likely to not submit if things get difficult or our feelings get hurt.

Attitudes are what I primarily look for in all facets of life now because they are the closest thing we can perceive to the heart of those we interact with. Whether it's talking to family, friends, non-Christians, Christians, or potential women for marriage. If you know their attitudes, you can almost invariably predict their behavior.

What they say and what they do gets you on the right track. It should be congruent with what they believe. However, even if they're saying the right things and doing the right actions if their attitudes do not align with that then it's a ticking time bomb. People can only fake for so long before their true nature comes out.

> 1 Timothy 1:5 But the goal of our [a]instruction is love from a pure heart and a good conscience and a sincere faith.

I like this verse from Timothy because it presents the 3 things that are essential to living in agape love. A pure heart cleansed before God, the Spirit working in us as only God is good to make our conscience good, and sincerity/unfeigned faith that eliminates the fakeness so that our attitudes align with our words and actions.

Identity Part 6 — performance and desire

February 9, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The previous posts in this series focused on:

Behavior cycles and Identity — Understanding how we the interactions between our identity, experiences, and behavior.

Identity Part 1 — Foundations of how we identify with certain values and tenants of this life and how they affect us and what we should look for instead.

Identity Part 2 — Understanding rebellion against what our Identity should be in Christ.

Identity Part 3 — Internal and external aspects of identity, the differences, and the recalibration of their facets.

Identity Part 4 — Understanding that loving God -> loving yourself -> loving others, and that to truly understand the responsibility of others you have to love yourself.

Identity Part 5 — Knowing the roots and heresies that develop out of a wrong sense of identity.

Today I'll be discussing the difference between performance and desire.

Understanding performance and desire in the context of being a Christian

Understanding the difference between performance and desire is critical to understanding the difference between how the kingdom of heaven works. There was a great post recently on the orthosphere about a father's advice to his son on becoming a man. h/t Free Northerner.

To run through this very briefly, what we understand of salvation is that we are saved solely by grace, but good works are a result of that salvation:

> Romans 3:23 for all [m]have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, 24 being justified as a gift by His grace through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus; 25 whom God displayed publicly as a [n]propitiation [o]in His blood through faith. This was to demonstrate His righteousness, [p]because in the forbearance of God He passed over the sins previously committed; 26 for the demonstration, I say, of His righteousness at the present time, so that He would be just and the justifier of the one who [q]has faith in Jesus. 27 Where then is boasting? It is excluded. By what kind of law? Of works? No, but by a law of faith.
>
> James 2:14 What use is it, my brethren, if someone says he has faith but he has no works? Can [n]that faith save him? 15 If a brother or sister is without clothing and in need of daily food, 16 and one of you says to them, "Go in peace, [o]be warmed and be filled," and yet you do not give them what is necessary for their body, what use is that? 17 Even so faith, if it has no works, is [p]dead, being by itself.
>
> Ephesians 2:8 For by grace you have been saved through faith; and [h]that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; 9 not as a result of works, so that no one may > boast. 10 For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand so that we would walk in them.

>
> Titus 3:4 But when the kindness of God our Savior and His love for mankind appeared, 5 He saved us, not on the basis of deeds which we have done in righteousness, but according to His mercy, by the washing of regeneration and renewing by the Holy Spirit, 6 whom He poured out upon us richly through Jesus Christ our Savior, 7 so that being justified by His grace we would be made heirs [a]according to the hope of eternal life. 8 This is a trustworthy statement; and concerning these things I want you to speak confidently, so that those who have believed God will be careful to engage in good deeds. These things are good and profitable for men.

Often it is said that James is contradictory to the rest of the Scriptures. However, this is false. The key point to remember is that there are two states here. The heart and what comes out the heart. Thus, there are four possible combinations:

- A bad heart, and bad works. A bad heart with bad works is all of us prior to coming to the knowlege of the saving grace of God and accepting that gift.
- A bad heart, and good works. Those with a bad heart, and doing good works do good works for selfish reasons. Maybe they are doing it because they receive self worth gratification from being a people pleaser. Maybe they are doing it because they believe in karma. Maybe that are doing it because they think that good works will save them or get them to other religion's equivalent of heaven.
- A good heart, and bad works. James 2, in particular, discusses a supposedly good heart with bad works. If you read the passage it specifically says that people were saying they were Christians with faith but had no works. We know this contradicts other parts of Scripture, especially to what Jesus has said: Trees are known by their fruit. Thus, the James passage specifically refutes the idea that there is such a thing as a good heart with no works or bad works.
- A good heart, and good works. Thus, we come to the last one where a good heart produces good works. I think Ephesians 2 typically explains it best: we're saved through our faith alone and created in Jesus for good works that God has prepared for us. The Titus 3 passage clarifies it further, which says that the good works in particular are profitable for men. This makes sense because good works do not profit God: if we choose not to do them He can always use another Christian to do them.

Our hearts receive His grace (charis), are forgiven (charizomai), and we receive His joy (chara) through the Holy Spirit that we desire to serve Him. This is important to understand because Christians have the propensity to use works or lack of sin as a gauge of our devotion to God. By using works as a measuring stick, we inadvertently place a limitation on the Father's love for us. He only loves us if we are not sinning and/or doing good.

Unfortunately, this mindset tunnels us into not sinning which often leaves us feeling trapped in sin because it's on our mind all the time. Is it a good idea to focus on the guard rails while driving or would it be better to be looking ahead on the journey ahead? Likewise, it tunnels us in onto performing good works when in reality our goal is not good works rather to use good works to be profitable unto men: to build relationships with others, direc them towards God, and make disciples.

> Romans 5:8 But God demonstrates His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.
>
> 1 John 4:19 We love because He first loved us.

Our relationship is ultimately one of desire for Him because of His desire for us. His love is unconditional, and therefore our love should be unconditional toward others. It carries no burden of performance.

Tying performance and desire to attraction in personality/power

Now, having been rooted in the proper identity within us as Christians, it is a good idea to understanding attraction in the context of performance and desire. I explored attraction in a Christian understanding of attraction as well as in Dominion and Dominion 2, and I think Donal's PSALM/LAMPS empirically fits what is best observed. This will tie in nicely to some of the more foundational concepts that I discussed earlier. From A Christian understanding of attraction:

- Power/Personality — A man that has dominion over his person and thus power/personality is not needy or have any deficiencies. He does not have anything to prove. If he needs something instead of begging others for it, he goes out and accomplishes it.
- Status — Status is an indicator of man's dominion over social situations or social groups.
- Athleticism — Athleticism is a man's dominion over his body primarily physically but also psychologically and emotionally in action.
- Looks — While men cannot change what they are born with, they can exert dominion over how they look and how they appear by taking care of themselves with proper grooming, smell, clothes, etc.
- Money — Money is a dominion in itself because it can be exchanged for needs, goods, and services. It is literally a means by which a man can access that which he desires.

This is where the Christian manosphere diverges extensively from the secular manosphere. There is an imputed burden of performance upon men in maintaining attributes that would make them attractive in order to keep a woman. I assert that this is false.

In the line of my two most recent posts on attitude and Donal's division of PSALM characteristics into APE (appearance, personality, externalities) this makes more sense.

Personality/power and to some extent status is about how you act, how you approach life, and how you interact with other people. In the totality of understanding “alpha” versus “beta” we can sum this up into attitude.

Terms such as “outcome independence”, “confidence and assertiveness”, and “mastery” are entirely rooted in a firm identity. In other words, being rooted in an identity in Christ means that I don’t have to perform for God for His love. Likewise, this should spill over into personal life and interactions with others: you’re not performing for them. If they reject you then so what? Does the Father love you any less? A firm identity in Christ essentially eliminates fear of man.

Rollo is fond of the phrase that “desire cannot be negotiated.” This is true. This is one of the fallacies of the 5 love languages: gifts, quality time, words of affirmation, acts of service, and physical touch. None of these love language negotiate desire; rather, they are rooted in performance. A husband who tries to learn his wife’s love language to buy or curry her favor will inevitably fail because he is attempting to perform for her. You can’t buy love or respect. It must be freely given by the other spouse. Attempting to do so is manipulation and performance oriented.

Ironically, eliminating this burden of performance is exactly what is attractive. If a husbands and wives stop trying to perform for each other and rather seek to please God the majority of the time it will lead to the change they are looking for. This is why the commands of the Bible to the husbands and wives are not “if” commands. Husbands have the command to love and honor their wives irrespective of how their wife is treating them. Likewise, wives have the commands to respect and submit to their husbands irrespective of how their husband is treating them. Ultimately, it comes down to desire and not performance.

Thus, personality/power attractiveness facets are directly related to your identity. Do you truly understand and feel what the Scriptures speak to you as a son or daughter of God? If so then your identity is firmly grounded, and you know that performance is an enticing but false illusion. You can never perform enough to get others to like you more or love you or respect you. This is the reverse of what I discussed in your attitude tells me everything I need to know. In fact, your own attitude toward yourself and others tells YOU what you need to know about your identity in Christ.

Tying performance and desire to attraction in appearance and externalities

It easy to say that most of the rest of the categories are directly tied to performance. For example, money is gained by performance at work. Likewise, performance with appearance such as lifting, buying well fitting clothes, and taking care of your body are the ways to be attractive to the opposite sex. Right?

Actually, this is wrong. Ironically, desire is strong than performance. Those that desire to do well in their job go well beyond performance. Desire can be equated to not just doing your job, but doing it with excellence. Likewise, those who desire to look good will because they will be disciplined to do well with lifting, taking care of themselves with good nutrition and sleep, and even in their daily devotions.

When you're performing for yourself it's just that. Some people have more will power than others, but at the end of the day does performance buy you happiness/joy or satisfaction? Nope, it surely does not. This is why chasing attraction for Christian men is a false idol: is your goal to please God or is it to get a wife? Again, another part of the irony of chasing attraction is that it puts you in the performance mindset: if I can only become more attractive I can attract the woman I want or deserve. Likewise, this is unattractive because it destroys your attitude toward life. There is no "outcome indepedence" when your attitude is tied to performance. And your confidence is tied to success rather than because of your identity in Christ.

It is also within this understanding that we see the difference between agape love and good works. Desire to serve God leads to submission to the Holy Spirit which allows God to work fully through us and unconditionally love those around us. However, good works are limited solely to our performance of them. This is what leads to burn out in many Christians. If they try to perform for God with their gifts and talents then they will eventually reach a point of burnout. God may still do great things through them, but they will not have the unending capacity and fullness of His love moving through all that they do.

A desire to please God in all and through all leads to "outcome independence" from women. Women are not placed as an idol above God, and thus you become more attractive for it. The way the secular manosphere has co-opted this is that they say that you should do everything for yourself not for women. In other words, you should be more selfish.

Framing this correctly always matters. I desire to perform successfully at my job because I do all things for the glory of God. But I can also use the money gained from my job to tithe more, and do more for the kingdom, Yes, money is also required to support a family, but this is only one of many things that money can be used for and it's not guarateed that I will marry anyway. I desire to look my best, workout, and eat healthy because I want to steward the temple of the Holy Spirit. Looking good for the opposite sex is a nice side effect and definitely appreciated.

I think I made these points clear enough with multiple lines of logic. It should be clear that desire is ultimately the driving force that puts you in the right attitude and mindset as a Christian. Not in what you can do and how you perform for others.

Conclusions

Salvation and thus identity in Christ must be firmly rooted in desire over performance.

This will change your attitude toward God which will set you on the right track away from sinful behavior and performaing for God. It will base you in the correct mindset of desire toward God to be excellent in all you do.

Desire in the context of being Christian roots you correctly away from performing for women in your personality, interacting with others, and in various social situations. Likewise, desire over performance will drive you to do well in everything that the Father has set before you. It will drive you to be excellent. And by those measures eventually attractive to women. It will also keep you away from the poisonous mindset that you need to somehow perform for women in order to attract them.

Dating and courtship discussion

February 15, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There is currently a discussion going over at Courtship pledge about what women can do to signal to men they are interested in. Dalrock has also linked over to there. Go participate.

In general, as a single man my experience with leveraging social networks is that it unequivocably works best if a women is going it. I have personally talked to at least 20+ different men, women, and couples about introducing me to single Christian women. Mostly couples as I have found the singles tend to be somewhat more resistant to it give that they have not found someone else yet either. None but two have offered suggestions and followed up on it.

Simply put, I think that men are expected to figure it out for themselves without help much to the detriment of everyone involved. This is in general what is expected with masculinity. The problem with this is that the teaching of masculinity has gone by the wayside and thus many men are left off in the wilderness without any training. Women tend to have more developed social networks with which to leverage plus the fact that women tend to like helping other women find a man. Thus, if anything important in this current atmosphere is to occur, it will probably come through women engaging social networks to match make.

The other main problem I foresee is the general unwillingness of women to engage men they [potentially] like. This is from experience and observation. I've seen and met tons of outgoing girls who have no problem to talk to anyone. However, when engaging with a man they may potentially like (not necessarily me) it seems like they have some "shy" switch that gets turned on and they won't have anything to do with him unless he approaches first. And this may be with only giving extremely subtle indicators of interest, which the average man will have no clue what to distinguish.

I can somewhat pick up most of them now, but that's with being about 2 years in the manosphere and looking for such things everywhere. In fact, I know I miss tons of them because women have told me after the fact, or if I'm friends with a woman I'm not interested in I will give them advice and they share what they are doing that doesn't work. Women have this urge to be covert about their intentions, but it is really only harming the chaste ones who wish to get married. The only men who can read such intentions now are mostly those who want to get in their pants on the a first date.

Comments are disabled here. I'm going to post these two over there if you want to comment on them, and join the discussion over there. Check it out as there's already 100+ posts.

50 Shades of Grey analysis

February 15, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been lots of talk about this around the 'sphere, facebook, social media, and the like. In fact, most Christian websites have at least one article dedicated to the topic somewhere. I'm not going to link any since they should be pretty obvious to find.

This book has sold 100 million copies. The vast, vast, vast majority of them to women. Probably 90-95% if we're being truly honest. The book was actually a bad fanfic from Twilight that was published, another notoriously "woman" film.

Most decry the "abusive relationship" between the two main characters. However, having read tons of them none of them particular want to go do the road of the huge elephant in the room:

- Why are so many women, even Christian women, desiring this "emotional pornography"?

It's obviously not men that are pushing them to do it. I've seen tons of articles that shift off responsibility from women to.. well.. nothing. If the responsibility to not view this "emotionally damaging" book and/or film is not on women then who is it on? Men? The patriarchy?

The irony is that you can't blame men for this. The author of the book is a woman. The book is primarily read by women. The vast majority of those going to see this movie are women. There's no men you can actually "blame" for this spectacle, but of course you can't "blame" women for it. No, that would be too harsh.

The boundless article on it actually gets the closest to it of any Christian website I've seen. It engages one of the primary reasons: her hypergamy. Hypergamy being a blanket term in the for maximizations in PSALMs.

> 1. It's like the hundredth version of *Pride and Prejudice. Boy, do we love us some P&P. "Plain and poor girl uses spunk and smarts to attract attention of distant, brooding but devastatingly handsome dude with a chip on his shoulder and possibly a few daddy issues." He's a challenge, a true project. She's the only one who can reach him. And she does. Never mind that this version's Elizabeth (Anastasia) has to put up with some fear, domination and abuse to get there. Her eventual "rescue" of Christian makes it all worth it.

The root of the issue is obviously the craving two factors that are simultaneously stimulated in women:

- Attraction via maximization of alpha characteristics — dominate personality, super high status, impossibly good looks, insanely rich, etc.
- Attraction to authority (of which headship is also authoity).

A few of the more secular analyses mentioned authority-submission and blamed the patriarchy whatever that means, but I didn't really see this mentioned in any of the Christian ones. I'm sure you can guess why. Headship-submission is obviously a let's-not-mention-this-topic-to-Christians-or-in-the-Church-as-it-will-probably-offend-people.

It's no real secret that the majority of affairs are from positions of authority such as boss-secretary. And while most people would have you believe it's the boss (or husbands) fault that he strayed which it is, it still takes two to tango. There is enough "blame" to go around to all of the participants.

From what I can discern the attraction to authority is based on trust: women want to be in the care of authority (or headship) because it makes them feel safe and protected. However, as I believe Dalrock has said before they also want the emotional thrill of being in potential danger. They desire to be safe but in [potentially] unsafe situations. Let's take this one step further.

This is the ending of the movie Titanic. This is why women want to dress how they want out in public, or walk down dark alleys late at night, or be able to drink as much as they want. The "law" becomes their authority figure in this case which absolves them of responsibility, and therefore they can engage in potentially unsafe behavior if they want because they will be protected. If they engage in unsafe behavior, they cannot be blamed because they are protected 100% by the law. Anything else becomes "victim blaming" or "victim shaming" and we can't have that. It's all black and white.

Inherently, this is the exact same moral argument that underlies modesty and chastity. The attitude that "I should be able to wear what I want because it's the other person's duty to take responsibility for how they respond" is based in shifting responsibility of actions solely to implied "authority" figures (e.g. from Christian women to men). Even though those same Christian women would argue that women are not under the authority of such Christian men. Much less in normal relationships, and maybe not even in marriage.

All choices have consequences. Even if what you choose is not "illegal" or "immoral" that still doesn't make choices you make the opposite — prudent, wise, or good. I believe this is the main thrust of Paul's arguments about food sacrificed to idols in Romans 14 and 1 Corinthians 8. As Christians we are held to a higher standard: we should care not only about ourselves but also about how our choices may negatively affect our fellow brothers and sisters in Christ. Even if we aren't in the "wrong" or doing anything "illegal" or "immoral" I can still make a decision that can cause other Christians to stumble. Modesty being a prime example.

Anyway, I'm not quite sure where I was going with this.

Engaging in a relationship is always going to be on someone's "terms" per se. When women engage in a relationship on a man's terms, especially in the context of submission people are all too quick to call abuse. Whether it's emotional, psychological, or whatever. Obviously, 50SOGs is a pretty straight forward example of "abuse", but what critics don't understand is that because authority can be abused that doesn't make authority bad.

Authority is in fact very good as God is the ultimate authority and He is good. He has also outlined in Scriptures that we follow authority, especially earthly authorities.

I also believe this is why the Scriptures outline how to engage in marriage. The relationship is neither on the husband's terms nor on the wife's terms but on God's terms. There can be no cries of "abuse" given that the Scriptures outline the particular roles and responsibilities of the husbands and wives. Yet, the main problem still persists in that Christians in general don't want to adhere to God's standards and instead go by the world's. For instance, when you revert to the world's standards of what is the ultimate goal in marriage — happiness — then you have both men and women, especially women, leaving marriages in droves because they aren't haaaaapy.

I suppose this is a problem that has existed since Adam and Eve and will continue until the return of Jesus. Also, the more and more I understand the Scriptures, the more I believe that everything in this life has to do with the right understanding of authority.

Performance and desire and courtship and dating post script

February 23, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Performance and desire post script

Original.

Ultimately, if you don't believe in God, everything in life becomes about performance. Relationships are no exception. This is the dismal look at relationships if you are not a Christian. The expectation of performance. Adhering to a performance standard means that intimacy can only reach a certain point.

Of course, the main problem for Christians, especially those in the manosphere, is finding a woman that is trustworthy.

Courtship and dating post script

Original.

Ironically, Dalrock made the post before I got the time to write up this blurb that I started about 4 days ago. Why guys at my church don't ask women out on dates. You can go discuss it over there.

I found the comments pretty amusing as there was a mix of "Red Pill" comments and the typical women comments decrying men.

Dating, labels, and authority analysis

February 23, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dating and labels

Over the past year, I've ultimately come to the conclusion that the "labels" expressed in relationships are utterly meaningless. Dating, boyfriend, girlfriend, and whatever else you want to talk about. Given a Scriptural view, the only "states" that are possible are: single, betrothed/engaged, amd married.

What I've found discussing relationships with [mostly] "blue pill" Christians is that labels seem more important to women. The only exception is if the man implicitly or explicitly believes that he is lucky to be with a woman or thinks she is out of his league. Then he will want to resort to a label such as "this is my girlfriend." It's born out of neediness, and often those relationships will just end up in failure and oneitis.

Women, in general, are more concerned about appearance and status than men are. Hence, if there is a potential budding relationship that may be headed toward engagement or marriage and the woman is actually attracted to a man then she will want the label of girlfriend. If, however, a woman is humoring a man she will hang around him and spend time with him — usually as an orbiter for her emotions — and when asked about if they're together deny the whole thing. Obviously, this trend follows along with the "watch what they do, not what they say" although in this case what they say is what they are doing: if they like you they want to associate with you in a label ("girlfriend") or non-label ("no, we're just friends" or "ewww, no way").

The reason why I'm analyzing labels here is because it's important to men. If men explicitly deny that labels exist — which they should — then it forces women to be serious about the relationship if whether it is headed toward engagement and marriage. This has been discussed in the 'sphere before, but the label of "girlfriend" is one of pseudo-commitment. The woman gets the benefit of the relationship — dates, dinner, access to money on some level, emotional support, and the like — in exchange for what? No sex for the man? Of course not, as we are Christians.

Moving toward the Truth

I think the truth is much harder to handle for most men simply because we are ingrained with so many false mindsets about what to expect in relationships.

Even the view of the pseudo-relationship in dating and girlfriends and boyfriends takes the wrong attitude toward relationships for men. Relationships are not born out of exchange nor are they born out of performance but desire. They are born out of the desire to give freely of yourself unconditionally. If I ever think that I need to impress someone in a relationship, or if I need to do something so that they like me, or if I'm doing something either or me or them other than to bless them then I'm in the wrong mindset.

Likewise, there's also the typical albeit false wisdom of:

- Women control the sex card
- Men control the commitment card

From what we know of “alpha” men — or rather masculine men whether evil or good — we know that they both control the commitment card and the sex card. In the cases of celebrities, women will often throw themselves as a man for sex even though they are supposed to “hold” that card.

That’s why I now solely think in terms of the fact that men are to hold all of the cards in the relationship. Boys who start on the road to become men must begin to understand that they hold both cards in the relationship because if they don’t they will be controlled by them. Men who are controlled by sex put sex as an idol in their life. This is the true nature of authority. If you’re not in control of your own desires then they will master you.

> Genesis 4:5 but for Cain and for his offering He had no regard. So Cain became very angry and his countenance fell. 6 Then the Lord said to Cain, “Why are you angry? And why has your countenance fallen? 7 If you do well, [e]will not your countenance be lifted up? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire is for you, but you must master it.”

This is also one of the primary ways to understand headship. Technically, the “sex card” is held by both the husband and the wife:

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband must [a]fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and [b]come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

And the authority of the sex card is only pro-sex. It is never anti-sex except when mutually agreed for prayer. Knowing that you have authority changes the way you act.

Authority is pervasive

When I discussed change the mindset change the man, the real core of changing a man’s mindset is that it filters down into his heart and out of his heart comes an attitude and from his attidude comes his actions. What this means is that knowing that you have authority and understanding the responsibility that you have for the authority will change your entire demeanor and attitude. Attraction becomes no longer a thing that you need to worry about. The mastery over yourself and identity in Christ frees us from being needy and self serving and develops us into being leaders not followers. Confidence overflows.

It’s crazy how much of the initiation of sex comes down to simple dominance, confidence, and taking action. See reddit’s: ladies how do you like for a guy to initiate sex. Of course, there’s a couple incorrect ones there (choreplay, asking questions, etc.), but as a whole women like dominance in a man. If we understand that:

> (1) Heart -> (2) attitude -> (3) actions

Then we also understand that dominance and confidence manifest in actions. What is of the heart? The heart is what drives us: Love the Lord your God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength. The heart being the center of our thoughts and emotions. Our thoughts and emotions should be driven by the Truth. God's Word and our personal relationship with Him. Thus, this leads to the following sequence, much like we understand the sequence in behavioral cycles:

> (1) Our hearts are composed of the thoughts and actions built on foundational truths: the authority of headship for husbands and those who want to be husbands.
>
> (2) The knowledge of the truth that we have power and that we need to be responsible for it shifts our attitudes. I don't need to perform for anyone, much less women. I don't need sex. Nothing is above God. Women are taken off the pedastal.
>
> (3) From these attitudes they manifest into actions. We cannot be manipulated by women or their vaginas (crass, I know). We act with confidence and dominance in the knowledge that we are given authority by God to use responsibly. Not to sin, not to tempt, but for the purpose of His will in marriage.

It's a self reinforcing process. And ultimately, this is what "love" truly is. It's born of the mature Christian, and innately part of understanding masculinity as a whole. This is the glossed over part of 1 Corinthians 13:

> 11 When I was a child, I used to speak like a child, think like a child, reason like a child; when I [d]became a man, I did away with childish things. 12 For now we see in a mirror [e]dimly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then I will know fully just as I also have been fully known. 13 But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the [f]greatest of these is love.

Husbands are commanded to love their wives as Christ loved the Church. And the way to grow in becoming a man of God is to abide in the Truth. Agape love is ultimately the love which transcends performance and is rooted solely in desire. And as we know, performance based mindsets pale to the power of desire. I find it really interesting how "attraction" is literally built in along the way to becoming a man of God. It's the precursor to the hierarchy of responsibility that comes overall in marriage, and with dominion as a whole.

I take the lead in my relationships with women now. I "act" as an authority figure and see how they respond. If they respond positively I may ask them out if they meet other preferences. If they don't respond positively and/or ignore you then you stay away from them. I don't care what you call it. Amused mastery, outcome independence, confidence, or whatever. It's authority straight up. Obviously, you are not their authority when you're getting to know them, so you shouldn't be angry if they respond neutrally or negatively.

They're not the ones you want in your marriage if that's the case as they won't be willing to respect you or submit to you. Move on.

However, the ones who do respond positively are potential candidates for marriage after going through other vetting. The most important thing is that they are willing to what God says, especially in the Scriptures. And that they are willing to walk in them, no matter how they might feel about them. Everything else is gravy.

Ultimately, marriage is best viewed through the lens of authority: it is a headship-submission relationship based in love and respect. The Scriptures only speak to three things in the marriage relationship: authority, sex (based in authority), and roles/responsibilities of husband-wife and families (also based in authority). The authority is rooted not in the husband, but in God who has given authority to earthly structures included in His Church and in His families. This is the way you must understand it as a man. If you understand it in this way, you will begin to act masculine. Think in those terms.

The funny thing about authority is that it's pervasive in life. I'm going to follow up this post with another on a clearer understanding of authority.

Back to labels

At the end of the day, in terms of labels I am willing to humor women with the label of girlfriend and boyfriend. It's something that they like and not necessarily contrary to the Scriptures. But if you do humor them you must understand the fundamental truths that underlie the fakeness of the labels.

It should be communicated that there is no pseudo-commitment involved unless there is actually an engagement. This will force women to seriously consider if the relationship is important to them and if they are willing to move towards engagement and marriage. It will also speed the process along.

Indeed, engagement now in reality pseudo-commitment because we don't live in a culture that has dowry, bride gifts, and other exchanges of possessions or material goods. One party and unilaterally break agreement without any reprocussions leaving the other high and dry. For example, the woman can just keep the engagement ring if she breaks off the engagement instead of having to give it back.

There's a reason that there is the phrase "settling into a relationship" and it means that the unknown or urgency of a potential relationship is put off. In particular, the boyfriend-girlfriend experience mitigates the seriousness of commitment that engagement and marriage have. It is assumed that relationships are moving toward that, but the false sense of security is there. If you've ever wondered why people are girlfriend and boyfriend for 3+, 5+, and I've known some that are even 10+ years before getting married. You know why now.

It's not as "bad" as cohabitation, but I believe it is up there in the depreciation of what commitment means.

The main point I am trying to make with this section is this: The uncomfortability that both men and women will feel from not being in a “committed” boyfriend-girlfriend relationship will drive them to actually consider engagement and marriage much more quickly. Boyfriend-girlfriend is a form of pseudo-commitment that benefits neither party and often delays engagement and marriage and getting serious about learning about each other and if they are ready for engagement or marriage.

Relationships that aren’t headed toward engagement or marriage don’t need to be defined by labels like boyfriend or girlfriend. A potential relationship whether you have labels or not should always be moving forward and have a time frame. There should be goals set and expectations in that regard. If there’s not, you may be getting shafted by some form of complacency, pseudo-commitment, or comfort at your own peril.

This ended up way longer than I wanted. Thoughts and comments appreciated.

Length of time prior to engagement and marriage

February 25, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

CHero asks in the comments:

> Soooo….how long should someone do the “boyfriend/girlfriend” thing before a decision to get engaged/be married be? My job’s alright and if I get my act together (and even while I’m still kind of a mess), I haven’t had to ask for hand outs and can support myself (well, I have a roommate I’m not related to. That’s a step in the right direction, yesh?)
>
> I decided that if we’re together for a year, we should definitely be discussing engagement/marriage but I’m basing this off of absolutely nothing.

For me the way I approach things now is with women is that I ask them out on “dates” but then I start vetting them right away in terms of questions to get to know them via contact with text, e-mail, or online conversation. I ask any wide variety of topics including those which I linked in the questions and topics to talk to your prospective spouse article in conjunction with general conversation about life. Masculine behavior and teasing is obviously mixed in with this.

This means that a relationship should always be “progressing” and if it ever is not leading toward engagement or marriage then it would be stagnating. Overall, I think 3-4 months in the minimum period before engagement and should not be longer than 12 months.

I select 3-4 months because people can fake how they are and their attitudes for a few weeks, even up to a month or two. This tends to be normal with most humans: they want to show only an attractive side to the other person. But eventually they will start to show their true personality, and from their true personality you can determine the type of person they are.

I also think that 12 month is the maximum. If you can’t figure out if you want to marry someone within a year then you don’t know who you are and/or you don’t know what you’re looking for. In this case, you should explore all of the passages relating to marriage on the Bible and see if that’s something you want to pursue: Proverbs, 1 Corinthians 7, Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, etc. Likewise, you should read the identity series on this site pre, one, two, three, four, five, six and the mission framework posts — the 19 of the most important posts I believe I’ve written on developing into a masculine Christian. Even distance is no concern now. There are enough ways to get to know a prospective spouse without talking to them in person as I mentioned earlier.

Questions and discussions that are hard and easier to answer especially a mix on feminism, authority, and the like should be mixed in both in “online” and “real life” conversation. This ensures that you can read a woman’s body language to see if they are uncomfortable or potentially skirting around the harder questions when you ask them. However, asserting tough discussions online also allows women to think about them more before answering which is good, especially if she needs to break out her Bible to answer them. I'd rather have a woman know that she needs to look in her Bible for answers (even if it's a google search of the Bible) than not know what to do and go with her feelings instead. Some of the more sensitive topics should and/or may be discussed with mentors and family present.

Once you've decided to be engaged, I think the engagement should be fairly short. Only a 2-4 months as you already know that this relationship is headed toward marriage, and that you both are serious about moving toward marriage. These are my thoughts on this topic.

Wedding and potential rings (not diamond IMO as they depreciate significantly) should be kept at a minimum cost. This will also tell you what type of woman you are dealing with in materialism concerns. The same is true of the holidays like valentine's day to see what she desires in terms of gifts and presents.

Thus, question to the readers of this blog who are single and seeking a wife: what is the length of time(s) you would consider pre-engagement and post-engagement to marriage?

Any thoughts on any of the other topics that go along with engagement and marriage such as rings, weddings, and relationship concerns?

Saving civilization

March 2, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

---

lozozlo comments on ballista's about maintaining faith in Christ in this day in age. Particular in regard to hopelessness and civilization in general.

First, let's explore what the Bible says about evil in the day and age. Ahab and Jezebel's reign Elijah thought he was fighting alone against the evil:

> 1 Kings 19: 9 Then he came there to a cave and lodged there; and behold, the word of the Lord came to him, and He said to him, "What are you doing here, Elijah?" 10 He said, "I have been very zealous for the Lord, the God of hosts; for the sons of Israel have forsaken Your covenant, torn down Your altars and killed Your prophets with the sword. And I alone am left; and they seek my life, to take it away."
>
> 11 So He said, "Go forth and stand on the mountain before the Lord." And behold, the Lord was passing by! And a great and strong wind was rending the mountains and breaking in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind. And after the wind an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake. 12 After the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a sound of a gentle blowing. 13 When Elijah heard it, he wrapped his face in his mantle and went out and stood in the entrance of the cave. And behold, a voice came to him and said, "What are you doing here, Elijah?" 14 Then he said, "I have been very zealous for the Lord, the God of hosts; for the sons of Israel have forsaken Your covenant, torn down Your altars and killed Your prophets with the sword. And I alone am left; and they seek my life, to take it away."
>
> 15 The Lord said to him, "Go, return on your way to the wilderness of Damascus, and when you have arrived, you shall anoint Hazael king over Aram; 16 and Jehu the son of Nimshi you shall anoint king over Israel; and Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah you shall anoint as prophet in your place. 17 It shall come about, the one who escapes from the sword of Hazael, Jehu shall put to death, and the one who escapes from the sword of Jehu, Elisha shall put to death. 18 Yet I will leave 7,000 in Israel, all the knees that have not bowed to Baal and every mouth that has not kissed him."

This is not the first time and the last time that a remnant is saved in Israel and Judah when it is on the way to destruction. The Scriptures speak of the remnant of those that returned from Babylonian captivity, and also the remnant that remains in the book of Revelation.

The awesome thing is that God does not give us the task of saving civilization. Nowhere in the Scriptures does it say this, and I think it's a fruitless endeavor to do anyway. You can't change most peoples' minds who are convinced of their own truth over the Scripture’s.

Civilization always takes the course of great prosperity and wealth which leads people astray. People become slaves to that which money can provide, through the excess time created and decadence:

> Galatians 5:19 Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: [i]immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, disputes, dissensions, [j]factions, 21 envying, drunkenness, carousing, and things like these, of which I forewarn you, just as I have forewarned you, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.

It’s no secret that the fall of the Roman empire mirrors the pains that western civilization is starting to experience. There is nothing new under the sun.

What we should be doing now as Christians is studying now is how the Church survived the fall of the Roman empire. I would suspect it was a combination of focus onto the core unit of the family, and small groups and communities within the local church. But I could be wrong since I have not studied early church history that extensively: what type of atmosphere, structure, and support they had in such a time.

My 5 step process to maturity in relationships

March 6, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've put off developing the Christian primer for a bit to focus on this post and hopefully derivatives as it has been on the forefront of my mind in the past couple months. This drives right to the heart about what single Christians can do to develop themselves into mature adults in relationships in accordance with the Scriptures to be ready for relationships.

One of the worst assumptions you can make about relationships is that time equals maturity in relationships. This is not true. There is also the common saying that time heals all wounds but that is not true either. The positive and negative experiences that we experience in childhood still affect our perceptions of things today. This is also why it is important to take all your wounds to the cross in forgiveness and repentance. And to know your identity in Christ (Part zero, one, two, three, four, five, six).

This is the most common perception that people have in relationships today. It's based on the Disney fairytale memes in a way. At the right time, you'll be ready to take on a relationship. In today's culture, the schema or at least some variation thereof that is pushed on both men and women is:

1. Go to high school
2. Go to college, maybe work on the side
3. Get a nice paying job
4. Do that for a couple years and establish yourself
5. Continue building your career
6. Start to become mature and find yourself
7. Then get married in your late twenties or early thirties and have a perfect life with kids

Most of us in the manosphere know that "establish yourself," "building a career," and "finding yourself" are solely key words for directionless wandering. Usually directionless wandering into sin. A career is not necessarily sin, but it reflects your priorities. It's like men being told to "just be yourself" in relationships. It's entirely unhelpful and just leads to you wander around like a chicken with his head cut off. It doesn't tell a Christian man how to develop into the man that godly, attractive women are interested in.

Thus, the problem is that no one actually tells you what it means to become mature in relationships. This is something that I have struggled with in the past, but I now have a grounded structural plan to implement this in my own life and in those I mentor. Time itself is not what is required to growth for maturity in relationships. Codification of a step by step process is important.

Thus, over the past few months I've been trying to codify my approach to relationships so I know what I'm looking for and what I'm aiming to do on the path to getting married. The end result is is my 5 steps of maturity in relationships.

1. Know what God says about relationships
2. Know your priorities: dreams and 5 year goals
3. Know your standards for women
4. Know your standards/boundaries in a relationship
5. Know how to assertively communicate

These are the 5 steps that I have been using in my life to structure them in determining my maturity for handling relationships. I'll discuss them in order and give my thoughts and preferences as examples of what I do and what I'm looking for. Then you can modify them for your own use if you want.

These are not only for men, but they can be applied to women as well for the most part.

- Know what God says about relationships

I think this is the most obvious one, but also one of the most neglected. When I talk to and mentor younger Christian men about what they're doing to prepare for relationships I almost inevitably get something about either school, job, or money. Well, that's just not good. I've seen enough married couples to know that they did nothing to explore what the Scriptures says on relationships before marrying to their own detriment.

The main thing to know what God says about relationships is to know in depth what your roles and responsibilies are and what the roles and responsibilities of your spouse will be. This is one that I have been exploring for the last 1.5 years or so, and that I have attempted to explore rather in depth on this blog through many of my posts on husbands and wives. The main passages are Genesis 1-3, 1 Corinthians 7, Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, Proverbs 31. But also some other smaller passages on marriage, husbands and wives, or male-female relationships in Hebrews 13, 1 Timothy 3, Proverbs 18, Ecclesiastes 4, and some general commands such as from 1 Corinthians 11 and 1 Timothy 2. I've gone into the Greek and Hebrew. I've learned a lot about what God says.

The sad state of affairs is that Christians that want to be married, but don't know of God's standards for relationships.

They are entering them at their own risk. This is especially true for the husbands who want an egalitarian relationship. Sure, such relationships can be "successful" at least by some metric of the world and as Christians if you hold "success" to be no fights and happiness. But such egalitarian relationships will never be "godly" because they don't adhere to God's standard.

(Note: I think the one exception may be if the husband willingly offers "half his kingdom" to his wife as authority can be delegated. But that is a risky proposition indeed. This works in favor of Esther with Xerxes, but it works against Herod with the daughter of Herodias when she requests the head of John of the Baptist. However, these are both not Hebrew or Christian men which should give you pause.)

Do not let worldly measures of success cloud your vision of what a godly relationship is supposed to be. God created everything, and His Word gives us His truths that bring us joy and peace. He understands us at a fundamental level as we are His creation. However, even when we think such truths are uncomfortable if we submit to them we will understand them as we live them.

Write the truths that come out of your study of the Scriptures on marriage and relationships down. For me, this blog serves as my study and analysis of the Scriptures on relationships. This is akin to doing your research before you engage in anything. You are reading the fine print.

> Hosea 4:Yet let no one [e]find fault, and let none offer reproof; For your people are like those who contend with the priest. 5 So you will stumble by day, And the prophet also will stumble with you by night; And I will destroy your mother. 6 My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because you have rejected knowledge, I also will reject you from being My priest. Since you have forgotten the law of your God, I also will forget your children.

No one would suggest you buy a credit card before you read the fine print. Nor would anyone suggest you buy a car or a house before you read the fine print on the loan or mortagage. A failure to read the fine print of the Scriptures means that even if the other person turns out to be the person you were not expecting that you are also culpable for your failure to ask the hard questions and to know the details. Your lack of knowledge is your own undoing.

> James 4:17 Therefore, to one who knows the [k]right thing to do and does not do it, to him it is sin.

Likewise, the scary thought is that if you failed as a husband or wife to immediately point out truth where there is sin in a relationship then you are also culpable for letting that sin slide. This is a hard word for most Christians in relationships because it means that you are responsible for calling out your spouse or significant other if they get off track. Similarly, you are responsible for humbling yourself in the sight of God to come back on track if you sin. Both Christian men and women have a very difficult time doing this, and it shows in the sad state of affairs in so-called Christian relationships and the divorce statistics. Not hurting someone's feelings becomes the truth over what the Scriptures say.

- Know your priorities: your dreams and 5 year goals

This is a straight forward section. This is what your mission is to be.

Generally, God will use your natural strengths for his kingdom. This has become apparent in my own life with my sense for business and for teaching. Thus, I know that my mission involves facilitating and earning money for the kingdom, and for mentoring young men in the Church. However, I need to know where all of this fits in the grand scheme of things. Hence, you need to know your dreams and what it takes to fulfill them, but also mold them into short term goals.

For me, my 5 year short term goals look like this:

1. My relationship with God is my top priority: seeking Him in Scripture, prayer, and the like. By extension of this, helping build up the body of Christ locally at Church. Everyday.
2. Relationships with my family. Everyday.
3. Search for a wife or explore relationship. Everyday.
4. Build a business and mentor young men. Everyday.
5. Stay fit with exercise and nutrition. Everyday.

I prioritize my 5 year goals in terms of what I find most important. Obviously, my relationship with God and family is the most important. However, knowing relationships are most important I can also put my search for a wife as my next important thing to do. This means that if I have to take a bit of time to search for a wife before working on business related matters that's fine.

If I find a girl that has potential I will set aside time to get to know her above my other priorities. This is developing the right sense of mind: a potential wife will be basically family and next after my priority of my relationship with God. I won't put her after business, mentoring, or exercise. This is a sliding scale though. I'm not going to jump up and prioritize for a girl I just met. As the relationship progresses to engagement and marriage she will be a bigger priority.

Know where your priority of a spouse in your life fits.

It's important to recognize that a lack of priority onto search for a spouse is what the world and even family tells you to do. If you're in college or "young" most people will tell you to put your career or maturing and finding yourself over a prioritization of marriage. This is the inadvertent path to spinsterhood for women.

At a younger age, you should be willing to recognize that if a family and children are important in your life you need to be prioritizing it early and not letting the precious chances that you have slip away. If it's a priority, it means you are going to be proactive in doing things about it. Most things in life do not simply come to you.

You will always find the time to make for something unless you have a family, are working a full time job, and going to school at the same time. I've known a couple of men who have done that, and they still find a few hours here and there to exercise or do things they like. You always have time for the things you have priority for. Anything else is a lack of discipline.

- Know your standards for women

My standards for women are something that I have explored multiple times on this blog in: What I look for in evaluating a potential wife, The Change, Evolving Desires, What I believe regarding marriage. I've underwent certain changes since the last time I posted about these, so there is another post due in the future. However, it is important to prioritize what you're looking for both in non-negotiables and things that you are flexible over.

When I finally parsed down my list, my three non-negotiables were:

1. Loves God with all her heart, soul, mind and strength, and loves her neighbor as herself.
2. Is as passionate about nutrition and fitness as I am.
3. Can cook well and loves to cook

Obviously, virginity is nice but it's not something that is absolutely necessary to me. I recognize that God can transform lives, yet at the same time I also recognize the risks that come with women who have a n-count > 1. I understand that a woman's attitude is more of a predictor of what she is going to be like than her n-count because it will show in her repentance and submission to God. You can truly recognize a godly woman by her attitude and actions rather than just her physical state such as n-count.

Obviously, as a man all things being equal I would take a virgin over a non-virgin just as I would take a more beautiful woman over one who is less physically attractive. However, such thought experiments are fruitless given that there are usually no women who are exactly alike in both disposition and action.

The reason I selected these 3 non-negotiables is that because they are what is required to complement me. The God one is obvious (2 Cor 6:14), but the passion for nutrition and fitness is more mission specific for myself. She would also reflect who I am, and choosing a helpmeet who is slovenly and fat reflects negatively on my witness. Plus, a lack of attraction. Cooking is a more general one: and I find that unenjoyable personally and I love a woman who can serve in that way. I didn't plan it that way, but it shows that your non-negotiables can be relatively varied even in the context of what you want out of a relationship in a godly manner.

Compromise on non-negotiables and/or red flags is a recipe for failure.

In the past few women I've taken out on dates or was interested in, I tried to compromise a bit with the passion for nutrition and fitness. I found this to be a fruitless failure because of the expectation I had in that. It was like the Church of Laodicea in Revelation 3 where God says because you are neither hot nor cold but lukewarm I will spit you out of my mouth. Women will almost inevitably do things for men they are attracted to as will men for women. However, this is out of performance and not desire. Simply put it's not attractive to me, and who's to say that they won't stop once you get married or become complacent? You can't know that for sure. But I'm not willing to risk that in this area of my life.

This is the importance of knowing what your non-negotiables are. I've met other women I thought about taking out on dates because they were godly. However, they didn't have that passion so I deemed it a no go. That's fine with me, and that's how it should be. You can't fit a round peg into a square hole. If you start compromising on your standards this flows over to all other aspects of life and is a slippery slope.

All of the other facets are in some degree of negotiable. Obviously. because I want a large family (5+) I may be willing to compromise a bit with say 3-4 children. However, I'm not going to settle for a "small" family. There is more of a degree of wiggle room with other things. Even in these, there needs to be a consideration for godly values. A woman that desires a large family is more likely to be unselfish: she cares about family and is willing to sacrifice time and energy to make that happen.

One of the major red flags about feminists and pseudo-Christians is that they are miserly with love. Thus, they only want 1-2 children because they view children as a hassle if they even have children at all. Her attitude and reasoning toward children matter. Does she only want 3 children because she wants to spend more time on herself and her career? Or does she want 3 children because she wants to adopt? You need to explore the attitudes behind the decision making to understand her values.

- Know your standards/boundaries in a relationship

This is something relatively new that I have been doing to a high degree of success.

I disagree with the general manosphere concept that boundaries should only be asserted reactively. I believe that good boundaries should be set immediately, and the reactive boundaries only need to be set in terms of disrespect (toward the man) or in lack of honor (for the woman).

For example, I set 3 main boundaries early on in the relationship, usually after the first date or within the first week to let a woman know where I'm coming from. These almost always go over well because you are telling a woman how the relationship will progress. However, almost inevitably when you say you have some "rules" or "standards" for a relationship the Christian woman will get tentative and fearful because they think you are triying to control them, but once you actually discuss them then it builds further attraction and intimacy. I'll explain this after I tell you the ones I use.

1. My first boundary that I set is that God comes first in everything and that His Scriptures are our guideline. Even if I think that she is perfect for me and that I am perfect for her, and we're praying and fasting about the relationship and God answers with a no then we're done. Likewise, disagreements are to be resolved with Scripture first, and then will default to the authority in the relationship.
2. My second boundary is to never lie. Relationships are built up trust. The trust in a relationship is built on truth in interactions with each other. If I ever find out that one of the building blocks of the relationship was a lie then who is to say that every other interaction I've had with her is a lie? You can't really tell, and you won't be able to trust the woman. Thus, straight out I tell her that if I ever find out about her lying to me that it will signal the end of the relationship. I won't lie to her, and she won't lie to me.

3. My last boundary is based on relationship growth. Obviously, there is a three pronged approach: I should be growing in my relationship with God, she should be growing in her relationship with God, and we should be growing in relationship with each other. Growth requires change which is often uncomfortable. Thus, my third boundary is to be comfortable with being uncomfortable.

Strong boundaries facilitate trust within a relationship. By introducing them as a man will result in you taking the reigns of leadership within the relationship.

My first boundary with God signals to her that goal is to please God rather than myself or her. I won't put her on a pedastal and idolize her, and she shouldn't put me on a pedastal and idolize me. This is important because it sets the tone of the relationship given that 53% of Christian women now rate their family as a top priority over 16% for their faith, 9% health, 5% career performance, 5% comfortable lifestyle. Likewise, "Women's sense of identity very closely follows their priorities, with 62% of women saying their most important role in life is as a mother or parent. Jesus came next: 13% of Christian women believe their most important role in life is as a follower of Christ. In third place is their role as wife (11%)."

13% of Christian women believe that Jesus is their top priority. How scary is that? Talk about fishing from a small pool. Obviously, this is not good, and it is important to establish the frame of the relationship from the get go.

My second boundary is based around the fact that lying is one of the sins that is straight from Satan himself. For the most part, in our human nature we are carried away by our own lusts. However, lying and deception is a sin that is rooted primarily in Satan, and it is designed to undermine relationships specifically. Deception was the reason that Satan was able to tempt Eve to eat the fruit. Deception undermined the relationship of Adam and Even with God, and the relationship between Adam and Eve. Lying and deception are not tolerated within my relationships.

> James 1:13 Let no one say when he is tempted, "I am being tempted [n]by God"; for God cannot be tempted [o]by evil, and He Himself does not tempt anyone. 14 But each one is tempted when he is carried away and enticed by his own lust. 15 Then when lust has conceived, it gives birth to sin; and when sin [p]is accomplished, it brings forth death.
>
> John 8:42 Jesus said to them, "If God were your Father, you would love Me, for I proceeded forth and have come from God, for I have not even come on My own initiative, but [l]He sent Me. 43 Why do you not understand [m]what I am saying? It is because you cannot hear My word. 44 You are of your father the devil, and > you want to do the desires of your father. He was a murderer from the beginning, and does not stand in the truth because there is no truth in him. Whenever he speaks [n]a lie, he speaks from his own nature, for he is a liar and the father of [o]lies. 45 But because I speak the truth, you do not believe Me.

We know the primary identity of God is the Father and His primary attribute is Love, but we often don't think about what the primary identity and attribute of Satan is. His primary identity is a murderer, and the primary attribute he works with is lying and deception. Let that sink in. Obviously, we hold murder up to be some almost ultimate sin, but lying to most Christians is just something piddly that you can just ask forgiveness for and everything is fine.

Our attitude toward lying must be change from non-chalant to hardline if we value relationships.

My last boundary focuses on being uncomfortable. This is important because when we start talking about sensitive topics the tendency is to want to fudge the truth a bit and start with so-called harmless white lies. However, that devolves into evil creeping into a relationship. Likewise, admonishment and rebuke will occur within a relationship: humans are not perfect so we need to deal with the uncomfortability of our feelings when addressing the truth. This sets down the standard that being uncomfortable is a good thing, and in combination with the second boundary that walking in the truth even when uncomfortable is the right thing to do. Feelings are not the truth of the relationship.

When I've used these in my relationship basically it opens up another level of truth and intimacy that was not there before. Obviously, this only works with Christians who actually want to walk in the truth so it is somewhat of a self selector where it may not work well with those who are lukewarm. But you're trying to filter out those women (or men) anyway.

As much as women hem and haw about boundaries and how they hate them they really do like them. Masculine men are overt in their intentions: women know where they stand with them and their values. There is no guessing game and that provides a certain security in knowing truly who a man is. This is the type of outline of a relationship that will foster attraction. A man who knows what he wants in a relationship and knows the steps to building it is far away ahead of his peers.

In this case, maturity is the ability to lead and build the relationship from the ground up in a godly manner.

- Know how to assertively communicate

I think this is the most broad one and most confusing for most Christian men. As I described a bit, masculine men communicate their interests in an overt manner.See these articles for social analysis: the Socialization of men and women, the selfish and unselfish socialization of men, Masculinity is the truth, Masculinity is the truth Part 2. I think this is one of the more nebulous sections because I haven't posted the half-written article I have on boundaries yet. But I will try to explain this in context of behavior.

The method that I attempt to adhere to in terms of interacting with Christian women is a 50/50 split of serious communication and flirty banter.

What I mean by serious communicaiton is the fact that the relationships always need to be growing in some form. I may be asking and discussing various topics about the faith, life, dreams, goals, and specific situations. This is where questions like the vetting your prospective spouse come in, but also in terms of doing life with God, church, family and friends.

On the other hand, the flirty banter is mostly comprised of teasing. This is the simplest way to explain what "attraction" is to men who don't know or understand the mechanisms of attraction such as Donal's PSALM factors summarized in dominion one and two. It's something that's really enjoyable for women because you're showing her you're a masculine man by comfortably operating in a women's preferred communication style. Or in other words, it's implied that you have the ability to be a leader and someone she can respect.

This tends to fall in line with the boundaries I set in relationships in the previous section with my focus onto no lying and uncomfortability which is why I chose those. My recent prospect asked me this question: "If I gained 10 lbs how would you tell me to lose weight." If you read the question closely you can see that because my boundaries are already set a woman is expecting me to share the truth with her: that it's unattractive and I'm going to tell her to lose weight. The question isn't "will you tell me to lose weight" but "how will you tell me to lose weight." This shows the correct framing of the relationship to value truth over feelings. Obviously, I'm going to be as kind as possible in telling a woman to lose the weight, but I'm also not going to march into the realm of white lies or full blown lies just to satisfy feelings. Indeed, if you set good boundaries in the first few weeks of the relationship, it will make discussions like these much easier.

If I were to summarize the foundation that was built in such a relationship it would be this: assertive communication focuses on the ability to truthfully share your faith as well as your opinions on likes and dislikes. Obviously, there is straight truth from the Bible, and we know that we as Christians should adhere to that. However, there can be differences of opinion and still the ability to honor within a relationship. Thus, part of relationships is teaching the other person about what you like and dislike. Scripturally this is important to understand. As a Christian man you are going to be teaching Christian women that you don't desire love but respect in the relationship.

Women say "I love you" to men to communicate their feelings to you and/or potentially project their own desires for you to reciprocate. Each of these scenarios are not Scriptural.

However, for [masculine] men it won't do anything for them. If a man values an "I love you" from a woman he is already operating from a feminized mindset: the Scriptures clearly say that wives are to respect and submit their husbands not [agapao] love them.

The non-exception in Titus 2 it tells wives to philandros their husbands which love in an affectionate way. Why would God not command wives to agapao love their husbands? It's because respect and submission are more important to facilitate the roles and responsibilities of a God honoring Christian marriage.

This is an interesting discussion I have with Christian women because most of them assume that men want love, and most Christian men are unaware that it is not love they should be Scripturally striving for. This is because "love" is held as the standard for worldly relationship, and this [eros] love is taken to be [agapao] love by Christians. Mixing the worldly standards with attempted Biblical standards is a recipe for failure. This will really open the eyes of men and women in today's world, and is important for mentoring young Christian men and women. Respect frames authority and thus headship in the correct way. Thus, and by extension her attitude will really tell you all that you need to know.

Therefore, when I talked about how Dalrock said that feminists are miserly with love, the corollary in terms of husbands and wives is that feminists wives are miserly with respect. They believe that authority is bad and will be inevitably abused. They believe the lies of the enemy over the truth of God.

Likewise, a woman stating "I love you" in expectation for you to reciprocate is passive-aggressive communication. She expects you to read her mind and offer the compliment in return. Passive-aggressive communication especially with compliments is very close to manipulation because there is a wrong answer: if you don't offer it back she gets mad. This is unScriptural because women are basing their desire to feel good on recipocation of compliments which is a performance based mindset. Compliments should always come out of desire and free will to do so. Impinging on the free will of the man to force a compliment is neither genuine or should be desired.

If you ever get to the point where you are not encouraging assertive discussion in a relationship then it's going down hill. The trust in a relationship is being eroded.

Thus, another part of assertive communication is the ability to create a safe space. In the event that something has gone horribly wrong, and a woman is tentative about bringing up her hurt feelings or opinions before me I always thank her for doing so letting her know that her communcation is valued. This lets her know that I am kind and care about what she has to say before we even engage in discussion about the particular issue whether right or wrong.

I don't think discussion of emotions and how they can hurt is either right or wrong. However, emotions are not truth. It is in this understanding that emotions play a role in the viability and trust within a relationship; however, they need to be dealt with carefully in terms of negative ones for whatever reason they were stirred up. Both parties must be open to being corrected in such an instance. Both husbands and wives need to own their own thoughts, actions, and emotions. Wives however, have a greater propensity for victim mentality off loading of negative feelings onto husbands which needs to be kept in check.

Conclusions

So this post ending up being longer than I thought it would. I considered breaking it down into a 5 part series, but it all fits together really well so I thought it would be best to be one straight article. I want to summarize by addressing the main aspects of what each of these 5 areas does in context for young men who are preparing for relationships:

- Know what God says about relationships
- Know your priorities: dreams and 5 year goals
- Know your standards for women
- Know your standards/boundaries in a relationship
- Know how to assertively communicate

I would very strongly suggest writing all of these down and working on them until they are refined. If you read Artie Buerk's portion on the Harvard business school advice section on happiness and success you will see the stark contract of doing so. Note that this was in solely the difference at 10 years.

> Several years ago, a graduating class from a large, well-known business school was asked whether they had written goals, unwritten goals, or no goals. It turned out that 3 percent of the class had written goals, 13 percent had goals they had not written down, and 84 percent had no goals.
>
> At the 10th reunion, the class was asked again about their goals and accomplishments. The results showed that the 3 percent who had written goals did 10 times as well as the others, and the 13 percent who had unwritten goals did twice as well as the other 84 percent.
>
> The ability to set goals is very valuable in achieving success. Goals should be balanced in all areas of life — family, social, spiritual, business, health, wealth, education, etc. The major rules of goal-setting are:
>
> 1. Goals should be in writing.
> 2. Goals should be measurable — if they can't be measured, they're not goals.
> 3. Goals should be dated so you have a time frame to measure accomplishment.
>
> People who have a clear picture of themselves and have set well-rounded goals tend to be much more successful than people who are vague in what they hope to accomplish in the future.

Obviously, my goals in each section are missing some of the details above. I need to go back and write them down in a better manner. You can also use the SMART goals acronym — Specific, Measurable, Achievable, Realistic and Timely.

Knowing what God says about relationships builds the framework and foundation of your thinking from the get go. As I discussed in Identity part 5: roots and heresies of identity, the primary way that heresy develops is through trusting the truth as "feelings" over the plain text of the Scripture. If you understand the roles and responsibilities of the husband and wife including headship, submission (also: authority is good), love, respect and honor (also: why I don't respect women), and then details about how everything fits together will be built on the solid rock. Such a foundation will never be shaken even if you are in the world.

The priorities of dreams and goals then add a layer of structure to your life to where you know how everything fits together. This will keep you away from putting women on a pedastal, but also be successful to do all things for the glory of God. It is good to plan, but it is also good to realize that the Lord may be directing you as you plan and in your plans: Proverbs 16:9 The mind of man plans his way, But the Lord directs his steps.

In reality, all of this structured planning does a couple of things for men. It helps them determine God's truth, determines to themselves what they're looking for out of life and in a relationship, determines the structure of how they will approach things, and gives them an overall confidence in being decisive and drive about what they are looking for.

As you can tell from my story, compromising standards for women is generally a very bad idea. I was talking with some men recently about compromising standards and ultimatums. One of the interesting things is that ultimatums are lose-lose. If a woman ever wants to make you decide between say what you love to do and her then answering either way is a loss. If you select her then you compromise on your life and she will lose attraction for you. If you select what you love then she'll be angry but still attracted but then you can't trust her anymore. It's not the answer that matters but addressing the underlying attitude: if you question if she really wants to hear the answer or counsel her against it then it gives her an out. However, she is still likely not very trustworthy. Always read between the lines.

I think the standards/boundaries are something the manosphere gets wrong as I stated before. Healthy relationships thrive on boundaries as creation of safe spaces. Because I communicated that I don't like lying and I expect grow and communication to be uncomfortable at times I don't have to deal with tests along the lines of being fat and attraction. It's assumed I will tell the truth — however blunt — but I that knowing my character I will be as kind as possible. In reality, boundaries must be both proactive and reactive in my opinion. The proactive approach frames a relationship in the right way, and I think these must flow along Biblical guidelines. The reactive approach should be used with likes and dislikes. For example, I gave the proactive approach above, but a reactive approach may be like if your woman comments about something in public that is in bad taste to pull her aside and let her know that it's disrespectful.

At the end encompassing everything else is assertive communication. Women hate passive and passive-aggressive communication and so should you as a man. Alternatively, aggressive communication is seen as controlling and manipulative. That's not the way we want to act as Christians. I know what I believe and what I stand for both Biblically and my own preferences. I want a woman who will fit into that. I assert my standards and boundaries in a relationship by walking according to the Scriptures and non-Scriptural stuff I like such as my opinions, but I always leave an out. The woman/wife will always have a choice whether or not to follow my lead. The ability to frame free will correctly is one of the ways I can best honor a woman that I potentially want as a wife as she follows my lead.

Now knowing this, it is pretty obvious to see that time doesn't do anything for becoming mature to be ready for a relationship. However, this should give you some good guidelines for how to approach the maturity for one. As they common maxim goes, women aren't looking for men who have the potential to develop into a masculine man. They're already looking for a winner. This will put you on the track to figure out what you are doing, to be confident about what you're looking for, and to pull the trigger when the time comes. You will be a man that knows what he wants and is not afraid to go after it.

Comments and discussion are welcome. These 5 are what I use with myself and to mentor young(er) men with currently. I bolded the important points in each section. However, if there are other ones that I am not aware of that would fit into this I think it could be improved further.

Talking about your emotions with women

March 6, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

- The world says: men should be like women and discuss their emotions with them.
- The manosphere wisdom says: mens should never discuss their emotions.
- Dalrock has a good take on this.

In my experience interacting with single Christian and non-Christian women it is mainly that is is attitude that matters. I posted a basic summary of this on Dalrock's blog, but I wanted to put it here because this blog is for single Christian men looking for a wife.

Here's what I posted:

> [Simply put, it is your attitude that matters the most.]
>
> You can discuss your emotions logically and from a place of leadership if you want her to offer her opinion on the matter or she wants you to open up. This is fine.
>
> The problem you run into is when you start discussing emotions and becoming needy. Indeed, if you start relying on her as your rock and for support then that is unattractive.
>
> You can discuss emotions as much as you want. But don't lean on her for emotional support, and let her lean on you for emotional support. Females go to other females for emotional support. If you're going to her for emotional support you're not acting like a man you're acting like a woman. That's why she loses attraction for you.
>
> Indeed, discussing emotions with women can be a great way to build trust and intimacy in a relationship. Just don't expect support, and don't get into a state where you want or need support. If you want emotional support talk to friends who are men.

Talking about emotions aren't something that generates or loses attraction much like talking about what you are thinking generates or loses attraction. The mindset that you project and the attitude that goes with it is what matters. For example, an attractive man and winner who discusses his vulnerable experiences gains attraction and endearment. In this case, it's not the emotional discussion but the pain and hardship that he had to endure and the eventual success story.

As I stated in the quote, it is the need or desire for emotional support that is truly unattractive to women. That signals to their brain unconsciously that you're like one their female friends. Women aren't attracted to their female friends.

Discussing emotions is neither here nor there, and I've found the vast majority of the time that I can discuss them with women I'm interested in without them losing attraction for me as long as I don't go to them wanting or needing the emotional support that they give their female friends. In fact, sharing does build a bond of intimacy and trust which is what you want in a burgeoning relationship.

The vast majority of the manosphere are those who are fairly new, and the “don’t discuss emotions with women” do it because it’s not something that you should play around it if you have a feminized mindset as a man. I find this to be good advice for Christian men who are looking to get out of the friend zone.

However, as your personality evolves you should know that it can be a good thing used the right way.

Slapping women and social commentary

March 15, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is kind of a semi-off topic and semi-non Christian type of observation. Perception is a very interesting thing in context of this woman who is trying to win her boyfriend back.

> I'm a 26 year old girl and my bf [29] and I broke up one week ago [5 year relationship] over an altercation that got physical. Truthfully I was being a cunt. We were at his place hanging out and I was wanting to go home after we ate dinner because I was tired. He wanted me to stay a little longer to hang out and at the very least fool around. I really just wanted to go home and got a nasty attitude, calling him an ass-hole and such. As I was trying to leave the door he grabbed me and slapped me. Nothing terrible; I'm not talking Rodney King bullshit, it was just a slap. I overreacted and screamed at him, again calling him an ass-hole and continuing with my attitude. I was really very surprised by my behavior. I'm normally not like that. As we were fighting, I just shouted out that I'm sick of his shit, to which he responded that we were done and pushed me out the door.

Of course, the comments are predictable give our current societal atmosphere based on feminine primacy:

> 1. news flash: a RP man would not let a woman affect his emotions to the extent that he gets physically violent. This bitch is bluepill to the fucking max. This is also why I struggle to relate to victims of repeat domestic violence, he showed you his real colors, sure some people can change but why risk it? you dodged a bullet, dont reload the gun.

> 2. If he supports red pill ideals at all, it's purely lip service. A well rounded man doesn't break frame so easily, and he certainly doesn't hit his woman because she's yelling at him. Move on.

> 3. He slapped you for words. Not even harsh words. His friends have said worse. He's not a natural leader. He's probably more scared that you will press charges for the assault. And he smacked you because he thought he was asserting dominance, but it was an overreaction to the max. Move on. He failed your shit test. Move on.

> 4. physical violence is a deal-breaker. It doesn't matter how verbally 'bitchy' you thought you were. A true leader would not submit to such cowardly acts.

> 5. You behaved poorly, but his reaction was unacceptable. He lost control and escalated the situation instead of diffusing things and ignoring your nonsense. Learn from your mistake and move on.

> 6. He…slapped you? What a little beta. Who strikes a woman? That is > unforgiveable. Anyway, darling, you will find that by taking a supportive, kind, and demure role that men will generally step up to the plate. Let him lead and trust his deicions from the start. Not with THIS guy, obviously! He is a turd who should have been reported. He completely violated your trust, space, respect, and body. He deserves to have the feas of 1,000 camels infect his crotch.

Slapping a woman for being foolish was accepted and deemed manly and a good way to put a woman in her place so to speak up until the 1960s or so. Hence, the slapping of women even from various films:

Now, instead of being called an alpha in this case for slapping her and when she didn't back down he realized it was a lost cause and dumping her, the vast majority in this comment field is calling him a beta loser who can't control himself.

This is why actions themselves are almost totally irrelevant to discussion of attraction because perception can change so much that they must be taken in context of the particular culture.

In particular, this is the difference between game which is reactionary whereas masculinity transcends cultures and context. Thus, game is an aping of masculinity to fit within a particular cultural context.

Authenticity and charisma

March 20, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Short post. Relates to in the moment. Video and notes on the book explain how body language, speech, being present, gestures, and other factors like these come together to make social charisma.

Olivia Fox Cabane: Build Your Personal Charisma:

And short notes on the book:

https://github.com/mgp/book-notes/blob/master/the-charisma-myth.markdown

Very useful for INTJs who need a more structural approach to learning social skills.

Formalization of AWALT and NAWALT

March 23, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

AWALT is the common acronym for “All women are like that.” NAWALT being “not all women are like that.”

This acronym is fairly prevalent in the manosphere, but it would be nice to have a working definition to refer to since it is important to understand especially for Christian marriage minded men. Less so if you’re a player because you can just claim AWALT for anything and behave with no concern for morality.

When we, as Christians (or as part of the Christian manosphere), discuss AWALT we are specifically referring to the nature of women that is universal. Specfically, the nature of women that was created by the Creator. This nature of women extends past all moral and otherwise boundaries because it is innate in women. On the other hand, we are not talking about behavior that can be overcome by women through morality, reason, or self control. Christian or otherwise. Thus:

- AWALT — the innate nature of women as God created them.
- NAWALT — common traits in women today that may seem ubiquitous, but there are [few] women who are not like this because of their morality, reason, and/or self control.

So let’s get down to it. I’m going to get this list started but it is by no means comprehesive. If you have ideas, categories, behaviors, or other things to add to this list that I missed then comment and I will add them.

AWALT

- Attraction — all women are [sexually] attracted to PSALMS — power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money.
- Attraction — all women are not [sexually] attracted to loyalty, good with children, and the majority of fruits of the Spirit like humility, patience, kindness, faithfulness, self control.
- Attractiveness — Men with perceived lower SMV/MMV than a woman will be relatively invisible to her. Also, see apex fallacy.
- Apex fallacy — when women talk about men in general only the top percentage of men (who are attractive) are who she is talking about. “Where have all the good men gone?” is “Where have all of the [attractive/alpha] good men gone?”
- Weakness — all women are turned off by weakness from men. Emotinal displays, sickness, or losing a job may fall into this category if the man purposely admits he is inadequate in some way. Women often have contempt or disgust for men that show weakness. (Exception: maybe his mother or grandmothers).
- Leadership/headship — if a man is not perceived to be leading/heading a relationship virtually all women will be unhappy, have a desire to nag him, be discontented, and [may] consider leaving him.

- Respect — respect will make it easier for a woman to submit (but does not guarantee it), while conversely disrespect will make it harder for a woman to submit (but also does not guarantee that she won't).
- Shallowness/pickiness — women are as shallow as men when it comes to physical attraction. In fact, women are naturally even more picky and selective.

NAWALT

- Many or most but not all women believe that their accomplishments, career, personality, or the like make them more attractive to men. This is projection.
- Many or most but not all women believe that men should be like women: to be emotional, nice, and it will make them more attractive to women.
- Women have the ability, through the Holy Spirit and self control, to honor commands in the Bible such as to win their husbands without a word if their husbands don't obey the word (1 Peter 3) albeit it will be very difficult for her.

~~Questionables~~

- ~~Do women have the ability to agape love their husbands? There are no commands for women to agape love their husbands but to philea love them (Titus 2).~~
- ~~Do women have full moral agency?~~
- ~~Are women able to act as their own agent outside of men: what about the fact that women were under their fathers in the OT, and confirmed through 1 Cor 7 to also be under the authority of their fathers prior to marriage?~~

Former questionables in the context of Christianity (updated also with input from Donal's link):

- On Agape: All [Christian] women have the capacity to agape love, respect, and submit their husbands. However, in the current culture this tends to be very rare.
- On moral agency: All women have full moral agency. They are responsible for their decisions as much as men are responsible for theirs. However, culture and churchianity tends to infantilize women's decision making placing the consequence of poor decisions that women make onto men as men's burden of leadership and responsibility.
- on authority: women are able to operate out of the bounds of authority of men (their fathers, husbands) although it may or may not be for the best depending on the different situations. This may need to be hashed out further per each scenario it occurs.

Destruction of morals and the idolization of romantic love

April 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

When we go back and examine some of Dalrock's older posts like lovestruck we have the excellent analysis:

> Because it is love and not marriage which now confers morality upon sex, sex outside of marriage is now considered moral so long as you are in love. Thus we have the modern harlot's defense/anthem "but we were in love!". It is also entirely logical for gays to demand the equal right to "declare their love" via marriage under this new twisted paradigm.

Thinking about this in more depth I think we have to come to the conclusion that the main issue is the erosion of morals: sex is created for marriage.

Once you essentially blot out the line between immorality and morality, only thoughts and emotions become truth as there is no higher form of Truth. When thoughts and emotions become "truth", emotions win because they are a much more instinctual and thus base level of behavior. This elimination of a moral is thus replaced by the new moral: romance (or romantic feelings) are required to have sex. In other words: sex is created for romance.

When we look at the romanticization of love, it did not have such a deleterious effect onto society until sex prior to marriage was advocated for and accepted as a societal norm. We can trace the romanticization of love back to chivalry and even the elevation of such love throughout the early 1950s. However, there weren't many visible societal negative side effects. This signals to me that romanticization is no culprit. It's good or bad depending on context. Romance — which leads to sex — in marriage is good and moral. Romance, which leads to sex — outside of marriage is evil and immoral.

Rather, it is the sexual revolution coupled with specifically 2nd and 3rd wave feminism that decouples the morality of sex and marriage, and drives women (and men) to explore those natures outside of marriage.

Now, if we compare and contrast the two "morals" we shouldn't be surprised at all of the dysfunctional aspects out of marriage and within marriage that are quite easy to see by what we know observationally:

- If sex is created for romance, virginity goes by the wayside and pair bonding with it.
- If sex is created for romance, women have sex at the whims of their feelings which are based upon sexual attraction. Hence, they chase the maximal masculinity they see. Since "good men" will obey the rules of society which demonizes masculinity, women will be primarily attracted to "bad boys" who cannot be shamed away from being masculine.

- If sex is created for romance, women will constantly branch hop at the chance to trade up to better men because there is no such thing as commitment. Commitment is tied to morality, which is tied to sex and marriage. When you do away with the morality of sex in marriage you also do away with commitment.
- If sex is created for romance, following the previous point (no such thing as commitment) the divorce rate will drastically increase.
- If sex is created for romance, getting married decreases the chances that said women/wives will actually have sex with their husbands because he's not going to be constantly 'courting her.'
- If sex is created for romance, then it can be increasingly commodified and used as a weapon because it is viable in a more extensive market (outside of marriage). Commodification of sex becomes tied to the capitalism. An increase in prostitution, pornography, attention whoring, sex appeal in the media, and the like only fuels this.
- If sex is created for romance, the destruction of the family results due to decoupling sex with with children and family. Sex becomes solely a means of selfishness rather than family and relational focus.

Anyway, I'm sure there are more things tied in with this. The destruction of the morality of sex in marriage elevates the romance as the new morality. This leads to a plethora of destructive behaviors that destroys the formation of families and the lives of children. This leads to the destruction of societies.

Destruction of morals and the commodification of romantic love

April 2, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the Destruction of morals and the idolization of romantic love, I talked a bit about the commodification of sex.

> If sex is created for romance, then it can be increasingly commodified and used as a weapon because it is viable in a more extensive market (outside of marriage). Commodification of sex becomes tied to the capitalism. An increase in prostitution, pornography, attention whoring, sex appeal in the media, and the like only fuels this.

Sex is created for romance. Thus, if a woman feels romance she will have sex. The morality of sex goes out the window.

This is exceptionally bad because one of the major motivating factors that drive men toward marriage is sex. If a man can get sex outside of marriage, there is no reason to "buy the cow when you can get the milk for free." The vast majority of women attempt to trade "sexual attraction" in return for sex which seems good for them in the short term. However, once these women start to age and see that they cannot get men to commit to them with sex they start to freak out and shame men manifesting by all sorts of projection.

The morality of sex places sex off the table as a bargaining chip which can be commodified or weaponized. Indeed, both men and women have to get married if they want to have sex, and sex in marriage is also tied with commitment and family. I think this is one of the most interesting facets about why God created sex the way He did: to be manifested solely within the confines of marriage.

Note that this parallels the post on Identity Part 6 — performance and desire. Performance is based on exchange: I perform for [God's] love, or I perform for approval, or I perform to be desired. Performance is based on doing it for something in exchange whether from God, or from man, or for yourself. On the other hand, desire is based on excellence because you want to do it.

Sex outside of the confines of morality to romance is shifted from desire to a performance mindset. In the confines of romance, you always have to be doing something for sex. You need to be sexually attractive enough (alpha), or you have to give commitment (beta bucks), or you exchange it for money (prostitution), or you use it as a weapon to get what you want (manipulation), and other such things.

What you end up with the commodication of sex in general in society is what Rollo notes on his latest post that Wives hate sex. Women utilize sex in order to get men to commit to them for marriage. Once the expectation is set that sex can be commodified it can also be withdrawn once someone gets what they want: once women secure marriage with sex they don’t have to have sex anymore. This commodification places primary importance on looks. Women can only commodify sex to use to secure commitment if they are beautiful enough for men to want to buy what they are selling.

This often comes at the expense and detriment of the beauty and worth of the internal characteristics which is why the Scriptures warn against such:

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

Thus, the commodificaiton of sex leads to a plethora of dysfunctions because it is outside of the confines of morality and thus the blessing of God.

The chain of corruption

April 5, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the past two posts on the Destruction of morals and the idolization of romantic love and Destruction of morals and the commodification of romantic love, we looked at the specific ways in which the destruction of morals have led to the idolization of romantic love and the commodification of love.

What we are seeing are the true consequence of absolute or objective morality and relative morality. In other words, to have objective morality there must be something that anchors morals — there must be an "authority" or "God."

If people don't believe in a "higher power" or "God" and are agnostic or atheist then they must believe in relative morality. Since relative morality is not absolute, there is no right or wrong. Everyone can do what they want, even to the detriment of others. Psychopaths, serial murderers, pedophiles, and the like are no different than you or me. This is the true conclusion of immoral red pill behavior: it's basically everyone for themselves.

With the grounding of morality to an objective stance we have:

1. There is a God or higher power
2. If we assume this God or higher power is Christian (since we are on a Christian blog), said Christian God prescribes objective moral behaviors.
3. Marriage is made for sex, and sex is made for marriage. Romance and sex happens in the confines of marriage.
4. Sex and romance are inextricably linked to a singular person that you marry, and thus cannot be commodified to use as a weapon or temptation.

However, without the grounding of an objective morality we enter relative morality:

1. There is no God or higher power
2. There is only relative moral behavior, which means everyone can do what they want without consideration of [higher] consequences. Likewise, the only reason to obey laws would be to not be punished. If you can get away with something without being punished then it's good. Baser instincts like feelings become your truth.
3. Sex is made for romance or other feelings. Marriage is a useless or archaic institution that only serves a purpose if you give it meaning: most opt out. Marriage or not-marriage can thus be incentivized through commodification — divorce in incentivized so many will divorce.
4. Sex and romance are commodities that you can with what you want without shame: prostitution, manipulation, trading for affection, trading for commitment, and the like.
5. At this point, the only thing still driving marriage is that it is a status symbol in the middle and upper class in America. Those that care not for it will cohabit instead.

This is why when you can compare the secular and Christain manosphere you get wildly disparate behavior.

The secular manosphere recommends having sex with multiple women at the same time and never marrying at all. There's nothing wrong with sleeping with other men's wives, or caring about sexual health other than yourselves or so you won't get a bad reputation. There's no value in women other than how they can please you and satisfy you. This is why the primary thing strived for in the secular manosphere is the maximization of attractive traits such as the dark triad: narcissism, Machiavellianism and psychopathy. There's no need to have a moral standard of behavior with women or even men.

If there is no God, they are right. You want to maximize attraction to attract as many women as possible and spread your seed and have fun and be happy. Yet, in the end, you see that this is not happiness or fulfillment. Most players end up getting "player burnout" and realize that women aren't an answer. If women aren't the answer when there is no God in this life, then what is?

This is ultimately the great question that everyone needs to answer for themselves. Is there a God? Is that God the Christian God?

On the other hand, if we are wrong Paul makes the case rightfully:

> 1 Corinthians 15:12 Now if Christ is preached, that He has been raised from the dead, how do some among you say that there is no resurrection of the dead? 13 But if there is no resurrection of the dead, not even Christ has been raised; 14 and if Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is vain, your faith also is vain. 15 Moreover we are even found to be false witnesses of God, because we testified [f]against God that He raised [g]Christ, whom He did not raise, if in fact the dead are not raised. 16 For if the dead are not raised, not even Christ has been raised; 17 and if Christ has not been raised, your faith is worthless; you are still in your sins. 18 Then those also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. 19 If we have hoped in Christ in this life only, we are of all men most to be pitied.

This is indeed why Christians in the secular manosphere are looked on spitefully. Holding onto morality when there is no God would be foolish and to your own detriment. Believing in something that is false with no benefit to yourself is to be derided.

But read the rest of the 1 Corinthians 15 to see the hope we have in Jesus.

I suppose the thing I find most interesting is that the logical behavior that comes out of belief in God or lack of belief is God is so wildly disparate. Hence, the title of this post — the chain of corruption. It leads in two different directions and leads to wholly different conclusions and behavior.

The demonization of masculinity

April 7, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Moose Norseman's latest post brought up some interesting points that I want to address regarding the demonization of masculinity in the Church.

> […] In large block letters down the sleeves were the words "MEN OF VALOR" in all capital letters.
>
> I thought the words on the sleeves was tacky, but the Crusader's shield and cross is a powerful symbol. It's "bad ass." And it seemed profoundly sacrilegious to see these men wearing it.
>
> Grown men playing dress-up, pretending to valor until their wives tell them it's time to go home, LARPing as patriarchs and defenders of the faith for a morning, like the fat guy in the outrageously fake "master funnery sergeant" uniform.
>
> I wanted to punch them.
>
> See, this is the same men's group that gleefully passed around an obviously fake "letter" attacking fathers, exuberant over a chance to denigrate themselves and assure each other that, after all, their wives and children were perfectly justified in rebelling against their God-ordained leadership.
>
> Then my anger faded, and I just felt sad.
>
> Sad because those shirts show that those men really do want to be patriarchs, men of valor, defenders of the faith. They wouldn't pretend to it if they didn't value it.
>
> Sad because they have managed to convince themselves (at least partially) that they aren't pretenders: that "True Valor" is assisting the enemy in slicing their own neck; that defending the faith means arguing with each other over words to no profit, such as whether the communion wine becomes Christ's blood, or is only a very powerful symbol of His blood; that being a patriarch means following the whims of their wives and children.

To be honest, the reality is worse than Moose even realizes.

The worst thing is that many men think that shaming themselves for the sins of other men — not even the men/boys they are responsible for which are their family — makes them feel better about their current position as pseudo-leaders with their pseudo-morality and pseudo-religiosity. Their shame at their lack of leadership when they are shamed away from leadership is worn as a badge of honor to the sins they don't commit.

One cannot look further than most of the "don't rape" stuff that men are indoctrinated with from a feminist culture. If you're a man and you don't rape why would you even give such drivel attention in the first place? Because you think you can take on "shame" for your sex and have it mean something? Do you think you can apologize for someone else's actions and have others care? Can you apologize for others' actions and have it mean something? No. This is why I laugh at patriarchy rants.

But worst yet is the men and fathers who do want to be leaders who take on the shame and the blame of others who they are attempting to guide when the others make mistakes? And when they do they think it means something good or holy?

That my friends is straight up blasphemy. And it is probably one of the most insidious aspects of the demonization of masculinity by the Church.

To think for a second that I can control others, or be responsible for their sinful actions is false thinking. Sure, I can influence it to some degree, but at the end of the day people are making sinful choices from their heart. Not mine. The vast majority of humans understand cause and effect on a subconscious level. Men and fathers who taken on the blame for the poor choices of their wives and children and experience shame for that are doing the same thing that a rich parent does when their snotty nose brat goes to jail: they cover it up with their own shame and money. All it does is reinforce poor behavior.

To embrace masculinity

Men are taught not to have firm boundaries. However, firm boundaries are what they need to succeed in the position of headship and leadership. Men need to understand that they do still have the burden of headship even if they make mistakes in headship duties. However, that doesn't mean you take on shame and responsiblities for the actions of others when they have free will just like you.

The Scriptures are clear to the people underneath authority that they still have the free will to do what is right regardless of their situation. To wives with husbands who don't believe the Word — 1 Corinthians 7 and 1 Peter 3. To Christians under government authority — Romans 13, 1 Peter 2, Hebrews 13, Titus 3.

Christian men need only understand this. That each man is held accountable for:

- His actions
- His roles
- His responsiblities

Christian men are not held accountable for:

- His wife's actions
- His wife's roles
- His wife's responsibilities

Once you understand boundaries more clearly, it is much more easy to hold people accountable for their mistakes even when you have made a simultaneous mistake.

I think this is one of the most difficult parts of authority, headship, or leadership to master. Men like to believe that because we made a mistake that it all falls on us. We don't want to look like hypocrites where we failed and need to demand responsibility from those under us. We want to take more of the blame and shame than necessary because we think it will protect those under us. This is where our instinct to provide and protect which is normally good goes off the tracks. Shielding others from consequences sends the wrong message — the spoiled rich kid message.

Biblical roles and responsibilities are not something you can put off if you make mistakes. You are still held accoutable for the role and responsibility regardless of if you seem like the “worst” Christian husband on the face of the planet. Thus, you must understand that even if you feel like you’re the worst hypocrite, and you feel that you need to take the shame and blame you still have a responsibility. That responsibility is to hold others accountable for their actions that are under your authority.

It’s taking responsibility to say: “hey, I made a mistake here and I want to apologize for that. Also, you made a mistake here as well. We both need to go to Jesus and repent for our sin, and turn from those sins so next time in the future we both don’t do wrong. Or if, God forbid, one of us does wrong the other person won’t respond in kind.”

Leadership in the midst of conflict: that is where men are made.

Indiana and baking cakes or pizza for gay weddings

April 8, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Figured I would comment on such things.

The main issue that I see is that Christians don't want to "be associated with something they think goes against God" or that they don't want to "be condoning of something that goes against God's law."

Two distinctions need to be made.

First, we hold those inside the church to a higher standard. Those inside the church call themselves Christian, and thus we need to hold them to standard of obedience to Jesus' commands.

Secondly, to those outside of the church we are to hold them to a different standard. That of God's unconditional love for us.

Obviously, the case with say baking cakes for gay weddings is a scenario that falls under the second. Therefore, the goal to those who do not know God's love is to be able to show them unconditional love. Jesus in the sermon on the mount in Matthew 5 makes this clear.

> Matthew 5:38 "You have heard that it was said, 'An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.' 39 But I say to you, do not resist an evil person; but whoever slaps you on your right cheek, turn the other to him also. 40 If anyone wants to sue you and take your [am]shirt, let him have your [an]coat also. 41 Whoever [ao]forces you to go one mile, go with him two. 42 Give to him who asks of you, and do not turn away from him who wants to borrow from you.
>
> 43 "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.' 44 But I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, 45 so that you may [ap]be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. 46 For if you love those who love you, what reward do you have? Do not even the tax collectors do the same? 47 If you greet only your brothers, what more are you doing than others? Do not even the Gentiles do the same? 48 Therefore [aq]you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.

The vast majority of "Christians" have this backward mentality with non-Christians. The Christians think they need to be moral arbiters here on the earth of what is right and wrong. No. That's God's job.

As it says in the Scriptures there are those who are going to do evil to you. They want to slap you. They will want to sue you. They want to force you to do things you don't want them to do. Does He tell us to resist that? Nope, rather Jesus says do more than they ask even if if they have wronged you.

What Christians who refuse baking the cake for the gay weddings is the same as "loving your neighbor and hating your enemy." Wow, it's really easy to love other Christians who are following the Word, but what about people who aren't? Are you going to be mean and nasty to them because they don't believe the same things you do? Or are you going to love and bless them and be kind to them so that they know God has changed you.

But to truly understand what you're doing in this scenario you have to know first what God did for you:

> Romans 5:8 but God shows his love for us in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us.

In our SIN, He died for us. He died for the Pharisees who hated Him. He died for the robber on the cross that scorned Him. He died for the Romans that scourged Him, divided up His clothes, placed a crown of thorns on His head, and nailed Him to the cross. He died for those who tortured and murdered Him when He was innocent.

Yet Christians want to deny a cake or pizza for a gay wedding? Please. God did not deny us Christ's sacrifice when we were in our sin.

You're not condoning a gay wedding when you provide services for them. You're showing them God's love reflected in your actions. Do you want to show them how great the Father's love is or do you want to be selfish with God's love saying they don't deserve it? Because that's all they see when Christians refuse. ~~You're being a Pharisee to them when they're a tax collector or sinner in Luke 15 when Jesus talks about the parable of the lost sheep, lost coin, and Prodigal Son.~~

Bake a cake for a gay wedding? I'd bake them two and refuse their money, and pray that God softens their hearts to accept His grace and mercy.

edit addendum:

Moose Norseman made a good argument in the comments that I find particularly convincing based from Matthew 10 on discipleship and service. As such I am changing my opinion on this matter. The alternative he suggested was good too:

> If you have a set policy of anytime we have to decline a custom cake, the customer receives a coupon good for one of our standard cakes free, I have no problem with it.

I would also suggest that it's a good idea to:

- decline "politically controversial topics" for services to everyone, and
- Not mix business with religion of any sort

That is how I would handle things. If you are persecuted from there then so be it.

Christianese for just be yourself

April 10, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

After being reposted across my facebook a bunch of times I decided I might as well pick this apart. I'm reposting most of the meat of the article here if you don't want to read through on that site.

> […]
>
> ## GODLY GIRLS WANT JESUS.
>
> ## WE DON'T CARE ABOUT ANYTHING OR ANYONE MORE THAN JESUS.
>
> ## WE LOVE JESUS.
>
> ## WE WANT TO SERVE JESUS ALL OUR LIFE.
>
> ## AND IF JESUS TELLS US TO BE SINGLE FOR FOREVER, WE WOULD DO IT.
>
> So know that there is nothing you can do to take His place.
>
> However, if we believe you are a man who will make us more effective in living out God's personal calling in our life, we will be drawn to you.
>
> If we believe you will speak Jesus' words to us, we will be drawn to you.
>
> If we believe you will point us to Jesus when we are confused or heartbroken or in sin, we will be drawn to you.
>
> Does that mean we will want to marry you? Not necassarily. And that's okay!
>
> Just know if it is God's will for you to marry a girl, God WILL lead you to a marriage that will make you more Holy and therefore more happy. You might have to live life with a few godly girls before you meet the one you will marry, but that's good!
>
> Investing in relationships in healthy ways with people who inspire you to be more like Jesus can only make you more Holy. Is this not what us Godly people want? If it isn't, shouldn't it be?
>
> Stop caring so much about being "a better spiritual leader" or a better "speaker" or a better "gentleman" or "more sincere."
>
> It's not about being the coolest or most attractive.

> ## THE PRESSURE IS OFF OF YOU! BECAUSE ITS NOT ABOUT YOU! IT'S ABOUT JESUS.
>
> Quit trying to be the perfect boyfriend. Quit trying to be her god.
>
> ## STOP.
>
> Throw away the lists and JUST ABIDE.
>
> Why?
>
> Because when you run after Jesus, all those things will come naturally to you.
>
> Heck, its not even about getting a girlfriend in the first place!
>
> You are focusing on the fruit and not the vine!
>
> ### IF YOU ABIDE IN HIM, YOU WILL BEAR MUCH FRUIT. APART FROM HIM, YOU CAN DO NOTHING AND YOU ARE WORTH NOTHING. (JOHN 15:5)
>
> This goes for everyone.
>
> Notice that in Galatians 5, it says the fruit of the spirit —>IS<— love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control. It is a package deal. They are not separate entities.
>
> Abide in Jesus with everything you have and you will start to look more like Him.
>
>
>
> A Godly girl will be doing the same thing.
>
> We tend to complicate this so much.
>
> ## ALL A GODLY GIRL WANTS IS ONE THING MORE THAN ANYTHING ELSE:
>
> ## MORE OF JESUS.
>
> So there's the answer you've been waiting for
>
> ### THIS IS ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW. THIS IS ALL YOU NEED TO STRIVE TO BE LIKE. JESUS. SIMPLY JESUS.
>
> […]

I've talked to Christian women about it. Their initial reaction is favorable. 'Yeah, it's great.. that is exactly what we need to tell Christian men.' However, when I send them a few lines and tell them to contrast it to Scripture they begin to pick it apart and are like, ‘huh, I didn’t realize that it was this bad.’ Let’s pick this apart.

There is both good and bad here. We should never fully focus on the bad and thus throws out the baby with the bathwater. The nitty gritty that this post is supposed to reflect is true. Do not be unequally yoked in marriage:

> 2 Corinthians 6:14 Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? 15 And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? 16 And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. 17 Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.

However, what does the vast majority of this post accomplish? I’d say for Christian men it’s confusing and non-helpful. The vast majority of Christian men ALREADY KNOW that they’re not supposed to be unequally yoked. So what is left to say? Seek a woman who loves Jesus and love Jesus yourself so that you can become more like him? Haha, already do that honey.

This post is Christianese for “just be yourself.” Hey, single Christian man: keep loving Jesus and girls will be attracted to that. Well, I suppose on some level that is true. The Bible does contain enough wisdom for a Christian man to grow into a masculine man that will be attractive to women… but who is discipling Christian men to become Christian men?

The Scriptures don’t say “give everyone a Bible and they’ll become Christians” but rather Matthew 28:19 [e]Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 20 teaching them to observe all that I commanded you; and lo, I am with you [f]always, even to the end of the age.” There’s the human element of discipling and teaching.

So, let’s break down the rest from the perspective of the Scriptures.

> ## [1] GODLY GIRLS WANT JESUS.
>
> ## [2] WE DON’T CARE ABOUT ANYTHING OR ANYONE MORE THAN JESUS.
>
> ## [3] WE LOVE JESUS.
>
> ## [4] WE WANT TO SERVE JESUS ALL OUR LIFE.
>
> ## [5] AND IF JESUS TELLS US TO BE SINGLE FOR FOREVER, WE WOULD DO IT.
>
> [6] So know that there is nothing you can do to take His place.

[1] I'll buy it. The passion for Jesus is there even though it's circular logic: godly girls want Jesus. In other words, godly girls (who are pursuing after God) want Jesus. Right.

[2]-[5] Good prioritization of God first in your life. I'll buy it again.

[6] Waaay too nebulous. Are we still talking about Jesus as first priority, or are we talking about how men just don't measure up to Jesus? Knowing how much feminist culture shames Christian men I don't doubt that many Christian men would assume the latter: "We don't measure up to Jesus so what's the point in looking for women then?" or "This woman has unrealistic expectations so why even try?"

Point [6] basically undoes the fact that points [1]-[5] are fine by being nebulous and inadvertently throwing unrealistic expectations upon Christian men.

> [1] However, if we believe you are a man who will make us more effective in living out God's personal calling in our life, we will be drawn to you.
>
> [2] If we believe you will speak Jesus' words to us, we will be drawn to you.
>
> [3] If we believe you will point us to Jesus when we are confused or heartbroken or in sin, we will be drawn to you.
>
> [4] Does that mean we will want to marry you? Not necassarily. And that's okay!
>
> [5] Just know if it is God's will for you to marry a girl, God WILL lead you to a marriage that will make you more Holy and therefore more happy. You might have to live life with a few godly girls before you meet the one you will marry, but that's good!

[1] Ouch. The last time I checked Eve was created to be a helpmeet to Adam not vice versa. There is some truth here though: it would be best if a woman's calling matches up with her husband's so both of them can fulfill them together. However, the selfishness in this statement is subtle: she's drawn to you IF you help her in her calling. In other words: if she's drawn to you and you get married you're not the top priority after God in marriage… her calling is.

Additionally, there is the underlying assumption that other "callings" are more important than marriage. I see this evident in the wider Christian culture. Many women want to serve the poor, be a long term missionary in other countries, and the like and are forsaking marriage thinking they can put it off later. Marriage and children is the first calling — Genesis 1:28 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [al]sky and over every living thing that [am]moves on the earth." — and in no way does it play a backburner to "other callings." A good marriage is one that can minister to everyone around you as it is one of the only things in the likeness of Jesus and the Church.

[2]-[3] Most Christian men will take this to mean only speak lovingly, but Jesus also called the syrophoenician woman a dog then praised her faith when she wasn't offended. Jesus also harshly rebuked and/or chastised most everyone. The irony I suppose is men who are able to draw these strong boundaries for criticism and rebuke are the ones who women are attracted to.

Notice the bolded sections for the first three lines. It promises attraction where there may be none found.

[4] I thought this article was for men looking to find out what Christian men were looking for so they could marry? You're now telling me all of these things that I could do could be fruitless? Ouch. So what now? You've just confused Christian men further.

[5] Ah, yes the old bait and switcheroo. God does not promise us a spouse slightly blunted on the fact that "if it's God's will." Marriage to make you more holy and thus happy? That's from the Bible of Oprah rather than God.

> [1] Investing in relationships in healthy ways with people who inspire you to be more like Jesus can only make you more Holy. Is this not what us Godly people want? If it isn't, shouldn't it be?
>
> [2] Stop caring so much about being "a better spiritual leader" or a better "speaker" or a better "gentleman" or "more sincere."
>
> [3] It's not about being the coolest or most attractive.
>
> ## [4] THE PRESSURE IS OFF OF YOU! BECAUSE ITS NOT ABOUT YOU! IT'S ABOUT JESUS.
>
> [5] Quit trying to be the perfect boyfriend. Quit trying to be her god.

[1] Investing in relationships is good, but we are not made holy through them. Hebrews 10:10 And by that will, we have been made holy through the sacrifice of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. And also, we are sanctified in truth: John 17:17 Sanctify them in the truth; Your word is truth. 18 As You sent Me into the world, I also have sent them into the world. 19 For their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they themselves also may be sanctified in truth. Instead, our fellowship is aimed as it states earlier in John 17 to be one: "11 I am no longer in the world; and yet they themselves are in the world, and I come to You. Holy Father, keep them in Your name, the name which You have given Me, that they may be one even as We are."

[2]-[3] This is an interesting pair. It's true, but it's also false. The intent here, I think, is aimed at performance. We cannot perform enough to get someone to like us. This much is true. But on the other hand, our desire first needs to be directed toward God: we want to be better spiritual leaders, better speakers, more authentic or sincere (gentlemen.. meh) in order to carry out our calling in this world.

Most Christian men would not be able to pull out the correct meaning from this statement. It essential encourages men to not even try. Stop caring about being a better spiritual leader? Ok, I won't even try. Stop caring about being a better speaker? All that stuttering you do when you're attracted to a girl you like… might as well not get over that. So bad.

[4] The emphasis on performance is back for good measure, but it's not explained very well at all. The pressure is off because of Jesus? What does that even mean when you're reading this article looking to be married?

[5] Ironically, this is a tale of two contradictions, and further illustrates why women don't know their own [sexual] attraction indicators. A man trying to be the "perfect boyfriend" is he who puts a woman on a pedastal. It's the exact opposite of "trying to be her god." I don't think this is an accident because women don't understand the psychology of men. All a woman understands is that that she is disgusted at men who try to be a perfect boyfriend… to her it seems like he's trying to be some paragon of light. In reality, he is idolizing her. He is not trying to be a "god" but rather he is lifting her up as a "god."

> ## [1] STOP.
>
> [2] Throw away the lists and JUST ABIDE.
>
> [3] Why?
>
> [4] Because when you run after Jesus, all those things will come naturally to you.
>
> [5] Heck, its not even about getting a girlfriend in the first place!
>
> [6] You are focusing on the fruit and not the vine!
>
> ### [7] IF YOU ABIDE IN HIM, YOU WILL BEAR MUCH FRUIT. APART FROM HIM, YOU CAN DO NOTHING AND YOU ARE WORTH NOTHING. (JOHN 15:5)
>
> [8] This goes for everyone.
>
> [9] Notice that in Galatians 5, it says the fruit of the spirit —>IS<— love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control. It is a package deal. They are not separate entities.
>
> [10] Abide in Jesus with everything you have and you will start to look more like Him.
>
> [11] A Godly girl will be doing the same thing.

[1]-[4] Starting to go off the rails here. Aren't Churches supposed to be teaching men to run after Jesus? If so, why are most of them unattractive then? Yet, we know that most Churches are churchian… how exactly is a man supposed to distinguish between churchian and Jesus?

[5] Ouch. Of course it's about getting a girlfriend/wife. Why else would a man be reading this article about what godly woman want? This is disingenuous at best; at least say it should not be top priority rather than dismissing it.

[6]-[11] Ah, the fruits of the Spirit. Yep, women are attracted to these things in a man… who they are already [sexually] attracted to. Why then do women long after the bad boy and wish to missionary date him then? If manifesting the fruits of the Spirit is attraction then why aren't most Christian men attractive? I can't fault her though. Most women don't understand the difference between sexual attraction and attraction and know that one needs to preceed the other.

> [1] We tend to complicate this so much.
>
> ## [2] ALL A GODLY GIRL WANTS IS ONE THING MORE THAN ANYTHING ELSE:
>
> ## MORE OF JESUS.
>
> [3] So there's the answer you've been waiting for
>
> ### [4] THIS IS ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW. THIS IS ALL YOU NEED TO STRIVE TO BE LIKE. JESUS. SIMPLY JESUS.

[1] Things are complicated for good reason. Churchianity also peddles this same advice given above to their detriment.

[2] Secular women: "just be yourself" Christian women: "Just be more like Jesus"

[3] What answer? I was more confused until I started picking through line by line. Imagine what the non-informed Christian man will think?

[4] That whole making disciples and teaching them thing. Nah. Here's your Bible men, be more like Jesus. Good luck.

On the surface level I'm not exactly surprised to be honest. Most [Christian] women don't know they shouldn't be trying to teach men how to be men. Neither do most Christian men know they shouldn't take advice about how trying to be a man or how to attract women from women.

The sad thing is that this is a product of the culture. Because most of us growing up innately believed the lies we were told that men and women are the same. We also implicitly believed that the other sex could understand each other and tell us relevant advice about how to do things. This can only be proved demonstratably false as the underlying premises are false. Culture pervades much more than we know, and we are supposed to only be in the world but not of the world.

As with all things coming out of churchianity there is some truth but it is marred by insidious heresy left and right. The lies are most deceptive when there are half truths mixed in.

Even after all that I believe her intent is good. But it's quite poor execution, and women should not be telling men what women want anyway.

Understanding the friend zone and escaping it

April 10, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There has been some commentary on this post on Donal's blog about the "friend zone" and if you can get in or out of it in different ways.

Harry comments:

> So I read this blog, Dalrock & Free Northerner, from FN I go to more reaction political blogs. One big beef I have with the manosphere tho is this vehement insistence not to be friends with a chick first, the dreaded LJBF. That hasn't been my experience at all. Was friends with my HS GF for a year first, then was friends with my college GF for a year first. Looking back I only have fond memories & wish them the best, they were fairly happy & healthy relationships.

Donal follows up with this comment:

> There is a lot of debate about that. Sometimes it doesn't seem to be a problem, but for most men it does. Might depend on the man, might depend on the woman, might depend on the situation. Overall I'm inclined to argue against friendship first, at least if you have a romantic interest.

Scott puts in his take:

> In my own history, I have only known this to work if the woman clearly wants it to be romantic all along. I have been on the receiving end of that where friendships developed into romantic relationships later. But never have I seen it work in the other direction. (Where the guy comes out of the friend file)

Then 'Feminine but not Feminist' also comments on something that I said a while ago providing an anecdote:

> It's mostly true that in order for a romantic relationship to develop that the woman must want one pretty much from the start, but there is one exception: when the man becomes more attractive in some major way(s) during the friendship, preferably when there's a period of little to no visible contact (DS has talked about this before, and he's right in that sense). For example, in the 6th grade I became very fast friends with a guy in my class. He was like a little brother to me, and I even felt protective of him in a sense, in the same way that a (loving) sister will want to look out for her little brother (for perspective, he was shorter than me and had a little boy "bowl" haircut). But over the summer between 9th and 10th grade, he changed. He shot up to about 4-ish inches taller than me (a lot for one summer!), cut his hair to about an inch long and spiked it with gel, started dressing more grown-up, and his voice got deeper. While I had talked to him on the phone some, I hadn't seen him even once over the summer. So imagine my surprise when he walked into our first period class like this… I was > like :-0 … His frame also changed: he had always been very confident and outgoing, but now he was taking a protective stance / was looking out for me, more so than I could do for him. I became very interested in being more than just friends at that point, and would've done so had he made a move to / had I known that he wanted the same.

Fortunately (or unfortunately…), I've had a wide variety of experiences on the receiving end of the friend zone, and I have talked with a lot of other men about the friend zone. So let me explain how it all works. There are FOUR different scenarios that occur.

First, the girl likes you all along: You're already attractive enough for her, and she was waiting for you to pull the trigger. This jives with Scott's experiences. Over the course of said relationship, the woman will often hint that you "finally asked her out" or "it was about time" or "I'm so happy that you eventually asked me out" which means that she was interested in you for a while before you asked her out. The keywords that show you that she was attracted prior are "finally" and "about time" and "eventually" signifying a period of time where she was attracted before you pulled the trigger.

The other way you can figure this by straight up asking her when she was first attracted to you. If she's in a relationship with you sometimes she tells you straight up: "When I first laid eyes on you I liked you." Well, for most men that doesn't usually happen. The vast majority of women are not attracted at first sight as we know from the OKCupid studies women rate 80% of men as below average.

Second, you have to change significantly (e.g. raise your SMV/sexual attractiveness or become more masculine) in a time gap. This scenario manifests if you don't see the woman for a while, and you make significant changes to your life such as the example that FBNF discusses. For example, if a woman is a female "6" and you're a male "5". However, you start lifting, get your stuff together, have a growth spurt, and whatnot and then you come back as a male "7" or "8" she'll reevaluate you as a potential interest whereas before you were "just a friend."

A real world example of this aside from FBNF's example is that most of the men approaching 30 and into their mid 30s will see women who were formerly not interested in their 20s start to become more interested in them because they become more attractive. Part of this is their own declining attractiveness tied in with men's increasing attractiveness into their 30s. The woman may have gone from a 7->6 whereas the man goes from a 6->8. Since the man is now a "8" and she is a "6" (or may perceive herself as still a "7"), she is then interested in him.

There are a couple of other scenarios which are much less common. I'll describe them now.

Third, it is possible to where you're with her the whole time and she gradually notices you. This is the same thing that happens to wives when a fat husband starts working out, getting his crap together, and whatnot. She sees him becoming more attractive — although she'll only admit that it makes her "uncomfortable" or "unhappy" that you're doing it — and makes her mind go at 100 miles per hour trying to figure it out. However, this discomfort makes the man more sexually attractive to her, so the bedroom antics will heat up. This is part of what is encompassed under “dread game” although I would disagree specifically of making it seem like you’re going to leave or cheat.

Alternatively, usually some random event in a woman’s life wakes her up to the fact that you ‘re now attractive. For example, a woman’s girlfriends could make a passing comment that “she’s single and how you’re looking like a good catch nowadays.” The woman would then laugh and dismiss what her friend says: “nah, he’s just a friend” or “haha, he’s not really my type.” But it will pique her curiosity, and when she reexamines you and you’re now more attractive than you were in the past. She then comes around and agree with her friend’s assessment that you’re now a catch.

Fourth, it is possible that a girl has put you in the “friend zone” or “undecided” where being undecided on you is not enough information for her to make a decision. Typically, this happens if you’re a strong silent type. Then a major incident wakes her up to the fact that you’re a man.

For example, usually some powerful act of bravery or leadership wakes her up. One such instance would be if someone starts choking and everyone is panicking. But you know what to do. You calmly run over to the situation, and do the heimlich maneuver and the person is fine. Then you take control of the situation and calm everyone down from panicking. You saved a life and exhibited leadership under pressure. A woman is now attracted to you.

Alternatively, a different such situation is a man displaying social dominance. If a girl is giving you crap or gossiping and then you tell her to stop. You two get in an “argument” and then you ream her out until she apologizes. This type of social dominance over other women (or potentially men as well) will make women take interest and be attracted to you. The power of your personality and your status rises to where she is attracted.

Another such example would be you’re in the same church. You’re mere acquaintances. However, a Bible study is being started up soon and you’re picked as a leader. You facilitate an awesome discussion while being charismatic and funny. She becomes interested in you after this. You were merely “meh” before, but you’ve displayed a significant aspect of social charisma that she didn’t know you had before.

Conclusions and escaping the friend zone

These are the four main scenarios that you will encounter with women who you may have been “friends” with before, but then then you were able to date/court them later.

- You were her friend, but she always liked you. She was waiting for you to ask her out.
- You were her friend, and you underwent some change to become a man while you didn’t see her for a while. When you meet her again you impress her.
- You were her friend, but you are developing into a man. Then one day her friend or some other random act of God makes her reconsider you and her eyes are proverbially opened.

- You were her friend, and she doesn't know a certain side of you. An inadvertent crisis or significant display of social dominance or leadership shows her a side of you that she never saw before. She reconsiders you now as more attractive because of this masculine display.

These are the scenarios where men "escape" the friend zone. Aside from the one where she always liked you, they all have to do with YOU becoming more attractive by being a man or some other manly display involving confidence, assertiveness, leadership, social dominance, or the like. Hence, if you want to escape the friend zone become more masculine. You know: Be attractive. Don't be unattractive. Women are starving for masculinity in today's culture.

It is important to understand that not every girl will "come around" even if you become more attractive. Sometimes you really aren't "a woman's type" or whatever reason. Maybe she won't consider you because she doesn't like men of a different race or ethnicity. Maybe she likes specific type of man such as a jock in her sport of choice and usually if she's a athlete too; your guitar skills might not even phase her. Maybe you're not educated enough, and she wants to go for a doctorate and is only interested in marrying another doctoral candidate. Whatever the case just like some women aren't your type even if they are attractive so too a woman may decide that you're "not her type" no matter how attractive you may become. If you become famous all bets are off though. Fame is a great equalizer regardless of "type" for women.

This is why I don't recommend trying to escape the friend zone with women. Rather go meet more women who don't have preconceived notions of who you are and are interested in you right off the bat. Thus, I side with the manosphere and Donal's recommendation that you should not try to become a friend of a woman first before asking her out on a date or whatever you want to call that stuff nowadays.

If she gives you the "we should be friends before dating" she's probably not attracted to you otherwise she would be giddy to go out on a date with you. The exception is if you can figure out that is a hard rule that she has with ALL men even ones she thinks are attractive, or if at a certain period in her life she has sworn off relationships (although this would make me suspicious in a yellow/red flag depending on the reason — especially if a man was the cause). However, that's rarely the case from what I've seen.

I think I hit all of the scenarios, but if you can think of another that I missed post a comment.

The demonization of masculinity and Numbers 30

April 11, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One commentor writes by e-mail about the demonization of masculinity and my comments on how husbands are not held responsible for their wives actions, roles, and responsibilities:

> I tend to agree with you, however I was listening to Numbers 30 today and it makes me question whether or not we as husbands are more responsible than we even think we are.
>
> Numbers 30:13-15 NASB
>
> “Every vow and every binding oath to humble herself, her husband may confirm it or her husband may annul it. [14] But if her husband indeed says nothing to her from day to day, then he confirms all her vows or all her obligations which are on her; he has confirmed them, because he said nothing to her on the day he heard them. [15] But if he indeed annuls them after he has heard them, then he shall bear her guilt.”
>
> That part about how he shall bear her guilt makes me think of Adam and the fall.
>
> I would appreciate your take on this.
>
> My current take on it is if my wife tells me something she is planning to do, right then is where it becomes my responsibility. If I agree with her, I become responsible for the decision as soon as I am made aware of it. If I disagree with the decision (let’s say your wife wants to take kids to visit in laws where they may be exposed to things they aren’t ready to deal with), I have to be prepared to stand up to my wife and lead, even if it is a fight, because acquiescence means I’m responsible before God for the decision, just like Adam.
>
> This would not be easy in the case of a rebellious wife obviously, and I guess that’s where “game” or headship or however you want to define it comes into play.

Basically, husbands are responsible for making their opinion known when a wife makes a vow or oath or other decision.

The commentor is correct about how it is basically what happened to Adam with Eve. Adam should have right away told Eve that the fruit she was giving him they should not eat. Instead, he let it slide, and disobeyed God and ate of the fruit and also more the consequences. That’s why the punishment for Adam was not just that he ate the fruit, but also that he listened to the voice of his wife [over the command of God].

The reasoning behind this is very insightful into the power of God’s laws. Basically, if a wife does something that a husband doesn’t like whether it makes him uncomfortable or is against his beliefs then God wants the husband to speak up for it right away. This quashes such scenarios as letting molehills grow into mountains that become major problems later. If a man allows such things as nagging to go on, it will only grow worse and worse. Such issues should be quashed immediately.

As you can see by verse 14, by being silent God has basically stated that the husband as the head of the household is implicitly agreeing to whatever the wife is doing Hence, in verse 15, he becomes responsible for it by implicitly agreeing with it. You can compare this to if you're Christian brother is in sin. If he's in sin are you supposed to sit by silently and keep letting him sin? God forbid! Instead, we as Christians are called to gently admonish or rebuke him if necessary.

This scenario in particular is one of the roles and responsibilities that a husband has in a marriage. A husband doesn't have responsibility for the wife's actions, roles, and responsibilities, but he does have responsibility for making his opinion known on the matter whether it agrees or disagrees with her. Then his wife's decision and actions to submit to it or not are her responsibility.

In conclusion, God wants the husbands to be assertive about his opinion not passive. Passivity is not the trait of a leader or head of the household and only leads to ruin.

Oneitis and the blue pill are manifestations of a man's rationalization hamster

April 13, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Sometimes I see a post on TRP and go to respond. Occasionally, it turns into a post. This post is mainly about seeing some of the boundaries of what falls in the categories of "human nature" and the "complementary differences in males and females"

In a post there was the conclusion that:

> A man's "oneitis" is usually based on logic. A woman's "oneitis" is usually based on her emotions, which an Alpha can bring out.

This is a misunderstanding of the nature of humans as opposed to the nature of how males and females are complementary. Oneitis for both sexes is based in emotion. Let me explain.

Definitions:

- Oneitis — when a man sees a woman as "the one" who is perfect for him.
- AFBB or AF/BB — the strategy that women decide their mate choice on. AF is alpha f*cks which means she is sexually attracted to him (typically, because of his personality, social status, athleticism or looks) and BB is beta bux which means she is with him as a provider and support. BBs are typically effeminate men and aren't able to see the nature of women well.
- frivorces — frivolous divorce. Typically because a woman isn't happy.

The scenario

Consider the BB (beta bucks) who believes that single mother who has been divorced 2 times with 3 children from those 2 marriages. She is 35 years old but still looks pretty good (7/10) and has 50k in college loan debt currently with a couple of maxed out credit cards. She is generally nice but has a mean streak when she gets irritated. BB gets oneitis for her and believes that she is his perfect woman. No amount of logic or facts from his friends or family will convince him that this woman is a poor choice. In fact, oneitis for the BB in this case is the emotional response which spins the logical mind to rationalize it the way the BB wants:

- "The first 4 marriages the man didn't treat her right; I will treat her right and she will change for me."
- "She just needs someone to understand her."
- "I can be a good father to her kids."
- "When she gets angry at me it's cause I wasn't loving her enough, or supporting her enough"
- "I need to do more chores and housework because she's exhausted.. that way she'll be up for sex”

- “Her debt is fine… I can pay it off and then we will live a happy life”
- “Age is just a number… what matters is her personality”

Note this is the same type of emotional rationalization that women also go through when pining for an alpha. Ego is always filtered through emotion first and logic/rational thoughts second. Emotion is the baser animal instinct. Men tend to have an easier time seeing through emotion to use the rational mind, but in the case of oneitis in men the emotional center takes over and uses the mind to rationalize thoughts on why she is HIS one.

What drives the oneitis emotional response

Typically, in the case of men their thirst for sex and respect/attention is what drives the emotional response. They are so thirsty for sex and respect that any woman such as this woman (who is only after the support and money) makes him think that “wow, I’ve been working so hard and here is a woman who finally sees my worth” and gives him sex and attention. What he doesn’t see — because he is blinded by his emotional rationalization — is that she is using sex and attention for his for money and support — until she can’t stand him anymore and she frivorces him and takes half his assets and leaves him to live in some small apartment with nothing.

Even still, he may still pine for that oneitis. Or he may commit suicide because she was his “everything.” Or he grows as a man and realizes she was just using him like many of you here today.

Rationalization hamster in men and women versus complementary counterparts

It’s important to realize that there is no full dichotomy to everything in male versus female. Some conditions are just from being human and utilizing emotion first. Here are some examples:

- Emotion first: Oneitis for a man = alpha widow for a female (e.g you pine for that individual even if they reject you and use you)
- Emotion first: The red pill is seeing the world through a rational lens vs. the blue pill where you believe what you want to believe and rationalize the world based on how you want it to be. (e.g. red pill is about become a masculine man not some effeminate man that society tells you women want).
- Emotional first: Blue pill rationalization of Elliot Rodger’s prior to going on the shooting spree: “I’m rich, have a nice car, I’m a NICE guy. Women should like me.” But they didn’t, and he started hating asian men and women enough to go kill them. Women weren’t even his primary target, but the media spun it as such. He killed more asian men than women.
- Counterparts: Hot woman for a man = AF for female (e.g different manifestation of sexual attraction/arousal)
- Counterparts: Fat women with a good personality and chef = BB for women (e.g.

you like their company and food, but you're grossed out by sex with them)

Regarding the second emotion point. The reason why you can't argue with blue pillers, purple pill debate, feminists, or whatever, is because their arguments are based on emotion first. If it feels wrong, it is wrong. Hence,

- Regret sex (didn't want it) = rape.
- Poor life choices (victim shaming) = bad.
- Being male (penis envy) = privilege.
- Choosing that you want a woman who can cook and take care of the house (patriarchy, holding down women) = evil.
- Desiring a woman based on physical attraction ("judges" women) = Shallow. Shame on you men for not looking past physical appearance

A full rational approach — colloquially referred to as "taking the red pill" — allows you to see the world as it is: Women want to have sex with assertive, muscular, masculine men. Women want effortless winners. Women don't want the burden of leadership. Therefore, be assertive, be muscular, be masculine, lead, and be an effortless winner. Thus, some of the examples of a man's rationalization hamster = Being blue pill, or having oneitis, or shootings like Elliot Rodger.

Any time a man uses emotion first to determine a decision without thinking about the consequences and acting accordingly he is using his rationalization hamster. This is the root cause of many forms of sin.

Oral contraception alters your brain

April 15, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I found this article floating across my facebook page today titled Oral Contraceptive Pill Could Be Altering The Physical Structure Of Your Brain. Apparently, there was another one by the same author a couple months ago titled similarly that didn't make very far Contraceptive Pill Associated With Changes In Brain Structure.

Some of the sciencec is quite interesting. This is from the second article:

> Many women, however, experience unpleasant side effects, ranging from mood changes to androgenic effects, such as acne and unwanted hair growth. The latter are caused by the fact that some progestins (the synthetic versions of the hormone progesterone used in oral contraceptives) interact with androgen receptors. The androgens, such as testosterone, are steroid hormones that are responsible for male characteristics. Some progestins have high androgenic activity and therefore increase the chances of androgen-related side effects, but many more modern pills actually exert anti-androgenic effects.

So perhaps the "masculinization" of women was not all due to feminism pushing women toward being strong and independent, ambitious, leaders, and whatnot. Part of that may have been due to oral contraception use.

Some of the more interesting science is obviously on mate selection.

> and one study even found it could influence a woman's choice of partner.
>
> Inside that study link:
>
> "Ovulating women exhibit a preference for more masculine male features, are particularly attracted to men showing dominance and male-male competitiveness and prefer partners that are genetically dissimilar to themselves. This is significant because there is evidence suggesting that genetic similarity between couples might be linked with infertility. Further, some studies have suggested that men detect women's fertility status, preferring ovulating women in situations where they can compare the attractiveness of different women."
>
> […]
>
> "Of particular interest is the fact that women taking the pill do not exhibit the ovulation-specific attraction to genetically dissimilar partners. "The ultimate outstanding evolutionary question concerns whether the use of oral contraceptives when making mating decisions can have long-term consequences on the ability of couples to reproduce," suggests Dr. Lummaa."

Now this is the good stuff.

Contraception basically mimics pregnancy. During pregnancy, women tend to prefer "beta" or "comfort traits" from a partner such as loyalty, being nice, provision, protection, and similar qualities as it signals that men will stick around. This indicates that women will tend to select “beta males” for mate choices prior to marriage.

However, once they get married and come off the contraception and try to get pregnant their repulsion to their spouse is magnified. Especially once they get pregnant for real. Not to mention the fact that it alters selection for mates which may result in infertility, aside from the other infertility from STDs.

Now we’re seeing with many women “chose” to marry men they weren’t really attracted to in the first place. And why divorce is common after a woman comes off birth control and gets pregnant with kids. Her brain thought her spouse was attractive when he wasn’t. I suppose you could liken this to what “beer googles” does for both sexes… it makes you attracted to the members of the opposite sex you would never ask out if you were sober. If you’re a man who likes Scarlett Johansson curves and then you suddenly wake up next to a woman who’s 300 lbs you’d probably be disgusted too.

That’s not even the most surprising part though in my opinion.

> As described in Human Brain Mapping, the researchers found that two particular regions, the lateral orbitofrontal cortex and the posterior cingulate cortex, tended to be thinner in those who were taking oral contraceptive pills. The lateral orbitofrontal cortex helps us regulate emotions and is thought to allow us to adapt our behavior in response to rewards or adversities, while the posterior cingulate cortex helps us evaluate our internal states. The researchers told Huffington Post that changes to the former could help to explain why some women experience negative emotional side effects, such as anxiety and depression, when they commence the pill.

Ah, so the particular regions of the brain that are thinned — or rather atrophied — and became dysfunctional are the parts of the brain that “[help] us regulate emotions and is thought to allow us to adapt our behavior in response to rewards or adversities” and “evaluate our internal states.” Also, some women “experience negative emotional side effects, such as anxiety and depression, when they commence the pill.

Am I the only one who sees the irony here? Basically,

- Women have a more difficult time “regulating their emotions” which means that they go more feral: they’re at the whims of their behavior not chained to any type of logic or reason.
- Women have a more difficult time seeing the results of “actions and consequences” in terms of reward and adversity
- Women have a difficult time evaluating their “internal state”… or in other words they’re desensitized to evaluating it so what they feel is their only reality. They can’t evaluate whether that’s true or false. Solipsism.

You can’t make this stuff up folks.

And this article doesn’t even mention that some cancers are increased by hormonal contraception use.

> Naturally occurring estrogen and progesterone have been found to influence the development and growth of some cancers. Because birth control pills contain female hormones, researchers have been interested in determining whether there is any link between these widely used contraceptives and cancer risk.
>
> The results of population studies to examine associations between oral contraceptive use and cancer risk have not always been consistent. Overall, however, the risks of endometrial and ovarian cancer appear to be reduced with the use of oral contraceptives, whereas the risks of breast, cervical, and liver cancer appear to be increased (1). A summary of research results for each type of cancer is given below.

Generally, I find that whenever man tries to mess with complex biological systems it doesn't usually end up that well. We can see this with the food we eat. But apparently, many are blind to the hubris of messing with the human body.

There are other maladies of contraception depending on a woman's individual body as well. Copper IUDs apparently can make your body go bonkers.

Conclusion: never use hormonal contraception. It's said to be safe, but it isn't.

Permission

April 20, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To tack on to what Cane has been saying about You must be because you are and the two follow up posts on she got games you ain't even thought of playing and three peaces of command.

> Right then, for the first time, I fully realized that–because I was too chickenshit to appear sexist or hypocritical about work*[1]*,–I had been passively hoping that she would pick "stay home, cook, and clean", and therefore angry that–in the absence (and complete abdication) of my direction–she had chosen neither and both…just as I had demonstrated. Husbands don't just need to be the leaders. Husbands are the leaders, and therefore must act accordingly. That's not a guarantee that she will follow, but if she stays, she will follow. A wife cannot divorce staying a wife from following her husband anymore than a son can stay in his father's home while refusing to mimic the father's behavior, or reject his genetics. The consequences are unavoidable.

Generally speaking, because masculinity is demonized, men are waiting for permission to be leaders/headship of their home. They're waiting for permission from their pastors, their friends, their wives, their children, and even their culture. Fat chance you'll actually get this "approval" unless your church or social group is insulated from the culture and has strong Christian roots.

In reality, this approval is illusionary. Even if you get this approval, there's no shortage of opinions decrying how it is evil, patriarchal, or otherwise bad in numerous ways. Dalrock's recent post have some decrying it as archaic.

However, as I explored in the demonization of masculinity the truth is even more insidious than that. It's not JUST that men are waiting for permission to be the leaders or heads of their household. Rather, it goes deeper to the fundamental level.

Men are waiting for permission to be men.

The sad reality is that men are waiting for permission to be men when they are already men. They're waiting for permission for something they already are.

To be honest, now that I realize this it's a hilarious caricature. We're sitting here in the manosphere blogging about being a Christian and being masculine. We're trying to find or regain something which we already are. It's quite absurd.

It's really a testament to free will. Humans are the only beings that can act against their nature. Animals can't do that. Sometimes it's bad such as when we use our free will to submit to the flesh rather than the Spirit. But wow, it sure is bad when we use our free will as men to act feminine rather than masculine.

However, I think the real irony is that it's actually very hard work to go against your biologically masculine nature. Even in 'failure' you still have choices. What you do decides if you control your life or not. For example, if you ask a girl out and she says “let’s just be friends” and you don’t want to be friends? Just say no. Men too often look for approval for their actions to get the yes or no. Instead, men should know that they’re in control of their lives at all times and should give out the yes or no.

> John 10:7 So Jesus again said to them, “Truly, truly, I say to you, I am the door of the sheep. 8 All who came before me are thieves and robbers; but the sheep did not heed them. 9 I am the door; if any one enters by me, he will be saved, and will go in and out and find pasture. 10 The thief comes only to steal and kill and destroy; I came that they may have life, and have it abundantly.

We’re waiting for permission to walk out of the mediocrity of other’s expectations when we already know who we are in Jesus.

Life and life abundantly. It’s an amazing thing when a man is at peace with his masculinity like it is with a woman in her femininity. It’s who we were created to be.

What “is” masculinity

April 21, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I think to mentor men we need to have a stronger hold on what “masculinity” actually is. To be honest, that’s one thing I’ve struggled with explaining to men in real life.

This is important because — aside from the choice to follow God — the choice whether or not to marry and thus pursue women is one of the most important choices that a man can make in his life. In this day and age if he chooses poorly many hardships may befall him such as risk of divorice shooting through the roof. Similarly, if he does decide to make this choice, he must learn what traits are innate to being a man and what traits are taught and to learn them.

However, the important thing to know is that masculinity should be developed irregardless of this choice to marry even though masculinity is inherently attractive to women. This is part of developing into a man of God that is able to be useful and profitable for God to use in the Church, family, and friends.

In other words, since God created men to be men, we need to learn how to operate fully into what He created us to be. The fact that becoming a masculine man is attractive to women is only a side effect.

Cultural masculinity

Obviously, there are indicators and tells. Planned parenthood, bastion of the left, describes typically masculine and typically feminine traits although they call them “culturally” ingrained and not biological in nature. (from: planned parenthood site, not linking cause they attempted to hijack my browser location).

WORDS COMMONLY USED TO DESCRIBE FEMININITY

- dependent
- emotional
- passive
- sensitive
- quiet
- graceful
- innocent
- weak
- flirtatious
- nurturing
- self-critical
- soft
- sexually submissive
- accepting

WORDS COMMONLY USED TO DESCRIBE MASCULINITY

- independent
- non-emotional
- aggressive
- tough-skinned
- competitive
- clumsy
- experienced
- strong
- active
- self-confident
- hard
- sexually aggressive
- rebellious

Obviously, some of these are what is traditionally masculine and some are just words they threw in there to polarize. “Clumsy” is not a traditionally masculine word nor is “weak” a traditionally feminine word. Clumsy puts men in a bad light, and weak is able to be polarized for women for non-privileged victim status.

The reason I bring this up is that it is important to know what the “culture” thinks about masculinity because that is how most people will think about masculinity. Indeed, even most Christians accept what is “culturally true” over what the Scriptures say. Thus, noting the context from which someone is discussion a certain point is important, especially when mentoring men.

Scripturally defining masculinity

Even the Scriptures aren’t exactly clear about what masculinity beyond a couple of passages. For example,

> 1 Kings 2:When David’s time to die drew near, he charged Solomon his son, > saying, 2 “I am about to go the way of all the earth. Be strong (DS: strength), and show yourself a man (DS: basically, TO BE a man), 3 and keep the charge of the Lord your God, walking in his ways and keeping his statutes, his commandments, his ordinances, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that you may prosper in all that you do and wherever you turn; (DS: assertive and proactive about the ways of God) 4 that the Lord may establish his word which he spoke concerning me, > saying, ‘If your sons take heed to their way, to walk before me in faithfulness with all their heart and with all their soul, there shall not fail you a man on the throne of Israel.’
>
> and…
>
> 1 Corinthians 13:4 Love is patient, love is kind and is not jealous; love does not brag and is not arrogant, 5 does not act unbecomingly; it does not seek its own, > is not provoked, does not take into account a wrong suffered, 6 does not rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth; 7 [b]bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. 8 Love never fails; but if there are gifts of [c]prophecy, they will be done away; if there are tongues, they will cease; if there is knowledge, it will be done away. 9 For we know in part and we prophesy in part; 10 but when the perfect comes, the partial will be done away. 11 When I was a child, I used to speak like a child, think like a child, reason like a child; when I [d]became a man, I did away with childish things. (DS: maturity in love) 12 For now we see in a mirror [e]dimly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then I will know fully just as I also have been fully known. 13 But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the [f]greatest of these is love.

>
> and…
>
> Genesis 2:24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother (DS: become independent), and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh.
>
> and…
>
> 1 Timothy 5:8 But if anyone does not provide for his own (DS: provider), and especially for those of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

So we know the Bible talks whether explicitly or implicitly that masculinity does involve being:

- Strong
- BEING a man (or otherwise, be of your nature)
- Assertive and proactive, especially for the laws of God
- Maturing, especially in love
- Independent — some men leave their father and mother and never marry.
- Provider, if married to household, if not at least to himself

Aside from the commands of the husbands in the Scriptures which are:

- Don’t withhold sex (1 Corinthians 7)
- Be the head (Eph 5)
- Love wife as Christ loved the Church and as his own body (Eph 5)
- Live with in an understanding way with the weaker vessel and show her honor as a co-heir in Christ (1 Pet 3)

These are important to know because they will help men understand what becoming men is in the context of God. Hence, knowing these and developing these as a Christian man will be all important just as Jesus grew.

> Luke 2:52 And Jesus kept increasing in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God > and men.

Note that the context of this is Jesus questioning the Scribes in the temple and then obeying His parents. Being in submission where submission is required is important. We do not just want to grow in favor with God but with God and men.

Other thoughts on masculinity as a whole and with women

As Vox was going through his "Gamma" series I had the distinct impression that being "gamma" basically personified men who hadn't become "men" in one context or another.

http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/winning-redefined.html
http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/alpha-mail-diagnosis-gamma-1.html
http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/alpha-mail-diagnosis-gamma-2.html http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/alpha-mail-diagnosis-gammma-3.html http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/the-source-of-gamma-delusion.html http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/10-signs-of-passive-aggressiveness.html http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/gamma-in-action.html http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/the-gamma-identifier.html http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/03/graduating-gamma-4.html
http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2015/04/gamma-solipsism.html

Gammas are passive aggressive, care about "winning" more than "relationships", have a very difficult time with self critique, have a very hard time with taking criticism, and similar things. Most of us can obviously say that these are simply hallmarks of an immature man. It should be no surprise that such a man will have little success with women.

Along these lines, Vox's socio-sexual hierarchy has become one of the main posts of the manosphere for describing various tiers of men according to their sexual success:

http://alphagameplan.blogspot.com/2011/03/socio-sexual-hierarchy.html

Thus, it has become my increasing impression that the sociosexual hierarchy is simply a component of how men use their masculinity around women. Masculinity takes into account the heart and what comes out of it. The "heart" of a man being composed of his biological nature, thoughts, and feelings. And out of the nature, thoughts, and feelings become behavior. As Jesus said it is what comes out of the heart that makes things unclean, and by similar analogy it is out of the heart which makes a man masculine or not.In this context, "game" is simply aping masculine behaviors because masculinity was not passed on from father to son post destruction of the family from no-fault divorce and incentivizing divorce by awarding cash and prizes to women who followed through. Specifically, "game" is a specialized subset about aping masculine behavior in the context of masculined women.This is why I think "game" in particular as it exists is simply a caricature of masculinity. It is specifically aimed at women and not developing a man as a whole, and it is aimed at generating sexual attraction from masculined women. Masculinty, of course, can be learned outside of these contexts. You can see the reddit TRP men realizing over the past year that there is more to being a man than women even though they act immorally.Regardless of that tangent, it is important to realize that a man’s ability to attract women TENDS to be a decent indicator of his masculinity since very few men have been taught how to be masculine by their fathers. Hence, “gammas” now are “full gammas” in that was as far as they developed without masculine father figures or mentorship. Their masculinity it characterized by the same strength, maturity, independence, etc deficits as their ability with women.It is becoming increasingly rare for men growing up in their teens, 20s, and 30s to be successful as a man in life without being successful with women. It’s the same concept as Jesus states in the parable of the talents: Matthew 25:29 “For to everyone who has, more shall be given, and he will have an abundance; but from the one who does not have, even what he does have shall be taken away.”However, there are rare exceptions, especially in the technology fields where business success simply may not correlate with success with women. In these instances, we have men who despite being succesful in business, either believe the lies of the culture about how women like nice men or simply think acting masculine around women is wrong for whatever reason. Hence, they fail in relationships because they withdraw their masculinity around women either due to fear or other factors.Hence, strength, maturity, and the like are two way streets both in your life and in interactions with women if you’re interested in getting married.

Some questions for readers

1. So, aside from these traits, are there any other Biblical traits that you can think of that should be fundamentally taught to men to be masculine? I think I pulled out most if not all of the verses that speak specifically to men. There’s lots of other verses but they apply to both men and women which isn’t as unique. Remember, the problem is men need to be more masculine.

2. Which are innate? Which are taught?

3. Also, we need to “define” what these traits are. For example, what does being “strong” even mean? For the most part, it seems like it’s pretty obvious. Strength in a man moves beyond just physical strength to mental strength. To be firm in what he believes (has boundaries) and is willing to enforce them in any situation. Boundaries should be aligned to the Word.

4. How do we begin to start to teach these to men?

5. How do you teach masculinity in terms of being a man for all things versus in the context of women? For most men from what I’ve experienced and talked to men about their experiences is that growing in masculinity seems to be natural with guidance, but that with women it seems to be a “special case” that is more difficult even with guidance.

I think that if we nail down masculinity as it is Biblically along with other non-Scriptural truth we will have a much easier time teaching and mentoring men.

Overcoming the Anger Phase

May 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One reader wrote to me about some hardship with the anger phase. I'm going to go through the e-mail and address it. This should be helpful kick in the butt, hopefully, for many men not just the e-mailer.

> So I've been following you and Dalrock and other blogs as of late. I'm slowly weaning from the non-Christian blogs (secular they may be but unfortunately, they seem to have a lot of dark truths). Since I've emailed you once, I wanted to email you again.

I eliminated most of the non-Christian blogs I read almost a year ago. It was a good choice. The tangible anger and bitterness you can palpably feel from the vast majority of non-Christian blogs does eventually start to weigh on you. It is similar to peer pressure in a way. If you're around people who smoke all the time you'll eventually start to feel like you should be smoking too. I also went the route of eliminating most of the blogs of Christian women that I read. Initially, when I first started reading the manosphere almost 2.5-3 years ago, a balanced perspected was good to know what both men and women thought about the detrimental effects on society. However, I noticed that eventually I started to gravitate to commenting more on such women's blogs because I felt more comfortable there. Women tend to put a more welcoming atmosphere, and it is not as harsh as more of the men blogs. I realized this was problematic because if you are not conditioned to the way men challenge each other then you will naturally want to gravitate toward women who are more socially accepting. This is not how you become a Christian masculine man. We're not here to gain other humans's approval but to do the will of the Father. It's much like repentance. You gotta do the 180.

> I need to know how to get out of the anger phase of 'taking the red pill' so to speak. I'm stuck in it. I feel like I need to be this pinnacle of perfection all the time and every time I stammer or break eye contact with a female, it's another giant red X on their mental checklist. I feel overwhelmed and I have no outlet to express it. I don't feel like I hate women but I do dislike the male-female social dynamic and how I was made to be a sucker and a loser for so long. Not just by their actions but by my ignorance/shortcomings socially.

Going back to the analogy of repentance, the anger phase is akin to not doing the 180 but to doing a 90 degree turn. You were headed exactly in the wrong direction — you were deceived by society and maybe even your family and the church — about what God says in the Scriptures. For full repentance you need to do the 180 and walk out of deception in the opposite direction to life and life abundantly in Jesus. However, instead of making a 180 degree turn you instead made a 90 degree turn. You know you weren't going in the right direction, but now you're still going in the wrong direction walking parallel to the evil you now see. Part of the problem is that you still care too much about the approval of women. There is a desire that is innate in men created by God which drives us to value women: we have a sex drive and we want to be providers and protectors. We want to make sure our women are happy. This is not a bad desire, but it is coerced by our gynocentric culture into a reversal of roles and responsbilities. As I've noted before, human societies operate primarily on performance based mindsets versus desire based mindsets. You feel that you have to "perform" for a woman to get her to like you. When you don't "perform" such as meeting eye contact you feel like a "failure." If you examine this mindset spiritually it's taking cues from culture rather than from God. You're essentially saying to yourself that your self worth is based in your performance or ability to attract a woman. You're implicitly rejecting God's value of your worth and instead valuing society's worth over yourself. This is not good.

> I primarily was raised by women–my dad was around but my parents split when I was in 10th/11th grade. Just recently last year, he passed away due to heart failure. We were never really close and now I regret not having a stronger bond with him. I think other than my natural personality, being raised in a predominantly feminine environment made me incomplete. I can't cry or scream because that's letting my emotions get to me. I suppose I should pray but there's a voice in my head that tells me my prayers suck and I'm just going to sin again anyway so by bother praying. I've got no interest in quitting my faith. I guess I just needed someone to talk to.

Incomplete? Hah, by what measure? Society? Don't make me laugh. The past does not define who you become. The past only shows how broken we are, and how much we need a savior. You're at a good point. God loves a good redemption story. That's what the vast majority of the Scriptures are all about. Redemption stories. People that were in desperate situations that needed a Savior. Luke 18:9 And He also told this parable to some people who trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and viewed others with contempt: 10 "Two men went up into the temple to pray, one a Pharisee and the other a tax collector. 11 The Pharisee stood and was praying this to himself: 'God, I thank You that I am not like other people: swindlers, unjust, adulterers, or even like this tax collector. 12 I fast twice a week; I pay tithes of all that I get.' 13 But the tax collector, standing some distance away, was even unwilling to lift up his eyes to heaven, but was beating his breast, saying, 'God, be [f]merciful to me, the sinner!' 14 I tell you, this man went to his house justified rather than the other; for everyone who exalts himself will be humbled, but he who humbles himself will be exalted." Ignore the voice via 1 John 4. It's demonic. God doesn't love elaborate prayers but prayers that come from the heart. You'd be hard pressed to say that the tax collector was not emotional here: he's beating his breast and probably wailing in sorrow at his state before God. While I still think you need to temper your emotions with women in some cases, you can display your emotions before God in prayer, alone time, and meditation any time. The Scriptures are clear that it's OK to get angry and express it to God. It is fine to question your situation with God. But it's not alright to blame God for it, even if He does allow things to happen. God loves the truth, and if the truth is you expressing your emotions to Him that's great. I've had a couple times in my life in the past few years over some situations like there where I have had to take it to God with my emotions. He answers the frustration, the hurt, the anguish, and the bitterness with grace, and mercy, and peace. This is the thing that I think many Christians do not understand. You'd be hard pressed to say there's not a ton of physical and emotional hardship in the Psalms. David had some really bad experiences in his life with many people wanting to kill him. Yet, he expresses it through music, writing, and other physical acts or outbursts to God, and it is incoporated into Scripture. Job's situation is pretty terrible too. However, almost all of the Psalms like this are a story: they first reflect on the negative situation; however, they almost always revert to reframing their thinking on how powerful God is and what He can do in the situation. This is what we need to do more of in our daily lives.

> So far, my plan is to not get romantically involved with anyone. Regardless, I'm going to encounter women every day. I need to get rid of my feelings of anxiety/anger towards them–the ones I've never met and the ones that have wronged me. I need a godly view and attitude so I can get over this thing. I'm at work and I'm typing this and I feel overwhelmed.

Correct, it would be unwise to engage women at this point if you are not fully grounded in the Word yourself. The answer lies in the ability to reframe your thinking from worldly to godly. This will likely be difficult at first since you don't have much experience with it. It will require going to God in prayer, praise, meditation, fasting, and the Scriptures. Part of this process is learning to empty your mind of expectations and thoughts and to live in the moment when talking with other people. My goal is not "attraction" but rather to help others grow in the Word. If "attraction" is at the forefront then you have made an idol of it already. The more I help others grow in the Word the stronger my leadership abilities grow, the stronger I can more easily facilitate social interaction, and the stronger and more confident I become in Him. The more I stand up for His Word as truth the more strength I gain and the more masculine I become. You start to care for Him above women. And that's how it should be… when you take the focus off of women and place it onto Him things start falling more into alignment. Your focus shifts away from performance but to desire. If you're not performing for women's approval or attraction then you have nothing to be angry about because you can't fail. There is no standard from which to falsely judge yourself. All you can do is learn how to love more.

> Matthew 6:33 But [s]seek first [t]His kingdom and His righteousness, and all these things will be [u]added to you.

The irony is that this is the "cure for anxiety." People were worrying about food and clothes… but it also applies to women and other earthly things as well. Women can tell when you're trying to earn their approval and it's not attractive.

edit: Donal has a nice follow up post on this and on bitterness.

Independent versus self sufficient and responsible

May 1, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I already had this on the backburner, but Ballista pulled it to the forefront. He comments:

> An old comment of yours is drawing some traffic to my blog right now. Thought you might like to know.

Basically, the post they are commenting on is actually one my first posts on this blog: Practical ways to improve your attractiveness and desirability for a Christian spouse. The fact that boundless deleted that comment was partially responsible for me to start up this blog. So I suppose you can thank boundless for something.

I read through briefly, and many of the women were talking about my "independent" comment of course. Hence, this post.

Independent versus self sufficent and responsble

It is important to understand these two terms as men and husbands and to be able to explain them to women and wives.

Remember the disctinction between respect and submission? I talked about it in your attitude tells me everything I need to know. Essentially, respect is a state of the heart: it is the attitude with which you approach others. Submission is the outward fruit of obedience under authority.

Likewise, independence and self sufficience are similar. Independence is an attitude, and self sufficience and responsible are an outward state of being. However, they don't relate together the same way that respect and submission appear.

Women like to ape masculine behaviors such as independence because they think it is attractive to men. This is false. Men generally want nothing to do with strong, confident, and independent women. An independent woman signals to a man that she doesn't need him, and in most cases it also signals that she doesn't want him either. It is the attitude of "I can take care of myself, AND I don't want or need your help." I don't want a woman whose attitude conveys she don't need no man because she can do everything herself.

On the other hand, men do want their women to be self sufficient and responsible. I want a woman who can take care of herself if I'm not around, make responsible decisions, be responsible with money, and other characteristics of self sufficiency. This is important especially in taking care of a household and any other future children.

When men discuss these things we almost always intuitively understand it in this way. We like women who are "independent" in the sense that they are self sufficient and responsible. We don't like women who take the attitude that they don't need no man and act to reflect this.

Part of what this relates to is identity. If your identity is not in Christ then you're gonna be looking to other things to fulfill you. For example, a woman that looks to a husband primarily for emotional support is setting herself up for failure because a husband can never given the PEACE that Jesus can.

Understanding

I'm unsure of why women have such a strong reaction to the fact that men say they don't want an [strong and confident] independent woman.

I think it may be similar to how they view respect and honor as well. I discussed this some in my post Why I don't respect women. In general, what women mean by respect and what men mean by respect are two different things. In some cases, both definitions of "respect" aren't what the Bible defines as respect.

- Respect, Biblically, is the proper attitude towards the position of authority.
- Men tend to think of respect as something earned; hence, when women demand respect we tend to dismiss them as laughable.
- Women tend to think of respect as "worth" or "power" depending on who you talk to. The worth or value is better defined Biblically as "time" which means honor and value.

I suppose this is some natural artifact of how both men and women process the world differently. There are some parallels such as fat women being unattractive to men as a wimp is unattractive to women. However, it's harder to pin down word usage until the comments section on posts blog up from back and forth arguing between men and women I recall a post a little while ago about men telling women to be more "open" in conversing with and flirting with men they were interested in to show interest. Another post that was similar was the one on NAWALT and AWALT.

Part of it is special snowflake syndrome. Most women want to believe they are different than other women and it makes them special. "Well, I'm strong and independent, and my boyfriend likes me and we've been dating for 4 months" was one of the comments in the forum.

Part of it is inability to understand themselves. Understanding attraction seems to fall into that category. Women can't tell tha they're attracted to power, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Perhaps they're afraid that if they admit it they look shallow so it's self preservation. However, being that even some of the women who regularly blog about things related to the manosphere can't understand it that well I'm more inclined to believe its just a blind spot. Fish don't need to know how a fisherman catches them… only that the bait looks tasty.

Anyway, just some thoughts on how men and women process differently. Not really going anywhere with it except to note that I think men and women's understanding of "independent" are different which leads to confusion.

Emotional engagement

May 4, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Expressing negative emotions

It's funny cause we talk so much about the negative implications of feeling-based thinking that pervades the churchianity and society. However, we also don't acknowledge God from an emotional level. Engaging God on an emotional level is amazing and good. We should not let our bad experiences with people who say they are Christians but only obey their feelings stop us from engaging God with one aspect of how He created us.

God doesn't want us to be emotional automatons. David, being a man after God's own heart, is one obvious example. As I talked about in the previous post on overcoming the anger phase, many of the Psalms were written with anger, bitterness, and other "negative" emotions in mind. However, they are almost always reframed by the end of the Psalm away from the human perspective to God's grace, mercy, and provision. They are some of the quintessential examples of how to move the mind from the worldly situation to the spiritual reality.

Engaging God on this type of emotional level is good. He doesn't want us to pretend everything is fine when we're feeling crappy about the situation. Rather, He wants us to come to Him when we feel hurt, when we feel like we are in agony, and when we feel like we are struggling with anger or bitter.

This is the concept of never going down with problems.

On an organization level, you always escalate your large problems with your superior. You don't express your bitterness with those under your leadership. You don't express your anger or discontent with those under your leadership. You don't complain to those under your leadership.

You can brainstorm with those under you. You can ask their advice. You can even delegate problems to those under you. But you are still the leader and one in authority — once you start to rely on them to solve your problems or you foist leadership of the problems onto your subordinates you will have issues.

It's no wonder when you present needy emotional outburts to women that they become unattracted. Why does she become unattracted? She becomes unattracted because she loses respect. Why does she lose respect? Because your leadership is in question. You went to the wrong person for guidance with your problems. Instead of going to God for guidance with your problem you went to your wife. Your wife is not your leader. When she is placed in a situation where she feels like she needs to lead she feels like she has to "mother" which makes her lose respect and become unattracted.

This is why you have to be very careful with negative emotions coupled with problems. It is not necessarily the negative emotions that lead to the issues but foisting your problems upon someone else to make decisions about how to fix them.

You undermine God's authority when you ask those under you to lead in a situation.

This doesn't mean a wife should respond emotionally by refusing to have sex or divorce in these circumstances, but it also means that there tends to be some fault of the man as well. (Note: it is also true where a man can do everything Biblically and a woman can still divorce just as a woman can do everything Biblically and a husband can still leave. Hosea comes to mind. Those cases are exceedingly rare, and chance are you are not one of them because we often encourage negative behavior with our own behavior via behavioral cycles).

Engaging God with the rest of your heart

I haven't seen anything posted about this in the manosphere, so I might as well talk about it. Because we think that emotional displays tend to be "bad" men have started to become walking automatons even with our positive emotions. This is false.

In fact, in the Scriptures there are 7 types of Hebrew praise and worship. They are all forms of physical, emotional, and spiritual acts of worship:

> 1.YADAH – yaw-daw – to worship with the extended hand. The giving of oneself in worship and adoration. To lift your hands unto the Lord. It carries the meaning of absoulute surrender as a young child does to a parent – "pick me up, I'm all yours". Scriptures: Gen. 29:35, 2 Chron. 7:6, 20:21, Psalms 9:1, 28:7, Psalms 33:2, 42:5,11, 49:18, Isaiah 12:1 3034
>
> 2.TEHILLAH -teh-hil-law- to sing, to laud. A spontaneous new song. Singing from a melody in your heart by adding words to it. This refers to a special kind of singing-it is singing unprepared, unrehearsed songs. Brings tremendous unity to the body of Christ. Singing straight to God. Can move into tehilah anytime. Singing it the second time would be ZAMAR. It is the praise that God inhabits (sits enthroned on)(Psalm 22:3) God manifests Himself in the mids of exuberant singing.
>
> 3.BARAK – baw-rak – To kneel or to bow. To give reverence to God as an act of adoration. It implies to continual conscious giving place to God. Blessing the Lord, extolling virtue. There is a sense of kneeling and blessing God as an act of adoration in the word BARAK. Physical application – To bow, kneel or to do this with the intent in my heart that He is my KING and I yield to HIM. I am acknowledging Him as KING and GOD. SONG: BLESS THE LORD Scripture: Psalm 103 tells us how to bless the Lord and then goes on to enumerate those blessings: loving kindness, satisfaction redemption, honor, renewal. We bless the Lord by remembering all of these things.
>
> 4.HALAL Scripture: 1 Chron. 16:4, 23:5,30, 25:3, 29:13, Neh. 12:24 (this word appears over 110 times in the OT) 1984 halal (haw-lal'); a primitive root; to be clear (orig. of sound, but usually of color); to shine; hence, to make a show, to boast; and thus to be (clamorously) foolish; to rave; causatively, to celebrate; also to stultify:
>
> 5.TOWDAH -to-daw -To give worship by the extension of the hand in adoration or agreeing with what has been done or will be. This word is common- ly found in > connection with sacrifice-applying the giving of thanks or praise as a sacrifice before reception or manifestation. Thanking God for something that I don't have in the natural. Agreeing with His Word – faith in His Word. This form of praise goes in operation just because His Word is true. "Father, I thank YOU that YOUR WORD is TRUE. As we raise our hearts and hands in praise to the Lord, it involves a sacrifice, especially if one is very sick in body. The carnal mind would fight and ridicule this particular action, but there is great faith in TOWDAH as praise. The lifting of the hand symbolizes agreement. The right hand symbolizes my covenant with my my Father. As I go through the scriptures, God is seen extending His Right Hand to me. That's the covenant. When He extends His right hand to me, He's saying to me – ALL THAT I AM IS YOURS, and when I extend my right hand to Him, I am saying "All that I am is yours and I agree with what You're saying. It is the sacrifice that God honors by His performing of miracles.

>
> 6.ZAMAR – zaw-mar – To sing with instruments. To make music accompanied by the voice. One of the musical verbs for praise in the book of psalms. It carries the idea of making music in praise to God as in Psalm 92:1. The word ZAMAR also means to touch the strings, and refers to praise that involves instrumental worship as in Psalm 150. The one word is usually translated "sing praises".
>
> 7.SHABACH – shaw-bakh – to address in a loud tone, a loud adoration, a shout! Proclaim with a loud voice, unashamed, the GLORY, TRIUMPH, POWER, MERCY, LOVE OF GOD. This word implies that testimony is praise. The phrase "shout unto the Lord" can be understood as the action of SHABACH. It is not just being loud. You should have the attitude of putting your whole being into it, an attitude of being totally uninhibited. Scripture: Psalm 117:1, 63:3-4

Much of this type of praise is lost on our culture. I find it ironic that lifting hands, dancing, and other types of physical and emotional worship of God is frowned upon in most denominations in the Church.

As I have a more charasmatic background I've been more open to this from the start, but it is only recently that I have begun to realize how much of that attitude is ungodly. It's not wrong to celebrate before God, especially in a raucous manner. In fact, because of everything He has done for us wouldn't it be wrong to NOT celebrate before Him in a raucous manner?

The parable of the debtor comes to mind:

> Luke 7:47 "For this reason I say to you, her sins, which are many, have been forgiven, for she loved much; but he who is forgiven little, loves little."

Should it offend our sensibilities when we see someone give a shout of praise to God? Or should it offend us when those weep openly on the street because of forgiveness? Or should it offend us when people dance in Church? Or should it offend us if we lift up our hands to God? Hardly. I think we should be doing those things too, if only we truly knew the depths of what God has done for us.

David, in particular, is well known for dancing escapade:

> 2 Samuel 6:12 Now it was told King David, saying, “The Lord has blessed the house of Obed-edom and all that belongs to him, on account of the ark of God.” David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness. 13 And so it was, that when the bearers of the ark of the Lord had gone six paces, he sacrificed an ox and a fatling. 14 And David was dancing before the Lord with all his might, and David was [h]wearing a linen ephod. 15 So David and all the house of Israel were bringing up the ark of the Lord with shouting and the sound of the trumpet. 16 Then it happened as the ark of the Lord came into the city of David that Michal the daughter of Saul looked out of the window and saw King David leaping and dancing before the Lord; and she despised him in her heart. […]
>
> 20 But when David returned to bless his household, Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David and said, “How the king of Israel distinguished himself today! He uncovered himself today in the eyes of his servants’ maids as one of the foolish ones shamelessly uncovers himself!” 21 So David said to Michal, “It was before the Lord, who chose me above your father and above all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of the Lord, over Israel; therefore I will celebrate before the Lord. 22 I will be more lightly esteemed than this and will be humble in my own eyes, but with the maids of whom you have spoken, with them I will be distinguished.” 23 Michal the daughter of Saul had no child to the day of her death.

David is not afraid to pretty much go stark naked and dance with joy before God. The funny thing is Michal’s criticism is much like I think many of us would give people we saw today who are dancing in church: “Wow, you’re crazy.. why would you do that?” One can only imagine how silly David looked dancing just like many of our brethern in the Church.

However, David’s response is better and we should take note. That which He was doing in celebration of God is nothing to be ashamed about. How I look and how I am esteemed is nothing compared to my expression of joy before God. That is a man who knows his priorities right there, and it is a strong masculine response against a perceived slight on his character. He doesn’t defend himself rather instead He defends God.
No wonder he is named a man after God’s own heart.

In this we are not led by our emotions, but they participate fully and harmoniously in how passionate we are to be for God because of what He has done for us.

Edit: additional reading on emotionally engaging God:

http://mysteryoffaithblog.com/2015/05/15/are-emotions-in-worship-wrong/

How servant leadership is twisted

May 5, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Cane talks about servant leadership one of Dalrock's recent posts.

> "Servant leader is a term one uses when one wishes to obliterate and deny headship."
>
> I agree with this 100%. They are using it to deny headship…
>
> "Individually the words are right, but the term servant leader has no more to do with biblical headship than the term free love has to do with 1 Cor 13."
>
> …but I'm going to push back a little on this. There is a single word which means servant leader: Steward. There is one king, Jesus, but He has appointed a steward over every marriage until His return (or our deaths), and that steward is the husband. He has headship in the king's name. In Heaven there is no marriage, and no one is given in marriage. Our rule is legit not because of our worth, but by His name and decree. We are first of servants, and so are likewise served by others who are to serve us in His name.
>
> Because our rule is not based on our worth, this makes sense of why Peter instructs servants and wives to serve masters and husbands whether worthy or not. The sin of those who use servant leader to deny headship is not their use of the term, but of their pollution of marriage with works. Under their false teachings marriage becomes a sorcery of man's making: If he says the right words, makes the right motions, and prepares the right material ingredients, then he successfully casts the spell of Husband. As Baucham says: "That's not the Gospel!" I see no problem with the words used in conjunction. I see a problem in saying that the Jesus-appointed servant leader (steward) does not rule in the name of Jesus unless the underlings approve of the servant leader.
>
> Funny thing: Servant Leader, ah, dispellings, of headship are cast mostly by post-modern Protestants, but the concept of proper results based on proper formation of rituals has the distinct sense of Roman Catholicism.

You can tell exactly when "servant leadership" becomes an abomination. When it instead becomes a performance rather than a desire.

The irony is that Churches could actually disciple young men and husbands if they taught the unvarnished truth.

- Please God through desire to adhere to His will.

It's not about performing for God. God doesn't need men to perform for Him. Rather He wants us to desire to do His will and worship Him in Spirit and in Truth. Out of the heart comes the desire to do His will and that springs forth good works.

Instead they revert to teaching the heresy of performance. "Servant leadership" becomes the task about serving the wife the way the wife wants to be treated — serving her feelings — rather than God. Even if you had the most pious wife in the world installing her approval over that of God is akin to a false idol:

- Please humans/wives through the performance of our works.

This is one of the strong fallacies against Biblical authority that is ingrained in our culture, which I believe why it is so prevalent. The rule of "democracy" is an evil because it seeks to determine what is "right" and "wrong" due to popular opinion. The authority in Scripture is of a top-down model whereas democracy is a bottom up model.

- Biblical top-down — Father -> Jesus -> various authority structures (Christ-Church, overseers-body of Christ, husband-wife, parents-children, government-Christians).
- Western down-up model — democracy and rule of popular opinion

In the Western model of democracy those in "authority" are held "accountable" by those under them. That is why it is the rule of popular opinion. Unfortunately, this does not work because those that are voted into office are those who put forth the most squeaky clean image and are rotten inside rather than those who are willing to be transparent with what they do.

This is the model that the church tries to assert with it's members rather than teaching them to be captive to the Word of God. Church authority is used to back up the "rule" of wives over their husbands or of those underneath. We know this too fails just as democracy inevitably will fail. A husband that capitulates to his wife's feelings and demands will end up unhappier and unhappier until she treats him as worse than garbage and divorces him. Even if she is a so-called "Christian."

The inversion of doing what the Bible says is destructive on marriages. This is the problem with twisting the teaching of Scripture to teach the reverse. However, it's subtle because most Christians do not have a solid theological foundations to figure out where the lines blur on so-called "servant leadership." The deception is strong.

Indeed, behavioral cycles do not just apply to individuals but also to the populace and their leaders. The populace chooses a leader that abuses their authority. They think next time they will choose someone who will be better based on their image. They continue to fail because their method is wrong. The authority there is inherently good, but it is used for evil so they believe instead that the authority is evil. Then comes the double down. Instead of choosing someone who has a track record of governing well, they choose someone with a good image and charisma. The cycle continues until destruction.

Likewise, a wife that holds her feelings as truth starts to condition a husband to obey her whims instead of Christ. By obeying her whims this makes her unhappy because he is not leading. The husband takes unhappiness to mean that she isn't being led well by him and doubles down on performing for her. The cycle continues until destruction.

In the end, it is simply another way in which: the Church continues to choose culture over Christ.

Correcting performance failure in relationships

May 6, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the previous post on How servant leadership is twisted I discussed the way in which the Church continues to choose culture over Christ. In one of Donal's posts a couple weeks ago I explained the futility of basing leadership on the "evaluation" of those under you in the context of headship:

> 1. The main problem is that Christian women "say" they want Christian men to lead.
>
> 2. But when Christian men lead AND do something [that women] don't like then they whine and complain and bash on the doors.
>
> 3a. Unfortunately, most Christian men instead of standing the ground cave to the demands. These Christian men become "nice" and "unattractive."
>
> 3b. For the ones who don't cave they get called jerks, assholes, and the like. Leading how women dislike and get angry about is not necessarily sin in most cases (rather preference). Although many Christian women SAY that it is sin because it goes against what they think and their feelings. Hence, Christian men get confused and suckered into "feelings are the truth" rather than focused on "learning how to lead even in difficult situations when no one is going to be feeling great."
>
> 4. Knowing that there is absolutely no way a man can please a woman 100% of the time and agree with her, there's no reason men should strive for that in the first place. [Nor is it Biblical] Hence, a "truce" is a false sense of interaction cause it would supposedly be between two equals which is not the case at all.
>
> 5. Thus, it follows that Christian women who want a "truce" need to learn to submit and stop whining and complaining when men lead the way they don't want as long as it's not a sin.
>
> 6. Put up or shut up.

Men need to lead based on their desire to please God through His Scriptures. It is difficult to adhere to the Scriptures when all evidence to the contrary is right in front of you: unhappiness, discontent, and the like. It is hard to choose Christ over culture until you get used to it. Then it becomes second nature.

I've mostly talked about behavioral cycles in the negative, but they also work positively. So I want to discuss it from the perspective of a wife.

A wife who does not nag her husband but submits to his headship and respects him will often find that she is treated extremely well and asked about her opinion on every topic that comes up when her husband needs to make a decision. This is the best of both worlds for her. She gets to have input on decision making; however, since it is her husband making the decisions she is also shielded from the responsibility of those decisions.

This is why 1 Peter 3 works because it encourages a positive behavioral cycle through behavior: submission and respect without nagging.

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and [a]respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.

The reason why Scriptures don't work "immediately" is husbands evaluate by past history. If a wife has nagged, disrespected, and rebelled against the husband's headship for 5 or even 10 to 20 years do you think that a wife respecting him once will change his mind about her past behavior and begin to trust her? Fat chance

Indeed, the vast majority of people will not believe someone has truly changed until they can see the sustained evidence of habit in their life. Habits take at least 3 if not 6 weeks to develop and implement consistently. For a wife that has nagged and disrespected and rebelled for long periods of time it may take 6 weeks or even a longer period such as 6 months or a year or longer to regain the trust of the husband. The deficit in the trust bank account is large.

This is inevitably why most wives "fail." They adhere to the Scriptures for a time. They do what is right and the husband may respond negatively. They get discouraged seeing the husband continues to respond negatively to them and give up after a week or two. Some may do it for months and nothing changes.

Some wives think that they are obeying the Word by praying for him to change and doing things so that their husband changes. This is false theology. The Scriptures, even the Lord's prayer, are about personal transformation through the power of Christ which affects those around us. We don't pray for others to change as this is the hubris of pride… we pray that we change so that God's power may work through us to change others. God can and does soften (or harden) hearts, but He doesn't change others as that imposes on free will. Pray that God soften your husband's heart, and that He may give you the grace and mercy to do what is right in all circumstances to regain his trust.

Back to the example, most wives don't understand is that the husband is responding negatively because their relationship is bankrupt of trust. It is in the negative. He can still remember all of the times that he started responding positively but she responded negatively to him. His bank account is -1000 dollars or however amount of times that she has negatively responded to him. So he doesn't want to trust anymore and ends up defaulting to a negative response.

The lack of trust in this case is Scriptural. Remember the parable of the talents?

> Matthew 25:19 "Now after a long time the master of those slaves *came and *settled accounts with them. 20 The one who had received the five talents came up and brought five more talents, saying, 'Master, you entrusted five talents to me. See, I have gained five more talents.' 21 His master said to him, 'Well done, good and faithful slave. You were faithful with a few things, I will put you in charge of many things; enter into the joy of your [c]master.'
>
> [… skipping the two talents for brevity]
>
> 24 "And the one also who had received the one talent came up and said, 'Master, I knew you to be a hard man, reaping where you did not sow and gathering where you scattered no seed. 25 And I was afraid, and went away and hid your talent in the ground. See, you have what is yours.'
>
> 26 "But his master answered and said to him, 'You wicked, lazy slave, you knew that I reap where I did not sow and gather where I scattered no seed. 27 Then you ought to have put my money [d]in the bank, and on my arrival I would have received my money back with interest. 28 Therefore take away the talent from him, and give it to the one who has the ten talents.'
>
> 29 "For to everyone who has, more shall be given, and he will have an abundance; but from the one who does not have, even what he does have shall be taken away. 30 Throw out the worthless slave into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Trust is about following through on your roles and responsibilities. A wife that has been rebellious and disrespectul is akin to the unfaithful servant. She is not trusted by her husband for good reason. She has been unfaithful in her roles and responsibilities and is afraid. The Scripture speaks to that on multiple occasions:

- Matthew 25:25 And I was afraid, and went away and hid your talent in the ground. See, you have what is yours.
- 1 Peter 3:6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right [b]without being frightened by any fear.
- 1 John 4:18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love.

The love we're talking about here is no feeling. Hence, the fear that is present is a logical and appropriate reaction to doing wrong. Love in the Scriptures is always referenced to doing. If you do what is right… if you love (by doing what is right)… then you have no reason to be afraid. The only reason you have to be afraid is if you do what is wrong.

This takes the power of God. It takes sustained effort of the wife, through the negative bank account, to get back into the positive. A wife has to be willing to be distrusted through the negative bank account of her own making to prove that she is worthy to be trusted again.

Some may say there is an apparent contradiction. We're supposed to live by desire and not performance right? Why then is this example one of a performance to prove worthiness rather than of desire? In reality, the desire must be there first to please God. Out of that desire springs good works. While God judges the heart and out of the heart comes good or evil, humans cannot know the heart. Thus, as Christians Jesus tells us to rightly judge works according to their good or evil fruit.

> Matthew 7:15 "Beware of the false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves. 16 You will [k]know them by their fruits. [l]Grapes are not gathered from thorn bushes nor figs from thistles, are they? 17 So every good tree bears good fruit, but the bad tree bears bad fruit. 18 A good tree cannot produce bad fruit, nor can a bad tree produce good fruit. 19 Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. 20 So then, you will [m]know them by their fruits.

The fact that it is the good deeds which changes people's hearts does not blunt the power of the gospel. (See Titus 3:3-8 and Eph 2:8-10). Also,

> John 13:34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another."

Jesus says that we are known as His disciples through our love, which is our works that show we love each other. However, it is first and foremost our desire to please the Father and Jesus that leads us to walk into His commands. Thus, desire leads to good works.

The the hard part is that if the wife does respond negatively it seems to her that it undoes everything she has done prior. While it seems this way, it is simply another chance in which you can show you have changed through the power of Christ. This is where apologies are needed, and the actions to turn in the other direction must be proven by walking out. True repentance. Walk the walk. Intentions mean nothing.

A wife that has not proved that she has changed through the power of Christ will talk the talk but default back to not walking the walk. She will revert to her previous behavior, and her husband rightly judges her by her fruit. She is deemed a hypocrite by him and distrusted more. This is why 1 Peter 3 calls wives are called to walk the walk and to win without words.

Now, this is true of both husbands and wives in different ways. For the wife it is in respect, submission, and not nagging, having sex and being physically attractive for him. For husband it is in embracing headship that aims to please God and taking care of himself first so he can love her as himself. If you remember back to Ephesians 5, the way Christ loves the Church is analogized that a husband should love his wife as he loves himself.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

This is the failure of headship that aims to please the wife. It deemphasizes the husband and puts more emphasis on the wife. If a husband puts his wife above himself he puts her on a pedastal. This sets her up as a false idol to him. Rather, the method is first to love himself completely just as Christ loves us, and then to love his wife as himself. In this a husband loves himself completely as Christ loves him, and he also loves his wife completely as Christ.

I've discussed this before in wives will never win their husbands with words, and husbands win their wives with words. However, I'm revisiting because I have a greater understanding of the dynamics now.

If there is dysfunction in a relationship, the trust must be rebuilt from ground zero factoring in that there is probably a negative trust balance in the relationship. This will take time of sustained desire to please God through which good works are manifest to rebuild trust. While we as Christians are required to forgive others if they ask, that doesn't mean trust is rebuilt instantly. As the body of Christ we are told to call out where others are in sin. Likewise, changing behavior usually doesn't happen instantly although it can in some cases through the manifest power of God. In most cases, a bankrupted trust account will take time to build back up. This is the importance of being good and faithful even through difficult circumstances. You start to build that trust that brings the good will.

As Christians we are called to be proactive. If we see a problem we don't wait for someone else to fix it. Instead, whether we are the ones under authority or the one in authority we must be willing to take action to love others. This is especially true in an intimate relationship such as marriage that is supposed to reflect Christ and the Church. It takes consistent faithfulness to rebuild broken trust.

Scrupulosity, boundaries, and saying no

May 11, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the commentors at Donal's posted about Scrupulosity a while ago. Here's the "definition" from wikipedia.

> Scrupulosity is a psychological disorder characterized by pathological guilt about moral or religious issues. It is personally distressing, objectively dysfunctional, and often accompanied by significant impairment in social functioning. It is typically conceptualized as a moral or religious form of obsessive–compulsive disorder (OCD), although this categorization is empirically disputable. The term is derived from the Latin scrupulum, a sharp stone, implying a stabbing pain on the conscience. Scrupulosity was formerly called scruples in religious contexts, but the word scruples now commonly refers to a troubling of the conscience rather than to the disorder. As a personality trait, scrupulosity is a recognized diagnostic criterion for obsessive–compulsive personality disorder. It is sometimes called "scrupulousness," but that word properly applies to the positive trait of having scruples.

Basically, I suppose you could say that this is a form of malformation of the conscience, but in reality it's just a form of guiltiness of saying no. In fact, there's a book about that: when I say no I feel guilty.

Generally, this happens to people with people pleaser personalities, but it is also a form of the performance based mindset.

Why is it you feel guilty when you say no? Because you can't please other people. Pleasing other people becomes an idol, and it's work based, If you don't please other people they may not like you or may not want to talk to you. People like this are scared of disapproval.

This is one of the ways that servant leadership can be twisted in order to pervert headship into something that it is not. Husbands are essentially guilt tripped by pastors, churches, or even their own family into playing by others' feelings or approval insteading of adhering to the Word.

If it is ingrained enough it sears the conscience so that you have men who feel guilty at saying no. This is dysfunctional, and it needs to be removed.

There is an easy way to understand what Christians should do and should not do to help each other out:

> Galatians 6:1 Brethren, even if [a]anyone is caught in any trespass, you who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; each one looking to yourself, so that you too will not be tempted. 2 Bear one another's burdens (baros), and thereby fulfill the law of Christ. 3 For if anyone thinks he is something when he is nothing, he deceives himself. 4 But each one must > examine his own work, and then he will have reason for boasting in regard to himself alone, and not in regard to another. 5 For each one will bear his own load (phortion).

>
> G922 — βάρος — baros — bar'-os
> Probably from the same as G939 (through the notion of going down; compare G899); weight; in the New Testament only, figuratively a load, abundance, authority: – burden (-some), weight.
>
> G5413 — φορτίον — phortion — for-tee'-on > Diminutive of G5414; an invoice (as part of freight), that is, (figuratively) a task or service: – burden.

Basically, Christians are required to bear their own "phortion" of their roles and responsiblities themselves. This is what stewardship is. If you bear another's phortion for them, you're not enabling them to be a proper steward of their own abilities and time. You're encouraging the "spoiled brat" syndrome where the spoiled brat does what they want and someone else cleans up their mess.

When I wrote Christian nice guys are abused and part 2 I commented about various scenarios of which women, even Christian women, abuse Christian men for their time. This occurs with men to women and men to men and women to women as well. These scenarios are the "phortion" of the person asking and not an a "baros." Here were the scenarios I referenced:

- If a woman has a husband or boyfriend who can do the task she asked you then you should never accept. Even if she says he is busy she should still not be asking you. It is the husbands duty to find someone else to help if she has a problem, and the husband should not be asking you to help his wife either. That's what family is for, or asking the church itself. They're almost always just going to be abusing your time as a nice guy.
- If a woman wants to talk about emotions — especially after a break up, or an attractive guy they are talking to — they are just using you as an emotional tampon. Yes, gross. Never accept.
- Likewise, if a woman comes to you about any issues she is having with men and working things out with him just don't do it. She should be talking to the man in question instead — not you or her girlfriends.
- If a woman in a ministry asks for your help, and you know you aren't called to that ministry. Just say no.
- A Christian woman (non family) asks you for money, housing, or any type of other big deal. If they have an issue, they should take it through the church first. Most churches have some type of thing where they can help those in need.

As you can tell, the responsibility of portion does not fall specifically on "single men" in this case but on significant others, family, husbands, or the Church. In some of the cases, the responsibility does not even fall on others but only on the person with the particular phortion.

Thus, it is important to know what are the “phortion” and “baros” in your own life, and also what the “phortion” and “baros” are in others lives.

We are required to bear our own phortion. And we are to ask for help if we have a “baros” but it needs to be to the right part of the body of Christ. Men should be mentored and discipled by other men, and women should be mentored and discipled by women. A man should not go be going to a woman with a “baros.”

Likewise, we need to be able to identify “phortion” and “baros” in others. This will allow us to say no if someone is trying to foist their own stewardship responsibilities on us. This will also allow us to identify a baros and direct them to the appropriate help in the Church.

While it is Scriptural to turn away people from your help if they are requesting help with a “phortion” or “baros,” it is important to tell them why and direct them to the appropriate help if needed. It is also helpful for knowing why you should say no in certain circumstances, and why you should not feel guilty about saying no in those circumstances.

When boundaries are muddied, it is easy to be deceived into bearing a phortion or baros that you are not meant to bear. Likewise, knowing where the boundaries are it will make you joyful to actually be able to help someone with a baros if it is good to do so.

Devotion to Christ

May 15, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes by e-mail:

> I've looked at many of the things that you, Dalrock, Cane, and a few others have written from the RP point of view, and I wonder have you ever addressed the subject of the differences between men and women and their level of devotion to Christ.
>
> I ask because, and I could be wrong…it seems that in this age…the men (generally) are drawing more nigh to the Father and cleansing their hands of sinful things than most women are. Of course i don't want to bear false witness against Christian women, but I'm often discouraged by what I see is a wholesale lack of conviction.
>
> Now I realize that my approach to things as it concerns holiness may indeed be problematic, but even for women who declare themselves to be such…it just seems that very little has been bearing witness with my spirit…even among some family members…and I come from a very large so-called Christian family.

Yes and no. Some things stick out to me which I've commented on before on other blogs but not in posts.

First, the feminization of the Church is pretty obvious. The fact that most Church attendance slants around 55:45 to 60:40 women to men ratio or worse. This tends to give the illusion that women are "more spiritual" than men where we know this is not the case.

It could simply be that say 5% of the Christian men and 5% of women are righteous in their word and deed. This would be equal numbers. However, since there are only 40% of men (1 in 8) in the Church and 60% (1 in 12) of women this may lead to the biased thinking that more men then woman are serious about their faith.

Second, the commercialization of Christianity. I'm very wary of Christians selling books. I forgot the numbers specifically but the majority of "Christian book sales" are women. Somewhere around the number like 70-80%. This presents the false illusion that women are more spiritual than men as well.

Again, this can falsely distort a viewpoint in some cases. Those who read more are not necessarily more devoted to God. Many pastors would incorrectly assume that. However, there is a false dichotomy to thinking that because those pastors are wrong the opposite is true. More men tend to be spiritual because they focus their attention toward the Bible or other disciplines like prayer and fasting rather than spiritual books.

It's always a good reminder to remember that we are told to evaluate based on fruit and not appearances.

Third, since men and women are different and have different roles and responsbilities and may be different parts of the body of Christ this may give illusions about level of devotion to Christ. There are all difference between the various aspects of the body of Christ: missionaries, serving food in a food kitchen, mentoring and discipling those younger than you, serving in the Church as an usher, elders, deacons, pastors, and evangelists.

It's human thinking to believe that one position is better than another. We all do what we can for the body of Christ in our own way. A Titus 2 wife/woman is going to look different than a Titus 2 husband/man.

Fourth, I think that if you are reading my blog in the first place that we suffer from confirmation bias. Women who tend to be godly generally aren't poking around on the manosphere or related blogs for the most part. That's why most of the women who end up commenting tend to be trolls, or they are mentoring women of their own with their own blogs. Likewise, most men who find the manosphere as Christians tend to be strengthened in their faith and become more disciplined and devoted to Christ.

Fifth, Christians in general tend to get caught up in labels too much. If someone says they are a "Christian" but are willfully disobedient to the God are they truly a Christian? Of course, this can run into the slippery slope of no true Scotsman fallacy. Ultimately, we don't know someone's heart, but we can tell who is devoted to Christ not from appearances but from the fruit they produce. This is what I talked about in Dating, labels, and authority analysis. If you understand labels, why people want to label things, and how labels affect your perception you can start to move away from them.

For example, I'm a person who generally thinks liberal arts are useless… however, I need to be open to the fact that God can use a liberal arts major to reach those in the liberal arts for Jesus Christ. Our preferences for what we see as "devotion to Christ" need to be filtered through the gospel. I still think that liberal arts majors are setting themselves up for statistical failure in the job market, but that doesn't mean that God has called a particular individual into that area.

Should I still warn them of the shortcomings? Sure. It's possible that they can fail too. But "worldly" failure does not necessarily mean a failure of the individual or of the gospel of Jesus. This is one of the problems of the prosperity gospel in reverse — those that "fail" in worldly terms may still be devoted to Christ. He may use the failure to be teaching them principles that they will use to mentor people 30-40 years down the road.

Finally, I can't look at a person's situation and judge whether their heart is in the right place due to the circumstances around them unless it's willful sin or the consequences of willful sin. Like it or not, choosing a liberal arts major is not a willful sin. Like it or not, choosing to participate in a pyramid scheme is not a willful sin. Unwise? Sure. God may teach them something through that even if they choose to do it through counsel otherwise. Or they may choose a destructive path for their life.

However, I can encourage them to put their heart in the right place, listen to wise counsel, and act righteously in any situation. The desire to love God should bubble over into being a slave for gospel of Jesus Christ and good works.

What I look for in evaluating a potential wife Part 2

May 16, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So it's been about a year and some months since I wrote these posts about my search and mindset, and I figured I'd give an update as my desires have changed a bit as I've grown spiritually. These are the posts: What I look for in evaluating a potential wife (Jan 2014), The Change (Jan 2014), Evolving Desires (May 2014), What I believe regarding marriage (Jun 2014).

This was the prior list I had in the first post:

1. Evidence of a relationship with God — daily Scripture, prayer, meditation, and service in the Church or community. A heart that is seeking after God and is fruitful in it with her actions.
2. Evidence of cultivated godly femininity — long hair, dresses modest, wears dresses and skirts, smiles often, enthusiastic, kind, gentle, humble, preferably knows how to keep a home and cook, etc.
3. Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed — Christian men and women are called to this prior to marriage, and I'm uninterested in having to deal with the drama that surrounds a woman that has had previous intimacy with other men. I'd readily consider a low N-count woman who has shown though her actions and attitude that she has repented (and not just feels bad about what she did) over a virgin Christian woman who has done everything but sex.
4. Evidence of attraction/chemistry — I work in the medical and fitness industries, and it is important for me to have a wife who is a good ambassador for Christ in how she looks. I've dated women before who don't care about good nutrition and exercise, and it never ends well because this is an integral part of my life. A woman who strives to be attractive even though it takes work is going to be a better ambassador for Christ than one who gives in to sloth and gluttony. This goes both ways as my potential wife should be attracted to me too.
5. Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization — God willing I hope to have many children (3-5+) and am looking to home school them. I don't care if my wife has a career, but she should be willing to lay it aside for her family. Age is not a primarily consideration for me, but since I want to have many children younger is better.
6. Evidence of submissiveness, especially to God — This pretty much sums up a Biblical marriage in that it encompasses the 3 major roles that a wife is called to: a helpmeet, with submission, and with respect. I tell women that my God given mission will put me in uncomfortable discussions and challenges, and if she's coming along with me then it will be more of the same. If you're not growing in your heart, mind, soul, and strength for Christ then what are you doing?

Michaeldresden also comments from the first post:

> (1) Convincing testimony of both initial conversion and continued Christian growth. This probably isn't very romantic, but perhaps we should be looking primarily to works such as Religious Affections by Jonathan Edwards as the first step in assessing a potential wife. What could be more important in making a woman less likely to seek a divorce (and in making a woman a better wife and mother in general) than that she is truly born again?
>
> (2) Degree of joyful submissiveness to God. This point is, of course closely related to (1), but it is not exactly the same. For example, a truly converted Christian woman could be somewhat rebellious in her relationship to God (I believe that some feminist Christian women and female pastors are truly converted, yet I have found that many of them are uncomfortable with the language of being completely submissive to God). The more submitted to God a woman is, the less likely she will be to disobey Him by, for example, seeking a divorce because "the passion in the relationship is gone." Also, a woman who is joyfully submitted to God will understand that there is no inherent contradiction between being submissive and being a happy and fulfilled person.
>
> (3) Degree of joyful submissiveness to her father. Other than submissiveness to God, this is probably the best way of assessing whether a woman will be submissive to her husband. A woman who is close to and submissive to her father is also going to be easier to evaluate in terms of her theology. This is because you can ask her father about his theology and what he taught her in order to know where she stands (it seems that good Christian women often internalize the theology of their fathers even if they can't articulate it in a clear analytic manner).
>
> (4) Her father's theology. Assessing a woman's theological views can be difficult (especially when it comes to more complicated abstract issues). This problem can be solved by speaking to the man under whose instruction she has been for the last 18+ years. Also, if her father has good theology, then he can back you up if she ever has problems with your theology further down the line (e.g. if she is saying something to your children that you think is theologically dangerous, but that she thinks is fine).
>
> I think your (2), (3), (4), and (5) should go after the four things I've mentioned. However, this is all tentative and speculative at this point so I could be completely off in my assessment. Any thoughts on my suggestions?

Generally speaking, I think these fall under my 1 and 6. In general, a relationship with God, respect, and submissiveness all fall under the similar category of knowing how to relate correctly to authority. Likewise, what Michael is talking about when he discusses the points about a woman's father is important in this aspect as well.

All in all, would fold these into two categories of primary importance. Hence, my remade list looks like this with some corrections and more Scriptural input:

1. Evidence of a relationship with God — daily Scripture, prayer, meditation, and service in the Church and community. This is a heart that is seeking after God and is fruitful with good works.
2. Evidence of godly earthly relationships in reference to God — a potential wife prospect must understand how God views earthly relationships and act accordingly. A woman should respect and submit to the Jesus (John 14:15), the Church (1 Pet 5:5), earthly authorities (Rom 13, Heb 13, 1 Pet 2, Tit 3), and parental/fatherly authority (Exo 20:12, Eph 6:1). When a woman understands godly earthly relationships, she also understands the 3 main roles and responsibilities of Biblical marriage: a helpmeet (Gen 2:18), with submission (Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3), and with respect (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3). There should be evidence of the fruits of the Spirit — joy and peace — in these actions.
3. Evidence of cultivated godly femininity — long hair, veiled when necessary (1 Cor 11), purity and reverence in conduct (1 Pet 3:2), inner beauty through a gentle and quiet spirit (1 Pet 3:4), not a slanderer or slave to drink and teach what is good (Tit 2:3), self controlled, chaste, good managers of the household, kind, and submissive (Tit 2:4). Trustworthy (Prov 31:11), does him good, and not harm, all the days of her life (Prov 31:12), works with her hands on various measures (Prov 31:13,16-19), brings and provides food and delegates tasks to servants (children?) (Prov 31:14-15), provides for the poor (Prov 31:20), wisdom and kindness comes from her tongue (Prov 31:26), is not idle in her household (Prov 31:27).
4. Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed — Preferably a chaste virgin (Deut 22, 1 Cor 6). I'm uninterested in having to deal with the drama that surrounds a woman that has had previous intimacy with other men. I'd readily consider a low N-count woman who has shown though her actions and attitude that she has repented over a "virgin" Christian woman who has done everything but sex.
5. Evidence of attraction/chemistry — A woman who strives to be attractive even though it takes work is going to be a better ambassador for Christ than one who is given over to sloth and gluttony. This goes both ways as my potential wife should be attracted to me too. Inward beauty and outward beauty are not mutually exclusive — you want both.
6. Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization — Many children: Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth and subdue it (Gen 1:28b). I don't care if my wife has a career, but she should be willing to lay it aside for her family as necessary (Tit 2:3-5). Age is not a primarily consideration for me, but since I want to have many children younger is better.

I think generally that it is pretty easy to find Christian women who represent the first point. However, the fact that they represent the first is not always indicative of them growing as a Christian. It is the second, third, and fouth points in particular where the rubber meets the road. These are the ones the require her to actually follow what the Scriptures state. Many churchians go to church and read their Bible out of habit or because of the community. They serve but their heart is not in it. The rest of their week looks much different than their Sundays.

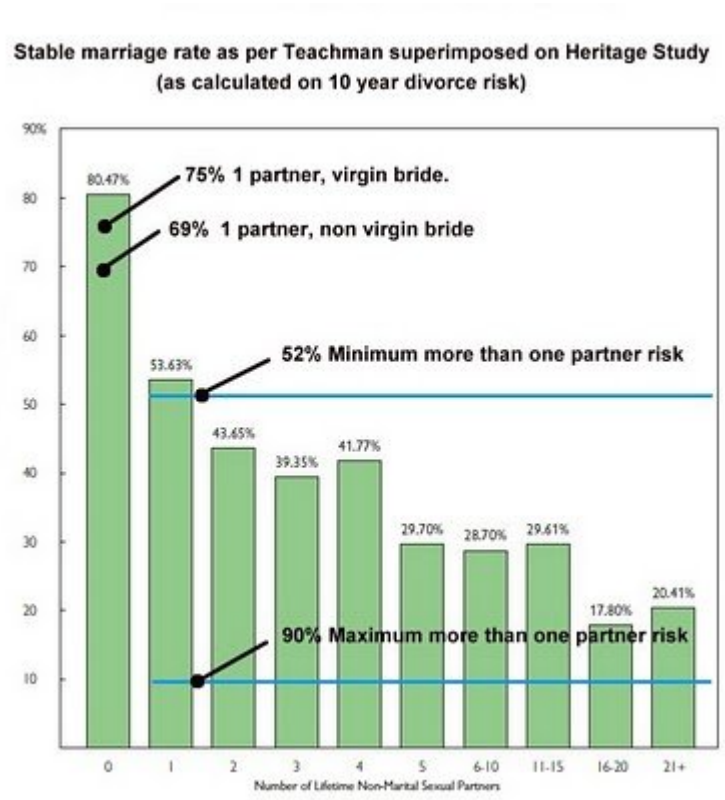
The last two are very difficult to find. The obesity crisis and 70% of each sex being overweight or obese. This narrows the pool significantly, and in my case since I tend to look for women who are into fitness the pool narrows even more. Family prioritization is difficult even in the Church: couples want to have only a couple kids because it cramps their lifestyle or it’s too much work. This is another ungodly attitude which is crazy to me because children are a blessing.



The percentage of finding a woman like this is very rare unfortunately.

Note: this is not a full list. There are other preferences I look for as well which I am not listing. These are like the main ones that I have and I would assume that most Christian men will have something similar as well.

Understanding statistical population models and using them to vet correctly

May 18, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The Social Pathologist chart has made rounds in the manosphere at large.

There are also some clarifications on sexual promiscuity.

There are a couple of things to understand with populational statistics that most people have difficultly with. In general, I've seen women have the most problems understanding statistical populations which is pretty clear in my previous post on what I look for in evaluating a potential wife Part 2. I don't know why this is. Maybe it's because men tend to be better on average on abstract thinking. Maybe it's because women cannot compartmentalize thoughts and emotions separate from each other as well as men. It could also possibly be that they don't often try to do that.

Whatever the case, that's neither here nor there for this post. So let's go on to what we can learn about population statistics.

1. Correlation is not causation. This is a pretty common one that is often overlooked. In analyzing sexual partners and divorce risk this is not one of the things that we are concerned about in terms of implying that it may be causative rather than correlative. It's pretty clear that sexual choices have an affect on divorce. Hence, in this case, the fact that sexual partners tend to have a "causative effect" on divorce risk to some measure.

This is the importance of examining the X and Y variables to see if they have some relationship to each other. Usually most studies that examine other variables that affect the X and Y axes will have someting along the lines of "indepedence" mentioned. For example, X variable had an effect on Y variable independent of other factors such as socioeconomic status. This is present in the adjusted clarifications on sexual promiscuity above.

2. Variables are not always independent or dependent. This is extremely important to realize because it will show us that tendencies toward some things have tendencies toward other things.

Risk taking behavior is a fairly easy one to quantify. Those more prone to "risk taking behavior" are also those who have a higher statistically likelihood to be involved in other risky scenarios. For example, those who binge drink as a risky behavior are also probably more statistically likely to try illicit drugs, be sexually promiscuous, and other risky activities such as these.

These are not what you would call independent variables. If the variables would be independent you could survey someone from the poor and the rich and get the same outcome. You could survey someone from a one parent family and two parent family and get the same outcome. You could survey someone from a religious background and someone from an athiest background and get the same outcome.

Obviously, most variables are NOT independent. They are dependent on many factors because human behavior is integrative. Things that affect one aspect of you as a human will tend to always color your perception a certain way.

This is extremely important to understand because most of the manosphere assumes that many variables are independent. In the example of a potential wife: a woman who is genuinely a Christian and accepted Jesus as her Savior to be saved is more statistically likely to be a virgin, chaste, want to be a wife and mother, and all other such things. This will generally mean that IF you find a particular community of genuine Christians there is a higher likelihood than normal of you finding many women who want to be wives and mothers who are also virgins, chaste, and whatever else you are looking for that aligns with the Scripture.

Like begets like.

3. Populational statistics do not apply to an individual but merely provide a relative risk factor of an individual.

For example, I'm sure many of us have heard of a story where their grandparents or a friend grandparents chain smoked 10 packs of cigarettes a day for 60 years and lived to the ripe old age of 110. On the other hand, I'm sure that we all know of some people who have had relatives die of lung cancer in their 40s and 50s.

Populational statistics do not predict individual destiny. However, they do predict a relative risk factor. Any single one person could be an "exception" to the rule. However, if you are of such population, the other person should take into account population statistics in terms of cost-benefit analysis and risk-to-reward ratios.

I won't marry a smoker because they are more likely to die earlier, use more money frivolously on cigarettes, and have more healthcare issues. I don't need to expose my children or myself to second hand smoke either.

The same is true of marrying someone who has been sexually promiscuous. Sure, they could be one of the exceptions and have a godly marriage if they repent of their sins and follow Jesus. However, it is still a risk you are taking by marrying someone with a promiscuous past that you wouldn't have if you had married a virgin. If they have not made the choice to keep submitting to God it is easier for them to fall back into "old habits" and divorce to go be sexually promiscuous again. The phrases such as "once a cheater always a cheater" tend to play on these statistical tendencies.

You can think of such relative risk ratios as "yellow" or "red" flags depending on your preferences. One yellow flag is a "hmm" moment. Two is eye brow raising. Three is concerning. Four or more and sirens should be going off in your head.

4. The whole package and relative risk.

Therefore, it is important to assess a woman to count-the-cost so to speak in a manner of vetting a potential wife. A "one and done" mistake of having sex for a woman who realizes her mistake and is repentant and never goes there again is more important than a "virgin" woman who has done everything but sex in her 10 relationships.

This is the importance of noting the "quality" of behavior over the "quantity" of behavior. People like to get hung up on quantity of behavior over quality when quality is just as important to understand.

Quality of behavior is also assessed in past history and tendencies of an individual. Someone that was ignorant of the gospel and had sex but has a testimony where she turned around and now has a history of chastity and doing good is going to be more on my radar for marriage than someone who was a "Christian" the whole time they were making "mistakes."

This leads me into…

Model behavior

The reason why I made these comments is that I want to analyze the first two points of the article I previously posted:

1. Evidence of a relationship with God — daily Scripture, prayer, meditation, and service in the Church and community. This is a heart that is seeking after God and is fruitful with good works.
2. Evidence of godly earthly relationships in reference to God — a potential wife prospect must understand how God views earthly relationships and act accordingly. A woman should respect and submit to the Jesus (John 14:15), the Church (1 Pet 5:5), earthly authorities (Rom 13, Heb 13, 1 Pet 2, Tit 3), and parental/fatherly authority (Exo 20:12, Eph 6:1). When a woman understands godly earthly relationships, she also understands the 3 main roles and responsibilities of Biblical marriage: a helpmeet (Gen 2:18), with submission (Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3), and with respect (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3). There should be evidence of the fruits of the Spirit — joy and peace — in these actions.

With respect to model behavior it is extremely important to analyze the other parts of someone's life away from you. This is the importance of analyzing a woman's relationship with Jesus, the Church, earthly authorities, and her father. A woman's interaction with YOU in particular may be biased. You have something that she wants whether it is marriage, children, commitment, or whatever else.

However, areas where she stands nothing to gain from bias of a relationship with you such as her submission to earthly authorities or her father when it is difficult reveal her true character.

Christians who understand the order from chaos that the Father likes in our relationships in this world understand much more than people give them credit for. TPC in particular fails in her critique in this manner:

> I think men should have a clearer understanding of exactly where the potential wives are, and I think that can be phrased topically. What you have listed, for example, is contradictory. Wanting a woman who is "into fitness" is not compatible with a "large family". Those women who have more than, say, five children are usually not in tiptop fitness-figure shape. They aren't 400lbs or anything like that, but they are very much not ripped paleo mamas. And that's relevant without getting into requirements for men.

Such a critique fails to examine the character of women who are rightly respect and submit to authority.

A Christian woman who wants a large family generally has respect for God and her husband. Women who respects her husband will want to be sexually attractive for him. Thus, it follows that even if a woman has a large family she will want to be sexually attractive for him and make the effort to be. A husband's perception may also be affected by things such as wife goggles.

The point is not that wives can't look like "Paleo mom's" or whatever that means. The point is that a woman will put forth the effort and enthusiasm. "Looks" is a red herring insomuch as "sex" is also a red herring. No man wants to have begrudging UNRESPECTFUL starfish sex with his wife. He wants her to put in effort and enthusiasm.

Likewise, it is the HEART which God judges AND the action. You may mean well but do something horrible wrong or sinful. God forgives that if you repent AND change your ways. As long as your heart continues to be in the right place you will eventually do well for God and not make the same mistakes. Being a Christian is not about performance or doing but about desire first. From desire flows a heart that acts in right standing.

The easiest example is the Duggars. Michelle (the wife) may not "look the best" after 19 kids. But I can bet you that Jim Bob (the husband) is still rather enthused in the bedroom because she is still enthusiastic to maintain an attractive appearance and have sex coupled with their past history of her bearing his kids, being a respectful and submissive wife, and other godly attributes.

No one should be disingenuous to fall into the trap of the false dichotomy of one or the other. This is one of the major pitfalls of a failure to understand populational statistics properly, as well as one of the pitfalls of the humans at large.

Conclusion

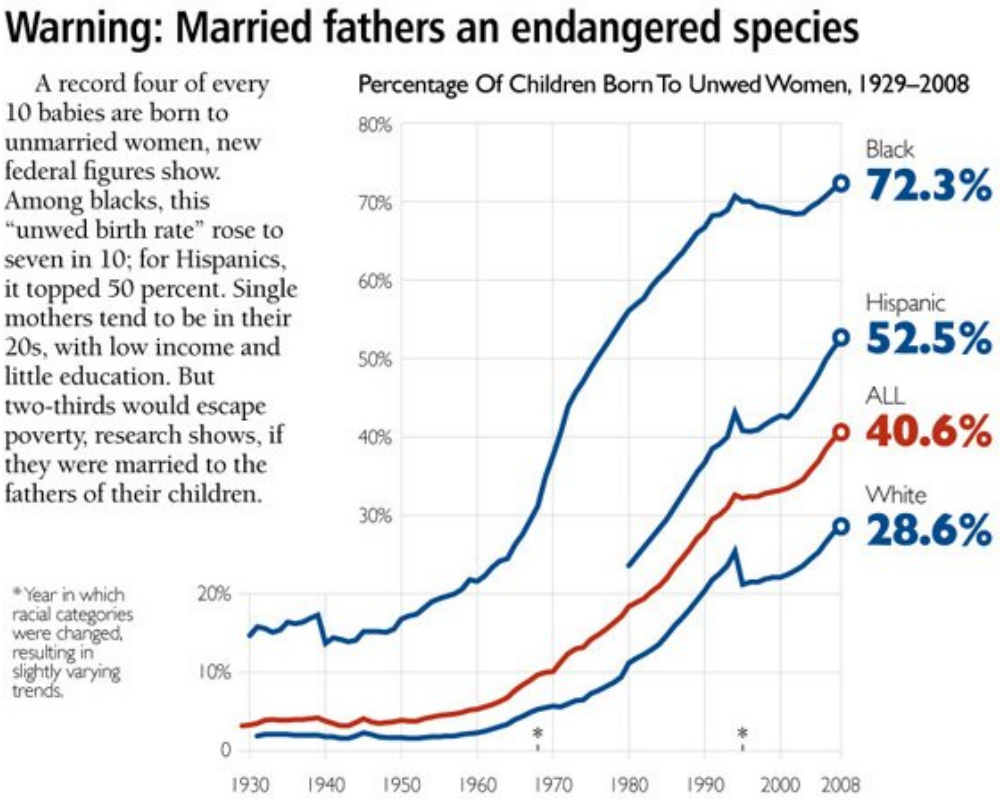
Character is as important as actions. This is why I regard your attitude tells me everything I need to know as one of the fundamental posts on this blog. Attitude reveals the heart which reveals character.

It is not enough to look for someone who does only the right things. Everyone is going to make mistakes at one time or another. Instead, you should be looking for someone with the heart to do right things, and has a history of doing a lot of right things and moving away from wrong things.

This type of woman is someone who has set their heart on becoming a godly Christian and is willing to learn and be taught and grow in marriage as a wife and mother.

To the third and fourth generation

May 20, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link



I was thinking about this the other day.

> Exodus 20:4 You shall not make for yourself an idol, whether in the form of anything that is in heaven above, or that is on the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. 5 You shall not bow down to them or worship them; for I the Lord your God am a jealous God, punishing children for the iniquity of parents, to the third and the fourth generation of those who reject me, 6 but showing steadfast love to the thousandth generation[b] of those who love me and keep my commandments.
>
> Numbers 14:17 And now, therefore, let the power of the Lord be great in the way that you promised when you spoke, saying, 18 “The Lord is slow to anger, and abounding in steadfast love, forgiving iniquity and transgression, but by no means clearing the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the parents upon the children to the third and the fourth generation.” 19 Forgive the iniquity of this people according to the greatness of your steadfast love, just as you have pardoned this people, from Egypt even until now.’

If you count a generation as “40 years” which the Bible is fond of as a period of the Israelites you could say that we’re moving into the second generation since the boomers. The 40 years is the period that it took for the generation that was lifted up out of Egypt to die because they did not believe that God would lead them into the promised land victorious. I suppose most of the current millenial generation that are now in their 20s and 30s are children of the boomers.

Given the destruction racked upon the millenials by divorce, fatherlessness, and single parenthood I wouldn’t be surprised to see a much more rapid decline.

You could also say that the white population is about 1 generation behind the black population in terms of out of wedlock birth rates. Asian is a bit less than white while hispanics are in between. The out of wedlock birth rates for all populations has already exceeded 50% by 2013 or so, so there is a steep increase from the end of this chart.

To me it's interesting to think that the Lord's punishment upon generations for sin is in reality just the consequences of their own actions. The consequences of actions drive them deeper into poverty and sin, and it feels like an inescapable loop.

This also means that the US will slide over the next 3rd and 4th generations into deeper moral decay much as the trends show. Whether this is accompanied by sociological and economic upheaval I don't know. However, I wouldn't be surprised given the increase in rioting and police state.

Ephesians 6:10 Finally, be strong in the Lord and in the strength of his power. 11 Put on the whole armour of God, so that you may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. 12 For our[b] struggle is not against enemies of blood and flesh, but against the rulers, against the authorities, against the cosmic powers of this present darkness, against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly places.

Meeting your husband’s and wife’s seven basic needs

May 21, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I came across these from a source, and I was initially expecting the usual garbage. However, like the 10 women Christian men should not marry, these were actually fairly solid. I was pleasantly surprised.

- http://christianrelationshipblog.blogspot.com/2011/03/meeting-your-husbands-seven-basic-needs.html
- http://christianrelationshipblog.blogspot.com/2011/03/meeting-your-wifes-seven-basic-needs.html

I thought they could’ve done a better job at putting more Scripture in there, but there was a solid mix of Scripture and practical/anecdotal advice that is actually true and not churchian lies.

Quibbles with some of the wording, but it stays fairly true to the Scriptures. Try to pick out the wording that is questionable.

As always, I “appreciated” the feminist “critique” in the comments on each of the articles.

Economic upheaval

May 26, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm not naive enough to believe that social issues such as the destruction of marriage and people not getting married are going to lead to upheaval issues within Western civilization. What is more likely is that technology will cause this. Self driving vehicles, especially trucks, which make up the backbone of the economy will cause significant upheaval. Reproductive technology may also go that route as well with potential male birth control.

The next 10 years we will see even more significant changes than with the previous 10 years. In approximately the previous 10 years, we saw the introduction of Google's massive expansion (IPO 2004), Facebook (2004), Youtube (2005), social media, and phone technology. Even Apple's growth into the world's largest company by far started approximately right after 2008. In fact, Apple is now larger combined than the world's largest conglomerate (General Electric), Retailer (Walmart), Auto (General Motors) and food seller (McDonald's).

In terms of a world government, the globalization effect of multinational companies inches toward that. The "power" is where the "money" is because of lobbying and bribes.

It will be interesting to see what effect this has on the economy and by extension social and religious issues.

No true Scotsman

May 26, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It is important to understand the No True Scotsman fallacy in terms of Christianity. Here's the wiki description:

> No true Scotsman is an informal fallacy, an ad hoc attempt to retain an unreasoned assertion.[1] When faced with a counterexample to a universal claim ("no Scotsman would do such a thing"), rather than denying the counterexample or rejecting the original universal claim, this fallacy modifies the subject of the assertion to exclude the specific case or others like it by rhetoric, without reference to any specific objective rule ("no true Scotsman would do such a thing").[2]
>
> Bradley Dowden explains the fallacy as an "ad hoc rescue" of a refuted generalization attempt,[1] the following is an example of the fallacy:[3]
>
> Person A: "No Scotsman puts sugar on his porridge."
> Person B: "But my uncle Angus likes sugar with his porridge."
> Person A: "Ah yes, but no true Scotsman puts sugar on his porridge."
>
> Essayist Spengler compared distinguishing between "mature" democracies, which never start wars, and "emerging democracies", which may start them, with the "No true Scotsman" fallacy. Spengler alleges that "political scientists" have attempted to save the "US academic dogma" that democracies never start wars from counterexamples by maintaining that no true democracy starts a war.[3]

Essentially, what you see in the Christian manosphere is that the No True Scotsman fallacy pops up in a lot of various places due to the nature of what is "Churchian" and what is "Christian." This is the fallacy that many Churchians often like to use to inadvertently or advertently push their own agenda over the Scriptures. Some are right, and some are wrong.

The No True Scotsman fallacy is only a fallacy if the objective reality doesn't match up with what is being said. For example, one of Dalrock's more recent posts has a number of them.

> Christian: "LIFE AMONG THE CHURCHIANS: "My problem is that no church I know makes it clear what the wife's obligation to her husband is." In contemporary society, men have obligations. Women have entitlements."
>
> Churchian: "The main part of his serious error is that the New Testament spends a lot more time instructing husbands on their duties that wives on theirs. Maybe if he learned and practiced his obligations first he wouldn't be worrying so much about hers."

In other words, the Churchians are saying: "No true Christian should be worrying about the duties of his wife. Maybe if he learned and practiced his obligations first he wouldn't be worrying so much about hers."

Unfortunately, we know that is verifiably wrong because the Scripture tells us to admonish other Christians who are wayward:

> Luke 17:3 "Be on your guard! If your brother sins, rebuke him; and if he repents, forgive him.
>
> Romans 15:14 And concerning you, my brethren, I myself also am convinced that you yourselves are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge and able also to admonish one another.
>
> Psalms 141:5Let the righteous smite me in kindness and reprove me; It is oil upon the head; Do not let my head refuse it, For still my prayer is against their wicked deeds.
>
> 2 Timothy 3:16 All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for training in righteousness;
>
> 1 Thessalonians 5:14 We urge you, brethren, admonish the unruly, encourage the fainthearted, help the weak, be patient with everyone.
>
> Matthew 18:15 "If your brother sins[k], go and [l]show him his fault [m]in private; if he listens to you, you have won your brother. 16 But if he does not listen to you, take one or two more with you, so that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every [n]fact may be confirmed. 17 If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, let him be to you as [o]a Gentile and [p]a tax collector.

Indeed, it is actually good to admonish, reprove, and rebuke as necessary. This is what the Scriptures say. If we are not concerned about what fellow Christians are doing that is bad. And that is specifically what the Churchians prescribe: man up and mind your own beeswax.

Indeed, most of the "man up" rants by either women or traditional churchians are of the same variety.

> Christian: "Men are just responding to incentives to not marry because of the high divorce rate and women having tons of premarital sex which increases chance of divorce."
>
> Churchian 1: "Real Christian men would marry her despite her past history because she has been forgiven."
>
> Churchian 2: "Yeah, those men should man up and do their duty."

In other words here, "man up" or "real men" are the substitutes for "no true Scotsman" statement. Instead " real Christians" or "true Christians" would be the way we are saying they should be. We know this is false because the only reason Paul gives for marriage is that if you burn for a woman. There's no Christian doctrine that states you should marry someone who has slept around just like there is none that say you should marry a woman with credit card debt or a history of lying. It is something you should take into account especially if they did it while claiming to be a Christian and if they repented and turned from their ways.

Likewise, nice guys generally don't get the girl whether they are Christian or not. To describe the behavior, we generally know that nice guys don't act masculine or Christian for that matter (as they put women on pedestals).

I've stated before that TRUE Christian men will be attractive to women. In this statement I'm assuming that such "TRUE Christian men" will not be nice. That is they won't put a woman on a pedestal. They will act in accordance with masculinity in the Scriptures. Thus, generally, TRUE Christian men will be objectively attraction.

Technically, this is a fallacy as I'm saying that no true nice guy acts in a Christian manner. As a general rule, masculine men will attract women. It is not generally a fallacy to say that nice guys are not masculine and therefore won't attract women. It's true that women COULD like particular nice guys though, so there are exceptions. Women are attracted to and get married to Christian men who are nice guys. But it's also true that such nice guys almost inevitably end up getting divorce raped Christian wife or not. Thus, wording matters. A logical fallacy may be objectively true if the information is compared against the Scriptures. The fact that the argument takes the form of a logical fallacy is not a reason to dismiss the meat behind the argument. Only that the argument in its present form is not supported. The argument must be dicphered and compared against objective truth which is the Scriptures.It is important to understand this because of the subjective lens that we all have in regard to viewing the world. All subjectivity and observations naturally need to be compared against an objective standard in order to convey objective truth in conversation.

Intentions and results

May 28, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is one of the areas that has been a major fault of Christians.

Intentions, like attitude, reveal the state of the heart. We've already explored the areas under which you can have a right attitude and have variable results.

The nature of humans who desire to obey Jesus commands is that we are not perfect. We will sometimes make mistakes. I can have the intention and attitude to help my fellow Christians or a poor person, but they may in that moment blow up on me for whatever reason. They may insult me or call me names or they don't want my help at all. Likewise, I may have the right intention to go help someone with their work. However, I mess up their work. Then they get angry at you and never want you to help again.

Unfortunately, many Christians see this negative response to their righeous intentions and perhaps even righteous actions and get discouraged. When they get discouraged they often tell themselves: "well, that's the last time I help that person" or "I'm never doing that again because of that bad experience."

This is a major blunder that many Christians fall prey too. It is the very essence of conditional love. I will only have the right heart and attitude and help someone if they pay back my help for them with thanks.

The very essence of agape — unconditional love — is that we desire to do good works and we have the heart and attitude to do them without expecting anything in return. Whether they thank us or they hate us we still bless others. It is the same whether we make a mistake that we have to apologize for and learn from. And similarly we need to have the humility and maturity to understand that the other person will be angry even if they aren't gracious to us.

One of the major things that I have learned as I've been searching for a wife going on dates and exploring relationships is that you are going to offend people. You are going to offend other girls. Offending them is not necessarily wrong (unless it's a sin). However, in the course of an offense you need to be able to recognize that whether the situation turns out good or bad it is all still a learning and growth experience.

I need to have the frame of reference to where I have my heart right and my attitude in check before God. This will spread over to all of my other relationships.

- I can have a right heart, attitude, and mess up my actions and others may still be offended because they misinterpret what I do. If this offends me and I respond negatively in anger and sin then I have failed in maturity in love.
- I can have a right heart, attitude, and do good with my actions and others may still be offended because they misinterpret what I do. If this offends me and I respond negatively in anger and sin then I have failed in maturity in love.

It is particularly interesting that Jesus has the right heart, attitude, and did everything righteously to all and people were still offended at Him. Did He get offended and get bent out of shape and butt hurt over other people not interpreting His actions correctly? Nope. Though, perhaps the one exception could be where He drove the money changers out of the temple with a whip, but even that was premeditated because He sat down to make the whip (John 2).

Ironically, we never really examine 1 Corinthians 13 in the context of the most adverse circumstances:

> 1 Corinthians 13:4 Love is patient, love is kind and is not jealous; love does not brag and is not arrogant, 5 does not act unbecomingly; it does not seek its own, is not provoked, does not take into account a wrong suffered, 6 does not rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth; 7 [b]bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things.

- What does it mean to be patient with your enemy even if you did what was right?
- What does it mean to be kind to your enemy even when they were persecuting you?
- What does it mean to not seek your own when your enemy is seeking everything from you?
- What does it mean to hope all things for your enemy?

I think it is a failure to recognize the value of Jesus' words:

> Matthew 5:43 "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.' 44 But I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, 45 so that you may [ap]be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. 46 For if you love those who love you, what reward do you have? Do not even the tax collectors do the same? 47 If you greet only your brothers, what more are you doing than others? Do not even the Gentiles do the same? 48 Therefore [aq]you are to be perfect (teleios), as your heavenly Father is perfect (teleios).
>
> G5046 — τέλειος — teleios — tel'-i-os
> From G5056; complete (in various applications of labor, growth, mental and moral character, etc.); neuter (as noun, with G3588) completeness: – of full age, man, perfect.

Perfection is not how we modernly think of perfection. It is teleios. Completeness and becoming complete in growth be it mental, spiritual, character, or otherwise. Ultimately, complete in love.

We make mistakes because we are not perfectly submitted to the Spirit and resist the devil (James 4:7). However, each of these mistakes that we make are, in humility, a stepping stone to becoming more complete if we choose to take them. We repent of our sin and turn 180 in the other direction walking the path to perfection in Christ Jesus. And our goal is this:

1 Timothy 1:5 Now the end of the commandment is charity [love/agape] out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned.

Our unfaked faith is aligned with our pure hearts and our good conscience which translates into good works in love. Even to those who don’t deserve them, like God sent His son while we were yet sinners (Romans 5:8).

Prophecies about marriage

May 28, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I find prophecy particularly interesting because it confirms the Word of God. Paul writes nearly 2 milleniums ago:

> 1 Timothy 4:1 But the Spirit explicitly says that in later times some will [a]fall away from the faith, paying attention to deceitful spirits and doctrines of demons, 2 by means of the hypocrisy of liars seared in their own conscience as with a branding iron, 3 men who forbid marriage and advocate abstaining from foods which God has created to be gratefully shared in by those who believe and know the truth. 4 For everything created by God is good, and nothing is to be rejected if it is received with gratitude; 5 for it is sanctified by means of the word of God and prayer.

It's funny seeing just how bad that men think marriage from a secular stand point:

> Marriage is nothing but a fail-safe for a woman and provides no benefit for the man > by inTheRedPill

It's very easy to get carried away into marriage bashing as a Christian particularly in this culture; however, it is important to apply this in context. Marriage is only a "bad deal" if you marry a woman who says they're a Christian but doesn't act like a Christian. Christian women who obey God don't go off intentionally sinning and divorcing no matter how unhappy they are.

This is why it is important to vet both attitude and deeds as they both in conjunction tend to reveal the state of the heart. If you can find a woman with a heart that desires after God and is constantly growing in Him with good fruit in her life then it is a waste of time worrying about a divorce that will never happen.

Speaking of the latter half of verse 3: vegetarians, vegans, and all other manner of "diets" that purport to be healthier than alternatives is also amusing to say the least.

Respectful submission not submission

May 31, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Over at Dalrock's post on advice to a wife about troublesome mother-in-laws many of the same debates have risen up again. In particular, women have the tendency to ask about submission when a husband tells her to sin. I wrote this post over there, but I'm reposting it over here because this concept needs to be reinforced.

As many of you know, this line of conversation is also a red herring as Cane has addressed this topic before in You Bowed Up When You Should Have Bowed Down. In effect, looking at such obscure scenarios is a red herring compared to the vast majority of circumstances. Indeed, the true answer lies not in submission itself but in respectul submission:

> Over and over again we see examples in Scripture where a servant cannot or will not obey a master; whether good or evil. The righteous servants always say something along the lines of, "I cannot comply with this. What can I do instead to appease my lord?" David says this to Saul; Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar; Lot to the men of Sodom; Esther to King Ahasuerus; Tamar to Amnon…

This is not ONLY about submission or obedience. It is FIRST about attitude.

A disrespectful heart will see a command or request from someone in authority and first think about the self: how do I get out of this or how can obey minimally or do I even have to obey at all? A respectful heart will think about the whole picture, especially including the desires of the one in authority: "I cannot comply with this. What can I do instead to appease my lord?"

Matthew 15:18 But the things that proceed out of the mouth come from the heart, and those defile the man. 19 For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, [i]fornications, thefts, false witness, slanders. 20 These are the things which defile the man; but to eat with unwashed hands does not defile the man."

If they encounter a situation where they think it would be a sin either because of a conscience, Scripture, or whatever then their first reaction should involve not acting a rebellious manner nor a kowtowing doormat manner. Instead, they should reflect a proper heart attitude of respect to desire to act in a submissive manner. In the vast majority of cases it is the attitude of respect in a difficult situation will turn a husband's heart towards kindness, grace, and mercy.

The Scripture reiterates this twice in Ephesians 5 and 1 Peter 3: wives are to respect their husbands.

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your > chaste and [a]respectful behavior.

>
> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything. […] 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

Many a wife may submit but if they obey with a disrespectful attitude they will not win the heart of their husband. This is because their heart is set upon rebellion even in obedience. There are many parallels for this which I've used before:

- The kid who is forced to say sorry will have a bad attitude but will obey what they are told to do. But you can tell from their attitude that they don't mean it.
- We all know employees at work who complain and moan about everything their boss has for them. No one wants to be around this type of employee because the atmosphere is rotten to the core.

This is the same thing that husbands feel when their wife is disrespectful even if they obey. It is a wife's respectful and chaste heart that wins her husband in submissiveness. Not solely her obedience.

This does not just apply to solely Christian husbands and wives. This is why when I have to submit to authorities such as the Church, in a job, in academic settings, the government, and other areas of life where I am under authority I always try to make it a point to obey respectfully. You will have more favor from those in authority if you obey respectfully rather than obeying disrespectfully, and this is part of your witness of Christ as salt and light of the earth.

- A respectful heart searches for ways to obey in the fruits of the Spirit — love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, humility, and self control.
- A disrespectful heart searches for ways to disobey, often without care for the concerns of the one in authority even if they ultimately obey.

The parable of the whore

June 3, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The comments from one of Dalrock's latest threads have interested me greatly. It's where I got the inspiration to write respectful submission not submission. It's also where I got the inspiration to write this.

In the line of comments near the end of the thread, we establish a couple things with John Nesteutes providing the blatant Abraham Sarah example that I forgot:

> 1. Wife lies about hiding Jews from the Nazis. Everyone here agrees.
>
> 2. Husband tells wife to lie about hiding Jews from the Nazi. Most of the women here are saying: "NO, lying is sin. We should obey God and tell the truth to the Nazis."
>
> 3. 1 Kings 18 Obadiah hides 100 prophets of the Lord against the orderes of Jezebel who wants to kill them and provides them food and water. Obadiah also conspires to lie and give the run around to Ahab about Elijah's whereabouts.
>
> 4. Esther submits herself to the harem and fornication with the king, obscuring her past, and manipulation in the situation with Haman and the King. Submit to the harem or die. Hide her past as opposed to be a bold witness. She could've chosen to die. But she didn't in this case, and God was good.
>
> The point is that a husband may have a righteous reason to tell his wife to "sin." SD's lying is very similar to that although probably more morally ambiguous because it's not an extreme situation. It's not cut and dry like women where seem to think.
>
> +
>
> Let's not forget Abraham, Sarah, and Abimelech. "She's my sister."
>
> If your husband asks you tell a lie to keep you from getting killed / sold into sexual slavery in a harem, it might behoove you to obey him.

We already established that women think it's OK to lie to the Nazis about harboring Jews to save lives. I agree with that. The Scriptures show that lying and rebellion are justifiable in certain circumstances. However, the circumstances cannot be arbitrarily judged as this makes wives arbiters of their marriage. Hence, the women place themselves in the position of judge of what is God's law if they should obey their husbands or not in whatever circumstance they think they must.

In effect, they are whoring themselves out to the idol of false righteousness. Hence, the title of this post, and the often told "parable" usually quoted as from Winston Churchill:

> A man asks a woman if she would be willing to sleep with him if he pays her an exorbitant sum. She replies affirmatively. He then names a paltry amount and asks if she would still be willing to sleep with him for the revised fee. The woman > is greatly offended and replies as follows:

>
> She: What kind of woman do you think I am?
>
> He: We've already established that. Now we're just haggling over the price.

1 Corinthians 14 brings up home to the final word on the matter. Namely, it is the husband's decision on how to interpret teaching and the Scriptures:

1 Corinthians 14:34 The women are to keep silent in the churches; for they are not permitted to speak, but are to subject themselves, just as the Law also says. 35 If they desire to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home; for it is [n]improper for a woman to speak in church. 36 [o]Was it from you that the word of God first went forth? Or has it come to you only?

In particular, Abraham lies TWICE. First to Pharaoh then to Abimelech about Sarah being his sister. Sarah in 1 Peter 3 is held up as a paragon of being a submissive wife. Even when she goes along with Abraham's lie twice.

Cane makes a sharp comment here. And Dalrock hits another home run:

> What I would say from the discussion is it confirms again what I already strongly believed. The claim of "What if he tells me to sin?" isn't about a real fear of being commanded to do evil. It is a smokescreen, or squid ink, to avoid what the Bible clearly says while pretending not to do so. I suspect it is clear to others following as well.

What this shows me through the Sarah example is the power of authority. As Sarah stays submission to Abraham's authority as the head, she is totally covered even in the transgression. Because it is Abraham giving the order he bears the weight of responsibility if she goes along with it. This is born out in Genesis as both Pharaoh and Abimelech coming to Abraham about his lie and not blaming his wife. Nor does God call out Sarah for going along with the lie.

However, wives that step out from under their husband's authority better have a good reason. Abigail was justified because she saved lives in 1 Samuel 25. However, are any other wives confident they have a good enough reason to disobey aside from saving lives? That's a question I would take a long hard look at if I was a wife because it has far reaching consequences both toward God and toward their husband.

It's very easy for them to whore themselves out to the idol of false righteousness.

edit: Cane's followup post to this post showing that even in Abraham's unrighteousness God protects Sarah in her righteous submission.

The parable of the CEO

June 3, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A woman was taking a tour of a fortune 500 company to look at how the company worked.

First, she visited the basement to talk to the service and janitorial staff. The janitorial staff talked about their jobs and how they were to go around every so often and keep the place looking tidy. It wasn't that difficult of a job for them and consistent work. She found out they were making $25,000 per year. She thought to herself, "that's pretty good for services and janitorial staff within any company. That's definitely fair."

Next, she visited the secretaries. The secretaries were down for some chit chat. They told her all about their own jobs and responsibilities. They declared that the work was fairly easy for what they required to do, and they had a steady job that they were able to handle for the consistent hours. They had good vacation hours and were able to go home to their families and enjoy life. Afterward, the woman asked them how much they made and they stated they were making about $35,000 a year. That seemed fair to her for what they were doing.

Subsequently, she visited the employees that were responsible for making the products. They told her about their specific duties and how it related to the function of the company. They were tasked with figuring out solutions that the company could provide its customers to solve their problems. In the course of events one of the engineers volunteered that his salary was $65,000 a year. That could be boosted up over $100,000 per year as they progressed in expertise. The woman thought to herself, "That seems reasonable. These engineers have to go to school for 4 years to get a university degree. As they progress the company requires that they get further education. Yes, I could see that education level correlates with salary."

As she is doing this, the CEO of the company walks by into his office. It is around 4 PM and the secretaries greet him. The woman nonchalantly asks them about his wherebouts. The secretaries tell her that he usually only comes in for a few hours a day most of the time to make sure the company is running correctly.

A bit later she eventually finds herself talking to some of the managers of the company. Each of these managers run teams of 5-10 engineers working on a project. They keep the group on task. They have consistent hours and are even paid overtime when they have to work extensively on projects that need to be finished by certain deadlines. The woman finally asks what type of salary they make and find out that they average a salary of $130,000 while some of the most experienced managers are making upwards of $160,000. She thinks to herself that seems really high, but I suppose they are more experienced than the engineers. Their expertise and leadership require that they should make more.

After she finishes talking with the project managers she looks at her watch. She gasps and discovers that it is 7 PM and the offices are mostly closed already. She thanks the project managers for their time, and packs her bags. She laments the fact that she wasn't able to talk to the CEO today. However, as she walks out of the room she sees that the CEO of the company is still in his office. She wanders over and pokes her head in, and asks if she can talk with him real quick.

The CEO says sure he can chat real quick. The first thing she asks him is how much he makes. The CEO states "I make $12,900,000 as CEO of this company with bonuses included." The woman gasps and starts freaking out. She quickly gives him a rundown that he makes 516x more than the janitors, 368x more than the secretaries, 198x more than the engineers, and more than 99x of the managers. "Don't you think that's unfair," she proclaims. "Your company is super successful. You can make your own schedule! You only come in for a few hours a day and make so much more money compared to everyone else! You have so much power and so much money for so little work. That's totally unfair. In fact, I've heard your case is like most companies. The CEO on average makes 380x more than the average employee."

The CEO chuckles and says, "Lady, they don't pay me enough for this. The company does not pay me for what I do on a day to day basis. The value of a leader lies not in the power he weilds nor his salary. I am the one responsible to implement the vision of the company during conflict and stressful situations when crap hits the fan." The woman has a confused look on her face. The CEO finishes packing up his things and thanks her for the chat. She mumbles out, "I still don't understand… I can see that you have tons of extra responsibility but the compensation still seems unfair."

The CEO has a faint hint of a smile and responds, "Whose fault is it if the company goes bankrupt? Whose fault is it that tens of thousands of people are out of a job? Whose fault is it if there is corruption in the company? It is my fault. I am the fall guy if things go badly. Do you want to be the fall guy with widespread public shame and embarrassment and be the cause of tens of thousands of people losing their jobs even if it isn't totally your fault?"

 All salary numbers and averages based on real averages for positions in the industry.

Navigating hopelessness and despair

June 5, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> My view of God is one of a “mixed blessing.” I have never intentionally disobeyed God’s word and consider myself lucky that I have sidestepped much of the potential destruction that an involvement with an American women in the USA legal system may have caused me. Yet I am deeply frustrated that I have obeyed God and yet I am still a Christian incell without any real potential for a genuine Christian wife on the horizon. It is very dangerous to marry a non-virgin and the probability that you will find one gets very small as I get older and as a women gets older. Not to mention that in America we are very anal about “age gap” relationships. On some days I oscillate between wanting nothing to do with women “Black Pill” and Happier Abroad “Red Pill” theology. In addition I don’t see any satisfactory way to legally structure yourself to protect yourself from a women trying to steal your assets in divorce court, a potential false rape, harassment charge etc.
>
> If you go to http://www.sedm.org. This is a common law website that advocates “leaving the matrix” by disavowing your SS# and other things to not make yourself liable to file a tax return. Of course this probably does not stop the wicked IRS from usurping their authority but this site also advocates marriage without a marriage license. They have a book in the bookstore about this. I was wondering if you believe that marrying without a state marriage license is a reliable way for a man to “protect himself” from any potential legal harm from a women?
>
> I am very depressed about the present state of my life. No matter what option I research their does not appear to be any reliable and achievable way for me to find a genuine beautiful virgin Christian women. I have tried everything except for expiating over seas and nothing works! “Gym game”, “Church game”, online dating, , “Looksmax” (plastic surgery game), Meetup.com etc., asking women out when I was in school. Nothing works in the USA.!!! Yet I am very skeptical that promoters of “Happier Abroad” dating are being completely truthful (and quite a few of them are not looking for long term relationships). I feel trapped here in the USA but I don’t feel like God is leading me in any other fruitful direction. God has never answered any of my prayers in the positive! I don’t feel like their is any positive solution about this on the horizon and get very depressed by the possibility that I will be alone my entire life.

This is a pretty heavy post. I want to offer some brief commentary.

1. First, I think the thinking the reader is getting caught up in is performance based rather than out of desire. We don’t sin or do good works because we expect that God will do things for us. We do them because we recognize the Truth of the gospel. We are sinners and we need a Savior; therefore, we repent and turn from our ways.

Ephesians 4:20 But you did not learn [o]Christ in this way, 21 if indeed you have heard Him and have been taught in Him, just as truth is in Jesus, 22 that, in reference to your former manner of life, you lay aside the old [p]self, which is being corrupted in accordance with the lusts of deceit, 23 and that you be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 24 and put on the new [q]self, which [r]in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

2. Second, we are not promised a wife if we follow Him. This is a very difficult thing approach God about. I know Donal, Chad, and I have wrestled with this in prayer with God for probably weeks and months at a time.

This is what it means to lay aside our needs and desires and take up the cross and follow Him. This is what all Christian men today need to understand. We need to be able to be at peace with not ever finding a wife. This is important because it firmly rips down the false idol of having a wife or marriage and puts Christ in His rightful place.

The full irony is that once you do this then you actually become more attractive to women because you aren't so needy when you're around them.

3. Third, I think that reading too many non-Christian blogs is a bad idea. Like I have commented before in my posts, if your discernment is poor you can take most of what others say as truth and internalize it rather than being grounded in the Word. I see this a lot especially regarding the topic of marriage.

In fact, a Christian man's best use of time would be studying the Word, prayer, meditation, and fasting. I once had 70+ manosphere blogs that I used to read. I cut out most of the non-Christian ones. However, I have also since cut down on most of the Christian ones I read to a few. The first to go as a man were blogs written by Christian women. Learning about the nature of women, even Christian women, is indeed useful but non-productive as a man. It is more important to learn about being a man for if you know who you are in Christ then you are unshakeable.

4. Fourth, look for women with certain quality traits over age. Attitude is the main thing I look for now and the relationships with authority. I would rather marry a woman over 30 who has these traits in spades than a 20 year old. Which leads into…

5. Fifth, I do not think you should be looking for women at the moment. If you are going to lead a family it should not be from the point where you know absolutely what you are looking for and where you're going.

I discuss how I structured this in my own life in My 5 step process to maturity in relationships. Before outlining all of this on paper — not just thinking about it — I do not think I was ready for a relationship. Basically, you need to have firm convictions about what you believe and what you are looking for. This will enable you to have the strength and resolve to lead. If you do not have this it's questionable learning on the fly because you will probably make so many mistakes and not know how to deal with them. Even better if you have mentor.

6. If you have read secular manosphere stuff you probably have heard of “monk mode” which is to swear off women and work on yourself. Except in the case of Christians it would be go “God mode” and sink all of your available time into the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, and fasting. This is THE cure for depression that works well in conjunction with exercise so start lifting too.

> Matthew 6:33 But seek first His kingdom and His righteousness, and all these things will be added to you.

It is important to understand the meaning of Jesus’s statement in the context of your life. Many of us think we know what it means, generally, and we have some idea. But it needs to be personal.

Encouragement from men who have made it past this are welcome too.

You teach people how to treat you

June 11, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Like it or not people judge. Some justly and some unjustly.

- The way you present yourself is the way people will unconsciously treat you based on their unconscious biases. Some are stereotypical.

For example, if you dress up in shabby clothes and look unkempt you will probably be treated like a homeless person. If you dress up with lots of make up, a short skirt, and have lots of skin showing you'll probably be treated like a slut or prostitute. Likewise, if you're a minority such as a black person and you dress up with saggy jeans, golden chains, and other gangsta attire you'll probably be treated like a gangster.

Sometimes these impressions are warranted and sometimes they are unwarranted. Biases form in our head because of certain trends, and it's not necessarily a bad thing. But acknowledging them and how they play a role in how people treat you is important.

- Appearance, clothes, and body language are all initial factors in how people perceive you.

Going along with the past point this is quite obvious. In general, I don't think there is any reason against not dressing one level about the cirumstances you have to be in. However, keeping appearances and body language to match are important.

Humans have filteres in their brains to seek out incongruent behavior and question it. A gangseta who is all dressed up nicely in a suit will probably have part of his appearance and body language still give him away if you thought about it closely.

This is the importance of identity. If you know who you are and who you want to be then all of your behavior will become congruent and you will be the person in the image you want to be. Many people think that this is "faking" or "trying to put on your best behavior" but in reality it is becoming who you want to be.

It is not a bad thing to play a role with certain responsibility. Would Jesus have been effective as He was in ministry if He constantly dressed like a leper or cross dressed as a woman? It doesn't speak much about what Jesus wore or His appearance — except on the cross — but I would imagine that His appearance and dress were that of a Teacher. It is was spoken of Him that He taught with authority unlike the scribes and teacheres of the law.

This is not to say that personality and personal development aren't useful or important. They are extremely important. However, if your appearance, clothes, and body language do not match you will be fighting an uphill battle.

- Once people have biases in your head about who you are then they will treat you as such. If you do not like how they are treating you then you have to correct them of that notion.

It's easy to see this play out in a parent-child interaction. If a child starts talking back to the parent the parent will hopefully gently correct as opposed to harshly rebuke the child about talking back once a decision has been made.

Similarly, if someone is being disrespectful or dishonoring because of their preconceived notions then you have a choice: will you let it slide or will you correct them of that notion?

Most people let it slide because they want to avoid conflict. However, the fact that you let something slide unconsciously or consciously demonstrates to the other person that they were correct in their assumption. They will continue to keep treating you like that until you speak up if ever.

However, if you do eventually speak up there is now a past history. The past history reinforces what they think about you, and you are fighting against that past history to change the view of the person who you are talking to.

For instance, if a woman assumes you are a friend and then you spring the I want to be a relationship card on her and you haven't escaped the friend zone, then you are stuck. A woman that has assumed that you are a friend has this past history of you as a friend, and it is unlikely that her mind will be changed unless there is an instance where there is definite attraction. The magnitude of the "friend" the more upset a woman will be because of the incongruence of the situation: she thought you were a friend but you really wanted more. Her "past history with you as a strong friend" is butting up against your "new found interest."

- Establishing a strong initial impression with all of those you meet is critical to success in relationships.

This is the conclusion we end with at the end fo the day. It is much more difficult to change someone's opinion of you after you meet them, especially the longer it goes. Thus, having strong first impression is one of the most important parts of relationships. It sets the whole tone.

Obviously, relationships can be turned around although they will require substantially more effort on your part if they are not going where you want them to go. In cases with interest in women it's generally not worth it to try to fight against past history; rather, time is better spent on establishing new relationships with women.

In most cases with other people, you will be fighting against them to turn a relationship around. For those who were obese they initially receive support for their weightloss. However, as they continue to lose people start commenting that they are losing too much weight, developing an eating disorder, or other negative things even though what they are doing with healthy.

- Developing internal characteristics of strength of personality is more important than initial appearances.

This is so-called internal beauty. It is character and and a willingness to fight the uphill battles if people have the wrong impression of you. However, it is not arguing about their wrong impression of you. This will get you nowhere and even lessen someone's image of you. Rather, it is letting your actions speak for you.

If I get defensive about something then I only affirm their impression of me. This is very difficult to accept because we think that we havet to defend ourselves from wrongful impressions. However, defensiveness only shows that there is something to protect, and that something to protect they are pushing on as a button for some reason or another.

If they're wrong then it's water under the bridge to you because you know it's not who you are. Why get upset about something that is not who you are? It's a waste of time and energy. Rather, let actions speak for themselves by letting your yes be yes and your no be no.

If they're right or partially right then admit the truth. People respect those who are are authentic about themselves. That's one thing many people do not do, especially Christians in this age. Christians believe they need to have the perfect image and be unwilling to admit mistakes because it will make God or themselves look bad. This is false. We admit we mess up and sin sometimes because we are human; however, we to repent and turn from our ways because of the Holy Spirit within us.

- People do not like change. Any perceived change around them is perceived as a threat.

Part of establishing an initial impression is to also establish the impression that you are constantly growing and maturing. This takes work in your personal life, but it is important for other people to know because if they start to perceive changes in you without warning they will be threatened. Most likely because they are not growing and changing as well.

Yes, it is an insecurity on their part, but when you deal with people you have to deal with them insecurities and all. This is difficult to accept, but it needs to be accepted. While you can't help people change who do not want to change, you still have to deal with them and their biases.

This is why it is important to examine your own insecurities within your own identity. If you can work through them all with the help of God then conflict becomes a piece of cake. You do not get offended and want to argue about things that you used to. Rather, you can be kind and compassionate when you see that the other person is hurting and needing comfort. Their anger is only an expression of past wrongs or hurtful behavior that they have experienced from others.

- Eventually, as you grow you can start to change the culture around you and develop into a leader

Growth and exerting positive beneficial effects on those around you through your personlity and excellence in all that you do will eventually assert you as a non-commissioned de-facto leader of those around you. People will look to you for decisions and evaluation of situations because you have built up that factor of trust with others where you respond well.

This is ultimately what we are aiming for as Christians as this denotes a strong foundation of character through consistently walking in the fruits of the Spirit and in Truth. You are someone who doesn’t get embroiled in useless controversies, but can be relied on in conflict situations to stay cool with a clear head and make good judgments. This is all built from the ground up with character and stepping into the roles and responsibilities above.

However, this end result is not by chance. It is a daily walk of teaching people how to treat you built into lasting bonds of trust through character and hardship.

Transcend your circumstances

June 12, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I thought about naming this post a bit differently such as “dissociation” or “overcoming your circumstances” but I like that one better even though it isn’t as accurate.

In you teach people how to treat you, I touched on how developing internal characteristics of strength of personality is more important than initial impressions. I expounded on this concluding:

> This is so-called internal beauty. It is character and and a willingness to fight the uphill battles if people have the wrong impression of you. However, it is not arguing about their wrong impression of you. This will get you nowhere and even lessen someone’s image of you. Rather, it is letting your actions speak for you.
>
> If I get defensive about something then I only affirm their impression of me. This is very difficult to accept because we think that we havet to defend ourselves from wrongful impressions. However, defensiveness only shows that there is something to protect, and that something to protect they are pushing on as a button for some reason or another.
>
> If they’re wrong then it’s water under the bridge to you because you know it’s not who you are. Why get upset about something that is not who you are? It’s a waste of time and energy. Rather, let actions speak for themselves by letting your yes be yes and your no be no.
>
> If they’re right or partially right then admit the truth. People respect those who are are authentic about themselves. That’s one thing many people do not do, especially Christians in this age. Christians believe they need to have the perfect image and be unwilling to admit mistakes because it will make God or themselves look bad. This is false. We admit we mess up and sin sometimes because we are human; however, we to repent and turn from our ways because of the Holy Spirit within us.

Now, we examine this in terms of the circumstance above we can see that the latter examples transcends the circumstances and the former conforms to the circumstances. It’s very easy to conform to our circumstances because our feelings are right there in front of us and we often succumb to them over what we know as knowledge of the Truth.

In particular, defensiveness out of discomfort is a classic sign of conforming to our circumstances. Jesus makes a similar comment about conforming or transcending your circumstance regardless of what others do to you:

> Matthew 5:43 “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.’ 44 But I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, 45 so that you may [ap]be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the > righteous and the unrighteous. 46 For if you love those who love you, what reward do you have? Do not even the tax collectors do the same? 47 If you greet only your brothers, what more are you doing than others? Do not even the Gentiles do the same? 48 Therefore [aq]you are to be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.

It's easy to lose sight of this in the moment when we have negative or positive thoughts or feelings. Negative or position thoughts or feelings do not determine what is evil and good respectively. Instead, what determines what is evil or good is what comes out of the heart.

One of the notions of the manosphere is the "blue pill" and "red pill" dichotomy. The "blue pill" is composed of those who live under the false premises of reality. These are the prevailing notions in society through feminism that men and women are the same, that relationships should be equal, and other things like this which manifest in female supremacy throughout the wider culture even when equality is being parroted.

However, even embracing the so-called "red pill" creates a dichotomy of circumstances that I discussed in these three articles:

- Destruction of morals and the idolization of romantic love
- Destruction of morals and the commodification of romantic love
- The chain of corruption

Specifically, there is no unburdening of performance, and there is commodification of everything including sex. The core of the human experience, apart from God, is nihilism or hedonism or inherent selfishness. However, we know there is freedom in Christ. Paul discusses this in Romans:

> Romans 6:15 What then? Shall we sin because we are not under law but under grace? May it never be! 16 Do you not know that when you present yourselves to someone as slaves for obedience, you are slaves of the one whom you obey, either of sin [j]resulting in death, or of obedience [k]resulting in righteousness? 17 But thanks be to God that [l]though you were slaves of sin, you became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching to which you were committed, 18 and having been freed from sin, you became slaves of righteousness. 19 I am speaking in human terms because of the weakness of your flesh. For just as you presented your members as slaves to impurity and to lawlessness, [m]resulting in further lawlessness, so now present your members as slaves to righteousness, [n]resulting in sanctification.
>
> 20 For when you were slaves of sin, you were free in regard to righteousness. 21 Therefore what [o]benefit were you then [p]deriving [q]from the things of which you are now ashamed? For the outcome of those things is death. 22 But now having been freed from sin and enslaved to God, you [r]derive your [s]benefit, [t]resulting in sanctification, and the outcome, eternal life. 23 For the wages of > sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Everyone is a slave to something or creates an idol of something:

- For those living in the land of the “blue pill” they are a slave to a false reality. That is their idol.
- For those living in the land of the “red pill” apart from God they are a slave to their own desires: 2 Timothy 3:2 For men will be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, arrogant, revilers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, 3 unloving, irreconcilable, malicious gossips, without self-control, brutal, [a]haters of good, 4 treacherous, reckless, conceited, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, 5 holding to a form of [b]godliness, although they have denied its power; Avoid such men as these.
- However, for those set free by freedom in Christ we are not slaves to sin and to performance, but we are made alive in Christ transformed to desire to do good works.

It is only through this transformation in Christ that we are able to transcend our circumstances. Indeed, it is not us but the Spirit within us that allows us to do this.

What does it mean to transcend your circumstances?

Some of the more interesting research is to do with dissociation. Specifiaclly, Self talk as a regulatory mechanism (PDF). It’s very interesting that people perform objectively better when referring to themselves in the third person, but that is what precisely what we are looking for. Those who refer to themselves in the third person before a stressful circumstance are able to transcend their circumstance and perform better because they are dissociating themselves from the stressful circumstance.

Likewise, there are many research studies now and ongoing that show powerful effects of prayer, meditation, and fasting on the brain. These disciplines are part of the way we, in relationship to God, can overcome our circumstances. We do not fall into the trap of responding out of our human selves but instead out of love and desire to love as God does.

This is extremely important to understand because we all go through various hardships in our lives. Do we let our hardship overcome us? Do we let ourselves get blown and pushed by the wind in every direction when hard circumstances come? Do we expect others around us help us? Do we wallow in our misery wondering where God is?

Or rather do we take hold of the situation even in the difficulty and use it as a lesson that God wants to teach us something through this? Do we steward what we can even when it is not much? It’s easy to say “On Christ the solid rock I stand, all other ground is sinking sand” but do we really mean that when the going gets rough?

This is what true outcome indepedence is.

The secular red pill has often coined outcome indepedence as one of the major factors in attraction of women to men. Basically, men who don’t NEED women are going to be attractive, especially if they have a mission that they're on and are dedicated to it.

However, they never achieve true outcome independence because true outcome independence is devoid of expectations of performance. Everything performed to become a better man is on some level inherently performance based: for women, for status, for money, for power, or for the like.

However, those that can truly love in Christ can love through our actions and not expect anything back. We can see the whole forest from within the tree. We see that God has already triumphed, and yet we still need to grow and mature for the things that He has for us in this life whatever the difficulty and whatever the circumstance.

To be able to finally see a glimpse of what Paul describes in Colossians:

> Colossians 3:1 Therefore if you have been raised up with Christ, keep seeking the things above, where Christ is, seated at the right hand of God. 2 [a]Set your mind on the things above, not on the things that are on earth. 3 For you have died and your life is hidden with Christ in God. 4 When Christ, who is our life, is revealed, then you also will be revealed with Him in glory.

Maturity is understanding the relationship and boundaries between man and Maker, of others and oneself, of heaven and earth, and all that is in it. In that we can walk righteously through transcending our circumstances by the power of the Holy Spirit in Christ Jesus: devoid of selfish expectation of others and in love in speech and action no matter the hardships that befall us.

In Spirit and Truth Part 1

June 15, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In another post on this blog, a commentor says:

> "Will women feel attracted or rather respect a man who walks in those ways? Yes.
>
> Does it mean she'll want to have a relationship with him or marry him? Not necessarily. All of us have some other descriptors other than godly masculinity or godly femininity that we look for in a potential spouse. For example, I may prefer that my wife has a high preference for working out and nutrition. That's obviously not going to be every Christian man… and I may pass up Christian women who would make good spouses because of this criteria. Likewise, a Christian woman could want a man who is a better musician than herself. That may select me out of the pool if she plays music professionally, but it also cuts down on her potential pool."
>
> I think they find a godly masculine Christian man attractive more-so in a way that is "noble" or "admirable".
>
> From what I've largely observed (and minimally experienced), while women might be in awe of such a man, their programming only allows the man to secure mostly a superficial level of attraction, because now she has to step up her game.
>
> Either she's going to fake it till she makes it (I had a woman put up a very well thought and executed "persona' that it took over a year to shatter), or she's going to shit test the hell out of you to see if you're really "so good and godly", or she's going to friend zone you.
>
> I'm not confident in a woman wanting a devout man just for it's own sake. Something has to be in it for her.
>
> Of course this may sound cynical, but if say, you, DS, won a Nobel prize for the study of Christian Masculinity, I'd venture to say that most women (other than your family members or close friends) will hardly be impressed, unless the fact that you won the prize is going to result in something that will be to her benefit.
>
> What's in it for them?
>
> Even during the times when I was firing on all cylinders, holding frame, walking in the fruits of the Spirit, and exercising healthy-as-all-get-out boundaries, I still had women looking at me sideways.

I want to discuss this in the context of some prior posts.

First, back when I discussed what I look for in evaluating a potential wife 2, there were various things that fell into multiple categories:

1. Evidence of a relationship with God
2. Evidence of godly earthly relationships in reference to God
3. Evidence of cultivated godly femininity
4. Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed
5. Evidence of attraction/chemistry
6. Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization

Likewise, I brought up questions and topics to learn about your prospective spouse.

The main point of the various questions is to examine a woman's relationship with God. That is does she set aside time in her walk for reading the Scriptures, prayer, fasting, and meditation… and does she apply those things to her daily life.

A relationship with God is one thing. I can ask a woman about that if she is reading Scripture, praying, meditation and fasting. But it's another to see those things in action: evidence in earthly relationships, godly femininity, chastity, and family prioritization.

For me the best way to vet a woman is to care about two things:

1. Regularly ask her what she is learning about God in her daily walk.
2. Regularly ask her how she is applying it.

A woman who is not consistent with her walk is going to give you vague answers. For example, I've had "Christian" women do this to be before where they give some non-committal answer about how God was teaching them about humility or patience without details. The devil is in the details: is a woman cannot provide details about her daily walk and what she is learning it's likely she is just making something up to satisfy your question.

Humility and patience are like the catch-all of generic answers. Everyone gets prideful and angry so they're the easiest go tos. No one wants to admit they struggle with envy, gluttony, lust, greed or sloth though — especially no woman.

I've also met some Christian women who have told me their walk hasn't been so good recently. While this is a yellow flag at least they're being honest. They know that they haven't been as good in their daily walk as they should be and know they should change. Their heart is open to doing the right thing. Whereas with the other women who make something up their heart is about looking better not doing the right thing.

Next, a woman that is growing in Christ is applying the Word. She knows that she should be putting it into practice with others. If you're only learning about God and not putting it into practice then it's worthless. It's like James says that "Faith without Works is dead." Someone who is truly saved by faith is being constantly transformed to be more like Jesus — their works are tangible evidence of their transformation.

Finally, their attitude really tells you everything you need to know. When I examine what someone says it is not what they say that I am examining. It is how they are saying and their attitude towards it. For instance, the women above show it in their attitude. Usually a woman who is trying to cover up their lack of a walk and lying about it tends to divert the topic from that area or ends up dismissing it in some way or another. Your walk with God is THE most important thing in your Christian walk because it spills over to everything else. Someone whose attitude is not rooted in their walk and by extension their walk not manifesting tangibly is someone who is not truly grounded in Christ.

It boils down to the fact that you make time for that which is most important to you. If women are not making time for God or for relationships then they're not on the right track. Sometimes we get off track as I do sometimes, but those who welcome admonition to get back on ther right track have enough humility to see that they were moving in the wrong direction. Those who cover it up and deny are not.

In Spirit and Truth Part 2

June 16, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I did this series in two parts because it follows up Part 1 well. The name is from John 4:

> John 4:19 The woman *said to Him, "[d]Sir, I perceive that You are a prophet. 20 Our fathers worshiped in this mountain, and you people say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship."
>
> 21 Jesus *said to her, "Woman, believe Me, an hour is coming when neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem will you worship the Father. 22 You worship what you do not know; we worship what we know, for salvation is from the Jews. 23 But an hour is coming, and now is, when the true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth; for such people the Father seeks to be His worshipers.

Obviously, the superficial statement of Jesus' words here is that it is not WHERE you worship but HOW you worship God.

In this, Jesus also forshadows that those who believe in Him after His death will receive the Holy Spirit which He also talks about in chapters of John 13-17. Believers will be able to worship God truly because we are born again with the Holy Spirit inside of us: through the Spirit we are able to truly do good and truly walk in His ways.

In the context of the previous post, it is important to realize that we can see this in other believers as well. Those that truly worship God will worship Him in the Spirit. That is they will manifest the fruits of the Spirit in their walk. Love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self control. They will also worship Him in Truth exposing sinful deeds for what they are and repenting of them.

This is the basis of Ephesians 5 up to the often misinterpreted "be subject to one another in fear of Christ":

> Therefore be imitators of God, as beloved children; 2 and walk in love, just as Christ also loved [a]you and gave Himself up for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God [b]as a fragrant aroma. 3 But immorality [c]or any impurity or greed must not even be named among you, as is proper among [d]saints; 4 and there must be no filthiness and silly talk, or coarse jesting, which are not fitting, but rather giving of thanks. 5 For this you know with certainty, that no [e]immoral or impure person or covetous man, who is an idolater, has an inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and God.
>
> 6 Let no one deceive you with empty words, for because of these things the wrath of God comes upon the sons of disobedience. 7 Therefore do not be partakers with them; 8 for you were formerly darkness, but now you are Light in the Lord; walk as children of Light 9 (for the fruit of the Light consists in all goodness and righteousness and truth), 10 [f]trying to learn what is pleasing to the Lord. 11 Do not participate in the unfruitful deeds of darkness, but instead > even [g]expose them; 12 for it is disgraceful even to speak of the things which are done by them in secret. 13 But all things become visible when they are [h]exposed by the light, for everything that becomes visible is light. 14 For this reason [i]it says, “Awake, sleeper, And arise from the dead, And Christ will shine on you.”

>
> 15 Therefore [j]be careful how you walk, not as unwise men but as wise, 16 [k]making the most of your time, because the days are evil. 17 So then do not be foolish, but understand what the will of the Lord is. 18 And do not get drunk with wine, [l]for that is dissipation, but be filled with the Spirit, 19 speaking to [m]one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord; 20 always giving thanks for all things in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to [n]God, even the Father; 21 [o]and be subject to one another in the [p]fear of Christ.

I’ve discussed this in is there mutual submisison or not and the real purpose of Eph 5:21.

It is better for those Christians who admit their walk is not good than those who try to cover it up by looking better. This is important for their own spiritual health, and it is important for vetting a Christian woman. It’s not about looking the part but walking clearly in the Truth of whatever circumstances you are in. In other words, those that admit the truth have the chance to do something about it: they can repent or put more time and effort into their relationship with God. But those Christian who conceal to look better only harm themselves because they put appearance and/or looking good for a potential spouse above God.

The manifestation of the Spirit leads to the fruits of the Spirit which Paul discusses to a further extent to lay our lives on the line as living sacrifices:

> Romans 12:1 Therefore I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living and holy sacrifice, [a]acceptable to God, which is your [b]spiritual service of worship. 2 And do not be conformed to this [c]world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may [d]prove what the will of God is, that which is good and [e]acceptable and perfect.

This sums up what our lives are supposed to look like, but it also shows us the nature of how I vet a prospective wife:

1. Evidence of a relationship with God
2. Evidence of godly earthly relationships in reference to God
3. Evidence of cultivated godly femininity
4. Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed
5. Evidence of attraction/chemistry
6. Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization

All show a life lived through the Spirit. One that is not conformed to the world but instead conformed to God through the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Living life in Spirit and in Truth is not just about you but also about potential relationships that you will invest in from a potential wife (or husband) to family, friends, believers, unbelievers, and others. There must be fruit. Don’t watch what people say but what they do and admonish and correct yourself and other Christians as necessary.

Selective deception

June 18, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been thinking about permission for a while, and Dalrock's latest post on Don't blame heartiste for equating alpha with virtue was at the forefront. Here's what I wrote in permission:

> Men are waiting for permission to be men.
>
> The sad reality is that men are waiting for permission to be men when they are already men. They're waiting for permission for something they already are.
>
> To be honest, now that I realize this it's a hilarious caricature. We're sitting here in the manosphere blogging about being a Christian and being masculine. We're trying to find or regain something which we already are. It's quite absurd.
>
> It's really a testament to free will. Humans are the only beings that can act against their nature. Animals can't do that. Sometimes it's bad such as when we use our free will to submit to the flesh rather than the Spirit. But wow, it sure is bad when we use our free will as men to act feminine rather than masculine.

I wanted to explore this concept a bit more because it relates to the gamers and anti-gamers crowd that has appeared again over in Dalrock's comments.

Free will is the thing that distinguishes us from animals and allows us to act differently from baser instincts. For example, look at the pecking order of any species where there are "alphas" and "betas" where alphas get preference in mating and betas get the relative scraps. What you will see is that those that are "alphas" act that way in all areas of their lives whereas the "betas" act like that in all areas of their lives.

Humans have the unique distinction. He could be an amazing physicial, a high powered lawyer, a high ranking politician, a hollywood actor, a guitar player for a famous band, or other type of powerful or high status position. He has the right attitude, ambition, work ethic, and vision to be successful in the context of society, business, career, hobby or chosen area of expertise. However how high this man is in a powerful or social status position he could be absolutely terrible with women if he holds the wrong attitude towards women. This is what I mean by selective deception.

Churchianity, along with society and feminism, have played a great role in this deception. It encourages Christian men to respect Christian women when they shouldn't. It encourages Christian men be at the beck and call of women who need help. It encourages Christian men that good headship is approval from the wife or if she is happy which sets her up on a pedastal and makes him a slave to her feelings.

Now, growing as a man is not just about women. Masculinity "is" a lot of things in the Scriptures:

- Strong

- BEING a man (or otherwise, be of your nature)
- Assertive and proactive, especially for the laws of God
- Maturing, especially in love
- Independent — some men leave their father and mother and never marry.
- Provider, if married to household, if not at least to himself

Aside from the commands of the husbands in the Scriptures which are:

- Don't withhold sex (1 Corinthians 7)
- Be the head (Eph 5)
- Love wife as Christ loved the Church and as his own body (Eph 5)
- Live with in an understanding way with the weaker vessel and show her honor as a co-heir in Christ (1 Pet 3)

Now, in particular you may ask in what context do the shades have to be pulled back on selective deception in terms of human nature and acting like women. This is a very difficult question. I think, generally, there are concepts on socialization which I explored before in these 4 articles:

- The Socialization of men and women
- The selfish and unselfish socialization of men
- Masculinity is the truth
- Masculinity is the truth Part 2

Specifically, the differing nature of masculine and feminine socialization operate along these two axioms that I talked about in the first link:

> 1. The tendency of women's socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other.
> 2. The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.
>
> […]
>
> It's not so much that a man is a "jerk" or "asshole" in the sense of the words. It's that a man is able to show a woman his masculinity without holding back. Nice guys are men who are able to show their masculinity to other men but hide their masculinity from women.
>
> […]
>
> Masculinity drives men to be better men and women to be better women. This is what civilization is built on, and why "patriarchy" builds civilization. Therefore, don't be afraid as a man to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting to women just like you would be to other men.

Men who are able to show the same masculine side that they show to men with women are ones who are attractive or "alpha." They are the ones who are teasing women for messing up. They are the ones who are challenging their mediocrity. They are the ones who are ribbing them or teasing them if they are being silly or confused.

Men who are not deceived or deluded into thinking that women are some “special snowflake” and you “have to treat her right” (or whatever that means) display their masculinity with women as well. They will be critical of her, challenge her, rib her, tease her, and mock insult her just like he does with any other man. Consequently, this makes said man who is able to socialize with women as he does with men attractive to this woman.

This obviously requires that men have a ground of men to challenge themselves with and who are sharpening each other just as iron to iron. Men who are left wayward and drifting in society have no framework for what masculine behavior is in the first place even in terms of just socialization and other interactions with men. However, the type of behavior is within all of us; we just need to let it out.

There is something to be said for boys acting like boys and girls acting like girls when young. What parents and schools should do is to guide boys on the path to be men to direct the assertiveness, the aggression, the ambition, and all of the driving and competititve traits in a good direction. However, instead in most cases boys are medicated or perhaps even worse taught to be more like women and have their spirits beaten out of them.

Generally speaking, this is why men need to have good relationships with men and mentors because we spur each other on in that way. Thus, a man who develops his masculinity with other men has a spillover effect to women where he acts like a man around them as well.

Shame doesn’t work Part 1

June 22, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Over at Sunshine’s blog there’s a discussion about father’s day and all of the different things at church that it entails. This post builds somewhat off of that disussion.

Shaming is one of those things that just doesn’t work. This is evidenced in the wider culture. I’ve shared my faith with quite a few people, and they have shared their stories with me. Most of the time, they grew up in a Christian household but they they said they felt guilty all of the time. They were taught that so many things were sins and that they would be punished for not doing what was right. When they did something wrong they were shamed, shamed, and shamed some more by their parents. Needless to say, it has left many of these former Christians feeling guilty and shamed for much of their adult lives. It has also turned them away from the Church.

Shaming, much like nagging, fails because it piles on unnecessary guilt. In the vast majority of cases unless the person is a psychopath or a narcissist piling on guilt only serves to further hinder developmental growth in Christ. Christians who want to grow in Christ KNOW when they do something that is wrong, and they know they should repent and do it. However the constant shame bombs implicitly tell them:

- you are not worthy,
- you can’t do good enough,
- you will never be better,
- you will always fail.

You may say no it doesn’t. But that is false. When you’re shamed a lot you start believing these lies because the shame is ubiquitous. It’s there all around you and there is nothing combating those lies.

Believe it or not this the mindset that both children and adults pick up from being shamed over and over for their wrong doing. Ultimately, it leaves them either broken shells of themselves because it gets ingrained in their identity, or it turns them off to the Church and what is righteous because they develop an incorrect view of the grace and mercy of Christ through the poor examples in others.

I’ve referenced feminist shaming tactics before, so I’ll reference them again.

Anytime you see statements containing the phrasing “real Christian men” or qualifier words like that it’s basically shaming tactics or in reality nagging. Such women who use them are setting themselves up to be in the place to judge others around them. Now, such a judgment may be true — if it conforms to Christ — however, the way it is performed does not display the fruits of the Spirit in kindness.

This is the same reason why nagging fails. It’s not the nagging is bad in the sense that a woman sees that a man may be having difficulty with a particular responsibility. It is that the wife is assuming an authority position by her words and speaking down to him. In effect, she is mothering him. Mothering him is not the way to build men. Likewise, shaming isn't either.

Instead, the way the Scripture tells those under authority is to undergird through encouragement, enthusiasm, and helpfulness. 1 Peter 3 teaches that Christian wives win their husbands who do not obey the word without a word through their chaste and respectful behavior. Likewise, in the place of authority, Jesus gets down on the disciples level to explain and serve them to help them to grow. Jesus states that the gentiles lord authority over them, but it should not be so among you.

The Church, women, and many men including pastors fail to recognize that shame or more specifically nagging men to be "better" men does not work because it fails on a Scriptural level. Instead, a better path would be pushing how it can help men to be better husbands and fathers instead of always preaching them down from the pulpit or in casual conversation.

Here are the questions that those in leadership in the Church, men, and women should be asking themselves rather than shaming men:

- How can Christian women effectively encourage and build up the Christian men in their lives to assist them into stepping into their God-given roles?
- How can the Church support men to be better husbands and fathers?
- How can I effectively mentor or help my brothers in Christ along this journey?

Telling them what they need to be doing is shaming, and shaming doesn't work. Shaming never points anyone toward the abundant life in Christ. Did Christ shame those who were caught in sin? No, he forgave them and sent them on the right direction. If you know the right direction then undergird and help rather than shame.

The vast majority of Christian men WANT to be better husbands. They WANT to be better fathers. They want you to help them. But then Christians go around shaming men to man up and take responsibility based on some nebulous concept of failure to be Christ-like. It honestly makes zero sense to me.

Your intentions may be good, but if you're attemping to shame men to be better men you have missed the point of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In part 2 I'll take a look at shame from a Scriptural perspective.

SCOTUS and the love of Jesus Christ

June 30, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As many of you know I'm all about learning the truth and then implementing practicals.

Here are two of the "better" articles I've seen about the SCOTUS decision:

- http://www.thegospelcoalition.org/blogs/kevindeyoung/2015/06/26/but-what-does-the-bible-say/
- http://www.washingtonpost.com/news/acts-of-faith/wp/2015/06/26/why-the-church-should-neither-cave-nor-panic-about-the-decision-on-gay-marriage/

However, even these miss the point to some extent.

The absolutely correct decision I have only seen one article mention. That is the government should not be in the marriage "business" at all and leave it as a religious/moral decision. This would hail back to the 1700s and 1800s before "marriage" was tied into government. This all started long before then.

Obviously, the main problem with this is that marriage is intimately tied with th tax code and courts at the moment which means in the quest of "fairness" and "equality" marriage would inevitably fall one day. It was guaranteed because democracy is a flawed government system.

However, all of this is beside the point in my opinion. What is done is done, and how Christians should approach the situation I've seen everything from protest, to prepare for the worst, to whatever. I think most of these are short sighted in what it means to be a Christian. Fundamentally, being a Christian is about preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ and making disciples of all nations.

The Church's criticism is aimed in the wrong direction.

For the most, I see discussion of homosexuality from a Christian point of view fruitless. Engaging those who believe homosexuality isn't wrong only alienates those whom God wishes to save. This goes back to the point that the Church's criticism/admonishment/rebuke should be those inside Church or those who claim to be Christians that do wrong and not those who are outside.

Having done some street evangelism before a much better way to win those who are non-Christians is to emphasize commonalities. For example, instead of coming out and being confrontational about particular issues such as homosexuality or abortion it is much better to share the hope that is in Jesus. That is we all mess up in one way or another, but Jesus was sent by God to die for our sins so that we can have a relationship with the Father. It is AFTER they accept Jesus as their Lord and Savior and His transforming power that we start to point out potential areas that may need to change in their lives.

Likewise, Paul at Mars Hill in Athens doesn't go out and preach that people are engaging in idolatry. Instead, he brings he talks about the statue to an unknown God which the Athenians know and uses it as a commonality between them. Then he uses that to preach about the hope in Jesus.

> Acts 17:22 So Paul stood in the midst of the [s]Areopagus and said, “Men of Athens, I observe that you are very religious in all respects. 23 For while I was passing through and examining the objects of your worship, I also found an altar with this inscription, ‘TO AN UNKNOWN GOD.’ Therefore what you worship in ignorance, this I proclaim to you. 24 The God who made the world and all things in it, since He is Lord of heaven and earth, does not dwell in temples made with hands; 25 nor is He served by human hands, as though He needed anything, since He Himself gives to all people life and breath and all things; 26 and He made from one man every nation of mankind to live on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed times and the boundaries of their habitation, 27 that they would seek God, if perhaps they might grope for Him and find Him, though He is not far from each one of us; 28 for in Him we live and move and [t]exist, as even some of your own poets have said, ‘For we also are His children.’ 29 Being then the children of God, we ought not to think that the Divine Nature is like gold or silver or stone, an image formed by the art and thought of man. 30 Therefore having overlooked the times of ignorance, God is now declaring to men that all people everywhere should repent, 31 because He has fixed a day in which He will judge [u]the world in righteousness [v]through a Man whom He has appointed, having furnished proof to all men [w]by raising Him from the dead.”
>
> 32 Now when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some began to sneer, but others said, “We shall hear you [x]again concerning this.” 33 So Paul went out of their midst. 34 But some men joined him and believed, among whom also were Dionysius the Areopagite and a woman named Damaris and others with them.

The last part is the most important. Some sneered at him, but he won some for the gospel that day. Paul emphasizes commonalities and shares the hope of Jesus through these commonalities rather than being confrontation and calling the non-Christians out as sinners in their idolatry.

Let’s face it. Everything but worshipping God is idolatry. Placing money over God is idolatry. Placing women over God is idolatry. Placing happiness and divorce over God is idolatry. Placing your “sexual identity” over God is idolatry. However, that is not what Paul aims to discuss.

For some reason many Christians think that we must confront “homosexuals” about their “sin” because we are the salt and light of the earth. While this is true, it does not win peoplel for Christ but rather is self righteous. In other words, we need to tell them that they’re sinning. Nothing can be further from the Truth.

Now, this is not to say that I don’t believe that homosexuality is a sin but that making it known is foolish in the grand scheme of winning others to the gospel. The time and place to win people for Christ isn’t to guilt people or shame people that do not believe in Christ of their sin. That is why people turn away from Christ because many times His so-called followers are so judgmental of non-Christians when we are not supposed to be.

> 1 Corinthians 9:15 But I have used none of these things. And I am not writing these things so that it will be done so in my case; for it would be better for me to die than have any man make my boast an empty one. 16 For if I preach the gospel, I have nothing to boast of, for I am under compulsion; for woe is me if I do not preach the gospel. 17 For if I do this voluntarily, I have a reward; but if against my will, I have a stewardship entrusted to me. 18 What then is my reward? That, when I preach the gospel, I may offer the gospel without charge, so as not to make full use of my right in the gospel.
>
> 19 For though I am free from all men, I have made myself a slave to all, so that I may win more. 20 To the Jews I became as a Jew, so that I might win Jews; to those who are under [h]the Law, as under [i]the Law though not being myself under [j]the Law, so that I might win those who are under [k]the Law; 21 to those who are without law, as without law, though not being without the law of God but under the law of Christ, so that I might win those who are without law. 22 To the weak I became weak, that I might win the weak; I have become all things to all men, so that I may by all means save some. 23 I do all things for the sake of the gospel, so that I may become a fellow partaker of it.

To the sinners I became a sinner that I might win those in sin. Even though I myself am no longer bound by sin in Christ.

This is the whole point of your testomony! Hey, here's what my life looked like when I was in sin. Then I met Jesus Christ through these circumstances, and my life has changed.

As a Christian I still sin. What separates us from non-Christians isn't that we don't sin but we acknowledge that we blow it and repent and turn 180 degrees in the opposite direction. This is because God has allowed Christ to be revealed to us through His grace, and so we share that grace with others. It's not an "us or them" mentality. After all, we were once them in our own sin.

The love and hope of Jesus Christ to the unsaved

People are hurting everywhere all the time. People are searching for answers. There are many people who believe that their sexual identity and affirmation of their sexual identity is what will solve the pain and hurt in their lives.

- PUAs and players believe that if they are desired by women or have lots of sex they will have peace.
- TRP believes that ultimate fulfillment is in maximizing your own happiness with women, career, hobbies, and whatever else.
- Perhaps homosexuals believe that people affirming their homosexuality and being non-judgmental of them will make them happy and fulfilled.

We know that this is not the case. No one will ever fill the hole in their soul except Jesus Christ and the Father. Yet, if we can't see past their hurt and pain that we once experienced ourselves we have failed as Christians to understand the love of God in our own lives. We have failed when we express God's stance on homosexuality when they express their hurt and their pain of being judged, scorned, and hated because they want to be fulfilled and accepted.

It is not their "sin" that we should be pointing out rather the love of God that can take away the hurt, the pain, and the unfulfilled longing. It is only after that their eyes have been opened to the love of God, and they receive His Holy Spirit that their eyes will be opened to their sin.

I intentionally hide my opinion on homosexuality, abortion, divorce, premarital sex, and other controversial topics when discussing it with non-Christians because it is non-productive and it is unwise to share that. Instead, I use the opportunity to discuss identity, lack of fulfillment, lack of happiness, the hurt and the pain — even that other Christians may have CAUSED by proclaiming that God hates their sin — to share the love and the hope of Jesus Christ.

Here's the hard Truth. Jesus is the only thing that can transform hearts. Exposing others to what is sin in God's eyes does not transform hearts.

In effect, most Christians are emphasizing a particular attribute of the Father at the wrong time — His righteous and just nature versus His loving and merciful nature. This failure on emphasizing the just nature of God instead of His love drives them away from the Father when they need Him the most.

I believe that pointing out non-Christian's specific sin misses the point of the gospel of Jesus Christ altogether. It fails to acknowledge the brokeness that we all once were in, and the hope that Jesus has for them in love. Those who are hurting need Christians who relate with them in their pain and hurt not those who condemn them and shame them. That is how we show the love of God that we all have received.

SCOTUS and the love of Jesus Christ Part 2

July 9, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

JW comments in the previous post:

> John the Baptist was very specific in his denunciation of Herod's sin. He was continuing in a long prophetic line before him of calling evil evil. In terms of inviting hostility from non-believers, so what? Would you have counselled John the Baptist to back off his incest claims and denounce Herod in less specific terms?

The answer is a bit more complex. If you're called to be a prophet or a forerunner like John the Baptist or say Hosea or Jonah you may have more specific instructions about what to say or do to leaders and towns from God.

John the Baptist was called to point out Herod's sin. Hosea was called to marry a prostitute and then preach about Israel's adultery with Gomer as an example. Jonah was instructed by God to directly go to Ninevah and tell them to repent of their specific sins. The disciples/apostles had this same charge as well. This is basically public large crowd evangelism.

From what I can tell this is the difference between a specific gift for evangelism as a part of the body of Christ as opposed to the general command from the Scriptures to share the gospel as believers.

As I said in the previous post, if you're sharing the gospel in private company — and the street evangelism I mentioned is generally one on one as opposed to preaching on the streets — then it is almost always better to share the kindness and love of God as opposed to emphasizing the righteous and judgmental nature of God. Honestly, the success rates bear this out. I've seen more people come to Christ through the former than the latter.

We must also remember that Herod liked to listen to John, and had generally regarded him highly even though he called him out on his particular sin. It's interesting that the Scripture talks about this because when we see Christians preaching about others sin we tend to see the label of "hate filled Christians" posted on them. Hence, John with gift for evangelism was preaching in such a way that he wasn't regarded as a hate filled Christian except to someone who was entrenched in evil as Herodias it seems. This is important because we can see the story to say he did a specific things, but we also do not know the way in which John preached it specifically which is also important for context.

Thus, to answer the question no I would not counsel John the Baptist to back of incest claims if it's clear that his calling is evangelism and it is to be from the greatest to the least in the country.

However, I don't think that every Christian has gift and the calling that comes with it (as the Church is the body of Christ). As Paul states in Romans 2 talking to believers:

> Romans 2:1 Therefore you have no excuse, [a]everyone of you who passes judgment, for in that which you judge another, you condemn yourself; for you who judge practice the same things. 2 And we know that the judgment of God [b]rightly falls upon those who practice such things. 3 But do you suppose this, O man, [c]when you pass judgment on those who practice such things and do the same yourself, that you will escape the judgment of God? 4 Or do you think lightly of the riches of His kindness and tolerance and patience, not knowing that the kindness of God leads you to repentance?

Hence, I stand by the original conclusion as a general statement: to win people to God it's better to take a different route by emphasizing love and kindness that has been proven to be more successful.

P.S. Like Donal life is a bit busy so I may not post much for another week or two until it clears up.

Reflections of purpose

July 11, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been in a bit of a contemplative mood recently on what it means to be a Christian men who desires a wife. Let's reflect together.

> Are you a Christian: are you a Christian that others want to emulate and non-believers look at an know you're a Christian?

If not, why? What can be done to fix that?

I am a child of God. I should be truly at peace and joyful of who I am in Christ. This should reflect in my daily life.

> Am I stewarding my gifts [of the Spirit] that God has given me? Do I even know what they are?

If not, why? What can be done to fix that?

Knowing what you gifts are is critical to know how you are to work in the body of Christ. If you don't know what they are it may be difficult to find peace within the fellowship because you'll feel and think like an outsider.

- Romans 12:6-8 — prophecy, serving, teaching, exhortation, giving, leadership, mercy
- 1 Corinthians 12:8-10 — words of wisdom, words of knowledge, faith, gifts of healing, miracles, prophecy, distinguishing between spirits, tongues, interpretation of tongues
- 1 Corinthians 12:28 — apostles, prophets, teachers, miracles, kinds of healing. helps, administration, tongues
- Ephesian 4:11 — apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor, teacher
- 1 Peter 4:11 — whoever speaks, whoever renders service

> Am I stewarding the vision that God has given me for this life? Do I even know what mine is?

If not, why? What can be done to fix that?

One of the biggest things for me was figuring out my life's purpose. Realizing what my talents and focusing them to achieve as an overarching vision is imporatnt. It can have to do with God, the Church, business/work, hobbies, family, or any combination thereof.

> Am I cultivating my masculinity: with God, Church, business/work, hobbies, and with women.

If not, why? What can be done to fix that?

What does it mean to be a man and how can I work toward that. What traits to I need to cultivate and develop.

> Are you a man: are you a man that a woman would want to marry?

If not, why? What can be done to fix that?

The measure of a man is not his attractiveness to women but rather the measure of the reflection of his inward walk with God toward women. As I become more at peace with who I am in Christ women are not such a focus and will not be an idol. Talking to women and asking them out and developing a relationship is piddly change compared to the intimacy of my relationship with God.

Now, combine these together since they are not the same thing apart:

> Are you a Christian man: are you a Christian man that a Christian woman would want to marry?

If not, why? What can be done to fix that?

In general, my 5 step process to maturity in relationships looks at some of these issues in more depth.

> If I am in a relationship: how am I stewarding this relationship to grow both in Christ and with the others.

The goal is not to satisfy myself but to lead and head up a relationship that can withstand any trials and tribulations (spiritual, financial, emotional, physical, etc), additions (kids), subtractions (death), and the like and still grow in truth, trust, and intimacy.

Questions like these serve as reminders of the goal(s) that each of us set. They are not meant to encourage a performance mindset of evaluating your worth based on what you do or the quality of woman you attract. Rather, if you have no set goals and are not working toward them or evaluating your progress toward them you will fail.

Semen also alters your brain

July 24, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In line with the previous post on Oral contraception alters your brain, there is obviously research coming out that semen alters the brain and behavior. Here's some excerpts from the article.

> THERE'S more to semen than sperm. In many animals, seminal fluid alters both the bodies and sometimes even the behaviour of females. Human semen, too, triggers changes in the uterus, and might have wider effects on women, aimed at just one goal.
>
> "It's all about maximising the chances of the male reproducing," says Sarah Robertson of the University of Adelaide in Australia. The effects are most striking in fruit flies: seminal fluid can make the females eat more, lay more eggs and be less receptive to other males.
>
> […]
>
> Some of their findings were presented at the Society for Molecular Biology and Evolution conference in Vienna, Austria, last week, including their discovery that one of these proteins is a "master regulator" of genes. Females exposed to it show a wide range of changes in gene expression.
>
> Chapman thinks this kind of seminal signalling is widespread in the animal world. The semen of people, pigs and mice affects the female reproductive tract, and the question is whether it can also produce behavioural responses in female mammals similar to those seen in fruit flies.
>
> There have been claims that semen can do everything from making women sleepy after sex to strengthening the emotional bond with their partner. One 2002 study, based on a survey of 300 students, even found that women whose partners did not use condoms scored lower on a measure of depression.
>
> If that effect is real, depression in some people might be treatable with artificial-semen suppositories. Gordon Gallup of the State University of New York at Albany, who carried out the study, says a PhD student of his has replicated the finding in a survey of 1000 women, but the results were never published.
>
> […]
>
> It's not clear whether any components of human semen get into the bloodstream, but it could be possible, particularly for small molecules like hormones, says Robertson. She has shown that seminal fluid induces expression of a range of genes in the cervix, including ones that affect the immune system, ovulation, the receptivity of the uterus lining to an embryo, and even the growth of the embryo itself.
>
> As for seminal signalling, she thinks it's more likely to be indirect, with semen > causing the cervix to produce molecules that influence the rest of the body. Her team is studying the effect of three microRNAs – RNA fragments that affect gene expression – released by the cervix in response to semen.

>
> Whatever the mechanism, both Chapman and Robertson say it’s plausible that semen could have effects on women well beyond their reproductive tract.

The depression one was pretty well known, but it’s interesting that there are more effects — potentially hormonal — that change women’s behavior beyond the pair bonding level. They probably act synergistically.

Anyway, simply another reason if you are going to marry to marry a virgin woman.

Shaming doesn't work Part 2

July 25, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the cool things we can learn from the Scriptures, especially the New Testament is why shaming doesn't work. There's actually many different words translated as "shame" in the NT but they are used in different contexts:

> G150 — αἰσχρός — aischros — ahee-skhros' (and derivatives G149, 151, 152) — From the same as G153; shameful, that is, base (specifically venal): – filthy.
>
> Luke 14:9 and he who invited you both will come and say to you, 'Give your place to this man,' and then in disgrace you proceed to occupy the last place.
>
> 1 Cor 11:66 For if a woman does not cover [a]her head, let her also [b]have her hair cut off; but if it is disgraceful for a woman to [c]have her hair cut off or [d]her head shaved, let her cover [e]her head.
>
> 1 Cor 14:35 If they desire to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home; for it is [a]improper for a woman to speak in church.
>
> Titus 1:11 who must be silenced because they are upsetting whole families, teaching things they should not teach for the sake of sordid gain.
>
> Heb 12:2 2 [a]fixing our eyes on Jesus, the [b]author and perfecter of faith, who for the joy set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and has sat down at the right hand of the throne of God.

Aischros is the typical word that is used for shame, and generally denotes things going against natural truths or order.

- Jesus uses it in terms of the disgrace at having to move to a lower position at the table
- Paul uses it in terms of women with short hair or speaking in church is shameful
- Paul also uses it in instruction to Titus about those who cause strife in families for shameful/sordid gain
- The writer of Hebrews uses it to describe the shame of Jesus being nailed on the cross, and how He despised it by willingly going to it in order to save us.

> G818 — ἀτιμάζω — atimazō — at-im-ad'-zo (also, G819, 820) — From G820; to render infamous, that is, (by implication) contemn or maltreat: – despise, dishonour, suffer shame, entreat shamefully.
>
> Luke 20:11 And he proceeded to send another slave; and they beat him also and treated him shamefully and sent him away empty-handed.
>
> John 8:49 Jesus answered, "I do not have a demon; but I honor My Father, and you dishonor Me.
>
> Acts 5:41 So they went on their way from the presence of the [a]Council, > rejoicing that they had been considered worthy to suffer shame for His name.

>
> James 2:6 But you have dishonored the poor man. Is it not the rich who oppress you and [a]personally drag you into [b]court?

Atimazo is also used as shame but it is used in the context of dishonoring someone from a rightful position.

We can see this in Luke 20 where Jesus is talking about the Lord lending a vineyard to the caretakers and how they despised and dishonored all of those who came in His name. Likewise, we see this in terms of being shamed for the gospel — unrightful shame and dishonor for spreading the good news. We see the dishonor of Jesus being called a demon, and in James where he talks about favortism and the poor.

> G1788 — ἐντρέπω — entrepō — en-trep'-o — From G1722 and the base of G5157; to invert, that is, (figuratively and reflexively) in a good sense, to respect; or in a bad one, to confound: – regard, (give) reverence, shame.
>
> Luke 18:3 There was a widow in that city, and she kept coming to him, saying, '[a]Give me legal protection from my opponent.' 4 For a while he was unwilling; but afterward he said to himself, 'Even though I do not fear God nor respect man, 5 yet because this widow bothers me, I will [b]give her legal protection, otherwise by continually coming she will [c]wear me out.'"
>
> Luke 20:13 The [d]owner of the vineyard said, 'What shall I do? I will send my beloved son; perhaps they will respect him.'
>
> 1 Corinthians 4:14 I do not write these things to shame you, but to admonish you as my beloved children.
>
> Titus 2:8 8 sound in speech which is beyond reproach, so that the opponent will be put to shame, having nothing bad to say about us.

Entrepo I have talked about before. It describes the interesting case of where the correct response is inversion.

The judge who does not fear God nor respect man gives into the widow because of her persistence. The Lord of the vineyard even though the laborers have been treating his servants shamefully believes that they will respect his son. Paul knows that his rebuke to the Corinthians seems like he wants to shame them, but he disabuses that notion. Paul in his letter to Titus tells his to encourage Chrisitans to act beyond reproach so that those who persecute them with he ashamed of their bad behavior because the Christians have done nothing wrong.

> G3856 — παραδειγματίζω — paradeigmatizō — par-ad-igue-mat-id'-zo — From G3844 and G1165; to show alongside (the public), that is, expose to infamy: – make a public example, put to an open shame.
>
> Matthew 1:19 And Joseph her husband, being a righteous man and not wanting to disgrace her, planned [a]to send her away secretly.
>
> Hebrews 6:6 and then have fallen away, it is impossible to renew them again to > repentance, [a]since they again crucify to themselves the Son of God and put Him to open shame.

Paradeigmatizo is used solely for public shaming.

The context in which these are used is only in these two verses. That means Joseph a righteous man didn't want to publically shame his betrothed even in her perceived sexual sin prior to marriage. Also, those that are apostate publically shame Christ and seemingly if you take into the rest of the context of Hebrews 6 may not be able to return to repentance in Christ.

> G2617 — καταισχύνω — kataischunō — kat-ahee-skhoo'-no — From G2596 and G153; to shame down, that is, disgrace or (by implication) put to the blush: – confound, dishonour, (be a-, make a-) shame (-d).
>
> Romans 5:5 and hope does not disappoint, because the love of God has been poured out within our hearts through the Holy Spirit who was given to us.
>
> 1 Corinthians 1:27 but God has chosen the foolish things of the world to shame the wise, and God has chosen the weak things of the world to shame the things which are strong,
>
> 1 Corinthians 11:4 Every man who has something on his head while praying or prophesying disgraces his head. 5 But every woman who has her head uncovered while praying or prophesying disgraces her head, for she is one and the same as the woman [c]whose head is shaved.
>
> 1 Peter 3:16 [a]and keep a good conscience so that in the thing in which you are slandered, those who revile your good behavior in Christ will be put to shame.

Kataischuno is typically used in the Scriptures to discuss shaming down from a haughty or higher place or from a rightful position. It's very similar to aischros in the fact that it discusses similar circumstances in 1 Corinthians 11, but is slightly different because the dishonoring is done by the person or thing in question:

- Hope does not disappoint
- Good uses the foolish things to shame the wise
- A man who has a covering disgraces himself, whereas a woman without a covering disgraces herself
- Those who persecute you bring shame on themselves

What does this all mean in my previous post on "shame doesn't work"

These are all of the different types of shame.

- Aischros — shameful, filthy, venial
- Atimazo — to 'accuse' someone of a disgraceful or dishonorable thing.
- Entropo — inverted shame/respect or in other words a "trap" situation
- Paradeigmatizo — shame publically

- Kataischuno — shame down specifically from a haughty place or from a rightful position.

The specific type of shame we discussed in the previous article is: shame coming from outside sources directed upon individuals in order to reform their behavior (which often leads to guilt tripping).

The only real word for shame that could be used in this context is paradeigmatizo which is public shaming, but we see that righteous men do not do that and the only other time that this used in Scripture is when apostates publically denounce and thus shame Christ.

Sunshine makes a good point in her godly sorrow versus shame post that this does not excuse us for tolerating bad or sinful behavior. We should indeed call it out. This is not shame though; it is simply shedding light where there once was darkness. Now, the person in question could respond defensively out of "shame" that they did something wrong though this is not a reason to continue shaming them to change their behavior.

The type of calling out should be done in the context of Matthew 18 where we go to the person in question alone, then with two or more witnesses, then the church, etc. Basically, the sins of the one do not need to be made public and should be confronted privately, unless they hold a public office in particular where they have extensive responsibility over the church. For example, Paul teaches Timothy in 1 Timothy 5 that elders who are caught in sin must be reproved in front of the Church as a warning.

When taken in this context, there are many reasons why shaming doesn't work to change behavior. As we discussed, pointing out sinful behavior is not shaming but making them aware of the gravity of their sin. Then it is up to them if they want to repent or not. Specifically, shaming tends to put pressure and ultimately coerce someone into "doing the right thing" which is not actually doing the right thing.
For example, if you make a child say sorry for doing something wrong do they actual mean it if their attitude, body language, and facial expressions says otherwise? No. They don't think they have done anything wrong, and they are simply going through the motions. Likewise, shaming someone into repentance doesn't work; it has to be a free will choice of their own to the admission that they were guilty of doing wrong and want to turn in the opposite direction.This is why when I confront sin I simply try to point out where the behavior does not match the Scriptures and the potential consequences from it. I do not try to get them to change; they must make that decision on their own. I may inform them of the consequences if there is gravity of the sin that may need to be taken to the Church, but I don't otherwise attempt to guilt trip them into behaving better because that doesn't turn a sinners heart. It's the kindness of God that turns people to repentance, and if there's anything I can do to help them understand the love and kindness of God in that moment I will do it.This is different because we are bringing sinful behavior to Christians or at least those who claim to be Christians and following Christ because they should have the Holy Spirit in them to convict them of behavior and bring them to repentance again when confronted. I take a different approach when evangelizing which I covered SCOTUS and the love of Jesus Christ Part 1 and Part 2.

Half of women marry the best sex of their lives

July 26, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So this is from an older article in the NY post (h/t deti) although the data is from an iVillage 2000 woman survey in 2012. 60/40 married with children versus no children.

> This goes against the premise of every single romance novel, but you're not going to marry the best sex of your life. At least, not if you're like most women.
>
> According to a recent study by iVillage, less than half of wedded women married the person who was the best sex of their lives (52 percent say that was an ex.) In fact, 66 percent would rather read a book, watch a movie or take a nap than sleep with a spouse.
>
> Amanda Chatel, a 33-year-old writer from the East Village, says, "With the men I've loved, the sex has been good, sometimes great, but never 'best.' It's resulted in many orgasms and was fun but, comparatively speaking, it didn't have that intensity that comes with the 'best' sex.
>
> "I knew [my best sex partner] was temporary, and so the great sex was the best because the sex was the relationship," she adds. "We didn't have to invest in anything else."

Obviously, taking into account my post on Understanding population models and using them to vet correctly we can assume that there are definitely confounding factors. However, since this is an online anonymous survey it's unlikely that women would lie about this. They do not have an incentive like say decrease their partner count, and it's widespread mainstream knowledge that "sex tapers off in marriage anyway." Hence, there is likely to be a lot of truthful answers.

The scariest part is not just that women did not marry the best sex of their lives, it's also that 2/3 of women would rather read a book, watch a movie, or sleep than have sex with their spouse. Obviously, the scary part about that is that attraction is generally the motivator for sex, so that means that 2/3 of women are not attracted enough to their spouses to want to have sex with them over books, movies, and sleep. That's disturbing to say the least.

This also means that the majority of the population of women are likely "settling" when they marry rather than marrying someone they are actually attracted to. Now, you could argue that a woman was attracted when she married and then she nagged him or he got lazy. Those would definitely be factors that could influence this, but it also shows the state of the marriage population as it exists in time now. I wouldn't be surprised if in those 3 years from 2012 to 2015 it has gotten worse.

This also lends credence to the numbers that divorces are 70% initiated by women with maybe more because sometimes women pressure men to file so they come out looking better ("he filed the divorce not me"). Also, as always be aware of marrying non-virgins.

Why the boys like ditzy girls

July 27, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Sunshine has an interesting post up based on her experiences of boys liking ditzy (or dizzy) girls rather than the smart girls when growing up. This is pretty objective material. Everyone can observe that this is a reality. Now, the question is why.

> When I was in high school, one of my best friends was a very intelligent girl named Lynn. She and I were both good students, usually earning good grades and scoring near the top of our class in standardized testing. Though I dressed up for school and had long hair, the jock-type boys made fun of me whenever I blipped across their radar for being verbally praised by a teacher (otherwise, being at best an average-looking girl, they never paid me any mind), and they called Lynn and me “lesbians”. I was mortified and grossed out by that (this was before being gay was Super Cool) and totally baffled as to why being a smart girl equaled being a lesbian in their eyes.
>
> […] Read the rest for the whole post.

I generally shy away from the explanation that such name calling is done in the basis of feeling insecure. After all, that’s the same argument that feminists would use to defend men not liking strong independent women. Men are “scared” or “threatened” by a woman’s intelligence, independence, sexuality, or whatever else. I find this highly unlikely to be the case that boys would do this when boys have the same biological nature as men.

The clear cut reason why men don’t like independent women is because of the attitude that comes with it. They typically act snarky, generally derisive of male attention, and other types of behavior that repel men.

Thus, the truth is probably closer to the fact that women who do well at school tend to act:

1. like they have superior intelligence (even though doing well at “school” doesn’t necessarily mean you’re smart).
2. like know-it-alls looking for ways to correct you or make you look foolish (and if there’s one thing men don’t like it’s a lack of respect).
3. like teacher’s pets (and since teachers are supposed to be impartial and they often don’t act that way it tends to breed an intense dislike).
4. female conformity to social standards versus boys like to test boundaries.

The first 3 being annoying and unfeminine, and the last one is rooted in biological behavior due to testosterone.

Now, I don’t doubt that maybe a few boys may react that way out of insecurity. However, I don’t think that behavior would be expressed over grades as grades can be boosted by “busy work” that boys often have an intense dislike for. Jealousy or envy inspired comments are more likely to be expressed over doing better on standardized tests like the SAT or college admission, and this would be specifically in competitive minded boys. Boys that are teasing with poor grades are just teasing because they want to and think it’s fun.

This lends credence to the explanation which underlies teasing. There is some merit in that fact that boys know how to instinctively treat women which is to tease them. Except they don’t have the knowledge of what “going to far” means.

Boys specifically do not have a filter and are more willing to just say or do what comes to their mind. Part of the reason that men have become soft and feminine is because this has been conditioned out of them. As I described in the socialization of men and women, the communication styles of men and women are different.

> However, men tend to socialize on an entirely different wavelength. What men say and do to their friends is equivalent to mock insulting each other, ribbing each other, teasing each other, and giving each other sh*t for everything and anything.
>
> Thus, we have these two axioms:
>
> 1. The tendency of women’s socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other.
> 2. The tendency of men’s socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other.
>
> This is masculine behavior. We are men, and we are not afraid to challenge each other to be better men through some good natured ball busting. When you see something that looks like weakness, insecurity, or misbehavior in your friend, you will ream your friend out for it. That is how one becomes a man in this world; he is able to overcome challenges set before him, “especially spurred on by other men.
>
> Women are attracted to this masculine behavior, and it’s one of the reasons why they want into men exclusive spaces. As much as being validated makes a woman feel good temporarily, a woman being challenged to stay on her toes by teasing, mock insulting, ribbing, and him giving her sh*t for her words and actions is much more “fun” and “interesting.”

Given that I think boys’ teasing is more biologically rooted that many first think. However, in elementary and even middle school boys have not been through puberty yet. Hence, the teasing is there which sets them up for procreative success, but puberty has not hit and there’s very little to no interest in women. Hence, it seems to us “unbiased observers” that boys are just naturally mean to girls that are supposedly smarter than them even when they dress femininely. Add into the fact that it’s socially cooler to make fun of those who are intelligent or do better in school, and you have a recipe that makes it seem like ditzy girls over smart girls.

Conclusions

- Biologically speaking boys act closer to masculinity than most men in our culture because they haven't been indoctrinated to go against their nature of being a male. This shows up in their actions and language which is typically Ritalin'd by schools and parents to enforce compliance.
- "Ditzy" or "dizzy" girls more likely follow a boy's lead femininely, respectfully, and enthusiastically, which is in line with the nature that God has created in men. It's no surprise that boys would gravitate to that type of women.
- Boys respond to negative attitude cues from girls which turn them off to so-called intelligent, know-it-all, teacher pets which is why they tease them for it. Girls and women often have little to no respect for boys or men they perceive are less smart or less intelligent than them. Instead, they have contempt.
- A small subset of boys may tease because of insecurity if they are also academically driven (not many boys nowadays fit this profile).
- There is also a pressure to "act cool" in terms of jocks versus nerds. This may be the case if they look at once another and laugh, but may or may not be a main motivator.
- Boys don't know what "going too far" means yet since they haven't been taught that, and they aren't in puberty which means they don't have [sexual] interest in the women they are teasing. Attraction alters the behavior of boys and men alike.

I think the issue is multifaceted, but it has more to do with biological nature and roles than most think due to the nature of how God created men and women.

The masculine and the feminine and identity testing

July 31, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So I'm going to start writing more about boundaries and communications in relationships as I am in a relationship. Some of the most interesting comments that I find are just fundamentally how masculinity and femininity interact with each other.

On butterflies:

Me: "I feel butterflies when I desire a woman"
Her: "I feel butterflies when I am desired"

On the best thing you can say/give to a person:

Me: "What is the best thing you can say to a person?"
Her: "That I admire that person." (Or in other words, she adores and/or respects that person as they are all from the same root)
Me: and later… "The best thing that I could say is that I love someone"

On the things we want in the relationship:

Her: "I want to be loved"
Me: "I want to be respected"

Going off of these general concepts it's easy to see the deviation of men and women into the masculine and feminine. Therefore, it should come as no surprise that men who want to be "loved for who they are" tend to be unmasculine (or "nice") since they are seeking after feminine validation.

I suspect this is not just from wider culture where men are pressured to show their emotions and/or men taking their cue from Disney fairy tales wanting to be loved. However, with the skyrocking fatherlessness and lack of fathers mentoring their sons to be men it can be that the mothers are impressing upon their sons that they should marry women that love them rather than respect them.

The test

If you're talking to a man or woman and want to figure out their exact state of mind regarding their masculinity or femininity you can employ the respect or love test to them. Simply ask if they would rather be respected or loved. Their answer and the decisiveness of their answer will tell you all you need to know.

- Obviously, if a man chooses love instead of respect or a woman chooses respect instead of love you are dealing with a feminized male and a masculinized female. You can go down the road of challenging them on why if you want, which can lead to some interesting questions and discussion.
- The speed of their answer and decisiveness tells you some very important things about how well they know their desires and ability to be completely honest with them in a moment.
- If they have to think about their answer for a few seconds or more you should always follow up with the question of why. This will make them think about their identity, and question why they chose that particular decision. This can lead to some interesting questions, and if they are Christian you can always guide them back to the Scriptures on Ephesian 5 and 1 Peter 3.

This type of test is a direct probe onto how their own identity and desires. It is often the case that Christians (and non-Christians) for that matter in wider culture are confused about their own identity and who they are. This can be useful to stimulate personal development, or probe a particular love interest as well. If a woman every said they wanted to be respected more than loved that would tell me immediately that she is unfeminine and I don't want to be in a relationship with her.

Alternatively, you can use the reverse question like I did with my girl and ask her what is the best thing you can tell [their significant other]. For males it would to love, and for females it would be to respect, admire, or adore if you are dealing with masculine men and feminine women. Any other answers they aren't in touch with identity and how they should be operating in a relationship.

Use wisely.

Discussing sex and virginity with a potential spouse is important

August 3, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

On attitudes

One of Dalrock's recent posts on the problem isn't knowledge but attitude highlights a fairly important issue.

The first part of the post is about how attitude is the root of actions. This is true. I explored this in my post on Your attitude tells me everything I need to know.

- Heart -> attitude -> actions

Essentially, a person's attitude basically doubles as how their heart thinks about a particular issue or person. It is the closest thing to a person's heart that we can see. Hence, why examining someone's intentions, even if it didn't turn out the way they want or turned out for the worse, is extremely important. If their heart is in the right place and they are willing to walk in humility and be corrected then you can change what they do to be more effective.

This is the same thing that God does with our hearts as we read the Bible or are mentored or discipleship. We accept God's gift and repent of our sins, and we are filled with the Holy Spirit. Then our heart is in the right place with the attitude and help of the Holy Spirit to do good, we can then walk in good. It might not come out as good at first, and that's what Biblical correction, fellowship, and mentoring/discipleship is for to help us on the right path.

Discussing sex and virginity

The real question that has been raging in the comments is:

> Should a young woman broadcast her virginity?

Yes and no. Let me discuss how I approach this topic first.

In general, as man who is going to be leading the relationship and how it progresses I typically do not go straight for the heart of the issue. When discussing matters about sex I usually start with what Scripture says about sex and have the discussion there. My usual "go to" question to start bringing it up is if she has a high or low libido then turn it specifically to 1 Corinthians 7 where it talks about the ONLY reason that Christians should marry in the New Testament:

> 1 Corinthians 7:9 But if they cannot control themselves, they should marry, for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.

1 Corinthians 7 is probably the easiest passage to discuss because it has a lot on not just sex but reasons why and why not Christians should get married. Obviously, some of the others you can talk about are Genesis 1-3 and Song of Songs.

Timeline: The general timeline for when I start bringing up matters of what a Biblical marriage and sex looks like is 2-3 weeks.

1. The first few weeks are feeling each other out typically by electronic communication of some sort and a few dates. In those first few weeks I lead a discussion on Scripture and theology, the sociological interaction of the Church and culture, and the Church and feminism.

2. After I reach the 2-3 week mark then I start introducing the topic of sex leading into it from the example above. Since we are now comfortable discussing issues that relatively no man has talked with her before, there is a decent level of intimacy and trust. This is the importance of leading these discussions because very few if any men actually do this. You will stand out as someone exceptional.

3. From there although it may seem uncomfortable I start bringing up the issue of libido compatibility. For the numerous women I've talked with about this I don't think I've had one bad encounter as long as I assert the importance of discussing these topics.

Reasoning: Generally speaking, even talking about "sex" is taboo in our culture. This should not be. The most common examples I give to women who I went out on dates with is the main reason of the importance of the discussion:

- Our culture AND the Church thinks discussing marriage and sex is taboo and uncomfortable
- God created sex to be good within marriage, and talking about something about which God created to be good is not evil.
- The early importance of discussing sex is clear: if we get a few months into a relationship and I find that my potential wife only wants sex once a week and I want it multiple times a day then this is a bad match up of libidos which will cause significant friction within the marriage.
- Likewise, if I find that my potential wife has particular issues about sex that she is bringing into the relationship that may hinder intimacy. This includes not just her past but also my past history as well. If there's something you can't get over in the other person's history it's better to know earlier so you two can know that this relationship is not for you and start your search anew.
- It is one of the only exclusive things in marriage that the two of you do that you wouldn't do with other Christians.

Now, such things always gradually lead into a conversation about the importance of virginity and ultimately a disclosure of if the woman is a virgin or not. I find that this is a naturally transition, and it isn't that uncomfortable although the initial discussions may be. I've personally never had a girl that I was talking to react negatively to a discussion on virginity after highlighting sex and marriage in these terms.

Should a woman bring it up first?

In general, I don't think a woman should be proactive about announcing it as that typically comes off as crass, but it should be a topic of discussion when discussing intimacy and marriage because virginity is touted as important in the Scriptures for good reason.

From what I have seen from not just my own case but many others I think if a woman brings it up it should be related to the topic of hand. Otherwise, if she just blurts out that she is a virgin it comes off very poorly like she has some underlying motive.

However, if a woman does announce it then you have to look at her attitude when she speaks about it. If she speaks about it firmly like she has made the decision to wait to have sex 'til marriage that is good. However, if she speaks of it as a warning to her boyfriend or in a negative tone of voice then that's a bad indicator that she may have some sort of sexual hangup potentially involving her virginity. Like we discussed in the beginning it is her attitude toward virginity and sex that matters in deciphering how she actually feels about it rather than what she is saying.

Lest we forget Samantha Pugsley's example of how her virginity became an idol to her:

> I lost my virginity on my wedding night, with my husband, just as I had promised that day when I was 10 years old. I stood in the hotel bathroom beforehand, wearing my white lingerie, thinking, "I made it. I'm a good Christian." There was no chorus of angels, no shining light from Heaven. It was just me and my husband in a dark room, fumbling with a condom and a bottle of lube for the first time.
>
> Sex hurt. I knew it would. Everyone told me it would be uncomfortable the first time. What they didn't tell me is that I would be back in the bathroom afterward, crying quietly for reasons I didn't yet comprehend. They didn't tell me that I'd be on my honeymoon, crying again, because sex felt dirty and wrong and sinful even though I was married and it was supposed to be okay now.
>
> When we got home, I couldn't look anyone in the eye. Everyone knew my virginity was gone. My parents, my church, my friends, my co-workers. They all knew I was soiled and tarnished. I wasn't special anymore. My virginity had become such an essential part of my personality that I didn't know who I was without it.
>
> It didn't get better. I avoided undressing in front of my husband. I tried not to kiss him too often or too amorously so I wouldn't lead him on. I dreaded bedtime. Maybe he'd want to have sex.
>
> When he did, I obliged. I wanted nothing more than to make him happy because I loved him so much and because I'd been taught it was my duty to fulfill his needs. But I hated sex. Sometimes I cried myself to sleep because I wanted to like it, because it wasn't fair. I had done everything right. I took the pledge and stayed true to it. Where was the blessed marriage I was promised?

No Christian husband wants to be a marriage like this. The woman above eventually walked away from Christianity too. Now, this is not the case with every woman but this allows us to see what we are looking for in particular.

Should a woman not discuss it at all?

Another thing addressed is the discussion of it where the woman doesn't want to talk about it at all. Dalrock quoted Spacetraveller's experience as well:

> I don't advocate that women disclose their 'status' to a prospective husband ESPECIALLY if she IS a virgin. I didn't understand this at the time I was dating, but I think I understand things better now. It seems a bit 'try hard' if you are trying to convince someone you are a virgin. They will naturally, get suspicious about you.
>
> I never disclosed. When my husband (then boyfriend) directly asked (because of 'no action' 3 months or so into our relationship), I actually didn't answer. He says I blushed and looked away, which is probably true, because I am sensitive about this subject.
>
> I never discussed virginity with anyone who I was interested in or who was interested in me because I thought it was too much of an intimate discussion to have with someone who is not yet 'established' as a husband-potential. Even having this discussion with a man was, in itself 'slutty', in my view.

In my view, the only reason why she viewed it as "slutty" is because sex and it's associated topics are seen as taboo. These are notions that SHOULD be disabused by Christians.

Christians, just as much as non-Christians, like hiding uncomfortable and difficult topics. Parents often communicate the "birds and the bees" discussion as something that is shameful and shouldn't be talked about. However, there is no reason why discussing something that God created to be good as something touted as shameful. This is Christians feeling shame or embarrassment for things they should not. Just as we are not to be ashamed of Jesus Christ or the gospel we should not be ashamed of things that God created to be good in marriage.

Because I am rooted in the truth and explain these things well to those I go on dates with it's not a problem discussing sex, virginity, or other topics. These women do feel uncomfortable when starting to discuss these topics at first. They specifically tell me about it. However, as long as you don't treat it as a big deal and discuss it seriously on how it applies to marriage, their impact of marriage, and how they can help the husband and wife to grow in intimacy it's God honoring and important to building trust.

Personally, I would NEVER marry a woman who hasn't disclosed her past sexual history to me.

If she had a promiscuous past and if she is ashamed about it then I would question her repentance solely because Jesus takes away our sins. I'm not afraid of admitting my past sin because that's not who I am anymore. Christ changed me, and He should have changed her. Paul was not afraid of talking about what he did prior to Christ with humility: he actively helped murder the early Church. This is the power of fully received forgiveness. We should have no trouble talking about our past mistakes in light of His all consuming Grace and Mercy because if we have repented we know that is not who we are.

Of course, her past may lead me to not decide to pursue a relationship just like she may not decide to pursue a relationship when she hears of my past. This is fine. We can and should count the cost of being with someone based on their past as it does come up.

Conclusions

- I think that every Christian who wants to get married should be open to discussing marriage, sex, virginity, and other sexual topics prior to marriage. The earlier the better.
- The main reasons why people object to talking about sex and virginity is it's uncomfortable or it's shameful. However, in light of God's creation and our salvation it should not be shameful or uncomfortable to talk about these things. In fact, it is extremely important to talk about things that are one of the lynchpins of the marriage relationship.
- Examine a potential spouses attitude about virginity, sexual behavior, and their past as this shows you their heart about sex. Obviously, they can improve in this area, but it should be a yellow flag if they have negative thoughts or attitudes toward sex in marriage.
- Personally, I would never a marry a woman who did not disclose her sexual past to me.
- Not talking about marriage, sex, virginity, and other intimate discussions is like playing with fire if you are intending to get married. You're hoping a bomb is not buried in the heart of your spouse that is going to be opened up on wedding night.

I remember discussing how to vet potential women with discussions about sex before on this blog; however, I don't remember the exact post. In general, I think most of the commenters were against it especially the [married] women. I dissented before and brought up some examples. This is my full opinion on this particular topic with my personal experience. I know it can go well, and it always has. As long as you present it correctly to Christian women in the light of Scripture and how God views marriage and sex.

Those who have hangups about discussing it after you discuss it in light of God's truth I would say is a yellow flag. There's something deeper that is impeding her from having a good attitude and heart towards sex in marriage and the importance of discussing it to look for compatibility. Essentially, the process of discussing sex in marriage, beyond a woman's actual virginity or not, is a vetting tool that is a predictor of how it will be in marriage.

The FYI on the male sexuality

August 4, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since I've been discussing sex a lot I figured that this is a good time for this post since there are quite a few women who read this blog even though it's for men.

This is somewhat of a "repost" in sorts from the comments I made on Peacefulwife's book review on "Through a man's eyes" by Shaunti Feldhahn and Craig Gross. I haven't read the book itself, but I did respond to some of the comments because there were some misconceptions about male sexuality. From what I understand, the book is for women to help them understand how men think and act in their sexuality. Now let's move on the relevant parts.

One of the commenters posts that a Christian male counselor, no less, told her:

> I also think that it is important to understand that the "lust" of pornography is less about sex and more about power, just as the crime of rape is not about sex but is about violence and power, i. e. "I can force this woman to submit to me," or in the case of pornography, the fantasy of " I am powerful enough that this woman will expose herself to me upon my demand.", This is important to note because the more we grant our husbands "power" in their own homes, through respect, submission to decision-making, etc., the more that will inoculate them from trying to get the need for respect and power met outside the marriage relationship.

Mostly False. Both of your examples are feminist myths. It's a feminist myth because it's a projection. Women desire power (see: curse of Eve in Genesis 3), so they think that men desire power which motivates sex and rape.

No man including me will hold it against you because you don't know what the male sex drive feels like. The desire to have sex is a biological drive, and I would classify it as a need for most men.

It's like a gnawing hunger that you have all of the time. Sometimes it's "low level" where you can feel the stomach acid in your stomach slowly eating away at your insides. Other times it's "starvation level" where you feel like you're going to die if you don't have sex.

The reason why I said mostly false is that there are some narcissistic and psychopathic men where "sex" or "rape" is equated with power and/or murder. However, this is a very low percentage of the population and often only serial killers and serial rapists. Some women are like this too. Thus,

1. In general, power does not drive the need for sex. Biology drives the need for sex for men.
2. Respect and submissiveness means that husbands will choose their wives over pornography or trying to suppress the drive.

Thus, the behavior of wives influences decision making and not the need.

April was a bit confused, so I ended up elaborating further on this point:

> I think that [the commenter] and I were talking about porn addiction – and it seems you are talking about sex drive in general for a man. Is there not a difference, in your mind?

The comment was about the "lust" of pornography not being about sex but power. Generally speaking, the lust (or biological drive for sex) is there already. Sex with a wife, pornography, masturbation, or suppression are all different outlets for it. If a man isn't getting his need met in one area (say the wife), then he will likely turned to another area to get it.

This is because of the sex drive of men. One of the major reasons — if not THE main reason — why men get married is to have sex. After all, the only reasoning given in the NT to have sex is in 1 Corinthians 7. It is better to be of the Lord's things, but if they cannot control themselves it is better to marry than to burn. Thus, the desire/passion to have sex which most men have IS one of the main reasons to be married.

That said a nagging and disrespectful wife is a turn off for men. That's part of why men may choose masturbation or porn rather than wanting to have sex with their wife. No man would willingly want to have masturbate or watch porn over a real life human (their wife no less!). However, different factors such as disrespect may influence him to choose other decisions.

The reason I choose to comment is that it's important to distinguish the biological need for sex between the reasons a man may choose a different outlet for them. Many wives become bitter at their men because they want sex all of the time not understanding that sex is a major reason for how men feel respected and loved, how it relieves them of the "all the time urge," and how it makes them more loving toward their wives.

If you just clump in the biological need for sex with "power" then you have women that are less empathetic and sympathetic toward their husband's desire. This can lead them to more willingly turn down sex (despite 1 Cor 7 and the admonition not to) which may lead to marital dysfunction.

Another commenter makes a good analogy about what I was talking about:

> I'd say that for most men, especially most Christian men (though there are always exceptions), their wife is their most preferred source for sexual fulfillment, by a wide margin. So, if there is a healthy sexual relationship going on, where the wife is both available and affirming, then the porn option is very clearly perceived as one that pales in comparison to sex with their wife. I know this was definitely the case for me when I struggled with pornography during my marriage. But the flip side is that as the levels of affirmation and/or availability go down, the attractiveness of porn goes up and the temptation becomes more difficult to overcome. (Repeating what has been said before here: this does not excuse or justify the husband in pursuing pornography or giving in to temptation; that is his > sin and his alone. But it's also a fact of nature — a thirsty man is going to have a harder time turning down a less healthy drink and holding out for a healthy drink than is a man who has plenty of healthy drinks available.) Hope this helps.

Now, these are not the be-all end-all explanation of why a man may choose something else over his wife. April did make a good list about different other reasons:

- an addiction that may have begun when he was s teenager, or even earlier that has nothing to do with his attraction to his wife now
- feeling rejected by his wife sexually
- feeling disrespected by his wife, especially over long periods of time
- an addiction that develops in adulthood
- not being attracted to his wife anymore (DS: i.e. she gets fat and slovenly)
- loneliness
- frustration in life in general
- not having a legitimate sexual outlet (a man is single, for instance)

However, it is important to note that Christian men who choose to marry are getting married because they want to have sex with their wives! Christian women need to understand this need.

Why rejecting a spouse's sexual advances is condemned in the Bible

Essentially, when wives make comments like "all you think about is sex all the time" it's a rejection of their man and his sexuality. Because sex is how men feel closeness and intimacy with their wives, a rejection of this tends to put him in a typical male rejected state. The same is true of when a husband rejects a wife. She feels rejected as well.

The default male state when they are rejected from anything is to withdraw and shut down emotionally. Men, in general, do not talk about their failures with other people at least until they have a decent amount of time to process it. Men want to be alone to process the particular actions, and the fact that they don't express this emotionally is a feature not a bug. Men generally process their emotions internally and not externally. Women, on the other hand, like to discuss how they feel outwardly with other women. Then they can support each other verbally.

One of the most damaging lies is that women try to pry out the emotional state of their man from within them as it will help them connect better or make the relationship better. That's generally not how men are, and not what you should be doing with a man. I've actually seen countless women in Church groups when everyone is sitting around try to get men to open up emotionally to them saying it is somehow good to do this. Especially in a group setting. It's simply not the case.

Aside from that tangent, it starts to put the relationship in a poor behavioral cycle.

- Wife rejects her husband or vice versa
- Opposite spouse feels rejected and tends to shut down toward their spouse
- Other spouse wonders why their spouse is withdrawing and it makes them feel alone

- Since that spouse feels more alone they are more likely to say hurtful than helpful things
- This whole cycle creates a wedge or wall between each spouse

Indeed, sex is purely about unity and bonding. Hence, it should be obvious when we look at the rejection of sex — unity and bonding — that it leads to disunity and discord.

This is not to say that there aren't cases medical or otherwise that you may not feel like or want to have sex. Rather it means that you should put forth the effort even if you don't feel like it because it is the godly and right thing to do. If you are too tired let your spouse know that you are open to it but they have to get you aroused and do most of the work. If you have a medical condition that prevents intercourse then do other sexual acts instead of turning them down.

It is VERY important to understand that continual rejection of either spouse — the husband or the wife — makes it more likely that they may go somewhere else with their desires and needs. For husbands this may include masturbation, pornography, adultery, and other involvement with other women. For wives this may include the same as husbands but also emotional and physical affairs, romance novels, and other emotionally romantic or stimulating material.

Indeed, it does not cause it as each of us makes our own choice, but it means you are subjecting them to greater temptation from the devil as it says in 1 Corinthians 7. The more you subject someone to temptation the more likelier they are to fall since we are not perfect like Christ.

> 1 Corinthians 7:5 Do not deprive each other except perhaps by mutual consent and for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer. Then come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

The Scriptures are awesome because they acknowledge our weakness. Paul wasn't married and was of the Lord's things, but he was inspired by God to write about if we burn we should [try to] be married. Likewise, because this burning is strong we should not deprive sex from each other because we tend to have a lack of control toward sexual matters; hence why we got married in the first place!

Confusion and objections

There are some other comments in the post that I want to address here that I did not over there.

> OK so why did God create men's minds to enjoy or want that stuff?!?
>
> You say he didn't intend us to suffer PMS, it was part of the curse in Genesis 3. Was it also part of the curse that men's brains are wired like this, then? I feel as if we have no excuse for bad behaviour at that time of the month, but men seem to have all this mountain of excuse for theirs. Like we have to understand them, and not blame them? I don't want to read this book because I think I would get angry.

> No sin is ok, but it does make it clear in 1 Corinthians 6:18-20 that sexual sin of any kind is particularly bad and damaging, and I've always taken it to mean that it is worse than other kinds of sin. (Not worse in God's eyes, obviously all sin is sin, but worse as in more damaging and hurtful).
>
> Sorry if I am being negative about this, it IS a very sore subject for me – not because of my husband's attitude or actions, thankfully, but just because I am very vulnerable and jealous about him seeing anything inappropriate, or even watching an explicit scene in a mainstream film. Thankfully my husband (not a Christian) knows this is a massive issue for me and is extremely sensitive and caring about not looking at other women etc. But I am aware of what's out there and I cannot understand why we should try to see men's points of view on this, or be understanding about their desire to look!!

First, God created men to enjoy the physical appearance of women and to be aroused sexually by it because His creation is beautiful.

Free Northerner discusses form, function, and beauty in this post in regard to the aesthetic nature of architecture and design. In particular, if you are not going to read the link, the awe inspiring and beautiful nature of cathedral dwarfs much of the aesthetic appeal of anything else post-Renaissance. Why? As FN notes beauty is objective and only subjective around the margins. Likewise, cathedrals are about God and inspiring us in the awe and wonder of the nature, the power, and the presence of God. As they say, a picture is worth 1000 words.

Indeed, we know that the beauty of women is an objective trait and marginally subjective. Although it may be crass to discuss the "number system" a 8 out of 10 in attractiveness will tend to be within 1-2 grade points of her actual beauty. Some men may think she is a 6 and some men a 10. However, most of the men will congregate around the 7-9 range with the majority of them saying she is an 8.

Generally, the objectiveness of beauty is due to specific traits in men and women such as symmetric faces and features, lack of blemishes in the skin, and other describable phenomena. Likewise, those who are overweight or obese and slovenly have an objectively lower beauty than if she had a slimmer waist and < .9 waist to hip ratio with the majority of men finding a .7 waist to hip ratio the most objectively pleasing to the eye.

Second, as I stated earlier there is a vast difference between what God has created namely for us to enjoy beauty as opposed to what is sinful. April asked about this in particular:

> Would you be able to describe the difference between a man's sex drive and lust? Because – I think it is confusing to us as women. Lust is sin. But I don't believe a biological drive is sin. Of course, we can take a biological drive and choose to fulfill it in ungodly ways. But there is a willing choice that comes into play. With me not being a man, I don't know that I can pinpoint when the choice > to lust comes in vs. biology. It seems a bit murky at times to me.

In general, sex drive = desire = lust. However, when the Scriptures refer to “lust” it does not always mean “sin.” This is best explained in Biblical terms.

> James 1:13 When tempted, no one should say, “God is tempting me.” For God cannot be tempted by evil, nor does he tempt anyone; 14 but each person is tempted when they are dragged away by their own evil desire and enticed. 15 Then, after desire has conceived, it gives birth to sin; and sin, when it is full-grown, gives birth to death.

The Greek word for “lust” or “desire” is epithumia.

G1939 — ἐπιθυμία — epithumia — ep-ee-thoo-mee’-ah
From G1937; a longing (especially for what is forbidden): – concupiscence, desire, lust (after). Total KJV occurrences: 38

It’s not always used in a negative context. For example, Jesus in Luke 22 uses the same word to say that “He has desired (or lusted) to eat the passover” with His disciples. Obviously, this is a good thing! It’s also used in Luke in the prodigal son who “desired” to eat the food that the pigs ate since he was so hungry, in Luke 16 when the poor made desired to eat the crumbs from the rich man’s table, and in Luke 17 when Jesus is saying a time will come when the disciples will “desire” to see the Son of Man but will not be able to find Him (probably referring to his post-death and pre-resurrection).

A man’s sex drive is like “desire” or “lust” that is always there. It’s constant and gnawing sometimes just barely but sometimes like a man will feel like he is going to die. Only when this desire meets temptation and gives into it does it become sin.

>> Desire + temptation to evil + dragging away –> conception (or succumbing to the temptation) = sin –> death. Desire + temptation to evil can be resisted and not sin.

Likewise, when epithumia (or rather the verb epithumeo) is used by Jesus in Matthew 5 it is used in terms of coveting something which is not yours:

> Matthew 5:27 “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall not commit adultery.’[e] 28 But I tell you that anyone who looks at a woman lustfully (epithumeo) has already committed adultery with her in his heart.

As you can see, a man’s desire or sex drive is not a sin. Nor is a man’s sex drive or desire and temptation a sin. It is only when those two combine and a man is dragged away and succumbs to the temptation that it births sin.

Hence, “lust” or “desire” is not sin until it involved succumbing to temptation. Generally there is no distinction made between “lust” and “sin” because it is almost always used in the context of describe sin in the Scriptures, but it’s clear that this is not the case.

Third, back to the original question posed by the wife above it is important to know that both looking and thoughts themselves are not sins. Indeed, we are put in situations sometimes that we have no control over such as seeing attractive women at the beach, supermarket, or otherwise in our daily lives. Sometimes we see commercials, movies or popups on the Internet. The Scripture is quite clear that what enters through the eyes into the mind is not sin because we take take our thoughts captive to Christ.

> 2 Corinthians 10:5 We demolish arguments and every pretension that sets itself up against the knowledge of God, and we take captive every thought to make it obedient to Christ.

What this does mean is that it's probably not a good idea to do a double take. It's probably not a good idea to keep looking. It's probably not a good idea to dwell on the thoughts of what she may look like otherwise. It's probably not a good idea to let your imagination run a bit wild.

Remember what Jesus said about what makes us unclean? It's not about what goes into us, it's about what we do. Take note that even the disciples didn't get it until they got an explanation.

> Matthew 15:10 Jesus called the crowd to him and said, "Listen and understand.
> 11 What goes into someone's mouth does not defile them, but what comes out of their mouth, that is what defiles them."
>
> 12 Then the disciples came to him and asked, "Do you know that the Pharisees were offended when they heard this?" 13 He replied, "Every plant that my heavenly Father has not planted will be pulled up by the roots. 14 Leave them; they are blind guides.[d] If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into a pit."
>
> Peter said, "Explain the parable to us."
>
> 16 "Are you still so dull?" Jesus asked them. 17 "Don't you see that whatever enters the mouth goes into the stomach and then out of the body? 18 But the things that come out of a person's mouth come from the heart, and these defile them. 19 For out of the heart come evil thoughts—murder, adultery, sexual immorality, theft, false testimony, slander. 20 These are what defile a person; but eating with unwashed hands does not defile them."

This is important because although the initial subject was uncleanliness Jesus makes it quite clear that He is talking about all of the things that come out.

Hence, a Christian husband that may see an attractive woman at the beach is not sinning as something is only going in. He may not dwell on it, so it's only a temptation that he resisted. However, if his wife responds in a shaming or condemning manner she is sinning as what is coming out of her is not behavior that is honors Christ.

I imagine that this is a very difficult word for Christian women to accept, but based on what Jesus says it's absolutely true. This leads us into the last section on jealousy and responses.

Fourth, jealousy needs to be addressed. I don't doubt that a bunch of women and men struggle with this issue, but it's more an issue about yourself than it is with the other person. There's many reasons why this is not fruitful, but the main one is because you are not honoring the other person as a human being who has free will.

If they are a Christian they need your help and support to resist temptation when they desire or lust after others. They don't need condemnation or shame if they already know they are struggling with this area. I discussed the reasoning behind this in shame doesn't work part 1 and part 2.

This goes along with the concept that if you make it a big deal and something to focus on that people are more likely going to dwell on it. For example, Jesus' analogy for the Christian walk is the straight and narrow path. If you're focusing on "sin" which is basically side the straight and narrow path it is more likely you will veer off the path just like if you were driving on focusing on the curb on the side of the road you are more likely going to swerve around and potentially drive off the road. This is affirmed in Philippians 4.

> Philippians 4:8 Finally, brethren, whatever is true, whatever is honorable, whatever is right, whatever is pure, whatever is [e]lovely, whatever is of good repute, if there is any excellence and if anything worthy of praise, [f]dwell on these things. 9 The things you have learned and received and heard and seen in me, practice these things, and the God of peace will be with you.

Rather than allowing jealousy to dwell on the temptation and condemning or shaming someone else for their temptation, instead it is better to talk and focusing things back to those which are godly. If a wife or husband was fighting issues with temptation and lust it would be a good idea for the other spouse to have sex with them as that is godly and brings about unity.

However, this is not the first thought through many Christians in marriages. A wife who sees her husband see an attractive woman will not think to herself that she should have sex with him to he's not tempted anymore. Rather, she will often get jealous, make snarky comments, and condemn her husband for looking.

When a spouse is placed in a situation where they are tempted, the other spouses response should be to help alleviate their temptation. Basically, they should help funnel the desire to do evil into godly outlets for it. If a wife or husband is tempted to sin sexually then they should have sex to alleviate that temptation. If they are tempted to be dishonest or lie then they should encourage and help them to tell the truth. If they are tempted to cover things up then they should encourage and help them to disclose it to the proper authorities. This not only brings the couple together in unity but also helps them honor God with all that is in them.It is important to understand your identity in Christ. I don't have to police others thoughts and temptations as a Christian, but I do have the responsibility to encourage and help them when they are in their time of need.This post is long so I'll end here. Hope it was informative. Post any questions to the comments.

Boundaries

August 6, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post was supposed to be released late 2014 but I've delayed it a bit. Hence, it may refer to posts from 7-8+ months ago.

I was going to write a post on these 3 topics about 2 months ago, and then Rollo had 3 posts on boundaries, intimacy, and vulnerability a month or so ago that pushed me to think about them more. So I finally have the time to write about them. Obviously, Rollo is writing for a secular audience, so I disagree with him and the commenters on a various number of points which I will discuss further.

I don't know if Rollo was intentional about the release of these posts in a clustered manner, but understanding how these concepts relate together is important for any Christian, especially Christian husbands and Christian men who want to be married.

Boundaries versus Walls

The first thing I want to discuss is boundaries versus walls. They are not the same thing. If you know the difference between then you can more adequately shift your internal perspectives to cultivate relationships.

- Boundaries are cultivated out of an open heart and are meant to protect relationships. When you communicate a boundary to another person you are telling them that you place value on the relationship — you value both your time and the other person's time. You can communicate you thoughts and actions out of a place of non-judgment in the manner that states that "this is how you have a relationship with me." Essentially, like a rebuke, boundaries are meant to call someone higher.
- Walls are cultivated out of a closed heart and prevent you from forming relationships. A wall signifies that you are telling them that you place value on only yourself — you value only your time and not other person's time. In most cases how you see this enacted non-verbally and plays on people's fears.

In John 10 in the parable of the Good Shepherd, Jesus communicates exactly how a boundary is meant to act:

> John 10:1 "Truly, truly, I say to you, he who does not enter by the door into the fold of the sheep, but climbs up some other way, he is a thief and a robber. 2 But he who enters by the door is a shepherd of the sheep. 3 To him the doorkeeper opens, and the sheep hear his voice, and he calls his own sheep by name and leads them out. 4 When he puts forth all his own, he goes ahead of them, and the sheep follow him because they know his voice. 5 A stranger they simply will not follow, but will flee from him, because they do not know the voice of strangers."
> 6 This figure of speech Jesus spoke to them, but they did not understand what those things were which He had been saying to them.
>
> 7 So Jesus said to them again, "Truly, truly, I say to you, I am the door of the > sheep. 8 All who came before Me are thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not hear them. 9 I am the door; if anyone enters through Me, he will be saved, and will go in and out and find pasture. 10 The thief comes only to steal and kill and destroy; I came that they may have life, and [a]have it abundantly.

There are multiple lessons we can learn from this passage in how we act toward others in relationships.

1. Jesus is the "door" for us to interact with the Father in relationship as we are one of His sheep. We can only enter into relationship with the Father through Him. This is why Jesus is seen as a mediator throughout the NT.
2. A boundary always has a "door" or "gate" to allow people to interact with you in a healthy relationship manner.
3. Those who try to circumvent the boundary by climbing the boundary are like thiefs and robbers who are only trying to kill, steal, and destroy.
4. A boundary is clearly communicated. This is one of the most important points because it signifies that the other person is able to make a conscious free will decision in order to interact with you.

I want to look at some examples of healthy communication of boundaries and compare them against walls.

This is important because in almost all cases, boundaries must be verbally communicated otherwise they aren't boundaries. If you have boundaries that are uncommunicated, and you hold them against people then it is a wall.

This is important to realize because boundaries inevitably communicate the value that you place your time and relationships. A man that is able to communicate the value of his time and relationships will be high value regardless of his circumstances because he fully understands that stewardship of the life that God has given him is critical to his life.

Example — on a date:

The woman pulls out her phone while you are on a coffee date to text.

Boundary — Communicate to her that it's not acceptable because you place value on the time and relationship.

Wall — (1) Don't communicate and just walk out, (2) tell her that it's not acceptable without a reason, (3) get butt hurt and/or emotional over it, and (4) any other thing that doesn't communicate the boundary clearly

The vast majority of women I've found when you communicate that you're placing value on the time and relationship are more than willing to acquiesce and will inevitably gain respect and attraction for you. However, for women who are high on drama and are not willing to abide by your boundaries in an uncommitted situation like this then you should enforce. In this case, it may even mean walking out the date in the end.

The vast majority of game advocates the selfish nature of establishing value which ultimately are walls — I only value myself and not you. Whereas for Christians establishing boundaries are instead a way to call others higher in relationships.

Example — sexless marriage:

A wife doesn't want to have sex with her husband anymore because of various reasons which we need not get into.

Boundary — Communicating clearly with your wife that you want sex, but through your body language and/or actions are unwilling to beg, plead, or otherwise be ruled by it, nor make concessions, or trades for it.

Wall — the obvious example being "dread game" which advocates being non-communicative and going out without being contactable.

The reason why I am against 'dread' from the beginning is because of its fear-based roots. The Christian manosphere seems fairly split on this simply because some believe that the means justify the ends. Obviously, it's true that dread does work and often leads to a happier relationship, but its a tactic that plays on the insecurity of a wife rather than born out of a desire for her.

In both cases, a husband may decrease the amount of time that he spends around a shrewish wife, but the boundary is set that this is what the relationship needs to improve rather than having her imagine that you're going to leave her. Both desire born out of confidence and unneediness and fear of a husband leaving are strong attractors, but only one of them given my understanding of the Scriptures is right before God.

For the most part, changing is not about her and the lack of sex. It's about you. You communicate your needs. You change to become the masculine man that you want to be before God. It can involve some motivation like wanting more sex again or wanting to please God by walking in headship, but at the end of the day change starts from you. It's not about manipulating the other person into changing.

Other examples: Please, An ear or a hand, Men who get it and men who don't, etc.

I agree with Rollo that boundaries need to be demonstrated and not told, and they must come after the 'offending' action. A boundary that is stated up front is an ultimatum which comes off as needy and/or will send you on a game of seeing if the woman can push your boundary without breaking it which is frankly exhausting for most men.

The main thing with communicating a boundary after it has been established is that you must always be willing to enforce it. This requires a man to be a man on two levels: communicate the boundary, and then do what you have to do if it's broken. As a man, you must be willing to embrace conflict and weather whatever storm comes out of it.

Always remember this: great leaders are born out of their ability to manage conflict. You don't manage conflict by arguing but rather leading and facilitating even if you don't get what you want.

Note: I had wanted to cover vulnerability and intimacy, but suffice to say they're not bad. "I love you" from an attractive man is different from "I love you" from an unattractive man. One response is joyful, and one response is repulsed.

Ultimately, for Christians vulnerability for a husband manifests as a place where a wife can help meet his needs. In other words, helpmeet. A masculine husband is not afraid to tell his wife where she can help him and she will gladly do it. Vulnerability in these cases will help foster intimacy in bringing you both closer together.

Maybe I'll write another post on this later, but for now this is it as I'm working on a massive post that requires that this post be released so I can link it. I will release later today or tomorrow before vacation.

A detailed timeline and how to guide on the process of finding a wife

August 7, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is going to be a monster post. Read at your leisure. Send it to other Christian men if you think it's useful.

edit: Updated 6/2016.

What to look for in a prospective Christian wife

In general, there have already been posts such as Dalrock's post 1 and post 2 on what to look for, and my own list of many questions I use to challenge a woman to talk about her faith and preferences. There are also non-Christian lists about what to look for if you're interested in seeing many different takes, not all of which are charitable toward women so take them with a grain of salt as a Christian. Bold and determined and thumotic come to mind. These lists, while nice, are incomplete on the process. Alan Roebuck's A Father's advice to his son on becoming a man part 1, part 2, part 3, and part 4 are solid on advice to become a man. However, they don't adequately cover the search and process of finding, vetting, and ultimately leading a wife in marriage.

Overview

This post is going to be more actionable about how I do this process rather than about what specific questions and things you look for. I currently am in a relationship with a godly woman, and we're headed toward marriage. I'm going to lay out, with examples, my process and what worked well for me. I will also follow up this post with additional posts with more examples on communication with my input and her input in order to give both sides of the story on things.

One of the biggest needs of Christian men looking to find a Christian woman to marry is how to make it all happen. This is because father-son interaction and teaching them about masculinity is pretty much a dying or lost art for many men. Christian men in particular tend to wander and flounder around this life wondering why life is just happening to them. They have no clue what to do.

Much of the Church and pastors do not do a very good job of explaining how this all should happen. My current pastor has wondered aloud in church about why there are so many godly ladies waiting to be married. While I cannot sympathize given that most of the Church is feminized, I recognize that there are some Christian women who have been faithful to God's word. My brothers in Christ and I commend you. Nevertheless, if the Church wants godly masculine men to step up to the plate it needs to give men authority and power to allow them to develop into godly leaders that also want to establish and lead families.

This can only be done by teaching and discipleship with men to other men on how to be men. In particular, men have not been taught how to properly interact with women and be men around them. They have not been taught about how women prefer masculine men to nice guys. They have not been taught how to establish successful relationships.

This post aims to fill that need.

Table of Contents

There are six phases that a man should be aware of in learning how to deal with relationship with women.

1. Pre-introductory phase — before you meet and talk to her
2. Introductory phase — approximately 0-7 days
3. Transitional phase — approximately 7-21+ days
4. Intentional relationship phase — approximately 21+ days to 6-12 months
5. Engagement — approximately 3-6 months post intentional relationship phase (or depending on your denomination)
6. Marriage

These phases are not Biblical except engagement and marriage, so let's not get into arguments about them. However, they're useful to understand the process of developing a relationship in this messed-up modern cultural Christian dating. In general, boyfriend and girlfriend will "fit" into somewhere between phases 2-4. As you read through this post you will see why I structured the phases this way because there are certain things you want to do in each of these phases to facilitate relationship growth while learning about the other person's expectations and guarding your own hearts against hurt.

Let's get started.

1. Pre-introductory phase — before you meet and talk to her

First, it is important to understand your identity in Christ. If you need a refresher here is the introduction, part 1, part 2, part 3, part 4, part 5, and part 6. In particular, this will help root your identity perfectly in Christ which will abolish the negative attitudes and views about yourself leading you to the peace and joy in Christ. It will also disabuse you of the performance mindset where you feel you have to perform to win a woman's respect. There's nothing you could ever do to make a woman be attracted to you or like you more. Rather, she is attracted to who you are as a man masculine: hard working, confident, strong, direct, leader, bold, honest, dominant, assertive, unwavering, backbone, courageous, and calm under pressure.

Second, before you introduce yourself to a potential woman that you may want to marry, you should be doing hard work behind the scenes. For Christian men this includes understanding yourself thoroughly. For example, my 5 step process to maturity in relationships has some categories that I would come to firm opinions on before you even talk to women. Here's the short list:

- Know what God says about relationships
- Know your priorities: dreams and 5 year goals
- Know your standards for women

- Know your standards/boundaries in a relationship
- Know how to assertively communicate

If you don't know the answer to these, you don't know what you are looking for. If you don't know what you are looking for, then when you talk to a woman she will wonder what you're looking for beyond a pretty face or body. Women like men who know what they want. You don't have to be a perfect man to ask women out, but you should be a man who knows what he wants. This gives purpose and vision to your life, and women are attracted to that.

Third, take care of your physical body:

- Sleep well to be at the top of your mental game
- Train hard — lift heavy weights
- Eat good food for good nutrition
- Groom yourself well and find a style of clothes that work for you.
- Find hobbies that you enjoy such as sports or music

Aside from knowing yourself it is important to take care of yourself. Free Northerner's Omega's guide is one such resource. Women like muscles despite what they say about them. It makes them feel Protected and secure. Women love muscles up until it becomes bodybuilder freaky and even then some women still like that. Women are attracted to physical appearance just as men are. If there's one thing physical thing you should be do right off the bat that will drastically improve your chances with women it is lift heavy weights, gain muscle, and lose fat.

If you didn't notice, this section covered the three facets that Jesus discusses when loving God — heart, soul, and strength. Your identity in Christ is nourishment for your soul, knowing your heart and it's dreams and goals gives you direction, and training your physical body disciplines you to apply your strength well.

From what I have seen, this one of the most difficult parts for most men because of the inertia associated with this phase. Most men have been wallowing in mediocrity for 5-10 years or more depending on their age because they have had no direction in life thus far. It's very hard to break out of such a phase. Even if you aren't interested in women it is important to break out of this phase to become the man that God wants you to be. Namely, you may not need to know what God says about marriage relationships, but you definitely need to know your own dreams, goals, and how to assertively communicate as a Christian man of God.

This phase takes the longest time in my opinion. If you start from a bad place such as extremely overweight or extremely skinny and not that knowledgeable about God's Word and prayer it may take time to understand and start to grow. This does not prevent you from talking to women, but they may not be attracted to you at first. You should talk to women during these times to get a feel of how they interact with you and to develop your social skills.

Places to look

Online dating. I am not traditionally attractive (see: tall, dark, and handsome), so online dating did not work well for me. I met a few women and went out on a few dates, but generally speaking this is a poor place to look unless you are look traditionally attractive in photos and you have good paper stats (see: are tall, preferably > 6’0″). Running my own business, having a doctorate, having interesting hobbies, serving and leading in church, and playing music for worship simply cannot make up for a lack of looks online. You need interest to make it work. That’s simply how it is now. The vast majority of Christian women online are looking for some version of Mr Handsome Jesus Christ. No big deal. If you are traditionally attractive then go for it. Otherwise, save your time and effort and skip it.

Churches and hobbies. Meeting women through my hobbies or churches worked a bit better, but it depends vastly on your particular area you are in. If you are in a small church or niche activity this simply won’t work as well unless you volunteer in places where there are a lot of young Christian women. Your best bet is probably some type of middle to larger Church with a few thousand people, or attending events that Churches put on for young adults from many congregations. Your percentage will rise if you are involved with traditional communities so take this into account. Chad has seen some success with this, but he had to make it happen.

Leveraging social circles. What worked the best for me was leveraging my social networks as much as possible. My particular strategies that bore the most fruit was if I made friends with married women or women in a relationship and asked them if they knew anyone single Christian women who were along some of my selection criteria. I did ask some single men and single women. However, single men and single women can backfire because they may feel slighted. Asking family can work as well since they hopefully have friends who have children. In the end, this was the strategy that worked for me as I asked two [woman] friends who knew my current girlfriend when I talked to them about some of my selection criteria.

In the end, I think it’s really a numbers game to find someone who is a Christian who is also attracted to you as you are to them. There’s so much fluff such as the tyranny of choice — or rather the illusion of choice — that most Christian women and men are attempting to hold out for the perfect spouse. This strategy will ultimately leave many unmarried and unhappy. The reality is that if you want until you are perfect to get married or you look for the perfect spouse then you will never get married. The Father works through our imperfections, so it is important to realize that we are looking for someone to grow with rather than a finished product.

2. Introductory phase — approximately 0-7 days

Generally speaking, this is more of a get-to-know you type of phase. If you have just gotten to know a woman and you’re not a traditionally attractive man then you will have you work cut out for you. However, this is where all of preparation on knowing your identity in Christ, knowing your heart, and disciplining your body from the phase prior will come back to assist you in spades.

First contact. There's no such thing as a special line. What matters most is good body language if you're doing it in person. If it's done through electronic communication, piquing her interest by making a bold but inoffensive statement about her profile or introducing something interesting about yourself is usually the best.

Here are some of the tips on in-person presentation:

- Keep your body language relaxed. Don't fidget or move around. Hands out of pockets hanging by your side.
- Stand tall
- Keep direct eye contact but don't stare. Continue to hold eye contact until she responds. This may take upwards of 5-10 seconds for saying it, and 5-10 seconds for her to respond.
- Smile genuinely.
- Breath slowly through your nose into your stomach to stay calm.

If you look good, you feel good, and you're confident then whatever comes out of your mouth is fine. If it isn't then tell it like it is: "well, that was awkward." Trying to pretend something awkward or funny didn't happen just makes it more awkward, but stating with humor about the situation completely disarms it. If you don't make a big deal out of it then she won't either. It's only awkward if you make it awkward.

It's helpful to understand that a 'rejection' is simply not a big deal. Ultimately, you want to be with someone who also wants to be with you. Hence, if they say they don't want to be with you for whatever reason that's fine. You simply know one more person that isn't a good fit for you. What have you got to lose?

Building an initial relationship and attraction. I've discussed the mechanics of attraction before in A Christian understanding of attraction, understanding attraction, and other different articles, but suffice to say I've parsed down what elicits attraction to simply masculinity, protector and provider. Women are attracted to masculinity, protectors, and providers. Here is a list of masculine traits that is useful to keep in mind.

- Masculinity – hard working, confident, strong, direct, leader, bold, honest, dominant, assertive, unwavering, backbone, courageous, and calm under pressure.

These traits cannot be exemplified in a try-hard manner. One upping another man does not get you brownie points. Overtly trying to impress her doesn't work. Rather, it is how you go about your life that is going to attract her to you. For example, grandstanding about something you can do is going to come off arrogant which is a turn off. It's fun and mysterious if she's surprised by it coming up naturally rather than you taking the initiative to brag about it. Women understand the right mindset: you're the man but you don't need to prove your worth or show off your talent.

Anything that makes you stand out from everyone is good. Generally speaking, attraction can be broken down into relational talking (or comfort) versus differential talking (or breaking rapport). I will break these down into easier to understand concepts since it took me a while to understand them.

Relational — relational talking is basically connecting with another human being. In general, this type of talking emphasizes similarities and understanding. This should be used with both men and women to build a relationship. This is the type of communication that women use with each other all of the time. For example, when they tell a story about their lives the other woman will tell a similar story about what happen to them.

This is the foundation of conversation and good listening. You listen to them and understand what they are talking about whether a situation, feelings, or thoughts on a particular topic. Then you help them explore their feelings and thoughts more or you relate your own experiences that are similar. These help bond you two together as human beings tend to connect well with other humans that are similar to them. Typically, relational talking involves quite boring topics such as events, weather, careers, hobbies, and other droll situations. Avoid these. Also, avoid controversial topics like politics. Instead, divert conversation to common interests.

Although relational conversation does not typically build attraction, it can be used to build attraction if you use it correctly to stand out from the rest of your fellow men. For example, if you are on the topic of hobbies and you have a particularly interesting or exciting hobby such as skydiving that can serve to further interest a woman. Likewise, if you have a hobby that women like such as dancing that is good. If you have a hobby that could become a career that can also be interesting as well, although avoid talking about money.

One thing that helps bond Christians together is talking about your testimony or how God is working in your life. I have a fairly interesting testimony where God intervened in my life, and that is something that really stood out to my current girlfriend. Relationally, it is important to connect not just on a personal level but spiritually as Christians, and this is the first place you can begin doing that.

Differential — differential talking is what distinguishes you from “a friend” to “a man.” Even if she thinks you’re an attractive man she may not want a relationship with you for whatever reason, but it gets your foot in the door with most women since most women are starved for masculinity in this feminized culture and church.

It is important to build up a relational connection first before you engage in establishing yourself as a man otherwise it comes off wrong. The reason for this is because relational conversation emphasizes similarities while differential talking emphasizes differences. If you emphasize differences right off the bat you tend to look like a huge jerk that is solely looking to be confrontational. While some women are attracted to this, those are not the type of women you are looking to attract. Christian women who are feminine will typically be put off.

I talked before in the socialization of men and women about how men talk with each other.

1. The tendency of women's socialization is to agree with each other and validate each other. In other words, relational conversation.
2. The tendency of men's socialization is to be critical, challenging, ribbing, teasing, and mock insulting of each other. In other words, differential conversation.

Basically, differential conversation is aimed at showing her that you are not there to validate all of her thoughts and feelings. You are your own man capable of forming his own opinions and having a backbone to stand up for them. This generates respect for you in her eyes.

This is the importance of leading the conversations where you want them to go. If she is leading the conversation then she will usually only pick topics that relate to her and her world which means that you get sucked into talking about her. Obviously, you can tease her about things about her which will help to break that cycle, but this isn't the most efficient use of conversation time.

Instead, it is better to have a game plan going into a conversation about things that you are enthusiastic or passionate about and ask her opinion about them. Then give your opinion disagreeing with her as necessary or shift to particular nuances. Not only do you get to lead the conversation which pulls them in, but it also allows a woman to see what you are passionate about. Women like having fun and if you are excited about what you are talking about they will get excited as well.

For instance, I am fairly well educated in training and nutrition, and it's something I'm passionate about. It's only natural that these topics come up especially since I started solely asking women out who train and eat well. I may tease her for not knowing about something or a particular food she likes if I don't like that food. About 7 years prior I always wondered why I attracted vegetarians and vegans, but now I know it was I stood my ground on loving meat and teased them relentlessly about how they should be eating real food and not rabbit food.

The way I tend to "view" things is that what I do and how I think is always the right way. Then I can tease everyone else — particularly women — about their silly, weird, imperfect, flawed, boring, laughable, and amusing way of doing things.

Compliments. When meeting someone new you shouldn't give them a generic compliment like "you are beautiful." Most women hear stuff like this all the time. In fact, you shouldn't even talk about their looks at all.

If you decide to give a compliment, a good compliment will tend to focus on qualities that that you notice about her, especially qualities that many people don't notice or will likely never tell her about. For example, if she cooked for the church group and her cooking was good you should compliment her about it, but also make an educated assumption about how she became good.

It is also important when giving a compliment to bring in an "I" statement about what you specifically think about it. For example, they should start with "I" and not "you" because asserting that "I" want something is masculine whereas "you" is solely descriptive and doesn't tell a woman anything about what you enjoyed or liked about them. The key is to be direct about your desires.

- Wow [name], your cooking is amazing. I appreciate you taking the time to cook for us. You must have put in a lot of hard work to perfect this recipe.

This is somewhat of a generic compliment, but it serves the points. It also gives her a spring board topic to talk about something that she is [hopefully] passionate about it. Maybe it's family recipe. Maybe it's her recipe that she just threw together. Maybe it's a store recipe and you can laugh about it. There's lots of interesting things that can come from fun assumptions.

Personally, I don't give out compliments in the beginning. It's not worth it most of the time because you don't know a woman that well so a compliment isn't truly genuine, and she will get them all the time. It doesn't make you stand out, and if you don't stand out to her and act like other people you get grouped in with all of those "other guys" which will kill your chances. In general, compliments are only appreciated after a woman already likes you.

Asking her out on a date. If you have built up a solid amount of rapport and intrigued her with your manhood then you should display your interest. With my current girlfriend I did it at about the 7 day mark. However, this can be done generally at any time within the 0-7 day mark. Generally speaking, friends first relationships don't work well.

If we're in a social setting sometimes I wait to see how she acts with other people to get a read on her personality first. I'm looking to see how she treats other people, especially those that do nothing for her. Likewise, I'm looking for her attitude toward God and people in general and her heart to serve. This gives me some insight on if we're compatible even before I talk to her or ask her out. Many women have disqualified themselves prior to me even talking to them because they don't treat others well even though they are a "Christian."

When asking out I like variations that go like this.

- Hey [name], I have enjoyed our conversations on [topic]. I am interested in getting to know you better. Let's go out on a date.
- Hey [name], you seem like an cool person because [trait or topic]. I am interested in getting to know you better. Let's go out on a date.

I like these lines because they have a couple of components to them:

1. First, say their name to make it personal. This is a touch that some people don't do, so it makes it have a personal touch starting out.
2. Second, briefly describe something that intrigued you or that you enjoyed (not her beauty). This emphasizes the connection between you two.
3. Third, express your interest using an "I" statement to be bold and direct about your intentions. After expressing the connection you differentiate yourself by asking her out.

4. Finally, make a statement about where you want the relationship to head. I am firmly opposed to making it a question such as “will you go out on a date?” because it creates a bigger pressure by emphasizing “her” (in you form). A statement that she responds to about to the both of you is less pressure on her.

As you can see, the final part on asking her out follows allowing the same lines of relational and differential talking combined into short statements that express your intentions. It’s an easy way to remember how to talk to women as a man because the asking out summarizes the steps: make it personal, emphasize the relationship, state your interest, and tell her where you want the relationship to go.

Remember the tips on presentation:

- Keep your body language relaxed. Don’t fidget or move around. Hands out of pockets hanging by your side.
- Stand tall
- Keep direct eye contact but don’t stare. Continue to hold eye contact until she responds. This may take upwards of 5-10 seconds for saying it, and 5-10 seconds for her to respond.
- Smile genuinely.
- Breath slowly through your nose into your stomach to stay calm.

3. Transitional phase — approximately 7-21+ days

The transitional phase generally encompasses a few dates where you get to know each other better to see if you actually want to be a relationship with this woman and if she wants to be in a relationship with you.

Dates. Regarding dates you should do what you want. Obviously, there are things that you should generally avoid doing such as going to the movies, going to dinner, and things of this nature. The reason for this is because they are typical and not very helpful for her finding out about what you are like and what she is like. The movies being a bad idea is obvious as you pretty much don’t talk the whole movie so you’re not getting to know the person well. I don’t like food and drinks either because it’s sit down. There’s nothing that wrong about sit down, but it tends to favor men who are extremely adept at the art of conversation which the vast majority of men reading this are not including myself. Hence, if you have trouble having topics come to your mind quickly and easily or can stumble over your words or get flustered when conversing with someone who you are interested in for 30+ minutes then it’s not a good idea to place yourself in a situation that is generally a net negative for you.

I am personally an activities man, and I find that fits my dates a lot better. This allows you to lead and/or teach the activity if you have some expertise at it which shows your leadership. Also, it allows you to move around from place to place and talk about different things while getting to know each other which is less pressure than sit down. These are some of the places that I've used on dates as well as some other interesting ideas:

- Doing a Bible study. Duh, you're a Christian and going to be the head of your household in marriage.
- Dancing. If you can dance and lead it this is a must. Women love dancing.
- Bowling
- Mini golf or frisbee golf
- Rock climbing (indoors usually)
- [Insert your sport or hobby here]
- Board game night. Can go well with double dates.
- Going to the zoo or aquarium if available (more city based)
- Going fruit picking or other outdoor activities (more country based)
- Taking a walk in the park or at a nature center. Nature is awesome to discuss
- Hiking (generally, women won't go alone so this may be better for when you know each other a bit better)
- A night in such as her cooking dinner (again, women won't usually do this as a first date but later dates it's good). Plus, you get to experience her cooking if you like it or not. If you can cook and want to cook then you can impress her instead.

Do something you want to do because you can control the variables that go into it. Don't ask her what she wants to do as she wants you to lead the interaction so she can enjoy it. You plan out all of the logistics including time, place, what you want her to wear, and everything like that. Women like being taken care of and don't like the pressure of date decisions. You may not like doing the work involved with this, but if you plan to marry a woman you'll have to be as organized in marriage anyway.

Topics of discussion. Generally, over this phase I mix in both electronic communication with the dates as I stated in some previous posts. Specifically, in those first few weeks I lead a discussion on Scripture and theology, the sociological interaction of the Church and culture, and the Church and feminism. This allows you to evaluate if you are spiritual match with the particular woman that you are with. Do not be afraid to teach or explain things if you disagree with her. Most women do not understand the true nature of authority especially before the fall in the Bible, so it is important to go through these discussions and find out what she believes.

This may be difficult if she is/was entrenched in feminist beliefs. In these cases, it may be necessary to terminate the relationship if she is entrenched with feminist beliefs in regard to the right understanding of relationship roles and responsibilities of the husband and wife in the Scriptures.

This is where the list of questions compiled about vetting prospective spouses should be used. Posts such as Dalrock's post 1 and post 2 on what to look for, and my own list of many questions I use to challenge a woman to talk about her faith and preferences. Additionally, if you find yourself with a seemingly good prospect you can use the NY times 36 questions to fall in love. This list of questions asks personal things, so be ready to expound. If a woman is interested in you she generally should be more than willing to discuss these topics with you because she wants to know more about you.

Vision and vetting. This is also the time where you should discuss — without too much detail as to leave some intrigue — your vision for your life and your family in terms of God, goals, career, and things of that nature. You also want to find out about her passions and goals and see if you are compatible with each other. This is the big importance of knowing what you are looking for as well which I elaborated on in what I look for in evaluating a potential wife. The short summary is that I evaluate if she is a good fit for me based on my essentials:

- Evidence of a relationship with God
- Evidence of godly earthly relationships in reference to God
- Evidence of cultivated godly femininity
- Evidence of chastity in attitude and deed
- Evidence of attraction/chemistry
- Evidence of a willingness for family prioritization

With my current woman I used questions from Dalrock's post 1 and post 2 on what to look for, my own list of many questions, and the 36 questions to fall in love explicitly to get to know her better. She later told me that I was unlike an man she'd ever met simply because I was proactive about discussing spiritual topics as well as getting to know her better. Again, this is part of masculinity being assertive, confident, and intentional about getting to know a woman better.

Discussion on sex. The latter part of this phase around the 14-21 mark I bring up the discussion on libido to start an introduction of discussing marriage, sex, and desire with her. I discussed this in Discussing sex and virginity with a potential spouse is important.

> In general, as man who is going to be leading the relationship and how it progresses I typically do not go straight for the heart of the issue. When discussing matters about sex I usually start with what Scripture says about sex and have the discussion there. My usual "go to" question to start bringing it up is if she has a high or low libido then turn it specifically to 1 Corinthians 7 where it talks about the ONLY reason that Christians should marry in the New Testament:
>
> 1 Corinthians 7:9 But if they cannot control themselves, they should marry, for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.
>
> 1 Corinthians 7 is probably the easiest passage to discuss because it has a lot on not just sex but reasons why and why not Christians should get married. Obviously, some of the others you can talk about are Genesis 1-3 and Song of Songs.

I won't go any more in depth in regard to the topic of sex until the relationship progresses further. However, it is important for me to know a woman's views on sex prior to establishing a more intentional relationship with her. I'm not going to ask 2-3 months down the line and find out that we have incompatible views. This can also go into the next phase if you are uncomfortable bringing it up within 2-3 weeks.

Overall, these few weeks you should get a general idea if you want to take this relationship to the next level. This leads me into…

4. Intentional relationship phase — approximately 21+ days to 6-12 months

For the most part I hate labels such as girlfriend and boyfriend since they aren't Biblical. This led me to having a conversation with my woman about dating and labels which I blogged about later.

Specifically, I am willing to accept the label of boyfriend if she is aware of and takes responsibility for "protecting her own heart." I will likewise "protect my own heart" as well. Relationships prior to engagement dissolve fairly frequently in this day and age. We may find out more about each other in the next "stage" of relationship that we cannot deal with or incompatibilities in spiritual matters, personality, or how we want to do things in marriage. Hence, the relationship may end, and someone may be hurt if they don't protect themselves.

I find that this discussion is fairly well received if you have led the relationship up to this point. She will be interested and attracted to getting to know you better since you are basically one-of-a-kind among Christian men. After having that discussion with her I asked to be my girlfriend and that was that.

Discussion topics. In this phase of the relationship you should continue leading the relationship in more defined manner. In particular, specific topics regarding marriage and relationships should be explored more in depth. This is where you can start using some of the more personal relationship questions from Dalrock's post 1 and post 2 on what to look for, and my own list of many questions.

Since this is a relationship that is headed toward marriage it will be important to discuss boundaries and expectations of each other. One of my expectations of my current girlfriend is that she always tries to look good for me. If she is getting fat I will let her know to lose weight as kindly as possible (speak the Truth in Love). This is where you masculine traits will really start to shine. Because these are uncomfortable topics it's very easy to willingly brush topics under the rug. Do not do that. If you have an issue with something your woman is doing then bring it up with her albeit in a kind manner.

Over this period you should begin to discuss more intimate topics regarding children, how to raise your children, divorce, cultural and political issues, and things of that nature. Specifically, an important factor to discuss is family upbringing. We don't realize how much family plays a role in shaping our views about the opposite sex spouse. Hence, how you were raise and how she was raised and how they affect your expectations on what you want in a spouse is very important.

This is also the time I start discussing sex more in depth and inquire into a woman's sexual past. Since sex is a large part of marriage, I will not marry a woman who will not discuss her past sexual history and how she views sex in regard to God and marriage. It's simply too important in our sexualized culture to ignore this important facet of marriage.

Likewise, I would discuss April's How can you know if you're ready to be a godly wife with your girlfriend. This is a very good way to know more about your girlfriend in the context of whether she is ready for marriage or if there are things to work on. If the relationship is still going strong, you want to discuss important topics such as finances, careers and jobs, how the family will look like with a stay at home mom or otherwise, how to raise the children, and other things like this.

Assertive communication. It is important to know how to assertively communicate without being passive, passive-aggressive, or over aggressive. The reason for this is to acknowledge the free will of the other person and let them make their own decisions. They are free to respond any way that they want to, and you need to be ready for the possibility of bad responses.

For example, if I know something is bothering my girlfriend I bring it up and ask her to tell me about it. At first she didn't because it was an uncomfortable topic for her. However, she eventually did. How I responded would determine if she was more willing to bring such topics up the next time. Thus, my response on discussing topics that bother her are typically to thank her first for bringing up the issue because I want to communicate effectively with her. Then we talk about the issue.

I try to never argue. Good leaders never argue. Rather, they facilitate the discussion to bring forth the concerns of those under them so they feel understood and heard. Then you are able to assess and evaluate the issue if it needs to be fixed. Sometimes in relating to women we need to understand that it's not about the nail. They just want you to hold them and tell them it's going to be OK: to be their emotional rock to weather out their storm.

Assertive communication generally always brings to the forefront your own concerns without accusing the other person of anything. This is very difficult to do at first, but as you become stronger and more confident in who you are you can state your boundaries or concerns just as letting them know what happened.

For instance, when I was discussing a topic with my girlfriend one time my mother popped into the conversation by agreeing with her, and they made a show of it.Later I brought it up to her that the way it was expressed was disrespectful to me, that I expected her support me and not publicly disrespect me in front of others. My girlfriend at the time had no idea that she had done anything wrong in that case, and I don't blame her as she has never had to understand that particular situation before. However, if I had let things slide without correcting her then it typically it eventually gets worse. In our culture it's easy to make fun of or disrespect men and not even know you're doing it.

These types of situations are where your mettle is really tested. You must be proactive in addressing them. Each opportunity and uncomfortable situation is a way to help you both learn and grow together. If you do not take advantage of these situations and act on them you will eventually devolve into a dysfunctional relationship.

Church, family and friends. This is the prime time to get to know family and friends. I don’t have much more to say about this because it’s obvious how important this is in the relationship.

In regard to family or friends not like you as I’ve had this experience it is important to realize that if you are an attractive man your woman will be spending a lot of time with you. People in general fear what they do not know. Thus, they may not like you from hearing things from the grape vine or they don’t like that you are taking valuable time away from their own relationships with your woman. It is important in these cases to not get upset or offended over this. Transcend your circumstances. If you are a masculine man then it simply requires time being around them and for them to get to know you and know what you stand for. Even the most stalwart family members will be won over if you continually offer them an olive branch to continue to get to know you better and care about their interests.

Bible studies and prayer are not required by the Scriptures. However, they are good for the relationship. Personally, I like Bible studies together, but I’m not particular keen on prayer together. However, I will pray with her sometimes. It’s “Christian culture” that says you have to have Bible studies and pray with your wife. However, it’s not in the Scriptures. You should resist feeling bad if you don’t do things as long as you are both spiritually healthy. You and your girlfriend should have your own separate walk with Jesus by reading the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, and fasting. The fact that you do it together is a bonus, but it does not replace your spiritual walk. This is the same as Church not being a substitute for your spiritual walk. If you let Church become your spiritual walk then you become a Sunday-only Christian.

This are the main things to look out for, but it is simply cultivating the relationship that you started in the prior phases and building on it. When you have decided to marry her you should talk to your friends and hopefully mentors if you have one about these things so you can get some godly opinions on if they see any blind spots. Then you can ask her father for permission to marry her.

5. Engagement — approximately 3-6 months post intentional relationship phase (or depending on your denomination)

Engagement rings. Go with a ruby not a diamond. It’s Biblical.

When you enter into engagement you should have a plan. This plan means that after you get engaged and have a part or whatever you want to do, you should immediately set a date and start planning for the wedding.

The reason behind this is that you do not want to be stuck in engagement limbo where there is a high degree of intimacy where you want to marry each other but there’s no goal at the end. This can often lead you to put yourselves into compromising positions.

Additionally, you should have some say in the wedding so it doesn’t become a bridezilla affair. Personally, I don’t really care what my wedding looks like, but I will set some budgetary limitations on it. There’s not a good financial reason to spend basically a car or house payment on one single day. However, that said there is a big reason to celebrate! The Father and Jesus love weddings: Jesus’ first miracle act was a wedding (Cana), and the first thing that happened after God created Eve from Adam was a wedding (Genesis 3).

Re-discussing important topics. While you should have discussed dreams and goals in the prior phase, now would be a good time to go over them especially with a pending marriage. In my opinion, finances, career and jobs, whether your wife should stay home with the kids, and all other important topics like these should have already been discussed. However, sometimes life changes so you may need to make some adjustments with more prayer and agreement on what needs to be done in the situation. Although I value coming to agreement, I have the final decision as the man in the relationship as I am tasked with the authority to head the relationship from God.

The vast majority of the legwork on these things should have been done in the intentional phase as you were getting to know each other to decide if you wanted to get married. Now would just be the time to reaffirm what you know, and confirm the details of the plans that you have made for the marriage.

Family and friends. Family and friends may give advice and suggestions, but you should not allow them to interfere with your decisions and your relationship. This will help set the tone for you two become one and independent as one.

It is often the case that family and friends are very happy for you and they want the best for you. However, what ends up happening sometimes is that because they want the best for you, they think that what they think is the best for you is the best for you instead of you deciding what is the best for you. In other words, they think they know what is good for you when only you can make that determination for yourself. If your family and friends are reasonable you can simply tell them thank you for the suggestions and you'll take it under advisement as you can make good decisions yourselves. If they don't then you may need to be more blunt about it.

6. Marriage

This is not the end but solely a step on the way.

The man who you are before marriage is the man who you should continue to be after marriage. Namely, the godly masculine man should stay the godly masculine man. This also applies to your wife, and to the children you raise.

Ultimately, the goal is to be blessed with a family and to raise them up in God and to become one in your marriage. Becoming one and having a family requires a lot of work. You can't coast or become complacent. Growth requires that you are challenged or uncomfortable and you take steps to overcome it.

It is easy for both the husband and the wife to forget this. Husbands become complacent, get fat and slovenly, sit around, and fail to lead. Likewise, wives too become complacent, get fat and slovenly, sit around, and may nag or try to control their husbands. It is easy to fall and give into sin nature rather than growth the relationship. Do not let this happen to you.

If you have slacked off the best time to start unslacking was years ago, but the second best time is today. Get off your butt and get back into your relationship with God in the Scriptures, prayer, meditation, and fasting. Discipline yourself to working out, eat right, excelling in your career, leading by example in the home, being Don Juan with your wife, and being an excellent father.

Conclusions

I certainly have not hit on all of the factors that go into a successful relationship; however, I have covered the vast majority of them through this write up. I didn't add much Scripture into this particular posts; however, most of the posts I linked to have the Scriptures in them if you want to review whether what I talk about is Biblical.

1. Pre-introductory phase — before you meet and talk to her
2. Introductory phase — approximately 0-7 days
3. Transitional phase — approximately 7-21+ days
4. Intentional relationship phase — approximately 21+ days to 6-12 months
5. Engagement — approximately 3-6 months post intentional relationship phase (or depending on your denomination)
6. Marriage

All of these are the different phases for which I do certain things during certain times in order to facilitate a successful godly relationship. In particular, even if you decide not use these phases in your relationships, you should understand the general concepts behind why I discuss certain things at certain times and the whole picture in regard to placing the building blocks successfully on top of each other. Be blessed in using this to cultivate godly relationships. If you are uncomfortable with anything check the Scriptures and pray about it in order to understand why you should or shouldn't.

For reference: I am approximately 5-6 months into my current relationship, and I have experienced phases 1-4 multiple times while I worked on this model. My current woman knows most of my plans for 5-6.

As always, comments and critique are welcome. If I missed any particular things to add which I am sure I did then let me know.

Send it to other Christian men if you think it's useful.

Engagement rings

August 7, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since I'm on the topic of finding a godly wife, I'm going to comment on this topic as well.

If you are going to get married... then go with a ruby engagement ring.

> Proverbs 31 — Description of a Worthy Woman
>
> 10 [b]A wife of noble character who can find?
> She is worth far more than rubies.
> 11 Her husband has full confidence in her > and lacks nothing of value.
> 12 She brings him good, not harm,
> all the days of her life.

Benefits:

- It's grounded to Scriptures.
- Her friends will ask about it, and she can tell them it's from the Scriptures.
- This can be an effective witnessing tool to non-Christian women who ask about why she has a ruby engagement ring.
- You come out looking like a godly man. Which you are and continue to strive to be.
- Keeps both of your eyes on God and His Scriptures every time you look at it.
- It affirms your wife's character and reminds her of it.
- It affirms your wife's duty to bring you good and not harm all the days of your life.
- It affirms that you will have full confidence in her as a godly woman.
- Diamonds are a scam. See: 1930s marketing campaign that basically went viral into a massive business inflating prices.

This is the gemstone I will use.

Yet again why women cannot teach men to be men

August 17, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I always find articles like this pretty interesting: the danger is demonizing male sexuality.

However, I open it up and I see that it is written by a woman, and my hopes are let down. Women can accurate see a problem sometimes. But it is often the case that they cannot find the particular solution, especially when it involves educating men.

I'm not sure if this is part of the system or a bug in the system given the context surrounding 1 Timothy 2 and subsequent verses prohibiting women from teaching men. Anyway, that's a topic for the comments perhaps.

On to the article.

> This starts young. I live in Seattle, which is, by any standard, a very progressive city. Many of us do a mommy / daughter sex-ed class at Seattle Children's Hospital as our daughters get close to starting menstruation. In the session of the class that is less about biology and more about navigating sexuality, the presenter offered the idea that girls would have to start learning how to say "no" to boys who were going to want to touch them sexually.
>
> I looked at my daughter, who sort of rolled her eyes at me. And the woman went on, listing the many ways that girls could rebuff boys. I looked at my daughter again, and she said, "go ahead mom." And I did. I raised my hand and said, "Can we also talk about how to teach girls to say 'yes' to sexuality. Can we teach them that sex is about pleasure for all parties involved, and that learning how to identify and say 'yes' to things that give them pleasure is how they learn to draw their boundaries and say 'no' to things that don't."
>
> She replied that surely I could understand that protecting girls from boys was more important. I told her that I surely did not see it that way.
>
> But it starts that young. Yes, girls are told that boys are predatory and somehow out of control. The corollary there is that boys are told they are predators, and out of control. Therefore, not a desirable thing, but a thing to defend against. From the get-go, we are teaching our kids to fear male sexuality, and to repress female sexuality.
>
> As they age, and their media exposure extends beyond the protective (and crappy) bubble of children's programming, we see example after example of men having to pull huge gestures to lure women into sex, or catch them, or trick them. Just off the top of my head: In Superbad when one of the guys talks about getting girls drunk enough that they can be "that mistake;" in Spiderman when he shoots a web to catch the girl who said "no" half a dozen times, pulling her in for an epic kiss that leaves them both breathless; in Anchorman when the guy uses a cologne made with "bits of real panther" that "60% of the time works every time" to get the girl. I could go on and on, but that point is that popular > culture sets up this idea that men are sexual predators who need to resort to trickery and cologne to fulfill their one and only mission, which is sticking their penis in a girl.

>
> It's sad. It's insulting. And it's damaging.

Although you could say the article does hint of the leftism "blank slate-ism," it is true that prevailing attitudes and teaching affect both women and men as they grow up. Naturally, this education should be contextualized with how God created us to be, and the teaching on the truth of God and how we are to abide in Him and desire to live holy lives.

Nevertheless, we see that this is a secular article aimed at promoting promiscuity in women at an early age. Yet, she does make the distinction that the male sex drive is demonized. This is the truth as I have talked about before with my FYI on male sexuality.

What the author doesn't recognized is that said programming ingrained in males is done so explicitly to cater to women:

- Women want an attractive man — or superhero or vampire — to take interest in them and pursue them.
- However, women don't want to give in too easily to this man. That wouldn't be fun.
- Instead, they want to revel in the idea that this man has eyes for only her, and that he loves her so much that he would continually jump through hoops in order to win her affection.

Unfortunately, what women don't see is that this sabotages the attractiveness of the man that they want while they are caught up in playing these covert power games. Any man that agrees to play games to win a woman's affection has already lost the game. Any woman that entices a man to place such games is only sabotaging herself as she is tempting her man to play them in the first place.

The ultimate sinful female fantasy is wanting to exert some measure of control over her man. However, the ultimate gift she can give him is to put her trust in him and follow his lead.

This article doesn't show it, but many of the Christian blogs make the same mistake. I make it sometimes, and I even caught myself typing it in this specific article. There is a vast difference between these two statements:

- However, the ultimate gift she can give him is to put her trust in him and let him lead.
- However, the ultimate gift she can give him is to put her trust in him and follow his lead.

One statement attempts to continue to exert some measure of control by "letting him lead" rather than "following his lead." This is why precise wording is needed when discussing what respect and submission are. Many of the associated blogs fall into this trap.

> This way of looking at male sexuality conflates sexuality with predation. It means that he who possesses sexuality is assumed a predator.
>
> That is obviously damaging to the vast majority of men who simply are not. They want and like sex just as much as the rest of us. However, it's downright dangerous when you extrapolate that out to situations like the horror of Stubenville. It is this line of thinking that allows people to say, "boys will be boys." As if this kind of predation is just natural for guys, when in fact it is not normal for guys to be predators. Most men are not predators.
>
> Steubenville, and the way-too-many incidents like it, are not examples of natural male sexuality. There are examples of a violent rape culture than perpetuates the idea that predation is the natural manifestation of sex.
>
> So with this in our mind's eye, no, it is not possible for us to believe that heterosexual cis men can write about sex without being douchebags. And that breaks my heart. It breaks my heart as someone who loves men, in a whole lot of ways.
>
> You do not need to trick us into sex, in fact, you shouldn't. And you don't need a cologne with bits of real panther to attract us. In fact, lay off the stuff, seriously. A little dab'll do ya. – See more at: http://goodmenproject.com/featured-content/the-danger-in-demonizing-male-sexuality/#sthash.GFdyj7qf.dpuf

She eventually does make some accurate conclusions. This is one of them.

However, the truth isn't too far from this. We know that male desire is confident and assertive while female desire is receptive. Although predation is an extreme of the initiation of desire, there is no explanation for what a "right" male desire actually looks like.

In any "awareness and fix" article there needs to be precise definitions of what is "wrong" and what is the "correct" way to do things. Unfortunately, like most articles this one falls flat on it's face because it only identifies the negatives. There is nothing to replace the void left by removing something toxic. Jesus had a story for this:

> Matthew 12:43 "Now when the unclean spirit goes out of a man, it passes through waterless places seeking rest, and does not find it. 44 Then it says, 'I will return to my house from which I came'; and when it comes, it finds it unoccupied, swept, and put in order. 45 Then it goes and takes along with it seven other spirits more wicked than itself, and they go in and live there; and the last state of that man becomes worse than the first. That is the way it will also be with this evil generation."

This is precisely why Christians who focus on the "removal of sin" from their lives fail. Although removal of sin is a worthy goal, it needs to be coupled with a godly replacement. If there is nothing to replace the void left by the sin, the sin will almost invariably come back worse than in the first place.

On to the last part of the article:

> So, how can we all work together to change our collective impression of male sexuality as something that is dangerous and disgusting? Besides the obvious—understanding male privilege, dismantling of patriarchal mythology and ending rape culture? Those issues are far too big for me to take on here, but without accomplishing those three, nothing changes. So while we work toward those goals, here are some steps to take along that path:
>
> 1. Be an ally. Help us stop the violence against women. I am assuming that none of you would do what happened in Stubenville, but would you have helped stop it? Have you been vocal about how wrong it was? About how that should not represent you or your sexuality? From a societal perspective, we need your help. From a personal perspective, when we feel safe, we let our guards down, and that's the first step to an intimate connection.
>
> 2. Ask women what they want, and listen to what they tell you. We are all different; we all want different things from the men in our life. Rather than getting lost in a frustrated guessing game, ask us. Listen to our answers. Tell us what you want, with words, and listen to our responses. Whether it's sex or any other relationship, the best way to not be seen as predatory is to not act like a predator. And that means communication, not acquisition. Which, by the way, is also called consent. "Yes" is the safest word of all.
>
> 3. Let us in, don't lure us in. Lay off the cologne, the pick-up lines, and the games. Please. Trust that you do not need to trick people into wanting you. Trust that you are worthy, just as you are. And that you deserve someone who wants you for who you actually are, how you actually are.
>
> 4. Don't take it personally. Your self worth is in no way connected to whether or not some girl (or guy) wants you. I am constantly telling people to "Consider Cilantro." (Seriously, I need that on a t-shirt.) Some people love cilantro. Some people think that cilantro tastes like tinfoil soaked in dish soap. That in no way reflects on the worthiness of cilantro. And cilantro never takes it personally. If you can, don't even think of it as rejection, you are just cilantro sometimes. After all, you're not attracted to every person you meet, why would every person you meet be attracted to you?
>
> 5. And lastly,know that your body is beautiful. I, like most females, was warned that penises and balls and anuses were gross. I was told to hold my nose, close my eyes, get it over with. Imagine my disappointment when I saw my first penis and there were no festering boils hissing my name, no sulfurous clouds wafting up from a menacing member. I thought it was kind of cute. As I learned more about them, I grew to love them, in and out. Hell, there are times when I was sure I heard angels giving hummers on high when I've see one. Most of us straight chicks really like your bodies. You don't need to trick us into liking them.

> That is what makes us straight, after all.

This is quite the painful list.

Ironically, the title of this article is about not demonizing male sexuality. Instead of looking for ways that women should not demonize male sexuality, it's all about what men can do so they are not demonized by women.

To be honest, it's quite the incredible reframe: "Wow, this is a huge problem affecting men that society and culture perpetuates. Instead of helping dispel this myth to other women, let's tell men how they can attempt to dispel this myth themselves. Because, you know, we can't be bothered to help them do that."

Or rather: "I wrote this article to raise awareness of an issue afflicting men that we should change… but men should do all the work to fix it because I want no part of investing myself to do that."

Sound familiar?

If anyone has been following the Dalrock/Insanity saga this is precisely the case that manifests itself time and time again. Christian women claim they want to help Christian men. Said Christian women criticize (or rather nag) the men by telling them what's right and what they should do to fix it. Women claim they empathize or sympathize with men, but only offer hateful comments to them telling them how they're wrong. Said women cherry pick Scriptures — which don't even support their case when examined closer — to show men where they are wrong. Quite the ineffective strategy.

If said Christian women were serious about helping Christian men they would do what the Scriptures say: honor and respect men unconditionally and affirm them where they are bearing good fruit.

- Surprise: affirmation of good fruit makes men want to bear more good fruit. Affirmation of a man's leadership will make him want to lead better.
- Surprise surprise: men don't respond well to nagging criticism, and the Bible explicitly tells women to avoid this.
- How do Christian wives win their husbands who don't know the word: 1 peter 3. Without words and a quite and gentle spirit.

A woman's intentions may be good, but if she doesn't follow the Scriptures or understand the nature of men she will just beat herself trying to show God's love and get exasperated further.

Now, onto the critique of the advice given:

1. Be an ally… despite the fact that violence and rape against women are at all time lows.
2. Ask women what they want, and listen to what they tell you… despite the fact that the vast majority of women don't know what they want. My girlfriend didn't even understand how important masculinity was to our relationship until about 3-4 months in. Now she understands that every relationship needs it just as a fish needs water.

3. Let us in don’t lure is so close yet so far. Men need to understand how they need to be attraction to be attractive to women, but they cannot do anything to prove it which is true. In other words, be attraction but don’t be unattractive. Got it.
4. Don’t take it personally is the best advice. The only one I agree with. The example is poor though.
5. Lastly, body acceptance. No. This is something you have tons of control over: sleep well, eat well, and lift weights. Although you should be comfortable with yourself, the human condition is that working to become more attractive physically and strong will also make you more confident.

It ix the incredible pride and hubris of women to think that they can continually recommend good advice to teach men to be men.

My general rule of thumb for most men learning to be a man is just not to listen to women because you can’t pick out the few lackluster gems from the vast swath of stinky turds. It’s best to not even bother at first, and when you are finally able to it just doesn’t matter anymore because you already know it.

Covert Contracts, Overt Contracts, and Women

August 18, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I haven't discussed this much before, but it's one of the big things discussed in No More Mr Nice guy. The concept of it has caught on a lot in various parts of the sphere, and I want to analyze it a bit more.

Essentially, a covert contract is something that a person — not necessarily a man or woman — makes in their head. It's entirely based in a works mentality and often goes something like this:

- If I do X for that person, then that person will do Y for me.

The reason why it's covert is because you're not doing any negotiation. You're thinking in your head that if you do X for that person, they will do Y for you. However, you do not tell them about that you want them to do Y for you in response to X. Indeed, it's a contract that only exists inside your head.

You typically see this play out in romantic scenarios. "Nice guys" will typically do all of these special things for women with the expectation that she will be attracted and like him more after he does those things. When the covert contract is not fulfilled — for example, he bought her flowers and then finds out she is not interested in him romantically — he responds negatively with usually childish anger and venting that she was supposed to like him.

The friend zone is always a manifestation of a covert contract

I've talked about escaping the friend zone before; however, I haven't discussed in depth why the friend zone occurs. If you've followed any part of social media for the past couple years, you'll know that there has been a huge backlash against "nice guys" and for good reason. However, the backlash against "nice guys" usually involves women supporting the friend zone and denigrating nice guys. There is an interesting post about a day ago that inspired me to write about this:

> For men, friendship with other men is a brotherhood with no value on it other than trust and loyalty. For women it is something that is given as a commodity to the peons she collects. Now, were's that quote I was talking about? The group, Third Wave Feminism via Feminist United on facebook recently shared this and somehow through mutual tagging it ended up to one of my feed. It's as follows(I won't waste your bandwidth with the picture) "Stop thinking that what people so loathingly refer to as the "friendzone" is some sort of purgatory women put "nice guys" into. My friendship is not a crappy consolation prize that you're left with if I deny you a sexual relatoinship- and my body is not your reward for good behavior" Further, more this image I Found after doing research only highlighted part of the quote for whatever reason. Here's the full quote in context
>
> "But most of all, stop thinking that what people so loathingly refer to as the > “friendzone” is some sort of purgatory women put “nice guys” into. My friendship is not a crappy consolation prize that you’re left with if I deny you a sexual relationship– and my body is not your reward for good behavior. Thinking that simply being a “good guy,” whatever that may mean, entitles you to unlimited sex with the girl of your choice shows that you don’t truly believe women should be in control of, and have full ownership of, our own bodies; instead, it shows you think we should use them like doggy treats whenever you do the human equivalent of a jumping trick. If you treat us as humans, that’s fantastic, but we do not owe you for it.

>
> One of the worst outcomes of the “but I’m a good guy” phenomenon is that it overshadows the many, many men who don’t think this way and instead realize that if we don’t want to go out with them, that’s our choice and we most likely have a good reason for it, even if we don’t feel like sharing what that reason is. The word “friendzone” has crept into the vocabularies of even the most respectful, enlightened men, and I think it’s time we push back. Why not call it something more poetic and accurate, like “unrequited love” or “unreturned affection?”
> ~Taylor Callobre, The “Good Guy” Myth.
>
> What does that sound like? Rejection.
>
> So when a guy is told he’s a friend, if he accepts he’s basically selling himself into slavery. It’s right there, written between the lines. You get nothing from her, yet she get’s to use you for every whim and emotion her heart desires. She’ll bait you, leave gaps, and twist your personality to fit one of the many accurate defentions of slavery. Can men and women be friends? I’m not smart enough to answer that question. Sometimes, slaves were raped by there masters. Given accommodations and even had kids and families out of the wedlock. You know what that sounds like? Marriage.(it’s even called a contract for a reason. Civil Marriage that doesn’t respect the man is slavery) Another thing to generally stay away from.

Both the author of the post and Taylor Callobre in the Good Guy myth miss the real problem. When you look at it in context, the woman’s response is perfectly reasonable. There should be no expectation of X, Y, and Z exchanges based on people doing something good or nice for another person. However, the problem isn’t that women don’t have control of their own boundaries rather that the man has formed improper boundaries that he is typically unaware that he is imposing on others.

This is precisely why nice guys defend themselves: they aren’t consciously attempting to impose a measure of control on a woman, but they are interested in getting her to like them. They just go about it in the wrong way.

This is the covert contract that many immature men run. They think that if they trade emotional support, helping out a woman with things, complimenting her, sending her flowers, or any other “trade of good deeds” will get her to like him more.

This is the road to destruction. If you act this way with a woman it will surely work if you try enough. Most of the women who are feminine will be turned off though. In the end you will only attract a woman who likes the power and control of men doing things at her whim because she likes nice things. In other words, by using this approach you end up with a woman who likes to manipulate men and who is materialistic. This is not exactly something that most men are aiming for; nevertheless, when you examine their behavior of attempting to trade affection or works for a relationship this is what you end up with. Sucks to be that man who ends up with that.

Overt Contracts

The overt form of this that manifests is negotiating desire which Rollo is fond of saying. Just as you can't covert contract your way to get a woman to like you the same is true for overt contract your way to get a woman to like you.

For example, if you want more sex with your wife you cannot make a woman desire more sex with you by negotiating or bargaining with her. She may end up giving you more sex, but she generally won't be enthusiastic about it so you have defeated your own point right off the bat. Overt contracts are a form of obligation and obligation generally destroys desire.

Obligation should not destroy the desire dynamic, but it does because humans are often prone to give into their fallible human desires. This is why women want men to "just get it" as if someone tells you about an issue that you should be aware of and take heed to they FEEL that they are influencing your behavior. If people feel they need to influence your behavior by saying something, they also feel that you aren't doing it solely out of free will.

Free will coupled with desire and enthusiasm is extremely attractive to most people, not just in a romantic way.

- Romans 5:8 While we were yet sinners Christ died for us.
- John 13:34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another."
- A man who's wife wants to enthusiastically have sex with him without him telling her to.
- A volunteer who enthusiastically chooses to go help the poor and homeless with their time and money.

Paul describes the particular attributes that make this appealing in 1 Timothy 1:

> 1 Timothy 1:5 But the goal of our [a]instruction is love from a pure heart and a good conscience and a sincere faith.

True desire — love as an action — is given purely from the heart, from a good conscience, and a sincere faith. This is why a wife who enthusiastically wants to have sex with her husband is so enthralling to men. This is why the poor woman who gave her last coins to the temple which Jesus commented on is immortalized in the Scriptures for her charity because she gave out of the little she had. This is the love which God uses to tug on the hearts of those around you. This is what makes Christians different from the world. But many Christians still fall prey to the works based mentality instead of the desire.

Overt contracts are good for business deals, but they are not good for relationships.

Changing mentalities

Now, in the past post I criticized the fact that removing bad behaviors is good but it is not enough. You have to consciously replace bad behavior with good behavior.

First, it is important to realize where the works and performance end and desire begins. This is where the secular manosphere fails. Although they understand that performance does not negotiate desire, they are still stuck in a works based mentality of losing it all. You need to keep being attractive enough otherwise your women will lose you.

Obviously, this is a gross characterization, but at the core of the philosophy is the fact that you can lose it all if you don't perform or something bad happens to you. I'm not naive enough to ignore the fact that most people operate from this mentality and people are fickle. However, getting embroiled with this mindset will lead to inevitable failure somewhere down the road.

The fact that if I get married that my wife may leave me at any time does not phase me at all. Although I will vet a woman 100% of the way to ensure that she is respects and submits to God and myself, it's not out of the realm of possibility that divorce is in my future. Maybe God uses that divorce to help me win tens or hundreds of men to Christ. Bad potential circumstances should not phase you. Transcend your circumstances, and do not not worry about bad circumstances that do not exist. I wrote the next couple of paragraphs as an e-mail to a reader, but they're worth mentioning here:

It sure is frustrating to see [bad circumstances all around you, and it seems like it should make you cynical and bitter]. But at the end of the day all you really have control over is yourself. You're the only one you can reliably influence 100% of the time. Sure, you can influence others, especially through God's love and power, but even that influence is limited to the amount that their heart is open to. Therefore, God's hope needs to be in you to love and to honor and to change your environment.

It's a hard road when everyone is going in the opposite direction, but Jesus promised that life would be hard and that we would be persecuted for what we believe. We as Christians like to think we're insulated from that but that is a lie.

If you know things are going to be difficult you will go in with the mindset of a warrior: putting on the armor of God and being able to resist the enemy and do what is right in the midst of difficult circumstances. But if you go in thinking that life gets easier you are in for a rude awakening and your faith will be shaken like so many.

Changing mentalities with women

For those of you that are single looking for a wife your mindset needs to go under a radical shift.

In general, I would say do not go out of your way to listen to or talk about your emotions with women nor help them out with personal matters. Discussing your emotions with women especially if you are interested in her is something that women do with other women. By doing this early on you are telling her that you're her friend and not a romantic prospect. Hence, often times said women get angry when they find out later you are really interested in them.

This is one of the classic covert contracts that I discussed earlier. Men think that supporting a woman emotionally and helping her out much like a provider would will make her like him more. In reality the opposite occurs: your actions tell her that you are her friend. When it is revealed that you like her she feels used that you were trying to gain her attraction and affection through underhanded tactics. Although that may not have been your intention it comes off that way. Likewise, such men feel hurt because they actually thought it would work that you could buy her affection.

This mentality needs to go. We could talk outcome independence, confidence, boldness, and assertiveness, and all of the other traits of masculinity that attract women, but that is somewhat peripheral to the mindset that needs to be disabused.

The true mindset that you need to take when interacting with a woman that you are interested in is: will she be a godly and effective wife? Therefore, it is your job to find this out. See, timeline and how to find a wife for more details.

The very act of assuming that this is the main question to be asked puts you in the right mentality for confidence, boldness, assertiveness, and other masculine traits. You are going to be able to ask her questions to challenge her viewpoints. You are going to start leading the relationship inadvertently with your presence because you know what you are looking for. The key is always the mentality and not the traits. The traits come with the mentality.

Beliefs form mentality, mentality forms attitude, attitude forms character, character forms habits, and habits manifest in traits, and traits manifest as actions.

Therefore, disabusing the incorrect beliefs you have about performance and works in accordance with covert contracts and overt contracts with women is the first step toward becoming more masculine. Likewise, it is important to be in right standing with God.

The sexes have dramatically different mate preferences

August 19, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Genders Differ Dramatically in Evolved Mate Preferences (h/t TRP)

> AUSTIN, Texas — Men's and women's ideas of the perfect mate differ significantly due to evolutionary pressures, according to a cross-cultural study on multiple mate preferences by psychologists at The University of Texas at Austin.
>
> The study of 4,764 men and 5,389 women in 33 countries and 37 cultures showed that sex differences in mate preferences are much larger than previously appreciated and stable across cultures.
>
> "Many want to believe that women and men are identical in their underlying psychology, but the genders differ strikingly in their evolved mate preferences in some domains," said co-author of the study and psychology professor David Buss. "The same holds true in highly sexually egalitarian cultures such as Sweden and Norway as in less egalitarian cultures such as Iran."

Surprise surprise. The sexes were created/evolved differently.

> Researchers found that they could predict a person's sex with 92.2 percent accuracy if they knew his or her mate preferences.

Pretty good.

> Of the 19 mate preferences that researchers considered, five varied significantly based on gender: good financial prospects, physical attractiveness, chastity, ambition and age. Four other preferences — pleasing disposition, sociability and shared religious and political views — were not sex-differentiated.

Let me guess.

- Men's preferences — physical attractiveness, chastity, age
- Women's preferences — good financial prospects and ambition
- Combined — pleasing disposition, sociability, shared religious and political views.

Men like young and hot virgin women, and women like ambitious, rich men. I'm just amused how this is demonized as politically incorrect information. Aside from examining the supposed ideological motivations of each sex: what do men typically go after and what do women typically go after? The answer is obvious.

Male and female sexual desire is not sinful

August 19, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was going to write on this a bit later, but Ballista started this thought so let me take it to it's full conclusion. Ballista has been examining the improper conflation of emotion and lust as sinful in terms of Joshua Harris' I Kissed Dating Goodbye.

I'm not going to go into that in detail, but the comment he makes after the post is extremely important:

> To clarify something, which I'll edit into the main post if it gets republished in any form:
>
> While the linkage between lusting and coveting is obvious in Scripture (Exodus 20:17; Romans 7:7), the concept of sexual possession gets lost in Harris' text when bounced against emotional intimacy.
>
> The linkage of lusting to coveting (Romans 7:7) involves possession.
>
> Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's. (Exodus 20:17)
>
> Coveting is desiring and wishing for something that belongs to someone else. Harris using David as an example of lusting is correct. What he did wrong was coveting a woman who was someone else's wife (i.e. not his), not looking at her and being attracted to her. (the consequence of poorly stated doctrine with the goal of furthering this "emotional purity" falsity) This is the confusion created by Harris and other advocates of this doctrine, as was quoted in that original paragraph. They do not recognize that a single person belongs to nobody. Had Uriah not existed to Bathsheba, David could have rode right in and claimed her without sin. The fact that she was Uriah's wife is what made David qualify as "lusting" her, not that he desired her.
>
> In other words, you can desire a unmarried member of the attached sex just fine without sinning against the Lord. The only thing you need to do to be pure in His sight becomes avoiding fornication or physical intimacy as Harris puts it.

The important connection to make is the lusting is typically used in the Scriptures as coveting something that is not yours. In other words, adultery is lusting and coveting after a wife that is not yours.

The lusts of the flesh such as the 7 deadly sins aside from lust are pride, envy, sloth, wrath, greed, and gluttony are all based through a desire that overwhelms what is reasonable. Pride in the self covers over the the rightful position of God in your life. Wrath takes judgment into your own hands and out of God's. Envy, like covetousness, is desiring something that is not yours. Greed is the overwhelming desire for material possessions at the expense of others and relationships.

To truly understand the nature of the what Jesus actually says we need to reference the Greek.

> Matthew 5:27 “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall not commit adultery (moicheuo)’; 28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman (gune) with lust (epithumeo) for her has already committed adultery (moicheuo) with her in his heart. 29 If your right eye makes you [w]stumble, tear it out and throw it from you; for it is better for you [x]to lose one of the parts of your body, [y]than for your whole body to be thrown into [z]hell. 30 If your right hand makes you [aa]stumble, cut it off and throw it from you; for it is better for you [ab]to lose one of the parts of your body, [ac]than for your whole body to go into [ad]hell.
>
> G3431 — μοιχεύω — moicheuō — moy-khyoo’-o
> From G3432; to commit adultery: – commit adultery. Total KJV occurrences: 14
>
> G1135 — γυνή — gunē — goo-nay’
> Probably from the base of G1096; a woman; specifically a wife: – wife, woman. Total KJV occurrences: 221
>
> G1937 — ἐπιθυμέω — epithumeō — ep-ee-thoo-meh’-o
> From G1909 and G2372; to set the heart upon, that is, long for (rightfully or otherwise): – covet, desire, would fain, lust (after). Total KJV occurrences: 16

If you are familiar with Koine Greek, you should also be familiar with the fact that the Greek word “gune” is the ubiquitous term that is used for woman AND wife in the Scriptures. When Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, and 1 Peter 3 all discuss about the roles and responsibilities for the “wife” it uses “gune” there as well.

If we note what Jesus says, it would be more accurate to say that the KJV and other translators got the translation wrong. It is more accurate to say:

> Matthew 5:27 “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall not commit adultery (moicheuo)’; 28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a WIFE (gune) with lust (epithumeo) for her has already committed adultery (moicheuo) with her in his heart.

How can someone commit adultery unless they are lusting after a “wife” and not a “woman.” This is an extremely important distinction because this mistranslation is often used to demonize male sexuality in terms of men who want to be married.

We can be assured of this because of the next following passage about divorce in the Sermon on the Mount:

> Matthew 5:31 “It was said, ‘Whoever sends his wife away (apoluō hautou gune), let him give her a certificate of divorce’ (apostasion); 32 but I say to you that everyone who [ae]divorces (apoluō) his wife, except for the reason of unchastity/fornication (porneia), makes her commit adultery (moichaō); and whoever marries a divorces (apoluō) woman commits adultery

> (moichaō).
>
> G4202 — πορνεία — porneia — por-ni’-ah
> From G4203; harlotry (including adultery and incest); figuratively idolatry: – fornication.
> Total KJV occurrences: 26

I already looked at divorce and the misconceptions about divorce in depth.

As I noted before in that article, sex and other sexual misconduct before marriage — fornication — is referred to the Scriptures by Porneia/Pornueo. Therefore, if Jesus was discussing sexual sin in regard to lusting after women he would have referred to it as “porneia” not “moicheuo.” The very fact that Jesus is referring to “moicheuo” means that he is referring to married women when he uses the word “gune.” In other words, if you covet a WIFE that is not yours you are committing adultery with in your heart.

> Things Jesus did not say: Matthew 5:28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a woman with lust for her has already committed fornication (pornueo) with her in his heart.
>
> Things Jesus did say: Matthew 5:28 but I say to you that everyone who looks at a “gune” (likely WIFE) with lust for her has already committed adultery (moichueo) with her in his heart.

Looking at the Greek wording is extremely important here. If it was talking about “women” then it would have used fornication. However, the text is clearly about “adultery” and thus the word gune is probably mistranslated in context as “woman” when it should be “wife.”

Not withstanding, the translators also translate apoluo as “divorce” when it solely means to “put away.” The background behind that is that Jesus is discussing common wisdom: “You have heard it said” which is the wisdom of the day of the other cultures specifically the Greeks and Romans. When He discusses it more in depth with the Pharisees in Matthew 19, Mark 10, and Luke 16 He specifically uses the same Greek wording as in Matthew 5. The culture at the time was such that the Romans and Greeks could “divorce” their women by “sending/putting them away” whereas Mosaic law in Deuteronomy 24 declared that husbands need to give them a bill of divorcement before “sending/putting her away.” Hence, the Pharisees wanted to entrap Jesus between Roman and Jewish law just like their questions about ‘paying taxes to Caesar’ and what to do with the ‘woman caught in adultery.’

Thus, Jesus hearkens specifically to say that you cannot put away a woman (implied: without a writing of divorcement) except if she committed fornication [prior to the marriage] otherwise she commits adultery if she remarries. This is supported by Deuteronomy 22 where the cloth from the marriage bed is presented as proof of a woman’s virginity. We know the importance of blood covenants in the Scripture; if there is no blood there is no covenant. After all, the New Testament is founded on the Power of Jesus’ blood for the remission of sins.

Hence, Jesus' logical conclusion that you can "put away" a "wife" without a bill of divorcement if she fornicated prior to marriage. If she has lost her hymen because of prior fornication, there is no contract formed because there is no shedding of blood when the husband first has sex with his [presumably virgin] bride. Hence, "putting away" IS NOT A "divorce" as there was no marriage in the first place.

Thus, the mistranslation of apoluo as divorce. Indeed, this seals off the "adultery" loophole clause get-out-of-marriage if your spouse cheats. Even if your spouse commits adultery you should not divorce them. Thus, what Paul declares about separation in 1 Corinthians 7 applies to all marriages. Divorcing is sinful period. If you are separated from your wife you should reconcile not remarry.

Specifically, what does the Scriptures say to those who are unmarried who lust after [single] women?

> 1 Corinthians 7:8 But I say to the unmarried and to widows that it is good for them if they remain even as I. 9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.

This is the logical conclusion: Those who lust/burn after single women are not in sin. However, because they have this lust/burning within them then it is better to marry rather than to burn.

These two specific mistranslations from Greek to English in Jesus' Sermon on the Mount are extremely important to understand because they have given rise to some of the strongest legalistic heresies in the Church today. Here is the logical dispelling of them:

- Sexual desire is good. Sexual desire only turns to illicit temptation when it covets something that is not yours such as someone else's wife (Matt 5). In fact, if you have strong passion for the opposite sex then it is a strong reason on you should marry to avoid sexual sin (1 Cor 7).
- Divorce is always wrong and sinful. There is no adultery clause to get out of marriage free given the correct understanding of Scripture (Deut 22, 24, Matt 5, 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, Rom 7, 1 Cor 7).
- If a woman fornicated prior to marriage and you didn't know (or she lied) you can "put her away" and it's not divorce per Jesus since it is not a covenant marriage. Although the Father's "what God has put together let man not separate" trumps this if you can deal with it.

These correct understandings seal all of the "loopholes" cleanly and show God's Scriptures to be good, consistent, and logically sound.

The law of reciprocal

August 20, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Previously in Dominion Part 2 and the sexual and marriage marketplace, I discussed the reciprocal nature of relationships and what the opposite sex is attracted to. Here is one such example:

> If you're the "stereotypical" man who plays video games and lives in his mother's basement with a beer belly and reads the Bible once a week, do you think that the supermodel lookalike Christian woman who is fit and reads the Scriptures daily, prays continually, and serves in the church is going to be interested in you as a spouse? Certainly not.
>
> It's important to understand what attracts the other sex and what is desirable to the other sex so as to cultivate all of the qualities that the spouse of your dreams may be looking for.

However, it is important to note that the reciprocal nature of relationships plays out far beyond external characteristics additionally to internal characteristics down to the fiber of our being. I am going to explore this concepts to see why most of the secular manosphere has only a warped view of the nature of masculinity and of women.

Attitude and intentions matter

In Covert Contracts, Overt Contracts, and Women I explored the nature of a man who wants a relationship who creates tons of covert contracts with women. Specifically,

> This is the covert contract that many immature men run. They think that if they trade emotional support, helping out a woman with things, complimenting her, sending her flowers, or any other "trade of good deeds" will get her to like him more.
>
> This is the road to destruction. If you act this way with a woman it will surely work if you try enough. Most of the women who are feminine will be turned off though. In the end you will only attract a woman who likes the power and control of men doing things at her whim because she likes nice things. In other words, by using this approach you end up with a woman who likes to manipulate men and who is materialistic. This is not exactly something that most men are aiming for; nevertheless, when you examine their behavior of attempting to trade affection or works for a relationship this is what you end up with. Sucks to be that man who ends up with that.

This is the law of the reciprocal. This man simply by virtue of his actions (not even his intentions!) aims to attempt to get a girl to like him with flowers, gifts, and other such giving will receive his just reward: a woman who is manipulative and materialistic.

I didn't explore the flipside of this. If a husband does this with his wife she will be highly turned off and become unhappy and want to divorce him. Yet, this advice with helping out with chores, giving a wife gifts, and otherwise trying to win her affection is the primary advice given to Christian men whose wives are unhappy.

See the disconnect? The only women who will be happy with that sort of thing are women who are manipulative and want to be in control. Yet, Christian “marriage advice” panders directly toward that sort of thing.

Likewise, men who act like nice guys and otherwise feminine pair up with their just reward: women who are ball busting feminists. In other words, if you’re a man and act feminine you will attract your just reward: a masculinized woman.

If you play the female role in the relationship then you will attract the masculine role that is played by a woman. If you don’t step in to take the mantle of headship or leadership then the woman will. Those women that are burdened the mantle of the headship won’t be attracted to you and thus will become unhappy and leave. The only ones that will stay with you are the women who like the mantle of headship. Thus, your long term relationship reward is a masculinized woman who will treat you like a little child and not respect you.

Secular reciprocity

Now, let’s apply our knowledge of the law of reciprocal to the nature of the secular manosphere including TRP. What we have specifically in this population is two things:

- Attitude and intentions: Men who want to have lots of sex with women.
- Directed population: Women who are interested in casual sex. In other words, jaded and cynical promiscuous masculinized women.

Now, the attitude and intentions direct such men to become more masculine. After all, they have to become more masculine than the already masculinized women. This is quite difficult and why they feel they need to break the top 20% and even top 1-5% to have sex with the type of women they want. Eventually, you get to a point where you have an attractive physical appearance, are stylish, are ambitious, have a life, and are successful and rich. This attracts women.

These men are looking for “plates” which is a “soft harem”: many women to have sex with at the same time. Now, let’s go step by step through the process.

1. Said man asks a women out on a date. He makes it clear that he’s looking for sex. Women are attracted, but some women turn it down while some women move to the next stage.
2. Said man goes on date(s) with women. He pressures women to have sex with him on the first few dates. Some women don’t like this so they turn it down, but other women are down for some casual sex over commitment.
3. Said man and women are now having lots of casual sex. Said woman pushes for commitment because she is really attracted to him and wants a relationship. The man says no he is not looking for it at this time. Some women leave, some women will stay and still try to extract commitment, and some women will be resigned and take what they can get.

4. Eventually said man may start to fall a bit for the woman. Since she has trying to extract commitment so long she finally gets what she is looking for. However, she is surprised to find out that it turns her off. So she starts looking for another man and eventually leaves him or cheats.

Now, the secular manosphere and TRP are quick to cry AWALT which is true in this case. Women do want the best deal they can get. However, AWALT is applied much too broadly.

What they fail to register through all of these steps is that they've systematically selected out many, if not all of, the women who are commitment minded. What they're left with are the women who cheat to get a better man, who branch swing to another man at the first sign of trouble, and who are promiscuous so they never turn down another attractive man for sex when presented to them.

In fact, the most commitment minded women are the women who bail in stages #1 and #2 where casual sex is put on the table and they want no part of it. The woman has decided she is specifically looking for a marriage and family, and instinctively knows or overtly knows that having casual sex decreases her chances of having that happen.

Manipulation attracts manipulators and those who like being manipulated

If you are the type of man that treats women like dirt and "negs" them into oblivion guess what you'll attract?

The answer should be quite clear now. You will attract the type of women who are manipulators who want to get the better of you in the arms race for control. Or alternatively you will attract the type of women who like being manipulated and being treated like dirt.

Women who are regularly physically domestically abused when removed from that situation almost always find another man who is also a physical abuser. Why is that? Psychologists are quick to label it a Stockholm syndrome and classify it as a disorder of which these particular women need help. That's not too far from the truth, but it ignores the nature of how women came to be this way in the first place.

Generally, in the childhood of women that end like this they have traumatic events. It could be they were abused as a child. It could be that they were sexually abused. It could be that they went through any variety of emotional or physical abuse. You just can't tell sometimes until someone tells you their story.

However, what is almost 100% of the cases is that instead of seeing such "abuse" as wrong and sometimes people do evil things toward other people, they see such "abuse" as something the deserve. They deserved that abuse through some fault, perceived or not, as their own. Thus, they see such a physically abusive relationship as something they deserve, and more often then not will find another physically abusive man and enter a relationship with him.

This is the law of reciprocals. Manipulators attract manipulators. Abusers attract abusers.

The sad part about this cycle of destruction is that these cycles are degenerative and lead toward more destructive behavior. This is the nature of behavioral cycles.

For example, a woman manipulates a man to get what she wants. She eventually continues to select men who want to be manipulated by her. Eventually, she may eventually come across a man who doesn't take kindly toward being manipulated. He will stand up to her, and she will be strongly attracted to him. However, these relationships always come to a head sooner or later: does she desire the control that she had as a manipulator more than her willingness to be with a man who won't be manipulated?

Since humans are creatures of comfort, such a woman may not be able to let go of her manipulative behavior. She will choose to leave him even though she is attracted to him because she wants the false security of manipulation rather than a positive relationship. Both women and men will choose the comfort of evil and destructive behavior over a positive relationship.

Where have all the good men gone? Where have all the good women gone?

These questions have become the butt of jokes within the manosphere and associated cultures.

The answer, of course, to the "where have all the good men gone?" is that all of the "good men" are where you left them: rejected as beta orbiters who aren't attractive. However, what most don't see is that the "good women" (or rather, commitment minded women who want a marriage and family) are left by the wayside in the pursuit of casual sex.

In other words, going along with the previous reciprocals we understand also that:

- Promiscuity attracts promiscuity
- Chastity attracts chastity

We also understand that it is not so much the condition you are such as virgin so much as the attitude and mindset. If a woman or man believes that she is "missing out" in participating with hookup culture then such a woman has a promiscuous attitude and even if she is a virgin it will destroy her attitude towards those who are chaste. If she is a Christian she will eventually become a nominal and lukewarm Christian because the character traits she values are worldly rather than godly.

This is the strong importance of understanding that the character traits and values that you hold as a Christian will play a role in attracting the godly or ungodly spouse. If you seem to be only attracting a certain type of woman then you need to look inwardly at the behavior your are displaying. Your behavior self selects the type of women that you attract.

Where this leaves us as Christian men (and women)

I've written extensively about my approach in articles such as my 5 step process to maturity in relationships, and my detailed timeline and how-to guide to finding a wife. My specific goal is to cultivate the inward values of the man I want to be, and subsequently attract a wife that is looking for that type of man.

We know that the masculine attracts the feminine. If you use your masculinity to manipulate and abuse then you will attract a feminine women that likes to manipulate and abuse. Thus, the man I want to be needs to be built in specific characteristics aiming to eschew any kind of evil and striving toward good.

- I am a man who strives to love and hate evil
- I am a man who strives to be strong yet also kind
- I am a man who strives to be dominant yet not provoke irrational fear (hence, my issues with certain aspects of dread). I am fine with rational fear.
- I am a man who will be the leader and head of my marriage and I look specifically for a woman who will follow me in that.
- I am a man who will own my mistakes.
- I am a man who calls out the mistakes of women and expects and calls them higher. If she doesn't respond positively then we will have issues.
- I am a man who if a woman abuses my trust or lies to me I will drop her straight up no matter how good our relationship "was."
- I set boundaries in relationships and enforce them.
- I expect that we have a mutual trust.

This is why it is extremely important to define the type of man that you want to be in this life and in the context of your faith. The way you define and strive towards the man you want to be is also the type of woman that you will attract. I've have had very little trouble finding some of the few Christian women who are chaste virgins because the man who I strive to be self selects out the Christian women who are lukewarm about Christianity and who have promiscuous attitudes.

In other words, I won't associate in even a remotely romantic manner with Christians who are not serious about their faith. Surprise surprise: Christians that tend to be serious about their faith end up being chaste virgins or low N-count repentant Christians.

My current girl was actually a bit flabbergasted by how many expectations and boundaries I set in the relationship. However, after she understood that it was to specifically make sure the relationship grows with both of us and God she wouldn't have it any other way. She has told me that men with no expectations or boundaries are a turn off. These are men who take what they can get with women because they are so thirsty. They wouldn't be good leaders or heads because they would be unable to form good boundaries and enforce them. She would have to mother them rather than follow their lead. No woman wants to mother their man as this leads to nagging and contempt.

Conclusion

This article highlights the extreme importance of knowing who you are in Christ and knowing the man that you should become in Christ. This is why I keep highlighting my approach in articles such as my 5 step process to maturity in relationships, and my detailed timeline and how-to guide to finding a wife.

These approaches are not structured the way they are because it's an easy step-by-step process you can take even though I try to provide as many relevant details on step-to-step processes. I don't operate by giving men a fish. I operate by teaching them how to fish to feed them for a lifetime.

In other words, these articles are to help you first find out your identity in Christ and what that means in order to walk the road of a masculine godly man. This is the first step which sets you up beautifully on the right path to seek AND find the right type of woman for marriage.

Sexuality and the transition from single to married

August 23, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In general, what is spoken about most in Christianity today is that promiscuity before marriage is sinful. However, as Ballista's series has been explaining, there is much legalism that has pervaded the "courtship" phenomena including purity culture.

As it bears repeating in the comments of the above thread, we know this for a fact:

- Before marriage: Promiscuity is sinful (1 Cor 6, 1 Cor 7, 1Thess 4, Eph 5, Heb 13, etc.)
- After marriage: Frigidity is sinful (1 Cor 7, Exodus 21)

Both sins wreak destructive effects in their various spheres. However, promiscuity has more overly damaging effects.

In Biblical Jewish culture sex was a woman's right because of pleasure and of the ability to bear children. You can tell the general heart state of a woman in if she wants or doesn't want children. Probably also why Paul also states women are saved in childbearing in 1 Tim 2.

Now, very little in general has been written about how to make a successful transition from singleness to marriage in terms of sex. Most people assume that since people have a sex drive and they want to get married that it automatically occurs. However, given the amount of frigid marriages and lack of basic knowledge about sex drives (including the male sex drive), there is a lot of dysfunction where there should not be. A large part of this is due to lack of knowledge and the timidity of the Church and parents to discuss sexuality with their children.

We know the male and female sex drives are not sinful. I've written about discussing sexuality and virginity with a potential spouse prior to marriage and also ways of bringing it up in the detailed timeline and how-to guide to finding a wife. However, this is not all there is.

Thus, my question to my readers is:

> How can the Church, family, friends, and the two potential spouses interact in communication and beyond in order to ensure a successful transition from chastity in singleness to a healthy expectation sex life in marriage?

This is an important question that the Church has shied away from too long. Hence, we should engage it.

There is no failure

August 24, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There are no moments of failure in our lives. There are only successes and life lessons to grow in maturity in Christ.

> Ephesians 5:15 Therefore [j]be careful how you walk, not as unwise men but as wise, 16 [k]making the most of your time, because the days are evil. 17 So then do not be foolish, but understand what the will of the Lord is.

Whenever I reflect on my past I see moments of so-called failure, yet they have not been failures as they teach me valuable lessons about who God is or the stubbornness of my own heart.

Do I choose to go it alone and try to figure things out, or do I see what God's purpose is for me in the difficult times and the trials? That is the question I want to ask myself every moment of everyday, so I won't be unfruitful in what I do.

> Philippeans 3:12 Not that I have already obtained it or have already become perfect, but I press on [h]so that I may lay hold of that [i]for which also I was laid hold of by Christ Jesus. 13 Brethren, I do not regard myself as having laid hold of it yet; but one thing I do: forgetting what lies behind and reaching forward to what lies ahead, 14 I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus.
>
> 15 Let us therefore, as many as are [j]perfect, have this attitude; and if in anything you have a different attitude, God will reveal that also to you; 16 however, let us keep [k]living by that same standard to which we have attained. 17 Brethren, join in following my example, and observe those who walk according to the pattern you have in us.

The lessons I carry with me, yet not the failures, as the failures are forgotten and laid to rest. As many sins and failures that are forgotten by the great mercy of the Father, we are called higher and higher we will go.

> Hebrews 6:1 Therefore leaving the [a]elementary teaching about the [b]Christ, let us press on to [c]maturity, not laying again a foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith toward God, 2 of instruction about washings and laying on of hands, and the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. 3 And this we will do, if God permits.

I have gotten the sense that the foundation has been laid for this blog, and it is in the transition toward greater maturity in Christ. Let's walk that road together.

No excuses

August 25, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things I've had the pleasure to do recently is meet up with a bunch of the guys from my church for dinner or lunch one and one. I take these generally as unofficial mentoring type of relationships where I can pour what I know into their lives, and in the case of my own mentor who is married for him to offer advice or critique in my own life. However, it's very easy to get into the frame of mind of trying to line all the ducks in the row to make things more convenient for me.

This is one of the bigger callings on my life to minister to men, and here I am sometimes making excuses because I may have to go out of my way will inconvenience me to meet up with that. Relationships are worth more than an inconvenience. Hearts are worth going out of the way for. There are no excuses to go out and meet people where they are that can ever be justified.

I also realize that while doing things you don't like to do for God is good, I still need to pray for the peace and joy of God in all circumstances in order to truly understand the calling.

While this is simply a part of walking out my calling, this also relates to going out to meeting women, building relationships in general with the brethren, and anything else that requires time and effort to be poured into it.

No excuses. Discipline and intentionality in all things. You reap what you sow.

Communication in relationships Part 1

August 25, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Communication in relationships

So, I've talked about communication in relationships. Specifically, as a man I strive to lead any progressing relationship directly and assertively so a woman knows what she is getting into. If she knows what she is getting into then I can always draw the relationship back to the principles that I told her in the beginning.

Likewise, if she is not willing to follow or chooses down the road that she doesn't like the terms she is free to leave, and I would encourage a mutual break up if that was the case. You don't want to coerce someone to staying in a relationship against their will, unless they expressly opted into a covenant marriage.

This is why it is important to establish these principles before marriage, so as the law of reciprocity goes you can eliminate the women that you are not compatible with. In particular, you are specifically eliminating the women to whom YOUR leadership/headship is not compatible with. A woman that does not want to submit and respect your leadership may respect and submit to the leadership of another man. Hence, there is no hard feelings if a particular woman is not compatible with me. I don't try to force things to make them work if they're not working before marriage. After marriage would be a different story however.

I asked my girl to write some of the ways that I communicated with her up so I can give the background and analyze what exactly happened. It helps to have a woman's perspective in understanding how your communication comes across.

Let's get started.

Ground rules

Near the beginning of any relationship, I tend to set down ground rules. One of them is absolutely no lying. Even small lies will undermine the trust in relationships. Hence, if someone lies I cannot tell if they lied about just that one thing… The whole relationship could be built on lies. Hence, if you lie to me we're done. Doesn't matter if we're perfect for each other. Doesn't matter if we are engaged. Truth is more important than feelings.

> When I first started dating DS, he told me to be honest with him no matter what. Trust is something that means a lot to him. Of course everyone would agree on that but I did not fully understand. I simply saw it to mean always tell the truth and don't lie to your mate. Even though I consider myself an honest person, I only saw honesty as saying the truth when he asked me a question. That is a part of honesty but that is not an entirely complete view on what being honest is. Honesty has many parts and I must say that being in this relationship has helped me immensely with being fully honest and how to communication effectively while being in a relationship.

Even if you lay down ground rules in a relationship, it's likely that your girl may not totally understand them until situations occur. Hence, ground rules are meant as boundaries to facilitate good relationship interaction and communication, but there will almost inevitably be misunderstandings. You must be willing to eventually correct these misunderstandings.

Setting the stage for good communication

The background of the next section comes off the heels of me saying that I would take a woman out on a date as that was the type of personality I liked. Somewhat of slip up from me being untactful, but also not a huge deal. Not unexpected a woman would get upset from that though.

> I remember the first time I got upset with DS, I kept it to myself and didn't let him know later that I was upset and to make it worse I told him via text. I didn't think it was petty, I thought it was normal. I didn't tell him when it happened because I didn't know how to deal with it and I didn't know what to say. When I did tell him though he was very patient with me and apologized, but he also informed to let him know ASAP when something like that happens again and to have conversations like that face to face.
>
> For one I was extremely shocked by his response. He wasn't angry, he didn't try to put any blame on me and he admitted where he was wrong. On top of that, he made an effort to make things better for the future and made it clear what he wanted and expected for the future. How could I be mad at that? He was very polite, humble and simply asked for better communication in the future. That was the beginning of true communication in our relationship. I'm not going to say that after that conversation I was perfect at communicating because that it not the case. It took a lot of trust and vulnerability to open up to him because I rarely had to do something like that before. I have only been in one other relationship and it ended quickly because of lack of communication. I was young and too inexperienced to express myself that I ended up ending the relationship without closure.

One of the things that I mention before is to always thank someone for bringing something to your attention even if it is bad news or they are upset with you. This encourages open communication to the point where they aren't afraid of bringing it up to you. In most cases, it's normal to react to bad news, but even if it is bad news about you then you have to be willing to lay that aside in favor keeping the lines of communication safely open. If your woman is scared to bring things up to you for fear of you getting angry and lashing out at her, then she is more likely to keep things to herself and let things fester until they are huge problems. The trick with any relationship is to keep encouraging this communication in order to not allow small things to build up to big issues later.

Now, even if you admit your fault there are some things you need to stand up for. In this case, bringing up the issue to me by text is unacceptable. Given a relationship heads toward marriage if you can only communicate by text in marriage that's not a good thing. You need to be able to apply conflict resolution face to facet.

This is one of the things that a man can help extensively. No woman is perfect straight out of the life box, so you need to learn to, encourage, and facilitate good communication as most women will be too inexperienced in these matters even if their parents were exception. Perhaps the one caveat being that they are a family counselor but sometimes they have trouble taking their own advice.

Being patient emphasizing good communication

> Even though that situation was the start of our communication, many other situations popped up. Something would happen that DS did that made me upset, but I handled them all differently. One time I was upset but I thought my emotions and my acting distant would give him the biggest hint, but it didn't. I ended up letting him know much sooner but still over text. He once again was patient and told me to tell him. He mentioned that if I couldn't tell him things face to face and needed to resort to texting when I was upset we would have problems communicating as a couple. I knew it was petty of me to again text him when I was upset, especially after talking with him face to face, but I didn't know how to handle it or what to say.

Sometimes things take multiple times to get the point across. As long as a woman is open to learning I will accept this. If it becomes a habit and there is no improvement then that may be a yellow flag that can turn into a red one. The boundaries here are to protect the relationship not hinder it. If someone cannot adhere to the boundaries after consistently addressing them in a assertive but patient and kind manner then they may not be a good marriage candidate.

Eliminating hinting, passive-aggressiveness, and Jesus

> One thing I must say about being in a relationship is that men aren't necessarily receptive to hints. Other times I was upset with something DS said, I would hint at him I was upset by being distant, short with responses and reply with my famous phrase, "really?" It made me more upset that he never got the hints and still acted normal. I thought he noticed but didn't care, or didn't notice and didn't care even more!
>
> One time we had a talk about how our communication has been going and I mentioned the whole spiel about my ways of communication with him when I was upset. He told me he sometimes knew when I was upset but never got my hints! I was so shocked at his response. Me being a female I understand hints all the time and he being male never gets them, that is frustrating for both of us, but I would assume for him more. Thought hinting has its pros, it gets in the way or really communicating and speaking your mind and how you really feel. I expected DS to get it every time I was upset and even if he did pick up on it I doubt he would even understand why I was upset.

Frankly, I know about men not getting hints even though I know a lot about female nature, but I didn't actually discuss it with her early on in the relationship.

It is important to tell your woman or wives that giving hints is counterproductive. Since men aren't versed in "woman speak" giving them hints is like giving an elementary school child a calculus problem in many cases. Hence, women often figure that men get these hints and develop their own covert contracts against men. This needs to be headed off at the pass.

Hint giving is a very passive aggressive behavior and needs to be eliminated. The one exception being flirting. It's quite destructive because there are expectations formed on both sides. Men typically believe that nothing is wrong in the relationship when there may be something wrong, and women typically believe a man gets her hints and builds up resentment against him.

Jesus says: "Let your yes be yes and your no be no." If you're hinting you're not making the truth obviously known for someone to address it properly.

The nature of Trust

> Thankfully I haven't been upset with DS recently. Whatever issues I had, I let him know and I notice that I only have to tell him one time. — What I like, what I don't like, what I cant stand, what makes me happy, etc. He is invested which is amazing. The things that bothered me before don't bother me anymore simply because I told him and he cared enough to change it immediately. However I constantly pray about responding well whenever DS says or does something that upsets me. As patient and understanding he has been only encourages me to be the same and even better. I always want to address him with respect and love and make sure I can communicate as effectively as possible with him, but also others.
>
> When it comes to trust, I know for a fact I wouldn't be able to be open with DS if I didn't trust him. Though I told him when we first met that I trusted him because he never did anything to break my trust, that wasn't necessarily true. I trusted him with some things and not with others. When he told me to open up and be honest even if I feel it may hurt his feelings, I was hesitant. Usually when there is a disagreement or something wrong, I tend to keep things to myself because I dread confrontation. I am used to people always wanting to argue when I express myself, even if my tone is kind. The more I told him the more I trusted him and the better I knew we could communicate. He has been so sweet, caring and compassionate with me with all I have told him. He has never judged, criticized nor shamed me. He has never put me down in any way, and in fact he does the opposite. He lifts me up, lets me know I am not alone, gives scripture to help me and is gentle in the way he reacts. He really does know how and when to talk to me about certain things.

Good headship/leadership facilitates changes both within those following as well as itself.

It should be able to morph depending on the needs and desires of those under it. Obviously, it still needs to be goal directed: Centered on Christ and aimed at increasing unity.

Trust is something that is built over time, and you shouldn't expect full trust in the beginning. This is the journey that we walk with God, and this is the journey that we walk with other Christians and in all relationships.

The main thing to realize here is that neither of us are fully finished products. We all have room to grow, and we all need to understand that we are here on the same journey together. We need to understand and grow together and with God. This attitude colors the situations which may challenge a relationship which are any type of conflict. Conflict is an opportunity to learn and to grow together in a relationship, or it is an opportunity to push you further away. It is up to you what choice you make.

Her responsibilities

> Even though things are great with DS and I now, it took a lot of refining on my part. I always prayed to God (and still do) about our relationship, how I should bring things up, what things I should bring up and what things to let pass (I don't want to nag haha), and how I should express it. Its one thing saying exactly what is on your mind because it seems like the easiest way, but knowing what you want to say and having to find a way to word it because you care about presentation, reactions and showing honor and respect is something much harder but way more satisfying in my opinion. Prayer and DS being such a godly leader and example and my willingness, has made communicating and trust in our relationship way better. Our relationship is healthy and only getting better and I thank god for that.

As a man, my relationship with my woman is not solely a one way street. I am responsible for my relationship with God and with her, and she is responsible for her relationship with God and with me. This will be important when we look at the next section because things that should be brought to God need to be brought to God and things that should be brought to me should be brought to me.

This deals with personal issues and emotions. You may need to end up teaching a woman about this division of responsibility and roles between God and the husband. In my case, I was fortunate to find a woman that understood these somewhat prior to meeting me.

The difference between God's role and your role in regard to her responsibilities

> One thing that has really helped me in this relationship is always talking to God about issues I have. Whenever something would upset me, I would always take it to God. I would always tell him what my problem was, then I would ask him to help me with it. I would ask if it were something that I should bring up with DS or just let pass by. Some things I wanted to express with him but some things didn't seem worthy enough to speak about. I would simply ask God and he would either > give me peace about a situation simply because it was something I was dealing with and didn't need to involve DS in.

>
> DS just in some way would spark something that would make me upset or disappointed. That was not his fault though, it just showed me that there were things that I needed to work on personally that would eventually help me relationally. Though I have certain expectations from DS, and anyone I choose to be in a relationship with, they are not the same that I have with God.

Sometimes there are actual issues with your leadership; however, sometimes issues are something a woman has to work through herself between her and God. This is important to know and be able to distinguish between so you are not taking responsibility for something that is not yours to deal with. You can't make her have a good relationship with God.

> With DS the expectations I have of him are things he are very well capable of; make me a priority, make me feel loved, and treat me well. Pretty simple I'd say, and he excels in them. I do not however place the expectation on DS to constantly make me happy when it comes my life, help me fix my every problem, or comfort me in a way only God can.
>
> DS is godly and amazing, and I love everything about him, but he is not God and he cannot fulfill my deepest desires the way God can and I will never put that pressure or role on him. If I did, I know I would always be disappointed or angry with him and so would he.
>
> It's not that DS will one day be able to satisfy those needs I rely on God for, but that he is not capable of it. No one is. Not my parents, siblings, pastors or friends. They give a great representation of God's love, compassion, will, patience, understanding, wisdom, knowledge, and truth, but it all comes from a source. The source is what I go to.
>
> I do however seek God through people at times for the sake of knowing that God speaks through anyone and anything, but I don't let be the norm. If I am sad, confused, hurt, joyful, anxious, excited, I talk to God first. He deals with me, soothes, calms, and adds more joy (depending on the case). If I need direction I read the bible. If I still feel unsure I talk with people about it. I don't want to be the kind of Christian who does everything they can think of to resolve a situation and realize I can talk to God, making him my last choice.
>
> Thankfully for me, I never really told people about how I felt or expected people to make me feel better, but it has it downs. Since I never brought things up I never knew how to communicate them. As we all know talking to God is much easier to talk to than people because he already knows our thoughts and how we feel, so we know he can put the pieces together, but when it comes to people, they don't know, so we have to be patient with them and ourselves.

This is the true heart of the issue. Women and wives should be taking many things to God in prayer and Scripture even before taking them to their husbands in many cases.

It's easy to fall into the situation where your relationship becomes the idol. Hence, the expectations that are supposed to be placed in God alone are placed on your spouse to fulfill. They will never live up to those expectations, and both of you will end up unhappy and disappointed with each other.

This is one of the biggest insidious roots of dysfunction in Christian marriages. Sure, men can engage their wife emotionally, but if she is depending on her husband for all of her emotional engagement she is doing it wrong. She needs to seek God for the peace and joy that He gives. Her relationship with God is inversely proportional to her emotional burdening of her husband in marriage.

Some Scriptures that have helped her

> (Psalm 5:1-3) "O Lord, hear me as I pray; pay attention to my groaning. Listen to my cry for help, my King and my God, for I pray to no one but you. Listen to my voice in the morning Lord. Each morning I bring my requests to you and wait expectantly."
>
> (Psalm 13:5-6) "But I trust in your unfailing love. I will rejoice because you have rescued me. I will sing to the Lord because he is good to me."
>
> (Psalm 19:7-8) "The instructions of the Lord are perfect, reviving the soul. The decrees of the Lord are trustworthy, making wise the simple. The commandments of the Lord are right, bringing joy to the heart. The commands of the Lord are clear, giving insight for living."
>
> (Psalm 25:8-9) "The Lord is good and does what is right; he shows the proper path to those who go astray. He leads the humble in doing right, teaching them his way."
>
> (Psalm 27:8) "My heart has heard you say, "Come and talk with me." And my heart responds, "Lord, I am coming."
>
> (Philippians 4:19) "And this same God who takes care of me will supply all your needs from his glorious riches, which have been given to us in Christ Jesus."
>
> (1 Peter 5:7) "Give all your worries and cares to God, for he cares about you."

Some Scriptures that she added.

Conclusions

Let's be real here. This was not easy. It required a lot of love, patience, and kindness on my part to not get angry even when I had perceived faults in the matter. However, communication must be fostered in a safe environment, and it must be done through the lens of Christ centered unity.

The better you get at it the easier it becomes to confront conflict situations as opportunities to love and grow in relationships rather than act angry and hurt and push people away. This is something that you can only facilitate. The other person MUST be also open to the same opportunity, although your ability to facilitate well may influence them to engage positively. At the end of the day, you both must choose to and engage such situations through your own free will.

It is also important to understand the roles and responsibilities of those in a relationship, and to understand the types of issues that you need to take before God first and foremost. A husband and wife are not emotionally reliant on each other. They should have their primary relationship needs met through the Father and Jesus, and it is only then that they can come together to be bigger than the sum of their parts.

If the other person in a relationship's needs are draining then a relationship will eventually be dragged down into the dirt. Husbands and wives and men and women cannot fill holes that only Jesus can fill. These holes need to be filled correctly. Both of you need to keep putting God first in all things for the relationship to succeed and bear the most fruit.

The purpose of prayer and how it relates to faith and hope

August 28, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post is for FBNF to whom I said I would post on the purpose of prayer over a year ago but never did. Stingray's post was a good reminder.

Essentially, Jesus prays during many different occasions in the Scriptures:

> The Bible tells us in (1 Th 5:17) to "pray without ceasing." While I don't believe this literally means to never stop praying, I would say that Jesus probably came closer to never stopping than any person who has ever lived on this planet. He was continually in a prayer mode. He is shown to pray: alone (Mt 14:23)(Mk 1:35)(Lk 9:18)(Lk 22:39-41), in public (Jn 11:41-42)(Jn 12:27-30), before meals (Mt 26:26)(Mk 8:6)(Lk 24:30)(Jn 6:11), before important decisions (Lk 6:12-13), before healing (Mk 7:34-35), after healing (Lk 5:16), to do the Father's will (Mt 26:36-44), among other things. He also taught on the importance of prayer (Mt 21:22)(Mk 11:24-26)(Mt 7:7-11)(Lk 11:9-13)(Jn 14:13-14)(Jn 15:7,16)(Jn 16:23-24)(Mt 5:44)(Lk 6:27-28)(Mt 6:5-15: including the Lord's Prayer)(Lk 11:2-4)(Mt 18:19-20). If you take all of the places that show Jesus praying, you will have a PERFECT outline of how to pray (check out Jn 17).

We can boil all of these down to prayer as an exercise of faith. Hence, the purpose of prayer is to learn how to exercise your faith consistently. This is why it is no secret that Paul exhorts us to prayer continually to exercise our faith:

> Philippians 4:6 Be anxious for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God. 7 And the peace of God, which surpasses all [d]comprehension, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus.
>
> 1 Thessalonians 5:16 Rejoice always; 17 pray without ceasing; 18 in everything give thanks; for this is God's will for you in Christ Jesus.

Since I am a person who likes understanding these things, Paul in Romans does an excellent job explaining theological how all of these concepts tie together. Faith brings peace, and faith leads to hope which brings joy.

> Roman 5:1 Therefore, having been justified by faith, [a]we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, 2 through whom also we have obtained our introduction by faith into this grace in which we stand; and [b]we exult in hope of the glory of God. 3 And not only this, but [c]we also exult in our tribulations, knowing that tribulation brings about perseverance; 4 and perseverance, proven character; and proven character, hope; 5 and hope does not disappoint, because the love of God has been poured out within our hearts through the Holy Spirit > who was given to us.

Hence, we know that:

- Faith leads to Peace
- Faith in the grace which is the glory of God results leads to hope which leads to joy.
- Positive spiritual cycle: hope in tribulations -> perseverance -> proven character -> hope.

As such prayer is an exercise of faith which leads to us having a peace which passes all understanding. However, this exercise of faith is also meant to focus on the progression of faith to hope to joy.

Hebrews 11 affirms this:

> Hebrews 11:1 Now faith is the [a]assurance of things [b]hoped for, the [c]conviction of things not seen. 2 For by it the men of old [d]gained approval. 3 By faith we understand that the [e]worlds were prepared by the word of God, so that what is seen was not made out of things which are visible.

And various other passages scattered affirm that hope and thanksgiving lead to joy:

> Romans 12:12 Rejoice in hope, be patient in tribulation, be constant in prayer.
>
> James 1:2 Count it all joy, my brothers, when you meet trials of various kinds,
>
> Romans 15:13 May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, so that by the power of the Holy Spirit you may abound in hope.

Hence, at the end of the day this is why we know that prayer is an exercise of faith, and why there are multiple components of prayer: adoration, confession, thanksgiving, supplication, etc.

1. Adoration focuses us to the glory of God which gives us hope.
2. Confession brings us to repentance and the grace of God through faith which brings peace and hope.
3. Thanksgiving focuses us to the joy of the Lord.
4. Supplication is another act of faith that He hears us and knows us. It gives us peace and hope.

Overall, we understand that all of these theological concepts are intertwined, so if you don't have the peace of God or the joy of the Lord you can focus and press into God where you need to meet God in your relationship with Him.

- Faith leads to peace. Faith can be exercised through obedience to His word, prayer, loving one another as Jesus loved us, giving to the poor and needy, and any other of the commands of Scripture
- Faith through the glory of God's grace to us leads to hope. Hope and thanksgiving lead to joy. Hope in His promises and an attitude of gratitude in all things which God has given us leads to spiritual joy.

- Cycles of hope: hope in tribulations -> perseverance -> proven character -> hope.

Prayer is one of the spiritual disciplines that reinforces our faith and hope in Jesus. If it doesn't then you need to examine why your faith and hope are wavering. Often times it is the case that we are believing lies about either God or ourselves that need to be confessed to Jesus.

Shallowness is false humility

August 28, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I received a comment on A detailed timeline and how to guide on the process of finding a wife about perceived shallowness. Although I addressed this there, let me address it more directly. Here is my comment:

> Also, very shallow to point to physical characteristics as being those things that attract women. You need a better inspiration.

"1. Physical beauty and being handsome are not shallow. Period. God created these to be attractive, so calling them shadow is akin to insulting God's creation.

2. Women are attracted to physical characteristics including: height, muscles with low body fat (e.g. abs, V-taper, backs, legs, chest, arms), handsome face, and lots of other things.

That's just how it is. If you deny that women like these things then you're only lying to yourself thinking the world should be one way when it is simply what it is.

Now, a handsome man is not the ONLY thing that women are looking for. Other attractors include the aforementioned personality/masculinity, status/fame, athleticism and talent, and money."

Let's move on though.

The shaming tactic

Obviously, the charge of shallowness is a feminist shaming tactic specifically the Charge of Puerility (Code Green) – The Peter Pan Charge.

> Discussion: The target is accused of being immature and/or irresponsible in some manner that reflects badly on his status as an adult male. Examples:
>
> 1. "Grow up!"
> 2. "You are so immature!"
> 3. "Do you live with your mother?"
> 4. "I'm not interested in boys. I'm interested in real men."
> 5. "Men are shirking their God-given responsibility to marry and bear children."

Shallowness, in particular, is aimed categorizing physical beauty or being handsome into something that is not valuable because it is simply surface level. In other words: if you were more mature [you would look past physical beauty], and you would appreciate valuable things [such as inner beauty] instead.

This is Christian legalism at it's finest.

> 1 Peter 3:3-4 Do not let your adorning be external—the braiding of hair and the putting on of gold jewelry, or the clothing you wear— but let your adorning be the hidden person of the heart with the imperishable beauty of a gentle and quiet > spirit, which in God's sight is very precious.

>
> Proverbs 31:30 Charm is deceitful, and beauty is vain, but a woman who fears the Lord is to be praised.
>
> 1 Samuel 16:7 But the Lord said to Samuel, "Do not look on his appearance or on the height of his stature, because I have rejected him. For the Lord sees not as man sees: man looks on the outward appearance, but the Lord looks on the heart."
>
> 1 Timothy 4:8 for bodily discipline is only of little profit, but godliness is profitable for all things, since it holds promise for the present life and also for the life to come.

Christians often have a very difficult time understanding Scriptures which talk about inner and outer beauty. They often create a false dichotomy out of them: inner beauty OR outer beauty. You can't have both, and inner beauty is obviously more important!

However, that is simply not the case. There is no dichotomy between inner and outer beauty. You can have both, but it is more important to cultivate and look for inner beauty as it is eternal.

False humility

The reason that the charge of shallowness is false humility is that it erases the objective nature of what God has created to be good.

- God created all of the things of the world in 6 days. This includes nature which all of us would say is beautiful. There are amazingly gorgeous shots of nature plastered all over the Internet. God created this to be good.
- On the 6th day God created man and woman in his own image. He created them to be VERY good.
- God created within the nature of man and woman to appreciate beauty with our eyes.

Here's the rub which you can see coming a mile away.

We, as Christians, love nature and see that it reflects, with awe inspiring wonder, the creativity and greatness of God. This is what our Father created to be good. However, appreciating and being attracted to the physical beauty or handsomeness that God has created within humans is shallow? This thing that we call shallow is what our Father created to be VERY good.

Hence, it is false humility thinking that you can tear down the God's creation of physical beauty to which men and women are attracted to in each other as shallow.

Indeed, in most cases when someone accuses another of "shallowness," this accusation is not solely aimed at informing the other of their supposed shallowness. Instead, this charge of shallowness is aimed at making the accuser appear more spiritual. This is the core of false humility.

Additionally, agreeing with “shallowness” and speaking of it in a positive light is a false humility grab. You are saying that you are “beyond” valuing the external beauty of God’s creation, and that you instead only value internal beauty. However, by devaluing external beauty you are simply condemning things that God has created to be good and very good.

Conclusions

The reason why it is a feminist shaming tactic is that feminists like to try to tear down what is beautiful. Dalrock has touched on this concept before in frigidity is ugly. Sex in marriage is freely given because it is created by God for us, and it is beautiful as it drives intimacy and family creation which are all beautiful things. Feminists push for no fault divorce, contraception, denial of sex, and selfishness in women all of which are ugly things and destroy the structure of the family which God created in Genesis 2.

The phrase I have said here before bears repeating: You cannot be a Christian and a feminist.

Thus, whenever a Christian says physical beauty or handsomeness is “shallow” they are devaluing the external beauty of all of God’s creation. They are ingrained in a mindset of false humility which should be exposed for the ugly feminist shaming tactic that it is.

The three big elephants in the Christian dating and marriage room

August 29, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've written about these before, but let me address them more directly.

I was reading across one of Dalrock's recent posts and there were a couple of links posted:

- The 35 year old's just in time marriage
- It's okay to grieve & Singles and the Church: Why It Sucks to be Unintentionally Overlooked

In both articles there are a bunch of reasons given why this is the case including:

> There are a lot of things this epidemic can be blamed on:
>
> * the ratio of males to females in the body of Christ is one reason; > * the small size of the generation born in the late seventies compared to the baby boom of the early 80's is another > * and the "kiss dating goodbye" teachings of the 90s and early 2000's where women were taught to never pursue or show interest in a man but just wait patiently is another.
>
> [and]
>
> Reason #1- People underestimate the difficulties that singles face.
> Reason #2- Influencers in the church are not often single.

Anyway, I don't really know these particular ladies, so what I say may not necessarily apply to them. However, these are the three main issues:

Attraction

The first elephant in the room is attraction. For those of you who haven't read this blog from the beginning, when I posted Practical ways to improve your desirability and attractiveness to a prospective spouse to boundless nearly 2 years ago it was promptly deleted as too offense.

Scary, right? Apparently attraction is not deemed important enough to be talked about by Focus on the Family's Singles blog for dating and marriage to the point where it is instead deemed offensive. This ignores the blatant reality that no one wants to marry someone that they aren't attracted to.

Now, I'm probably not the best example of talking about which people are undatable due to attraction issues as I have high standards, but the sad fact is that 67-70% of people in the USA are overweight or obese. Let's be real. No one wants to marry someone that is overweight or obese. Sure, some overweight and obese people do get married, but the simple reality is that both men and women want someone who is aesthetically attractive to look at.

It is extremely perilous for Christian women to ignore the fact that the nature of men that God created is to be attracted almost solely to physical appearance. If a woman wants to be married and she is not actively seeking to improve her chances through good sleep, nutrition, and exercise she is only sinking her own chances. It's no secret that men tend to congregate around attractive women vastly upper her chances of being asked out by the few attractive men in the Church.

Sure, a woman may not be able to improve her facial genetics, but a nice toned body indicates to a man that she cares about her physical appearance and that it is attractive.

There is an interesting chart from the rules revisited on the modifiable aspects of feminine beauty. I disagree with some of them categorizations as I probably know more about the human body than the author; however, the vast extent of physical appearance is changeable and can be attractive.

The Components of Feminine Beauty and Their Relative Importance

Category	Sub-Category	Importance		Contollability	Attention Deserved
Weight & Fitness	Weight & Fitness	30%	30%	85%	42%
Facial Structure	Facial Structure	20%	20%	5%	2%
Clothes	Quality of Clothes	1%	10%	50%	1%
	Color of Clothes	2%		100%	3%
	Fit of Clothes	3%		90%	4%
	Nakedness*	2%		100%	3%
	Heels	2%		100%	3%
Body Shape	Butt Size & Shape	2%	13%	20%	1%
	Breast Size & Shape	2%		35%	1%
	Hip-to-Waist Ratio	3%		10%	0%
	Posture	3%		100%	5%
	Height	2%		8%	0%
	Leg-to-Body Ratio	1%		0%	0%
Grooming	Eyebrows	2%	12%	85%	3%
	Body Hair	2%		100%	3%
	Hairstyle	7%		90%	10%
	Nails	1%		100%	2%
Cosmetics & Jewelery	Makeup	5%	6%	100%	8%
	Jewelery	1%		100%	2%
Skin, Eyes, Hair & Teeth	Teeth	3%	9%	80%	4%
	Eyes	2%		10%	0%
	Eyelashes	2%		25%	1%
	Hair Quality	1%		30%	0%
	Skin Quality	1%		50%	1%
* Bare cleavage, short skirt, etc.	Total	100%	100%

Obviously, the same goes for men as well.

The general theme that I always talk about is based on the law of the reciprocal. In other words, become the ideal spouse of your ideal spouse. However, it never hurts to be more attractive than required as that opens up more possibilities.

I am not discounting developing a godly personality… but it is attraction that gets your foot in the door for women. You need your foot in the door to even have a shot at becoming a keeper to a man. Most men don't like women who are overweight or obese. That's the cold hard truth.

Feminization of the Church

The second issue has to do with the feminization of the church. This issue is actually extremely multi-faceted and the statistics about 40:60 or 45:55 women to men in the church only begins to describe.

Essentially, the feminization of the church creates an atmosphere to where men are unwelcome. This can be due to any number of factors including:

- I love Jesus worship songs, especially about feelings (as if most men want to declare their love and their feelings about Jesus publically).
- Preaching about how men fail (as if men need another beatdown about how they fail aside from the one they get from culture)
- Women = good. Men = bad. (as if only men are the only ones failing their roles and responsibilities in marriage… whens the last time you heard a sermon telling women to respect their men in all things and submit to him in all things?)
- Women being promoted for ministry positions in the church not necessarily "pastor." Not so prevalent in the Catholic or Orthodox but very in Protestant Churches.
- Bible studies geared more towards talking than about studying the Word. Varies upon Church.
- No grounding in apologetics study (men like concrete information about their faith and why it's true).
- Destructive information is propagated about men being attracted to physical appearance.
- Destructive information is propagated about men's sexual drive.
- Women are more spiritual because they… buy more Christian books (as if that determines spirituality)… or they are more likely to show up at church (ignoring that it's a hostile atmosphere for men)… or the are more likely to attend Bible studies (again, feminized teaching).

There are obviously many other factors, but in many cases the Church has become a place that is extremely unwelcoming for men. There are many topics that discuss this but no one wants to do anything about it.

The two main areas that I always suggest to women who do want men to "step up and lead" are:

1. Step down from ministry positions and instead have men fill them. Men only learn to become leaders by taking a position of leadership and then learning through trial and error perhaps failing in places along the way. This is the biggest issue, and the sad fact of the matter is that most women don't want to step out of the way and follow men's lead.
2. Encouragement, respect, and enthusiasm. It's easy to tear down but it's very hard to build up. Yet, all you hear are women complaining about the lack of men even in the Church. Yet, none of these women actually encourage men who are trying to become men… even though that encouragement and admiration is exactly what she is supposed to do if she is a wife.

You really want to know why there are no eligible Christian masculine men?

The atmosphere in the church is hostile to such men. The atmosphere of worship, teaching, Bible study, and even fellowship is not one that men want to hang out in most of the time. Women are clogging up all of the leadership positions that men would otherwise use to learn and grow as leaders. The women don't encourage men as they are growing and learning to be men. They only complain. How would it be if you're a single woman and the men are complaining that there are no good Christian single women in the Church?

This leads me into another reason which is…

Mentors and discipleship is lacking

This should be pretty clear given many of my posts geared toward teaching men how to be men and giving examples of what they need to do to find a godly wife. The two main examples being: my 5 step process to maturity in relationships, and my detailed timeline and how-to guide to finding a wife.

Simply put, most men's ministries are sad shells of what they could be. Most of the time it's men getting together maybe once a month to talk to each other about their failings. Or have a preacher preach to them about their failings. The marriage ministries aren't much better. These could be fruitful times that men could use to pair up with men who are farther along in the faith than them and who have walked through a similar journey in marriage. The older men could give advice, mentor, and disciple these younger men. Likewise, the same can be true of the women's ministries. This would fulfill the passages of Titus 2 among other discipleship and mentoring passages which are from older men to younger men and older women to younger women.

However, the sad case is that no one really cares about the young men in the Church. They are allowed to drift along by their own feelings. They are carried every which way because they are not grounded in the faith. They are preached at by their failings, yet not instructed with concrete examples of what they should be doing or the road they should be walking. Only vague garbage like "don't look at porn" or "don't treat women this way." This being the reason that I consistently harp on the fact that if you are eliminating something it must be replaced by something else.

However, men tend to be best when someone gets down in the dirt with them and walks life with them. We build a camaraderie with each other where we experience and go through things together, and that makes us stronger because we have been there through the pain and the hurt. As iron sharpens iron so one man sharpens another. There are very few older men who are willing to take young men under their wings now. This is the sad indictment of the Church at large.

All of these are tied together by lack of authenticity and truth.

Yes, it may hurt someone's feelings to tell someone that they are overweight. Yet, in the long run the truth is more important. It illuminates blind spots, and allows someone to stop seeking comfort for their feelings over reality.

Yes, being overweight and sedentary can and will hurt most people's chances on dating and marrying someone they are attracted to. That's a simple fact of life.

Yes, the feminization of the Church drives men away. The lack of leadership positions that goes to women drives men away. Yet, no one wants to change their church to be more affirming and receptive to men all the while complaining about the lack of Christian masculine men. Don't make me laugh.

Yes, the dearth of mentoring and discipleship in churches means that most men will still be boys instead of learning how to become men. Boys need to be taught by fathers or father-figures in order to be men. How many boys in the Church have father figures doing that? 20? 10%? Less?

Yeah, you may have been sold a crappy pile of goods. So what? We all were. The real question is: What are you going to do about it? Sit there and go woe is me? Or are you willing to make changes in your own life that will help you get toward the goal you want?

For the women

Christian feminine passivity has always bothered me. Yeah, sure, maybe it's not a good idea to ask a man out. But you should be doing everything you can behind the scenes in order to find a husband.

I've used the college or job analogy before. It's been criticized but it generally fits: you don't sit on your application or resume and wait for acceptance or jobs to come to you. Sure, you could get some, but it's unlikely that you'll get many offers unless you are an exceptionally attractive candidate if you get my drift. You write essays, you study, you get tutors if you need to, you jump at every and any opportunity to make yourself more attractive to prospective colleges or employers in hopes that you get interviews.

I talked about my own journey in the timelines post, and I used every available resource to me to find my current girl. Tried the online dating. Asked women out at church and multiple fellowships. Leveraged all of my social networks including friends, some trustworthy family, and others to see if there were single Christian women meeting my criteria. I did not go on any blind dates, but I would have.

In my particular case, it ended up being the case that a couple friends, at a worship service in the middle of the night, told me about a girl who they had met a year prior who fit my criteria. It was another 6 months before I connected with her, online first, and we hit it off. I took my search seriously by being bold and not afraid to ask friends — Christian AND non-Christian — if they knew of anyone serious about their faith and attractive.

Yeah, it's nice to be passive and hope you meet someone, but you'll never know if you don't ask your social networks to find someone. If you're serious about your search and marriage then be serious about it. You may not be doing the leading in the relationship or the asking on a date-ing, but since you have strong social networks you should be leveraging them as much as you can. Online dating is a much better place for women too. Just go on first dates before you dismiss people.

The ratios of women:men in the Church now are such that a large percentage of Christian women simply will not find a spouse. If 60:40 is the ratio of women to men in the Church, then 20% of 60% or 1/3 of women will not find a spouse. In fact, since the vast majority of men aren't that attractive — let's say 50% — that leaves 50% of Christian men that will marry. If 20% of the men marry 20% of the women then that means 40% of 60% of Christian women won't marry which is 2/3rds or 67% of Christian women won't marry.

That approximately describes the ratios that I see in many churches: there's at least 2 single women for every young married couple.

Although the long term data on Dalrock's doesn't back it up yet, the Church is probably in a worse state than the world in terms of marriage because of lots of other "requirements" on top of being attractive and compatible.

That's something the women are going to have to deal with, and it won't be pretty. The two blogs I linked, and one of my first introductions to this place by Haley as well. At the end of the day you have to decide for yourself whether you want to be passive or not. I would personally feel better about my singleness if I did everything I could to meet attractive Christian men rather than hoping and praying that one comes to me. Then again, Wayne Gretzkey's "you miss all of the shots you don't take" may resonate more with me than you.

And don't get me wrong, I'm not talking solely about passivity in the sense of getting dates although that will help. I'm talking about passivity in terms of your physical appearance/attractiveness, and developing a strong feminine personality and desire to be a wife.

The aspects of forgiveness and bitterness is victim mentality

August 30, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I figured this goes well with the 3 elephants in the room post.

Forgiveness

A reader and I were discussing forgiveness. Specifically, there were multiple points that describe how we are supposed to forgive:

1. Releasing them to the Lord — e.g. Lord's Prayer, Jesus on the cross, Stephen being stoned. Basically, if someone sins against us it is not our job to look for an apology or to be asked for forgiveness. We give up the injury to the Lord.
2. Forgiving those who have sinned against you who repent. Basically, as Jesus said if your brother sins to you and comes to you to repent you should forgive him. Over and over if he sins again and repents.

However, nowhere in the Scriptures does it say to ask for forgiveness. This is often tacked on by parents when teaching their kids if they do something wrong they should ask for forgiveness. In general, this deprives the person doing the forgiving of their free will right to forgive. Instead, it places pressure on them to say "yes" to forgive that person.

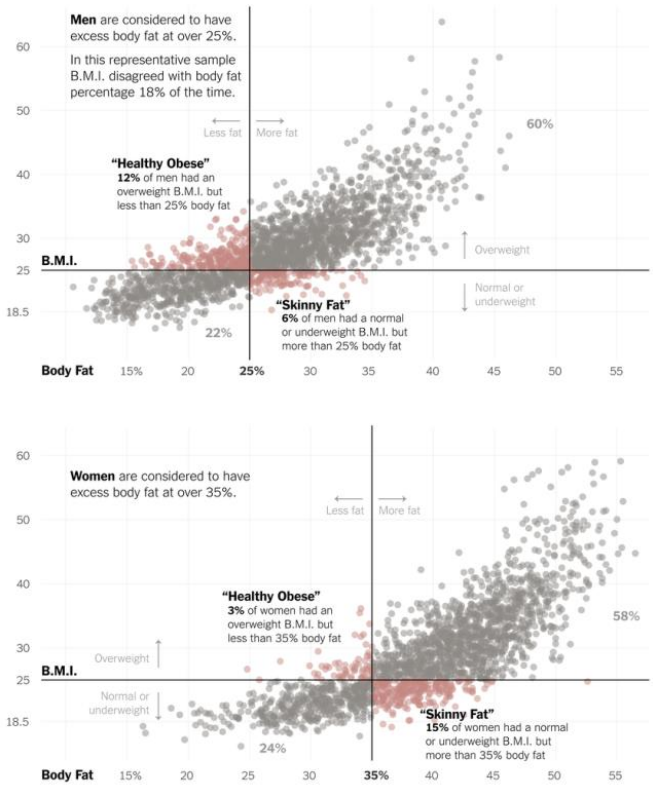
Obviously, we want people to forgive on their own free will and not be coerced into forgiving someone just because they are asking.

Bitterness

Harboring insults, acts against you, and lies of the sort are bitterness.

Bitterness is essentially victim mentality because you believe that you have a right to hold onto whatever was said or done by having a grudge against it. This is opposed to giving the injury or insult to the Lord. Thus, we can say that "bitterness" is making injuries and insults into idolatry. The idolatry of holding onto your pain.

It is easier for a victim to hold onto their pain as it makes them feel righteously angry, but the righteous anger festers to become bitterness and like a poison spreads through the body.



Although we have been sold a bad bill of goods in many cases, we need to give it up to the Lord. It's OK to be angry, even righteously angry, but it needs to be given to the Lord before it insidiously starts worming it's way into relationships and sabotaging them from the inside out.

BMI, Overweight and attractiveness

August 30, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This also relates to my post on the 3 big elephants.

If you have been paying attention to the analysis coming out on BMI then you should check it out.

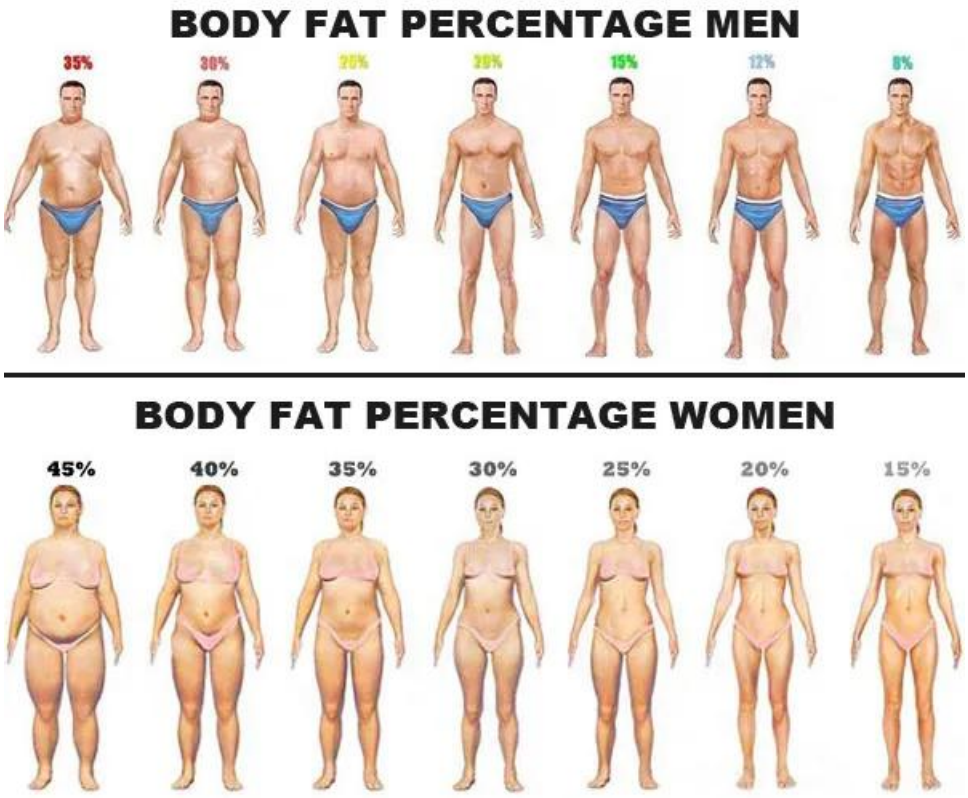
Most of the statistics come from the CDC government website which indicate that "More than one-third (34.9% or 78.6 million) of U.S. adults are obese" with similar numbers being overweight through 2011-2012. This means that about 2/3rds to 7/10ths (67-70%) of the population is obese or overweight combined. Now, the data is drawn from the oft cited BMI which many people have touted as inaccurate because you can have a lot of muscle and be overweight or obese. This is why analysis of those with certain amounts of BMI over a statistical population is important.

Given the chart above we have:

- 12% of men over 25 BMI (overweight) have less than 25% bodyfat.
- 6% of men under 25 BMI (normal or underweight) have more than 25% bodyfat

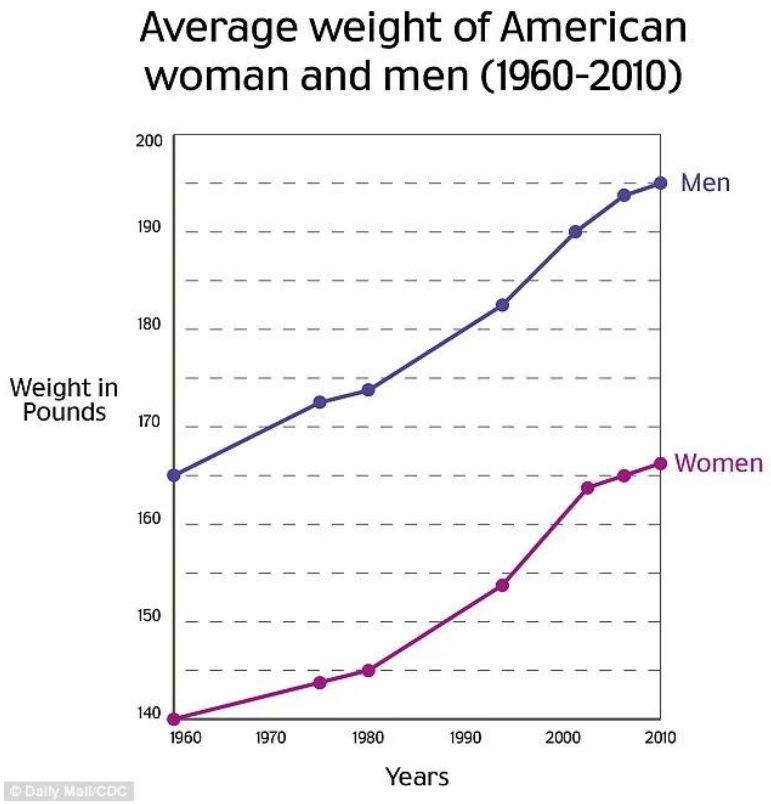
- 3% of women over 25 BMI (overweight) have less than 35% bodyfat.
- 15% of women under 25 BMI (normal or underweight) have more than 35% bodyfat

Thus, in general, BMI is generally a fairly good predictor of overweight status compared to underweight and normal weight. It predicts >80% of the population in these categories which is pretty solid.



The percentages are particular disturbing in regard to men and women. Men will tend to be more likely to be overweight having more muscle and fat-free body mass if overweight than underweight and fat. However, the scary part is that there are more women that are supposedly normal and underweight that have >35% body fat percentage which is considered overweight.

Just so you can kind of get a feel for what 35% fat percentage in women looks like here are some charts (may be NSFW):



The 30% woman in the 2nd chart is probably a more realistic indicator of 30% body fat than in the first chart. The woman in the first chart wears her body fat extremely well and looks like she has good curves, but the vast majority of women do not wear it that well.

Generally, I would say that the vast majority of men like their women int he 15-25% range with the majority centering in around the 20% mark. Though curves do matter in some sense, as long as there is not too much extra "padding" as it were. Thus, the fact that we're talking about 35% in terms of what being "overweight" means for women you're already 10-15% bodyfat out of the ideal for most men.

An extra 10% bodyfat on a 20% body fat 5'4″ 120 lbs woman is 12 lbs bringing her to 132 lbs total, yet the average American women is now 5'3.8″ and 166 lbs.

For reference, Marilyn Monroe's weight at 5'5″ supposedly fluctuated from 118 to 140. Even if we assume that the average weight for a 5'4″ woman is 140 and that she wears it well, then it's still a 20% increase in fat weight from there to 166 lbs.

Essentially, my main point is that not just 70% of women are supposedly overweight or < 30% of the female population at best. Probably worse because overweight doesn't take into account the female population within the 25-30% range as overweight which includes a lot of the female population that are < 25 BMI with >35% body fat.

This is exactly why I prize women who workout and eat healthy because the vast majority of people — men and women — are unattractive solely because of their weight. This is not to mention anything about personality and other factors.

If you want to maximize your pool of potential spouses then you absolutely should be sleeping well, working out, and eating right to get to a healthy athletic weight. No ifs, ands, or buts on this really.

Answering questions about engagement

August 31, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A commenter has written in about some questions pertaining to his engagement. I answered them, but if any of the married men commenting have experience with these questions feel free to offer advice as well.

> "For us, we're at the stage where, it's hard to keep our hands from each other … physically — hugging and kissing"

Well, I'm no physical affection Nazi, but it is good to draw some boundaries. There is hugging and kissing in our relationship, but the main boundaries that are drawn in the sand are: no hands under clothes, nothing horizontal or lying down (if you get my drift), although [more upright] cuddling I'm alright with, alone time should be limited especially if you lack self control, etc.

If something starts getting heated then call it off. Obviously, boundaries can be broken but legalism isn't the answer either. I always know what I am getting myself into, so if I sin then I have to repent of it and reaffirm the truth. If there are habits of continually breaking boundaries then you need to be more vigilant and accountable about it [especially to other people].

> (a) What should, I, a Christian man do (as the leader-in-waiting) in leading the both of us to marriage?

This depends a lot on your leadership style and how you want to run the relationship. What I do may not necessarily fit what you do and vice versa. However, I personally like Bible studies and I'm OK prayer time with each other. I will not be conned into people saying that I should do those things though… my girl's friends were asking if we prayed together and the answer was not much, so I had to educate her that there is nothing about praying together in the Bible. Although it is good, it is not a spiritual requirement for marriage. This is freedom in Christ that we can choose how to behave in our relationships, although the end goal is unity.

The main thing I think you should go through is each other's expectation of each other in marriage. Libido is a good one. You can go through talking about what you are like… so for example I would ask her what her libido is like. Then I would say that I want sex 1-3x per day in marriage. Most girls eyes pop out at this, and then I ask them about their response to my expectations there.

Comparing expectations and seeing if they match on sex, financials, relationships, and other important areas of life is probably one of the most important things you can do because it ensures that one person wont be feel conned into accepting a marriage to things they didn't agree to later on.

> (b) How should I lead my fiancee in preparation to be my wife? (her father is not > a Christian)

A more difficult question. I'd still ask him for his daughter's hand in marriage.

I think generally as more fathers get "relegated" to just walking their daughters down the aisle it's best to keep him in the loop and treat him with respect. Respect is a universal language regardless of Christians and non-Christians and treating people right goes a long way to friendly interaction and may even bring him to Christ.

For men this would constitute something like the following: Since he knows her better than you do, I would even enter sort of a "mentor" relationship asking his advice about treating his daughter correctly and things to look out for. This treats him as the sort of benevolent authority figure there and allows him to interact with you on a "help you out" type of basis, and given the Ben Franklin effect where doing something good for a person makes you like them better you will easily be on his good side. Most fathers aren't so far in pedestaling their daughters that they can't see their flaws and what to look out for, and they can always help you out with what she likes. Even better if you can have some camaraderie with him about her flaws and tease her about them.

> (c) What advice would you have for me?

1. Fix your eyes on Jesus. Study the Scriptures many times on what it says about marriage. Go over and over and over them again. That's one of the reasons why I know myself so strongly is that I know exactly what is required of me and exactly what is required of her, and I don't compromise. Make sure you are OK with your roles and responsibilities, and making it known what hers as well. This is a good discussion topic.

2. Keep walking with eyes wide open and don't let infatuation blind you. Don't be afraid to be playful and fun, but know when you need to call out bad behavior both from yourself and from her. Don't tolerate disrespect and make it known that you will tell her when she is being disrespectful in situations.

3. Make sure you have a Christian male mentor (preferably married and knows about the nature of women) to help advise you. [Many mentors is good too if you know many men who can be good mentors].

4. Keep up relationships with family and friends. It's easy to get caught up in just the two of you, but there is more to life than just the two of you as well. Family is an important calling but it's not the only calling.

5. Have the "politically incorrect" discussions now. They will be worse if you have to bring them up in marriage. For example, If my girl is getting fat I will straight up tell her (as kindly as possible) that she's getting overweight and my attraction for her will decline because of it.

If a woman can't handle the truth now what makes you think she will do better in marriage? You need to know she values the truth over feelings.

> (d) In your opinion, how important is pre-marital counselling (conducted by the church we're attending)?

This depends on the quality of the pre-marital counseling. Hard to tell without looking at most material, but if it's anything like most Christian counselors expect it to be mediocre cause everything is supposedly solved through "communication"

Personally, my girl and I are extremely prepared for marriage because we have already discussed and made boundaries about what we expect from each other in daily life (housework, cooking, cleaning, division of labor, etc.) and we have discussed what God expects of us, what we expect of each other, and many other things. We have also gone through April's list on her expectations about marriage.

I've also had the discussion with her that she is still responsible for herself and her emotions. She must maintain her relationship between her and God, and not to foist things that need to be taken to God on me. This is another extremely important thing to look like because a wife that idolizes her husband can be as much of a pain in the butt as a wife that is not a Christian. She becomes overly dependent on you is not a good thing.

> (e) How long should it (the pre-marital counselling) take? Is one year sufficient or too long?

To be honest that's long for my tastes. I only want a 3-6 month engagement at most before marriage. The majority of vetting I have already done, and I think should be done prior to engagement. If you have already talked about marriage expectations and know how to communicate with difficult situations then that's what most of the hard work is.

Of course, not every relationship will have a man who is proactive about his own pre-marital counseling and discussing the issues without an intermediary. Thus, it may be useful to go through a directed program. However, since they are offering the service I would ask about their statistics:

1. How many couples have gone through
2. How many successful marriages and divorces. If a Church doesn't keep track of their divorces of those who went through the program and had counseling this is a yellow flag. Tracking divorces means they are willing to identify problem areas with their counseling that they can work on.
3. Close to that is to ask what they have improved on in their counseling and what they have learned counseling. No program is perfect and if they can tell you straight up you know they are committed and invested in improving it.

Also, If my church had something like this I would ask for the quicker version, but that's up to you if you want to try to negotiate this depending on your own preparedness.

Why modern women are so anxious

August 31, 2015 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Sunshine posits the question: Why are modern women so anxious?

> I was interested in what she had to say because I too sometimes have really bad anxiety symptoms in large stores. It started when I was in my mid-thirties, and while I wouldn't call them full blown panic attacks, the symptoms can be intense enough to be very physically uncomfortable. The sensation is one of panic, like I need to drop everything and run, along with a racing heart and that clenchy feeling in my stomach. Mine are not nearly as bad as my supervisor's, and I can get through whatever shopping needs to be done by praying for God to flood me with peace and by repeating phrases to myself like It is okay. I am okay. My family is fine. I can get my groceries and then I can leave. God is with me. Also paying close attention to my breathing, keeping it even and deep, helps.
>
> So a couple of things I've noticed is that it isn't really the crowds that are the problem; I can go to church without panicking, for example, although sometimes large concerts and sporting events make me tense until we are in our seats. Another aspect is that it seems to be exacerbated during the school year when I'm working and abates somewhat (but not completely) when I'm home in the summer.

Obviously, the simple patriarchal answer is that: Women do best under a structure of authority and boundaries.

In general, anxiety is a fear response. Fear response tends to manifest when we feel like we aren't protected. Women aren't protected when they are removed from the authoritative covering of their fathers or husbands. Hence, why women were given from the father to the husband in marriage. You could say that fear and anxiety is the natural price of independence: You have to take care of and protect yourself. If you are a Bible believing Christian then the answer is simple. Women weren't created to shoulder that burden alone.

Modern women who opt into egalitarian marriages do not see their husbands as providers and protectors. Hence, it should be no surprise that they still live in fear and anxiety over many aspects of life.

Now, much of these this fear and anxiety should be taken to God first before women take it to their fathers and husbands. God fills the the God-sized hole of need within all humans. However, if a woman is anxious about a particular situation this is where a father or a husband can help her set boundaries.

For example, if working or say PTA involvement or church involvement is causing a wife anxiety, a husband can look out for his wife by telling her to cut back. This exempts her from the rock and a hard place:

- The uncomfortable situation of not wanting to cut back because others at work, PTA, or church may see her as slacking or not good enough for the position versus having the stress, workload, and responsibilities of the particular positions.

Thus, the responsibility of the decision making and boundaries are placed upon her husband and not her. It is the quintessential responsibility offload a wife can use: “If you have a problem, you can take it up with my husband.”

This is simply one of the ways that fathers and husbands add that protective layer of covering over their wives and those under their authority. Likewise, this is the same as with the Father and Christians. If we decide to go our own way and sin and thus step out from under God’s protective covering then we logically should have a holy fear and anxiety about things going wrong.

I talk about more about this rational fear versus irrational fear here. I think most of the anxiety and fear that women go through now is rational. That is women deny their nature that God created and want to go independent on their own. However, I don’t doubt that some of womens’ fear can be irrational if they are built on lies about who the Father is and who they are in Christ. Chiefly, our adoption as children of the Father.

> Romans 8:14 For all who are being led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God. 15 For you have not received a spirit of slavery [g]leading to fear again, but you have received [h]a spirit of adoption as sons by which we cry out, “Abba! Father!” 16 The Spirit Himself testifies with our spirit that we are children of God, 17 and if children, heirs also, heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ, if indeed we suffer with Him so that we may also be glorified with Him.

Of course, all of these require trust in the Father, womens’ fathers, and wives’ husbands. Unfortunately, this is not the norm but the exception.

edit:

I am also convinced that this is why Paul tells Titus and Timothy that women should be workers at home, and why Proverbs is about a woman working out of her home.

