This is similar to James' pronouncement that works without faith is dead. Becoming a Christian is more than cheap grace (or a get out of hell free card), it's about being transformed in Jesus Christ and partnering with the Holy Spirit to preach the gospel, use your spiritual gifts, and be an effective worker for Jesus. Christians should be careful to engage in good works in order to 'work out our salvation with fear and trembling.'

> 7 "And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write:
> He who is holy, who is true, who has the key of David, who opens and no one will shut, and who shuts and no one opens, says this:
> 8 'I know your deeds. Behold, I have put before you an open door which no one can shut, because you have a little power, and have kept My word, and have not > denied My name. 9 Behold, I will cause those of the synagogue of Satan, who say that they are Jews and are not, but lie—I will make them come and bow down at your feet, and make them know that I have loved you. 10 Because you have kept the word of My perseverance, I also will keep you from the hour of testing, that hour which is about to come upon the whole world, to [est those who dwell on the earth. 11 I am coming quickly; hold fast what you have, so that no one will take your crown. 12 He who overcomes, I will make him a pillar in the temple of My God, and he will not go out from it anymore; and I will write on him the name of My God, and the name of the city of My God, the new Jerusalem, which comes down out of heaven from My God, and My new name. 13 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'

The Church in Philadelphia was doing what was right, also according to their namesake (brotherly "adelphos" love "philia"). They are mainly told to hold fast to continue what they are doing.

> 14 "To the angel of the church in Laodicea write:
> The Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the Beginning of the creation of God, says this:
> 15 'I know your deeds, that you are neither cold nor hot; I wish that you were cold or hot. 16 So because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spit you out of My mouth. 17 Because you say, "I am rich, and have become wealthy, and have need of nothing," and you do not know that you are wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked, 18 I advise you to buy from Me gold refined by fire so that you may become rich, and white garments so that you may clothe yourself, and that the shame of your nakedness will not be revealed; and eye salve to anoint your eyes so that you may see. 19 Those whom I love, I reprove and discipline; therefore be zealous and repent. 20 Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and will dine with him, and he with Me. 21 He who overcomes, I will grant to him to sit down with Me on My throne, as I also overcame and sat down with My Father on His throne. 22 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'"

Those in Laodicea were 'rich and had need of nothing' and became neither hot or cold in their pursuit of Jesus. This goes back to Jesus and our commitment to Him.

Luke 21:And He looked up and saw the rich putting their gifts into the treasury. 2 And He saw a poor widow putting in two small copper coins. 3 And He said, "Truly I say to you, this poor widow put in more than all of them; 4 for they all out of their surplus put into the offering; but she out of her poverty put in all that she had to live on."

As cliche as it is to say, we are to be "sold out" or "on fire" for Jesus. We shouldn't be "Sunday only Christians" or "go through the motions" of going to Church and praying the sinners prayer. God's mission is our mission and that's the Great Commission and building up the body of Christ.

The white garments consistently described in all these passages are about 'taking off the old' (the stained garments) and 'putting on the new' (the white clothes) which is the sanctification process. Becoming less like the world and more like Jesus.

Summary

Jesus through John on the Island of Patmos, admonishes and encourages the various Churches who are to be His eventual bride at the wedding of the Lamb. The various way that Jesus admonishes the Churches are a good guide for vetting a wife (or husband for that matter).

- Ephesus — Jesus admonishes the Church that they have left their first love. They need to go after God with their whole hearts again.
- Smyrna — Be faithful in suffering, even to the point of death.
- Pergamum — Avoid loving money and prosperity gospel, avoid causing others to stumble into sin, and understand that we are to crucify our desires of the flesh and not sin so that grace may abound.
- Thyatira — Avoid cultural and even churchian authority which encourages fornication, adultery, sexual deviancy, holding up the things of the world as idols, STDs, abortion, and the deceptiveness of equalism and progressivism.
- Sardis — Be prepared for the coming of Jesus by giving your all to the Great Commission.
- Philadelphia — If you're doing what is right, hold fast and keep doing it.
- Laodicea — Don't be a lover of riches and persevere in serving God. Do not be a Sunday only Christian but live your life as to be worthy of 'well done, good and faithful servant.'

In summary:

- Love God with everything
- Avoid the pitfalls of riches
- Avoid the pitfalls of your own desires, especially sexually
- Avoid the pitfalls of turning to the culture over God
- Avoid causing others to stumble
- Be prepared for the coming of Jesus by persevering in evangelism and building up the body of Christ
- Don't be a Sunday-only Christian or give half-heartedly to God

A pretty solid set of vetting standards to ensure that the Church, a potential husband, or a potential wife is a true Christian.

Also, remember that this is an admonishment the Churches. If the Churches do not turn from their wickedness or half heartedness, Jesus is willing to remove them from contention to be His bride.

Womens' preference(s) for body type

December 15, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This paper that Rollo mentioned in one of his recent posts was interesting.

NOTE: Ratings of six computer-generated images of men were made on a 9-point Likert scale (1 = not at all, 9 = extremely) in Study 1. Women reported that muscular men were more sexually desirable than nonmuscular men and that moderately muscular men (built, toned) were most desirable. Women also reported that muscular men are more physically dominant and volatile but less likely to be committed to their partners.

Sexual desirability generally correlates with overall attractiveness (if she thinks/wants to have sex) while physical dominance usually correlates well with arousal (turning on a woman). This explains the discrepancy where women say a certain man is "too muscular" when evaluating his attractiveness but then are extremely turned on when they are actually in bed with him.

In other words, although women are attracted the most to a man between toned, built, and brawny, when they are turned on and want to have sex it's going to usually be with the most muscular man of them.

It's also interesting to see that that more muscular men tend to be rated lower on the commitment and volatility level. I suspect commitment for several reasons:

- Women know more attractive men have more options
- Women know men who are less attractive will generally be more committed
- The two above are unconsciously/consciously know that men they are attracted to other women will be attracted to, and men who orbit them want to be with them in long(er) term relationships

I wonder if 'volatility' — unpredictability — which somewhat has the U-like shape like physical dominance (though not as pronounced as physical dominance) is due to the relationship between men and women's stature. In other words, because men are generally bigger, there is a greater perceived capacity for lack of control, due to violence or otherwise, which for women heightens their arousal if they are attracted to him.

This plays into the pornography that women are most excited about: bodice ripper romance novels. Women want to be be possessed by a sexy, dominant man.

All in all, nothing super new or exciting, but it does confirm some of the common thoughts of about the thought processes of why muscular bodies are attractive.

It would be interesting to see researchers use 'real bodies' as opposed to computer generated ones. And then possibly intermix in the faces of some celebrities to see how 'fame' alters female perception of attractiveness and dominance.

The Christian Brad Pitt thought experiment

December 22, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a throwback for men who are interested in women, have girlfriends, or are married. I was reminded of this recently by someone who had a disagreement with his 18-month girlfriend, and she responded by literally giving him the silent treatment.

Basically, “Christian Brad Pitt” is a way to evaluate and gauge a potential girlfriend or wife and their interest in you.

What would happen if Christian Brad Pitt had a disagreement and his girlfriend was angry?

She definitely would NOT give him the silent treatment. She would be angry for sure, but she would also likely give him grace in the particular situation as she would still want to be with him. Perhaps she would approach the situation kindly and forgive the mistake. She would definitely make time to try to talk and figuring things out instead of run away and clam up. She knows she could be dumped and many other women would be willing to take her place.

To look at this further, if a Christian woman is going to blow up at small things, imagine how much worse it would be if you’re married and disagree on big decisions or likes to be contentious about every little decision. This is a very yellow if not red flag for the relationship. Avoiding/cutting someone off like that is exactly the wrong thing to do in a relationship that is headed toward marriage.

If this was me, I’d be very upfront and tell her that I’m not going to marry anyone who is going to treat me that way. If she’s going to pull stunts like this, it’s best to part ways. I would expect my future wife to be a mature adult and handle any disagreements with maturity, grace, and class. Someone who is serious about the Christian walk and unity over being disrespectful and petty with middle school girl behavior: the silent treatment.

Of course, you can apply the “Christian Brad Pitt” standard to multiple other situations too:

- Is she interested in me? If she’s going out of her way to meet up with you or text you at every opportunity you betcha. If she’s really slow or days late responding or keeps putting off meeting up, probably not.
- Is she wife material? Does she enthusiastically want to marry you for you… or is it because you are giving her things or she is settling for you? The enthusiasm is there for Christian Brad Pitt but might not be there for you if she’s half-hearted in the relationship.
- Does she blow up or be contentious at the small things? She wouldn’t do that if she was married to Christian Brad Pitt now would she? She would be afraid he would get tired of her and dump her or be mad at her for good reason.

One of those things you should keep in the back of your mind and analyze if you are considering marriage. How would she react if she was with someone who is regarded as universally attracted and famous versus you?

If she's not crazy for you, then that could be a possibly ticking time bomb underneath the surface. In some cases, it is better to stay single than to marry. You can devote more time to God, and you won't be taken advantage of by a woman who may not fully take her vows seriously.

Edit: to add some more commentary…

Is this Biblical?

Good question. Sure is.

> Luke 14:25 Now large crowds were going along with Him (Jesus); and He turned and said to them, 26 "If anyone comes to Me, and does not hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be My disciple.
> 27 Whoever does not carry his own cross and come after Me cannot be My disciple.

Jesus, for Christians, is our "Brad Pitt" so to speak (though in reality, Brad Pitt can't hold a candle to Jesus). We should be willing to give up everything, even our family, lives, and walking through significant hardship to the point of death to want to follow after Him.

Simply look at the example of the martyrdom of Jesus' disciples:

> - Peter and Paul – Both martyred in Rome about 66 AD, during the persecution under Emperor Nero. Paul was beheaded. Peter was crucified, upside down at his request, since he did not feel he was worthy to die in the same manner as his Lord.
> - Andrew – went to the "land of the man-eaters," in what is now the Soviet Union. Christians there claim him as the first to bring the gospel to their land. He also preached in Asia Minor, modern-day Turkey, and in Greece, where he is said to have been crucified.
> - Thomas – was probably most active in the area east of Syria. Tradition has him preaching as far east as India, where the ancient Marthoma Christians revere him as their founder. They claim that he died there when pierced through with the spears of four soldiers.
> - Philip – possibly had a powerful ministry in Carthage in North Africa and then in Asia Minor, where he converted the wife of a Roman proconsul. In retaliation the proconsul had Philip arrested and cruelly put to death.
> - Matthew – the tax collector and writer of a Gospel, ministered in Persia and Ethiopia. Some of the oldest reports say he was not martyred, while others > say he was stabbed to death in Ethiopia.

> - Bartholomew – had widespread missionary travels attributed to him by tradition: to India with Thomas, back to Armenia, and also to Ethiopia and Southern Arabia. There are various accounts of how he met his death as a martyr for the gospel.
> - James – the son of Alpheus, is one of at least three James referred to in the New Testament. There is some confusion as to which is which, but this James is reckoned to have ministered in Syria. The Jewish historian Josephus reported that he was stoned and then clubbed to death.
> - Simon the Zealot – so the story goes, ministered in Persia and was killed after refusing to sacrifice to the sun god.
> - Matthais – was the apostle chosen to replace Judas. Tradition sends him to Syria with Andrew and to death by burning.
> - John – is the only one of the company generally thought to have died a natural death from old age. He was the leader of the church in the Ephesus area and is said to have taken care of Mary the mother of Jesus in his home. During Domitian's persecution in the middle 90's, he was exiled to the island of Patmos. There he is credited with writing the last book of the New Testament–the Revelation. An early Latin tradition has him escaping unhurt after being cast into boiling oil at Rome.

As Jesus said, if anyone does not hate his own life or is not willing to take up his cross to follow Him, then He cannot be His disciple. The interesting fact of why John was spared martyrdom is likely because he was the only disciple who did not run away and stayed with Jesus at the cross.

These are the similar roles of the Christ-Church analogy in Ephesians 5:

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

- Jesus sacrificially gave himself up for the sanctification of the Church, and the (future) bride of Christ is to follow Him and do everything they can to respect and obey Him: John 14:15 “If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.

- Husbands are to emulate Christ in his sacrificial love to help to sanctify his wife, and their wives are to emulate the bride of Christ to respect, submit, and obey.

To conclude, use this thought experiment to help gauge the interest level of a woman. If she’s only somewhat or lukewarm interested, singleness may be a better option than mar

Fear of marriage: the self fulfilling prophecy

December 27, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Attitudes and Marriage I made the comment that:

> A husband that is afraid that he may have everything taken away from him will not act rationally in his best interests in terms of the Biblical roles and responsibilities. What I mean by this is if a husband is in fear that his wife will divorce him, he will not be able to love her through sanctification. He will not be able to call her out and correct her when she is off course. He won't be able to lead the marriage effectively due to being afraid of the potential consequences of her unhappiness. He won't be able to stand firm during her moodiness and eventually capitulate. He'll have a difficult time pushing back against a culture and and the churchians who suggest that "love" is "making his wife happy."
> This is not to say that those going into it with good attitudes will have godly and successful marriages. That certainly is not the case in every circumstance. Everyone has free will and even many people who were following or disciples of Jesus rejected him when the going got rough (e.g. John 6). However, it is true that it is likely that a bad attitude with corresponding responses will eventually lead to marital ruin.
> In this context, we can say that a husband who does not fear his wife but only fears God stands a much better chance at having not only a godly marriage but a successful marriage as well.

Any man with a fear of:

- what a woman may do to him if she becomes unhaaapy
- what the government will do to him if his wife files for divorce
- how he will be financially ruined due to the threat point of no fault divorce
- how his life will collapse or be different due to the threat point of no fault divorce

And such things should not marry.

It will contribute to and possibly end up being his own self fulfilling prophecy.

> 1 John 4:18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casts out fear, because fear involves punishment, and the one who fears is not perfected in love. 19 We love, because He first loved us. 20 If someone says, "I love God," and hates his brother, he is a liar; for the one who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen. 21 And this commandment we have from Him, that the one who loves God should love his brother also.

Having a correct eternal perspective puts you in the right frame of mind to be in a marriage. If you're playing scared, you're on the path to destruction.

For me, if my wife left, took the kids, took the house, took all the money, and did everything to screw me that would suck. A lot. I'd fight her every step of the way, but ultimately I know that God's got my back and I can still be effective at God's mission without her. I can say at judgment day that I did everything I could to save the marriage but she just walked.

Fighting the pornography habit

December 28, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I realized I haven't talked about this topic before on the blog I think, but these examples are one of the ways in which I help mentor men (and women if I get the odd encounter and I'm talking about it with one of them) with sexual temptations like pornography.

I was addicted to porn in the past for over 10+ years. This is what helped me break those habits.

> Ephesians 4:20 That, however, is not the way of life you learned 21 when you heard about Christ and were taught in him in accordance with the truth that is in Jesus. 22 You were taught, with regard to your former way of life, to put off your old self, which is being corrupted by its deceitful desires; 23 to be made new in the attitude of your minds; 24 and to put on the new self, created to be like God in true righteousness and holiness.

Becoming more holy is not just "taking off the old" but "putting on the new" too.

Jesus notes what happens when you only try to "take off the old":

> Matthew 12:43 "When an impure spirit comes out of a person, it goes through arid places seeking rest and does not find it. 44 Then it says, 'I will return to the house I left.' When it arrives, it finds the house unoccupied, swept clean and put in order. 45 Then it goes and takes with it seven other spirits more wicked than itself, and they go in and live there. And the final condition of that person is worse than the first. That is how it will be with this wicked generation."

If the 'house' is empty and not filled with godliness, it's going to be easier to fall back into temptation.

One of the reasons why "putting on the new" works so well is because you're focused on doing what is right. If you continually think about temptation–not looking at porn, you're actually continually tempting yourself because your mind is focused on it. When you continually tempt yourself, it's easy to fall into temptation.

Obviously, we are to also flee from temptation, but what should we flee to? Doing what is right.

So to sum up, here are some things to consider for putting on the new:

- What is your mission for God? Are you actively working toward it?
- Are you engaging in more spiritual disciplines to grow your faith? Reading your Bible, prayer, meditation, fasting, etc.?
- What are your spiritual gifts? How are you using them in the Church?
- What can you do to serve or lead in ministries at the Church?
- How can you be more involved in sharing your faith or living out your faith?
- Other ways to be disciplined such as working out, having a disciplined diet, and things like these can also help improve your self control and your temple of the Holy Spirit too.

There are things that many Christians are simply not doing or not doing enough. Christians are called not to be solely hearers of the word but doers. What are the “do-ing” things of living out your faith? Start actively doing them.

God loves inheritance and the West hates it

December 29, 2018 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

All throughout the Scriptures we see that God defines inheritance as something extremely important.

- Firstborn sons were given a double inheritance as they would succeed the family lineage
- Levirate marriage was required to produce an heir for their deceased brother
- Inherited land that was sold off by a family could be redeemed
- There is, of course, the obvious example of the inheritance of the land of Canaan due to the promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as well.

We see similar things in the NT, as God through Christ adopts us as His own children and provides us an inheritance:

> Ephesians 1:3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ, 4 just as He chose us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we would be holy and blameless before Him. In love 5 He predestined us to adoption as sons through Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the kind intention of His will, 6 to the praise of the glory of His grace, which He freely bestowed on us in the Beloved. 7 In Him we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses, according to the riches of His grace 8 which He lavished on us. In all wisdom and insight 9 He made known to us the mystery of His will, according to His kind intention which He purposed in Him 10 with a view to an administration suitable to the fullness of the times, that is, the summing up of all things in Christ, things [m]in the heavens and things on the earth.
> In Him 11 also we have obtained an inheritance, having been predestined according to His purpose who works all things after the counsel of His will, 12 to the end that we who were the first to hope in Christ would be to the praise of His glory. 13 In Him, you also, after listening to the message of truth, the gospel of your salvation—having also believed, you were sealed in Him with the Holy Spirit of promise, 14 who is given as a pledge of our inheritance, with a view to the redemption of God’s own possession, to the praise of His glory.

The West hates inheritance as it does many of the things of God such as authority, one man and one woman marriage, and other Biblical things.

Coming from a family background that is more “priveleged” will get you the scorn of others, despite the fact that generally the families that provide the priveleged background worked hard for their success and ability to transmit such an inheritance to their children.

Of course, the fact that we have inheritance does not mean we are to treat it lightly or scorn it like Esau. We should use any of it rightly and humbly as we can, but we should not despise it like many in our culture tell us to.

Our inheritance from being children of God makes us the most priveleged in the world, and that should motivate us to share it with others just as He has shared it with us.

Attachment theory and Big Five Personality traits

January 2, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From what I can see, attachment theory seeks to describe behaviors in infants and children that we generally carry on to later in life.

- Secure attachment occurs when children feel they can rely on their caregivers to attend to their needs of proximity, emotional support and protection. It is considered to be the best attachment style.
- Anxious-ambivalent attachment occurs when the infant feels separation anxiety when separated from the caregiver and does not feel reassured when the caregiver returns to the infant.
- Anxious-avoidant attachment occurs when the infant avoids their parents.
- Disorganized attachment occurs when there is a lack of attachment behavior.

The Big Five personality traits has some similar concepts that describe behavior from a traits perspective. I use the Big Five over something like Myers Briggs typology as it is one of the more scientifically validated tests.

- Openness to experience (inventive/curious vs. consistent/cautious). Appreciation for art, emotion, adventure, unusual ideas, curiosity, and variety of experience. Openness reflects the degree of intellectual curiosity, creativity and a preference for novelty and variety a person has. It is also described as the extent to which a person is imaginative or independent and depicts a personal preference for a variety of activities over a strict routine. High openness can be perceived as unpredictability or lack of focus, and more likely to engage in risky behaviour or drug taking.[5] Also, individuals that have high openness tend to lean, in occupation and hobby, towards the arts, being, typically, creative and appreciative of the significance of intellectual and artistic pursuits.[6]:191 Moreover, individuals with high openness are said to pursue self-actualization specifically by seeking out intense, euphoric experiences. Conversely, those with low openness seek to gain fulfillment through perseverance and are characterized as pragmatic and data-driven—sometimes even perceived to be dogmatic and closed-minded. Some disagreement remains about how to interpret and contextualize the openness factor.[clarification needed]
- Conscientiousness (efficient/organized vs. easy-going/careless). Tendency to be organized and dependable, show self-discipline, act dutifully, aim for achievement, and prefer planned rather than spontaneous behavior. High conscientiousness is often perceived as being stubborn and focused. Low conscientiousness is associated with flexibility and spontaneity, but can also appear as sloppiness and lack of reliability.[7]
- Extraversion (outgoing/energetic vs. solitary/reserved). Energetic, surgency, assertiveness, sociability and the tendency to seek stimulation in the company of others, and talkativeness. High extraversion is often perceived as attention-seeking and domineering. Low extraversion causes a reserved, reflective personality, which can be perceived as aloof or self-absorbed.[7] Extroverted people may appear more dominant in social settings, as opposed to introverted people in this setting.[6]

- Agreeableness (friendly/compassionate vs. challenging/detached). Tendency to be compassionate and cooperative rather than suspicious and antagonistic towards others. It is also a measure of one's trusting and helpful nature, and whether a person is generally well-tempered or not. High agreeableness is often seen as naive or submissive. Low agreeableness personalities are often competitive or challenging people, which can be seen as argumentative or untrustworthy.[7]
- Neuroticism (sensitive/nervous vs. secure/confident). Tendency to be prone to psychological stress.[6] The tendency to experience unpleasant emotions easily, such as anger, anxiety, depression, and vulnerability. Neuroticism also refers to the degree of emotional stability and impulse control and is sometimes referred to by its low pole, "emotional stability". High stability manifests itself as a stable and calm personality, but can be seen as uninspiring and unconcerned. Low stability manifests as the reactive and excitable personality often found in dynamic individuals, but can be perceived as unstable or insecure.[7] Also, individuals with higher levels of neuroticism tend to have worse psychological well being.[8]

In general, I think the "attachment theory" traits are just combinations of the Big Five personality traits. For instance,

- Secure attachment – higher on openness, higher on extraversion, high on agreeable, low on neuroticism
- Anxious-ambivalent – low on openness, low on extraversion, moderate on agreeable, high on neuroticism
- Avoidant – Probably low on openness, low on extraversion, very low on agreeableness (so very disagreeable), and high on neuroticism (high psychological stress through very easily negative emotionally affected).
- Disorganized – combinations of them that don't mix well.

Recognizing these things things as a combination of traits that can be worked on and counseled is important.

Also from the above link:

> A study of gender differences in 55 nations using the Big Five Inventory found that women tended to be somewhat higher than men in neuroticism, extraversion, agreeableness, and conscientiousness. The difference in neuroticism was the most prominent and consistent, with significant differences found in 49 of the 55 nations surveyed. Gender differences in personality traits are largest in prosperous, healthy, and more gender-egalitarian cultures. A plausible explanation for this is that acts by women in individualistic, egalitarian countries are more likely to be attributed to their personality, rather than being > attributed to ascribed gender roles within collectivist, traditional countries

This makes some sense, and generally higher scores on neuroticism have issues with trust and bonding and more easily respond to psychological negative emotions. This is why women tend to have higher diagnosed bipolar and other psychological disorders. This is also why it can be more useful to be kind(er) to women than men in regard to Christian instruction, especially correction, admonishment, and rebuke.

All in all, I think knowledge of such trends is used to recognize in those important to you like family, friends and others, so that you can use it to influence them well as a Christian and help raise them up in spiritual maturity.

Tim Tebow blinded by infatuation redux

So I had previously written on Tim Tebow with the post title being "blinded by infatuation" commending him for staying a virgin against sexual temptation. He recently got engaged to a former miss universe.

Hopefully he has a godly marriage because he does seem like a legitimate Christian, but there are definitely some possible yellow to red flags here.

- Demi-Leigh Nel-Peters – I'm not one to usually rag on hyphenated names of a child who has one, but it's usually a yellow flag because the family is more inclined toward feminism than not.
- Her Miss Universe platform is feminist in nature and about things that have already been debunked:

> After winning her title, Nel-Peters made it her mission to focus on gender and pay equality, stressing the importance of confidence for women. She also expressed that she wants to use her self-defense workshops to help women protect themselves.
> During the round of questioning, she was asked what she thought was the most important issue facing women in the workplace: "In some places, women get paid 75 percent of what men earn for doing the same job, working the same hours, and I do not believe that this is right. I think we should have equal work for equal pay for women all over the world."

- She, like many cultural Christians, has used Jeremiah 29:11 out of the context.
- She's like the typical pro you-go-grrrl:

> The campaign, which aims at empowering women around the world with skills and knowledge on how to prevent or handle abusive and violent situations, was started in 2017.
> "Becoming Miss Universe made me realize that women worldwide face the same challenges daily, such as various forms of violence and crime, physical and emotional abuse, and toxic relationships, among others," Nel-Peters said after the launch.
> "My hope is that Unbreakable will inspire women to believe in themselves, to value themselves and to know that asking for help does not mean you are weak," she said.

I don't know them so they could both be legit Christians, but there are some possible warning signs that hopefully Tebow has taken into account. I hope for his sake he has not been blinded by infatuation.

Civil marriage and private marriage

January 18, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since this is coming up a bunch more in the fear of marriage as the self fulfilling prophecy, let's discuss it some more.

Cane wrote about this a while ago, which I agree with.

> Christians should file civil marriage certificates for many reasons. For one thing it is the law and we are bound as Christians to be obedient to civil authorities unless it is against the commandments of God. There is nothing against marriage licenses in the Bible.
> Second, it is the God-appointed duty of the civil government to punish evil and approve good, and when done lawfully marriage is a good; about as good as anything on Earth gets. When a marriage is unlawful–such as in a case of bigamy or incest–then the practitioners are duly punished. The churches don't do that. We may want churches to do that and we may even think they should, but they don't. They cannot verify to us that Susan and Bob aren't close relations. They don't know whether Bob is already married. They cannot even verify that Susan is who she says she is. Nor do they want to.
> Some will be tempted to bring up in the comments some failures of civil government such as so-called "homosexual marriage", or the institution of no-fault divorce. Those are failures, to be sure. The trouble for would-be defenders of the churches is that these points of failure are not points of success for churches. They don't claim authority over these abominations either. A pastor or priest might mouth something against these sins, but they let them in the doors all the same; even though we are instructed.

The problem with those who 'fear the government on marriage' is that they're basically falling into the same exact pattern of thought they hate with feminists about authority and Patriarchy. Just because 'some' men abused authority or Patriarchy means that authority is bad (when men have it) or Patriarchy is bad. Therefore, we should avoid these things completely.

This also means that if you want to 'protect' yourself in marriage you have the ability to do that too under the law. Prenups at least 3+ months before marriage, disclosing everything, a lawyer for you and her, video taped, and enough time to show that there is no duress will almost inevitably hold up in court. Usually pre-nups only get thrown out if it's too close to the marriage or you both didn't have lawyers or things like that. There are also other alternatives such as putting money into trusts earmarked specifically for certain things like any future kids.

I fail to see the point of going legalistic: we're married but not actually 'married' by the state.

1. As mentioned before, fear of marriage as the self fulfilling prophecy.
2. As mentioned before, falling into the same thought patterns as feminists
3. We are to be obedient to earthly authorities
4. Concern of earthly over the spiritual: material possessions over oneness. This is like the Church of Laodicea trying to have one foot in the world vs the other in the Church.
5. It will generally destroy some amount of trust and goodwill, which you obviously do not want to do.
6. You're basing your fearful conclusions about women specifically on the thoughts and actions of promiscuous women. This one of the huge issues with the 'secular red pill' that can lead many Christians astray as it makes you jaded and bitter when it's only a specific population of women that does this.
7. There are legal benefits of marriage and especially name change that make things much easier in terms of taxes, healthcare, insurance, and things like these.

All in all, I don't really see any benefits of private marriage, and I think that it's unnecessary fear mongering (See: 1 John 4).

One of the new stats that I've seen is that men and women who are focused on evangelism and disciple making in the Church have divorces rates <2%. Those who are actually focused on Jesus' mission for us aren't going to be divorcing at any appreciable rates. The reason why the divorce rates in the Church are as high as they are is because the majority of those in Churches are family Christians, cultural Christians, Sunday-only Christians or social Christians. I keep saying this but there's probably only about 5-10% of people in most Churches who have Jesus at the center of their lives. If you marry a family, cultural, Sunday-only, or social Christian then yeah they're probably going to possibly opt to blow up marriages if they're unhappy like the world does. Other corroborating anecdotes [one] and [two] about the 5-15%ish range.

Personality traits, attitudes and divorce

Haven't posted more vetting stuff in a while, but here are some additional things you can look for. Psyblog covers some of combination of Big 5 traits associated with increased risk of cheaters. I recently had a post on the Big 5 traits and attachment theory, so this fits in fairly well.

> The conclusions come from a survey of 208 people, who were asked about their relationships and whether they had cheated.
> Up to 50% of people admit cheating on their partner, the authors write:
> "Early studies reported that by the age of 40, 50% of all married men and more than 25% of all married women have engaged in extramarital sexual behavior.
> Three decades later, an estimated 50% of men continued to engage in sexual and/or emotional extramarital relations while 40% of women engaged in similar relationships."
> The results of the study revealed that cheaters tend to be low in conscientiousness, extraverted and open to experience.

An N of 200 is rather insignificant in the grand scheme of things, but it's interesting to see that 50% of men and 40% of women are cheaters (emotional or physical).

Low in conscientiousness "is associated with flexibility and spontaneity, but can also appear as sloppiness and lack of reliability" and extraversion + open to experience means that they're more likely to seek out 'novel' or 'thrill seeking' behavior. Cheating is obviously one of those types of things. Would not be surprised to see that this falls into similar patterns with alcohol, drug, and other novel substance tendencies.

To go along with this, there is another Psyblog on infidelity that corresponds to women specifically:

> Narcissism is one of the strongest predictors that someone will cheat in their relationship, research finds.
> Narcissists are likely to be vain, egocentric and over-confident — they like to show off their bodies, talk about themselves and put other people down.
> Two other personality factors that predict people's infidelity are unstable emotions and psychopathy.
> People who are unstable are unreliable, careless, badly organised and find it hard to resist temptation.
> Psychopaths, meanwhile, are irresponsible, spontaneous and manipulative.

Per the authors of the study:

> "One of the strongest predictors is Narcissism.

> Women high on Narcissism predict that they will flirt with, kiss, and date other men, as well as have one night stands, brief affairs, and serious affairs with other men.
> …two equally strong predictors of mild and serious infidelity are low Conscientiousness and high Psychoticism.
> These variables are correlated, and share the common component of impulsivity and inability to delay gratification.
> And like Narcissism, Conscientiousness and Psychoticism are stronger predictors of women's anticipated infidelities than men's anticipated infidelities.
> These findings suggest that a personality style marked by impulsivity, low dependability, and low reliability in general carries over…"

To go along with this is also Gottman's research on the 4 horseman of the (divorce) apocalypse.

- Criticism — The first horseman is criticism. Criticizing your partner is different than offering a critique or voicing a complaint. The latter two are about specific issues, whereas the former is an ad hominem attack. It is an attack on your partner at the core of their character. In effect, you are dismantling their whole being when you criticize.
- Contempt — The second horseman is contempt. When we communicate in this state, we are truly mean—we treat others with disrespect, mock them with sarcasm, ridicule, call them names, and mimic or use body language such as eye-rolling or scoffing. The target of contempt is made to feel despised and worthless.
- Defensiveness — The third horseman is defensiveness, and it is typically a response to criticism. We've all been defensive, and this horseman is nearly omnipresent when relationships are on the rocks. When we feel unjustly accused, we fish for excuses and play the innocent victim so that our partner will back off.
- Stonewalling — The fourth horseman is stonewalling, which is usually a response to contempt. Stonewalling occurs when the listener withdraws from the interaction, shuts down, and simply stops responding to their partner. Rather than confronting the issues with their partner, people who stonewall can make evasive maneuvers such as tuning out, turning away, acting busy, or engaging in obsessive or distracting behaviors.

Some of the Biblical antidotes to these are:

- Kindness: speak the Truth in Love.
- Respect from the wife, and honor from the husband
- Humility
- Valuing the relationship/marriage over personal feelings

These are some more traits and character qualities you should avoid when vetting a spouse.

January 21, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things I've been mulling over for a while now are 'level' of controversial statements about women in the New Testament in contrast to today's culture. Dalrock's what is the blue pill and Cane's for the love of the game gave me a bit of more inspiration to create this post.

Here's a few of the short list.

- Wives submit to your husbands (Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3)
- Women are not to teach or exercise authority over men in the Church (1 Tim 2)
- Women are to stay silent in Churches and ask their husbands at home (1 Cor 14)
- Women are to wear head coverings in prayer. And no, hair itself does not count as a head covering. (1 Cor 11)

I put this list together for fun to rank your level of Patriarchy, but there is some general truth to how seriously you take God's Word.

Here are the rankings. I tried to add some colorful, true commentary to each of the levels.

1. Patriarchy Level 0 – You agree with none of these and practice none of these. You probably call yourself an Biblical egalitarian but in reality you are a loud and proud feminist. You look for ways to conform the Bible to your cultural influenced opinion rather than God's Truth. Your responses to Biblical arguments are "but muh equality" or "it says there's mutual submission right there in Eph 5!" or "[insert long-winded made-up story about how Paul and Peter were saying things that are only culturally relevant]"
2. Patriarchy Level 1 – You agree with one of these and practice one of these. You are a unknowing closet feminist and likely a conservative complementarian like most Evangelical Christians. You probably claim to practice "wives submit to your husbands," but in practice she mostly wears the pants. You're very easily dragged to and fro by your wife's emotions, but still claim you're loving her for trying to placate those emotions instead of admonish her when she's going off track. You will probably be offended by reading this section passage if you are in this group.
3. Patriarchy Level 2 – You agree with some of these and practice one of these. Your eyes are starting to be pried open from the deception of complementarism and chivalry to patriarchy. You already knew that liberals don't care about God, but you can start to see that conservatives don't either. You're comfortable calling out men on their sin but still hesitate calling out women on their sin though you occasionally understand when to do it. You may or may not wear the pants in your relationship or marriage, but you understand that you should and are trying to act as the head of your marriage.
4. Patriarchy Level 3 – You agree with all of these and practice some of these.

You reject egalitarianism, complementarism, and chivalry. You consider complementarianism worse than egalitarianism because at least egalitarians admit they're Biblically disobedient. You've probably studied these passages in depth both exegetically and hermeneutically, but you're still cowardly about taking a stand in front of your family, friends, and the Church. You wear the pants in your relationship or marriage and are fairly comfortable calling both men and women out on their sin.

5. Patriarchy Level 4 – You agree with all of these and practice all of these. You are a true Biblical Patriarch. Feminists gnash their teeth at you. Sometimes "Christians" will talk to your family to try to convince them not to do some of these things. You might get weird looks or get called a cult leader by people under their breath. You wear the pants in your relationship or marriage and in most cases your family loves you and will defend you vehemently.

I will painfully admit that I am still level 3 instead of level 4. The process of sanctification is continual and still occurring in me.

Questions to my readers:

- What stage are you in? Single or married is fine. Also, wives can comment too about the status of their husband's stance in their marriages.
- What additional commentary can be added to each of these levels?

The least masculine society…

January 24, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm sure everyone has seen Babylon Bee's Least Masculine Society In Human History Decides Masculinity Is A Growing Threat:

> U.S.—As society becomes increasingly dominated by nerds, hipsters, and computer programmers, people have fixated on what they think is our biggest problem: masculinity.
> "It's just toxic and causes nothing but problems," said Elisha Mcewen, a vegan activist and no threat whatsoever to spiders or tight jar lids. "I was sharing my feelings on masculinity with other men in my drum circle, and we all agreed that if we ever encountered masculinity, we would run far away."
> Masculinity is said to have in the past been the cause of such things as violence, war, bullying, defeating the Nazis, carving society out of untamed wilderness, and landing men on the moon, but now masculinity is being driven out of society to make sure nothing like those things ever happens again. However, there are reports that masculinity still lurks out there, which is a source of anxiety to modern men and causes them to have upset tummies.
> "I am just so worried that somewhere out there someone is still knowingly producing testosterone," said Wyatt Lockhart, a Twitch streamer who had never thrown a punch outside of a video game. "I constantly have to find a safe place to calm down just thinking about it."

It's funny but sadly true satire (in response to the APA). The real crazy part is that I've seen this on facebook on non-Christian friend's walls. It's growing and it's getting more and more obvious even with people's blinders.

Maybe the Misandry Bubble will pop in 2020 like Singularity predicted… or perhaps it will get worse for another several years before it does. Crazy good prediction by them.

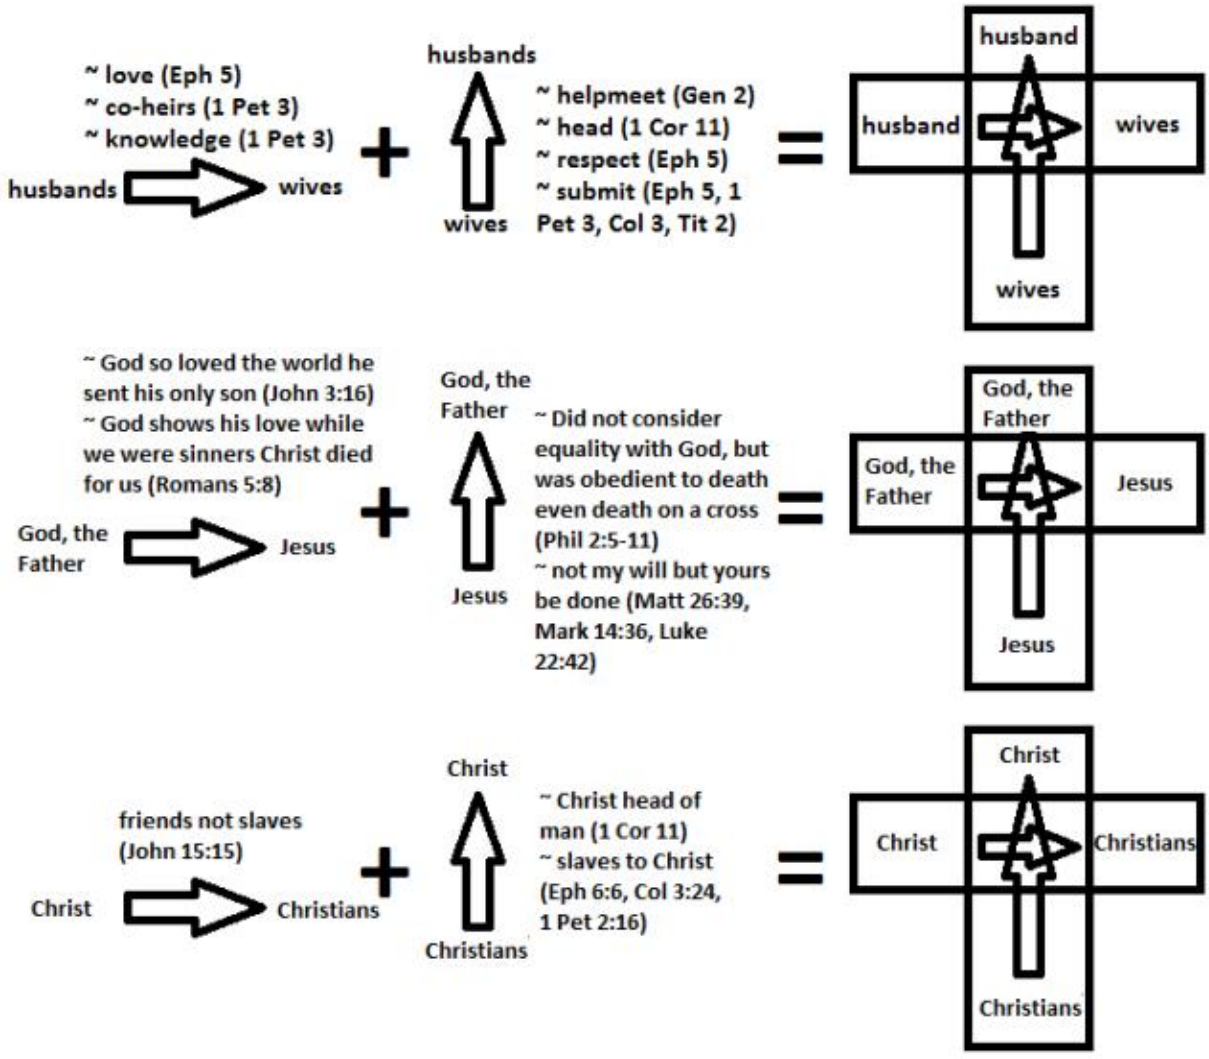
Headship in concept and practice

January 24, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I'm not sure if I have had a post before on this, but I've talked about it before.



Headship in concept

As we've discussed before, the structure of authority in the Bible for husbands and wives is modeled off Christ and the Church (Eph 5). This is the headship-submission model for the husband and wives (Eph 5, Col 3, Tit 3, 1 Peter 3, 1 Cor 11).

Egalitarians are wrong from the conceptual level. The husband and wife are one in Christ, but in Christ there is also the distinction of the head (Christ) and body (Church). Each Christian is given roles and responsibilities according to their own spiritual gifts and mission of God for them (1 Cor 12). Likewise, within the context of marriage, the husband is the head and the wife is the body.

Headship in practice

In practice, the husband has the role and responsibility of headship. That is that he is entrusted by God to be the head of the marriage. Patriarchal marriage mirrors many other structures of authority.

Authority brings order to marriage and various relationships, and proper use of authority and proper submission to it paints a beautiful picture of the cross.

The standard Biblical model is that husbands love and honor their wives and have them be a help to them where needed. She can keep an eye out for his blind spots, bring up things to him, and give input into any possible decision. A wise husband may also delegate some authority to his wife if she has gifts or talents in certain areas that she is better in than him. This is the model that my marriage follows and is the orthodox view.

Headship "egalitarianism"

On the other hand, a husband may choose to give half his kingdom to his wife. This is Biblical in that authority can be delegated (e.g. Jesus sends out the 70 with authority, God delegates 'all authority in heaven and earth' to Jesus after His resurrection). A husband may choose to delegate half of his authority to his wife.

I believe this to be extremely unwise, but a husband can still choose to do it. God will still hold the husband accountable for his headship, even if he chooses to be egalitarian in practice.

In other words, any wrongdoing that a wife does with her newfound authority will fall upon the husband because he chose to delegate his authority in this manner. Conceptual (and thus practical) egalitarian husbands, even though they are wrong, will also still be held accountable for how their wife uses her authority that he ignorantly but willingly delegated her.

> Matthew 20:25 But Jesus called them to Himself and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great men exercise authority over them. 26 It is not this way among you, but whoever wishes to become great among you shall be your servant, 27 and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be your slave; 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many."
> John 13:12 So when He had washed their feet, and taken His garments and reclined at the table again, He said to them, "Do you know what I have done to you? 13 You call Me Teacher and Lord; and you are right, for so I am. 14 If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another's feet. 15 For I gave you an example that you also should do as I did to you. 16 Truly, truly, I say to you, a slave is not greater than his master, nor is one who is sent greater than the one who sent him. 17 If you know these things, you > are blessed if you do them.

Jesus does not denigrate authority, give up authority, or cancel authority. Instead He calls us to use authority through leading by example to use it to love and serve others.

A husband who understands he has the role and responsibility of headship but chooses to run his marriage in an egalitarian manner by delegating half his authority to his wife is within his Biblical privilege*. If any Christian man wants to run his marriage a certain way he can, but he will also bear the consequences of that decision both earthly and at judgement day.

But I would council otherwise to all Christian men.

*: A wife cannot choose to have an “egalitarian marriage.” The husband has headship and therefore the authority to determine what type of marriage he wants to run. If a wife wants an egalitarian marriage, she should find a husband that wants to delegate her half of his authority. I haven’t seen a marriage where a husband or wife want this type of marriage who have not have had significant cultural blinders of authority.

: I have never seen a positive result of egalitarian marriage in practice. Not saying it doesn’t exist (as it could), but it seems to be exceedingly rare at the very least. Orthodox marriages have their own problems for sure, but I have seen many godly examples.

Red pills and blue pills

Dalrock did an excellent job explaining why some Christians associate with the red pill and blue pill distinction that the manosphere uses.

For posterity, I think it is useful to understand Christianity in the context of what the "red pill" is because most Christians who encounter the Christian manosphere do not understand it correctly.

What is the "red pill"

From the Matrix:

> Morpheus: "This is your last chance. After this, there is no turning back.
> - You take the blue pill—the story ends, you wake up in your bed and believe whatever you want to believe.
> - You take the red pill—you stay in Wonderland, and I show you how deep the rabbit hole goes.
> Remember: all I'm offering is the truth. Nothing more."

The "red pill" itself is about seeing the Truth and how deep the rabbit hole goes in terms of worldly and even Church deception about the nature of male and female sexuality. For Christians, the God and the Bible are the Truth.

The problem is that most Christians see the secular blogs and reddits like TRP and MRP and mix up understanding observational truths about human sexuality and confuse it with prescription about what you are supposed to do.

It is a common theme throughout the secular manosphere to basically understand female sexuality and then use it to sleep with as many women as possible. Obviously, this is one particular response to understanding the truth and male and female sexuality, but it is not the only response. There are several different responses which the manosphere fractured into many different groups.

- Secular manosphere – use the observational truth to try to cultivate strategies to sleep with women
- MRAs (men's rights activists) – use the truth to try to make laws even
- MGTOW (men going their own way) – stop trying to play the game because they're bitter against women
- INCELs (involuntary celibates) – just give up because women don't like them anyway or there's no hope
- Christian manosphere – follow the Bible because God's Truth is paramount

The problem is that most people – Christian and non-Christian – see the secular manosphere, the MRAs, the MGTOWs, and INCELs and assume that is what the "red pill" is. This is simply ignorance, but ignorance is also dangerous.

Common objections

First, one common objection to the "red pill" by Christian men who assume that other Christian men don't need it is some semblance of the following:

> Really we should be teaching and encouraging others to walk in love and have faith that everything else falls into place.

This is one of the big issues. Other common lines of thought are: 'being a nice young man with a job' or 'godliness is sexy' or 'just be you' or 'love God and everything will fall into place' as possibly told to you by many Christian parents and the Church are not things that women find attractive.

Are women generally more attracted to men that are leaders, have muscles, have good style and grooming, and status? Sure. I've made the point before that Christian women are often more attracted to positions with status such as pastor and worship band leader than the Church janitor or door greeter or parking lot attender.

But is it then find to go escalate and spin plates to something just short of sex? No. Is it OK to think that women are like children and should be treated as such? No. Is it OK to go all hardline on your wife and not love her unconditionally and honor her? No. There's a lot of 'prescription' stuff in the secular RP that is specifically anti-Christian and sin.

Second, another blurring factor that most Christians who get involved with RP do not understand that is a large chunk of the 'tactics of game' work specifically on a subset of women: promiscuous women.

Acting like a douche bag will attract some women sure (even some Christian women), but probably mainly the ones with daddy issues or ones that are looking for bad boys. Yes,

Christian women can be attracted to bad boys, but the ones who are wise about it will avoid them for relationships and marriage. Those are the ones you want to date and marry (the ones who are wise about avoiding bad boys), so acting that way won't help you get to that goal.

Third, still yet another issue that often comes up is the issue of anger and bitterness. This often leads to many generalizations about 'how all women are…' which is not always the case. General statements are okay with certain context, but anything stated out of anger or bitterness is probably not going to be accurate or godly. This is where you see many of the secular manosphere, MRAs, MGTOWs, and INCELs stuck with a lot of resentment and bitterness against women. This is not healthy.

Fourth, most things related to 'alpha' are misunderstood too. Alpha is honestly an annoying topic because it's such a buzzword but it just means behaviors or traits that are attractive to women. As said before, muscles are generally more attractive to women which will increase your pool of prospective dating candidates. Most of the men who find RP will find it because they are unsuccessful with women. Telling them to lose weight (if they are overweight or obese) or gain muscle (if they are underweight) will increase their attractiveness to the opposite sex.

Can you make being more sexually attractive into an idol? Sure. Can you make getting more attention from women an idol? You betcha. Can you look like an idiot trying to increase your 'alpha'? Yes. That doesn't detract from the fact that lifting does increase your pool of viable dating candidates for the most part.

Summary

For Christian men who desire a wife, the Bible is the guideline. God says that man is the head of the marriage, so to fulfill this role and responsibility he should be striving toward being a strong masculine leader, protector and provider (and also may need to work on other attractive traits if he's having trouble getting dates). These things tend to be attractive to women, so it's no surprise that men who strive toward this will tend to be more attractive to women.

Beyond these points, the main problem that I see is a lot of Christians are saying that "RP is bad" (which in most cases, it's true that the prescriptive stuff is bad) but then they don't have any advice when young men (or even women) say they need advice or want help in finding/attracting a spouse. Talking about the hard truths that appearances do matter to the opposite sex is one of the things that is always going to be controversial but needed.

This is much like the homosexuality issue that is plaguing the evangelical Church. People can't go over how sinful it is to be homosexual or 'RP' so they go and preach fire and brimstone on them not realizing that most of these people have been outcasts all their life. What they really need is compassion and the gospel because they are angry and hurting. When they convert, we should be helping mentor and disciple them according to God's Truth not continue throwing stones at them.

Do we ultimately need "the red pill"

The simple truth is that ultimately Christians do not need to associate with anything like “the red pill,” with the manosphere proper, or anything other naming conventions. Just like there is no such thing as a ‘gay’ Christian or a ‘straight’ Christian, we are not defined by our feelings and desires but following Jesus. You may be a Christian who struggles with certain temptations, but you are not defined by your temptations.

The Bible is the Truth (the ‘real’ red pill) and observing the sin nature of men and women in the world is instructive for Christians on how to avoid temptation. Christian men and women for thousands of years have not needed anything but the Bible for all walks of life including marriage.

However, much of the problem why single Christian men go to the manosphere in the first place is that the Church, friends, and family lie to them about what is attractive and/or aren’t interested in helping, discipling, or mentoring them Biblically to be successful with women and marriage.

By avoiding or eschewing these hard topics in the Church, the Church pushes men toward the secular by not providing the Christian worldview. As long as this continues to happen, Christian men will continue to seek out ways to be successful with women, even secular ones.

To me, this is a travesty. I hope I am not the only one who thinks this.

Wedding indicators galore

February 1, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Usually if you look at pictures of the groom and bride, you can tell who wears the pants in the relationship/marriage. Who is leaning into who is a decent indicator, but also how happy the groom and bride are respectively can also be one.

Obviously, if the wedding turns into a BrideZilla fest, this is a pretty obvious indicator that it’s not about marriage but about attention to the bride.

One I’ve been thinking about recently is the naming convention. The bride taking the last name of the groom is not always the case that the groom wears the pants. However, hyphenating or keeping her own name is a pretty good sign that the Bride is a independent woman who don’t need no man type of wife though (unless it’s a culture where it’s normal for the bride to keep her own last name).

Something I’ve been paying more attention to recently is who comes first in the wedding invitations. Is it “Groom and Bride’s wedding” or “Bride’s and Groom’s wedding.” The latter from what I’ve seen tends to mean the Bride tends to wear the pants more, especially when you consider that traditionally the bride and groom in western wedding become Mr and Mrs Groom’s name.

I’m sure there are more indicators that I’m missing too. Have any readers noticed any others?

Don’t lose sight of the mission

A recent reddit post proves fairly instructive:

> So I have been helping a friend grow his business for the past three years. His wife and my wife are both kind of loners so I introduced them to each other. They’ve become good friends and like to hang out.
> Lately, my friend and his wife have been having some struggles and he has started getting flirty with my wife. I’m not particularly worried about it, but my wife has noticed it and asked me how I feel about it.
> This morning I went to breakfast with my friend and while we were discussing marriage and RPC theology he ‘respectfully’ admits that he thinks my wife is hot..
> Is it advisable to leave this a mute subject or should I keep the topic open for discussion? My instinct is to tell my wife that my buddy thinks she’s hot and have a laugh about it with her.. it seems like that would keep things feeling safe for her. I’m not worried about her.. I’m leading (finally) and she’s enjoying following. I just don’t want to unnecessarily make this an issue for my wife, my friend, or his wife..

Most of the comments are about how if you’re ‘alpha’ you should be secure but also let him know that he’s out of line, it’s bad manners, telling him to stop, and other types of mate guarding.

Unfortunately, these are very limited views of the situation just solely thinking in terms of intersexual dynamics. If we are to be Christ-oriented, we need to think about this in terms of God’s mission first.

Hence, my reply:

> I do not agree with others that you have to be confrontational and/or mate guarding-ish behavior in this circumstance. It can be a good learning and teaching experience in a win-win type of scenario especially if you know he has good character and/or is a good learner otherwise .
> Does his wife have any weight to lose or acts unattractive or not submissive to him or things like that?
> One of the reasons why a man might be ‘attracted’ to another man’s wife is that she embodies things that he wants in a wife. A wife that is feminine, listens, and is submissive is an attractive prospect for many men… it does not necessarily have to be ‘physical attractiveness.’
> Here’s what I would do in your situation:
> 1. Tell your wife that yes he finds you hot for whatever reason. Don’t necessarily need to make it into a joke. I would avoid doing that.

> 2. If his wife has stuff to learn, maybe your wife can exert some influence on his wife to start changing for the better (if she has things she can change to be more attractive or a better follower)
> 3. Take him under your wing because you are already mentoring him and help to guide him that he can have a similar marriage to you.
> It is possible that you can act to turn things around in a good way (with your wife's help if she's willing) to help another man have a better marriage.

Turns out my hunch was fairly correct as the OP commented that some of what I thought was going on was the case.

> I've been watching the interactions closely. My wife doesn't flirt back and treats him more like a brother that she doesn't have to listen to. If there was touching, bumping, or inappropriate comments on his part I would have put an immediate stop to it, but nothing like that has happened yet. (Other than what he told me)
> His wife was an attractive woman when they married but she's gained about 60lbs while he stayed relatively fit.. she also picked up a good job, a feminist attitude, and withholds sex from him often.
> I realize that this could potentially go the wrong way, but at this point my goal is to exhort him and encourage them as a couple to get back on track. He and his wife are both believers and are trying to follow Christ and figure out all of this. He is much younger than me, has always shown good character. and seeks out my input on a variety of things. It seems obvious that there's a deficit in his own relationship .. but RPC is completely new to Him so there's definite potential for a quick turnaround.

Since that is the case, this is actually a very good opportunity to share about Biblical marriage and how it is supposed to work in practice. They're living out a good example of that, and a man he's already mentoring pretty much wants to learn from him about it.

> Yeah, that's what I thought was going on. Don't think it's malicious, but he does see your marriage dynamic and the beauty of both of you following Christ and wants it for himself.
> Hopefully both he and his wife are amenable to change and both you and your wife can help influence both of them at the same time!
> If his wife is impressed as your relationship too, your wife can probably influence her by suggesting that losing weight to be more attractive, adopting godly attitudes (respect and submission and kindness), and things like that can influence her husband to be more loving toward her and vice versa.
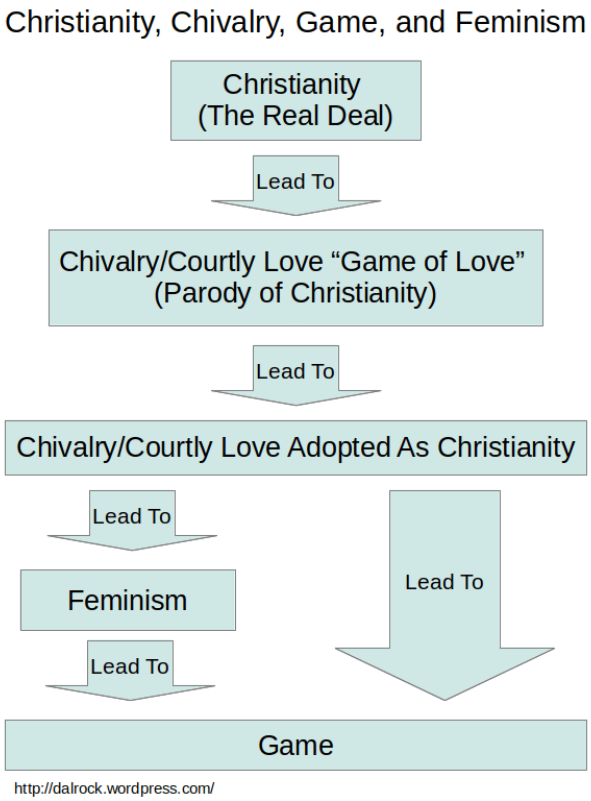
> Obviously, mentoring him on how to lead his wife and get his own stuff together will help too

The OP also clarifies that he was in the same position prior as well:

> Side note: as little as a few months ago my wife was also a card carrying feminist.. My friend has seen the drastic change in our marriage dynamic since I got involved with RP/RPC. It's been revolutionary for me, my marriage, my children .. everything is better than its ever been. It's only natural for Him to find this desirable.. I know that if he can process and employ the Biblical principles of masculinity in his own life, he'll see positive changes in his own relationship.

Things are not always as they seem and a surface level reaction like not trusting others or mate guarding is limited or even immature in response. It is almost always helpful to dig down to the root cause of the behavior because the issue is not necessarily the behavior but why they are responding in a particular way.

That's why I'm generally wary of basic "RP" advice when problems come up. Pretty much ALL of the rest of the comments were about how this was a bad thing when in fact it's actually probably a very good opportunity for Christian marriage witnessing and mentoring.



Remember: God's mission first. Look for opportunities to share Christ. Don't lose sight of the mission.

The reason why we emulate Christ and the Church with our marriage is that it's a thing of beauty and that gives us opportunities to share Christ when other men want the same thing too.

Christianity, chivalry, feminism, game, complementarianism, and egalitarianism

February 13, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to take a deeper look into the Dalrock's chart from the underlying assumptions of each of these and add in more analysis. Alternate link

Let's examine all of these in order.

Christianity's biblical marital roles and responsibilities are based on God's design.

To summarize them we have:

- Husband's headship, love, and honor
- Wifely submission, respect, affection, and helper
- Marital debt of each spouse to one another: freely give each other sex.
- Marriage is the place for sex and what makes it holy
- Marriage is a permanent covenant between a husband and a wife
- Each spouse adheres to the marital roles and responsibilities out of desire: they want to please God and meet their spouse's needs.
- The fundamental goal of Christians is to follow Jesus. Husbands and wives both follow Jesus, but the wife has the added role to follow her husband.

If you want to delve deeper into them you can see Genesis 1-3, Prov 31, Eph 5, Col 3, 1

Cor 7, 1 Cor 11 and 14, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, and others.

These are clear guidelines.

Chivalry is its own religion that has replaced Christianity for multiple tenets:

- A man must win his wife through masculine virtue (just as a knight wins a lady's hand)
- A husband must earn his place in the marital bed (corollary of the above, even in marriage. This leads to choreplay and the slow cooker theory)
- Romance is what makes sex holy (leads to divorce and adultery as 'feelings' change or a husband and wife idolizing the wife's feelings as to what sex)
- The implicit assumption through all of this is that the woman/wife is the head of the marriage, either by her husband perpetually trying to win her or by her feelings. This leads to an inversion of roles: a husband must respect his wife and her feelings as holy, while the wife's feeling become the 'love' (not even agape love) that the husband receives.

Chivalry is essentially a covert reversal of roles within the relationship, and replaces desire with works (husband must continually to win his wife) which is the antithetical to the Christian faith.

Complementarianism is chivalry except attempting to Biblically justify it.

- The husband and wife are equal, except the husband is the head. But "in practice" the husband is only a "tiebreaker" and not even that: servant leadership is touted that Jesus died sacrificially for the Church so the husband should die sacrificially for the wife (e.g. cater to her opinions and feelings) rather than the actual context of the passage which is Christ loved the Church sacrificially for the purpose of sanctification not to cater to his wife's feelings.
- A lack of sexual desire of a wife for her husband is seen as the husband being ungodly (e.g. romance is what makes sex holy).
- A wife with a lack of sexual desire must be won through the husband doing more for her as he is not sacrificing enough (e.g. choreplay, meeting her emotional needs, etc.)
- Pastors who tout complementarianism try to weasel out of telling wives to submit and husbands to be the head of the marriage. It is often the case that they say that it's not the husband's job or place should not be telling the wife she has to submit (even though it is, given the husband is tasked with helping his wife be sanctified).
- Likewise, they never talk about the how the Scripture says that each spouse has a marital debt to each other, regardless of their feelings. Instead, you get weird dogma that a wife will want to freely give herself to her husband if he is acting godly.

As you can see, complementarianism is basically chivalry given another name but still disguised as Christian.

It must be stated that the original CBMW who 'invented' complementarianism probably had good intentions, but it has ended up as wife worship much like many different attempts throughout Christian history to 'reform' have failed. See Aaron Renn's The History of the Church and Men (feminization of the Church).

Feminism is a clear offshoot of chivalry, except made more overt in nature.

- Overt change: The claim of equality of the husband and wife, but clear overt role reversal: the wife is in charge as any male leadership is evil.
- Overt change: The complete autonomy of the wife: she chooses whether or not she wants to have sex with her husband, divorce him, work when she wants, put her kids in daycare, etc. Yet, the husband must still sacrifice to make her happy so she can have it all.
- Continued chivalry: A wife's feelings are still the measuring stick of the relationship or marriage: if she will want to have sex with him or divorce him. If she's not feeling it, either she just fell out of love and that's the end or he's doing something wrong.
- Continued chivalry: romance and the associated feelings must still be earned through sacrifice and doing things for her to make her happy.

There are some places where feminism has overtly diverged from Christianity such as husband headship and wife submission. But much of the same principles of chivalry remain under such as the wife's feeling being the barometer of the health of the marriage.

Feminism simply gives the wife more tools to punish the husband if her feelings aren't into him anymore.

Egalitarianism is feminism, except attempting to Biblically justify it.

As you can see the parallels, you should not be surprised at this conclusion.

- The claim of equality of the husband and wife, and clear denial of authority via passages such as 'no male and female but you are one in Christ' and 'submit to one another in the fear of Christ' are taken out of context. The husband as the head is clearly bad, so the leadership defaults to the wife.
- As the wife is equal: she can decide what she wants to do in the marriage. She basically has autonomy to decide what she wants to do like in feminism. Where the husband and wife each want the same thing that's "good." But if she differs, she can and will do her own thing (though the husband can't since he's supposed to love her).
- Like chivalry and feminism, a wife's feelings are still the measuring stick of the relationship or marriage: if she will want to have sex with him. If she's not feeling it, either she just fell out of love or he's doing something wrong. The only difference is that they generally pay lip service to not divorcing.

- Like chivalry and feminism, romance and the associated feelings must still be earned through sacrifice and doing things for her to make her happy.

Egalitarianism is a weird mix between chivalry and feminism and trying to Biblically justify it. The main difference between feminism and egalitarianism is that they need to at least give consideration to the Scripture (though they twist it in certain ways). However, they can't get around some of it like no divorce but usually do it anyway in practice.

Game unfortunately is hard to discuss because there's no agreed upon definition of what it is. However, Dalrock does a good job of defining how it works in relation to the above:

> Game came about as a reaction to the practical reality created by chivalry and chivalry's spawn feminism. Game is a logical response to chivalry and feminism's joint rebellion against Christian sexual morality. Game is a reaction to the chivalrous and feminist lie that women are sexually attracted to masculine virtue, and that the way a man can seduce a woman (or otherwise please her) is to submit to her. Game is a practical rejection of the obvious lie regarding what sexually arouses women. Rejecting a lie is in itself virtuous, but the most learned practitioners of Game employ it to take full advantage of the feminist and (modern) Christian rejection of Christian sexual morality.

At the fundamental core, game is aimed at several different tenets of chivalry and feminism. Dalrock mentioned a couple here, but there are several.

- Game rejects that women are attracted to masculine virtue, or, in other words, a man must work to be attractive to her. (e.g. the idea that a man must win her with a huge and elaborate engagement and other displays of behavior).
- Game rejects that men must earn sex with women (e.g. the idea that a man must be romantic and do things such as taking her out on dates, giving her flowers, giving her compliments, giving her gifts, etc.).
- Game rejects the implicit chivalrous and feminist role reversal that a woman is in charge (e.g. a subset of what most would call game is about 'teasing' and/or 'negging' to bring a woman down a notch and/or elevate your own position in her eyes. Note: I'm not arguing about the morality of such actions here).
- Game aims help men understand that attraction is based on desire and not of works (e.g. men cannot do anything to make a woman like him more).
- Game aims to show men that their goal should not be women as the pedestalization of women leads to relationship failure (e.g. outcome independence, mission not women, etc.).

As you can see, game rejects many of the principles of chivalry and feminism (and by extension complementarianism and egalitarianism) and supposedly agrees with Christianity on many principles which is why there are various and continued disagreements about it's morality within the Christian community.

Final thoughts

Personally, I wouldn't call chivalry a parody of Christianity like Dalrock. As I described in usurpers, in ancient Canaan the goddess 'Asherah' is synonymous with the goddess of heaven, and another name for her is 'Qudesh' or 'holiness.' Therefore, Chivalry and its offshoots are basically another form of goddess worship.

There is a reason why we call inversion of roles the pedestalization of women. It's literally place her on a pedestal, like those in Biblical times would place their idols on to worship. Serving a woman and her feelings is literally synonymous with being holy, according to the cult goddess offshoots chivalry, complementarianism, feminism, and egalitarianism.

It should be no surprise that Jezebel was one of the people who made Asherah worship much more prevalent. Jezebel usurped Ahab's authority (and he went along with it, as do complementarians and egalitarians) to do much evil in Israel. Jezebel is one of the role models for feminism as well.

This is also why the so-called divorce rates of Christians are similar to the secular culture. When the Church is only peddling versions of cult goddess marriages and twisting the Scriptures to fit their whim, it shouldn't be a surprise that marriages are going to fail at similar rates.

I'm pretty terrible with graphics, so I'm not going to try to attempt to do a chart like Dalrock's. Any of you who have seen my MS paint skills need not see another one.

Christianity

Chivalry –> Complementarianism (attempt to justify chivalry biblically)

Feminism –> Egalitarianism (attempt to justify feminism biblically)

Game (works against chivalry, complementarianism, feminism, and egalitarianism)

Also, I am still of the opinion that 'game' is unneeded and that focus on the Bible marital roles and responsibilities with good fathering and mentoring/discipling are all that are needed. Everything is an offshoot of Christianity as God made everything.

Song of Songs alternative explanation

A year or so ago, I ran across a different interpretation of Song of Songs from a friend that seems to make the most sense given context of the passage. Forgot about making a post on it, but recently this came up. Here's the executive summary:

> Here's a different story: A young, beautiful, Shulammite farm-girl is betrothed to her sweet-heart who is a shepherd. One day the King travels by with his retinue and eyes this young beauty. He orders her to be taken into his harem. She is taken against her will to the harem of Solomon's wives and concubines. She is desperate not to be violated and to escape so that she can return to her betrothed. She manages to escape and asks the night watchmen if they have seen her betrothed looking for her. Before she can successfully return, she is recaptured but this time kept under lock and key. Solomon makes his inevitable advances but she diplomatically resists him despite his offers of wealth, power and fame. After a possible period of years, she is allowed to return to home where her brothers come out to meet her and question whether she has remained faithful to her betrothed. She tells them that despite the time she has been away (her young sister has now become a young woman) she has indeed remained faithful to the covenant with her betrothed. And thus ends a beautiful illustration of faithfulness which indicts Israel for its unfaithfulness towards God.

This is also from the page (and I didn't quote all of the analysis), so click through if you want to read the whole thing. I quoted selected parts and I am not putting it in quotes since it compresses the side by side into something very unreadable.

SONG OF SOLOMON	COMMENTARY SHOWING THAT IT IS NOT ABOUT HER LOVE FOR SOLOMON
Song 1:1 The Song of Songs, which is Solomon's.	This was either written by Solomon, or about him.
Song 1:5 ¶ I am very dark, but lovely, O daughters of Jerusalem, like the tents of Kedar, like the curtains of Solomon. Song 1:6 Do not gaze at me because I am dark, because the sun has looked upon me. My mother's sons were angry with me; they made me keeper of the vineyards, but my own vineyard I have not kept!	This Shulammite girl was tanned because she was not a usual member of the royal harem, but rather, worked outdoors in her family's vineyard.

Song 1:7 Tell me, you whom my soul loves, where you pasture your flock, where you make it lie down at noon; for why should I be like one who veils herself beside the flocks of your companions?

This makes little sense if she is asking about Solomon–but it makes a lot of sense if she is talking about her shepherd-fiance.

Song 1:8 ¶ If you do not know, O most beautiful among women, follow in the tracks of the flock, and pasture your young goats beside the shepherds' tents.

Where can her lover be found? Not in the Palace. Not in Jerusalem. But follow the shepherds' track which leads to the shepherds' tents and you'll find her lover.

Song 1:9 ¶ I compare you, my love, to a mare among Pharaoh's chariots.
Song 1:10 Your cheeks are lovely with ornaments, your neck with strings of jewels.
Song 1:11 ¶ We will make for you ornaments of gold, studded with silver.

Solomon attempts to lure her with precious jewelry.

Song 1:12 ¶ While the king was on his couch, my nard gave forth its fragrance.
Song 1:13 My beloved is to me a sachet of myrrh that lies between my breasts.
Song 1:14 My beloved is to me a cluster of henna blossoms in the vineyards of Engedi.

In the midst of Solomon's seductions she remembers her shepherd lover and speaks of him in a way that recalls their time in the vineyard.

Song 1:15 ¶ Behold, you are beautiful, my love; behold, you are beautiful; your eyes are doves.
Song 1:16 ¶ Behold, you are beautiful, my beloved, truly delightful. Our couch is green;
Song 1:17 the beams of our house are cedar; our rafters are pine…
Song 2:6 His left hand is under my head, and his right hand embraces me!
Song 2:7 I adjure you, O daughters of Jerusalem, by the gazelles or the does of the field, that you not stir up or awaken love until it pleases.
Song 2:8 The voice of my beloved! Behold, he comes, leaping over the mountains, bounding over the hills.
Song 2:9 My beloved is like a gazelle or a young stag. Behold, there he stands behind our wall, gazing through the windows, looking through the lattice…

She talks of the love between her and the shepherd she is betrothed to and remembers some of the special romantic moments they have shared. Note the rural terminology she uses to describe her love for her betrothed and note verses 9 and 17 as describing him as "young".

Song 3:1 ¶ On my bed by night I sought him whom my soul loves; I sought him, but found him not.
Song 3:2 I will rise now and go about the city, in the streets and in the squares; I will seek him whom my soul loves. I sought him, but found him not.
Song 3:3 The watchmen found me as they went about in the city. “Have you seen him whom my soul loves?”
Song 3:4 Scarcely had I passed them when I found him whom my soul loves. I held him, and would not let him go until I had brought him into my mother’s house, and into the chamber of her who conceived me.

Vs. 1 – Despite being taken by Solomon to be a member of his harem, she longs to return to her village where her betrothed shepherd lover awaits.
Vs. 2 – She suspects that her sweetheart has come to Jerusalem to find her and take her back. She arises in the night to look for him.
Vs. 3 – She is found by the night watchmen and asks them whether they have seen her shepherd lover. This is nonsensical if she is referring to Solomon because he was in his palace under the protection of other guards.
Vs. 4 – She and her fiance then find each other and they quickly flee back to her childhood village.

Song 3:6 ¶ What is that coming up from the wilderness like columns of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all the fragrant powders of a merchant?
Song 3:7 Behold, it is the litter of Solomon! Around it are sixty mighty men, some of the mighty men of Israel, Song 3:8 all of them wearing swords and expert in war, each with his sword at his thigh, against terror by night.
Song 3:9 King Solomon made himself a carriage from the wood of Lebanon.

But Solomon soon realises that she has escaped and comes to her village in a royal carriage with armed soldiers to take her back by force.

Song 4:1 ¶ Behold, you are beautiful, my love, behold, you are beautiful! Your eyes are doves behind your veil. Your hair is like a flock of goats leaping down the slopes of Gilead…
Song 4:11 Your lips drip nectar, my bride; honey and milk are under your tongue; the fragrance of your garments is like the fragrance of Lebanon.

After recapturing his harem trophy, Solomon cranks up the seduction with flattery (4:1-11).

Song 4:12 A garden locked is my sister, my bride, a spring locked, a fountain sealed...
Song 4:15 a garden fountain, a well of living water, and flowing streams from Lebanon.
Song 4:16 Awake, O north wind, and come, O south wind! Blow upon my garden, let its spices flow.

Solomon becomes frustrated that he can not consummate his latest harem kidnapping. To him she is a “locked garden”, a “sealed fountain” (4:12-16).

Song 5:2 ¶ I slept, but my heart was awake. A sound! My beloved is knocking. “Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my perfect one, for my head is wet with dew, my locks with the drops of the night.”
Song 5:3 I had put off my garment; how could I put it on? I had bathed my feet; how could I soil them?
Song 5:4 My beloved put his hand to the latch, and my heart was thrilled within me.
Song 5:5 I arose to open to my beloved, and my hands dripped with myrrh, my fingers with liquid myrrh, on the handles of the bolt.
Song 5:6 I opened to my beloved, but my beloved had turned and gone. My soul failed me when he spoke. I sought him, but found him not; I called him, but he gave no answer.

As the Shulammite slept she dreamt of her beloved once again rescuing her. In her dream (“I slept, but my heart was awake“) he betrothed comes to Jerusalem to take her back to their village, but alas it is only a dream – “I called him but he gave no answer.”

Song 5:7 The watchmen found me as they went about in the city; they beat me, they bruised me, they took away my veil, those watchmen of the walls.

She can it no longer so she once again makes another escape attempt. But this time the Palace Guards are wise to her and capture her – “they bruised me, they took away my veil”. This makes absolutely no sense at all if it is talking about a willing wife of Solomon as the Palace Guards would not ordinarily be brutalising the King’s wife.

Song 5:8 I adjure you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if you find my beloved, that you tell him I am sick with love.
Song 5:9 ¶ What is your beloved more than another beloved, O most beautiful among women? What is your beloved more than another beloved, that you thus adjure us?
Song 5:10 ¶ My beloved is radiant and ruddy, distinguished among ten thousand.
Song 5:11 His head is the finest gold; his locks are wavy, black as a raven.
Song 5:12 His eyes are like doves beside streams of water, bathed in milk, sitting beside a full pool.
Song 5:13 His cheeks are like beds of spices, mounds of sweet-smelling herbs. His lips are lilies, dripping liquid myrrh.
Song 5:14 His arms are rods of gold, set with jewels. His body is polished ivory, bedecked with sapphires.
Song 5:15 His legs are alabaster columns, set on bases of gold. His appearance is like Lebanon, choice as the cedars.
Song 5:16 His mouth is most sweet, and he is altogether desirable. This is my beloved and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.
Song 6:1 ¶ Where has your beloved gone, O most beautiful among women? Where has your beloved turned, that we may seek him with you?
Song 6:2 ¶ My beloved has gone down to his garden to the beds of spices, to graze in the gardens and to gather lilies.
Song 6:3 I am my beloved's and my beloved is mine; he grazes among the lilies.

The other members of the King's harem ("daughters of Jerusalem") ask this Shulammite ("most beautiful among women") what her beloved looks like? (5:9). This would be an absurd question if the beloved in question was Solomon, but it makes perfect sense if the Shulammite's beloved is her childhood sweetheart, her betrothed, her shepherd-lover. Their other question about where to find her beloved one (6:1) is also nonsensical if her beloved is Solomon. Her answer is that he is grazing (sheep) among the lilies (6:3).

In any case, I only quoted about 50% of the analysis. If you look at the rest of Song of Songs (see the original analysis), the passage makes a TON more sense in this context.

- Why is the Shulammite woman running away from Solomon's harem to search the city for her 'love' when she would already know right where he is?
- All of the passages that talk about the one whom the Shulammite woman loves are about a rural-ish probably shepherd rather than Solomon the known king of the country.

- Why would the watchmen have to beat up the Shulammite women for trying to find her ‘love’ if it was Solomon when she knew he was in the palace… only if she was trying to find her original love and the watchmen had to bring her back to the harem.
- Why would the harem not know what her ‘lover’ looks like unless he was not Solomon?

Therefore, the original context of Song of Songs from Solomon’s point of view is the fact that this woman was loyal to her beloved (a rural shepherd), even going so far to eschewing the temptation of being with the king of the nation (luring her with jewelry, flattery, taking her captive, etc.). To Solomon, she was “the one that got away.”

This is a picture of what God originally intended as the S*hepherd* of Israel… that the Shulammite (Israel) would stay loyal to Him even as she was tempted by the the surrounding nations to betray Him. This also parallels Israel wanting a king like the surrounding nations (and God gave them Saul) instead of staying loyal to God and following Him only.

The over-spiritualization of dating

February 16, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've mainly seen this from Evangelicals, although some from others as well. Christian men and women generally want to know or believe that:

1. God "hand picked" their spouse for them
2. You need confirmation from God before dating your spouse

Let's look at these two concepts.

- Regarding God "hand picking" their spouse I believe that's false, but God allows or possibly gives opportunities for us to take action.

I've know a couple cases where "God" tells someone that someone is going to be their spouse and it happened. On the other hand, I've also known many more cases where "God" told someone that someone was going to be their spouse, and it didn't happen which led to tons of heart break on both sides. Some people didn't discern whether it was God or not (1 John 4).

We have free will. We can pick and choose who to ask out or decide to marry, even if God gives us hints that someone might be good (or even bad) for us for some Christians.

There is no "one" or soulmate or anything like that. Who you marry is your "one." Soulmates are a myth as there is no marriage is heaven.

- Regarding confirmation from God I believe that's all false. I think there's over-spiritualizing of the 'asking out' and 'dating' process, especially with the Evangelical crowd. It puts a large amount of impediments in your way before even going on a date.

Why do you need to pray to 'get to know someone better'? Just ask them out (or accept a date) and see if they like you and get to know their personality and character. Pray and decide from there.

I did pray during the relationship and before engagement and marriage starting I decide she was a good girlfriend candidate because that's when there's at least some form of 'commitment'ish behavior where you're headed toward marriage and you want your potential spouse to be growing with you to be like Christ in action and character.

Stumbling blocks

February 21, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Most people are familiar with how Christians are to act. For example:

- Christian husbands are supposed to act according to their own marital roles and responsibilities
- Christian wives are supposed to act according to their own marital roles and responsibilities

This can be difficult for complementarians and egalitarians as they usually try to deliberately distort these.

However, what we don't usually see is that there is another command throughout the Scripture that is supposed to be between any Christian, including husbands and wives:

- We are responsible for how we influence others around us: towards Christ or as a stumbling block to them.

Obviously, Romans 14 and 1 Corinthians 8 admonish the 'stronger' Christians to take into consideration the weaker brothers and sisters in Christ. If you know you can eat meat without being defiled but your brother thinks that it does defile, then don't flaunt it before him and so possibly cause him to stumble in his faith.

Most often we see this with modesty and chastity and mixing Christianity with feminism. Yes, it's true that each person is responsible for their own heart and eyes, but if we're dressing immodestly or acting in an unchaste manner that is also the fault of the one who is doing that. Not the responsibility of the person who is to guard their own heart or eyes.

Feminism tells young women (mostly) that they can wear whatever they want… revealing clothes, short skirts, and so on and no one is supposed to judge them for it. That's wrong. If the way you dress is influencing others towards temptation, that's antithetical to acting in a Christian manner.

Usually in marriage we see this play out with sex. Yes, a spouse is not supposed to be involved with pornography or romance novels. But if the other spouse is denying them sex (against clear Biblical command) and that is influencing them toward being tempted by pornography or romance novels, they are also complicit in their sin. They will have to stand before God for that.

Sometimes I feel like a broken record on the blog, but it's clear that Jesus' command to "love one another as I have loved you" means that He would not advocate putting stumbling blocks in front of other people so as to tempt them toward sin.

Yet, we always want "freedom" to do what we want, even at the cost of our fellow Christians being tempted and falling into to sin.

Masculinity and violence

I came across an interesting study.

> To understand and ultimately prevent injury and behavioural health outcomes associated with masculinity, we assessed the influence of masculine discrepancy stress (stress that occurs when men perceive themselves as falling short of the traditional gender norms) on the propensity to engage in stereotypically masculine behaviours (eg, substance use, risk taking and violence) as a means of demonstrating masculinity.

So basically this study is investigating "masculine discrepancy stress" which they define to be a term that means when a man feels like he is falling short of traditional gender norms. High masculine discrepancy stress means that a man thinks he is not living up to traditional gender norms, while low masculine discrepancy stress means that a man thinks he is living up to traditional gender norms.

> Six-hundred men from the USA were recruited via Amazon's Mechanical Turk (MTurk) online data collection site to complete surveys assessing self-perceptions of gender role discrepancy and consequent discrepancy stress, substance use/abuse, driving while intoxicated (DWI) and violent assaults. Negative binomial regression analyses indicated significant interactive effects wherein men high on gender role discrepancy and attendant discrepancy stress reported significantly more assaults with a weapon (B=1.01; SE=0.63; IRR=2.74; p=0.05) and assaults causing injury (B=1.01; SE=0.51; IRR=2.74; p<0.05). There was no association of discrepancy stress to substance abuse, but there was a protective effect of gender role discrepancy for DWI among men low on discrepancy stress (B=−1.19, SE=0.48; IRR=0.30; p=0.01).

Their results found that men with high masculine discrepancy stress (e.g. men who felt they were falling a lot short of traditional gender norms) reported significantly more violence with weapons and causing injuries.

Also, men with low discrepancy stress were less likely to get a DWI.

> These findings suggest that gender role discrepancy and associated discrepancy stress, in particular, represent important injury risk factors and that prevention of discrepancy stress may prevent acts of violence with the greatest consequences and costs to the victim, offender and society.

Of course, this can be interpreted in two different ways.

Those who believe that gender is primarily biological with some cultural influence will see this and say to themselves that this is par for the course. Men without male role models like in areas with high rates of single motherhood like ghettos are less masculine and more prone to violence. This fact is obvious. What we need is better male role models for these men to learn how to be masculine and self controlled rather than feeling like they’re inadequate and taking out their aggression on others.

However, those who believe that gender is primarily a social construct will say to themselves that this proves that ‘traditional gender norms’ are bad because men who fail to live up to them will take out their violence on others. Thus, we should “remove traditional gender norms” so that men don’t have to try to be like them so that they will commit less violence.

One of these has a proven track record of success and one doesn’t. Unfortunately, most of western civilization is choosing the one that doesn’t.

Headship is authority

March 1, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things I ran into recently was someone actually claiming that Grudem's word study on kephale (Koine Greek "head") actually said that Grudem claimed head did not mean authority. I can only assume they went into it with preconceived notions and read his work incorrectly.

As Grudem notes in his personal reflections on the topic:

> On October 5, 1979, I was a third-year pro-fessor at Bethel College in St. Paul, Minnesota, and I was surprised to see that Christianity Todayhad come out with an article written by my neigh-bors just six houses down the street, Berkeley and Alvera Mickelsen (Berkeley taught New Testa-ment at Bethel Seminary and Alvera taught jour-nalism at Bethel College). Their article was titled, "Does male dominance tarnish our translations?" They argued that the Greek word kephalē (literally, "head") often means "source" but never "authority," so that "the husband is the head of the wife" (Eph 5:23; cf. also 1 Cor 11:3) means "the husband is the source of the wife" and does not have authority over his wife. I thought the argument was wrong, but I didn't have the time or material at hand to answer it. Then, a little later, Dr. George Knight came to Bethel College to lecture, and I said to him in passing, "George, you really need to write an article answering Berkeley and Alvera Mickelsen's claim that 'head' means 'source.'" "No," said George, "you need to write it." Little did I know that that encouragement would affect the next thirty years of my life.
> Six years later, in 1985, I published a twenty one-page article in Trinity Journal, "Does kephalē Mean 'Source' or 'Authority Over'? An Examination of 2,336 Examples"2 —examples which took me some time to look up in ancient Greek literature!
> There were several responses from egalitarians to that twenty-one-page article. So, five years later, in 1990, I published a seventy-page article in Trinity Journal,3 responding to other studies on the meaning of kephalē and showing that there were now over fifty examples where it meant "someone in authority," or "a leader," but never an instance where someone is said to be the "head" of someone else and was not in the position of authority over that person. Never.
> But there were still more responses, and more people disagreeing. So eleven years after that, in 2001, I published another article, forty-one pages in the Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society, on "The Meaning of kephalē ("Head"): An Evaluation of New Evidence, Real and Alleged."4
> So that's 132 pages of lexicographical research published in academic journals on one word in the Bible. And these articles spanned sixteen years of my life.

> Why did I do this? Because it was a crucial word in a crucial verse in a crucial issue. Destroying the meaning “authority over” for kephalē is crucial to the egalitarian argument. If in fact the Bible says in Eph 5:23 that “the husband is the head of the wife even as Christ is the head of the church,” and if head means, as I am convinced it does, “person in position of authority,” then the egalitarian cause is lost. That is because that verse anchors the husband’s headship in the headship of Christ over the church, which is not something culturally variable (and 1 Cor 11:3 makes it parallel to the eternal headship of the Father with respect to the Son in the Trinity). So the egalitarians cannot lose this argument, because if they lose on the meaning of that word, then they have lost their fundamental argument with regard to manhood and womanhood in marriage.

As has been noted before, having a honest look at Scripture with egalitarians and feminists is usually useless. They don’t care about what the Scriptures say. They care about taking their preconceived cultural values and twisting Scripture to agree with them. Look no further than attempting to twist kephale, “submit to one another in the fear of Christ,” “there is no male or female… for you are one in Christ Jesus,” and other Scriptures in an attempt to annul male headship and authority over a wife.

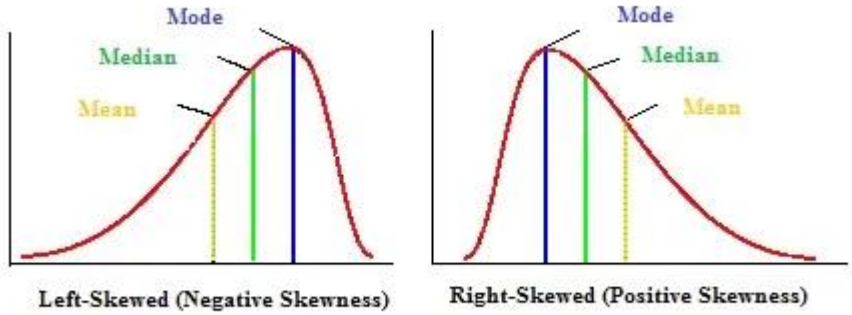
Of course, as I have noted before, usually most of these people have cultural blinders on their view of authority. Usually a bad experience with a parent or other authority figure which has left them scarred and thus hating authority rather than understanding it comes from God and it is good when used correctly.

I ran through the differences in opinion myself until I understood correctly.

 Grudem is likely off about eternal headship. Father-Jesus headship was modeled by Jesus here on earth but is likely not eternal given God is one and such things like the Nicene Creed. This is one of the potential heresies that Christians were fighting against early in the Church.

How attraction works and common misconceptions

March 3, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link



I or others may have discussed this a while ago, but I don't recall discussing it in post format. The numbering scale is the typically discussed format (1-10), but it really doesn't indicate how it works in real life.

1. Attraction distributions

For example's sake, let's start out with your average white man who is maybe 2o lbs overweight, average face, dresses in baggy clothes, shaves once a week, has good hygiene otherwise, doesn't style his hair, is part of a Church but doesn't really participate much, sees women he likes but takes a few weeks or month to work up the courage to ask her out, and traits like these.

Numerically, this dude is probably a "5" or so if you were basing the fact that he is your average male, but technically he's below average in the eyes of most women at like a "3."

If you recall, the OKCupid observations that women found about 80% of men unattractive. Obesity in general has made the left end of the scale (the 1-5 part of the 1-10 scale) higher in weight so you have a skew in distribution.

Source.

For attraction, women have a right skewed attraction curve where there is a smaller percentage of men who are attractive in that right tail while the majority tend to sit on the right side in the unattractive zone.

2. How attraction works

Generally speaking, a percentile based format best describes one's attraction at any particular one time.

Let say if this average dude, who is probably around a "3" in the eyes of women, asked out 100 women who were evenly distributed from very unattractive ("1") to very attractive ("10") would get maybe a 5% date rate.

Most of these women who would accept would be around his attraction in the 1-3ish range. Hypergamy plays a factor and also the fact that women's expectations can be far

So this average dude has probably a 5% date rate, and most if not all of that 5% skews to the unattractive women.

3. How modifications in one's looks, status, leadership, and other traits affect attraction

Let's say this average dude with 5% date rate of mostly unattractive women starts to work out and starts a diet to lose weight. This takes place over the course of 6-9 months, but he sheds all 20 lbs of fat and gains about 10 lbs of muscle.

By simply shedding 20 lbs of fat and gaining 10 lbs of muscle, this guy probably moves up from a "3" in women's eyes to a 4 and maybe 5 in some eyes. His date rate will probably increase from about 5% to maybe 10%. In effect, doubling his date rate. If he asked the 100 women evenly distributed, it will still mostly be 1-3s but maybe a 4 or 5.

Now, let's say over the course of another month or two, our average guy gets advice from his male or female friends about style and how that fits with him. Gets some nice fitting clothes, starts to style his hair, and groom well. By doing this, his success rate may bump another 5% of so.

So now his success rate of asking 100 women ranging from very unattractive to very attractive is about 15%. Most of them are still probably in the 1-3 range, but there are a few in the 4-5 range now and perhaps an occasional 6.

Now, lets say this man gets serious with his faith. He starts evangelizing when the chance comes up with his friends. He has diligently studied the Scriptures and gotten involved with loving and serving others in the Church. He has taken up a leadership role in a Bible study. By doing this, he has become much more secure and confident who he is in Christ and been developing leadership skills. By doing this, his success rate jumps up another 5%.

So now his success rate of asking 100 women ranging from very unattractive to very attractive is about 20%. Most of them are still probably in the 1-3 range, but there are a some in the 4-5 range now and maybe a couple 6s and an occasional 7.

Now, let's say this man is pretty serious about relationships. He's studied the Scriptural marital roles and responsibilities. He also knows he needs to learn how to lead a relationship. He works on his emotional IQ, and his communication skills to lead conversations and not be awkward. He works on his eye contact, not fidgeting, and teasing women. By doing this, his success rate jumps up another 5%.

So now his success rate of asking 100 women ranging from very unattractive to very attractive is about 20%. Most of them are still probably in the 1-3 range, but there are a bunch in the 4-5 range, some, few 6s, and an couple 7s. Still no 8s though.

4. Other thoughts and misconceptions on traits or characteristics that affect attractiveness

- It must be noted that some things can be strong disqualifiers. If our average man had extremely poor hygiene and smelled extremely bad, his success rate could literally drop to 0%. Things like really bad acne or skin conditions can be strong disqualifiers but that is not always the case. It could just decrease certain percentages by 1% or 5% or 10% or more depending on how bad things are.

- Will the increases in say working out and losing weight, style, developing leadership skills, and developing social skills and not being awkward result always in 5% increases? No, of course not. This is simply an example. Initially, it may take 10 lbs of lost weight to increase 1% date rate, but as you start looking better and better it may take 7 lbs then 4 lbs of lost weight to gain another 1% each.
- Let's note that this example guy only gained about 10 lbs of muscle. If he had gained 30 lbs of muscle, he might have jumped another 5-10% because doing from a "toned" appearance to a "muscular appearance" will typically drastically increase success rate, especially with stylish clothes and hair. First impressions do play a big role.
- If a man was black, asian, hispanic, indian, or another race, his success rate compared to being white will drop accordingly to some percentage. It is harder for minorities to date than white. To speculate, it could drop say 5% for black and hispanic and maybe 10% for asian and indian. Thus, minority races typically have to compensate by strongly developing other traits and accept they're at a disadvantage.
- This is the same with height. The taller you are the easier it will be (to some extent). Very short men have a very bad disadvantage.
- Additionally, if our average man is an expert or really good at music and occasionally plays on his Church's worship team, you can bet that his success rate would probably jump some percentage points because of local status/fame inside his own Church. The women outside the Church might not know about this, but this certain skill which is exposed to a particular population would give increased success rate.
- Generally speaking, very few men have >40-50% success rate when asking out women unless they are extremely attractive (8-9+ male) or are actually famous. Contrary to popular belief, some women just don't like some attractive men for one reason for another so actual success rates don't actually go up anywhere near 60-100%, except if a random celebrity asks out a bunch of random women on a date. Maybe then you'd get extremely high date rates.

There's more that go into it than this, but these are a solid overview of how other things may affect attractiveness and date rate.

5. Relationships

Of course, none of this actually takes into account many of the different things that it takes to be successful in relationships.

Sustaining relationships tend to be based more on disqualifiers and character more than attractiveness. Since we've already assumed we are attractive (for the most part) the other party and they've accepted us as someone who they potentially think are attractive enough to marry, then the relationship is about mainly character and understanding Biblical marital roles and responsibilities.

How can a Christian man show that he is one who is going to love her, honor her, and help her to become more like Christ in the marriage? How can a Christian wife show her that she is going to submit to him, respect him, be affectionate, and be her husband's helper in marriage? This is what the relationship portion is like leading toward engagement and marriage, as God's ideal for us in marriage is that we adhere to His standards.

Often it is the case that relationships tend to expose our character flaws or find out where we may not be a good fit for our spouse. If, for example, a woman is looking to do missionary work overseas and you're called to minister here at your Church, this could be a place where there is not a proper fit.

On the other hand, if our spouse responds more with anger or bitterness and lacks respect or wanting to learn how to please us or understand us, we understand that they may be a poor choice because they're walking away from the fruits of the Spirit and Biblical marital roles and responsibilities and choosing their own self interest and selfishness.

Overall, this is not some rocket science. Depending where you are in male attractiveness, you need to look at what things may increase your percentage rates accordingly and try to figure out and minimize or remove any disqualifiers.

Thoughts

Overall, I'm fairly happy with how it turned out.

I noticed several different topics in the book that probably should have required additional explanations, and there's a lot of topics on this blog that I simply wasn't able to cover in depth. There's obviously a lot more that can be said about all these topics, but I think it's a very solid overview that any Christian man can read and learn from and take into his own Church to discuss with others.

I never started this blog with the intention of writing a book, but I'm glad that I could share some of my journey into understanding the Bible and how modern Christians stray from the Bible's marital roles and responsibilities with many of you. It's been quite the life changing experience, and I've carried this over into a lot of men's ministry work that I do.

Regarding personal details, I am including some on the book but some are changed. I am also going to set most of my social media accounts to private.

Is communication overrated?

I've been mulling over this concept recently.

If you ask almost any modern Christian, the first thing they will say is critical to a marriage is good communication. They won't say the God or things like Bible's marital roles and responsibilities.

If the husband and wife were able to keep putting God first, especially the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities and the fruit of the Spirit, how would that look?

There's a reason why the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities are the way they are. They are to keep us united in oneness, even though we are prone to walking with the flesh rather than the Spirit. If the husband and wife are each doing their God-given roles and responsibilities (husband headship, love, honor and wife respect, submission, affection, etc. and freely giving themselves sexually to one another and growing in the fruits of the Spirit), you're going to have not only a godly marriage but likely a successful and happy one too.

God knows what He is doing, yet we always try to convince ourselves we know better than God and want to do it our own way.

If you're doing your God-given roles and responsibilities, most of the work is already done. You only need "good communication" if you want to keep arguing or being contentious with your spouse that God's way isn't the best way.

(Now, I'm not discounting the fact that it's a good idea to communicate back and forth about various topics, but this can easily be warped into selfish principles of "what's in it for me" rather than God's).

How does humility play into headship (and leadership)?

March 25, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The book has been slightly delayed with some issues setting up on Amazon. In the meantime...

I've been asked a few times recently about how humility plays into headship since seemingly to some Christians they are contradictory. This can be easily solved by looking at various Scriptures.

First, Humility is not submission. Humility is the correct understanding of one's own importance. Our importance should always be taken into consideration of the gospel: we are sinners in need of a Savior. This reorients our attitude correctly that our focus is God's mission and not our own importance. Therefore, we must use any authority we have in the context of God's mission.

> Matthew 20:25 But Jesus called them to Himself and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great men exercise authority over them. 26 It is not this way among you, but whoever wishes to become great among you shall be your servant, 27 and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be your slave; 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many."

Notice that Jesus does not cancel authority, denigrate it, or call it evil. Rather, He admonishes us to use it correctly. The purpose of "humble" authority is to:

- Love – Romans 5:8 God shows his love for us in this: while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us
- Lead by Example – John 13:34 A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, even as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another."
- Serve others – John 13:12 So when He had washed their feet, and taken His garments and reclined at the table again, He said to them, "Do you know what I have done to you? 13 You call Me Teacher and Lord; and you are right, for so I am. 14 If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another's feet. 15 For I gave you an example that you also should do as I did to you. 16 Truly, truly, I say to you, a slave is not greater than his master, nor is one who is sent greater than the one who sent him.

Serving is pretty obvious. It's easy to serve others by meeting their needs and taking care of them.

The of the big issues of the evangelical term "servant leadership" is that all focus is put on the serving with no leading.

How did Christ lead in the Scripture? According to His mission:

- He sent out the 70 in Luke 10 to minister to other people
- He had his disciples do tasks for him like pass out bread and fish while ministering to others, go get the donkey for the triumphal entry, prepare the last supper, etc.
- Showed us an example to keep the faith by driving out the money changers from the temple
- Lambasted hypocrites like the Pharisees
- Corrected his disciples when they were off track “ye of little faith”
- Rebuked Peter (as Satan no less) when He predicted his death and Peter said he shouldn’t die.

Even the Ephesians 5 passage about love is not about feelings or placating them or making someone feel loved.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless.

Christ died, sacrificially, for the sanctification of the Church. This is the love that the passage is talking about. So husbands are to lead their wives toward sanctification. This means correcting, teaching, admonishing and possibly rebuking their wife when she is off track.

Paul goes back to Creation a lot in and this is a reminder to not follow in the steps of Adam:

> Genesis 3:6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate
> Genesis 3:17 Then to Adam He said, “Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, ‘You shall not eat from it’;

Instead of obeying God to not eat of the tree and correcting his wife in this instance, Adam obeyed his wife and disobeyed God. So husbands have the same responsibility to their wife in her sanctification as Adam failed to do.

To summarize:

Humility is not submission. Humility is re-orienting our perception of our own importance to the gospel, so our lives are kingdom focused.

Headship (and by extension also leadership/authority) has multiple components which are to love, lead by example, serve others, and things like these. Most people focus only on the ways Jesus served but not onto the ways Jesus loves and leads by example (and expects others to follow in His example).

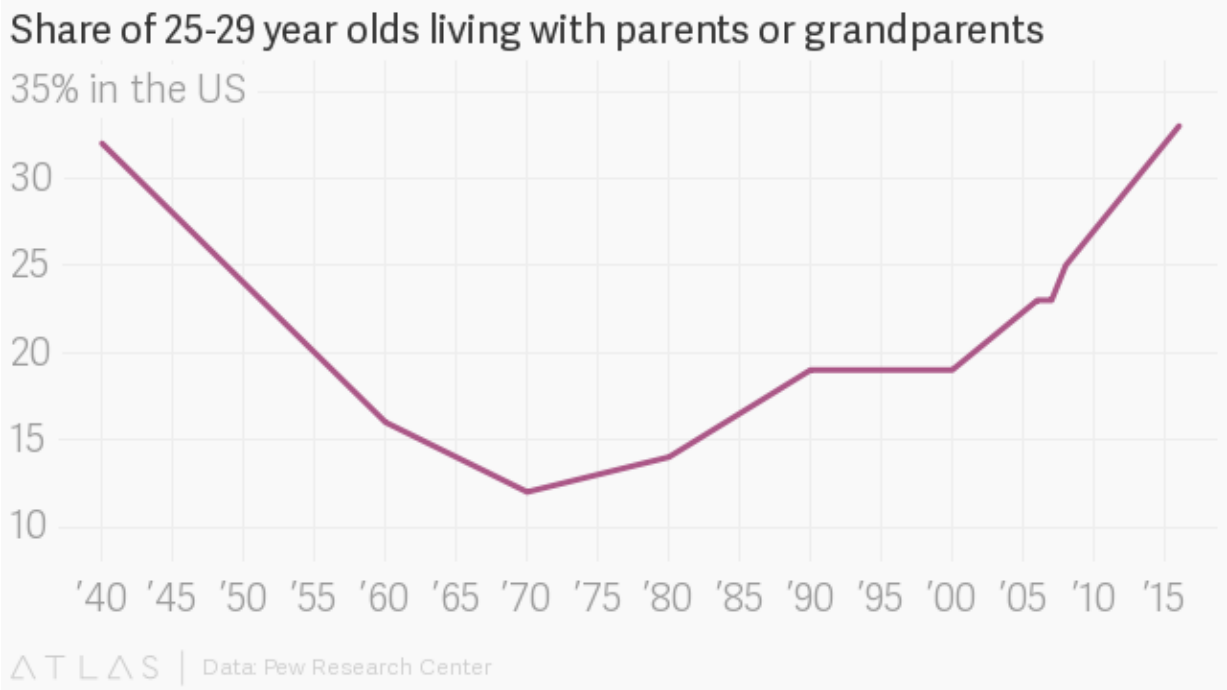
Sexlessness is rising but…

April 2, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Lots of different sources on this study but here's one that I ran across.

> The analysis found that since 2008, the percentage of men under 30 reporting no sex had nearly tripled to 28 percent, compared with an 8 percent increase reported by women in the same age bracket. It found that 18 percent of women between the ages of 18 and 30 reported no sex in the past year.

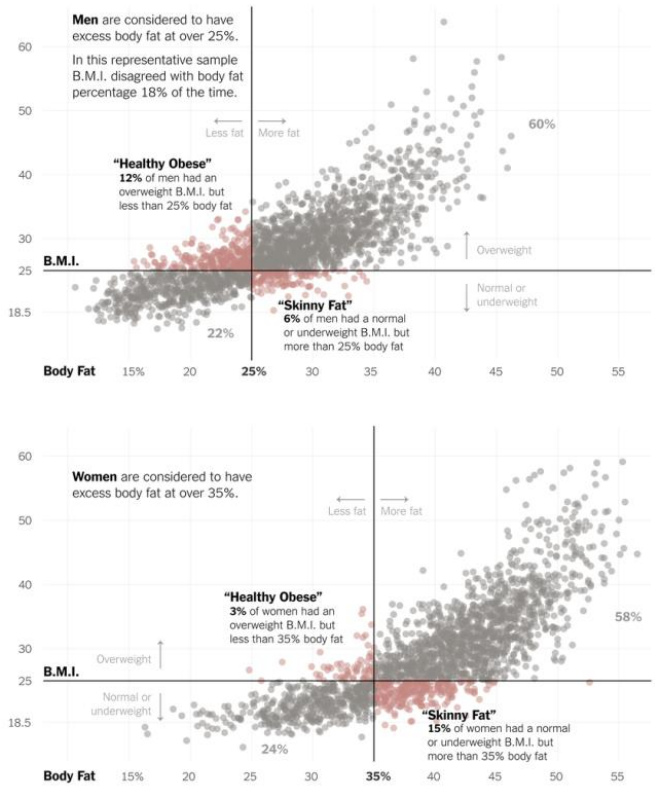


Given that obesity in this age group is probably around about 20-25% given the trends in the US, I'm not exactly surprised by these statistics. That means the vast majority normal and overweight men and women in this age group are still having sex if they try.

The temptation is still real even though the 80/20 rule is parroted a lot. Not just the top 20% of men are having all of the sex.

Though there is a loud vocal Incel/MGTOW movement online, it's not really showing up in the statistics just yet. If we see the men stats continue to jump toward 40% while obesity and other rates stay the same or drop, I'd say there's a case for it showing up.

Edit: forgot to add in the share of adults living with parents or grandparents.



Probably isn't surprising this trend is increasing on both sides. The downward curve in the 1940s to 1960s is decline in multi-generational housing. The latter upward trend seems to be on the flipside of that: financial, laziness, or other factors.

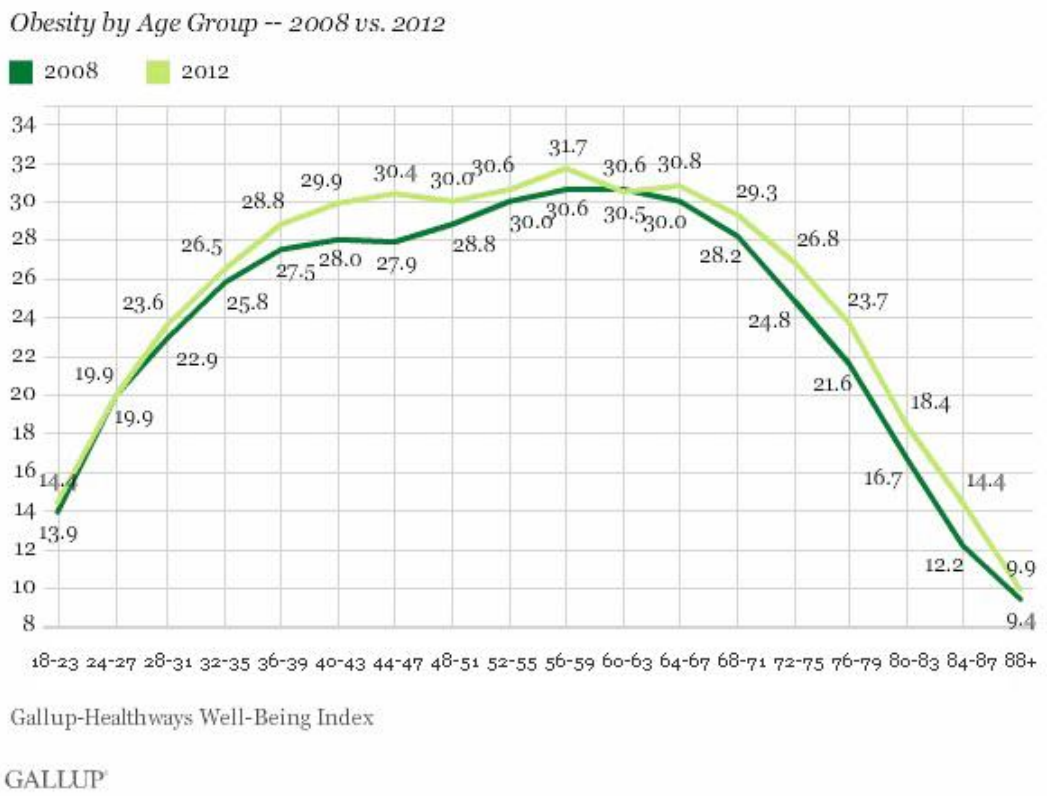
Obesity, sexlessness, and overall demographics

April 3, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I think explored this previously, but I don't remember which post it was.

NY did a piece a while back on how much of BMI was misleading.

For men:

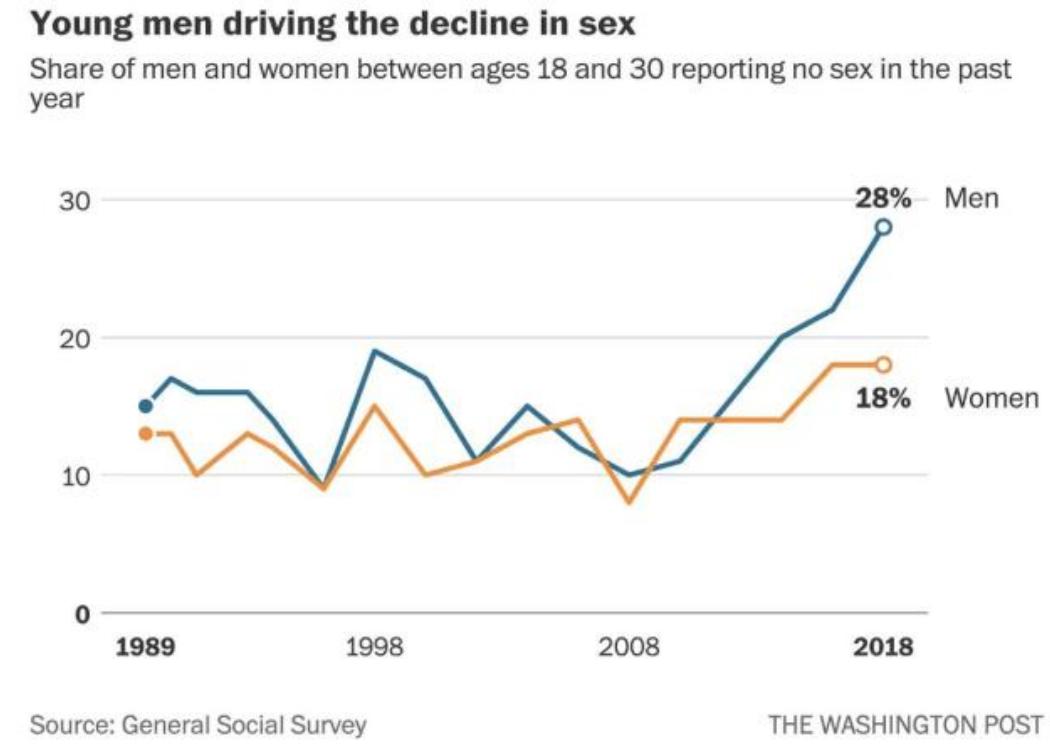


- 22% of men are normal or underweight
- 12% of men are "healthy obese"
- 6% of men are "skinny fat"
- 60% of men are overweight or obese

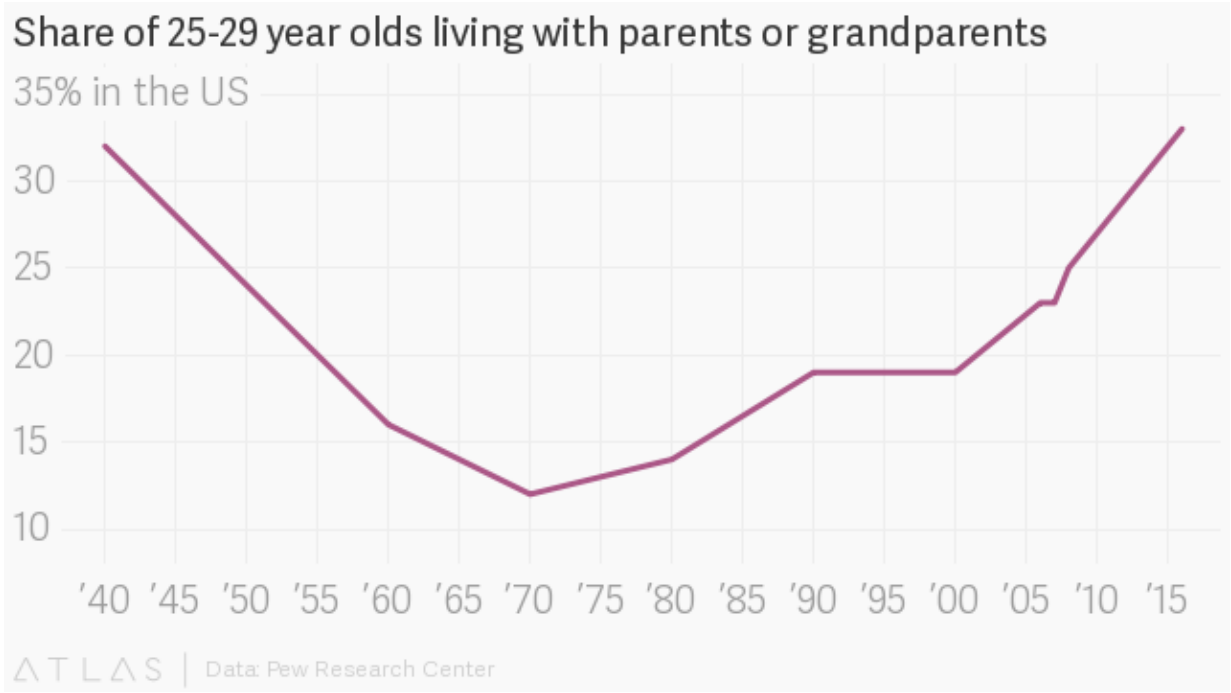
For women,

- 24% of women are normal weight or underweight
- 3% of women are "healthy obese"
- 15% of women are "skinny fat"
- 58% are overweight or obese

Unfortunately, this is for the total population and not the 18-30 demographic that we are seeking to discuss.



Given the previous post on sexlessness, we have a couple charts and some data.



The obesity by age group by cohort in 2012 is:

- 18-23: 14.4%
- 24-27: 19.9%
- 28-31: 23.6%

We probably will have expected this to rise maybe slightly since there is the overall trend of inflation toward 2018 and 2019. This also does not include all of the men and women that are overweight. The overweight range typically is in the 20-33% range, as age increases.

Now, we also have some data from the underweight, normal weight, overweight, and obesity analysis on marriage.

> In summary, a general estimation if you're obese you're likely to have approximately a 30-50% less likely chance to marry, and if you're overweight or underweight you likely have approximately a 10-30% less likely chance to marry. If there was 10 normal weight people, then approximately about 6 obese people, 8 underweight, and 8 overweight people would marry.

Although marriage is not necessarily a decent predictor of sex, it gives us a general estimation of sex since most people who are married want to have sex.

In the 18-30 age range for men, based on a general estimation it's likely that about:

- 20% are obese
- 20% are overweight
- 50% are normal weight
- 10% underweight (we'll go with 10% just for estimation)

If we apply the "marriage criteria" to this general population distribution, we can get a rough estimate to how much of each of these populations are having sex.

Since 28% of men are not having sex, that means 72% in the past year are. The ratio is approximately 40% less for obese, and 20% less for underweight or overweight than normal weight. This yields approximately these relevant figures:

- ~42 out of 50 normal weight men are having sex (42/50 = 84%)
- ~10 out of 20 obese men are having sex (84%*.6=50.4%)
- ~13 out of 20 overweight men are having sex (84%*.8=67.2%)
- ~7 out of 10 underweight men are having sex (4%*.8=67.2%)

One would assume that most of the "overweight or obese" men having sex are going to be the ones that are "healthy obese" or have significant amounts of musculature on their frame. Since only 12% of men are healthy obese (and likely a higher percentage in the younger population than the older), we can likely assume that the actual figure of healthy obese men in 18-30 population is probably in the range of 13-17% of the population. This means that of the actual 23 overweight and obese men in the 18-30 population, the ones that are overweight or obese are not having sex while the healthy obese ones are. We can also assume that the skinny fat ones aren't having sex while the more normal underweight ones are.

What is also surprising to me is that the majority of normal and underweight men are still having sex.

Also, going back to the IFStudies on involuntary vs voluntary celibacy:

> About 8% of never-married young men living with their parents are involuntarily sexless, and another 7% are voluntarily so. Among men not living with their parents, it's just 4% involuntarily sexless, and 2% voluntarily so.
> Looking at sex in the last year instead of virginity, never married young men without their parents are about 17% sexless, versus nearly 30% among those who live with parents. Even when these variables are combined together, more education is associated with more sexlessness among both men who live with their parents and men who do not, and living with parents is associated with more sexlessness across all educational levels.

Also, 20/50-60 rule or so is more or less correct:

> It turns out, the answer is no. And of course, it isn't! Imagine how much sex those > 20% of men would have to be having! A substantial share would need to be doing two-a-days on a regular basis to maintain that kind of share. In reality, according to the GSS, the top 20% of the most sexually active never-married young men have about 50-60% of the sex. It's about the same for women, and these shares are basically stable over time. Measuring the number of partners instead of sexual frequency, the top 20% most promiscuous men account for about 60% of male sexual partnerings, and the trend is, again, quite stable over time.

In general, summing up all of the available data, it appears that approximately:

- Top 20% is having 50-60% of sex or about 3:1 or 2.5:1 ratio
- Middle 52% is having 40-50% of sex or about 1:1 ratio
- ~15% are involuntarily celibate
- ~13% are voluntarily celibate

Graphically, it looks like this:

- Male 8-10s are having sex with all of the female 6-10s.
- Top 20% of sexually active females (interspersed in female 6-9s most likely) are having sex with the male 8-10s.
- Male 4-7s are having sex with female 4-7s in about 1:1 ratio.
- Male and female 1-3s are half voluntarily celibate and half involuntarily celibate.

That concludes the data analysis. Make of it what you will.

Is communication overrated Part 2

April 14, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

After several hiccups in the book process (who knew?), hopefully the release will be this upcoming week. Just waiting for the kindle version to get back to me. Will be a post when it's up on Amazon.

In the last post many commenters posted a take on what is usually meant by "communication."

Wizard:

> Clear communication of shared goals and values and values is fine, but when many women talk about communication, they mean "I talk, he listens".

Michael:

> Consider how this parallels to the relationship between us and God. Communication is very important, in the sense that we need to be hearing from God (reading the Word, possibly some direct leading or gifts of the Spirit) and talking to God (prayer). Those are things we need to be doing constantly and faithfully. However it is currently imperfect communication at best (1 Cor 13:12) but eventually will be perfect when we can talk face to face with God (Revelation 21:3). Even Jesus didn't communicate everything to His disciples until the right time (John 16:12). Similarly, I think there is some communication in marriage that should be delayed until the relationship is built on God's principles for marriage. Some wives just aren't ready to hear certain things, especially when a marriage has been going the wrong way for a while.

Looking Glass:

> Wizard gets it. "Communication" really means "the Husband keeps the Wife happy by obeying her". However, they piggyback their evil desire within something that can be an actual issue which is Trust. Once Trust breaks down, the relationship is mostly dead, at which point actual communication breakdowns occur.

Dalrock:

> Others have already rightly noted that "communicating" often really means the husband doing as the wife tells him to do. There is another even more subtle problem with the term. We automatically assume "communication" means "talking". This is a near universal misconception, and because it isn't challenged really makes it difficult to think clearly.

Gary:

> Notice the Bible doesn't talk a lot about 'communication'. But it does talk about understanding your wife. About loving her. About her obeying you. About her reverencing you. About you spiritually leading her.
> Do all those things, neither party will be worrying about 'not enough communication'.

Pretty much everyone makes a good point in that the word "communication" has distorted into several different meanings. Namely, most of the newer meanings of the word have to do with "selfishness" rather than "unselfishness."

This is one of the big points of the expectations of the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. They outline the framework behind marriage so everyone knows what they are supposed to be doing. Any discussion or communication should be made within that particular context. If these particular contexts aren't met, then it's going to devolve into much fruitless conflict and division.

Gary's point is excellent in that the Bible tells us to do certain things rather than it being communicated. If all wives respected their husbands and all husbands loved their wives, there would be very few if any conflicts in the first place because the actions tend to follow the attitudes. These two things lead to focus on their own responsibilities toward each other rather than on what they are getting out of the marriage.

I also think "communication issues" is probably a big subtext for differing expectations within a relationship that mainly should have been hashed out prior to marriage.

The book is now up on Amazon!

The Biblical Masculinity Blueprint: A Christian Man's Guide to Attraction, Relationships, and Marriage in a Messed-up World

Print edition and Kindle Edition.

Thank you to all of the contributors mentioned in the book and those who chose to remain anonymous. I could not have written some of the chapters without you. Also, thank you to the publishing team and the go-between people I used to get this professionally done.

Book description:

> Because many young men and husbands do not have good masculine role models, it can be difficult for them to understand what a godly relationship and marriage might look like. In today's culture, there is a lack of fathers passing down teaching to their sons, and, in many cases, what the Church teaches is more assimilated with secular culture, resulting in ineffective discipleship. Even seemingly good things like "purity culture" can have negative influences on marriage.
> The Biblical Masculinity Blueprint aims to remedy some of these areas by giving Christian men the knowledge and discernment needed to have successful, godly relationships and marriages.
> This book covers five distinct sections:
> - Highlight problem areas of modern culture and how it has influenced the Church.
> - Foundation Bible verses and their implications for relationships and marriage.
> - Addressing any incorrect notions surrounding marriage, attraction, and the pitfalls of relationships.
> - Ways single men can develop themselves to head a relationship and, eventually, a marriage.
> - Ways married men can learn to obey God, become an effective head in marriage, and influence their wives and children toward godliness.
> This book is not meant as a be-all end-all solution to dating, relationships, and marriage as the Bible gives considerable freedom with how to approach them in > a godly manner. Instead, it is written in the style of Proverbs 27:17 As iron sharpens iron, so one man sharpens another. Study the Scriptures, pray, use wisdom and discernment, and get additional godly counsel as you develop into a godly man who chooses the path of relationships and marriage.

Overall, like I've said previously: I'm pretty happy with how it turned out. There's obviously more that can be added to any book like this, but this is an excellent primer on many of the ins and outs of the Bible and relationships from singleness to dating to engagement to marriage. Maybe there can eventually be a 2nd book or 2nd edition if things turn out well with this one.

For the record, although I come down hard on some prominent Christian pastors in the book, I do think that they are doing a good job in the kingdom in other areas. However, the issues of dating, marriage, and of men and women are areas where a lot of pastors have a lot of blind spots for various reasons such as blending culture with the Bible or chivalry or attempting to give practical advice that may have worked in the 70s or 80s but is not effective today.

This blog has come a long way in the several years that I've been here. I've gone from single to married myself in this crazy messed-up world. I've gone from being mentored and discipled to helping mentor and disciple others. I can't say that I have had perfect relationships or marriage, but we are both working toward sanctification, discipleship, and being fruitful in the kingdom. There is much effective advice that works in for the Christian man where it is very hard to find in today's Churches.

These topics are some of the big things that has been neglected in the Church especially with young men today, and I hope that this book can help remedy some of those issues.

edit: If you do end up picking up a copy, Amazon reviews (good or bad) are much appreciated. It lets people know that a book may be worth checking out.

Mid-life despair on the rise

April 30, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Took a couple weeks break since getting the book out to focus on other things. Should be back to posting more regularly now.

Mid-life despair is on the rise.

> Indicators of despair—depression, suicidal ideation, drug use and alcohol abuse—are rising among Americans in their late 30s and early 40s across most demographic groups, according to new research led by Lauren Gaydosh, assistant professor of Medicine, Health and Society and Public Policy Studies at Vanderbilt University. These findings suggest that the increase in "deaths of despair" observed among low-educated middle-aged white Baby Boomers (born 1946-1964) in recent studies may begin to impact the youngest members of Generation X (born 1974-1983) more broadly in the years to come.
> portrait in studio
> The study, The Depths of Despair Among U.S. Adults Entering Midlife, appears in the American Journal of Public Health. Gaydosh's co-authors are Kathleen Mullan Harris, Robert A. Hummer, Taylor W. Hargrove, Carolyn T. Halpern, Jon M. Hussey, Eric A. Whitsel, and Nancy Dole, all at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.
> In 2016, U.S. life expectancy began to decline for the first time in nearly a quarter-century, and researchers theorized that this was driven by a marked increase in deaths due to drug overdose, alcoholic cirrhosis and suicide among middle-aged whites with low education or in rural areas. At the time, this was explained by a unique triple-punch of worsening employment prospects accompanied by a declining perception of socioeconomic status and an erosion of social supports for this group. But studies to better understand those mortality trends did not definitively show that low-income rural whites were actually experiencing more despair than other groups.
> "What we wanted to do in this paper was to examine whether the factors that may be predictive of those causes of death—substance use, suicidal ideation and depression—are isolated to that particular population subgroup, or whether it's a more generalized phenomenon," Gaydosh said.
> To do so, they turned to the National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent to Adult Health, or Add Health, directed by Harris at the University of North Carolina, which tracked the physical and mental health of thousands of Americans born between 1974-1983 from adolescence through their late 30s and early 40s in 2016-18.
> "We found that despair has increased in this cohort, but that increases are not restricted to non-Hispanic whites with low education," Gaydosh said. "Instead, > the increase in despair that occurs across the 30s is generalized to the entire cohort, regardless of race, ethnicity, education, and geography.”

In general, low education is attributed to blue collared jobs and less money made overall. These are also the cohorts that are less likely to find a woman who wants to marry them (because who would want to marry a man who doesn’t make much or less than they do).

Babylon bee had been on fire with their satire and a month or so back about the “unforgiveable sin now being whiteness.” It would also seem that many of the white blue collared workers are also told they have “white privilege” when they’re actually poor and not well off will definitely influence them negatively.

Couple this with Obesity, sexlessness, and overall demographics and I wouldn’t be too surprised if this was also some of the cohorts who are frivorced or incels.

Women and voting

May 1, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been a lot said about the downfall of Western civilization being the introduction of voting rights to women in the 1920s. It seems to be logical. The government and government entitlements have been growing since women voting was introduced. It is women's votes in general who have been pushing for more liberal politicians with more liberal agendas.

I used to think this way, but I don't think it's correct anymore.

Voting is just another symptom of feminism. The early stages of feminism but still a symptom.

Feminism happened because most men and most women wanted feminism. Oops, they didn't think of the consequences… but they also don't want to go back on it either. Both men and women each have the capacity to sin in great numbers and great amounts.

Most shades of conservatives and many so-called Christians would not walk back on any of the tenets of feminism because they believe them to beneficial. Sure, they'll criticize 2nd and 3rd wave, but they will also insist that 1st wave is good. They are also persuaded by and defend foolish and worldly talk. They'll insist on the traditional social scripts (high school -> college -> career -> car & house -> marriage) even if they compromise Christian sexual morality.

> Ecclesiastes 7:27 "Behold, I have discovered this," says the Preacher, "adding one thing to another to find an explanation, 28 which am still seeking but have not found. I have found one man among a thousand, but I have not found a woman among all these. 29 Behold, I have found only this, that God made men upright, but they have sought out many devices."

Most people are rebellious against God, so it should not be a surprise that most will turn aside to ideologies and philosophies that run counter to God's design.

Voting is just another symptom of feminism which is another way to rebel against God. Even if women never had the right to vote, we would still live in a society that actively rebels against God.

To prove the point from the comments:

> No abortion/no transgenderism/no welfare state/no acceptance of homosexuality/no mass immigration/no rampant divorce/no rampant faithlessness…. I could go on.

You're acting like these things came into place because of the voting power of women. That's false. They would have come into place regardless.

Look at any of the past powerful cultures like Greeks and Romans. They had most of these, even when the husband had "full authority" and women had very little if any political power.

No transgenderism, possibly. The Greeks and Romans had all of the rest, often worse than today like pederasty (though we’re getting there).

Teachable: one of the most critical traits in vetting a wife

May 6, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Teachable is one of the least discussed traits that should be high up on the list.

The evidence for it is obvious:

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

The purpose of a husband's love for his wife is for her sanctification. It's not to placate her feelings or make her feel loved but so that she becomes more like Jesus. More often than not, this type of love will make her feel hurt or bad in the moment because it means correcting her if she's gone off track.

This command via the Scripture is also a mirror of the failure of the first Adam with Jesus fulfilling the role of second Adam.

> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die."
> Genesis 3:17 Then to Adam He said, "Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, 'You shall not eat from it';

Instead of reiterating God's command to Eve that they shouldn't eat from the fruit of the tree, he went along with his wife and disobeyed God instead.

Hence, the God-given responsibility is reiterated to us as husbands in the New Covenant in Jesus: you are still responsible for helping your wife obey God's commands to help play a role in her sanctification.

This mirrors the Christian walk where we are made co-heirs and co-workers by Jesus to fulfill His command to spread the gospel and make disciples of all nations. The commands prior to the fall in Genesis are re-purposed for Jesus' kingdom in both the Church and marriage.

It is very wise that you only marry a wife who is teachable. If you marry a wife that does not respond to correction or criticism that's heaping trouble upon your own head. If they don't respond to correction or criticism, it's unlikely that they're also going to want to obey God or the Bible to respect and submit either.

The bigger can of worms in the Caster Semenya issue

The Caster Semenya issue. The mentioned NYT article argues that is discriminatory, which it pretty much is. However, there are bigger issues afoot.

I've actually followed this a decade prior to the huge blow up a week or so ago when the IAAF ruled that she had to lower her testosterone levels to compete.

What she has is androgen insensitivity syndrome. If you followed House MD back in the day, they did an episode on it.

What happens in this condition is that early in the womb testosterone starts differentiating the zygote into male (or lack of testosterone differentiates it into female). However, "boys" with XY chromosomes and androgen insensitivity will start to differentiate toward girl traits because their cells have mutated forms of androgen receptors and can't pick up on the elevated testosterone levels telling the body to differentiate into a boy.

You can read more about it here on wikipedia though it gets more strange based on the variations. Some of the women have testes and some have ovaries. Some are hermaphroditic. Not actually sure what Semenya has whether partial or complete but it's pretty clear that she has female genitalia and was raised as a girl (though she has some masculine features compared to women).

Track and Field obviously tests for levels of androgens "outside of normal" for male and female (generally arbitrary ranges that are statistically significant outside of the normale population). So in 2009 or so it set off alarms when Semenya was starting to decrease her times significantly and break records. That's when they figured out she had the intersex trait (XY) but is phenotypically female.

This is truly a tough case to rule on.

However, the bigger can of worms is not this case but the burgeoning "transgender cases" of men identifying as women and competing with women and breaking women's records. This is starting to happen all over the world and you typically see the women athletes and all of the people defending Semenya complaining about it.

They know these men are just doing it because beating women is easier, they can set records, and it leaves a bad taste in their mouth, but the double standard is obvious. The really big issue is when there starts to be prize money involved. If you defend Semenya in these case, you can't complain about men randomly identifying as women competing against women.

I think it's most likely the IAAF decided to make a stand here on the transgender issue rather than delve into the more controversial cases of where clear biological men are identifying as women and allowed to compete as women. Testosterone was just their way to do it because it will eliminate the other biological men raised as men who try to identify as women in the future.

Funny enough, Dalrock mentioned this topic a bit today as I had written up this post yesterday. Biological males (raised as males) who are winning at women's races.

Men Have No Friends and Women Bear the Burden is hilarious

Seen this article go around the web in multiple forms.

> Toxic masculinity—and the persistent idea that feelings are a "female thing"—has left a generation of straight men stranded on emotionally-stunted island, unable to forge intimate relationships with other men. It's women who are paying the price.

You can appreciate the irony.

Feminism states men should be like women which means be "sensitive" and "express their emotions." Yet when they start doing it, they're labeled emotionally stunted (compared to women as the standard) and unable to forge intimate relationships with other men. Thus, women have to "bear the burden" of these emotionally stunted men.

Perhaps because these "other men" don't want to hang around with men act like women.

This is yet another "problem" created by feminism, but attempted to be framed by blaming it on the patriarchy or toxic masculinity.

Some of the funnier excerpts:

> Kelly's story, though extreme, is a common example of modern American relationships. Women continue to bear the burden of men's emotional lives, and why wouldn't they? For generations, men have been taught to reject traits like gentleness and sensitivity, leaving them without the tools to deal with internalized anger and frustration. Meanwhile, the female savior trope continues to be romanticized on the silver screen (thanks Disney!), making it seem totally normal—even ideal—to find the man within the beast.
> Unlike women, who are encouraged to foster deep platonic intimacy from a young age, American men—with their puffed up chests, fist bumps, and awkward side hugs—grow up believing that they should not only behave like stoic robots in front of other men, but that women are the only people they are allowed to turn to for emotional support—if anyone at all. And as modern relationships continue to put pressure on "the one" to be The Only One (where men cast their wives and girlfriends to play best friend, lover, career advisor, stylist, social secretary, emotional cheerleader, mom—to him, their future kids, or both—and eventually, on-call therapist minus the $200/hour fee), this form of emotional gold digging is not only detrimental to men, it's exhausting an entire generation of women.

This is one of the hallmarks of the inverted roles in marriage.

Instead of the man as the head of the wife, the wife becomes the "head" of the man. But since there is no such thing as that, it becomes very similar to another relationship: a mother and her child.

One can only wonder why women become unhappy when they selectively choose to "mother" their man rather than respect him.

> But unlike women in our mothers' generation, Gen X'ers and millennials are starting to hold their partners accountable—or they're simply leaving. Ruby Marez, a comedian in her early 30's living in Los Angeles, got so fed up with functioning as an unpaid therapist that she gave her then-boyfriend of five years an ultimatum: Get a shrink or we're done. "He had no excuse not to go since his job paid for it. But here I was, a struggling freelancer with no benefits, always finding a way to prioritize therapy and yoga." He refused for two years, then finally agreed after multiple arguments—but there was a catch; only if she found the therapist and set up the appointments, which she did. He rarely went, says Marez, often blaming the therapist for scheduling conflicts. A little wiser, Marez broke up with her most recent boyfriend of two years after he said he didn't need therapy, because he had her for that.

You get what you deserve is a pretty apt statement.

If you're a woman and want to be the one in control in a relationship, you should expect to attract men who want you to be in control.

Surprise surprise.

> "Men are taught that feelings are a female thing," muses Johnson, whose husband often complains about her wanting to "talk deep." Though Johnson brags about how wonderful her husband is—grateful he doesn't exhaust her with his neediness like a lot of her married friends—she does wish men were encouraged to examine and explore their emotions in a safe setting, like therapy, before they boil over. "I'm tired of having to replace another broken bedside table because he didn't realize he needed to talk about his feelings," she admits.

Men were never taught to not have feelings. This is just feminist projection that since men rarely emoted they think we're taught not have feelings.

Men were taught to process emotions internally and to have good discipline and self control. This goes along with their nature.

It's only after men aren't taught to process their emotions internally and the lack of good male role models that you have men who can't process their emotions correctly and lead to outbursts of anger and immaturity. Yet also somehow blamed on traditional masculinity.

There's some other funny stuff in there that you can only shake your head at, but it's pretty obvious that this is a problem of feminism's making. They really want to complain about the men they created with their own philosophy while unloading the blame onto other things.

Suffering is normal

This is from the Biblical Masculinity Blueprint book, but strikingly relevant to Dalrock's latest post on the promises of fake Christianity.

One of the common themes that we see throughout the Old Testament is the promise of God that if Abraham and Israel followed His commandments, they would be blessed and prosperous.

> It shall come about, if you listen obediently to my commandments which I am commanding you today, to love the Lord your God and to serve Him with all your heart and all your soul, that He will give the rain for your land in its season, the early and late rain, that you may gather in your grain and your new wine and your oil. He will give grass in your fields for your cattle, and you will eat and be satisfied. Beware that your hearts are not deceived, and that you do not turn away and serve other gods and worship them. Or the anger of the Lord will be kindled against you, and He will shut up the heavens so that there will be no rain and the ground will not yield its fruit; and you will perish quickly from the good land which the Lord is giving you (Deuteronomy 11:13–17).

This is where much of the so-called prosperity gospel comes from in first-world Christianity. It is a seductive lie that if you are obedient to God, He will bless you. Some examples of this include:

- If you obey God, you will be happy.
- If you give [money] to God, He will multiply your finances many times over.
- You can name it and claim it or ask God for something, and He will give it to you.

Certainly, these promises were given in the Old Testament, but what about the New Testament? If you obey God, will you be happy?

> "These things I have spoken to you, so that in Me you may have peace. In the world you have tribulation, but take courage; I have overcome the world" (John 16:33).
> Now you followed my teaching, conduct, purpose, faith, patience, love, perseverance, persecutions, and sufferings, such as happened to me at Antioch, at Iconium and at Lystra; what persecutions I endured, and out of them all the Lord rescued me! Indeed, all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will be persecuted. But evil men and impostors will proceed from bad to worse, deceiving and being deceived (2 Timothy 3:10–13).

Everyone who desires to live a godly life in Christ Jesus will be persecuted! God does not promise Christians the fleeting feeling of happiness, which is different from the fruit of the Spirit, peace and joy. Far from it. We should prepare to suffer as Christians for our faith. Even Jesus told us that those who are his disciples will be hated by the world. Yet we are to cling fast to His teachings for salvation. We are to evangelize and make disciples.

What do the scriptures say about generosity?

> Now this I say, he who sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, and he who sows bountifully will also reap bountifully. Each one must do just as he has purposed in his heart, not grudgingly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver. . . . Now He who supplies seed to the sower and bread for food will supply and multiply your seed for sowing and increase the harvest of your righteousness; you will be enriched in everything for all liberality, which through us is producing thanksgiving to God. For the ministry of this service is not only fully supplying the needs of the saints, but is also overflowing through many thanksgivings to God (2 Corinthians 9:6–7, 10–12).

Our generosity multiplies our seed to increase our harvest of righteousness and thanksgiving to God. It does not promise us money or other worldly riches. Rather, we are storing up treasures in heaven.

What do the scriptures say about prosperity?

> Do not worry then, saying, 'What will we eat?' or 'What will we drink?' or 'What will we wear for clothing?' For the Gentiles eagerly seek all these things; for your heavenly Father knows that you need all these things. But seek first His kingdom and His righteousness, and all these things will be added to you. (Matthew 6:31–33).

The context of the above passage is anxiety about basic human needs, such as food, drink, and clothing and not money or worldly riches. Jesus showed a practical application of this in Luke 10 when He sent out the seventy disciples—don't take a money or a bag or sandals but instead eat whatever food and drink is provided to you.

As humans, we have the tendency to think that God hates us or that we did something wrong if we have problems. The scriptures do not promise that if we obey God, we will be happy, rich, or that He will give us our desires (though He might). The main thing that we are promised is suffering and persecution for choosing to follow Jesus. It is important to remove the expectation that God will make us happy because this can severely cripple our faith if our life circumstances become hard or extremely difficult.

How many Christians and even non-Christians have turned away from God because they faced difficult circumstances? I'm sure many of us can think of several people who have turned away from God in these situations. But we should instead rejoice and give thanks in our hard circumstances because we can be a witness to those around us in the culture and even the church that we are different. Our joy amidst suffering—even in prison (Acts 16) like Peter, Paul, and the other disciples—shows that God has changed us and delivered us. That's God's will for us. 1 Thessalonians 5:16–18 encourages us, "Rejoice always; pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks; for this is God's will for you in Christ Jesus."

All of this is to say that sometimes the battlefield will come to us where we least expect it. Our relationships with our friends, our family, and even in our relationships and marriages can become strained and lead to suffering or even persecution.

This is not a reason to be angry with God, but it is an opportunity for us to witness and show the love of God during the suffering and persecution so that we can win those close to us for Christ. God calls us to do the right thing, and He can win our family, friends, or spouse to Him. But He also doesn't promise us that He will. We need to take it on faith that He will use our righteous actions to continually work in them.

Like Joseph, David, Job, Paul, and the rest of the disciples, we need to keep in mind that our loyalty is to God and His commandments first, no matter how bad our circumstances around us become. These men suffered and were persecuted even for decades on end. But they stayed faithful, and God mightily used them. The Christian life is hard. Embrace it and don't become bitter, impatient, or tired. Continually seek God for His help among the hardships that you encounter and put on His peace and joy.

Finally, if you need to complain, remember that complaining always goes up and not down. David pours out his heart to God in the Psalms, which teach us about the difficult times in his life. Any of his complaints, fears, worries are all going to God. They are not going to his wives, children, advisors, or those around him. David is called a man after God's own heart. Heed his example. Complaining is destructive to those around you. If you must vent or complain, find some trusted Christian brothers who can lend you an ear and give you godly counsel and encouragement.

This is the resilience that we need to develop as Christians that make us even more fervent for the gospel rather than to turn our backs on God. Marital troubles and divorce are certainly some times where the going gets rough, but God desires our obedience even in the midst of suffering

One of the big things I've consistently seen in both real life and here online is that people think that doing the right thing such as obedience to God and follow His marital roles and responsibilities will make their relationships or marriages happier.

Yes, it can often do that as God can use our behavior to change others. However, God does not promise us this. This is one of the big things you should take into account if you do decide to marry even if you vet well: you can have a spouse that totally goes off their rocker. Are you ready to fulfill your promises in marriage to God and them even if they make your life insanely difficult? That is a hard thing to do.

Suffering is the normal for Christians, especially since we are constantly warring against our own flesh and the spiritual battles going on all around us. The hard part to maturity in Christ is to embrace is to being joyful in the midst of suffering.

The Lord on vows and divorce

May 15, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the interesting arguments I've come across when counseling/giving advice to people in rough marriages is that "God cares more about the people more than the marriage."

An interesting take that seems to be true on the surface, but it doesn't actually take into account the Lord's position and is actually wrong.

Consider the story of Jephthah:

> Judges 11:29 Now the Spirit of the Lord came upon Jephthah, so that he passed through Gilead and Manasseh; then he passed through Mizpah of Gilead, and from Mizpah of Gilead he went on to the sons of Ammon. 30 Jephthah made a vow to the Lord and said, "If You will indeed give the sons of Ammon into my hand, 31 then it shall be that whatever comes out of the doors of my house to meet me when I return in peace from the sons of Ammon, it shall be the Lord's, and I will offer it up as a burnt offering." 32 So Jephthah crossed over to the sons of Ammon to fight against them; and the Lord gave them into his hand. 33 He struck them with a very great slaughter from Aroer to the entrance of Minnith, twenty cities, and as far as Abel-keramim. So the sons of Ammon were subdued before the sons of Israel.
> 34 When Jephthah came to his house at Mizpah, behold, his daughter was coming out to meet him with tambourines and with dancing. Now she was his one and only child; besides her he had no son or daughter. 35 When he saw her, he tore his clothes and said, "Alas, my daughter! You have brought me very low, and you are among those who trouble me; for I have given my word to the Lord, and I cannot take it back." 36 So she said to him, "My father, you have given your word to the Lord; do to me as you have said, since the Lord has avenged you of your enemies, the sons of Ammon." 37 She said to her father, "Let this thing be done for me; let me alone two months, that I may go to the mountains and weep because of my virginity, I and my companions." 38 Then he said, "Go." So he sent her away for two months; and she left with her companions, and wept on the mountains because of her virginity. 39 At the end of two months she returned to her father, who did to her according to the vow which he had made; and she had no relations with a man. Thus it became a custom in Israel, 40 that the daughters of Israel went yearly to commemorate the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite four days in the year.

Obviously, Jephthah makes a terrible vow, but both he and his daughter recognize that obeying the Lord is of the utmost importance even though it may result in his daughter's death.

Related: Numbers 30 on vows and Jesus on avoiding rash oaths/vows (because of the seriousness of them).

> Matthew 5:33 “Again, you have heard that the ancients were told, ‘You shall not make false vows, but shall fulfill your vows to the Lord.’ 34 But I say to you, make no oath at all, either by heaven, for it is the throne of God, 35 or by the earth, for it is the footstool of His feet, or by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King. 36 Nor shall you make an oath by your head, for you cannot make one hair white or black. 37 But let your statement be, ‘Yes, yes’ or ‘No, no’; anything beyond these is of evil.

Of course, every husband and wife takes vows to enter into the covenant of marriage.

Yeah, it sucks if you’re in an abusive situation (an actual abusive situation, not just they’re not doing what I want). If there’s physical abuse, sure, there’s possible reason to separate and stay single or reconcile. However, Jesus gave us the best example: he was totally innocent and suffered violence and abuse so that we would be reconciled to God. If only husbands and wives would model Jesus’ example in order to win their spouse to God.

Christians today think so little of God that at any sign of “suffering or abuse” they are counseled that they have the right to leave their marriage. Jesus’ example of bearing our sin and suffering means nothing to them.

Instead, God cared so much that He sent His totally innocent son to suffer violence and abuse on our behalf, and He invites us to follow His example to win others to Himself.

I think that many of these people are going to be surprised by God’s judgment on judgment day when God says “why did you counsel others to divorce” and they respond with “their spouse was abusive” that their response doesn’t cut it.

This is also another reason why the “exception clause” in Matthew 19 does not refer to divorce but likely the betrothal view (Deut 22), which I covered in Divorce Part 7 Final.

> Matthew 19:3 Some Pharisees came to Jesus, testing Him and asking, “Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for any reason at all?” 4 And He answered and said, “Have you not read that He who created them from the beginning made them male and female, 5 and said, ‘For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh’? 6 So they are no longer two, but one flesh. What therefore God has joined together, let no man separate.” 7 They *said to Him, “Why then did Moses command to give her a certificate of divorce and send her away?” 8 He *said to them, “Because of your hardness of heart Moses permitted you to puts away your wives; but from the beginning it has not been this way. 9 And I say to you, whoever puts away his wife, except for immorality, and marries another woman commits adultery.”
> 10 The disciples *said to Him, “If the relationship of the man with his wife is like this, it is better not to marry.” 11 But He said to them, “Not all men can accept > this statement, but only those to whom it has been given. 12 For there are eunuchs who were born that way from their mother's womb; and there are eunuchs who were made eunuchs by men; and there are also eunuchs who made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the kingdom of heaven. He who is able to accept this, let him accept it."

God does not invalidate your marriage vows despite how bad your spouse acts ("to have and to hold, from this day forward, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, till death do us part"), which means the exception cannot mean that God allows for divorce.

Indeed, only death breaks the marital covenant:

> Romans 7:2 For the married woman is bound by law to her husband while he is living; but if her husband dies, she is released from the law concerning the husband. 3 So then, if while her husband is living she is joined to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband dies, she is free from the law, so that she is not an adulteress though she is joined to another man.
> 1 Corinthians 7:10 But to the married I give instructions, not I, but the Lord, that the wife should not leave her husband 11 (but if she does leave, she must remain unmarried, or else be reconciled to her husband), and that the husband should not divorce his wife.
> 1 Corinthians 7:39 A wife is bound as long as her husband lives; but if her husband is dead, she is free to be married to whom she wishes, only in the Lord.

The Lord and Paul are consistent about this fact, and most Christians gloss over 1 Corinthians 7:39. This also means that the "abandonment" earlier in 1 Corinthians 7 cannot be a reason for release from the covenant of marriage and by extension definitely does not allow remarriage.

> 1 Corinthians 7:15 Yet if the unbelieving one leaves, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called us to peace.

Paul is saying that a believer is not under the "bonds of marriage" or the "roles and responsibilities of marriage." They should stay single or reconcile as they are still married to them to be consistent with the other Scripture.

Finally, to circle back to the beginning: God cares more about you being faithful to Him and honoring your word than even your physical health.

The Demise of Marriage: Cause and Effect

May 17, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I can't remember any one person having tried to write down all of the negative effects about the demise of marriage. This is basically a list to try to write down most if not all of them at least in the US. Most western countries probably have similar trends too. Some may overlap with Christianity and Christian marriage, though culture would have been increasing hostile regardless.

Got the idea from reading the comments here. Much of everyone arguing about many of the common talking points not realizing that pretty much everything contributed.

Unfortunately, don't have the time to link all of the posts that related to all of these topics, so I'll possibly do it when I have more time. Just linked some of the more recent ones.

Feminism

- Proto-feminism women's suffrage — sped up the implementation of liberal policies (see: many points below). However, many of these policies would come about regardless.
- Women in the workforce — increasing need for full-time jobs decreases quality and pay of jobs. Note: I'm not saying women can't or shouldn't work (as many women have throughout history and even Biblical times did: Proverbs 31), but this trend does negatively affect employment rates and quality of pay of jobs. It's basic economics.
- No fault divorce — incentivizes divorce and single motherhood, especially for cash and prizes
- Default mother gets the kids — incentivizes wife divorce
- Child support model has replaced fathers — can easily leave a marriage to get money
- Sex outside of marriage — decreases marriage rates, increases cohabitation
- Decreased stigma of bastards — decreases marriage rates
- Contraception — decrease marriage rates
- Abortion — decreases marriage rates via increased sex, decreased stigma, and contraception
- Bloating government spending and entitlements — incentivizes single motherhood and poverty
- Increased victimhood and protected class status — virtue signalling and sky high expectations become the norm
- Women can do no wrong — everything is somehow men's fault.
- Masculinity is demonized (via patriarchy) — decreases "good masculine men," increases "feminized pansy men," and increases "bad boys."

- Rise of the white knights — men thinking that helping or speaking up for women will make them attracted to him
- Cross-dressing and cross-behavior — women start to cut their hair short, wear men's clothing, and act more like men which leads to decreased their own attractiveness. Women with longer hair, feminine clothing such as dresses and skirts, and feminine demeanor are almost universally more attractive.
- Women delay marriage: "Find yourself" and "try to have it all" and "don't settle down too early" — delays women's marriage expectations until after their most attractive years
- Tearing down "patriarchy" or forced equality of the sexes which doesn't exist — women are not attracted to most men
- Decreased shame — "certainly societal shame over old maids, loose women, divorcees and bastard children played a large role in why many people were "christian" at the time. Once the stigmas started to be removed from the previous list then people found more interest in them. I mean, its not like loose women is a new thing, right? Been around since the beginning of time! However in most societies such women were shunned and frowned upon, despite the absence of God. This kept such activities in check, whereas now they are celebrated and running rampant!"

These trends have highly destabilized the marriage marketplace, leading to entitled, less-attractive, less feminine women and decreasing amounts of attractive masculine men.

Education trends

- Women gravitate toward educational teaching especially K-12 — biases education system toward girls
- Elimination of PE and increase of busy work in schools — biases education system toward girls
- No child left behind — no stigma for failure leads to decreased care about doing well in life, especially for boys who schools don't care about
- Men tend to do well in more hands-on fix-it work — some/many men prefer not to go to college and into trades
- College/STEM pushed for women via feminism — Women increasingly represented in college and graduate education (also due to above)
- Parents push their daughters more than their sons — Unsurprisingly, their daughters are more ambitious than their sons to get an education and good job

As educational attainment and a high paying job have become a 'status symbol,' this leads women to look down on men leading toward more "where have all the good men gone."

Other trends

- Social media and dating apps — Encourage narcissism and skyhigh unrealistic expectations, typically in women more than men, but can be both. Also, normalizes hedonistic lifestyles and presenting yourself as perfect without flaws.

- Husbands and fathers are treated with contempt and no respect — especially happens in the media. Corollary: Loss of solid role models. Decreases men who want to be such.
- Disney princess mentality — sky-high expectations of "prince charming" leading to decreased dates, relationship formation, and marriages. Improper view of "romance."
- Obesity — decreases both sexes attractiveness which decreases dates, relationship formation, and marriages.
- Pornography and romance novels — sexual satisfaction can be gained at the expense of morality outside (or even inside) of marriage.
- Liberal media bias — feminist policies are pushed at the expense of morality
- Romanticization of marriage — Most marriages outside of the last hundred years were not out of "[feeling] love."
- Many men and women start to believe that things that are attractive in men (e.g. have a good job, successful, educated, interesting, etc.) are also attractive for women to get a man — Hint: youth, beauty and femininity are attractive to men. These incorrect expectations lead women to focus on the wrong areas to try to land a man.
- Women want men that "have it all" but won't date men who are significantly older — this is simple logistics. Most men in early to mid 20s are not very successful yet, aside from a few start-ups and those men are usually socially awkward. Since there are only a few men like this early on, the few very attractive women will snap them up. The rest complain where "all the good men went" when their expectations don't match reality.
- Increase in risk averse behavior — parents want to protect their children from life rather than introduce them to the conflicts of life and how to overcome them. Less men and women are willing to take the plunge to get married earlier or even just ask their counterparts out on dates.
- Parents don't teach their sons and daughters about the opposite sex much anymore — little if any parental mentoring about life which leads to mass confusion for men and women

These factors negatively affect men and women's expectations of relationships and also some may result in decreased or significantly decreased attractiveness.

Christian trends

- Chivalry and feminism's "Christian" counterparts have replaced Biblical marital roles and responsibilities — leads to an inversion of roles or idolatry of the wife in the marriages
- Clear Biblical compromise — women pastors/leaders, de-veiling of women in Church, etc.

- Lack of focus onto preparation for marriage — God's Biblical marital roles and responsibilities are largely ignored or manipulated in favor of worldly talking points such as "communication" and "conflict management"
- Tingles are a sign of godliness — if she's in love with you (romance), you're not acting godly. Makes husbands idolize their wife's feelings and thereby a slave to them.
- "Women are more spiritual than men" — increases pride and self-entitlement and decreases repentance and humility
- "Women good, men bad" — an offshoot of the above used to blame husbands/fathers for even sins that their wives/daughters/sons commit saying that 'if they were only godly enough then their wife or children would submit.' Encourages rebellion and decreases respect and attraction.
- Feminimization of the Church: worship, preaching, etc. — increases female and decreases male attendance leading to disparities in the dating pool that negatively affect women.
- Preacher apex fallacy — sexual attraction is from power and status in the Church. "Be like me" attitude doesn't work, especially when the pastor suddenly starts having marital troubles because of adherence to chivalry or complementarianism over the Bible.
- Fall to cultural expectations — happy wife happy life, white knighting, women can do no wrong, and many of the other feminism trends.
- "A man must pursue a woman" — the non-Biblical reality of the typical conservative Christians. Reality: Jesus invited the disciples to follow Him, and the disciples chose to follow. He did not chase after them.
- Christians following worldly social scripts — college -> job -> house/car -> marriage are more important than instructing children to follow Biblical morality.
- Physical attractiveness and worldly success are largely ignored — to get a spouse you must wait on "God's timing and be godly" while ignoring that no one wants to go out on dates with obese, poorly dressed, and poorly marriage-prepared Christians. Which leads into…
- "God's timing…" or "God's plan…" — prevents Christians from actually taking steps to change their own situation which decreases chances of meeting someone who also finds attractive. Corollary: God does not promise anyone a spouse in the Bible
- Nuclear rejections — dissuades young Christian men from approaching in the future
- The over-spiritualization of dating — Dating is only encouraged if you're serious about getting married, and Christian friends hype up a date like you're getting engaged.
- Jesus is my boyfriend — leads to weird pseudo-romance that negatively inflates women's expectations in a relationships
- Mother's day and Father's day microcosm — praise mothers and shame fathers to do better or "man up." Even worse: claim God the Father is also a mother.

- Purity culture — Flirting is a “sin.” Women are brown-beaten to not have sex so much they still remain unwilling to have sex in marriage.

Honestly, there were more Christian (or should I say non-Christian) trends than I expected. Most of these negatively affect women’s expectations. Some disincentivize men from being Christian or even trying to date. The worst offenders are the ones that distort the Scriptures to mean or say things that God never said about marriage or promises He never made.

Overall thoughts

In general, when most men and most women married in their early to mid 20s, the women were marrying for the trajectory of what the man could be (unless she was marrying someone 5-10+ years older than herself). Men would get the “wife of their youth” immediately while working to support his family and become a great husband and father that his wife could brag about as he becomes much more successful.

Most Christian men and women would do well to focus on themselves and what benefits they could bring to a potential spouse. They should work on their own attractiveness: stay fit, eat healthy, well groomed, and masculine or feminine in action and clothing if possible. They should also focus on what God says about marriage and not the common cultural Christian distortions that are parallels of what culture says about husbands and wives.

Christians should be active in serving Jesus and mentoring/discipling others and being mentored/discipled themselves if possible. Network within the Church and go to widespread events as that gives them more avenues to meet other Christians. Evaluate your own expectations of a spouse to make sure that you’re not having unrealistic expectations or too many deal breakers (aside from Biblical requirements like serious Christian).

Also, if I missed any, add them to the comments. I’m pretty sure I got most of everything, but there are always some that I probably missed.

What did they expect?

Men are afraid to mentor women after #metoo

> LeanIn.org and SurveyMonkey's new #MentorHer poll reveals Friday that 60% of male managers report feeling "too nervous" about being accused of harassment to interact with women in "common workplace" activities such as mentoring, socializing and one-on-one meetings.
> That's a 32% spike from 2018, with an additional 36% of men saying they now actively avoid women in junior-level positions — effectively chopping down their shot at climbing the corporate ladder.
> "The vast majority of managers and senior leaders are men," says Sheryl Sandberg, Facebook COO and founder of LeanIn.org, in a statement. "If they are reluctant even to meet one-on-one with women, there's no way women can get an equal shot at proving themselves."
> Widening the gender gap is actually an abuse of power, she says.
> "We're in a bad place — no one's ever gotten promoted without a one-on-one meeting, I feel confident in saying that," Sandberg tells "CBS This Morning" host Gayle King Friday. "Senior men right now are nine times more hesitant to travel with a woman and six times more likely to hesitate to have a work dinner."
> Women — and especially women of color — don't get the same amount of mentoring as men, "which means we're not getting an equal seat at the table," Sandberg says. "It's not enough to not harass us, you need to not ignore us, either."

Just so we get it straight:

1. Women accusing men are to be regarded as truth (guilty until proven innocent)
2. Less men want to mentor women because they don't want to be accused of anything
3. This obvious and logical response to accusation flinging is a male "abuse of power"

You can't make this stuff up.

I've said before that feminism is the cause of its own problems and made that clear in the book, but I didn't expect to be handed such an obvious example.

> Now Sandberg says it's time for men to "step up" and "redefine what it means to be a good guy at work" — before it costs us all a whole lot of cold hard cash.
> "There's not a company in the world that can afford to leave talent on the sidelines because it's female," she says. "But that's what will keep happening unless all of us — especially men — commit to doing better."

Always come down to the old “man up.”

Or maybe perhaps stop inciting women to vilify men?

Women’s attraction to masculine men

This article from psychology today looks at some of the research on attraction.

> Some researchers have suggested that masculine characteristics in men’s faces, such as a strong jaw or a heavy brow, are associated with good physical health and strength, while feminine characteristics, such as a small jaw or large eyes, are associated with emotional warmth and trustworthiness.
> Whether these hypothesized associations between facial masculinity-femininity and both men’s physical characteristics and personality traits are robust is hotly debated. Nonetheless, masculinized versions of male face images (versions in which male sex-typical traits are exaggerated) are at least reliably perceived to look physically stronger and fitter than feminized versions. Similarly, feminized versions of male face images (versions in which male sex-typical traits are reduced) are reliably perceived to look more trustworthy and cooperative than masculinized versions.
> Thus, when straight women assess men’s suitability as partners they are faced with a potentially intriguing tradeoff. On one hand, they could choose a masculine-faced, strong, and healthy partner. On the other hand, they could choose a feminine-faced, caring, sharing (i.e., prosocial) partner. Over the last decade or so, many studies have investigated how environmental factors might influence how women resolve this tradeoff, potentially giving rise to cultural differences in women’s preferences for masculine men.

This is standard. “Handsome” features in men have always been the wider, angular face with a strong jaw line.

> Ian Penton-Voak and colleagues (2004) conducted one of the first studies to look at this issue, comparing the facial masculinity preferences of women living in the UK with those of women living in rural Jamaica. They found that Jamaican women showed stronger preferences for masculine men than did UK women. To explain this cultural difference in masculinity preferences, they noted that the risk of contracting a serious illness was greater in rural Jamaica than in the UK and that long-term pair bonds between men and women were less common in rural Jamaica than in the UK. They speculated that these two factors could cause Jamaican women to place greater importance on the strength and health of masculine men and less importance on the prosociality of feminine men than do UK women.
> Following in this vein of research, Lisa DeBruine and colleagues (2010) tested whether women living in countries where people are more likely to die because of infectious illnesses showed stronger preferences for masculine-faced men.

> They found some evidence to support this hypothesis from an online study of more than 4,500 women in 30 countries. However, an alternative analysis of their publicly accessible data by Rob Brooks and colleagues (2010) suggested that threat of violence (as indicated by homicide and violent crime rates or by income inequality) was a better predictor of women's preferences for masculine men. They suggested women in countries with a higher threat of violence may show stronger preferences for masculine men because masculine men afford their partner greater physical protection and are better able to aggressively compete for resources.
> So far, so muddled… and from here the plot only thickens. Subsequent work by Isabel Scott and colleagues (2014) found little evidence that the threat of violence or risk of disease was related to women's masculinity preferences. Instead, they found that women in more modern, industrialized countries showed stronger preferences for masculine-faced men. They suggested that this pattern of results indicated that masculinity preferences were evolutionary novel and simply a consequence of women in more industrialized countries encountering many more faces in their daily lives than do women in less industrialized societies.
> The most recent study, by Ula Marcinkowska and colleagues (2019), found that women in countries with higher offspring survival rates and better economic conditions preferred more masculine-faced men. By contrast, they found no evidence that the threat of violence predicted women's masculinity preferences.
> So, what on earth is going on with these results? Some results suggest that women's masculinity preferences are stronger in countries where sickness is more common, others where sickness is less common, some where violence is more common, and others where economic conditions are more favorable. It's possible that women in wealthier, more industrialized countries are less interested in a caring, sharing partner. Indeed, Marcinkowska and colleagues found that masculinity preferences were stronger in countries where women were more open to short-term relationships—an argument similar to the one Penton-Voak and colleagues made 15 years previously!
> The disparate, often confusing results of these studies highlight the pitfalls inherent in using correlational designs to explore the highly intercorrelated factors that might underpin cultural differences in mate preferences. Experimental methods in which cues to environmental factors such as violence and disease can be systematically varied are clearly the solution to this problem, right? Although you might think so, two experiments that attempted to do precisely that also produced contrasting results. One experiment found that viewing images of sources of infectious disease increased masculinity preferences, but another experiment did not replicate this effect.

So what we have here is:

- Jamaican women showed stronger preference for masculine men than UK.
- Women in places with more infectious disease deaths and higher violence rates tend to prefer more masculine men.
- Women in modern, industrialized countries showed stronger preferences for masculine faced men.
- Women in countries with higher offspring survival rates preferred masculine faced men, and no evidence of the threat of violence.

This shouldn’t be a surprise to most of us. In general, women prefer masculine men. This is more prominent in countries with violence, but still even in industrialized countries women prefer masculine men.

In industrialized countries where the threat level of violence (protectorship) and provivision decrease (providership), women still prefer masculine men. However, the amount of masculine men similarly tend to decrease due to less overall masculinization of men (increasing feminization factors and less need for threat of violence), so you tend to see women with more less masculine men overall just because there is a deficit.

The author did not look at the age(s) of the participants in the study earlier, and we know that women tend to prefer more masculinized men in their 20s. But if they can’t find a masculine man to marry by 30s, they’ll start “preferring” less masculine men as their body goes into baby rabies mode.

In any case, be attractive and don’t be unattractive: be a masculine man.

Practical mailbag: should a man be just friends?

May 24, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> Was curious if there was any blogs regarding being 'just friends' with girls a guy's interested in. I know in Rationale Male they say to decline the offer. was curious if its the same view point amongst the 'Christian Manosphere'
> The short story: chatted with a girl on an app for a couple weeks, went on a date. she wanted to meet up again, but changed her mind and instead sent me a very long text involving a list of reasons of why a relationship wouldn't work. Now we chat once in awhile, through various social media accounts. Says she has a BF now and that were still friends on, says I'm welcome to visit her.
> Am i best to ghost her? tell her where friends off cause its toxic for me (literally can't talk to her without liking her more), Option C?? definitely don't want to become a stalker or continue as an AFC.

My reply:

> I have a post on this a while ago on understanding the friend zone and escaping it.
> Generally, a waste of time trying to leave the friend zone, unless something significantly changed about you.
> Overall: you guys chatted. She classified you as a friend. If you want to be a friend, feel free. If not, just cease talking because it seems like she's not interest and you're better off spending your time elsewhere.
> Most relationships of men and women devoid of romantic interest will peter out anyway, so it's a waste of time putting effort into something that is not fruitful in the long run. I don't really consider this ghosting unless there was mutual interest.

The girl above if she has a BF (which there is no reason to assume she doesn't if her interest level is declining as you can see from the messages), she's putting pretty much zero thought about you anymore. Most girls will say you can come chat with them to be nice, but they really don't want to spend more time on unfruitful relationships either.

It takes 2 to tango, and if a girl is wavering in her interest for you it's best to move on. You don't want to be with a girl who is wishy-washy about wanting to be with you. It's very easy for a woman's feeling to change if she's already feeling lukewarm about you from the start. You want someone who really wants to be with you and make time for you.

I think this type of thing is best done in person and to minimize texting initially if you are going that route. The more texting you do the easier it is to screw up burgeoning interest for your average man. There is also the issue of coming across differently than you are in person, which can be a big issue for both men and women.

The one exception is unless you are really good at generating interest from text which some men are good at doing (usually you need a good handle on how to tease her through text).

Link roundup: height doesn't matter, more domestic violence against men than women, male-female differences start in the womb

May 26, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

An article from dating.com claims height doesn't matter.

> A survey of 10,000 international Dating.com users, which included 5,000 males and 5,000 females ranging in age from 21-50, found that:
> - 68% of women said they find shorter men attractive
> - 82% of women said they would date a man that is the same height as she is
> - 61% of women say the perfect height for a man is 5'8″
> - 40% of women prefer men who are over six feet tall

Of course "some" women find short men attractive or would date a man about as tall as them: Short or average height celebrities (or men with other highly qualifying attractive traits).

I could believe that 61% of women say 5'8″ is a perfect height (although I think it's higher) as the average woman is about 5'3.5″ or so. About 4-5″ taller is pretty solid for most women. Note that the average male height is about 5'9.5″ or so as well. It's pretty obvious why God created men to be on average taller than women.

Even despite that, 40% of women prefer a man who is over 6'0." Yes, that's about 8.5″ taller than the average woman. That should tell you a little something about how true the statements of dating someone shorter or same height are.

Data on the past 12 months for domestic violence.

> Previous surveys have revealed near-parity between men and women in their rates of partner violence. But the most recent survey reveals a surprising shift: Men now are 31% more likely to be the victims of overall physical violence during the previous 12 months – 3.8% among men versus 2.9% for women (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey: 2015 Data Brief – Updated Release, Atlanta, Georgia. 2018. Tables 9 and 11.
> [image]

I suppose this shouldn't really be a surprise given how much VAWA and Duluth has biased the police against men. When you always blame one side for violence, it incentivizes the other side because there are no consequences. See: no fault divorce.

Large sex differences in the womb:

> Now we have another, even more striking study of the human brain prior to birth. In this study, American researchers managed to do MRI scans of pregnant mothers in the second and third trimesters, with sufficient resolution to image the brains of the babies inside the uterus. They found dramatic differences between female and male fetuses. For example, female fetuses demonstrated significant changes in connectivity between subcortical and cortical structures in the brain, as a function of gestational age. This pattern "was almost completely non-existent in male fetuses". They note that others have found, for example, that female infants have significantly greater brain volume in the prefrontal cortex compared with males. They conclude that "It seems likely that these volumetric differences [found after birth] are mirrored by [the] differences observed in the present study.

This should not be a surprise, given the science we briefly covered in the Caster Semenya issue.

It's fair to say that there are certainly sex differences that are genetic/biological and learned. But the blank slatists want to deny that because it undermines their "war on patriarchy."

Cuddle parties and wifely criticism is bad

May 30, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Couple of articles that were sent to me in the Federalist recently.

No, Men Don't Need Cuddle Parties To 'Fix' Their Masculinity

> Chick flicks, sitcoms, and jokes about post-coital practices would have us believe that cuddling is entirely the purview of women, but we know for sure that human beings need to be touched, meaning men, too. It's a basic human need. For those in solitary confinement, or the elderly, the hunger is more pronounced, and the lack of touch debilitating. For men without partners, spouses, or sexual contact, a demographic a recent Washington Post article revealed is on the rise, this lack of human contact can contribute to feelings of isolation.
> Perhaps that's why an educator at Pennsylvania's Lehigh University recently jumped into the fully clothed cuddle pile in support of the local Men's Therapeutic Cuddle Group in Plymouth Meeting, Pennsylvania. Dr. Christopher Liang, who teaches a gender, race, inclusion, and trauma lab at Lehigh, believes that men's cuddle groups can redefine masculinity. This statement is predicated on the assumption that masculinity itself is problematic, and needs redefinition.
> Cuddle parties have been a mainstay of the intimacy industry for years, making waves and rolling eyes from Silicon Valley to Brooklyn. Touted by Cuddle Party as "a playful social event designed for adults to explore communication, boundaries and affection," a cuddle party is decidedly non-sexual, and rooted in the idea that human beings crave to touch and be touched. But is touch so far from the realm of masculinity that for men to engage in it is to redefine the term?
> Liang was one of the creators of the American Psychological Association's first-ever "Guidelines for Psychological Practice with Boys and Men." In a release from Lehigh, he advocated for the Men's Therapeutic Cuddle Group as something that "can do a whole lot of good" for men. If what he means by "a whole lot of good" is based in the concept of masculinity that is elucidated in the guidelines, then "good" is the opposite of what's being put forward.

Touch is neither feminine or masculine. It's human.

This is very strange, until you get to the last paragraph and see that it's the some of the same people that came out with the new APA guidelines demonizing masculinity. Then it all makes sense.

> It's a mixed message, however, because while men are being asked to be less traditionally masculine, they are still held to the standards of that masculinity. The cuddle group is an opportunity for men to explore their emotional side with platonic affection, and for the men in the group, this seems to be a valuable undertaking. Men in the group use the new form of closeness as a means to deal > with past trauma, learning to be vulnerable, and finding the language to ask consent. The problem is in assuming that being masculine means entirely hiding vulnerability, whereas masculinity contains within it the burden of taking existential risks.

> My grandmother read parenting books during her time mothering four young children in the 1950s. The books told her to keep her children at a distance, not to hold them or cuddle them. She did as the books dictated, until she couldn't anymore. She scooped up her children, cuddling them, holding them, covering them with kisses. She said it made her feel like a bad mother to disobey the book, physically showing love to her children.
> The problem isn't that culture tells men vulnerability isn't masculine enough, or that standards of affection need be at arm's length. The problem is that we negate, at every turn, what it means to be human, and to love. Touch is not anti-masculine; it never was. Masculinity doesn't need to be redefined, nor does femininity.
> These are valiant forces in culture that are viable expressions, with usefulness, and weight. Before they are destroyed, we need to know what is proposed to replace them. If the new rubric is one in which men and women are interchangeable, with neither able to take true risk, embark upon dangerous quests, or cover each other with kisses, we won't like the loveless world we wind up with.

The author has started to piece things together, but doesn't get there. It's a war on God's design and trying to re-define feminine as masculine and vice versa. The people that are doing this are not trying to help men become "untoxic" or anything like that.

Only when you understand that it's insidious and malicious can you truly appreciate how the whole thing has happened.

Onto the better of the two articles IMO.

Dear Wives: Publicly Criticizing Your Husband Makes You Look Horrible

> As a 22-year-old, I didn't know who I would end up dating or marrying, but I felt sure there would be no fellow writer, especially not a fiction writer. There was something intrinsically off-putting about the thought of getting close to someone who might use my life and quirks to tell my story their way. And what if things soured? I assumed I really wouldn't like what I read.
> So I can only imagine what it's like to read about yourself in a non-fictional account, particularly when your spouse is putting you on blast in a major national newspaper. If this were a one-time thing, I might shake my head. But after reading the latest installment in the "my husband disappoints me" genre in The New York Times last weekend — this one penned by a clinical psychologist — I'd say we have a trend. And America, we need to talk.

> Darcy Lockman, whose editors sneeringly titled her opinion article, “What ‘Good’ Dads Get Away With,” opens by telling us, “When my husband and I became parents a decade ago, we were not prepared for the ways in which sexism was about to express itself in our relationship.” She proceeds to describe her husband’s cluelessness and lack of engagement, as well as their disagreement about whether she frequently noted his (perceived) failings.
> As I read this, I suspected I was supposed to identify with the writer and cackle about what a jerk her husband is. Yet my sympathies were with him. How did he feel reading about himself in The Times and having countless people read this unflattering account? Did his wife bother to run a draft of this article by him before publication? And would there be more unfortunate details in his wife’s forthcoming book, entitled “All the Rage: Mothers, Fathers, and the Myth of Equal Partnership?”
> I know the answers to none of those questions. However, I do know that if someone wants me to change the way I’m doing something, the most effective strategy is to speak directly to me. Not starting from the assumption that I’m doing things a certain way to be annoying, or that I’m driven by malice, laziness, or sexism. Not attacking me, and definitely not savaging me in front of a crowd.
> It’s hard to pinpoint when this trend erupted, although looking at the widely admired Michelle Obama might be a worthwhile starting point. In 2007, New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd wrote about wincing “when Michelle Obama chides her husband as a mere mortal.” In Michelle’s words, “‘For some reason this guy still can’t manage to put the butter up when he makes toast, secure the bread so that it doesn’t get stale, and his 5-year-old is still better at making the bed than he is.’” Oh, and Barack didn’t put his dirty socks in the laundry.

It’s like the old trope: if you’re criticizing your husband publicly you’re also criticizing yourself: you’re the one who married him. Few women seem to understand this sadly.

I’d argue it didn’t start with Obama. The popularity of the Internet as a medium became ubiquitous a few years after the rise of facebook and other social media. It became a lot easier to virtue signal (although this one is virtue sabotage really).

> By contrast, there is no obvious wisdom in publicly shaming your husband. What does that win you at home? What does that do to your marriage?
> One of the best bits of advice I ever read was in a parenting book: “What’s obvious to you is obvious to you.” In other words, ladies, if you’re unhappy with your situation, speak to your husband about it. He loves you and cares about your happiness. You’re more likely to resolve whatever’s troubling you if you’re clear about what you’d like to change. But please, for the sake of your marriage and any children, do it privately.

I’d be interested to know if this woman is a Christian or not… or if at least some secular women are waking up to the fact that such strategies only make themselves look dumb.

It’s also interesting to see how women who actually have empathy for men take care of themselves versus the women that are raging feminists. She has long hair, is fairly pretty, seems to dress well, and looks to take good care of herself. Ironically, this is becoming a bigger and bigger tell of who you avoid.

The truth about trickle truth

June 1, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

So “trickle truth” is one of the concepts where:

1. A woman (or man for that matter) is confronted about something in their past.
2. They provide you an answer.
3. You find out later that their answer was only partly true and it was much worse than you had initially thought from that answer
4. You confront them again and they tell you more about what happened
5. You think it’s over, but this cycle can repeat multiple times.

This often happens with a woman (or man’s) sexually history where they try to hide what they did in their past because they think it would make them look bad to potential romantic interests. Which is true by some measure.

There are multiple problems with this. Lying or lying by omission. It actually makes you look worse when you’re found out. Often times people don’t take this serious enough as a red flag.

In general, what we learn from this in the Bible is that truth is paramount.

If you truly are transformed and forgiven in Christ, you are willing to admit your sins as a testimony for Christ. Paul when he was Saul murdered many believers in Christ: a fact he freely admits in multiple epistles and claims he was the worst of sinners but God’s grace was sufficient for him. No matter how “bad” the truth sounds, if it’s part of your testimony of how God saved you then it’s a credit to Him.

If you think you have to hide something from others, your life or perhaps that area of your life has not be transformed by Christ. You see this much more from cultural Christians than you do from true Christians.

This is why any sort of trickle truth at least from a Christian woman or man is a red flag. This is doubly so if you are thinking about potentially marrying someone who you are getting trickle truth from.

Prosperity (husband) gospel for women

June 3, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I never really made the connection until now.

All of the notions that much of the modern Church peddles and believes in regard to getting married for women are in a sense another warped form of prosperity gospel.

- “Never settle”
- “God will bring you a husband”
- “Men should pursue after women”
- “It will happen in the right time”

In other words, God will bring you a husband in the right time that pursues you and meets the your standards (not God’s standards) if you follow Him.

It’s the same thing with the regular prosperity gospel. Instead of God providing all your needs (e.g. food and clothing in Matthew 6), He’ll provide you with worldly prosperity for following him: financial or material richness. A husband is but an extension of this “material richness” as we all live in a material world.

God is reduced to a cosmic vending machine, and a husband is but a object vended out to a woman. A status object that makes her life better by doing things for her.

I supposed the true irony is that you don’t have to change anything about yourself, any responsibilities, or even have to consider the future needs or desires of your potential husband. When all of these things actually make you a more attractive prospect that men would want to ask out.

Christ's sacrificial love from Ephesians 5

It's probably not that surprising how the Ephesians passage is easily warped into "servant leadership" or rather do what your wife wants to make her feel better. However, few do get the deep context of the passage.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

The sacrificial love Christ gave is for the specific purpose of sanctification. In other words, with His death Christ was thinking about how to reconcile us to God and Himself.

What most people don't realize is that this passage mirrors Genesis 2-3 accurately.

> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die."
> Genesis 3:6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.
> Genesis 3:11 And He said, "Who told you that you were naked? Have you eaten from the tree of which I commanded you not to eat?" 12 The man said, "The woman whom You gave to be with me, she gave me from the tree, and I ate." 13 Then the Lord God said to the woman, "What is this you have done?" And the woman said, "The serpent deceived me, and I ate."

The purpose of the Ephesians 5 passage goes back to the garden:

1. God commands Adam not to eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil
2. Adam ate from it without being deceived, under the persuasion of his wife (1 Tim 2)
3. God goes to Adam, and Adam blames Eve, and Eve blames the serpent

Christ's as the 2nd Adam (1 Cor 15) and his sacrifice is the example of a sacrificial love for our reconciliation with God. Thus, God gives husbands the same mission again to be the head of their wives and guide / teach / correct / rebuke them toward holiness rather than sin. To help them choose the tree of life rather than the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

When pastors make this passage about a husband making his wife feel better, they miss the deep meaning behind Christ’s sacrifice and parallel to creation in the passage.

False desire and true desire

June 10, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One big issue that I've seen that husbands run into when they start to follow God's Word again by acting the head of their marriage is that they have trouble distinguishing false versus true desire.

One of the issues that stems from is the the application of dread.

- There is legitimate dread/fear from a husband starting to act as the head in the relationship again because the old dysfunctional and sinful patterns are being disturbed. This is a good thing. You want to break the cycle of the wife acting as the head, rebelling, or otherwise being contentious and nagging.
- There is illegitimate dread from actually threatening or inducing fear.

The issue that I see that most Christian husbands have is that the second point often does result in better sex. It is legitimately true that if you use the a threat point of divorce (like many pastors tell wives to use against their husbands), it does often result in a wife being more enthusiastic about sex and more submissive. But this misses the point.

One of the main points of marriage is about emulating Christ and the Church. Christ does not rule by fear but by love. Christians don't follow Christ because we're afraid of hell. We follow Him because He showed His love for us that while we were still sinners Christ died for us.

"Threatening" certainly works (to an extent at least), but it also does not induce true desire. It's a false desire that masquerades as true. False desire does not make one more holy, though it can get some results like sex. True desire does, and it also gets the righteous results like sex.

This is why Jesus admonishes the disciples to use authority correctly: to love and serve others.

> Matthew 20:25 But Jesus called them to Himself and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great men exercise authority over them. 26 It is not this way among you, but whoever wishes to become great among you shall be your servant, 27 and whoever wishes to be first among you shall be your slave; 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many."

The problem, most of the time, is that we believe that we know what works better than God, or we don't believe that God will work His power through us. And then we flail around messing up relationships around us by using worldly measures like trying to threaten those close to us.

Roosh’s Christian conversion

June 12, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This video gives a lot of insight into Roosh’s (supposed) conversion to Christianity. Roosh’s interview with Sharpe on his turning Christian.

I ended up watching the whole thing. Here’s a bunch of the key talking points.

- Orthodoxy was his church of choice because that’s where he can take his mother and if I remember correct he grow up in that Church
- The death of his sister made him question the emptiness of his lifestyle. Thought about how it would be much better if he had been spending time with her rather than traveling around and banging women in different countries
- Traveling also was futile because he could have been establishing himself professionally for years, so if he wanted to have a family he could already be working toward that
- Taking shrooms help him confirm that Christianity was the right path as it supposedly made him see clearer through all of the socialized and feminized BS that is imposed on us all the time from the post-feminist world. It did not blow his mind.
- Regrets the player lifestyle but realizes that he may have not been a Christian had it played out any different way
- Has pulled most/all of his books on fornicating in other countries. Left the game ones up as he thinks game is not inherently bad but recognizing fornicating is.
- Talks about how his mind is constantly sexualizing women and running game on them as a habit, so he’s being celibate and focused on retraining his mind to be normal
- Would not comment on “deeper” aspects of the Christian faith as he is new to the faith and still studying the Bible and doing research on how to be and live as Christian, aside from the obvious no fornicating.
- Commented how haters would be haters (gathering around you and love what you’re doing but once you do something that they don’t like they’ll throw you under the bus) but is doing the interview for people who actually want to know the reasons why he has done an about face and why he thinks Christianity (“the God pill”) is true.
- Recognizes the gravity of Matthew 16:24-26 (“whoever wants to be My disciple must take up his cross…”) and is trying to follow in that vein
- Relaunching his site soon.

I ended up e-mailing him and offering him my book but he declined as he didn’t have time and would buy it if he did.

Overall, he seemed very genuine on the video and recognizes he’s still an infant in the faith but seems to be doing a lot of soul searching and research on how to live the faith out. Relaunching/rebranding is an interesting thing because you alienate most of your former userbase and it’s has to hurt him monetarily pulling his books. I think that’s the most genuine thing so far that we can see at least that shows that money is not everything, and he’s serious about what he’s talking about so far. We’ll see what comes out of it, but I think he’s on the right track. Even if the shrooms story was a bit weird (I’ve heard crazier conversions).

Also, there was a surprising amount of Christians commenting in the chat while the interview was going on. I think most of the Christians who encounter the manosphere don’t know blogs like Dalrock exist.

Take up your cross

June 16, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the spirit of the Roosh post a couple days ago, let's go over the verses he mentioned:

> Matthew 16:24 Then Jesus said to His disciples, "If anyone wishes to come after Me, he must deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me. 25 For whoever wishes to save his life will lose it; but whoever loses his life for My sake will find it. 26 For what will it profit a man if he gains the whole world and forfeits his soul? Or what will a man give in exchange for his soul? 27 For the Son of Man is going to come in the glory of His Father with His angels, and will then repay every man according to his deeds.

There's several interesting things about this verse.

- Jesus is subtly predicting the manner in which he would die
- Jesus is very graphic: "take up your cross" to the 1st century Jew would mean that you would literally carry the cross to the place where you would die a criminal's death in shame (nakedness) and suffering.
- This is the cost of discipleship (deny self and follow): you must be willing to sacrifice everything for His purpose/mission and follow Him until death.]

It's a very sobering passage, and so far I think Roosh understands that since he's trying to totally change his behavior. Hopefully he will come to the understanding that follow Jesus also means carrying out His mission: make disciples of all nations and teach them about Jesus.

I’ve posted about his newsletter before, but check out Aaron Reen’s Masculinist archives and sign up if you’re interested in content discussing Christian men’s issues. It’s up to #34 issues so far and covers a wide range of topics from the feminization of the Church to men’s personal lives to how to respond and support Churches and pastors even if they’re going off track.

He made a big contribution to The Biblical Masculinity Blueprint with allowing the material from newsletter #3, played a big role in editing, and made some monetary contribution to get the book out.

Incels and the growing plastic surgery culture

June 19, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This was a pretty crazy article with a sensationalist title of course.

> How Many Bones Would You Break to Get Laid? “Incels” are going under the knife to reshape their faces, and their dating prospects.

The article is long so I’ll only cover a bit.

> Truth4lie was 27, depressed, and living in a student apartment after a year in a psychiatric hospital on suicide watch when a friend showed him Neil Strauss’s pickup-artist guidebook, The Game. Together they practiced lines from the book, planning to use them on girls in nightclubs. “Would you like to kiss me? I didn’t say you could.”
> In real life, pickup artistry made Truth4lie anxious. One rule stated he needed to initiate conversation with a woman three seconds after seeing her, which felt like taking an exam. Still, he tried the techniques for a few years, with middling success. Eventually, he stumbled on a forum called Sluthate, where anonymous men gathered to “discredit the effectiveness of pickup art.” In one post, a user described coming to the realization that it didn’t matter what he said because of the way he looked.
> The user uploaded a selfie, and other Sluthate posters agreed, mocking the flaws in his face. They congratulated him for “taking the black pill,” shorthand for waking up to the tragedy of being ugly. Ugly people, especially ugly men, they said, are destined to lead unhappy lives and die alone.
> Reading this, Truth4lie felt exhilarated. In the mental hospital, counselors had told him the roots of his depression and anxiety were repressed childhood traumas. In therapy, he relived getting in physical fights as a kid with his dad and the time he punched his sister in the head. Cognition determined emotions, the counselors told him. By changing his mind-set, he could change his behavior. But what if his problems weren’t inside him but outside? Looks can’t be changed with a mind-set adjustment; neither can the cruelly superficial world that values them above all else. The realization was awful and great all at once, as if someone were finally telling him the truth about himself after a lifetime of fake validation.
> “The difference between a mirror image and non-flipped image of myself drives me crazy,” he typed one night, after spending hours comparing his phone’s selfies to his reflection. “I see all my asymmetries … How can it only be my brain?”
> Friends and family said he had body-dysmorphic disorder, a condition the International OCD Foundation says affects about one in every 50 people. Psychiatric manuals describe it as an obsession with perceived flaws in one’s > appearance that others don't see or notice. But Truth4lie's imperfections were perfectly noticeable to other forum users: weak jawline, feminine nose, small frame, thinning hair. To Truth4lie, their assessments explained why he hadn't fit in in high school, why his ex didn't love him, why women he looked at on the street didn't make eye contact.

Interestingly, the "black pill" leads some men who seem to be unsuccessful with women down the road of "reverse" narcissism. In other words, if looks are everything with women then even if you don't have the looks you must go the road of getting looks to be successful.

Seems to be the same with women's plastic surgery: breast augmentation, butt augmentation, lip augmentation, and whatever type of cosmetic the Kardashians are promoting nowadays. Beauty is not one thing but the only thing.

> Truth4lie had for a while tried to write a novel about his time in the psychiatric hospital. He read Camus, who said that life has no great meaning. He pondered nihilistic theories posited on the forums he frequented. He discovered terms like "oneitis," a disease of romantic obsession that enslaves men, and "hypergamy," an evolutionary principle that pushes women to seek mates above their status. In a post-monogamy society, that means a tiny percentage of genetically superior alpha guys hoard most hetero sex. There were infographics to back it up, Tinder experiments with precise data. Beyond that, there was biology: Genetic wiring controls most everything about life, the forums' users argued, ensuring the misery of people like him.
> The forums' posters blamed their plight on women's rising social power. Once upon a time, women without careers married for stability; today they inevitably spent their 20s riding a "cock carousel" of the hottest guys they could land, settling for an ugly or average-looking man only when they were old and used, i.e., above 30. Even then, women could hardly be depended on for loyalty. Showered with attention on dating apps, favored by divorce courts, beloved by HR diversity initiatives, women had become a privileged class. The forums rarely mentioned wage gaps, pregnancy discrimination, or sexual violence, except in jest.

When men get sucked into the black hole of knowledge (especially if they were lied to a lot about men and women and relationships), it's easy to go down the path of nihilism. That's where you get your incels and MGTOWs.

That's part of the big issue that I think Churches need to do better on: discipling single men and women especially those who want to get married. Actually tell them the truth. Help them in the areas where they need to grow and mature and give them advice to be attractive.

However, the broader picture is that Christians have the responsibility to take any knowledge and wisdom captive to Christ. It's very easy to go down the rabbit hole and lose sight of the mission completely. We're here to evangelize and make disciples. We're here to love and serve others. Anything that fosters bitterness, jealousy, or envy is not going to help any Christian be effective for Christ.

In Christ there is the fruit of the Spirit (love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, humility, and self control), contentment (the actual context of Phillipeans "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me"), and gratefulness.

Johns Hopkins Research: No evidence people are born gay or transgender

June 24, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This should not be a surprise, but I was surprised to see it in PJMedia. Although it is a couple years old.

> Scholars at Johns Hopkins University released a new report on Monday which argues that there is not sufficient evidence to suggest that lesbian, gay, or transgender people are born with this sexual orientation or gender identity.
> The three-part, 143-page report, which appeared in the Fall 2016 edition of The New Atlantis, also investigated other commonly accepted ideas about homosexuality and transgenderism. Mayer and his co-author Paul McHugh, a professor of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at Johns Hopkins, challenged the claim that discrimination and social stigma are the only reasons why homosexual and transgender people suffer higher rates of mental health problems and are more likely to commit suicide.

I think the weird part is they try to claim both sides:

- People are born homosexual or transgender. We shouldn't criticize them.
- But if you come to identify as something else, you can claim whatever you want to be and people should accept that.

You can't have it both ways.

> The study breaks down in three parts: First, Mayer and McHugh examined whether homosexuality is an inherited trait, and concluded that people are not simply "born that way." Second, they looked at the causes of the poor mental health associated with gay and transgender people, concluding that social stress does not explain all of it. Finally, they studied transgenderism, concluding that it is not innate and that transgender "treatments" are associated with negative outcomes.
> The report found insufficient evidence to back up the idea that people are born with innate sexual attractions. Mayer and McHugh examined past studies which show a modest association between genetic factors and sexual orientation, but these studies have not been able to pinpoint particular genes responsible. Other hypothesized biological causes, such as prenatal development and hormones, have also been linked to sexual orientation, but that evidence is also limited.
> "Studies of the brains of homosexuals and heterosexuals have found some differences, but have not demonstrated that these differences are inborn rather than the result of environmental factors that influenced both psychological and neurobiological traits," the report explained. "One environmental factor that > appears to be correlated with non-heterosexuality is child sexual abuse victimization, which may also contribute to the higher rates.”

That last paragraph doesn’t sit well with most of the liberal crowd.

> The report cited the National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent to Adult Health, which tracked the sexual orientation of children aged 7 to 12 in 1994-1995 and again in 2007-2008. Eighty percent of male respondents who had reported same-sex attraction and both-sex attraction in childhood later identified as exclusively heterosexual, while more than half of the females who reported both-sex attraction as children reported exclusive attraction to men as adults.
> Mayer and McHugh also analyzed twins. They pointed to a 2010 study by psychiatric epidemiologist Niklas Långström which analyzed 3,826 identical and fraternal same-sex twin pairs. Both twins had at least one same-sex partner in only 18 percent of male identical twins, and 11 percent of male fraternal twins. For women, both twins had at least one homosexual partner in 22 percent of identical twins and 17 percent of fraternal twins.
> “Summarizing the studies of twins, we can say that there is no reliable scientific evidence that sexual orientation is determined by a person’s genes,” the researchers wrote. “But there is evidence that genes play a role in influencing sexual orientation.”

The genetics part is the one that interests me the most. If homosexuality was “all” genetic, then you would expect that identical twins would have 100% rate of homosexuality if it was genetic. This is similar to inheritance of some diseases like Huntington’s where if you have the gene then you have it.

So homosexuality has some small to maybe moderate genetic influence at most based on the twin studies. Sometimes this occurs early on or sometimes later from the pushing of LGBT. This is a far cry from being born that way.

From a Christian perspective this is fairly consistent with how we interpret the fallen world. Since the fall, all humans have some predisposition (some genetic or otherwise) to certain sins. Since we are new creations in Christ, we don’t go along with what our flesh desires but the Spirit and conform it to Christ.

Of course, this is becoming “outdated” and “hate speech” even though the scientific consensus says otherwise.

Objectification is meaningless

June 29, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> Can you talk about the idea of objectification? I hear people use this word in regards to lust, porn, cat-calling, etc. but I'm not entirely sure I see sexual immorality as objectifying. Is objectification really the problem most men have in their views of women? If we ran through the gamut of sexual sin, do they all involve degrading a woman to an object? Is commitment the only thing that makes it not objectification. Maybe you get what I'm driving at? I just never understood that word and how exactly we objectify women in modern culture. For instance, to praise a women on her beauty is often considered objectification because it's assuming she has no power of agency and is merely an object to be looked at.

You gotta go back to the basics to understand this.

If an attractive man (or celebrity) "cat calls" a woman and she recognizes him, she's going to think it's flattering. If an unattractive man (say a homeless man) does the same thing she's going to think it's creepy. Women love to get the attention of attractive men with their beauty but hate when unattractive men do the same thing. Cat calls are corny and crass, so I would not recommend Christians do them anyway. But the point remains.

The problem is not with "objectification" but rather the context of who is doing the objectifying. It's a great thing for a husband and wife to objectify each other in that they're sexually attracted to various traits and aspects of each other. If you burn with passion and want to marry, it's a good thing to have that sexual attraction toward your wife. As with a wife, think she looks amazing or sexy? It's fine to express it, as long as you're not committing fornication or lacking self control with her (if not married).

Immorality of lust and porn are not sins because you're objectifying in them. Lust (or rather coveting in the NT) is about desiring wife that isn't yours (or woman if you're married). Lack of self control and warring against the flesh. There is reason the idea that it creates unreasonable expectations just like romance novels do with women too.

Overall, I would ignore everything that "modern culture" says about any topic. You'll always find that modern culture presents numerous double standards in behavior, usually in the favor of pedestalizing or idolizing women. The goal is to be conformed to Christ, and it's clear that culture is almost always diametrically opposed to what Christ says.

Anomalous

July 16, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The more you read the Bible and examine history, the more you understand that cultures that actually follow the LORD are anomalous.

The cultures that seem to emulate God's design (male led families) tend to be very successful, at least at first. However, that success is short-lived when they start to stray from God's design.

This is not a bug but a feature. All cultures will inevitably stray because humans don't like to follow God. Just as did Israel and Judah eventually rebelled against God, even God's Church has problems with obedience in Revelation 2 and 3. However, we are still called to be that people, not the culture.

> 1 Peter 2:9 But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, so that you may proclaim the excellencies of Him who has called you out of darkness into His marvelous light; 10 for you once were not a people, but now you are the people of God; you had not received mercy, but now you have received mercy.

It is actually an anomaly if a culture sticks with God's principles, though inadvertently, for a long time. Wide is the road that leads to destruction.

Sex difference in evaluating attractiveness or no?

July 18, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

On Dalrock's recent post, one thing stood out to me in Mandy Hale's comment:

> I never meet guys. Like…literally NEVER. A few years ago I felt like I could simply walk into a room and command the attention of the men in the room. I had no trouble meeting men. I got hit on regularly. But something changed along the way and that's not my experience anymore. I suspect it was more an internal change than an external one, as I honestly think I physically look better now than I did ten years ago.

I've had this conversation with my wife before about the attractiveness of some women we encounter. There's been several times where she'll say an older woman is very attractive, and I don't see it at all compared to a younger woman. This is not taking into account physical body changes: if a woman was obese and then suddenly got in shape she'll definitely become more attractive. However, objectively her youthfulness, fertility and facial attractiveness all decline as she ages.

A woman in her 30s can go from "unattractive" (overweight/obese) to "attractive for her age" (athletic/fit curvy), but she is not as objectively attractive as an average young non-obese young 20 something. Yes, she could be in greater physical shape and have better curves and maybe even better facial features, but she's still not as attractive as the younger woman. Youthfulness is one of the things that is very attractive to men. This is a fact that is fairly apparent to the vast majority of men, but it seems to be the case that women don't see it as readily as men do.

In women don't really understand male attraction, it also seemed to the case that women don't really understand the power of their own waist-to-hip ratio has on their overall attractiveness in conjunction with the clothes (hint: dresses and skirts) they wear. That's why the girl who lost weight went from like a 2-4 range ish to a 7-9ish on most scales whereas most women would've said her lost weight only bumped her up to the 5-7 range at most. The sex appeal comes from the lost weight on the face and the curves that make a man go "wow."

It seems to me that this would be potentially another sex difference that sabotages women's efforts to land a man. Unless there is a more drastic physical change, no woman is more attractive with age (or even if she is then her face at least won't show it for the most part). I suppose that some women "get it" when approaching the wall, but it seems that others do not.

I'd be curious to hear a weigh in from the men and women on if this is the case and why.

Joshua Harris divorces

July 27, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As you may have heard, Joshua Harris of “I kissed dating goodbye” fame is divorcing his wife. Quote from the Instagram post.

> My heart is full of gratitude. I wish you could see all the messages people sent me after the announcement of my divorce. They are expressions of love though they are saddened or even strongly disapprove of the decision.
> I am learning that no group has the market cornered on grace. This week I’ve received grace from Christians, atheists, evangelicals, exvangelicals, straight people, LGBTQ people, and everyone in-between. Of course there have also been strong words of rebuke from religious people. While not always pleasant, I know they are seeking to love me. (There have also been spiteful, hateful comments that angered and hurt me.)
> The information that was left out of our announcement is that I have undergone a massive shift in regard to my faith in Jesus. The popular phrase for this is “deconstruction,” the biblical phrase is “falling away.” By all the measurements that I have for defining a Christian, I am not a Christian. Many people tell me that there is a different way to practice faith and I want to remain open to this, but I’m not there now.
> Martin Luther said that the entire life of believers should be repentance. There’s beauty in that sentiment regardless of your view of God. I have lived in repentance for the past several years—repenting of my self-righteousness, my fear-based approach to life, the teaching of my books, my views of women in the church, and my approach to parenting to name a few. But I specifically want to add to this list now: to the LGBTQ+ community, I want to say that I am sorry for the views that I taught in my books and as a pastor regarding sexuality. I regret standing against marriage equality, for not affirming you and your place in the church, and for any ways that my writing and speaking contributed to a culture of exclusion and bigotry. I hope you can forgive me.
> To my Christians friends, I am grateful for your prayers. Don’t take it personally if I don’t immediately return calls. I can’t join in your mourning. I don’t view this moment negatively. I feel very much alive, and awake, and surprisingly hopeful. I believe with my sister Julian that, “All shall be well, and all manner of thing shall be well.”

I am not too surprised here given I briefly looked at his work again a couple years ago when analyzing his book and his own statements about it again. He stepped down as a lead pastor a few years ago if I remember correctly to focus on his own social media company. It seemed to go in a secular direction too.

The writing was probably on the wall then, but it just took the “courage” to “divorce his wife" for it to finally come out.

I think the ironic thing is that his book and the criticism he got from it played at least somewhat of a role in having him departing from the faith. I've seen this with some other high profile pastors who seem to lock onto a supposed "right way" to do things and when it turns out to be unwise, bad or harmful advice they often self-flagellate or blame God instead of admitting their error and repenting. If they get in a cycle of the former, they can go down the road of apostasy.

The most common example that we see is a pastor taking their own advice of "servant leadership" to try work and work and work to placate their wife's feelings or emotions instead of being the head as God commands… and that can lead them down the road of divorce. Then they wonder where God was when they thought they were doing what God wanted, even though they were only doing their own idea of what God said rather than what He actually commands.

My last post Lysa's divorce (and thankfully reconciliation) has tons of comments mainly from my criticism of her actions (and his actions too obviously), but this is a man so it's pretty easy to just agree and blame him.

Remember that Gillette commercial…

August 2, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

… that basically categorized all men as perpetuating weird masculine “norms.”

Mixed results.

> (Reuters) – Procter & Gamble Co’s (PG.N) quarterly revenue and adjusted profit beat Wall Street expectations on Tuesday, sending shares to a record-high even as the world’s No.1 personal goods company took an $8 billion charge on its Gillette shaving business.
> P&G reported a net loss of about $5.24 billion, or $2.12 per share, for the quarter ended June 30, due to an $8 billion non-cash writedown of Gillette. For the same period last year, P&G’s net income was $1.89 billion, or 72 cents per share.

P&G which owns Gillette lost 8 billion in their business, but their other businesses made up for it by beating their profit expectations.

Turns out tanking one business through boycotts is pretty easy, but making sure a diversified company feel it is pretty hard.

Also, haven’t had much time recently, but should be able to blog more soon.

“Losing the faith”

August 15, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Along with Joshua Harris choosing apostasy, AR comments that Marty Sampson (of Hillsong) is leaving the faith.

Marty Sampson wrote many of the worship songs that were played in some of the Churches that I grew up in, so that is definitely sad to hear. His lyrics were theologically sound in most cases.

John Cooper (of the band Skillet) has a widely quoted thing that is going around Christian circles on Facebook that relates to this.

> Ok I’m saying it. Because it’s too important not to. What is happening in Christianity? More and more of our outspoken leaders or influencers who were once “faces” of the faith are falling away. And at the same time they are being very vocal and bold about it. Shockingly they still want to influence others (for what purpose?)as they announce that they are leaving the faith. I’ll state my conclusion, then I’ll state some rebuttals to statements I’ve read by some of them. Firstly, I never judge people outside of my faith. Even if they hate religion or Christianity. That is not my place and I have many friends who disagree with my religion and that is 100% fine with me. However, when it comes to people within my faith, there must be a measure of loyalty and friendship and accountability to each other and the Word of God.
> My conclusion for the church(all of us Christians): We must STOP making worship leaders and thought leaders or influencers or cool people or “relevant” people the most influential people in Christendom. (And yes that includes people like me!) I’ve been saying for 20 years(and seemed probably quite judgmental to some of my peers) that we are in a dangerous place when the church is looking to 20 year old worship singers as our source of truth. We now have a church culture that learns who God is from singing modern praise songs rather than from the teachings of the Word. I’m not being rude to my worship leader friends (many who would agree with me) in saying that singers and musicians are good at communicating emotion and feeling. We create a moment and a vehicle for God to speak. However, singers are not always the best people to write solid bible truth and doctrine. Sometimes we are too young, too ignorant of scripture, too unaware, or too unconcerned about the purity of scripture and the holiness of the God we are singing to. Have you ever considered the disrespect of singing songs to God that are untrue of His character?
> I have a few specific thoughts and rebuttals to statements made by recently disavowed church influencers…first of all, I am stunned that the seemingly most important thing for these leaders who have lost their faith is to make such a bold new stance. Basically saying, “I’ve been living and preaching boldly something for 20 years and led generations of people with my teachings and now I no longer believe it..therefore I'm going to boldly and loudly tell people it was all wrong while I boldly and loudly lead people in to my next truth." I'm perplexed why they aren't embarrassed? Humbled? Ashamed, fearful, confused? Why be so eager to continue leading people when you clearly don't know where you are headed?

My second thought is, why do people act like "being real" covers a multitude of sins? As if someone is courageous simply for sharing virally every thought or dark place. That's not courageous. It's cavalier. Have they considered the ramifications? As if they are the harbingers of truth, saying "I used to think one way and practice it and preach it, but now I've learned all the new truth and will start practicing and preaching it." So the influencers become the voice for truth in whatever stage of life and whatever evolution takes place in their thinking.

Thirdly, there is a common thread running through these leaders/influencers that basically says that "no one else is talking about the REAL stuff." This is just flatly false. I just read today in a renown worship leader's statement, "How could a God of love send people to hell? No one talks about it." As if he is the first person to ask this? Brother, you are not that unique. The church has wrestled with this for 1500 years. Literally. Everybody talks about it. Children talk about it in Sunday school. There's like a billion books written on the topic. Just because you don't get the answer you want doesn't mean that we are unwilling to wrestle with it. We wrestle with scripture until we are transformed by the renewing of our minds.

And lastly, and most shocking imo, as these influencers disavow their faith, they always end their statements with their "new insight/new truth" that is basically a regurgitation of Jesus's words?! It's truly bizarre and ironic. They'll say "I'm disavowing my faith but remember, love people, be generous, forgive others". Ummm, why? That is actually not human nature. No child is ever born and says "I just want to love others before loving myself. I want to turn the other cheek. I want to give my money away to others in need". Those are bible principles taught by a prophet/Priest/king of kings who wants us to live by a higher standard which is not an earthly standard, but rather the 'Kingdom of God' standard. Therefore if Jesus is not the truth and if the Word of God is not absolute, then by preaching Jesus's teachings you are endorsing the words of a madman. A lunatic who said "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No one comes to the father except through me." He also said that he was alive before Abraham, and to see him was to see God because he was one with God. So why then would a disavowed christian leader promote that "generosity is good"? How would you know "what is good" without Jesus's teachings? And will your ideas of what is "good" be different from year to year based on your experience, culture trends, poplular opinion etc and furthermore will you continue year by year to lead others into your idea of goodness even though it is not absolute? I'm amazed that so many Christians want the benefits of the kingdom of God, but with the caveat that they themselves will be the King.

> It is time for the church to rediscover the preeminence of the Word. And to value the teaching of the Word. We need to value truth over feeling. Truth over emotion. And what we are seeing now is the result of the church raising up influencers who did not supremely value truth who have led a generation who also do not believe in the supremacy of truth. And now those disavowed leaders are proudly still leading and influencing boldly AWAY from the truth.
> Is it any wonder that some of our disavowed Christian leaders are letting go of the absolute truth of the Bible and subsequently their lives are falling apart? Further and further they are sinking in the sea all the while shouting “now I’ve found the truth! Follow me!!” Brothers and sisters in the faith all around the world, pastors, teachers, worship leaders, influencers…I implore you, please please in your search for relevancy for the gospel, let us NOT find creative ways to shape Gods word into the image of our culture by stifling inconvenient truths. But rather let us hold on even tighter to the anchor of the living Word of God. For He changes NOT. “The grass withers and the flowers fade away, but the word of our God stands forever” (Isaiah 40:8)

Very good insight overall. Emotionalism based on “how you feel in your relationship with God” that is so prevalent in modern Churchianity is not a good way to base your foundation on God.

These people have rose to the positions that they were in on virtue of their God-given talent, but their foundation was shaky. They knew a lot about God, but they didn’t know God. Their talents count carry them to the positions they were in, the popularity, success, and fame, but when push comes to shove with the world it was too easy to be seduced by the world because they did not have a foundation.

They were the seed that fell on the rocky soil.

> Matthew 13:1 That same day Jesus went out of the house and sat by the lake. 2 Such large crowds gathered around him that he got into a boat and sat in it, while all the people stood on the shore. 3 Then he told them many things in parables, saying: “A farmer went out to sow his seed. 4 As he was scattering the seed, some fell along the path, and the birds came and ate it up. 5 Some fell on rocky places, where it did not have much soil. It sprang up quickly, because the soil was shallow. 6 But when the sun came up, the plants were scorched, and they withered because they had no root. 7 Other seed fell among thorns, which grew up and choked the plants. 8 Still other seed fell on good soil, where it produced a crop—a hundred, sixty or thirty times what was sown. 9 Whoever has ears, let them hear.”

They sprang up quickly and brightly but withered without a root.

In fact, this is most people in the Church today as Christianity becomes more and more unpopular. This has been the trend in the Church for decades. I’m surprised it has taken this long for more high profile leaders to leave faith to be honest.

God's Biblical marital roles and responsibilities are the bare minimum and why past America had such an appeal

August 16, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things that is interesting to me that I've been mulling over more recently (again) is the fact that most things in the Scriptures are the bare minimum.

For marriage, God commands the husband to be the head and love his wife while He commands the wife to submit and respect and be affectionate with her husband. He commands both of them to have sex with each other. If they separate, they must stay single or reconcile.

One of the things that I think exemplifies "perfection" in marriage is similar in nature to God's provision:

> Matthew 6:25 "For this reason I say to you, do not be worried about your life, as to what you will eat or what you will drink; nor for your body, as to what you will put on. Is not life more than food, and the body more than clothing? 26 Look at the birds of the air, that they do not sow, nor reap nor gather into barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not worth much more than they? 27 And who of you by being worried can add a single hour to his life? 28 And why are you worried about clothing? Observe how the lilies of the field grow; they do not toil nor do they spin, 29 yet I say to you that not even Solomon in all his glory clothed himself like one of these. 30 But if God so clothes the grass of the field, which is alive today and tomorrow is thrown into the furnace, will He not much more clothe you? You of little faith! 31 Do not worry then, saying, 'What will we eat?' or 'What will we drink?' or 'What will we wear for clothing?' 32 For the Gentiles eagerly seek all these things; for your heavenly Father knows that you need all these things. 33 But seek first His kingdom and His righteousness, and all these things will be added to you.
> 34 "So do not worry about tomorrow; for tomorrow will care for itself. Each day has enough trouble of its own.

God already knows our needs and will provide for them (our needs and not our wants). We just need to have faith and follow Him.

The anomalous post a few weeks ago showed that it's not normal for any culture to follow God. Nova made some good points that our culture prior mimicked that to some extent, but ultimately diverted fast and hard once norms fell apart.

> I generally agree, and this is where I think a great deal of the nostalgia for the US prior to, say, 1965, or August 1920 or what have you is misplaced.
> What we had prior to the social revolution that began in the 1960s was a society that was “Christian” on its surface, but really only on its surface. There was a convergence of its own between the kind of values that fostered middle class life and Christian values, construed broadly, when relating to sexuality and marital and family life. That is, there was a broad overlap between the two, such that following Christian teaching about sex, marriage and family life not only didn’t interfere with the middle class life script — it actually “rhymed” with it, such that it did not really impede the middle class life script. So people followed along, and it was easy enough for them to seem Christian due to their following those customs, even if they didn’t have a deep faith, and were following them because they were also the social values and customs of the rising middle class, and everyone, at the time, who was “getting ahead” was following them as well and leading successful lives. So there was a meshing there that took place that blurred exactly how Christian and faithful people were.

My own take is that they were not, in fact, very faithful, because the same people, once conditions changed quickly, pretty much abandoned, en masse, the Christian teachings in these areas for the new middle class life script, with only a small minority sticking to the “old rules”. We know what led to the middle class script being changed — everything from cheap and legal birth control and abortion, to an economy that moved from industry to service (and then now to “knowledge”), to feminism as a social and political ideology whose strength itself was fed by these technological and economic changes. In the space of a generation, middle class parents shifted dramatically when it came to their daughters … MRS degree was out, career path for its own sake was in. That script, which became solidified in the culture in the 1980s and 90s, does not call for marriage until after the education/early career phase has been secured … an age which started in the mid 20s area and which has advanced higher every year. This, of course, implies that almost all of these will be fornicating along the way … and all the more as the average age of first marriage increases. There was, and likely always will be, a small group that refuses to do so – the faithful group — but it’s tiny even in Christian communities. It’s just taken as a given by middle class and upper middle Christians that their children are likely going to be fornicating, and this is tolerated because it is felt to be a necessary risk in order to facilitate the important middle class life script. It also leads to much more egalitarian marriages, because the changes in the economy meant that in many areas living without two incomes, unless one of them was sky high, was increasingly difficult, and involved the sacrifice of not living a middle class life — which was an unwanted sacrifice because, again, the whole point of the middle class life script is to live a middle class life to begin with! Of course egalitarian marriages aren’t what the Church had taught since time immemorial, either, but that, too, had to bend before the more important middle class life script, such that men and women were formed to fall into both fornication and later in life more egalitarian marriages due to the life script, and everyone just adapted.

I think one of the interesting things is that there was some “beauty” in how Western Civilization followed in these norms at the time. For instance, a lot of men have a very romanticized view of the 1950s in America was a man/husband has a hard day at work and comes home to his wife and kids and hot meal on the table.

This is a classic. Why is that a classic? It shows that his family, particularly his wife, was anticipating his needs after a long hard day at work. It’s a beautiful example yet one which those who hate God (feminists and their ilk) seek to ruin. They can’t stomach the underlying assumptions from the wife: anticipating a husband’s need, showing him respect, being kind, giving and generous with her time. God forbid she shows that she actually likes her husband or being a housewife (or other things of that nature).

It is a good example of understanding why many men wish to go back to such a time (even though 1950s America wasn’t anymore “Christian” than America is today). A wife and family that actually cared and respected them. This is not to say it cannot happen today either, but it is vastly more difficult to raise a family fighting against secular and even conservative or Church currents that may push against it.

In conclusion, first work on Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. They are the bare minimum. Then seek to go above and beyond by trying to anticipate your wife’s or your husband’s needs.

The curses/punishments are disruptions to natural order

September 5, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was reviewing Genesis 1-4 over the past few weeks (starting with my read through of the Bible again), and some more interesting topics came up in relation to the temptations and sin of Adam and Eve. I covered some of these in not curses but punishments one and two..

God presents 4 different commands to Adam (and Eve) in the garden.

> Genesis 1:26 Then God said, “Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth.” 27 God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them. 28 God blessed them; and God said to them, “Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth.”
> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, “From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die.”

1. Be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth
2. Take dominion/subdue the earth and everything in it
3. Cultivate and keep the garden
4. Do not eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, or you will die

The temptation of Eve by deception and Adam’s disobedience show us a couple things too.

> Genesis 3:4 The serpent said to the woman, “You surely will not die! 5 For God knows that in the day you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil.” 6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.

It’s the half truths that really shine through, IMO.

1. You won’t die (sorta true. They didn’t “immediately die,” but they ended up with spiritual death and eventually a physical death)

2. You will be like God, (the true temptation here)
3. knowing good and evil (true, it is the tree of the knowledge of good and evil after all)

Thus, it is interesting to see the punishments.

> Genesis 3:16 To the woman He said, “I will greatly multiply Your pain in childbirth, In pain you will bring forth children; Yet your desire will be for your husband, And he will rule over you.”
> 17 Then to Adam He said, “Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, ‘You shall not eat from it’; Cursed is the ground because of you; In toil you will eat of it All the days of your life. 18 “Both thorns and thistles it shall grow for you; And you will eat the plants of the field; 19 By the sweat of your face You will eat bread, Till you return to the ground, Because from it you were taken; For you are dust, And to dust you shall return.”

What you see in the punishments are a typical pattern of increase and see how they correlate directly to God’s commands:

1. Be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth — Eve has increased pain in childbirthing (she already had some pain, but it is “greatly increased”)
2. Take dominion/subdue the earth and everything in it — This command is originally fulfilled by Adam in Genesis 2 as he is naming the animals and does not need Eve (though God needs a suitable helper). By being tempted to be like God, Eve is tempted to subvert the natural order which Paul expounds on this in 1 Cor 11 with God > Jesus > man > woman. Eve’s temptation is thus: Woman = God > man. This is feminism 101. Women are “god.”
3. Cultivate and keep the garden — The ground is cursed so that it bears thistles and thorns which make this command harder.
4. Do not eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, or you will die — An increase in death, Adam and Eve died a spiritual and physical death.

There is also the correlation to “desire” in Genesis 4 where God says to Cain:

> Genesis 4:7 If you do well, will not your countenance be lifted up? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door; and its desire is for you, but you must master it.”

A wife that knows good (submission) versus a wife that knows evil and tries to usurp or disobey headship from her husband.

In other words, all of the punishments (including Eve’s) are increased temptation to sin which result in an increase in disruption of God’s natural order.

Greatly multiplied childbirthing pain tempts many women away from wanting to have children (which can easily be seen with contraception thereby decoupling sex from procreation — the descent into a hedonist society). Eve is tempted to be like God, and one of those consequences is to be tempted to usurp or disobey her husband’s headship. Adam’s work is made harder, which is why he is tempted to be lazy (big temptation for many men). And obviously death is another natural disorder from God’s creation.

A general response to sin for Christian husbands and wives

September 16, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've seen a few topics come up on the Christian RP reddit on understanding the Bible on response to sin from a husband or wife.

The Christian husband and wife are each responsible for their Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. If one of them is a Christian and the other is not, 1 Corinthians 7 and 1 Peter 3 apply which is different. Within these there's 6 different things (3 sets of 2 pairs) of general understanding and responsibility:

1. A husband is responsible for his own sin.
2. A wife is responsible for her own sin.
3. A husband is responsible for influencing his wife
4. A wife is responsible for influencing her husband
5. A husband is responsible for how he responds to his wife's sin
6. A wife is responsible for how she responds to her husband's sin

Let's say a wife cheats (this can also be for the husband just replace the wife with the husband and vice versa).

- The wife is responsible for her own cheating to God, but
- a husband may have some culpability in influencing his wife to cheat if for instance he's harsh with her constantly which can influence her to seek attention of other men or constantly denies her sex or things like these.
- both the husband and wife are responsible in how they respond to the sin. The husband must call his wife to repent (fire and brimstone or kindly depending on the situation- whichever one helps her repent better), and the wife is responsible for repenting

There's a lot of personal accountability and responsibility for the husband and wife, even though they are in different roles and positions of authority. The main thing is that they must be within the bounds of the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. To paraphrase: For the husband headship, love, and honoring his wife, and for the wife respect and submission.

For the husband in responding to a wife's sin it must be done in love and honor while for a wife responding to her husband's sin it must be done with respect and submission.

One big thing you see in modern "Christianity" is that if a husband sins the wife suddenly "gets out of acting respectful and submitting to him" which is totally contrary to the Scriptures in 1 Peter 3. This is where a lot of the Church caves to culture. On the other hand, the reverse is true such as in the secular RP- the man bears 100% responsibility and the women have very little blame. In the Bible, God holds each person accountable to the role in which He has called them.

Understanding what vetting does and does not do

September 25, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's a "married red pill" post going around about how "vetting doesn't work and why boundaries are way better" which has some good points though I disagree with a substantial amount.

I'll quote a few parts of that post. Click if you want to read more.

> Vetting is the relationship strategy where a man takes a list of values and qualities he prefers in women and uses it to assess the viability of the woman he is currently dating so that he can know if she is worth committing to over the long term. The quintessential strategy for the type of men who readily identify with being traditional and conservative within a modern and liberal society. Note, these are little 'l,' and little 'c.' This isn't about tribal politics, this is about men. The vetting strategy is thrown around as if its the same strategy men have used throughout history, when in reality it's a horrible mental model; a narrative guys use to provide comfort for the grim reality that relationships all end, and most end well before the man is ready to move on, or his children have had the full biological father experience.

I think this is overestimating the purpose of vetting. I've written a lot about vetting before and how it can be used.

Vetting, especially for Christians, is for 3 primary purposes:

- It seeks to compare past behavior against present behavior to ascertain if someone is actually following Christ or doing it in name only.
- It also seeks to understand if a woman is a good fit for your mission in following Christ
- It also can possibly an early indicator about readiness for marriage.

Vetting is sort of like a job interview or background check in a sense (though you do not want to come off like this in person!). Someone following Christ or not following Christ will have certain qualities and values. Likewise, someone who wants a job but has bad past employment history (lack of being able to continually hold a job, lazy, etc.) is a much worse candidate than someone who doesn't. There are exceptions, but the rules generally hold. That does not automatically make the person with a better employment history a perfect candidate: they could just be good at hiding things and be a terrible employee down the road.

Clearly you want an applicant that fits the job also: if you're a missionary you want a woman who is on board with going out an evangelizing. If you're mission is men's ministry, you need a wife who is on board with you meeting men often during the week and doing life with them in and outside of your house. There are some women who can slip through the cracks, but for the most part this catches the vast majority of lukewarm Christians who attend Church every Sunday and say they are following Christ, but their behavior elsewhere is lacking in obedience to Christ.

To summarize: Generally, you're able to eliminate the bad candidates straight off the bat. Thus, the goal of vetting for both men and women should be to eliminate the inconspicuous bad candidates before you waste both of your time.

> Vetting is a horrible strategy for the following reasons:
> - Men do not know what they want in life. Men have a wonderful ability to rationalize what the world offers, transforming it what men wanted all along. A vetting list is guesswork and post hoc rationalization.
> - Vetting a woman is vetting for values. The question is, whose values? Men today are instilled with feminine values, created by and for women to meet their own needs, not his.
> - Vetting only works if everyone is doing is immunized from everything else.
> - Vetting for values is a narcissistic fantasy, and serve to hide the true nature of women and men in order to live in the narrative it presents. By the time the masks come off it's too late.
> - Vetting creates an ego investment, where a man ignores anything that is outside of his vetted criteria. If the list is wrong, it's an attack on a mans ego, and he will fight tooth and nail to protect it.
> - Even if the masks are off, and humans are naked and honest in their interactions (which they aren't) vetting offers a snapshot into someones values, not a longitudinal assessment. It has the same longevity as an MBTI assessment; it's astrology for the educated.
> - Vetting is often done to the exclusion of actual relationship strategies. Boundary enforcement is far superior and doesn't require a lifetime of instilling feminine values in a man in order to understand them.

These might apply to secular, but many don't really apply much to Christians.

1. For Christians, God's mission is everything.
2. The values and qualities we vet are on God's marital roles and responsibilities and Christ-like behavior. These don't change.
3. One I will agree with
4. Not really.. if you use it as a tool to expose areas where speech and action don't match up it's actually taking off the mask.
5. If it's a Biblical list then such a list has no room to be wrong
6. True, which is why vetting is only a first step.
7. I disagree. Vetting should be like a first interview or background check that you find out over the first couple weeks to months of knowing someone.

So maybe 2 of the list apply.

Vetting is not mutually exclusive with “relationship strategies” which for Christians should line up with the Bible. It’s pretty easy to see that in many relationships there are many men and husbands that are dating or married to women/wives who do not respect them by their actions (even if they may call themselves Christian) and by extension are not submissive or obedient and are rebelling against God.

If you are dating and a woman is not respecting you then you can call her out and see if she changes. If she doesn’t then it may not be a good idea to remain in a relationship with her since it would only get worse in marriage. If she does, then maybe she is teachable and possibly a good helpmeet for you. If that happens in a marriage, obviously you generally have a lot more to learn about breaking dysfunctional cycles of behavior and learning about becoming a strong masculine Christ-like leader. The process of teaching her that disrespectful behavior is unacceptable starts with small things and gets to the big ones over time: the goal of Christ’s love toward the Church that husbands are to emulate is for the purpose of sanctification.

Overall, vetting is great. But it’s only a first step as you need to actual see if a woman actually on board with taking God’s Word seriously and if she is a good fit for you personally.

Where have all the good men gone #233548527

Whenever I see these, I always wonder when they'll eventually stop. This one coming from the wall street journal.

> When my daughters were small they had a favorite bit of doggerel that prefigured some early feminist leanings.
> "Girls go to college to get more knowledge/Boys go to Jupiter to get more stupider," they would chant at me, and, with more evident passion, at any young males in their vicinity. I'd try to take issue with the grammatical betise in the second line that, I would point out, slightly undermined the premise of the jibe, but it was no good. Girls were smarter than boys and immeasurably superior in just about every other respect.

> On that, of course, I have never dared demur.
> But as it turns out, and as my girls progress with grace and accomplishment up the gilded escalator of their liberal education, there's a searing piece of truth in that couplet that points up a deep demographic chasm in this country and in much of the developed world.

Pretty much shows where he's coming from in the first few paragraphs. Father of (only) daughters and scared they won't have anyone to be with. Likes to insult men for not stepping up, like the rest of our culture and even Churches.

The approach is from an educational gap standpoint, and I'm omitting the statistics cited in the article because they've been around for a while. Close to 55:45ish in college and 60:40 in grad school. Supposedly going to get worse (which they will).

> It is estimated that for every three men with bachelor's degrees in their 20s and 30s, there are now four women. Most studies of human heterosexual attraction suggest both that intellectual capacity and achievement is an important attractor and that people tend to gravitate toward a partner with roughly the same level of attainment.
> But every year, the pool of eligible male graduates is getting smaller relative to the number of women. Now of course college isn't everything, and many women will find a perfect mate who hasn't been through the four-year playground of parties, sleeping and the occasional lecture. But the reality is that more of them are going to have to if they want a meaningful relationship.
> And there's a larger problem confronting these new cohorts of well-educated women. It's always been assumed that women are more selective in seeking out a partner of the opposite sex. Men are notoriously undiscriminating; women, obviously more refined and sophisticated, are more choosy. But > with data now available from dating apps we are beginning to get a sense of just how big this gap is too.

Bolding mine. Can’t stop throwing the potshots around.

A simple solution would obviously be to drop all of the programs for women’s education attainment and focus them on underachieving men. That’ll never happen though. So the gap will get worse, and women along with men like these will be left crying over it.

The cause and effect is clear, but many men seem to be willfully blind about it. Especially when they have daughters.

The good news for men is that you can easily make yourself stand out by just going to college or graduate school and doing well and transitioning it into a solid job.

The importance of God's mission

October 10, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the big issues that Christian men run into when in a relationship or marriage is lack of mission, which often leads to idolization of the wife.

> 1 Corinthians 7:25 Now concerning virgins I have no command of the Lord, but I give an opinion as one who by the mercy of the Lord is trustworthy. 26 I think then that this is good in view of the present distress, that it is good for a man to remain as he is. 27 Are you bound to a wife? Do not seek to be released. Are you released from a wife? Do not seek a wife. 28 But if you marry, you have not sinned; and if a virgin marries, she has not sinned. Yet such will have trouble in this life, and I am trying to spare you. 29 But this I say, brethren, the time has been shortened, so that from now on those who have wives should be as though they had none; 30 and those who weep, as though they did not weep; and those who rejoice, as though they did not rejoice; and those who buy, as though they did not possess; 31 and those who use the world, as though they did not make full use of it; for the form of this world is passing away.

The importance of this passage is that we need to always take a heavenly perspective on things. Paul was indeed referring to the present persecution of the Church in his time, but it also extends out to the Church as a whole over time whether in good or bad times. God's importance comes first.

What does it mean for a husband to live as if he had no wife? How does this jive with the passage of Ephesians for husbands to love the wife?

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she respects her husband.

Christ's example of loving the Church sacrificially for the purpose of sanctification (not feelings!) was putting God's purpose for His life first. He even wanted the Father to take the cup away from him in the garden. He didn't fall prey to the prevailing Jewish thought at the time that the Messiah was to be a sociopolitical and military Messiah that saved the Jewish nation, which included His disciples own thoughts about what He would do.

So too any single man or married man should be part of the body of Christ, using His gifts of the Spirit to enrich the body and evangelize and carry out God's mission here on earth: the Great Commission. No man is an island, and he needs to be plugged into a community of believers. This is one of my huge criticisms of many of the men who stop going to Church. Yes, people at Church can hurt you. Even Christians are fallible human beings that often let their pride get in the way. But that should not stop you from continuing to use your life to minister to others, even in the Church.

As we know, when a girl or the wife becomes the center of attention, the pedestal, she becomes his idol. This is not only idolization, but this leads to destructive actions that cause harm to the marriage. Life starts to become about making her happy or catering to her whims at the expense of everything else. This leads to a dissatisfaction and discontent in the wife which often turns into rebellion and divorce. The cultural and churchian milieu which encourages putting the wife first only causes this snowball to grow larger as there is no force of resistance against it.

Indeed, Jesus models this through leading by example and laying down His life for our own sanctification. Husbands have this call too in marriage: to model Christ's sacrificial love. A large part of that is not solely teaching and correcting her spiritually (which is what I usually talk about), but also modeling the life of Christ's ministry through our own gifts of the Spirit, evangelism, and discipleship in the Church.

The pedestal is always filled. Many Christian husbands have it unassumingly on the wife, but in the absence of a wife what is going to fill it? What should fill it? The answer is clear.

Living as if you had no wife means…

Very few Christian men lead a missional lifestyle, and I think by and large this is also one of the reasons why they are unattractive to women (aside from things like obesity and other factors). Many non-Christian men have a purpose such as the love of money or power or bedding women or whatever. These purposes are obviously sinful and futile in the end, but they are attractive to women because women are attracted to the traits behind these: driven and ambitious.

It would be wise for any single Christian man to know and pursue their God-given mission even before any women come into his life. This way they cannot be put on a pedestal or idolized from the get go, and it correctly models the example of Christ.

Christian husbands who have not been doing this have a harder time, and that's why "pulling back" from a wife to focus on doing what God has called us to do is so important. It gives God the opportunity to now use our own life as a living witness for Him whereas before there was a dysfunctional pattern of idolization of her feelings and expectations. This was the sin of Adam; intentionally going along with his wife in the garden instead of following God's command. So too Christian husbands have the choice. It's a hard one, especially if there have been dysfunctional patterns for years.

A pure focus on God and His mission as first in your life is the model of both 1 Corinthians 7 and Ephesians 5. This is what it means for even a husband to live as if he had no wife. When this is put into perspective of Christ's love for the Church, we can see it leads to appropriate modeling (spiritually, emotionally, physically, and mentally) of that relationship which helps to break any dysfunctional marriage pattern that has started or existed. Yes, it will be difficult, but following God's Word has always been that way.

The goal for Christian husbands whose wives deny them should not be sex but their wife's repentance

The previous post on the importance of God's mission has some salient points for single and married husbands.

> Very few Christian men lead a missional lifestyle, and I think by and large this is also one of the reasons why they are unattractive to women (aside from things like obesity and other factors). When this is put into perspective of Christ's love for the Church, we can see it leads to appropriate modeling (spiritually, emotionally, physically, and mentally) of that relationship which helps to break any dysfunctional marriage pattern that has started or existed. Yes, it will be difficult, but following God's Word has always been that way.

In general, we live in a culture where all of the responsibility in a marriage is heaped on the husband whereas the wife is a perpetual victim of her husband "never doing enough" (to make her happy).

Some would question whether wives who continue in sin (especially if they recognize that the Scripture says sexual denial is wrong) are even Christian. All Christians have their "pet sins" or vices or whatever you want to call them. For wives it's often pride, envy, contentiousness, disrespect, sexual denial, and things like these. If she is fruitful in other areas of her Christian walk, it's likely that she's a Christian. Just an immature one in this area (or possibly many areas). If she's not fruitful and/or growing spiritually, it's likely that she's not.

The goal of the importance of God's mission and acting as the leader in the home is not sex. Yes, you become more attractive so that generally your wife will want to have sex with you over time. Yes, that's a good thing. But it's not the end goal. When you start doing God's mission for you and acting like a leader in the home, THAT is the way you actually help bring a wife to repentance. Yes, she should be mature enough Christian to realize that she is in sin and needs to repent, but that doesn't always happen because most Christians are not spiritually mature and can recognize their own pet sins in a world that encourages them.

The end goal is not sex but to help a wife repent. That is what it means for a husband to love his wife for the purpose of sanctification as Christ loved the Church sacrificially (Eph 5). The goal is not sex. The goal is the wife's repentance.

If repentance is not the goal then sex becomes the idol, and this leads down the road to replacing the idolatry of a wife's feelings for the different idol of being a slave to your own flesh again. If she denies you, you get butt hurt and into a funk. This is only possible if you are placing sex at a place it doesn't belong (even though you are owed it). This butt hurt always comes off the wrong way, as it shows a wife that she can still manipulate you with her denial. If she can manipulate you, she has power over you and you are implicitly telling her that you are not acting as the leader. You also fear her denial, leading you to make irrational choices that only contribute to hurt when she does this to you. This only leads back into the dysfunctional cycle of sex denial and more butt hurt.

Instead, the goal should be to model how Jesus did with the sinners of His time. How did He do that? He didn't shun them or get mad at them (and their sin) but hung out with them and influenced them through his words and actions. Yes, sin is offensive to God, but God is not hurt by any man's sin. He is angry at it, but he is slow to anger because He desires that all would come to repentance. Jesus ministered to them until they got to a point where they were receptive to His ministry: "go and sin no more" or they went and told others about Him because He had such an impact on their life.

When God's mission becomes the goal in all areas of your life, it imparts the behaviors that break dysfunctional cycles. Making sex as an idol may temporarily help because your attractiveness may improve, but it does not bring a wife to repentance and it is easy to fall back in the same behavioral patterns. Yet if your goal is to bring a wife to repentance, it is clear that helping a non-Christian or immature Christian wife in these particular areas needs patience and time and good modeling from you to break the cycle. You obey God, and God's way often wins the other's hearts back (which often includes the sex that you so desired).

Addendum: I can see in the comments that some people are having difficulty with understanding these concepts.

I am not advocating any sort of asceticism or saying that sex is unholy. What I am saying though is that making your wife your ONEitis even in marriage (especially for sex) is going to lead toward a transactional mindset of “tit for tat” dysfunction that occurs when any sort of denial of sex happens. Husbands are creating covert contracts in their mind that if they only do this one thing (e.g. become more attractive, become a better leader, become more muscular, etc) that their wife will want to have more sex. Yes, that may be true, but it’s incomplete without repentance.

Yes, the husband and wife freely giving sex to each other is part of the repentance process (though usually the end result of it). Focusing primarily on the sex leads to dysfunction, even though that is what a husband is owed (or wife is owed if a husband is denying her). Repentance leads to reconciliation.

The men who are struggling with this in their marriage and walking it out understand perfectly.

On creeps and romantics and obedience to God

November 2, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I don't think I've made a post specifically on this, but I've discussed it a bunch in the comments and book. This usually helps a lot of men understand at least some of their marital woes. As we all know, wives can be rebellious even if it was Jesus leading the relationship/marriage.

The creep and romantic dynamic is thus:

- If an unattractive man gives a woman flowers, he is a creep
- If an attractive man gives a woman flowers, he is romantic

This also corresponds to marriage in an almost predictable fashion:

- If an unattractive husband gives his wife flowers, he is seen as trying to curry favor with her and the wife may get even more dissatisfied and discontent.
- If an attractive husband gives his wife flowers, he is so charming, sweet, and the wife gives him that "I wanna do you" look.

This can be expanded out to several more things that a husband does for her:

- If a wife complains about laundry and the unattractive husband does it, he is seen as trying to curry favor with her and the wife may get even more dissatisfied and discontent
- If the wife complains about the dishes or any other housework and the unattractive husband does it, he is seen as trying to curry favor with her and the wife may get even more dissatisfied and discontent
- The one-up-manship of many things like engagement proposals or expensive dinners or acquiescing to demands.

This is the total futility of trying to love a wife by catering to her feelings. Her feelings are not something that can be bought, negotiated, or otherwise transacted by doing things for her.

It's really amazing how the exact same action is interpreted in different ways by women and wives. Of course, the same exact scenario in reverse could be true of an overweight woman/wife versus a fit woman/wife wearing lingerie. A husband may get turned off by the former but turned on by the latter.

One of the mods on RPChristians reddit has a good analogy about this: hardware or software issue?

Most of the issues with "hardware" tend to stem from a lack of care or complacency about one's own life:

- A man may not be engaged with His mission for God and putting God first

- He has a lack of care about his own spiritual life and is neglecting God's marital roles and responsibilities toward her (to be the head and to love her toward sanctification).
- He may have gone from muscular and fit to overweight or obese during the course of a relationship
- He may have become a "yes dear" type of man over the course of the marriage
- He could have gotten lazy over the course of the marriage and given in to lack of discipline over various areas of his life or work

All of these deficits in lack of care or complacency are things that typically make a man less attractive. Instead of embodying the traits that are attractive to women such as being confident, charismatic, masculine, ambitious leader, he is instead into an unconfident, bumbling his words and indecisive, feminized, complacent follower. Instead of being someone she respects, he is acting unrespectable.

A few things of note:

- Obviously, if none of these or few of these things are true, you could just be dealing with a straight up rebellious wife which is certainly the case when culture and even the Church, friends, and family can sow discord in marriages nowadays.
- Yes, it's true that while wives should still respect their husbands when they act unrespectable, it's true that it makes it significantly more difficult and they often don't. It's a stumbling block. Same with a wife that gets obese or constantly disrespects her husband and expects her husband to want to do her a lot. It's a stumbling block.
- This is the common is versus ought fallacy from the previous post that many in the Church make: because God wants to us to be godly, they think that godliness must be sexy. It isn't. Just because we know wives ought to respect their husbands doesn't mean they do, and it should not prevent a husband from fulfilling his own marital roles and responsibilities and be filled with the fruit of the Spirit in the face of a rebellious wife.

It is only those things done without any transactional mindsets that truly bring about any influence to change things. The focus should always to be on honoring God with what we do and not on trying to buy or alter someone as changing someone invites disaster. A husband that gets caught up in covert contracts ("if I only do this, she'll come around or give me more sex") or the mindset of "tit for tat" whether in a good way or bad way will always come to failure.

All this is to say you only have full control over yourself which means you can only wholly change yourself to be more like God. Focus on obeying God because He is the one we answer to in the end. Make sure your life is defined by excellence toward Him and strive for "well done good and faithful servant." This leads to your own spiritual, physical, emotional, and mental transformation that God can use to influence a rebellious wife. Not because of anything you did or are doing for her but because of who you are becoming in Christ. Out of the heart flows actions that allow transformation and influence.

Attraction, like faith, is not primarily based on any external thing but by the reflection of your identity. If you strive to do everything you do as you do for Christ, that becomes visible externally.

A core understanding of game, and its interactions with our purpose and sanctification

November 3, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack posted a really good analysis of his understanding of where "game" may fit into the role of the sanctification of a wife. I highly suggest reading that post before this one as it provides some background on some of my assertions and so you won't be confused about the topics I'm going to go over.

I want to address this topic from a deductive angle because I think that mainly drives home the points the best.

Attraction

In the last few posts, including the one on creeps and romantics, we understand that the same action by an unattractive man vs an attractive man garner different results.

The creep and romantic dynamic is thus:

- If an unattractive man gives a woman flowers, he is a creep
- If an attractive man gives a woman flowers, he is romantic

The same could be understood for jokes:

- If an unattractive man tells a woman a joke, it has to be really funny to make a woman laugh
- If an attractive man tells a woman a joke, it only has to be marginally funny (sometimes even not) for a woman to laugh

The underlying theme is that when a man is attractive, that gives him a lot more leeway with women. This is not something that is universal to just attractive men. Both attractive men and women have this social benefit of the doubt as there have been studies done in professional business settings on these particular topics such as getting raises, looked on favorably by superiors, less blame when something goes wrong, and and things like these.

Anti-chivalry and anti-feminism

In Christianity, chivalry, feminism, game, complementarianism, and egalitarianism, we explored the themes of each of these matching up. H/T Dalrock and Cane Caldo for exploring all these themes prior.

- Christianity is the originator of the headship-submission model
- Chivalry is the inversion of the this model (knight serves the lady) which has been passed off as Christianity by most Churches nowadays.
- Complementarianism is essentially chivalry in the Church. Headship in name only but the husband serves the wife.

- Feminism is a direct rebellion against Christianity.
- Egalitarianism is overt feminism relationships in the Church.

So we have chivalry = complementarianism (masked inverted marital structure) and feminism = egalitarianism (overt inverted marital structure). This is how Christianity was perverted by the seeping in of different things into the Church:

Christianity

Chivalry –> Complementarianism (attempt to justify chivalry biblically)

Feminism –> Egalitarianism (attempt to justify feminism biblically)

Game (works against chivalry, complementarianism, feminism, and egalitarianism)

Game at it's core is both anti-chivalry and anti-feminism which is why it works against the Christian variants (complementarianism and egalitarianism) in Christian marriages. Yet it's only a band-aid on the actual problem as noted in previous posts: it usually covers up sin with a feel-good situation because it does not target sanctification.

Unification of understanding

To circle back, the reason why the PUAs/players shared notes on what worked and what didn't was because they were men who were traditionally unsuccessful with women. In other words, they were men who were traditionally unattractive. Thus, to succeed with women they needed the social acumen to demonstrate to women that they were attractive and not unattractive.

This is obviously met with varying success: subsequent game worked for some and for others it didn't which has led to widespread misunderstandings (this is where I can agree with jason that game may often times just not work and part of the reason why I am anti-game).

By unifying these two topics, we can come to the understanding that game at the core is about tearing down an inverted role relationship through social acumen.

Here's an example. Any man that women consider traditionally unattractive (e.g. 80% of men via the OKCupid sample) are already placed in the friend zone upon meeting and interacting for the first time. Therefore, any girl who categorizes a man like this is assuming that he is just a friend (or beta orbiter). If that "friend" has good enough social acumen or game, he can possibly become more attractive to her that she may consider him for a relationship.

Thus, what is really happening is that perhaps a man has good enough social dominance to flip a woman's attitude on him from unattractive to attractive. Or from herself controlling the situation (inverted role relationship with her as the leader and him the follower) to him controlling the situation (headship-submission dynamic where he is the leader and she is the follower). Instead of him orbiting her, she orbits him.

The failings of game

There are two core problems with this:

1. As I've stated before, game may turn an inverted relationship to the correct model, but it does not bring about sanctification
2. If social acumen wavers or fails or if the man's life does not match up with his social acumen or charisma, the relationship will ultimately fail.

I've discussed the first before, so let's discuss the second in more detail.

The social acumen and charisma of game is mimicking the way in which a natural leader would interact with women. The natural leader has no problem with being attractive, and he knows he is in charge in any relationship. Fundamentally, this is expressed through both attitude (confidence, unflappableness, masculinity, humor, etc.) and action (decisiveness, ambition, leadership, etc.).

Because game only mimics the social dominance of a natural leader, it is bound to fail if that is not reflected in the other parts of a man's life. This is called "congruence." If the outward and the inward don't match up, women get suspicious and ultimately will walk away.

Perhaps the perfect analogy for this is women's make up. The things women can do with make-up can make any woman extremely attractive now, but most men know that sometimes this is a facade. What is underneath? Does she have natural beauty or is she not that physically beautiful and covering it up? The same is true with game in that sense. Game makes a man look attractive but is the underneath also attractive?

This is the same reason that much of the newer stuff after about 2013 or so has gone the way that both "passive game" (e.g. lifting, style, mission, etc.) and "active game" (e.g. social acumen, charisma, etc.) are required. There must be congruence between who a man is on the inside versus who he is on the outside.

This is also why there is a lot of confusion about what "game" is because some refer to both as game but others refer to just the social techniques. If I had to call it, I'd say the latter is game while the former is being a man, at least as traditionally understood by the PUAs/players.

The gospel and sanctification

The gospel of Jesus is simple: we are sinners in need of a savior. We accept, believe, and confess that Jesus is Lord and repent of our former ways. The Holy Spirit comes into our lives, and our lives undergo a radical transformation from the inside out. We take off the old and put on the new to become more like Jesus, and this is manifest in good works, fruit of the Spirit, generosity, and so forth.

To accurately pinpoint why I think social game is a complete failure is that it attempts to work the system in reverse. It attempts to demonstrate outward change usually without or at least minimal inward change. It's an attempted shortcut that has the capacity to blow up spectacularly because once the charade is found out the hypocrisy is evident. It's akin to false bravado.

A husband can agree and amplify his wife all he likes or try to demonstrate confidence and masculinity, but if there is no inward transformation to be and act the head of the marriage as God commands or to lead by example then all there is will be make-up covering up the ugliness of the husband not following God's commands.

Mission, identity, and purpose flow from God our Creator, and who wants us to obey Him. Out of these fundamental things flow the traits that many so desire. A man/husband who is secure in his identity in Christ, and following God's mission (e.g. gifts of the Spirit, loving others, his own marital roles and responsibilities) is confident that he is walking rightly with God and that he has nothing to fear from anyone else. If they disagree or rebel, they are not disagreeing with him but God.

Conclusion

Now that we've worked through everything, I can say that I am anti-game for a few reasons which I can now accurately discern clearly aside from the initial first point of sanctification.

- Game (social acumen, various techniques, etc.) does not lead to sanctification. Only focusing on obeying God does, and obeying God's commands to love your wife for the purpose of sanctification.
- Game has a noble cause (destroying inverted relationships dynamic which include both complementarianism and egalitarianism), but it attempts to do it in an inverted way itself by trying to talk or mimic a natural leader to success instead of lead by example. If viewed as false bravado or faking it, it may only increases resentment and strengthens the inverted relationship. The noble cause is why many Christians are split into the pro-game and anti-game camps.
- The purpose of game is to try to change your woman/wife which may or may not work. Yes, it may work in some cases which is one of the reasons for confusion among Christians, and the reason it works is not that social techniques work but because the husband implicitly starts acting as leader again. The goal should be to focus on fulfilling your own Biblical marital roles and responsibilities and allow God to use your transformation to influence your wife.
- The gospel and its message of inside-out transformation is the true way to be the head and lead by example. Not only will this not viewed as false bravado, but the inside-out change has the advantage of the creep-romantic dynamic. A more attractive husband at the core (not superficially with make-up) has greater influence and benefit of the doubt. The flowers are suddenly not catering to her but romantic to her. The jokes that weren't funny are now funny. The "game techniques" or social acumen that maybe only worked sometimes or didn't work before now work. Funny that right. It's not that "game" helped that much if any, but the underlying dynamic already changed. If the dynamic has already changed, then game is simply superfluous.

A single man is the leader of one. Single men should cultivate an excellent life in his mission for God which includes all facets of his being: spiritually, physically, emotionally, mentally, etc. If a man marries, he becomes a leader of two, and so on with children and extended family.

If someone calls these things “passive game” or “game” then that’s dumb. It’s simply obeying God. Calling it game is just a knockoff of how God wants us to live and buying into some secular misrepresentation of the true meaning of life.

Duty sex is a terrible thing

The Jacob, Rachel, and Leah story is instructive.

> Genesis 29:31 Now the Lord saw that Leah was unloved, and He opened her womb, but Rachel was barren. 32 Leah conceived and bore a son and named him Reuben, for she said, “Because the Lord has seen my affliction; surely now my husband will love me.” 33 Then she conceived again and bore a son and said, “Because the Lord has heard that I am unloved, He has therefore given me this son also.” So she named him Simeon. 34 She conceived again and bore a son and said, “Now this time my husband will become attached to me, because I have borne him three sons.” Therefore he was named Levi. 35 And she conceived again and bore a son and said, “This time I will praise the Lord.” Therefore she named him Judah. Then she stopped bearing.

In this case, Jacob is actually banging his wife a lot (well, at least 4 times but probably way more given the statistical amounts of sex needed to conceive). But Leah is unloved because he is just going through the motions with her when his desire is for Rachel.

These days it’s mostly wives giving their husbands duty sex, and it is still a terrible thing. Sadly, I don’t think the husbands and wives that give duty sex know how terrible it truly is for the other spouse.

Such is the problem with only obeying the “letter of the law” like the Pharisees instead of the “Spirit of the law” as new creations in Christ.

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband must fulfill his duty to his wife, and likewise also the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; and likewise also the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. 5 Stop depriving one another, except by agreement for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer, and come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

I’m a firm preacher against duty sex when I am able to talk with it in person with people in real life. Act like you actually care about your spouse and don’t be ruled by your own feelings.

Revisiting the whole women in leadership positions

November 18, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Obviously the whole big blow back of John MacArthur and Beth Moore was interesting to say the least. Most of the commentary from my Christian friends on facebook indicated that they were in favor of Beth Moore rather than against it. It's not surprising given the culture though.

MacArthur goes into it more detail here (h/t info).

In any case, MacArthur talks about specific wording such as shamefulness and its applicability throughout the Scriptures. He doesn't get into some of the finer details on the differences between words like teach, which I'll summarize again.

I had a post a few years ago about this about women teaching women in Church and why women are prohibited from certain positions in the Church. I've done some further study on this, which is why I want to go deeper into detail about it.

> 1 Timothy 2:9 Likewise, I want women to adorn themselves with proper clothing, modestly and discreetly, not with braided hair and gold or pearls or costly garments, 10 but rather by means of good works, as is proper for women making a claim to godliness. 11 A woman must quietly receive instruction with entire submissiveness. 12 But I do not allow a woman to teach or exercise authority over a man, but to remain quiet. 13 For it was Adam who was first created, and then Eve. 14 And it was not Adam who was deceived, but the woman being deceived, fell into transgression. 15 But women will be preserved through the bearing of children if they continue in faith and love and sanctity with self-restraint.
> 1 Corinthians 14:34 The women are to keep silent in the churches; for they are not permitted to speak, but are to subject themselves, just as the Law also says. 35 If they desire to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home; for it is improper for a woman to speak in church. 36 Was it from you that the word of God first went forth? Or has it come to you only?

These are very specific things that the Scripture is prohibiting which are essentially:

1. Teaching men (Greek: didasko)
2. Exercising authority over men
3. Disruption of Church order

The main point of contention is the word didasko. This Greek work is often used in the New Testament, but the primary example is in Matthew 5 with the Beatitudes. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus "teaches" (didasko) the multitude and what is meant by teaching is going over the Scriptures and interpreting them. The common pattern Jesus uses to do this is: "It was said in times of old" in reference to the Old Testament commands… and then He followed it up with re-interpretation “but I tell you…” which clarifies His position on how we should live.

Thus, we understand that Biblical teaching is probably best defined as “authoritative interpretation of the Scriptures on how to live.”. Preaching the gospel (Greek: logos, euangelion) is different than this. Women do this all throughout the Scripture, including the ones who went to the tomb.

1 Timothy 5:15 provides some context for this:

> 1 Timothy 5:17 The elders who rule well are to be considered worthy of double honor, especially those who work hard at preaching (logos) and teaching (didasko).

I’ve gone over this extensively in what does it mean to teach?

Most of the counterpoints of this verse go into all the various examples of women in the early Church and in the OT but are actually off topic.

- “But Deborah was a prophetess judging Israel”… yet she told Barak that God told him to lead Israel. In Hebrews 11, it lists Barak as the leader of Israel and an example of faith (however poor) not Deborah. Women in the NT aren’t forbidden from being prophetesses either.
- “But the women were the first preachers”… the Bible nowhere says that women are forbidden from preaching the gospel (logos, euangelion). They are forbidden from teaching (Greek: didasko) men.
- “But Philip had 4 daughters who were prophetesses” and “Acts 2 quotes the prophet Joel 2 that God’s Spirit will be poured out on all flesh and sons and daughters will prophesy”… The early Church did not forbid women from prophesying as there are multiple examples. Prophesying is not the same as leadership positions in the Church either. You can also argue that Joel 2 is speaking about close to the day of judgement and Jesus’ return from the imagery later in the passage.
- “But Priscilla and Aquilla taught Apollos in Acts 18″… Debatable at best because (1) grounding Apollos in the way of God (e.g. gospel or preaching) is not the same as teaching (didasko), and (2) it was a husband and wife team. It was not solely Priscilla taking him aside and supposedly doing it. Also (3) debatable if this would count as leadership position in the Church too as it’s private.
- “But Junia was an apostle”… a critical word study at the Greek episemos from that passage means noteworthy or well know among the apostles, not that she was an apostle. Most scholars think she’s a woman now, but a minority think she’s a man. Who knows. Whatever the case, it’s not convincing.
- “But Titus 2…”

> Titus 2:3 Older women likewise are to be reverent in their behavior, not malicious gossips nor enslaved to much wine, teaching what is good (kalodidasko), 4 so that they may encourage (sophronizo) the young women to love their > husbands, to love their children, 5 to be sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be dishonored.

It's pretty clear that this passage is directed at older women teaching younger women (not men and/or mixed congregations) and it is directed at a specific list of good things which is what follows. I've covered why that is in women teaching women. You can't reinterpret loving husband and children or being sensible, pure, workers at home, kind, or subject to husbands. It's straight forward: no interpretation needed.

Lest we also know that Titus 1 goes over the qualifications of elders (leadership) in the Church again like 1 Timothy 3 with the qualification of "the husband of one wife."

- "But Ephesians 5:21 Submit to one another in the fear of Christ"… no, that's for the general congregation of believers, not the elders/leadership positions. In other passages, it says to submit to any leadership, including the Church. It also says to submit to husbands too, which unifies with 1 Corinthians 11 and 14.
- "But Galatians 5 we're all one in Christ and there's no male or female"… no, that is talking specifically about salvation. It's not talking about different roles or parts of the body of Christ, some of which appear to be prohibited from women.
- The only example that is somewhat controversial it seems is Phoebe as a deacon (Greek diakonos). Though the word is contested as it also means "servant" (just a gune also mean woman/wife and aner means man/husband). If you unify it with 1 Timothy 3 covers qualifications for elders and deacons, which contain the phrasing "husband of 1 wife" and "managing their households well." It's likely she was serving and noteworthy in some capacity, but probably not in a leadership position.

A few things that I've never seen the opposition counter:

1. The pattern of husband as the head of the wife is present before the fall, after the fall, in the Law of Moses, and in the New Covenant. God wants men to lead families. If this is the case for families, why would it not be for the Church?
2. The pattern in the the gathering of the peoples starting with Abraham, Moses, and so on down the line of kings. Jesus Himself could've broken the mold and chosen women as disciples but did not. It seems Jesus wants men to lead the Church.
3. As I mentioned in Lessons from Ephesus, Ephesians, 1 and 2 Timothy, and Revelations all have some commentary to Ephesus. Both Ephesians and 1 and 3 Timothy espouse male headship in the home, and same with 1 and 3 Tim. Revelations commends the Ephesians for holding fast and rooting out bad apostles (and their bad teachings).
4. The early Church could have included women in leadership but never did either. Not the Church before the Great Schism. Not the Church after the Reformation. Only in the last 50ish years. Orthodoxy and Catholicism still don't.

Overall, I really don't see it when one looks at the particular nuances of the Scriptures.

Especially in conjunction with the rest of 1 and 2 Timothy and Titus. Lots of Christians like to make up stories about how 1 Corinthians 11 and 14 were “just that Church” (even though it says later that this is “for all the Churches”) or that it was just in those Churches but doesn’t apply today. It’s the old fallacy of cultural relevance.

Changing the course of the day 1 to 2000 year interpretation of the Scriptures from the early Church until now to fit a similar cultural narrative is quite the stretch. Christians are supposed to be set apart from the world, not agree with it.

This is not to say that going to a Church with women pastors/teachers is a bad thing. There have been some cases that I’ve known that men have influenced the Church leadership and board to remove women from these positions over time with godly doctrine and counsel. God can have you at a particular in a season to be a good influence on those who may be in doctrinal error. This is something that needs to be considered prayerfully and aligned in the specific season that you’re in.

This is the same with any other doctrinal errors that may be present such as complementarianism. If you only went to Churches that taught everything right, you probably wouldn’t be gathering with believers much. We must always remember that the work of the Spirit is inside-out transformation. He can use us to influence others toward Truth.

On the other hand, it would probably be unwise to go to Churches with actual heretical beliefs such as those that deny tenets of the Nicene Creed.

Stewardship and excellence

December 4, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was pleasantly surprised to hear my pastor preach on this topic.

Basically, as Christians we are followers/slaves of Christ, and we are to do what the Father and Christ have called us to do. Jesus present numerous parables (like the parable of the talents/minas) on how we are to go about His Father's business. Paul reiterates that with doing all that we do for Christ.

One of his examples was if someone let you stay at their vacation house, you would take good care of it because it's not really yours. You'd make sure not to trash it or leave it messy, but clean up after yourself. But we let our own homes, jobs, and lives get messy.

He advocated for a well kept home, excellent in the job (even if we have terrible or frustrating bosses), in health (weight loss if obese although not so much emphasis on regular healthy eating and exercises), and things like these.

Obviously, if you want to be married or are married, excellence as the head of the marriage and fulfilling God's marital roles and responsibilities is another to add to good stewardship. Focus on pleasing God in all that you do by being excellent in all things.

I've found it amazing that my mentality has changed significantly by starting to do this when single, and it's served me well in my marriage so far. Women really do admire excellence, which makes it easier to exert a godly influence on them.

Process oriented, not results oriented

December 15, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As we have seen before, the Bible is desire oriented and not works oriented. In the failure of Chivalry in Biblical marriage, this was the point on works vs desire.

Works and desire in salvation and also marriage

Going back to a point I made several years ago now is the difference between works/performance and desire. The ideal is to desire God and His commands. Everything flows from this. The grace of God is what sanctifies us, but it changes us so that we desire to do good works.

When we try to "perform" or "work" we inevitably fail. As Christians, we know that works cannot save us: we cannot follow the Law good enough to achieve salvation.

Likewise, the same is with marriage. Working does not work. Biblical marriage is an image of Christ and the Church. The same standards apply to the husband and the wife. It is one of desire and not works.

- You cannot work hard enough to placate your wife's emotions (e.g. make her feel more attracted to you).
- You cannot work hard enough that your wife will be pleased (e.g. do enough chores).
- You cannot work hard enough that you will ever meet her expectations.

Falling into a pattern of works is falling into the temptation of sin. You are not trying to please her; you are trying to please the black hole that is unrestrained hypergamy. Your works will never be enough.

Part of the reason why works fail is fear. If you are working, there is a chance that you fail. If there is a chance that you fail, you will fear. If you fear man (or woman/wife in this case), you are not leading nor loving according to the Scriptures.

Does this mean that you shouldn't try to please your wife? Certainly not. But it must come from desire and not working to try to please.

Maturity mode: Process oriented vs results oriented

When we get caught up in the work mentality, we also become very results oriented. We are working to get a specific result. We fall into the pattern of trying to game the system to get that specific result, and it often backfires on us.

God is clear that we are to be process oriented:

> 1 Corinthians 3:5 What then is Apollos? And what is Paul? Servants through whom you believed, even as the Lord gave opportunity to each one. 6 I planted, Apollos watered, but God was causing the growth. 7 So then neither the one who plants nor the one who waters is anything, but God who causes the growth. 8 Now he who plants and he who waters are one; but each will receive his own > reward according to his own labor. 9 For we are God’s fellow workers; you are God’s field, God’s building.

We are to focus on doing our part to the best of our ability, whether that is planting or watering (placing the necessary conditions around the seed such as evangelizing or ministering or discipling), but it is God in the end that is going to get the result on earth (the seed to grow). We will be rewarded for our labor, but not necessarily here on this earth.

The problem with being results oriented in relationships or marriage is that we often or sometimes focus on the result that we want rather than taking into consideration all of the parties involved. This is true whether in marriage, with family, with friends, with colleagues or others. It’s also much more difficult to be excellent and show God’s love and fruit of the Spirit through our actions if we are too focused on the result rather than the process of building and caring for the relationship with the other person.

I think this is the one thing I have become much more aware of as I minister to other men and my wife. I need to be wholly there in the moment (and prior fulfilling my own walk with God and own needs so they don’t interfere), so I can focus on them to do what God wants me to do in that moment. I am not there to try to change them (results oriented) but instead to influence them in a godly manner through the Holy Spirit and the fruit of the Holy Spirit (process oriented).

It’s easy to moderately difficult to understand works and desire and have that be a focus in all your relationship. However, taking the next step to become more and fully process oriented rather than results oriented is truly difficult to extremely harder, especially when we deal with the harder situations of life. So many times we just want to change that other person because we have been through that experience or we have the foresight to know it won’t end well, but instead we just need to help them walk through in and influence them toward God.

I’m not fully good at this yet, but this is what I am aiming for in this next season of life.

Trends in Christianity: the decline in the US

December 27, 2019 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Merry Christmas to everyone!

As the decade comes to a close, Christianity continues to decline in the US according to the polls from Pew.

Apparently, a decade ago, 77-78% claimed to be Christians but now at the end of 2019 only 65% do. The religious unaffiliated (atheist, agnostic, or none) jumped from 16-17% to 26%.

I'm pretty shocked that 65% of people in this country still claim to be Christian. I could be falling for the over-representation of anti-Christian bias in the media, universities, etc, but based on how people live in their everyday life and even the ones in Church I am scratching my head at this number.

What appears to explain it is that there is apparently little change in the attendance of Churches from 2009 to 2019:

- 46 -> 44% weekly or more
- 17 -> 18% once or twice a month
- 19 -> 20% a few times a year
- 13 – 12% seldom
- 5 -> 6% never

Given the stats, it's much more likely to say that in 2009, virtually all Christians who attended weekly or more and once a month (46 + 17 = 63%) and most of the few times a year (19%) claimed they are Christian. 63+19 = 82% where 77-78% claimed to be Christian. Now, it seems like only those attend weekly or more (44%) or once and twice a month (18%) are claiming to be Christians. 62% vs 65%.

The people who attended a few times per year stopped claiming they were Christians between 2009 to 2019. This is to be expected as being a Christian becomes a much more negative thing. It's also a good thing for Christians as now more people who were claiming to be Christian aren't living how they want and showing a incorrect hypocritical example to the rest of the world. The light shines brighter in the darkness.

In another decade as Christianity becomes much less popular, we might see only the weekly or more (44%) claim they are Christian. I suspect the actual number is much lower as many in the Church use it not for Christ but as a social club or to absolve themselves from living how they want the rest of the week.

Faith

I was thinking about the faith of the centurion again.

> Matthew 8:5 And when Jesus entered Capernaum, a centurion came to Him, imploring Him, 6 and saying, “Lord, my servant is lying paralyzed at home, fearfully tormented.” 7 Jesus *said to him, “I will come and heal him.” 8 But the centurion said, “Lord, I am not worthy for You to come under my roof, but just say the word, and my servant will be healed. 9 For I also am a man under authority, with soldiers under me; and I say to this one, ‘Go!’ and he goes, and to another, ‘Come!’ and he comes, and to my slave, ‘Do this!’ and he does it.”
> 10 Now when Jesus heard this, He marveled and said to those who were following, “Truly I say to you, I have not found such great faith with anyone in Israel. 11 I say to you that many will come from east and west, and recline at the table with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven; 12 but the sons of the kingdom will be cast out into the outer darkness; in that place there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.” 13 And Jesus said to the centurion, “Go; it shall be done for you as you have believed.” And the servant was healed that very moment.

The fundamental part of faith is that it is a belief in authority.

Hebrews 11 defines faith as “the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen.” But what are the assurance of things hope for and conviction of things not seen? That’s faith in God’s authority to do what He said and what He promised.

It’s very easy to get distracted with how much humans are rebellious against God, but faith requires an immense trust in authority that it overrides our inclinations to be rebellious. One who fails to trust in God’s authority and act accordingly is very similar to those who choose to be intentionally rebellious. Eliminating this lukewarm faith is of primary importance.

Sowing in good soil

January 23, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Haven't gone anywhere, just busy. But Dalrock looks to be hanging it up. He has influenced many including myself and he will be missed.

The parable is obviously about the gospel, but there are good other analogous lessons from it.

> Matthew 13:3 And He spoke many things to them in parables, saying, "Behold, the sower went out to sow; 4 and as he sowed, some seeds fell beside the road, and the birds came and ate them up. 5 Others fell on the rocky places, where they did not have much soil; and immediately they sprang up, because they had no depth of soil. 6 But when the sun had risen, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away. 7 Others fell among the thorns, and the thorns came up and choked them out. 8 And others fell on the good soil and *yielded a crop, some a hundredfold, some sixty, and some thirty. 9 He who has ears, let him hear."

One of the things when helping and mentoring men I've run into over the years is the soil type. Some men take to godly masculinity and other tough topics (e.g. attraction and marriage in the Bible) much quicker than others. Some will want to debate you or vehemently disagree.

Overall, it's good to be sowing that seed everywhere, but when going from just chatting and helping to mentoring or discipling you want to focus on the ones in good soil (those who want to learn and grow). I know this is obvious in hindsight or when thinking about it, but it's easy to get distracted into the similar concepts of wanting the men to change.

We can't change or influence the soil or get the seed to grow. That's God's job. But we can plant and water, and it needs to be done in right amounts. Focus on the fruitful areas, but be ready for God to work on the rocky areas when necessary.

Biblically consistent decision making

February 7, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

What trips a lot of husbands up is understanding the general decision making process surrounding marriage.

1. Obey God. Biblical marital roles and responsibilities fall under this. Headship-submission, love-respect, mutual giving of sex, etc.
2. Consider yourself and your spouse (e.g. Eph 5 love your wife as your own body) especially in terms of needs. This also falls under #1, but it provides more context for which to make decisions. Many Christians often get this wrong by saying put your wife and kids before yourself. That is not true.
3. Happiness and other emotions of fleeting effect.

Whether we like it or not, both excellence and attraction do play some role in how both spouses understand all facets of this decision making process. A wife that watches what she eats and keeps herself in shape implicitly shows respect for you as a husband and vice versa for a husband to his wife. It also makes you both happier (and healthier).

As the nature of Christianity is an inside-out transformation that first changes you and then the change in you affects others, it must be said that if there are dysfunctional patterns in the relationship or marriage then the onus must first be on the Christian that notices these to be internally consistent with the faith. This is indeed what Jesus talks about in Matthew 7 on judging (eliminate hypocrisy), so that when you do come to your brother (or wife) and show them their fault with kindness they will be less inclined to point the finger at you and be more willing to obey God. In other words, for husbands this headship personified into leading by example. This doesn't guarantee change, but it creates the right environment for it.

Therefore, our hierarchy might be expanded to:

1. Focus on obeying God and doing your own Biblical roles and responsibilities. Bring them up to your spouse, but if they are resistant to change then don't worry about it and keep doing yours and pray for them.
2. Consider yourself and your spouse (e.g. Eph 5 love your wife as your own body) especially in terms of needs. Make sure you are meeting them as consistent with loving your wife as yourself which is also consistent with Jesus' "love one another as I have loved you."
3. Consider their happiness and doing things to make them happy, but don't compromise on #1 and #2 such as sin or behavior that enables.
4. Once you have established a good pattern of consistent behavior (and hopefully your wife is softening up over time with her attitudes and actions), then start to bring up some faults kindly again in terms of obeying God and bettering the marriage. If they are still resistant to change, keep doing your own responsibility and pray for them.

5. Search out as many blindspots as you can and work on building godly habits. It is possible that they will never change, but you also want to do as much as you can for God to create good soil that God can use to grow the seeds in their heart.

Part of breaking dysfunctional cycles of behavior is very consistent leading by example to show that God has truly changed you from the inside out. This can be hard when dysfunctional relationships or marriages last for several years or even decades as the wife (or other spouse) tends to think you're just changing to manipulate them, especially if you were trying to do that before.

The way to combat this is to just not worry about it. It's nothing you can change yourself so why worry? It's more than enough to make sure you're obeying God and focused on doing the right thing even when it's hard. Trust God to help you do the right thing, and use that to start to plant and grow the seeds.

This is true "outcome independence" much like Jesus continually called the Pharisees to repent and continue to talk to them despite them wanting to kill him. If He didn't want to minister to them He could have just ignored them or avoided them. And some Pharisees did come around like Nicodemus. Engaging for the sake of God and the gospel, even when you are treated harshly or poorly.

Fighting against the system

February 18, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the observations I've made before is that "bad boys" tend to go against the system and in doing so exude confidence. On the other hand, nice guys go with the system and so to many women don't stand up for themselves and are boring.

Perhaps ironically I didn't really connect the dots earlier.

Since Dalrock's genius discernment that chivalry is indeed anti-Christian, it makes a lot of sense for Christian "nice guys" to start fighting against the chase-the-woman system that is prevalent in the western world. Focus on pleasing God and focus on bucking the system, and you start to build the confidence and values that women are attracted to as a side effect of the process.

The parallel here is that you're fighting against the world's value systems for God's. Once you've ingrained this into habits and know how to uphold it in both words and actions then you're already most of the way there in terms of a strong, godly masculine attitude.

Or in terms of Adam and Eve, we're fighting against temptation. Adam did not stand up to the temptation of the serpent and his wife coming to him with the fruit and obeyed them rather than God.

I think I've told this story before, but I am very anti-vegan. I always wondered why vegan girls were interested in me while growing up. Well, it turns out that when you have a backbone over your own preferences and will stand up and tease a woman (often in a fun and mercilessly though not harshly) for her choices. While this is simply a personal view, having values that will never change and making a stand and knowing how to communicate them well goes far. Even if they make you or others unhappy, you at least have your character and values at the end of the day especially if they are in alignment with God.

In terms of the married, many in our 'sphere tend to always bring up that the system is rigged against us. Churchianity, the courts, families, friends, the media, and so on. Personally, I don't care. So what if it's rigged, and I ultimately get embroiled in the system and have to fight against it with my life? Isn't obeying God more important?

I think when you can come to a place of peace about this, it's much easier to operate as a the head/leader in your marriage and make the unpopular choices that obey God. Indeed, men who have the backbone to stand up will become more enriched as they grow stronger in the faith, while men who consistently cave to it will be reinforcing their own cowardice. This can be a hard cycle to break, but it must start somewhere. It does get easier over time. But you have to make the conscious choice to be ready to put God above the system.

Perhaps this additional view can help the single, in-relationships, and married men start to examine where they can stand firm against the system better.

The extent of attraction

February 27, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's been some good discussion over at Jack's on attraction:

- https://sigmaframe.wordpress.com/2020/02/24/probabilities/
- https://sigmaframe.wordpress.com/2020/02/26/opportunities/

Scott's video garnered some attention, and there was some concern over the fact that it might only be about 13% of marriages where the woman is 'madly in love' with her husband after a determined amount of time.

My perspective

I don't claim to be an expert on these types of things, but I have worked decently close with the fitness industry in the past. I feel confident in these assertions:

- The amount of attraction generated from both male and female transformations vastly outweighs the things you can't change such as your facial genetics. In other words, any obese or overweight woman or man who loses substantial amounts of weight becomes much more attractive and gains substantial attraction interest from the opposite sex.
- This is multiplied if the fitness or muscularity is significantly increased especially for men. I've never seen any man (short or ugly or otherwise) who has gotten to a Greek god level of physique or more have trouble getting at least a few women who are interested in him. Maybe not a lot, but at least a few. This is not that hard for most men with a dedicated fitness program and nutrition for a year. Michelangelo's David is an example.
- If there are other issues like poor hygiene, very awkward at conversations, can't hold a job, or things like that then that can cancel out the interest. This is usually what stunts most men with women. It's what they do and say, not how they're looking most of the time.

I stand by my previous assertions in this post on how attraction works. It's a percentage based probability.

Someone with natural height and good looks will start from a higher percentage. Maybe 6'0″+ and very handsome and natural semi-muscular or husky body may start from a place where 15-20% of women are naturally attracted to them. Someone who starts from somewhere like very skinny or obese, less than normal height, and relatively non-attractive face would be starting from a much lower point like maybe 1-2% or possibly less. Possibly less. Celebrities generally start from a place of 30-40+% of women are naturally attracted to them because of the status, fame, etc even if their looks aren't that great.

We all know the “marriage market” has broken down substantially at this time. However, if we look over the past societies and marriage statistics, we see that about 95% of both men and women got married in the past. This is fairly consistent across cultures. Some percentage of this was men and women who didn’t want to get married for whatever reason (asexual or wanted to put their career first) and some small percentage was also probably men and women who wanted to get married but didn’t for whatever reason (yes, you can throw very bad personalities, old maids, and ugliness in here I guess?). From this we know that unless you’re in the extreme bottom percentile of men and women, there’s no way you are not attractive to at least some men and women.

Even the obesity marriage rates show this. Obesity, overweight, and underweight all decrease your likelihood to marry, but they don’t make it go to zero. The ratio of underweight, healthy weight, overweight, and obese is about 8:10:8:6. This means 8 underweight people, 10 healthy weight, 8 overweight, and 6 obese people marry in about those proportions.

14 overweight and obese people marry for every 10 normal weight people. This is shocking to most people who read online blogs too much because they get the impression that “you gotta be in top 20% to even have a chance,” but the reality is that many men and women don’t place supreme importance on looks. However, the main issue the calibration of expectations — the apex fallacy for both sexes. Both men and women that are looking for a spouse above or far above their own attractiveness level are in for a rough ride.

Looks are helpful, even substantially helpful if you hit the Greek god looks break point, but they are far from being something that determines your ability to get married. The only people approaching the bottom 5% are those who have multiple things that are working against them. Even so, there are those like Nick Vujacic (the guy without any limbs) who break the mold for disabilities.

As this applies to marriage…

I think it’s very helpful if you can get a woman that’s head over heels for you, but I doubt most men are able to do it. Even so women’s attraction may be very specific to things like PSALM – power, status, athleticism, looks, and money, but things like status comes in all shapes and sizes. Not everyone can be a pastor or worship band leader, but there are women that are head over heels for men in all different types of sports and hobbies. Heck, there are girls that are Dungeons and Dragon’s groupies. If your hobby is D&D and you’re one of the best at it, find a girl who loves God and D&D. I know some marriages like this.

Of course, head over heels is not what makes a godly marriage, so one must be careful not to elevate this to the pedestal. It’s great if you have it, but it’s not something that is needed for a godly and successful marriage. Most men are unlikely to find a woman who is head over heels and have a high enough sex drive that they want to jump your bones all the time.

In conclusion…

- Attractiveness is still a probability game. Good looks can give you a natural head start and advantage, but it’s nothing in surmountable for many/most men.
- You generally have to have multiple things working against you to have a very difficult time generating attraction from at least a few members of the opposite sex.
- Looks matter, but they also don’t. What probably matters most in terms of getting married is calibrating your own expectations to your own level of attractiveness. Just as most men can be invisible to the American Evangelical Princess, men can fall for the same apex fallacy disregarding women who are interested in him because they don’t meet his attraction standards (usually obesity).
- If you want to be with someone “more attractive” generally you have to work on your own attractiveness yourself.
- Avoiding behaviors that decrease attraction are generally the biggest things for most men who are “bad with women” to work on. These both eliminate interest as it is happening and sabotage dates and relationships as well.

All of this matters only a little bit to some for having a godly marriage.

Consequences of actions and their impact on marriage

March 4, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

How much do the physical, emotional, mental, and other consequences of actions affect marriage and sanctification? Obviously, the answer varies depending on the severity of the actions involved: some, to a little, to a lot.

One of the oft quoted statistics on this blog is number of sexual partners before marriage and divorce rate. Women with more sexual partners before marriage have a higher divorce rate than virgins.

A woman who has repented of her past and is a true Christian following God and believes in the permanence of marriage can definitely be in the percentage of women who have had sexual partners before marriage but not divorce.

However, it's also true that the consequences of her past actions can have repercussions on her future marriage if she is prone to comparing her previous partners to her husband and not fleeing from temptations such as these. The past can bring up barriers and temptations to intimacy and make things more difficult in the future.

The difficulty for a man in this position is assessing this risk. This is also true of a man with prior sin in his life as a woman is assessing him for marriage. Since we can't view the hearts of the individuals (and individuals are prone to change over time), the only thing we have to look at is current patterns of behavior and how much they align with the gospel and Christian walk.

However, our God is amazing, and I think all early consequences of sin can be overcome if one is dead set on following Christ and taking off all of the old. Paul himself is an excellent example of this: full repentance that leads to him working even harder than many of Jesus' disciples for the gospel and extreme humility for his role in persecuting other Christians before he was converted.

Paul's example are the few indicators I would look for if I was going to marry a non-virgin or looked at any other sins in a person's past for evaluating them for marriage. It's very difficult to fake true humility and a passion for Christ that leads to large scale evangelism or service to the body of Christ.

Prioritizing intentions and the process versus results

To summarize the past few posts, a husband is most effective (and godly) when he doesn't fear his wife. His priority should always be fearing God by trying to do the right thing. A husband that fears his wife (or fears what she might think or fears divorce) will start to change his actions based on what she might think which leads him down the road of capitulation and attempting to make her happy. He becomes a yes dear man, which can often lead to divorce.

One of the classic distinctions is in the intentions and the process. Too often men will think "oh, I gotta start working out because I want to be attractive for my wife" not understanding that while this is true, the very intention of prioritizing what she thinks makes it much easier to fall into the frame of mind to make her happy and change your desires to suit hers. For instance, if she's not coming around for submission or sex, it can lead men to think that "if only I become more attractive then she'll come around."

This is one of the traps of conventional RP thought that often rears it's ugly head. RP tries to get around this by saying "do it for yourself," but that only goes so far because most men are never really doing it for themselves. At least initially.

For Christians, our main goal is all about being effective ministers for God. How can we influence those around us toward the gospel? We are supposed to excel in all that we do for Christ. It's also true that all things being equal, a more conventionally attractive Christian man will have a much easier time to ministry to other believers or unbelievers than those who are not (obese, lazy, don't care, etc.).

The fact that being physically muscular is attractive to women is a secondary but useful feature. In other words, the goal is to prioritize the process and function (how this affects your mission for God) over the results (more attractive to women).

When we are focused on being more process oriented more than results oriented, the results generally end up coming with tweaks here and there. However, if you're focused on results, the end result will usually be an pedestalizing/idolatrous tunneling which affects the process negatively. It's very easily to get embroiled in "what does she think" which subtly and irrevocably changes your behavior to catering to her which sabotages the marriage because then you are not acting as the leader. You are led by her feelings.

Coming back full circle, when sanctification is the process that is focused on I don't fear my wife's feelings, divorce, or the state. This leads me to lead, teach, correct, admonish, and rebuke as necessary for sinful behavior. Because I don't fear her feelings or falling out, she is more drawn to the strong masculine behavior which decreases her unhappiness long term (maybe there is short term happiness from being corrected) which decreases risk of divorce. Eventually, she is the one telling our friends that she doesn't want equality or feminism or other nonsense but wants to obey God.

It's interesting how each process seems to be a self-reinforcing cycle of behavior.

Others becoming more mature in Christ and turning to Christ

March 11, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Couple months late on this, but Roosh unpublished the rest of his books.

> In May of last year I unpublished 11 of my books because they were leading men directly to sin. That action was not enough. Today I have unpublished several more books, including my top seller Game, along with numerous articles, videos, podcasts, and forum postings.
> The prospect of banning Game last May was too difficult, even though my conscience was bothered by the contents. I wrestled with the issue for a week as I closed out my final days as an expat in Eastern Europe. It made sense to ban all my Bang books, which explicitly instructed men how to have casual sex, and it wasn't that hard on my wallet since they were older books that had passed their sales peak, but if I were to ban Game as well, my income would be wiped out. I prayed on the issue, asking God to help me make the right decision. Then I received two comments in one day from men stating that Game had helped them with married life. I also did a poll showing not all men were using Game to become accomplished fornicators. My conscience felt more clear; Game could remain.
> One month after the tour finished, I bought a used truck and was getting ready to rent a house in the mountains. I wasn't too worried about money, since Game was still selling well without any active promotion on my part. Then I received a message from a fellow Orthodox Christian that I had met in California saying he had just read Game, and noticed that it contained the same type of sexual content I had aggressively banned on the forum last year. I walked to my bookshelf, pulled out a copy of Game, and randomly flipped through it, expecting an "agnostic" tool, but I could not find a page where sin was not. The book wasn't agnostic at all—it trained and steered men for the main purpose of achieving bodily pleasure through casual sex. In some ways, it even wired men's brains to view women as objects to be won purely through knowledge, effort, and physical attractiveness. Even my book Day Bang, which has no sexual content, trained men to see women as objects to be won for pleasurable ends through the mathematics of approaching a lot of women in the hopes of finding one who was horny and loose. When faced with a hard life decision, I would pray for guidance, but this decision was easy: the books had to go.

I'm glad to see that Roosh is actively focused on becoming more like Christ. He's taking the necessary steps to continue to take off the old self and put on the new self, even though it may be hard on him financially.

Apparently, Victor Pride (of Bold and Determined) has also recently converted as well. I used to read his blog before a few years ago when I removed pretty much all secular content blogs from my reading list since they weren't helping me become more like Christ.

> Let it be known that I, Nickolas, a reformed sinner, and bondservant of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, have been saved by the blood of our blessed Lord Jesus. Let it be known that I do hereby declare that I will no longer operate in commerce under the nom de guerre Victor Pride. Let it be known that from this date forward I use my Christian name alone. Let it be known that I renounce any article, podcast, or video et al which has blasphemed God. Let it be known that I renounce any such material which does not glorify our Lord and Savior. Let it be known that I do hereby repent all transgressions against God. Let it be known that I, Nickolas, do hereby announce that I am a living sacrifice for the Lord Jesus Christ and I renounce my own will and declare to do only the perfect will of the Lord. Let it be known that Jesus Christ is Lord. Let it be known, now and forever, that Jesus Christ loves us, died for us, and brought us everlasting life. Written and declared at Asuncion on the twenty-ninth day of February, in the year of the incarnation of our Lord two thousand and twenty. Signed in the blood of Jesus Christ.

It's very interesting to see how many of the secular manosphere/men's blogs converting to Christ after finding such a life of sin unfulfilling. Praise God.

Meet cutes – are they common?

March 14, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I want to circle back to Scott's video which was posted in the extent of attraction and re-post it here again from my perspective.

So Scott goes through the definition of "meet cute" which is romantic comedies (RomCom) it's the "cute story of how you two met." Then he goes on to explain that in most of the cases in his life it was the women that were pursuing him rather than pursuing women and how it has shaped the qualities that made him attractive to women by building on itself.

I can only speak for myself on this topic, but only can recall two single times that this has happened to me in which girls just liked me for me. Once in high school a girl liked me for me (she went out of her way to sit near me in class and talk to me all the time, though nothing came of it cause I was blind to women) and then once in college (a high school girl liked me and made it clearly known but she was too young and overweight so I didn't like her). And even the later example could be obscured by the fact that girls generally like and/or look up to guys in the next stage of life (e.g. high school girls like college guys, and college girls like men who have graduated and have a job, etc.).

All of the other times that women were attracted to me were because of situations that set me up to succeed. I remember a few girls liked me in high school, but that was because I helped to tutor them. I remember in college the occasional girl liked me because I was one of the better ones at the recreational sports that I was playing. I remember in grad school that some girls liked me because I was one of the more popular TAs (teaching assistants) as I was apparently good at teaching. Each of these situations set me up as a leader/expert for women to look up to, much like the common tropes where women are attracted to men like boss-secretary or doctor-nurse.

I can't recall any specific instance where I worked the same job or had status as a woman and they liked me. Unlike Scott, I only have perhaps two scenarios where I'm immediately recognized as an attractive man that women look over at and appreciate. I'm not ugly but I'm not handsome either (though my wife thinks I'm handsome, though I'm pretty sure that's because of the influence of my leadership and her respect for me). I've never heard any other girl aside from her call me handsome.

I do not doubt that the majority of men would only have a few of these scenarios in their lifetime if any where a woman immediately recognizes them as attractive and wants to get to know them. Additionally, I don't think that most have the fatherly/mentor advice or social experience to capitalize on them either.

Based on this experience, most men are generally not considered attractive (as is born out by the OKcupid observations too). Men who desire to marry would be wise to leverage the specific scenarios to bolster their own attractiveness to women that have been mentioned in this post and prior posts (being excellent at hobbies, being a leader in organizations especially in the Church, job, or other areas of life, being an expert at a certain topic or teaching, etc.). Add on a muscular physique and cultivation of masculine traits which increase attractiveness outright, and you have a recipe to where you have increased your odds where some women will find you attractive as opposed to few to none.

Of course, the reason you should be doing the things first and foremost is to please God and serve Him via your mission for God (the reasons are covered in the past post). Being excellent at everything you do is just standard as a Christian. If you aren't that is a good place to start because if I reflect back and was mediocre at my tutoring, recreations, or TAing then I doubt any girls would have liked me much.

While my wife and I don't have a meet cute story, it seems we ultimately ended up with one as she does find me handsome now. So it's not like things can't change if you are not considered conventionally attractive. Even with many of the arranged marriages, the stories about them seem to indicate that as long as the husband and wife are committed they grow into each other. Husband and wife goggles are definitely a thing.

How can a wife encourage (not nag) her husband to lead

March 16, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This question came up on the reddit, and I don't think I've actually covered a way for wives to do it without nagging. Essentially, Cane's analogy of learning to "bow lower" is a good one for these types of situations.

> You do need to learn how to encourage (not force) him to take the reigns in the relationship if you want to succeed in the long term and not just find someone else to marry.
> One way to do this is to always "bow lower" (e.g. submit to his submission) if he brings out his own submissive attitude wants you to make the decision. Example:
> "I like it when you take charge and make the decisions"
> If he's really beat down in his decision making, he might say "but I want to know what you think" in which case you should not offer a decision/opinion (because he will pick that one). Instead, go over some pros of one decision and pros of another.
> "I like this because [insert opinion] and I like this other because [insert opinion]. They're both good options to me."
> Then he will have to pick between them making it actually his decision. If you did prefer one over the other but they are both good choices, just bite the bullet.
> Then actually follow it up with more encouragement, appreciation, and gratitude showing that you like his decision either way (even if you didn't like it). Might be awkward at first, but practice it is good.

Notice throughout the wifely parts of the interactions, the wife is not telling her husband what to do ("I like it when you make decisions"). She's basically putting the ball back in his court by talking about herself and encouraging him at the same time. This is different from focuses on what the husband is not doing which is similar to and often comes off as nagging ("you should make the decisions" which is similar to nagging "you should do this and that"). The "you" is more accusatory and trying to directly influence what the husband is doing and comes off as disrespectful which directly sabotages what the wife wants to do.

Once a man gets some good decisions under his belt, he's much more likely to start to take hold of it and run with it. Men that are beat down by the society, culture, and even the Church about decision making will be very hesitant and will often think to defer to their woman/wife. They need encouragement to take the baby steps sometimes.

They're not going to get it anywhere else except from their woman/wives in most cases.

Indeed, for wives or anyone under authority, you need to take the same attitude of what Jesus did when He was praying to the Father: state your options but “not my will but yours be done.” Cane’s analogy was of the servants of old and serving their masters in the Bible: “what can I do that would please my lord?”. Both are the correct respectful attitude.

Understanding the right hierarchy for men unsuccessful with women

One of the pitfalls that men who are unsuccessful with women tend to fall for is trying to directly copy the behavior of men are successful with women. While this works some of the time with the behavior, it can fail because of the difference in attractiveness.

A man who is attractive to women gets a larger benefit of the doubt than a man who is unattractive. Though it is also true that many of the behaviors are indeed correct (such as acting in a masculine manner, as a leader, etc.), it's hard for some men to dissociate the results versus the process that also comes with being attractive themselves.

Ironically, the other effective way at understand correct behavior is to look at the unsuccessful relationships when a man pedestalizes the woman. In these reverse hierarchical relationships, it is the man doing everything he can to be a "helper" to the woman, with the woman being the leader of the relationship. Aside from any unkind or other sinful actions, looking at the behavior of the woman in this situation is exactly how the man should have acted in the relationship.

Relationships generally reflect polarity in this aspect: if the man is masculine he will attract and choose feminine women whereas if the man is feminine he will attract and choose masculine women (and vice versa). Therefore, one can look at this polarity and see the general traits and behaviors that the leader exudes in the relationship and what makes them successful and learn and understand why those are effective.

I think for many men that are unsuccessful with women, looking and aping the men who are successful with relationships can be daunting with mixed results. This is discouraging and can lead down the wrong path. However, for the introspective man, he can examine his own unsuccessful relationships or the unsuccessful relationships of others more easily and impartially and learn and apply those traits more effectively with less pressure. This is necessary sometimes.

In short,

- Look and learn at the behaviors of men successful with women. Some may not work if you're not attractive enough
- Examine your own behaviors that may have been unleader-like, and see how they may have contributed to failure of relationshps
- Examine others behaviors in relationships, both from the man and woman's side
- Examine the relationships with masculine women and feminine men as usually the masculine women will be doing behaviors that can make men more successful with the relationship

It's interesting because the attitudes of things like outcome independence that attractive women have men throwing themselves at her, that is more or less how most men who want to be successful with women should act.

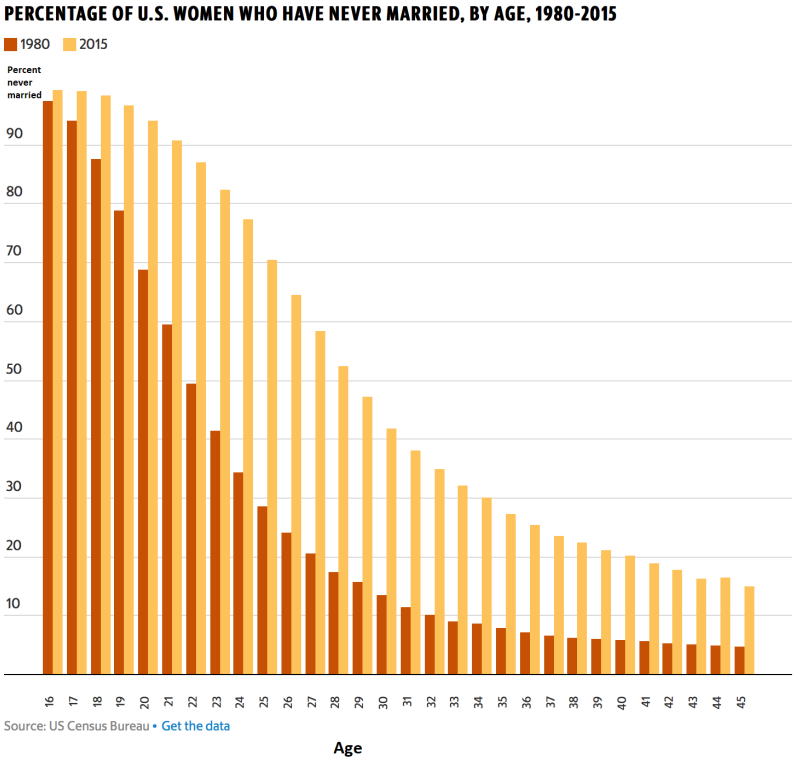
Men and women are the same in that regard. Men that have women throwing themselves at them and women who have men throwing themselves at them will have common behaviors between them that help maintain success with women. The unfortunate part for attractive women is that they have to break that mindset if they want to have successful relationships and marriage. Many don’t.



Nuances of marriage data: it's really not that hard to get married

April 7, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From what I've seen, there is a lot of taking the fact that women are generally only attracted to the top 20% of men out of context. I also don't agree with much of the hopelessness discussion from the comments on Jack's post.

In a vacuum, women may only be attracted to the top 20% of men (specifically visually on OK Cupid). However, it's not the case that women are only attracted to just these 20% of men. I definitely fall into the bottom 80% for not being conventionally physically attractive, but as we talked about in Meet Cutes – are they common I am attractive in certain niche circumstances like when I've been in a teaching or leadership position.

Now if we look at the never married data from reddit and Dalrock we see a few things.

Overall, it used to be in the US, as with most cultures, that 95% of women got married in the past. As the data show, that is trending toward maybe 15-20%. Maybe a bit higher. However, what is also not mentioned is the fact that marriage is being replaced with mainly serial cohabitation for many which is basically the same thing for the non-Christians.

Analysis

Approximately 80-85% of women still make it to marriage. The percentage is slightly less for men since men generally have a better time getting remarried after divorce than women to non-married. So let's say it's about 80%.

Of this 80%, approximately 20% of those are sexless marriages and approximately 40% of first marriages end in divorce. It's hard to say how many of those sexless marriages ultimately end up in divorce, but I'd say it's probably most of them. Given how pro-feminism the US and rest of the West is growing (pretty much all media, culture, and functional egalitarian and "complementarism" in the Church), I'm actually surprised the 60% of first marriages are permanent which is approximately half of the population: 80% * 60% = 48%.

70% of the population is now overweight or obese, which also means that with 80% of the population getting married maybe about 25% are normal and underweight while 55% are overweight or obese. This would leave approximately 5% of the underweight and normal weight population not getting married, and 15% of the overweight and obese not getting married. This is approximately correct from my obesity analysis.

As Novaseeker frequently says: Just look at the people at Walmart who have gotten married to see that looks don't really matter much in just getting married. Usually those who are overweight or obese tend to have other things going for them like being funny or charismatic, but even then 55 out of the 70% of the population that is overweight or obese is still getting married which is about a (55/70 = ~68%) or 70% marriage rate. Yes, ~70% of people that are overweight or obese still get married.

This leads to a few conclusions:

- It's not that hard to get married: just don't be in the bottom 20%. It's pretty easy to get out of the bottom 20% as not being overweight or obese is most of the way there already. If you're actively working on other physical appearance (being muscular, good diet, grooming, style) and on personality (not being conversationally awkward, learning to be the head, leading conversations, etc.) then you're definitely not in the bottom 20%.
- If you want a permanent and non-sexless marriage: just don't be in the bottom 50%. Half of the battle is learning how to be a good leader since the vast majority of relationships are steeped in feminism and inverted roles already. Most divorces are initiated by wives (losing respect and not wanting to have sex with their husbands). If you keep up a good physical appearance and are actively engaged in your mission for God and strive to obey God's marriage roles and responsibilities (be the head!) then you're already there.
- Yes, maybe you don't have some meet-cute type of thing where you did nothing and your wife was attracted to you like the top 20%, but you don't need to have that. No man needs to be in the top 20% to reach the previous bullet point threshold, although it opens up your options more so that you can be more selective in who you marry. Top 20% if a good threshold to aim for though in general.

To elaborate on what being better than 50% is in reality, the average American man is 5'9″ and 200 lbs which is 29.5 BMI (25-29.9 BMI is overweight and obesity is > 30 BMI). He's also steeped in culture and likes to make "wife is the boss" and "she'll get mad if I do that" jokes. You're telling me that most men can't be better than that? Yeah, no.

Both women and men continue to fall for the apex fallacy. You don't need to be top 20% to get married and have a permanent and non-sexless marriage. It's much easier when you know you only have to be top 50% and even just to get married not the bottom 20%.

The issue for many is the calibration of attractiveness. Many/some men and women don't want to marry someone who is overweight or obese or has other issues with certain things. This can price them out of the pool of candidates that would go on dates and/or marry them. That is their prerogative though. The more selective you are, the harder it will be to find someone who meets that criteria.

I know we've discussed on this blog about all of the different criteria, but at the end of the day it's just risk profiles. Each man can determine how much risk they want to take on to be married.

If one thinks that they're too far down the totem pole for whatever reasons and nothing is every going to convince them to marry, or they just don't want to worry, then do as the Bible says: stay single and serve God wholeheartedly.

Happy wife, happy life should be sanctified wife, joyful and peaceful life

It should be pretty obvious that happy wife, happy life is wrong. I've been trying to think up a better maxim which is theologically sound.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

"Sanctified wife" is obviously what all husband should aim for as to emulate Christ's love.

As one is sanctified and filled with the Spirit, the fruit of the Spirit become manifest.

> Galatians 5:22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law.
> 1 Thessalonians 5:16 Rejoice always; 17 pray without ceasing; 18 in everything give thanks; for this is God's will for you in Christ Jesus.

Sanctification of both the husband and the wife should result in the peace and joy of the Spirit becoming manifest throughout the marriage, which is a witness to both non-Christians and Christian marriages that are not.

Changes reveal weaknesses

April 24, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the big things I've been seeing over this lockdown is that a lot of relationships and marriages have gotten better and a lot of have gotten worse.

If the marriages were not built on a good foundation and just superficial things where you could put off issues like going to work or do other things, then they have gotten worse. They're spending a much greater amount of time with each other, and it's revealing weaknesses that have been put off. They're more like roommates than married.

On the other hand, the marriages that have gotten stronger are ones where a husband and wife have built their marriages on God and family. Thus, spending much more time with each other has strengthened those bonds with each other and the kids if any.

The same thing has occurred with other romantic relationships but to a lesser extent. The challenge of the "social distancing" have either helped or hurt because people have more time now and either spend it on relationships or just staying busy.

From what I've seen, this scenario has only really helped my own marriage and relationships. If it hasn't, perhaps these are some things to consider and think about in your own relationships and marriages. How are we spending the time? How are our relationships and marriages growing?

The same can be true of our own time with God. It gives us a window to either walk toward growth or let things deteriorate.

Idealism and Opportunism are not sex specific

April 28, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Reading for Scott's post on Sigma, I was reminded of one of the common manosphere tropes is that men love idealistically and women love opportunistically.

This is false, but there are half truths to it.

Men can seem to love idealistically in a few different scenarios:

- When they're infatuated and believe a woman can do no wrong. Some men eventually fall out of this, but some men carry it with them straight to marriage and divorce. This is similar to the so-called blue pill culture and Church where men can be blindsided by a divorce because he (1) does not know how his wife or girlfriend is feeling and (2) he doesn't understand women's nature.
- It is men who primarily initiate and pursue in the culture (if we look to Jesus we see that He initiates but does not pursue), men tend to get more girlfriends and wives that were maybe only half or partially interested in them rather than fully invested. Aside from some of the other forces in the culture, this also skews the breakups and divorces more toward the side of the women. In other words, men generally don't ask out and pursue women that they are unhappy or not satisfied with, but women do accept dates, boyfriends, and even marriage sometimes with men who they aren't satisfied completely with. Men can often assume that a woman is fully invested in him when she isn't, and that leads to a disparity where he can get blindsided.
- Men can choose to love idealistically in terms of Christ. Although this idealistic (agape) love is different than the above feelings/erotic based love.

There are also many men who do not love idealistically in either sense of the above examples, and they are very opportunistic in terms of spinning plates, cheating, and otherwise can't keep it in their pants.

Women can seem to also love idealistically under the same scenarios as men do.

- Alpha widows are primary examples of women loving idealistically under the infatuation scenario. This is the case even when they are with men who are abusive. They will stay and keep saying he's perfect and awesome and just misunderstood.
- While it is much rarer, a woman can pursue a man at all costs until she gets with him. In this scenario, is it often the man who can be half hearted about being with her and eventually take the opportunity to leave. I saw a couple scenarios like this in college, but very few after college.
- Women can choose to love idealistically in terms of Christ. Although I find this to be much rarer according to the divorce statistics because women tend to be less content on average. What tends to be more important in these cases is obviously the Biblical command of respect and submission for wives as that helps get them in the right frame of mind to love.

The Scripture even lauds some examples of women who were idealistic in their love for their husbands.

> 1 Peter 3:1 In the same way, you wives, be submissive to your own husbands so that even if any of them are disobedient to the word, they may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, 2 as they observe your chaste and respectful behavior. 3 Your adornment must not be merely external—braiding the hair, and wearing gold jewelry, or putting on dresses; 4 but let it be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For in this way in former times the holy women also, who hoped in God, used to adorn themselves, being submissive to their own husbands; 6 just as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord, and you have become her children if you do what is right without being frightened by any fear.

If you go back to Genesis and read the story what Abraham put her through with Abimelech and Pharaoh, that is some idealistic love much like you would see from women who are extremely strongly bonded to their man today.

The problem with a lot of conventional RP wisdom is that there are a lot of half truths that sound right, but when you examine them they're false.

The reason why this particular trope tends to get traction is because the men talking around the manosphere were or are primarily:

1. Unattractive and there to understand women and get one for themselves. They were previous "blue pill" and one of the infatuation types who loved their woman for who they were, even as she was pursuing other men more attractive than him. This is what eventually got them to stumble upon why his woman didn't accept him for who he was and left him.
2. Frivorced and/or blindsided by their wives or dumped by their girlfriends (and haven't dumped women much if at all themselves). In general, if the boyfriend or husband was super committed to the marriage but the girlfriend or wife was not, the blindside makes it seems like they were all in and the women were not… when it was just the case that they couldn't read the situation nor understand the nature of women.

As mentioned before, the culture also sets up the pursuers mentality and devalues men that more often biases men toward the infatuation route as opposed to understanding where he fits in the grand scheme of things and making decisions not based on infatuation.

To conclude, saying one sex and the other is idealistic and opportunistic has some half truths, but that's like saying men are logical and women are emotional. Yes, there is some bias for men being more logical and women emotional, but both are capable of each. Many men are capable of opportunism, and while fewer women are capable of idealism there are a bunch.

Most of the idealistic love you see in popular culture is based on infatuation, and it’s no wonder why both men and women often get their hearts broken from it (men blindsided by frivorce or dumped, and women alpha widowed).

Headship in Genesis

May 9, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've already gone over why there was headship before the fall. Even as CBMW has gotten a lot of stuff wrong, they did get this right in 1987 Danver's statement.

> Adam's headship in marriage was established by God before the Fall, and was not a result of sin (Gen 2:16-18, 21-24, 3:1-13; 1 Cor 11:7-9).

It's pretty interesting how there is a strong alignment of God's perfect Creation and the New Creation.

> Genesis 2:18 Then the Lord God said, "It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper suitable for him." 19 Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the sky, and brought them to the man to see what he would call them; and whatever the man called a living creature, that was its name. 20 The man gave names to all the cattle, and to the birds of the sky, and to every beast of the field, but for Adam there was not found a helper suitable for him. 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man. 23 The man said,
> "This is now bone of my bones, And flesh of my flesh; She shall be called Woman, Because she was taken out of Man."
> 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

- v18 – Man is alone and needs a helper.
- v19-20 – God shows one way how man is tasked with authority and dominion over the animals by naming them (from prior Genesis 1 "dominion over all the earth").
- v21-22 – God creates woman from man.
- v23 – Adam's statement parallels naming Eve (headship authority) and covenant vows.
- v24 – Marriage is a man leaving his parents (independence), forming a new family unit with his wife (cleave), and becoming one flesh (covenant).

Paul in Ephesians 5 references the Creation in Genesis several times, much like he does in other passages in the Scriptures (e.g. 1 Corinthians 11, 1 Timothy 2, etc.).

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.

Husbands and wives are to emulate Christ and the Church, which also emulates Adam and Eve's Creation. Adam:Eve::Christ:Church::husbands:wives.

- Gen 2:19-20 – God sends Jesus to take back dominion over all the earth as the Messiah. Jesus passes His mission on to Christians (Matthew 28) to be co-workers with God (1 Corinthians 3).
- Genesis 2:21-22 – Eve was formed from Adam, so too the Church is formed from Christ. Christians are partakers in the New Covenant through Christ's sacrifice for us. His blood washes away our sins to those who repent and follow Him, and we remember this through His body and blood (communion).
- Genesis 2:23-24 – Jesus departs from God and is to be joined to His bride, the Church. He is the head, the Savior of the body, just as Eve was formed from the body of Adam and Adam is the head.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

> Genesis 2:16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die."
> Genesis 3:6 When the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was desirable to make one wise, she took from its fruit and ate; and she gave also to her husband with her, and he ate.
> Genesis 3:17 Then to Adam He said, "Because you have listened to the voice of your wife, and have eaten from the tree about which I commanded you, saying, 'You shall not eat from it';

Christ loves the Church for the purpose of sanctification. Where Adam stumbled, Christ reigned. Husbands are to emulate Christ as the head over their wives by teaching and helping them to be sanctified unlike Adam did with his wife.

> Ephesians 5:28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body.

Like in Genesis 2:21-22, husbands are to love their wives as their own bodies — like Eve who was fashioned from Adam, and Christians who are saved by Christ's sacrifice through His body and blood. They are one flesh with their wives through covenant, and must treat them as themselves.

> Ephesians 5:31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she respects her husband.

Finally, like in Genesis 2:23-24, the covenant of marriage is reaffirmed both in reference to Adam and Eve in Genesis and Christ and the Church. A husband is to treat his wife as part of his body (Adam and Eve, Christ and the Church) and a wife must respect/reverence/fear her husband as he is her head (as Adam was Eve's head and Christ it the Church's head).

Headship was originally created for Adam and Eve by God in order that they fulfill their mandate on the earth to take dominion, be fruitful and multiply, tend to the garden and obey God by not eating of the forbidden fruit. Similarly, headship functions in the similar way with Christ and the Church and husbands and wives in the New Creation in Christ.

How to evaluate sexual compatibility as a Christian with no pre-marital sex and only chaste behavior

This question has been asked a bunch of times before, but it never has had it's own post.

Let me first say I'm not an expert on this topic, but here's a bit about how I approached it with my wife. The good fruit that this has born is that I am happy to say that my wife has never once denied me when I really wanted to have it nor have I her. We have had grace for each other if sick or tired a few times, but overall we go out of our way to please the other.

I'm going to go over a bunch of different points here (not everything in the post above), but if you want to read the full timeline of when/how I discussed things you can click the link.

- Vet for background (e.g. how she grew up, what her parents taught her about sex, if there is any abuse, etc.) to ensure there aren't any yellow or red flags there which may interfere with intimacy

This gives you some clues into how she was raised and her attitudes toward sex. As one of the many Christian growing up during the "purity" movement, it did warp many Christian men and women's ideas about what was good and what was bad. It's was often the case that it was drilled into young adults heads that sex before marriage = bad and sex after marriage = good. While most men can flip a switch to go from no sex to lots of sex, sometimes women have hangups about this because they've been doing what is "right" and now even though it's good to have sex with their husband it still feels "wrong." You want to see if they can process through any yellow or red flags in their attitudes toward sex.

- Look not just at virginity but overall chastity. It helps to differentiate if she may hold virginity as an idol, or if she's being obedient to God

No man or woman should be shamed for preferring a virgin spouse. However, virginity is not a be-all end-all. A "technical virgin" who continues to do everything with men while dating is questionable at best. A woman who had formerly slept with some men but has been chaste for many years since she has been saved is showing that she understands how to obey God.

- Look at her attitudes toward physical intimacy and acceptance of it For example, you should both want to have sex and have trouble keeping your hands off each other, but you stop yourselves because you want to avoid temptation and honor God.

This should be quite obvious seeing the context of 1 Corinthians 7. Paul describes that "because of fornications" that men and women should marry because they were burning with passion for each other. Beware of women (or men for women) who want to be in a relationships or marriage but don't have a hard time keeping their hands off you. They may be in it for other reasons, but less likely want to fulfill their own duty toward you. Which leads into…

- Go over the Bible passages on marriage with her and ask for her opinions (you must ask her to give her opinions before giving yours, so you don't unnecessarily influence her toward your perspective).

1 Corinthians on denial of sex is a big one. If she is a true Christian and unselfish she will want to have sex even if she doesn't feel like it and same with you as a husband. It is must to go over this passage with a prospective spouse and see their attitude toward it.

- Ask about her libido.

Many men never ask, but it's important. Does she want to have sex? How is her sex drive? What is a reasonable amount of sex in marriage to her? What if your numbers are so drastically different such as you want to do it everyday while she wants to do it once every couple weeks?

- Look at how she treats others and you. The more unselfishness and respect for others you see, the more likely it is that she won't deny sex.

The Christian walk is often filled with loving and serving others even when we don't want to. You want a Christian who walks the walk. Also, read the Christian Brad Pitt thought experiment as it explains how a woman generally will act if she's attracted. She'll want to go out of her way to follow you and be with you. This includes sex.

- Examine attitudes and actions toward birth control (and if she is taking any), exercise, sleep, and other factors as that can influence a woman's sex drive

These are often overlooked. Aside from the potential side effects of things like birth control (cancer, blood clots, etc.) there are other things like changing a woman's preferences and sex drive that get glossed over. There's a few examples in the OYS threads about men realizing their wives libido was killed by birth control. You don't want to get married to someone who is taking birth control who is attracted to you and then when she goes off she thinks you're not attractive and doesn't want to have sex with you. Likewise, lifestyle stuff is important because things like high stress and lack of health all can contribute to lower sex drive.

While sex is not everything, it's easy for it to become an issue in a marriage especially when you're the one getting denied. These difference points can allow you to investigate a woman or man's potential attitudes and actions toward sex which will give you a good idea if they want to have sex with you and if they’ll deny you or not.

Everything always goes back to the family

May 15, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

When we get into the topic of marriage education, one huge problem is that the Church or even a school curriculum are being considered primary teachers.

Deuteronomy 6 shows us that the father (and mother by extension) are to teach all of the things in the Law to their children both day and night. The modeling of the father and mother show the kids the importance of marriage and how it should work. The Church/gatherings/assemblies are to reinforce this to show that the whole community accepts God's standards and practices them.

The Church itself is to be a supplement. It's not an answer. This is why families without strong and good role models (and those especially without a father) have large statistically bad influences on children even if they go to Church. There's no primary good modeling.

The Church and ideally education should help families to have good marriages, so that they can model those to their kids. But this is limited as it requires husbands and wives to want to do that. This is a big problem in western Christianity because most husbands and wives think it is the Church's or education system's responsibility to educate their kids. We can all see how that works out — young people leaving the Church in droves as they go to college.

The state of the Church is only a symptom of the decay of the family. There's a reason why the leftists/Marxists wanted to destroy the nuclear family.

Jesus says follow Me — the correct view of relationships and marriage contrary to the culture

May 20, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I remember writing this up, but I think I forgot to post it here.

Jesus and the Church are a guide to male and female relationships and marriage. The analogy of husband and wife as Jesus and the Church in Ephesians 5 provides a strong background for how we are to walk in male-female relationships that lead to marriage and in marriage. Christ:Church::husband:wives. This goes against many things in our popular culture and even in the current Church today.

There is the notion in popular culture that men romantically pursue women. This thought has also pervaded the Church in the form of "Jesus is my lover" or "husbands should romance their wives" because "Jesus and God continually pursue you." This is false. The Father and Jesus both call us or rather present the opportunity, but it is up to us to acknowledge the call and choose to follow.

> Matthew 4:18 (NASB) Now as Jesus was walking by the Sea of Galilee, He saw two brothers, Simon who was called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishermen. 19 And He said to them, Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." 20 Immediately they left their nets and followed Him. 21 Going on from there He saw two other brothers, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in the boat with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and He called them. 22 Immediately they left the boat and their father and followed Him.

Jesus had just traveled out of the wilderness where He was tempted and had started to preach the gospel in the surrounding areas. In other words, Jesus started His God-given mission. The disciples saw Jesus on His mission, He invited them to come join Him in the journey, and they wanted to follow Him.

In the context of male-female relationships, remember from the beginning that God created woman to be a helpmeet of man. Jesus demonstrates His mission and presents a clear vision of how He was going to task His disciples when they follow Him: to be fishers of men. In the same way, a man who asks a woman out on a date should already be working toward His God-given mission—evangelize, make disciples, use your Spiritual gifts to build up the body of Christ, and lead ministry. He should also have a clear vision of where she fits in his life as his helpmeet as she is going to help him on his mission. She is also going to fulfill her Biblical roles and responsibilities just as you would to her.

Jesus does not chase after us, nor should men chase after women. This flies in the face of all "romance" that is popular in the culture and Church. Consider when Jesus claims that He is the "Bread of Life" in John 6.

> John 6:60 (NASB) Therefore many of His disciples, when they heard this said,

> “This is a difficult statement; who can listen to it?” 61 But Jesus, conscious that His disciples grumbled at this, said to them, “Does this cause you to stumble? 62 What then if you see the Son of Man ascending to where He was before? 63 It is the Spirit who gives life; the flesh profits nothing; the words that I have spoken to you are spirit and are life. 64 But there are some of you who do not believe.” For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were who did not believe, and who it was that would betray Him. 65 And He was saying, “For this reason I have said to you, that no one can come to Me unless it has been granted him from the Father.”
> 66 As a result of this many of His disciples withdrew and were not walking with Him anymore. 67 So Jesus said to the twelve, “You do not want to go away also, do you?” 68 Simon Peter answered Him, “Lord, to whom shall we go? You have words of eternal life. 69 We have believed and have come to know that You are the Holy One of God.

Jesus challenges all of those that were following Him about His role and place in the Kingdom of God. His invitation is the same: Follow Me and continue to Follow Me. Yet those who were not interested He let walk away. The same is true of God in Romans 1, where He allows humanity to be given over to their sinful passions and lusts if they don’t want to seek Him.

Consider the father’s actions in the Prodigal Son (Luke 15). The son decides he wants his inheritance to go party. The father allows him to go off on his own. The father does not chase after him to persuade him otherwise. Only when the son makes the choice to come back to the father does the father see him in the distance, come out of his house, and run toward him with arms open wide.

The pervasive romantic attitude that men are supposed to pursue women runs contrary to the Father and Jesus’ actions. Both culture and some in the Church would have us believe that Jesus continues to chase after us at all costs. This is only true in the example of the parable of the lost sheep where the shepherd goes to apprehend a sheep that wandered away, yet in that case that sheep was already under the Shepherd’s care (Luke 15). Only after we are committed in marriage are we responsible to seek after that which is ours that is lost. This mirrors the roles and responsibilities of marriage.

The Biblical model for relationships is that men demonstrate and invite, and women choose to respond to that invitation and follow.

If a man asks a woman out on a date and she turns him down, should that man continue to try to be “romantic” and chase after her? Of course not! There’s nothing a man can say or do to convince a woman to like him more. Even if by some measure he wears down her resistance and she capitulates, such a relationship will not work out in the long run because it was not based on her genuine desire to be in the relationship with him. Whether or not she actually acts on it, she will internally desire to leave as soon as the next best thing comes along.

No matter how much you, as a man, may want to be in a relationship with a woman, she also needs to want to be in that relationship. She has to want to follow you, out of genuine desire to be with you.

- Jesus leads, the Church follows. Men lead, women follow.
- Jesus doesn't chase after us. Men should not chase after women.

The goal of a single Christian man should be to carry out his God-given mission wholeheartedly and invite a woman on a date (or to be courted) to see if she wants to follow him. If she isn't a good follower or isn't teachable to be a good follower, he should be selective and eliminate her from contention.

The point at which a man starts to pursue after a woman, he slips into a dangerous frame of mind that can easily lead him to start pedestaling her and sin. Adam not saying no to Eve and the serpent in the garden is but one example of putting your wife over the commands of God. He was not deceived but willfully chose her more than obeying God.

Unshameable

One of the things most Christians seem to have trouble separating, not just in wider Christian culture but also in various manosphere circles, is that vetting and preferences for marriage are different than how you should treat someone as a fellow Christian.

Marriage is a covenant and supposed to be permanent in God's eyes. You should be selective on someone who you are making a lifelong covenant with. You want a true Christian (not in name only; who walks the walk), hopefully whose mission is aligned with yours, who is grounded with good character and morals, wants to follow God's biblical roles and responsibilities, and ideally the least baggage as possible. More on past posts on vetting.

This does not mean those who don't meet your criteria (whatever they are) are not good Christians or evil in some way. Everyone has sins in their past that they can repent to God and be forgiven. As Christians, we do not need to shame them or make them feel unwelcome once they are in God's family. We should celebrate and be joyful.

But that does not necessarily mean you need to eliminate different past sins as criteria for who you want to be married. I don't have anything against non-virgins or single mothers who have repented and are in Christ. In fact, I rejoice with them, but I also wouldn't marry one. Same with alcoholics, other various addictions, and even murderers (heck, Saul/Paul was one before he was converted).

If you want to marry a single mother that's great too. I know some men who have and they have godly marriages. However, it is true that it is riskier. It is one that I personally refused having reviewed all of the relevant data. Each man should pray, get wise counsel, and evaluate the risk for himself. If he is satisfied that she is truly repentant and has godly character then who am I to judge? I'll encourage him and try to help him in his marriage.

Whatever preferences or criteria you have for marriage are fine. One can say some may be unrealistic (as in the case of evangelical american princesses). One could say some are unwise or unfeasible. One should evaluate whether different preferences and criteria are worth having or if they weed out too many otherwise good candidates. However, I don't think anyone should have any shame for their criteria or preferences for marriage. If you're a Christian it's a lifelong thing and you want to make a good choice if you're not going to stay celibate for life.

Each to his own with no shame, but it is good to be in the Scriptures, praying, and wise about your own preferences and about who you potentially choose to marry including their past.

Double standards around sex: the purest example of the feminization of Christianity

June 10, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

From Reddit's sub "Christian Marriage."

Women, please don't deny your husbands — 0 upvotes, 50% upvoted

Here's the post:

> Sex for a husband is so essential. Please don't undermine how important that is to a husband who desires his wife, but doesn't get any romance. Keep your marriage alive!

And of course, the top few answers:

- My husband is compassionate about my medical problems. Sex is not all we have and it's not the most essential. Our love and relationship are much deeper.
- Sorry but this is not great advice. I was told by a female Christian counselor that "under no circumstances should a Christian wife ever say no to her husband for sex". So as much as I thought that was some bogus, 18th Century, misogynist advice, I tried it. I did it whenever he wanted with a good attitude. My husband still cheated on me multiple times and watched porn despite having sex with me multiple times a week. Don't make women feel it's THEIR DUTY to keep the husband happy. Are you kidding me? This is actually some "wisdom" people are giving out on a Christian sub? Maybe instead the advice should be that both the husband and wife need to focus on other aspects of intimacy so the wife wants to have sex. Some women experience pain, have trauma, don't feel valued and loved. Why should a woman do this out of OBLIGATION? It should be done out of desire to bring her and her husband closer and same with the husband. Please check your heart and the Bible before spewing this rhetoric.
- This is definitely true! But also, men, do not forget that you hold part of the key yourselves. Make sure that you act as a man worthy of respect and desire, that you take care of yourself and that you treat her with love and care. No woman wants to have sex with Homer Simpson.
- One of the hallmarks of being a good husband (or wife, for that matter) is not treating sex as something you are entitled to. Just saying.

Literally a list of excuses why women shouldn't have sex with their husbands. You know, the one they agreed to "have and to hold."

Then someone was smart enough to post the opposite one.

Men please don't deny your wives — 123 upvotes, 100% upvoted

The same exact post but substituted husbands for wives.

Let’s look at the comments.

- Is this because of the recent post for wives to not deny their husbands? Lol. Both statements are true and need to be heard. I understand that some partners have lower libidos, but the rejection is very painful for the partner being denied. This does a lot of damage in a marriage. Unfortunately, I have found that talking about sex is a little taboo in the Christian community. My husband is still uncomfortable talking about sex, and we’ve been married for 8 years, together for 11.
- First step, men – stop looking at porn.
- Amen!
- Thank you; I needed this. We’ve got a Cold War in our home right now. I’m trying to remain strong, but temptation is ever-present.
- If you insist
- This is very important. I went through a depression period. I stopped paying attention to my wife and now I’m paying for it. It’s not her fault, but mine. She did everything – even dyed her hair blonde (although I never asked) so I would notice her. I was too preoccupied with myself to even notice she was looking for attention. We are still together and working on things, but it’s hard. I appreciate any prayers my way. But men – take note of this!

Men being told to stop looking at porn, and men owning up to denying their wives.

Can’t make this stuff up. Literally the same command to both the husbands and the wives to have sex with each other but two drastically different responses from “Christians.”

Why we are here

June 12, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I initially wrote this as a comment for reddit, but it's worth a post since many men don't understand the various interactions with lots of the different men's blogs.

1. Over the past 100+ years (or perhaps 1000+ years as Aaron Renn's Masculinist newsletter investigates), much of western Christianity has incorporated a lot of secular beliefs into their sex/gender perspectives. Christianity has been increasingly feminized while male masculinity has become more demonized. Fake perspectives like Christian egalitarianism and complementarism have arisen.
2. Many in the Church espouse typical cultural phrases like "happy wife, happy life" or "gotta listen to the boss" which is direct contradiction to the Bible (e.g. Ephesians 5). Likewise, as divorce and brokenness in homes has increased by liberal policies, men and women are not fathered and mentored as much as they used to which has resulted in much dysfunction. Not that conservatives are any better because they're not. Like Christ, Christians should not be concerned about changing politics but about changing hearts with the gospel.
3. Most dating advice follows an untruthful bent, especially in Christian communities. "Just be yourself" is one of the common ones that doesn't help, and in the Christian community "focus on being godly" or "just pray and God will have it all in His time" are some of the common ones. This is unhelpful to Christian men who are unsuccessful with women.
4. During the late 90s, 00s, and early '10s, the pick up artist (PUA) community was all about discovering what worked to get laid. This slowly morphed into discussion boards on the internet. During the late 00s and early '10s, this group started to pick up steam on the Internet and started fracturing into various groups: PUAs, secular red pill, red pill women, men's rights, incels, etc. Probably the most prolific Christian blog (Dalrock) on exposing the false beliefs of the culture and how they have been incorporated into the Church started around 2010 or 2011.
5. Many Christians who were bad with women ultimately saw that some of these concepts worked, which had been contrary to the typical advice they had been preached to when they were teens or young adults in the Church. Many of these Christians get sucked into the secular RP and lose their faith.
6. Since God created man and woman, the Truth in the Scriptures about male and female relationships is clearly true. Much of this lines up with what the secular RP has come to conclude through trial and error (man should be the head of the family, have a mission bigger than himself, wife is helper and shouldn't be put on a pedestal, etc.). Some high profile secular RP leaders like Roosh and Victor ultimately see that hedonism and sex is all worthless in the end without God.
7. As far as the reddit RPChristians goes, the founder started it with the intent to understand and apply what the Bible actually teaches about marriage and relationships and to minister/outreach to the secular RP (much like organizations like XXX Christians which minister to porn stars). Since there are not a lot of spaces where Christian men and women can discuss sexuality without fear of reprisal, this is one of those spaces.

8. We don't incorporate RP philosophy into what we do because the Bible is the ultimate Truth, but we may use RP terms to communicate concepts that the Bible teaches.

Some Q&A on why we may use RP terms. Personally, I try not to use RP terms anymore since they've become loaded words. They don't effectively communicate what you're trying to say much like hash tags or liberal/conservative catch phrases.

> How would you categorize your philosophies/theology to someone unfamiliar with RP?

We teach what the Bible says, but we may use RP concepts to explain it as many men from secular RP understand the terms in that way.

Many men even here may think it's about incorporating RP beliefs into Christianity, but that's false. You can't incorporate other beliefs into Christianity and have it still be Christianity. It's just your own pet version of Christianity.

> Would you simply say you're an RP Christian? Or is there another overarching name for this type of theology. Personally, I had never heard of RP and it's hard to find online resources or commentaries on your interpretations of scripture.

No, I'm just a Christian who believes what the Bible says about men and women and doesn't get caught up in what the culture teaches which is mostly false. Men and women are not the same. They have different traits they look for in the spouses. Each have a sin nature that they need to resist.

Most Christians who are not familiar with the sub think that we are trying to incorporate RP philosophy on top of the Bible but that is furthest from the case. Because we use the term RP in the name and thus are "associated" with the secular RP, we're often biased against for stating the truth in other subs for just posting here.

> Is this isolated to reddit? Do you meet up with groups or attend churches with those who adhere to these same beliefs?

There's associated Christian blogs.

As far as I know, there are no groups or Churches specifically, but individual men may go back to their churches and start teaching actual Biblical truth in their small groups and ministries and even pastors. In some churches, some men have gotten kicked out or asked to stop.

And one good answer from the reddit founder about why it's not putting on an RP lens but taking off the cultural feminized lens.

> That's because very few believers have delved into the Bible's views on sexuality enough to produce content exclusively focused on it that aren't tainted by serious cultural baggage. This, of course, makes a lot of sense when you consider how it was culturally inappropriate to speak openly about explicit sexual matters for all but the last 75-ish years of the world's history. It is the feminization of the world that brought on the sexual revolution, so it's not surprising that the content that's been generated on the topic is feminized as well.
> To go from a different angle, if I were to write a "red pill commentary" on the Bible, it would look extremely close to a blend of many other commentaries already in existence. I'm not going to read the book of Nahum or Daniel and try to force some "RP lens" into how the book should be interpreted. But there are some passages where a proper interpretation has been lost on those who have been conditioned by culture to have a butterflies-and-rainbows view of who Jesus was and feminized notions of marriage and sexuality. That is:
> - We don't put on an "RP Lens" to Scriptural interpretation. We take off the "Feminized Lens" that everyone else is wearing, then interpret Scripture without that bias. This leads to many similar conclusions, but a few extremely significant different ones too.
> To be abundantly clear: there are MANY commentaries that will preach the same things we do. But again, one of our principles is relevant here: Watch what people do, not what they say. This is a twist on the "Do as I say, not as I do" motto that's become a popular joke about churches – because many pastors will not live out what they preach. In this sense, you may READ many commentaries that preach proper principles of marriage, sexuality, headship, etc. – but good luck finding a body that actually practices them. Congregations will pay lip service to Scripture, but conform their behaviors to culture.

The author deleted his post eventually, but our comments are still up. Also, some of the mods and regulars have started some roundtable video series on YouTube. Subscribe if you can, as YouTube only allows livestreams if you have 1k subscriptions or more, and I think a lot of Christian men and women would like being able to interact in real time.

Overall, I think it should be abundantly clear that the reason why we are all here is that the Church is conforming too much to the culture. That's why the majority of the New Testament was written to tell the Church to stop doing that. We are in this same boat.

My goal as a Christian is to lead by example to show single and married Christian men that doing what God says (in the Bible on the topic of marriage) is the right thing to do, and that it will produce good fruit. Real effective change is made through godly discipleship.

For instance, if you have any shame or discomfort talking publicly to Christians or non-Christians about the gospel then that may be an area to work on. But sadly, maybe a harder thing to do is to tell those same people that you're the head of your marriage and that your wife submits to you and why that is good.

Revisiting dread in the Bible with an anti-chivalry lens

June 18, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the previous (long) post on dread, I outlined several concepts surrounding dread in marriages.

To define dread, it's generally a disconcerting feeling that results in a woman/wife when her husband becomes more sexually attractive (often interpreted in a bad manner). Thus, when a husband becomes more sexually attractive (to his wife that was previously depriving him) she often has bad or disconcerting feelings because she was denying him and also often seeing other women having sexual attraction for him which can make her jealous.

In many cases, there are times when there are rational fears and irrational fears.

> Rational fear — fearing the consequences of when you do evil — is a healthy fear. This is the fear of God that we all have in our hearts. We should fear and tremble when we commit sin because God is Righteous/Just and abhors sin. Rational fear is an encouragement to do what is right, and to avoid doing what is wrong.
> Irrational fear — is unhealthy and to be eliminated. This is when you fear/worry about necessities as Jesus talked about with clothes and food or have an irrational fear about what "may" happen to you in marriage. Irrational fear is a discouragement. It is often to avoid doing what is right and to do what is wrong (such as [being afraid to speak] out for your faith [when in a crowd of people]).

In the case of a husband who understands he has shirked his leadership role knowingly or unknowingly, he begins to act as the head and taking responsibility for his own well being in accordance with God's mission for us.

- Spiritual (getting deeper into the Word, understanding and applying God's Biblical marital roles and responsibilities, prayer, meditation, fasting, making disciples, evangelizing, using gifts of the Spirit, etc.),
- Physical (working out to build muscle, losing fat, style, grooming, etc.), and
- Emotional/mental (having your mental and emotional state under control and not blurting things out, focused on exuding fruit of the Spirit in any interaction, not DEERing when leading (defend, excuse, explain, rationalize), etc.).

Aside from the most important aspect of obeying God, as a husband focuses on these things one of the biggest side effects we see is that this husband will often become more attractive to women, both his wife and other women. Single men and men in relationships become more attractive to women too.

When this happens, women or wives start to exhibit several rational fears that crop up.

For instance,

> - There is a rational fear of authority that is rooted in his position as the head. The rational fear of leadership from her husband results in increased sexual desire for him.
> - There is another rational fear of breaking trust of the dysfunctional trust relationship. While breaking trust is normally a bad thing, breaking trust in a dysfunctional relationship pattern is a good thing. This naturally results in additional fear as she "feels like she doesn't know who her husband is anymore." However, this broken trust must also be rebuild if you want unity in your relationship.

There is also rational fear that often manifests in the form of jealousy as other women tend to find a husband has his stuff together attractive (unlike their own in many cases).

One clear example of this is in the Scriptures where God's salvation to the Gentiles is to make Israel righteously jealous for Him.

> Romans 11:7 What then? What Israel is seeking, it has not obtained, but those who were chosen obtained it, and the rest were hardened; 8 just as it is written, "God gave them a spirit of stupor, Eyes to see not and ears to hear not, Down to this very day." 9 And David says, "Let their table become a snare and a trap, And a stumbling block and a retribution to them. 10 "Let their eyes be darkened to see not, And bend their backs forever."
> 11 I say then, they did not stumble so as to fall, did they? May it never be! But by their transgression salvation has come to the Gentiles, to make them jealous. 12 Now if their transgression is riches for the world and their failure is riches for the Gentiles, how much more will their fulfillment be! 13 But I am speaking to you who are Gentiles. Inasmuch then as I am an apostle of Gentiles, I magnify my ministry, 14 if somehow I might move to jealousy my fellow countrymen and save some of them. 15 For if their rejection is the reconciliation of the world, what will their acceptance be but life from the dead? 16 If the first piece of dough is holy, the lump is also; and if the root is holy, the branches are too.

Indeed, if other women are attracted to a wife's husband that is a good thing. If she is taking him for granted, being disrespectful or rebellious, she should be uncomfortable with that because she is doing wrong. These rational fears should be heeded and she should repent and change her behavior.

To be clear, I still personally do not advocate for going out and flirting with other women. But if you're attractive other women will start to gravitate to you, sometimes even if your wife is there. Whatever is not born of faith is sin (Romans 14), and it's almost always the case that intentionally flirting with other women when married is not born out of faith but revenge.

I made the connection the other day with the post on Why We Are Here that the reason why I think that even the Christians who know about intersexual dynamics still have a lingering sense of discomfort with dread is that they're so in-grained with chivalry that it feels bad or evil to make a woman "feel bad." Per the RPC founder:

> "We don't put on an "RP Lens" to Scriptural interpretation. We take off the "Feminized Lens" that everyone else is wearing, then interpret Scripture without that bias."

By taking off this feminized/chivalrous lens, we now see that dread / feeling bad is one of the necessary steps to repentance of sinful behavior. We have to recognize that we have done wrong and with that comes feeling bad and guilt. Then we have to give this wrong to Christ to repent and not do it again.

This also scares me because the feminist/chivalrous lens easily flies under the radar to even men who know about intersexual dynamics. It's also why Dalrock's observations about chivalry and game's anti-chivalry effect flew under the radar for so long.

To summarize: If you are focused on God's mission and obedience to God in all you do, any type of dread or feeling bad that a wife experiences is normal and good because it pushes her away from the comfortable feeling of doing wrong: denying her husband sex. It is the type that is necessary to hopefully help her to repent and change her behavior.

Jumping back to meet cute scenarios

June 28, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Previously on meet cutes, we looked at the commonness of having women be initially attracted to you. In general, I think that it's not that common for the majority of men, though there are always some percentage of the population that would be attracted.

Scott posted his stance on Sigma's blog and I think some of it is true and some of it isn't (my responses in regular, then some analysis).

> I recently tweeted my final position on this, which I suppose might lose me some support. I have been beating around the bush on the topic for a while, trying to be gracious, trying to sugar coat it.
> I believe that the red-pill content creators (the big ones, Christian or not) are full of crap if they believe that true, visceral attraction can be created in a woman who never had it for you in the first place. Like within the first meeting.
> Some of them have a conflict of interest in trying to create this fiction, because they sell books and have monetized youtube accounts. It is in their best interest to make this seem possible.
> But I have never seen a woman go from being luke warm about a guy and then become [truly] hot for him. She may settle and convince herself that she is attracted to a man who is the best she can get, but hot crazy in love–no.
> If you are not getting really obvious IOIs right from the start, move on. If that makes me "black pill" so be it. I want men to find women who cannot keep their hands of them, otherwise they risk terrible destruction later on.

This is generally more true for men who are primarily attracted based on physical appearance. Getting to know them better will not increase any visceral attraction toward them for the most part, except if they are capable of very seductive behavior.

I think the real question is how many women for that matter are marrying men that they don't have any attraction at all for?

There are certainly both men and women who are marrying with varying levels of attraction, but very few have absolutely no attraction. These are probably the ones where you have the wives cringing away from physical contact with their husbands in wedding photos. There are a few, but they're definitely not even a big minority.

If we're using a 0-10 scale where no attraction is a 0 and crazy love at first sight is a 10, there's a big range. The real question isn't if we can take a 0 to a 10… it's if we can take a 3-4 to a 7-8 in most cases. The "sort of maybe attractive when I'm ovulating" or "relatively dead bedroom but once were attracted to each other" to "I want to do him at least several nights a week." You don't have to be the 10 of "I want to bang like bunny rabbits all the time.”

In reply, Scott says:

> At first glance, the idea of a spectrum of attraction (woman—>man) strikes me as wishfully ascribing male thinking processes to women. This is understandable, and tempting. I am guilty of it from time to time. I just don’t think if you (a guy) are placed in the “meh” file you can ever get out. So I have never actually tried.

I’m not sure I agree with that.

There are definitely some reciprocal indications in terms of attraction itself. For instance, women can pick out attractive features on men just like men can pick out various attractive features on women. If they have particular unattractive features that knocks them down. Most people are not models so they have a relative mix of attractive or unattractive features.

In general, male sexuality operates on some lines of physical attractiveness: “would bang but wouldn’t date” to “would bang and date” to “would bang and marry.”

As we know though, female sexual strategy is relatively dualistic: AF/BB. Ideally, a man has both AF (dominant, handsome, charismatic, masculine, high status, successful leader,) and BB (money). Women’s hierarchy is AF+BB > AF > BB > None. Or if they are their own BB with a good job then it’s AF+BB > AF > None > BB.

It’s a spectrum and not a yes or no. Women who can’t marry an AF+BB or AF will try to get a man who has some AF with a lot of BB.. and so on down to only BB. But they will be less and less happy about it.

> Admittedly, one problem I have is looking through the lens of my own lifetime of experience, an N of one. In that myopic view, I have never seen this happen. In any relationship I ever developed, be it a ONS, a FB, or an LTR that lasted years, her attraction was always obvious and unmistakable, from the first few seconds save for my obtuse lack of sensing it. I have been told “dude, she is REALLY into you” on more than one occasion before I noticed these signs.
> An example from real life would be something like, I went to a party one time at a friends house and there was a girl there. I immediately found her really cute and started talking to her. There was ZERO indication from her that she was interested, so I moved on within a nanosecond. At that same exact party, I met another girl who would become my longest relationship to date at the time (it lasted about 2 years) and she made it really obvious that I had a green light. So, what I see from women is attraction that actually leads to something more is a dichotomous variable. “On” or “off.” Nothing in between. And you cannot slide along that scale like on a slide rule with them.
> On the other hand, men I think can do the spectrum thing. I have had several LTRs that developed over time with women for whom I had almost no regard for in the first place. Its usually a coworker, or someone you see on a regular basis > for whatever reason. She could be flashing giant orange flags that read “here I am come and approach. I will say YES” and I just move along with my life as if nothing is happening. Then, one day the thought flashes across your mind “I never noticed how cute her smile is.” And then you are toast. All of the sudden she is all you think about from the time you get up to the time you go to bed. You now have a crush on a girl who up until this point was just somebody you see as part of the scenery at work.

This is not strictly true. From what I’ve seen it depends on fairly specific circumstances to set men up to be successful when there is not a lot of initial attraction. We discussed some way back when here: understanding the friend zone and escaping it.

Lemme give you another example. I’m maybe average attractiveness (not unattractive but not attractive). A couple of my friends have called me a 6. I don’t normally get women to look at me twice. However, I’ve TAed a few classes where there are multiple TAs working together with a large group of students. What usually ends up happening is that a lot of the students (including the women) start to gravitate toward the more attractive men first. However, I know my stuff down pat, and I usually challenge the students and tease the girls. My professor later told me that a large majority of the students told me that I was their favorite TA. I was getting IOIs from the women whereas I had none before and even asked some out later and said yes.

This is the power of being in a position of relative authority and being charismatic with the students. I think it’s also true that first impressions are the most important, and it’s relatively rare(r) that a woman will like you sans not being attracted at first impression, but it’s been my experience that there are chances to subvert that notion but it has to be in specific circumstances.

YMMV. But I’ve had that happen several times throughout my life like I described in the meetcute article on my site (don’t know if you read that one, but this is not an isolated incident). Some other commenters chimed in saying it was the case for them too.

I think part of the issue is that Scott is very naturally attractive while many of the other men may not necessarily be that attractive. His experience is that he can just move onto women who are naturally attracted to him without understanding the various scenarios where women may not be attracted at first but may be more attracted over time under various scenarios.

Like I said in the other meetcute post, I could count on one hand the amount of women who were attracted to be naturally. However, I do generate some interest from women based on my relative position or status (TAing, when I was leading Bible studies, teaching others, etc), occasionally based on my personality (humor or charisma in certain areas), maybe some based on my physique (decently muscular but not overly so… it does increase as you become more and more muscular), and other common attraction factors like this.

Possible conclusion: Might be more common for your average joe to have more interest generated post-first meeting than someone who is naturally physically handsome. Most of my attraction from women seems to have been generated after the initial meetings. That said, overall interest is much more for someone who is naturally physically handsome so they have way more options.

In general though, I think the talk about extremes isn't too useful. For the most part, if you're single you want to work on the various areas (especially becoming muscular, style, etc.) to make good first attraction impressions and the rest builds from there. From here it's selecting the women who are interested and not wasting your time on the ones who aren't or somewhat interested. You shouldn't really deal with the ones who aren't anyway because it's too much investment for little results.

Most marriages there was at least some semblance of attraction (2-4 at minimum) and probably higher in the 5-8+ range at maximum (if a husband has gotten fat and lazy for example and dipped down into the 2-4 range then). Building that back up is a much easier task than someone who was never attracted. But again, it seems to be extremely rare that women would marry a man to whom they were never attracted.

Generating and handling attraction from the opposite sex

July 9, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Generally speaking, 9 times out of 10 if a single man or woman is hanging around another single of the opposite sex they're definitely attracted and interested in a relationship. Some are more obvious than others ("get a room" comments ensue), but this is generally true even if they are afraid to say it or acknowledge it. It doesn't matter if they're pre-teens, teens, 20s. 30s, and older. It's all the same.

Lest we get caught up in the apex fallacy, one has to be attractive in either looks and/or personality to generate such interest in the first place. For men it's almost always only looks though feminine personality sometimes plays a role. For women, it's a combination of looks and personality.

To summarize:

- Men's attraction is primarily based in a woman's looks (symmetrical face, long hair, low blemishes, clean and youthful looking skin, hourglass figure, etc.) and feminine dress (dresses, skirts, etc.). Personality is primarily a disqualifier (masculine, in your face, brash, ball-busting, etc.) though in rare cases can be an attracter (very feminine personalities like very encouraging, pure hearted, and such men will start to gravitate to, especially if they don't have any in their life).
- Women's attraction is based in a man's looks (tall, muscular, strong jaw line, etc. facial hair can be polarizing in a good way) and his personality. Personality can be an attracter (confidence, charisma, humor, etc.) or a disqualifer (weak, feminine, no backbone, unmasculine, wishy-washy, etc.).

I was watching a show with my wife the other day, and there were 2 men on the screen. One was very confident in his personality and posture and the other was sitting like he was nervous and when he spoke he also came off as nervous as well. My wife noticed the confident one as attractive, but when they came up again did a double take because the nervous one was actually more physically handsome to her.

Unlike men, this is one of the things where for women personality can make a man more attractive to her.

To dig a little deeper, I think we need to get into the minutiae from a couple comments on Sigma's post. First, mine:

> "women always have sex on the brain" – this is a variation of the apex fallacy.
> Men always have sex on the brain.. for women that are attractive to them.
> Women always have sex on the brain… for men that are attractive to them.
> The vast majority of men don't have sex on the brain with obese women. Same for women with the unattractive man: they'll call him a creep and avoid him.

> If a woman is hanging around a man and giving him any type of one-on-one or intimate attention she's definitely interested. But that also assumes a man can get such attention in the first place.

Second, Scott's:

> Yep. If you have never heard something like this:
> "The first time I met you I couldn't stop thinking about what those hands were going to feel like all over me" then I am really, truly sorry.
> This is the crux of the direction I am trying to take my stuff, for what its worth. I have like 159 twitter followers. About 50 some odd you tube watchers. I'm a nobody.
> I WILL NOT sell Charles Atlas style "how to pick up chicks" crap. I just can't bring myself to do it.
> My interest is in men who have given up their natural masculine traits and been smothered by a lifetime of blue pill conditioning. Rollo's advice is right about SO MANY important things. Including "you cannot negotiate desire." And then goes on to try to teach men to attract women using a monkey dance. Which in my opinion, is a form of negotiating desire.
> I think this is key. This is where things went wrong. All the stuff about the MMP is correct in that is artificially skewed buy factors in the environment. (Dating apps, messaging from the culture, etc). Wrenching back to rationality is going to take as long as it took to get here, with a ton of collateral damage.

I both agree and disagree to some extent.

There are some things that just naturally generate more attraction that comes with being excellent.

I've noticed in myself once I started to ingrain the Biblical marriage roles and responsibilities into my head even before I was married, I obviously came off as a more strong, masculine personality because I was doing what God commanded and not backing off on it unlike many of the Church husband who says with a nervous chuckle "gotta ask the boss" while his wife is starting or already a harpy.

Once I started taking working out and becoming much more muscular seriously, I started generating a lot more interest from women just because. Once I started taking my dress and style more seriously I generated more interest from women as well. No man who has worked out and gained 20-30 lbs of muscle and/or lost a similar amount of fat has not seen a difference in interest from women. This is just something that obvious.

Likewise, I think the goal has to be removing the femininzed and chivalric lens from our world view. Learning pick up lines and how to jump through hoops is obviously going to fail in the long run. A woman will start to pick up that your personality is not congruent with how you normally act.

However, a man that has removed the feminized and chivalric world view will not bend toward trying to be a people pleaser or try to jump through hoops to try to garner a woman's interest. Ironically, this ability to not care (e.g. be outcome independent) is what helps to drive at least some natural attraction.

In other words, be the best man you can be to serve God and see how much interest you get from women. This is a fluid process as one can almost always gain more muscles or be a stronger leader. For the majority of men they will be able to at least generate some interest, though how much at first sight is debatable.

Putting it together

Ideally, the hierarchy for men on going out with women would be something along the lines of:

1. See who is attracted to you
2. Apply godly selection criteria (e.g. true Christian, humble, teachable, etc.)
3. See who is the most attracted to you both physically and personality-wise after those criteria
4. If there are only women that are somewhat interested and not potentially all-in for marriage, then you have a hard choice to decide whether you want to stay single or go with it.

The interest you generate from women can change over time you change. As was said before, you can become a stronger, more confident, masculine (and godly man) and gain more muscle.

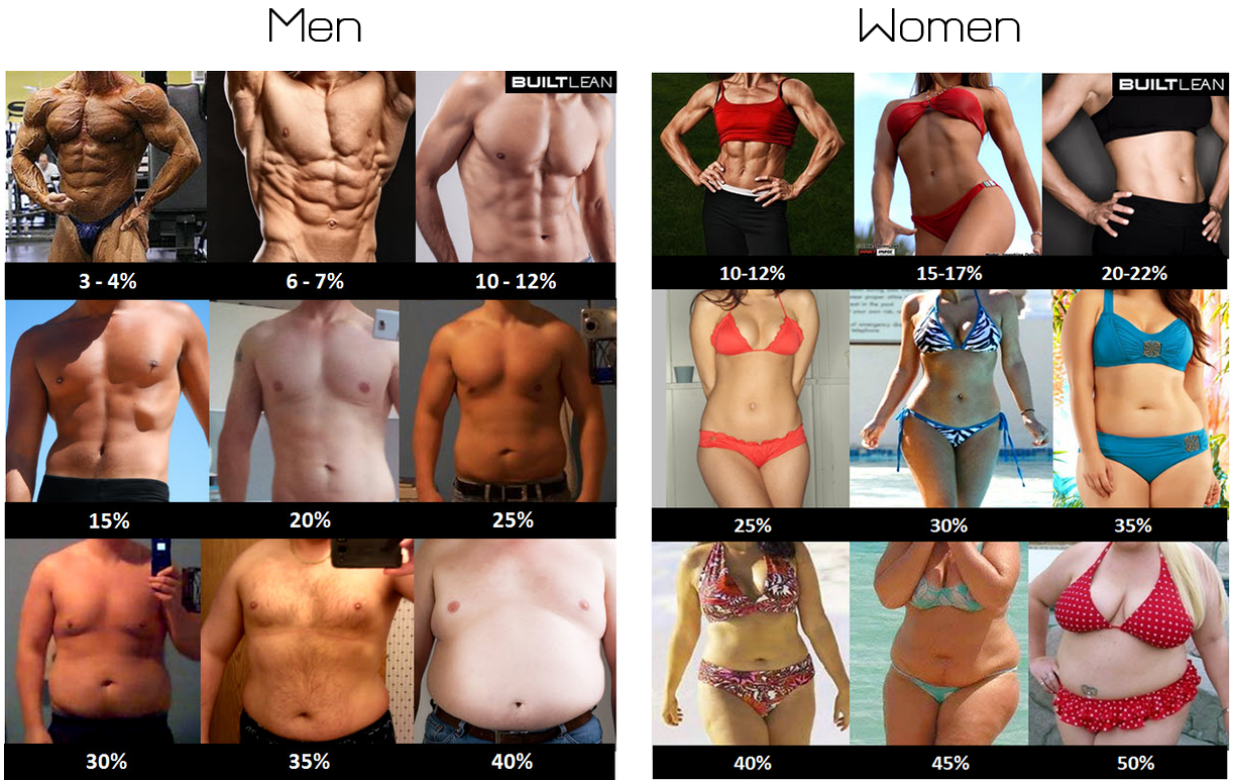
The caveat to that which I agree with Scott to the extent that the man you are when you meet a woman is likely the interest that she will perceive in you almost perpetually. In other words, having good pick up lines or jumping through hoops won't work. She's either attracted or not, and it's very difficult to change a first impression unless you drastically change over the course of knowing her (e.g. gain 20 lbs more muscle and she notices it).

Thus, if a woman is not interested or only marginally interested it's not worth your time to talk to her much at all. Keep focusing on being a better man so when the next woman comes around you are potentially more attractive and can generate a stronger initial interest.

Women’s attraction to men’s musculature

July 14, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since we were talking about this whole issue of generating attractiveness and meetcutes recently, let’s look at the practical side of things. A few years ago, I explored the way men used the numerical scale to estimate the attractiveness of a woman (going from a 3 to an 9 per most men).



I found this particularly enlightening because before that many of the women who were commenting did not think this woman moved so drastically on the scale such as maybe 2-3 points at max or laughably from one of the peanut gallery detractors from a 4 to a 5 (probably jealous).

One of the more important points to note is that this woman at 132 lbs is maybe a 6ish or so to a lot of men but it’s the last 12 lbs to the 124 lbs where she jumps to an 8. It’s basically an exponential increase once you hit a certain threshold.

I suppose it’s also time to explore the male side of things since we have been talking about how much a man can gain in attractiveness with certain amounts of muscle and body fat.

Example 1

Realistically speaking, when most men start working out for a few months they're in the range of 20-30% unless they are a lot more overweight than that.

You only really start to see women's interest start to pick up once you hit the 15% range and a lot more at the 10-12% range. Most men won't hit the 3-4% and 6-7% in this picture so it's not worth talking about, but like the example of the woman above you start to get exponential interest once the muscles start to "pop" out as you have a good about of muscle and low body fat.

Depending on starting point, your average non-overweight male can probably hit the 15% range after 6-9 months and the 10-12% range after 12-24 months. This requires dedicated effort to achieve which obviously most men will not see the results they are looking for unless they are committed. It usually also requires some amount of dedication nutrition toward gaining muscle and cleaning up the junk food from the diet.

Physical activity like cardio or hiking or any activity where you don't actively lift to get muscles will generally not affect your overall attractiveness unless there are other factors like you are an expert in your field or sport or famous. Previously, when I said workout I guess some men seemed to take it the way that if they were physically active that it would increase attractiveness. It doesn't. You must workout and gain muscle mass and lose body fat.

There's a reason why most romance novel covers feature a somewhat shirtless muscular man with little body fat.

As an aside, men tend to like women in the range of 15-25 depending on the man in the above chart on the right, so there is a lot of variation. Most men tend to like 18-20% range the most so a little more lean than the 20-22. YMMV. For your average non-obese women lifting weights this takes only 6-12 months of lifting weights and good nutrition.

Again, In the 13-19% range it looks like you workout some and you may see a little bit more interest, but you won't see anything substantial until you're starting to push in the the 11-12% and 8-10% range.

Part of this, and what I didn't mention in the first image is that you're almost never shirtless unless you're at a pool. Therefore, unless you have a rather significant gain in muscle mass (10-20 lbs or more) and improved style (form fitting shirts and not baggy t-shirts or other clothes) then it's unlikely that women are going to be able to see gains in muscle mass. It's sort of like a woman that hides her figure underneath frumpy clothes. If she started wearing more form fitting dresses and skirts (though still modest) then she would draw much more positive attention from men.

The previous examples looked at the differences at body fat with only one picture at a level, but there is a decent amount of variation in body types at any specific level. Here's some examples of men at certain percentages.

16-18 is starting to work out and gain some muscle. Maybe a little interest.

12-15 is “Ohh, you workout seriously..” and they might start to feel your muscles.

10-11 and lower is where you really get the “Yummy” from women in my experience and talking to men who also workout. There is significantly more interest from the general population of women than any of the other two above.

Conclusion

Most men would stand to gain at least 20 lbs of muscle and cut their body fat down to the < 15% range to start generating significant attraction in women if they are not naturally handsome. Unless you’re very naturally handsome like Scott and others, improving attractiveness via physical musculature is probably the best way to make a good first impression.

However, it does require usually at least a year or more of dedicated time and effort. But the good part is that lifting weights is not only about looks, it builds good habits, a healthy body, and discipline and mental fortitude which help in a lot of other areas of life including spiritually. They’re all interconnected.

I won’t claim to rate how these men change from say 4-5 on a 10 scale to a 7-8 or something since I’m not a woman, but it would be nice to hear from the few women who read the blog what they think of the various changes in body fat and attractiveness (ignoring the face, obviously).

No, your congregation does not preach “biblical headship”

August 12, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I’m still here but have a lot of real life stuff going on.

The creator of the RPC recently posted on this, so I’m sharing a part of it. Definitely give it a read if you have time as it’s good.

> “Headship” as a concept is given a lot of lip service, but few people actually practice it the way Christ does with the Church. I can’t count the number of people who tell me how “red pill” their ~~church~~ congregation is, or how “biblically grounded” the teachings are on marriage and relationships, while being exactly the opposite.
> KNOWING THE STRUCTURES
> I believe a large reason for this stems from inappropriately understanding the views on marriage expressed by different congregational structures. Here they are:
> 1. Headship: The view that the man is the head of his household. What he says goes.
> 2. Complementarianism: The view that God has given men and women different roles to fill. Among the man’s roles are the right to have the final say on disputed matters in the home.
> 3. Egalitarianism: The view that husband and wives are on equal footing with regard to all roles, including decision-making authority.
> 4. Feminism: The view that women should be empowered in the home to do as they please and that men should support them in the direction the woman chooses to go, unless it would otherwise amount to direct sin.
> Very few congregations actually claim the title of “feminist” when it comes to discussing marriage roles, as they realize this cultural ideology is in direct opposition to Scripture, so most of them will take the feminist agenda and mask it in the form of egalitarianism or complementarianism. Egalitarian-feminists will push the notion that a wife’s equality with her husband prohibits him from exercising authority over her, empowering her to have an equal say, which is virtually always interpreted that her “equal” say should win because if he wins then he’s just a patriarchal monster. Complementarian-feminists will pay lip-service to male authority in the home, but instead redirect that authority in ways that serve the wife. If there’s a dispute, the husband would be “ungodly” if he were to exercise his authority in a way that displeases his wife or fails to give her what she wants. As such, the man’s authority in the home is merely that of a puppet figurehead, while the wife truly runs the show. Feminist structures > incorrectly reflect to the world that the bride (Church) has authority over her husband (Christ) either by direct authority or obligational exercise of authority.

> True egalitarianism (of the non-feminist variety) is still unbiblical and dangerous. Jesus directly preaches that no kingdom can have two leaders, or else it will be divided. Married people are meant to be ONE, not divided. The only ways true egalitarians can resolve conflicts are: (1) by compromising, which inherently means that even if one party is right, the right answer must be set aside for the compromised conclusion, or (2) taking turns (usually couched in "loving the other enough to let him/her have this one"). Egalitarianism incorrectly reflects that Christ and the Church are equal in authority in the relationship.
> True complementarianism (of the non-feminist variety) is another beast entirely. Even up to 3-6 months ago I would have identified as a complementarian purist (meaning: the feminist expressions of it are eradicated). But I have since come to realize that it is flawed even in its fundamental ideology, which is that God has assigned certain roles for men and women to follow. While many complementarians will focus on the authority dynamic as the "hot topic" to discuss, and thus use the word "headship" to describe aspects of their theology, the reality is that the full doctrine of complementarianism insists on many other role distinctions that men and women must align with. These roles are often not found directly in Scripture as obligations; rather, they are cultural norms that have an imputed theology about them, such as the man going off to work his 9-5 job while the wife stays at home to cook and clean. The complementarian view looks at the way men and women are created and attempts to deduce what God must have intended for men and women to do with regard to the family unit and within the body of Christ, while ultimately having little Scriptural support for the conclusions reached.

There's another 2/3rds that isn't quoted, so go check it out.

Overall, I've been harping on this for a while. Complementarians are a covert hybrid of feminism and the Bible, while egalitarians are more overt. Complementarians think they are doing exactly what the Bible says, but in reality they are deceived. One only needs to actually look at the Ephesians 5 analogy between Christ and the Church which contradicts a lot of complementarianist beliefs. Christ is not a "final decision maker if the Church disagrees;" we follow Him in everything.

His post does a good job of explaining in a different way than I've done in the past which can be helpful for some.

Disciplecord and general well being

September 2, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Hope everyone is doing well!

A bunch of the guys on RPChristians and some other places have started a place for discipleship for both men and women on Discord, so if you need a place for iron sharpening iron during this COVID craziness there is a place to help you with it.

https://discord.gg/Z6wBMJD

This is mainly for people who are serious about discpling and being discipled, so if you want to participate you have to put in the work. Here's some of the intro stuff you gotta put in to be accepted:

> Introduction Template: Personals?
> • Name (first name is OK):
> • (If you are from Reddit) Username:
> • Who introduced you to DiscipleCord?
> • Age/Gender:
> • Location: General location, country, state etc.
> • Relationship status
> • What do you do?
> • How are you taking care of your body? What are your health/fitness goals? Where are you in that journey? Are you willing to improve in these areas?
> • Occupation/Education/Are you satisfied with your income and career?
> • What you do in your free time: Why Disicplecord?
> • Are you looking to be discipled? Or looking to disciple someone else with the support of this group?
> Rate yourself in the following. This will be used to help appropriately place you in discipleship.
> • How assured in your salvation are you? Has Jesus saved you? (X/10)
> • Have you been trained in a particular method of studying and interpreting Scripture?
> • How much quiet time/prayer do you spend with the Lord? (X/10)
> • How successful are you at prioritizing scripture memorization? (X/10)
> • How many unsaved people do you speak to about Christ in a week? (Less than 5, about 5, more than 5)
> • How strong is your spiritual community? (X/10?)

Also, hope everyone is doing well. Been caught up with family stuff, but I should have some more time to make some more posts soon.

If you guys want to catch up on life in the comments be my guest!

Modeling is the primary form of headship

September 3, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This isn't a new thing, but it's just one thing I've been realizing more and more when you see discipleship in action.

In general, most people only believe words when they are backed up with consisted and relevant action. This goes for a husband and father modeling for his wife and kids respectively. The same goes for any type of discipling young single and married men. They want to see that you practice what you preach and how effective it is in practice.

Even if you don't say a word much of the time people are picking up on what you are doing and why. This especially goes for children of all ages when I see a lot of families interact at Church. You can tell which young men and women are going to likely be more serious in their faith and the ones that are just there because.

Now, to divert this back to the Bible, we can see that Jesus' modeling for the disciples (Christ and the Church) was the primary way that He taught them. He modeled everything for them: explained and showed them how God was working through His life. He taught them. Then He gave them a chance to experience it for themselves by sending out the 70, and eventually when His ministry was coming to an end He send them out to do it themselves in the Great Commission. The same is true of a husband and wife and a father and children.

In terms of rebellious wives and children, this is ultimately the way you will be able to positively influence them in a godly manner. The focus must be on sustaining your own Biblical roles and responsibilities first, to the utmost of your abilities. This removes any potential sort of hypocrisy from your life such that God can work through that. If they're still rebellious then that's on them.

Such good modeling is really built up in the small things. Be faithful with the small things such as getting in time with God, operating in the fruit of the Spirit at all times (even when it's hard), running from temptation, and focus on doing the right thing (putting on the new), and that builds up into a consistent witness that can help to change others around you. Obviously, being discipled by those more mature in the faith does help substantially as they can more readily point out blind spots and areas to focus on.

For the single men, this is the foundation of any marriage, so it is important to develop these things while dating (or even before dating) as you are the leader of yourself first before you are the leader of a woman.

Frame is no frame without a mission

September 5, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ran across this question on one of the RP reddits.

> For example, a guy I know from college went into a STEM field. He is now married and working a steady 9-5 job that he likes. His wife owns a photography business, and he has become a significant partner in her business, assisting with shoots and stuff in his free time. Additionally, they are raising one biological child and several foster children, and any free time not spent with his wife's business is completely consumed raising the kids. Unfortunately, I don't know him well enough to get his honest opinion of the situation, but does this sound like a man with a solid frame? Or is he living in his wife's frame?
> To put it another way, what would have to be true for you to be the guy in this situation and not be living in your wife's frame? Is it a matter of him making the choice vs her making the choice? ("You run your business and I'll help out") Or is being a "helper" of this sort not acceptable in any circumstance?

Frame is not what you do. It's the meaning behind what you are doing. Frame is driven by mission and purpose.

If a man thinks it's important in this stage of life to focus on growing multiple streams of income (one of which is growing his wife's started business) and raising the kids in a godly manner to leverage that for God in both short and long term that's a great thing.

If a man is pressured by his wife into doing stuff he doesn't want to do but does it anyway, that's a bad thing.

One is putting God first and being the head and the other is going against that.

If we want to understand this more thoroughly we can go back to some of Jesus' analogies. It's out of the heart the mouth speaks or that we do anything. There's many people in Church that are there that "do the right thing" but their hearts are not in it or they are doing it for the wrong reasons (e.g. they are fearful of going hell and trying to work for their salvation). If we contrast this to a true believer, they would know that they are justified through their faith in Jesus and that God wants us to do good works to model His love for us (e.g. Romans 5:8 God shows His love for us in this, that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us).

Of course, we can generally judge a tree by it's fruit, but it's always a good thing to dig into the underlying motivations and desires of why we are trying to do something. Does it align with God's Word or not? Are we living in fear or are we living in God's peace and joy?

We always want to align with God and the right things for the right reasons. The right thing for the right reasons are always grounded in mission and purpose. Without those two things, you are going to be blown here and there by the wind as motivations easily change without that deep seated purpose driving everything.

A lament for men

September 14, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A poignant post from Instagram that resonates with a lot of young men.

> A lament. NYC is probably the worst city to live in for mid-20s/30s evangelical Christian guys. Now I understand why more and King's College guys are leaving the city a few years after graduating, esp. the Alpha types. After 14 weeks of reading approx 1800 pages, writing about 70 pages of critical thinking, and 42 hours of discussion about what contributes to men really thriving—studying circa 1800 to the present—the guys in my masculinity course last semester saw just how utterly deficient NYC churches are at building up the fellas. If you don't read the history or know the data you probably can't see it. But we're in trouble. Ladies will ask, "where are all the good men?" Answer: wherever churches are providing unique opportunities for men to be sharpened by other men—for men, by men. And NCS doesn't even come close to what we read in the books this semester. A proper group needs at least 3-6 hours per week. I actually felt bad for my students in my masculinity course at the end because there isn't a church in New York that I could recommend for them to keep growing and learning about how to be better men and love well from other men.
> I've been researching this topic for about 17 years and it all came together last semester. The best class on this I've ever taught. I was depressed when the semester ended. Haha. All of the women marrying guys in this class are going to have great lives. They have no idea! The data shows that a woman's quality of life is significantly improved if the man in her life are been spending time with other men learning how to love well from other guys, esp. older guys. The best men's groups in Manhattan and Brooklyn are all non-religious ones. Last Friday, I spent about 5 hours on the phone trying to figure out what to do about this with a theologian and a pastor. One Manhattan pastor, highlighting how pathetic it is for guys in NYC, ended with a deep sigh, "What are we going to do?" It's taken me 17 years to get my head around some solutions so maybe one church may have some stuff soon, in the meantime most guys will flatline, increasingly become friendless, and cement themselves in domesticated passivity. Settling is just easier.

This is no surprise to us, but it seems that at least some Christian men are coming around to these ideas apart from these parts. It is still quite sad though as many men are still floundering.

There's a good reason why Jesus took a core group of 70, 12, and 3, and 1 disciples for Himself, and building the fellowship, friendship, and camaraderie between men really does produce fruitfully via iron sharpens iron.

Single or married you should always strive to get some good and mature Christian men in your life and do life together.

Bible Translations and Study

September 25, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Recent video where Mike Licona and Mike Wallace talk about the best Bible translations.

- Study & Accuracy: NET
- Readability & Accuracy: NIV (Not sure which version?)
- Understated elegance: ESV
- Rich wording: KJV and REB (1989)
- Ecumentical: NRSV

Overall, I did like the discussion on the differences between translations and accuracy and some of the problems with the various translations. In particular, if you are looking for a new Bible, the NET seems to be the best in consensus especially since the NET has a ton of footnotes where the translators discuss why they translated things in the way they did and offer the alternative translations for passages that may exist.

If you're looking for a new good study Bible, the NET seems like a good one.

I did post before that the newer NIV has gone to more gender/sex neutral language.

Here's a 32 page analysis of the changes 2011 changes of the NIV which is why a bunch of the changes may be questionable.

> "We expect that evangelical feminists who claim that women can be pastors and elders will eagerly adopt this 2011 NIV because it tilts the scales in favor of their view at several key verses. This is especially true because the new NIV changes the primary verse in the debate over women's roles in the church.
> - 1984 NIV 1 Timothy 2:12 I do not permit a woman to teach or to have authority over a man; she must be silent.
> - 2011 NIV 1 Timothy 2:12 I do not permit a woman to teach or to assume authority over a man; she must be quiet. (same as TNIV, but with modified footnotes)
> Evangelical feminists will love this translation because in one stroke it removes the Bible's main barrier to women pastors and elders. As soon as a church adopts the 2011 NIV, the debate over women's roles in that church will be over, because women pastors and elders can just say, "I'm not assuming authority on my own initiative; it was given to me by the other pastors and elders." Therefore any woman could be a pastor or elder so long as she does not take it upon herself to "assume authority."
> The NIV's translation committee says that the translation "assume authority" is "a particularly nice English rendering because it leaves the question open." In > other words, “assume > authority” could be understood in two different ways: a negative way (meaning “wrongly assume authority on one’s own initiative”) or a positive way (meaning “begin to use authority in a rightful way”). But in saying this the NIV translators fail to understand the full force of what they have done: They have given legitimacy to a feminist interpretation that did not have legitimacy from any other modern English translation (except the discontinued TNIV).

See the above link for all of the noted changes. In particular, there is a lot of changes to avoid using male pronouns, father, brother, man, son and other things in the NT. Same with the OT.

Aaron Renn's The Manosphere and the Church

September 28, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's a series of articles going over at Theopolis as some of you are aware on various aspects of the manosphere. The first in the series is Aaron's The Manosphere and the Church. Currently, there are another 3 out, but I'm going to take them one by one in the series as I think some more are coming and I can't cover all of the content in a single post.

Aaron runs the Masculinist Newsletter so sign up and support him if you can.

> It's long been noted that Christian practice in America skews female, particularly among singles. "Where have all the good men gone?" is a familiar refrain in churches. Economist Lyman Stone at the Institute for Family Studies looked at various surveys and found that indeed there are fewer single men than women in most American denominations. This imbalance is particularly acute in black and mainline churches, but also affects evangelical congregations. (Data from Barna suggests this gap may be closing, but only because more women are now abandoning the faith).
> Various books have been written on this topic including David Murrow's Why Men Hate Going to Church and Leon Podles' The Church Impotent. But British academic Callum Brown puts forth the most compelling view in his book The Death of Christian Britain. In it Brown notes a shift in public perception of piety around 1800 from a male register to a female register. He points out, for example, how angels shifted from being portrayed as primarily male to being portrayed mostly as female around that time.

Those of you familiar with Renn's work (newletter #3 I believe) know that one of the major shifts in the West toward men bad and women good have come from Chivalry and subsequent more shifts in the 1800s at least in Britain which is where the US and others derive a lot of its thought about the sexes.

Renn goes into a lot more detail with the pastors showing how different they treat men and women and husband and wives sin. No need to rehash that here.

> Consider this example: it's well known that women initiate the bulk of divorces – around 70% of them depending on the source. Have you ever heard or read this in any Christian marriage book or sermon series? I haven't.
> British academic Valerie Hobbs published a recent study "The discourse of divorce in conservative Christian sermons" in which she undertook a linguistic analysis of 31 of the most popular sermons on divorce posted at Sermon Audio, primarily from Reformed Baptist and Presbyterian ministers. She found that they discuss divorce within a male-initiated framework:

> “In summary, despite the fact that femaleness was, as mentioned earlier, a significant semantic concept in the divorce corpus, women are framed primarily as receivers of divorce rather than initiators. Although in most cases of divorce in the United States, women initiate divorce, pastors in the corpus in this way represented divorce as a largely male action.”

> Hobbs is a feminist scholar, but recognizes the divergence between what male pastors speak and reality.
> Listening to how the church talks about and treats men, especially relative to women, is it any wonder that men with even a modicum of self-respect often choose not to subject themselves to this kind of mistreatment by coming to church?
> Secular men’s figures, by contrast, often sympathize with men. While they can be tough and challenging at times in their own right, they usually appear to desire to build men up and provide practical tips for self-improvement, not beat downs. That’s a huge difference right there.
> Pastors hiding critical facts about gender relations, such as the data on who files for divorce, points to another reason why men have turned to secular men’s gurus. That is, those secular figures are more likely to tell men the often unpopular truth they need to know in critically important areas rather than leave them in the dark or even lie to them.

This is pretty much right on the money, and I’ve never really seen this discussed much at least in Churches. Sometimes pastors will get it right by discussing headship, but they almost never preach directly about the wifely side of things: submission and divorce.

In particular, the divorces are not actually for adultery or even things like physical abuse. They’re because the wife is unhappy (or rather, unhaaaaaapy as we like to call it).

> The manosphere largely died out over the last few years. The only original major figure still active is Rollo Tomassi at his Rational Male site. The main sizable group left is one that was very small back then but has grown much larger – and sometimes violent – today: the “incel,” or “involuntary celibate” community of low status young men extremely unhappy that they are unable to have sex with or go out on dates with women.
> The manosphere dissipated for a number of reasons. In part, it was because they finished mining their territory and had little new to say. Also, people age out of pickup artistry, requiring a perpetual refreshing of the gurus teaching it. But most importantly, it’s because the manosphere fused with and morphed into political movements, particularly Trumpism and right-wing politics, where the red pill has been absorbed as just one of several tenets. Red pill thinking has also made its way into most of the more mainstream men’s figures like Jordan Peterson. They are drawing on the manosphere whether they acknowledge it or not. Though the manosphere per se is mostly gone, the bulk of today’s popular internet men’s > figures are using manosphere ideas which are now widely diffused in various forms.

I do think Renn is off on this front. As Sigma mentions, most of the main bloggers may have gone silent, but there are others filling the void as well. Roosh has turned his own website into articles on the "godpill."

Largely, Rollo has shifted most of his focus on doing youtube livestreams as opposed to focusing his effort on writing. Many other have followed in this wake. Same with the RP Christians reddit. Discord and other sites are growing. The up and coming generation is not really a blogging generation as much as was popularlized by sites like WordPress and their predecessors. They're mostly focus on engaging social media through video such as youtube, livestreams, or direct communication.

Blogging is relatively impersonal, and human long for that human connection especially when as being out there is getting more lonely. Not to mention COVID. So I'm not surprised to see engagement going the way of actual more human interaction. It's also why conventions have garnered some interest.

> Nevertheless, the church has failed men, not just the ones who turned away from it, but in many cases even the ones who joined. I have a great deal of respect for the ministries of many of these churches and pastors. Some like John Piper have made a positive impact on me personally. But we must be honest that they are badly off base and very uncharitable in this area.
> The church has adopted a very skewed approach that improperly berates and belittles men, and has badly misled them with teachings that just aren't true. Those might be strong statements, but not nearly as strong as the anti-male sermons that these pastors themselves preach. There's been a lot written about the way the church has abused and harmed women, but the church has abused and harmed a lot of men too.
> This situation must be fixed. I started the Masculinist on a mission to make that happen, to speak truth while holding firm to Christian teaching, to reach and build men up not just tear them down, and to reform the church's deeply flawed approach to men. A number of others have also been speaking up in their own ways, which is very welcome. We as Christians have to start loving men, and have the courage to speak the truth in this area that the church has heretofore lacked.

I do think that all men who are aware and have compassion for men have been treated feel the same way. I've already seen some of the younger generation take hold of learning about godly masculinity and attraction and have started running with it.

It seems to me that it's often the case that the older generations in the Church (40-70s) tend to have a harder time understanding what the problems are. Perhaps they are ingrained in their ways. Perhaps because they did not live through dating in the last 10-20 years.

Their mind is set on egalitarianism or complementarism and can’t see past these made up things to what headship and authority truly are, so they can’t advise men to do what they are called to do in marriage which can possibly help them turn it around. They’re mired in the failure of divorces (sometimes their own) with no clue how to help men but parrot the same old thing that fails time and time again.

But, as we know, there is hope.

Complementarianism – holding to a form of godliness but denying its power

September 30, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Popped into my head today as I made some more Biblical connections today. This includes one of the classic Scriptures that accurately points out various ills in the Church and society today.

> 2 Timothy 3:1 But realize this, that in the last days difficult times will come. 2 For men will be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, arrogant, revilers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, 3 unloving, irreconcilable, malicious gossips, without self-control, brutal, haters of good, 4 treacherous, reckless, conceited, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, 5 holding to a form of godliness, although they have denied its power; Avoid such men as these 6 For among them are those who enter into households and captivate weak women weighed down with sins, led on by various impulses, 7 always learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. 8 Just as Jannes and Jambres opposed Moses, so these men also oppose the truth, men of depraved mind, rejected in regard to the faith. 9 But they will not make further progress; for their folly will be obvious to all, just as Jannes's and Jambres's folly was also.

v5 – Complementarians espouse headship but deny the power of the authority of headship. In the Koine Greek, the will of exousia (authority) is represented by dunamis (power). In other words, they hold up headship which is clearly godly (1 Corinthians 11, Ephesians 5) but deny its power.

v6 – This allows pastors and all who hold to such views to butt into marriages with lip service to headship, but tell the husband to be the wife's servant-"leader" which really means slave to her feelings (various impulses). Bible studies become about finding ways to avoid submission (whatabout-ism to captivate weak willed women).

v7 – Which all ends up in learning about the Bible but never able to come to the knowledge of the Truth. They think they are doing the right thing by following Jesus in terms of headship, but are in reality doing the exact opposite and wrong thing which leads to more marital dysfunction and divorce. Much like the blindness that many of the religious leaders of Jesus' days had to His parables.

It's honestly pretty crazy how well that matches up to complementarianism and explains why it's bad.

Alastair Robert's The Virtues of Dominion

October 2, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The second post in the series. I'll link my post

1. Aaron Renn on The Manosphere and the Church. My post.
2. Alastair Robert on The Virtues of Dominion.

Let's get into it.

> The human calling is not a gender-neutral one. By the very nature of the way that God created man and woman, the weight of the fivefold human commission—to be fruitful, multiply, fill the earth, subdue it, and exercise dominion over all of its creatures—would, though collaborative, fall very differently upon each sex's shoulders.
> In part this can be witnessed in the different ways that God creates the man and the woman in Genesis 2. The man is created in response to the need of the earth for a man to till it, while the woman is created as a helper to the man in their common human vocation, as one who will bring what he initiates to glorious completion. The man is created out of the earth for a task of mastery that chiefly moves out into it; the woman is later created from the side of the man for a task that principally focuses upon the bearing of human life and developing the realm of human community. The contrasting foci of their callings is further witnessed by their respective judgments after the Fall.
> Relating Genesis 2 to Genesis 1, we might observe that the task of the man chiefly focuses upon the forming tasks that we find on the first three days: the tasks of taming, naming, structuring, ordering, dividing, and ruling. The task of the woman, by contrast, chiefly focuses upon the filling tasks that we find on the second three days: the tasks of filling, establishing life and communion, making possible succession and delegation of rule to children, glorifying, and perfecting. While both clearly assist the other in their respective callings, and neither is exclusively concerned with their own more immediate tasks, there are manifest differences of focus.

Agreed with the first paragraph. It is straight out of Genesis 1:28 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth."

The second paragraph reaches a bit. God creates man in the garden for a few specific purposes:

Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die.”

- Cultivate and keep the garden
- Obey God’s commandment(s)

Principally, Adam is able to be fruitful (cultivate and keep the garden) as well as subdue and take dominion (take dominion over and name the animals). However, he is unable to fulfill the multiply and fill without a helper. His helper can obviously help with the former, but is unneeded, but definitely needed for the latter.

To parallel this to Jesus and His Great Commission, we have the same thing for evangelism and making disciples. The reason why Paul designates singleness as preferred is that all of the commands (Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over) can be done without marriage now as winning and discipling people for Christ is also multiplying and filling the earth.

In principle, I agree with glorious completion, at least in some of the tasks. Developing the realm of human community is true in the perspective of being fruitful and multiplying. Though this can be misinterpreted.

> When I say that a husband must regularly “earn” privileged access to the marital bed, I mean that a husband owes his wife the confidence, affection, and emotional support that would lead her to freely give herself to her husband in the act of sex…. Put most bluntly, I believe that God means for a man to be civilized, directed, and stimulated toward marital faithfulness by the fact that his wife will freely give herself to him sexually only when he presents himself as worthy of her attention and desire. -Albert Mohler

Renn notes of Mohler in the previous post to where women civilize men which is not an uncommon thought in the Christian community. I believe Driscoll had some similar comments on such.

The third paragraph makes this more clear, though similar wording can give some issues. Paul specifically talks about how woman is the glory of man, though not in perfecting in the way we think of it. However, you could arguing if you are using the NT definition of perfection (e.g. Matthew 5) it means completeness to which I would agree.

> Modern Christians, accustomed to thinking in terms of abstractions and ideologies and assuming that social reality flows chiefly down from ideas and rules, tend to be unmindful of the degree to which our social reality is determined by material conditions—by bodies, by geography, by resources, by technologies, by economic conditions, and many other such things that constitute the under-considered material fabric of our reality. The sexual order of society largely flows ‘up’ from such realities, rather than ‘down’ from abstract ideas.
> When considering God’s purpose in creation, we should consider not only his explicit commands or commissions, but also what he built into our > natures—natural law—not least because Scripture itself often appeals to it. As the Apostle Peter observes, women are the 'weaker vessel': men were created considerably stronger, not merely in terms of their typical raw physical strength as individuals, but also in their ability to create and exert social and material power in male groups. The biblical teaching principally concerns a divinely established empirical reality that must be honored and upheld; it was never simply chosen or even divinely commanded—man is the head. The prescriptive teaching of Scripture is grounded upon a descriptive account of difference.

This is true but it is important to understand why.

Like I've discussed in some of my attraction posts, marriage is an earthly institution as there is no marriage in heaven. By parallel, this also means that the institutions that God created in the beginning are earthly institutions meant for earthly purposes. In other words, creation is constrained by the rules (natural law) that God implemented within its nature.

Women being "the weaker vessel" is logically consistent with the ordering of creation and the purpose of her being a helper. All NT truth builds on the foundations of the OT truth that we observe.

> While it may be impolite to dwell overmuch on the fact (and contemporary society deems it pathological), men create, possess, and symbolize power much more directly in the world than women (women themselves exercise very considerable power and influence, albeit different and typically less direct modes of it). This is a reality that, though ideologized, institutionally enforced, and socially inculcated in various ways, is a stubborn fact of the world as God created it, replicated across countless cultures in different times. In those tasks that relate to human dominion—in gaining mastery over our physical environment, in the task of invention, in the establishment and exercise of political power, etc.—men's pre-eminence is everywhere self-evident.
> Take a moment to look around you right now and consider the degree to which you live in an immediate environment, and in a world more generally, that has been created by men's exertion of dominion over nature in all of its aspects, as well as by fundamentally male power structures and endeavors in human society—in politics, resource extraction, trade, infrastructure, construction, invention, science, technology, and a host of other areas. While much is said about the 'empowerment' of women, it is important to note that empowerment typically presupposes a party with more immediate possession of power authorizing the empowered party to wield some of it.

Yup, men build civilization.

> I think women's place in churches is rather more complicated than Renn's account suggests. While women are placed on a pedestal, not every woman is placed on such a pedestal. Many women's experience in churches is one of the > loneliness and the self-alienation involved in struggling to maintain the façade of having it all together that the pedestal requires, of the unpleasant ways in which women jockey for the limited space on that pedestal, of the painful experience of falling from it, or of the experience of being conspicuously denied a place upon the pedestal by virtue of being unmarried, divorced, or childless. The grass is not necessarily greener on the other side.

> While it can be an inhospitable place for many women, contemporary evangelical church life is nonetheless chiefly ordered around the women at its heart. The good man in such a context must greatly tone down his manliness. Headship is mostly characterized as a beholden-ness to the women and children in men's lives. Men are to be the obliging mall cops upholding this domesticated realm and taming other men for operation within it. The man is much more figurehead than actual head.

Yes and no. While it is true that women do have some semblance of responsibility placed on them (e.g. virginity, modesty, propriety, etc.), it is definitely not to any of the level of degree that men have placed on them. The facade of having it together is the cultural milieu of the feminism rather than the Church, although we must admit that the world has highly infected the Church.

Yes, if you are single or divorced it can be an issue of mostly other women looking down on you in your Church, but if it comes up as a main Church topic such as through a sermon or message than even with men (or women) preaching they're only going to say that the single women are daughters of the King or that the single mothers need help. Despite often times if they are living in sin. Heck, as we've seen before, single mothers get credit for being fathers too on Father's day.

Men, on the other hand, are just demonized in general whether in small talk or through the Church pulpit. Maybe they get a golf clap on the occasional Father's day.

> Where the church has particularly failed is in effectively addressing man as the head. For many Christians, the concept of male headship is a culturally embarrassing biblical teaching that needs either to be rejected (the more popular egalitarian option) or qualified to virtual extinction (which is more common among complementarians). Concepts such as that of the 'servant leader' have been employed to soften the teaching. Where the concept is most emphasized, it can be attended more by blame than by honor.
> What the manosphere and others of the teachers that Renn identifies recognize is the importance of manliness, of the traits that make a man apt for the exercise of dominion in various spheres of his life. A man who can act with mastery, competence, assertion, confidence, honor, courage, strength, nerve, and the like—especially if he acts as a skilled possessor of a behavioral repertoire, which > he can deploy with discrimination, discernment, and self-mastery—compels respect as a man. Such traits, well-exercised, are manifestly attractive to women. Yet churches provide little training in, contexts for the formation or exercise of such traits, or purpose for their employment. This neglect results from and perpetuates a neglect of the broader, outward-oriented task of dominion. It also means that many Christian young men will turn to pagans to learn manly virtues, often picking up perverse notions of masculinity that glorify lording over others, or despising the weak, in the process.

> The pre-eminent dominion given to the man in creation pre-existed the creation of the woman. The purpose of man's dominion includes yet greatly exceeds the end of serving and building up the woman. To exercise such dominion effectively and appropriately, man needs to grow into various forms of mature manliness, requiring developing a constellation of qualities and virtues beyond the narrowly moral. A man who is kind, yet lacks strength of will and character is deficient in virtue—which limits even his capacity for true kindness.
> The failures of the church in this area are related to dysfunctions in the way that its own life is ordered. If the church largely neglects the task of dominion and the development of truly Christian forms of power and mission in the wider society and mostly focuses on the internal concerns of its communities, it is unlikely that it will be a place that produces mature Christian manliness. In such communities, 'male headship' loses its outward orientation and tends to become either oppressive or pathetic. The man functions chiefly as the helper of the woman, rather than vice versa, as God established things in creation.

Excellent analysis, albeit it needs to be qualified with our ultimate mission: The Great Commission.

> While women may favor manly traits in their partners, they generally do not favor such traits in the men in their immediate groups as individuals. It is one thing for a woman to have a strong and virile man in her corner (that can represent an increase in her agency); it is quite another to have to compete against such men. Nevertheless, because male groups are powerful and good at creating power, women desire empowerment from them. Contemporary politics between the sexes have much to do with the breakdown of marriage as the means by which male power served and empowered women and the rise of political and corporate structures for independent female empowerment and the limiting or discouragement of pronounced male agency.
> The modern gender integration of society and of the church has tended to produce a situation where manliness is discouraged, where 'good men' are the docile and obliging men who can operate best on women's terms. Changing this situation will require a reordering of the church's life, where men's virility and greater spiritedness are no longer treated as things to be house-trained, but as strengths to be developed and harnessed in the service of a newly prioritized > outward church mission.

> This would require a sharply counter-cultural posture towards men as agents of dominion, encouraging men to lean into and develop their aptitudes in this area, rather than stifling them in order to secure a more domesticated and equalized gender-neutralized society. It would also require the establishment of a very different settlement between the sexes, wherein men's strength was not—as it has so often been—exercised at the expense of, without regard for, as a diminishment of, or as a lording over women, but where women more generally were strengthened by men's greater exertion of their strength in the world. The manosphere will offer us little aid in that.

In my opinion, the big issue where this article falls short is that it fails to address the infiltration of cultural concepts into the Church and its subsequent destruction. It's not so much that Churches need a counter-cultural posture, they shouldn't had that in the first place.

"Being in the world but not of the world" means you are connected first and foremost to Jesus' Great Commission. You don't need to "counter" the culture because you already resist the culture. One is proactive and the other is reactive. The initial manosphere in itself is/was reactive by nature as well.

Part of this is the watering down of the gospel. If there's no cost to following Christ, we get tons of false teachings out of it: prosperity gospel, soul mates, etc. Discipleship is based around men because they are innately better at dealing with the suffering that should come with following Jesus.

Romans 5:1 Therefore, having been justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, 2 through whom also we have obtained our introduction by faith into this grace in which we stand; and we exult in hope of the glory of God. 3 And not only this, but we also exult in our tribulations, knowing that tribulation brings about perseverance; 4 and perseverance, proven character; and proven character, hope; 5 and hope does not disappoint, because the love of God has been poured out within our hearts through the Holy Spirit who was given to us.

As feminism infects Churches (and all of the underlying reversal of roles in marriages and pastors or women pastors), the gospel gets watered down and turns into basically self help groups where God becomes the cosmic vending machine to make you feel happy and accepted. No need to repent of your sin because God's love overcomes all.

In conclusion, a counter-cultural posture is worthless because it's reactive. Churches need to get back to the gospel with a mission focus. Most of the Church and its programs should be focused on developing missions for men. If you have a Church with strong masculine men, the women will follow as they will be naturally attracted.

Peter Leithart's Side Effects

October 8, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The third post in the series. I'll link my post

1. Aaron Renn on The Manosphere and the Church. My post.
2. Alastair Robert on The Virtues of Dominion. My post.
3. Peter Leithart on Side effects.

Let's get into it.

Interestingly, having read some of the subsequent posts, we'll actually see that a lot of the writers increasingly have less and less understanding of the Bible / Christian manosphere concepts and often conflate their cultural lens of the Bible with what the Bible says. We'll hit them as we go there.

> So there I was, contentedly complementarian, when suddenly (so it seemed) my friends started talking of the patriarchy, offering me pills of various hues, and charging that complementarianism is compromise with feminism. I learned about the manosphere several years after it petered out. I've been blessed in the churches I've attended and pastored over the years, and have never felt besieged because I am a man. Besides, I'm a dinosaur who grew up in the 60s and 70s, shielded from the cultural revolution of those decades by parents who grew up in the 20s and 30s. Self-consciousness about masculinity wasn't part of my upbringing, though, for good or ill, one of the lessons my father (implicitly) taught me is that one of the marks of a man is reticence about his own manhood. All that to say, I'm a late-comer to this conversation.

Renn actually calls complementarianism — which was invented in the late 1980s if you've read my blog and saw me go over it — baby boomer theology. Generally, it rings pretty much true, as you can see from this.

You have the people who grow up during the sexual revolution and implicitly pick up that the culture is starting to rail against "the patriarchy." Some of the abuses such as the occasion of the deadbeat dad might ring true (but they're basing this on the exception, not the rule). Then they must integrate the supposed abuses of "the patriarchy" into their theology rather than understanding that the Scriptures already denounce abuse of power.

Then you have chivalry and other anti-Christian thought layered in and you get implicit bias where you end up with a lot of "men bad and women good" type of stuff.

> The conversation is necessary. Some of Aaron Renn's claims need elaboration. Women initiate most divorces, but that doesn't mean women are to blame for divorce. There are long and messy stories behind every divorce, typically more than enough blame to spread around. The focus on male sins may be a sign not > of feminization but of a certain kind of masculine emphasis in a church; if a man is considered the head of his wife and family, he bears responsibility for what happens.

I never really understood federal headship because it basically absolves a woman/wife of her free will. Let's look at some other examples:

- If God is considered the head of Israel and Judah, he bears responsibility for what happens [when they sin]
- If Jesus is considered the head of the Church, He bears responsibility for what happens [when they sin]

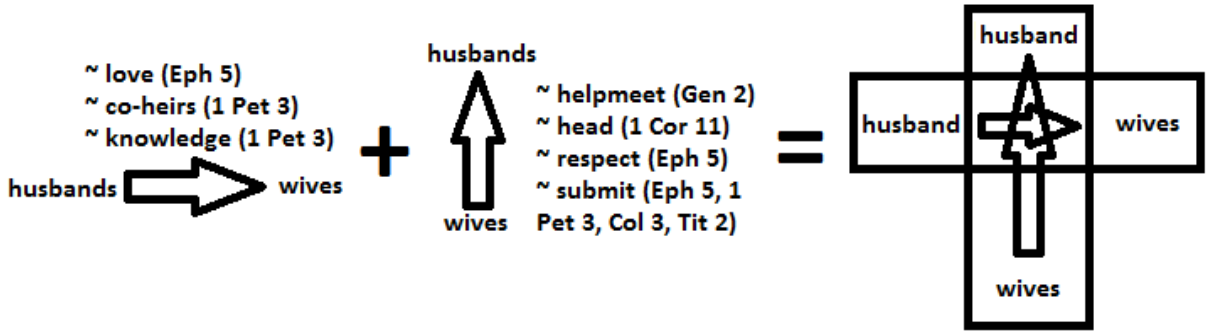
You can see how these two examples are patently absurd. God and Jesus can act perfectly, but those who are supposed to be following them can go and sin. Then do we blame God and Jesus for the Israel or Judah or the Church's sin? No. That would be dumb.

Yes, it is important to recognize that in most marital dysfunction it takes two to tango and there's probably enough blame to go around. But it would be absurd to not evaluate it by what actually happens. And we know that most divorces are not because of abuse or adultery but because the one party is unhaaaapy (usually the wife) which is why we call them frivorces.

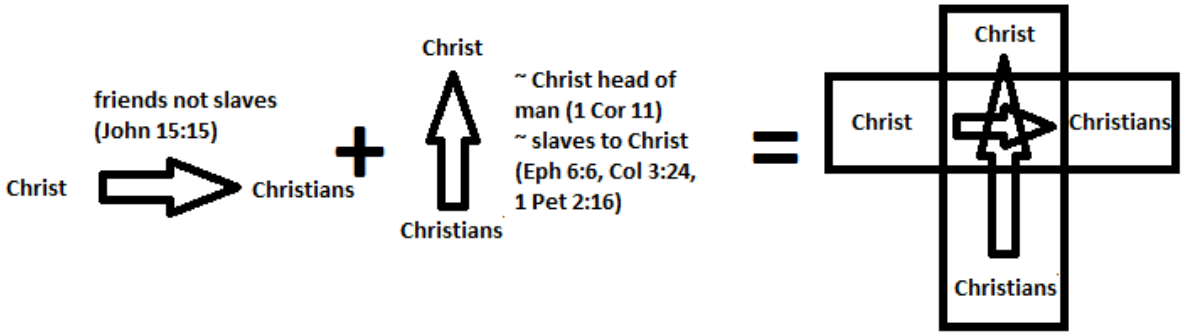
> Still, I agree with the charge that the church has capitulated to egalitarian feminism. As he notes, it's been going on for a long time,[1] but has certainly intensified over the past several decades. You can see it in hymnody, from the nineteenth century to the present. You can see it in the near-universal practice of women's ordination. You can see it in the absence or apathy of men in many churches. You can see it in the persistence of Victorian femininity as the norm of piety. A rebalance is long overdue.

Agreed.

> In my limited exposure to the manosphere, I haven't found much of value; friends I trust tell me there's substance there, and I believe them. Still, I'm not convinced a Christian masculinity movement is the answer. It's reactionary, and risks devolving into yet another species of identity politics. Worse, I fear a masculinity movement will lose track of central truths of the Christian faith. My essay is a warning label, because red pills may have harmful side effects.



I discussed this in the previous post, but it starts from the gospel and discipleship. Men are generally better equipped and are a good base to build from.



> 1. Neither Aaron nor Alastair Roberts use the word "patriarchy," but other friends do, so I'll start there. It's a theologically infelicitous term. The arche of patri-archy means "source" or "beginning." The Father (pater) is, one can say, the beginning or source (arche) of Godhead, but Trinitarian thought complicates this one-directional hierarchy. In the Trinity, there is no arche without completion in a > Second by means of a Third. Source and product, sun and rays, are co-equal and co-eternal; the original is immediately and forever fulfilled in the image. In fact, the Second Person makes the First what He is, for there is no Father without the Son. As for humanity: The male Adam was the literal patriarch of the human race, but, as Paul writes, every man since Adam has been born of a woman. Paul stresses mutual dependence and envisions a co-archy, of male and female (1 Corinthians 11:8-12).

> Pater shades into "male" and arche into "rule," so that "patriarchy" takes on the sense of "rule by men." Here too "patriarchy" doesn't capture the biblical picture. God didn't create the world to be ruled by men or fathers, but by 'adam, whom He created male and female (Genesis 1:26-28).[2] At a minimum, Adam couldn't complete the "Adamic vocation" by himself because he couldn't "fill" the earth without a sexual partner. The human story doesn't end in male rule either, since Jesus the Last Adam reigns with His Eve, the church. We might say the Father rules the eternal kingdom, but the Father never rules alone, but everywhere and always by His two hands, the Son and Spirit. As for creation, it has a bridal future (Revelation 21:1-8). The church anticipates the new heavens and earth precisely because she is now the bride that creation will one day become. Femininity is an ontological reality, we might say the reality of the world, the telos of creation.

I like Patriarchy because it offends christo-feminists and most complementarian Christians because it shocks them of their own covert feminist failure. The correct Biblical term is likely to be Headship as that is the example of Christ and the Church that husbands are wives are to strive for.

Most Christians along with Leithart don't really understand that love tends to treat as one of the same body while those under the head are to treat it as following/submitting/obeying.

This is the importance of understanding the various Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. The responsibilities themselves are different according to their role, which means that all of the bluster about authority or equality don't matter if you're not discussing how they are applied according to role.

> 2. From the beginning, Christianity elevated women. When Jesus' disciples abandoned Him, women followed Him to the cross and the tomb. Women were the first witnesses of His resurrection. The apostles became eyewitnesses and leaders of the church because of news they first heard from Mary, Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary.
> Women found the early church attractive because, Rodney Stark says, Christian women enjoyed "considerably greater status and power than did pagan women," both in the home and the church. The church prohibited infanticide, and so prohibited female infanticide. Christian teachers condemned divorce and sexual sins, and destroyed the pagan double standard by demanding that men as well as women be chaste before marriage and faithful in marriage. Pagan widows were pressured to remarry, but in the church "widowhood was highly respected." Wealthy widows kept their husbands' estates, and the church cared for poor widows; Christian widows had more options than their pagan counterparts. Within the church, women served as deaconesses. In all these ways, "the Christian woman enjoyed far greater marital security and equality than did her pagan neighbor."[3] So many women joined the church that "in 370 the emperor Valentinian issued a written order to Pope Damasus I requiring that Christian missionaries cease calling at the homes of pagan women."[4]
> 3. The elevated status of women was Christologically rooted. As Paul wrote to the Galatians, "there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither slave nor free man, neither male nor female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3:28). As many as are baptized into Christ are clothed with Christ, and that common clothing gives every member of the church a common identity and common privileges. This is a sexual equality undreamt by ancient pagans.
> Paul doesn't erase created, social, or religious differences. Jewish believers continued to live as Jews, though they didn't impose Jewish customs on Gentiles. We know there were slaves in the church because Paul exhorted them to serve their masters. Paul distinguished the roles of men and women in church and > family. But the church is a communion where these differences are harmonized into a complex unity. The binary contrasts are transformed into relations of mutual deference and service. Jews give Gentiles spiritual goods, so it's fitting that Gentiles give the return gift of material goods. Every slave should consider himself the Lord's freedman, and every free man or master is the Lord's slave. Within marriage, husbands serve their wives, even to the point of death, as Christ served the church, and wives mimic the church who submits to Christ in all things. The mutuality is asymmetrical in various ways, but it is mutuality, reflecting the mutual submission and glorification of Father and Son in the Spirit.

> There are obvious complexities here, but we can say this: A church should have the atmosphere of a community where "there is neither male nor female," just as it should be a harmony of social classes and ethnic groups. A masculinized church is as much a perversion as a feminized one.

Another dubious line of thought.

Leithart is making the same mistake as the CBMW who came up with complementarianism theology in the first place. This is of course no surprise because he has been a complementarian for so long. He is using the examples of so-called abuses of the cultural authority and status to define how we should understand the Bible rather than use the Bible to understand how we should understand authority and status.

Christianity elevated the dignity and honor of all groups that were derided and ruled over — women/wives, slaves, poor, widows, etc — because God doesn't care about secular implementations of power or riches but because He knows all human's intrinsic worth as His creations.

Using this as a line of argument against masculinity and Patriarchy/headship is falling in line with feminists. Ironically, it's the same argument used by christo-feminists to try to claim equality in marriage and be leaders/pastors in the Church.

You should really question yourself when you're using their arguments. Instead,

> John 13:12 When he had finished washing their feet, he put on his clothes and returned to his place. "Do you understand what I have done for you?" he asked them. 13 "You call me 'Teacher' and 'Lord,' and rightly so, for that is what I am. 14 Now that I, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also should wash one another's feet. 15 I have set you an example that you should do as I have done for you. 16 Very truly I tell you, no servant is greater than his master, nor is a messenger greater than the one who sent him. 17 Now that you know these things, you will be blessed if you do them.
> Luke 22:24 And there arose also a dispute among them as to which one of them was regarded to be greatest. 25 And He said to them, "The kings of the Gentiles lord it over them; and those who have authority over them are called > ‘Benefactors.’ 26 But it is not this way with you, but the one who is the greatest among you must become like the youngest, and the leader like the servant. 27 For who is greater, the one who reclines at the table or the one who serves? Is it not the one who reclines at the table? But I am among you as the one who serves.

Jesus, having created authority in conjunction with God, does not denigrate or cancel authority but tells us to use it rightly which is to love and serve others. The “greatest” is the one who is the one who loves and serves.

> 4. Jesus is true man, the measure of manhood. Not everyone in His day would recognize Him as such. In certain respects, even pagans would have regarded Jesus as a manly man. He does works of power, easily disposes of a Legion of demons, acts forcefully in the temple, firmly resists Satan’s temptations, has daring outdoor adventures with his male companions. He is victorious in public debate, courageous in His relentless truth-telling, unfazed by hatred and opposition. Yet He also tells His followers to become like children, commands them to turn the other cheek instead of retaliating against insults, shows compassion for the weak, commends those who emasculate themselves for the kingdom.
> Pagans might have seen His death as analogous to the self-immolations of Roman heroes. In most respects, Jesus’ death subverts ancient masculinity. Aristotle lined up the binary “male-female” with the binary “active-passive,” but Jesus becomes so passive He is nearly reduced to an object as He’s passed from one enemy to another. Instead of facing His death with Stoic resolution, He pleads with His Father to remove His cup. He bows to His Father’s will, but “it is questionable whether such a submissive posture, even it if involves self-restraint, would be understood by a man in the Greco-Roman world as a masculine deportment.”[5]
> He is shamed, mocked, beaten, whipped, spit on, then nailed naked to a cross in full public view. Cicero reluctantly conceded that a brave man might groan in pain, provided it was like the groan of an athlete straining for victory (Tusculan Disputations 2.22.55). But Jesus cries out in anguish to the Father who has forsaken Him. For Romans, men are made to penetrate, not be penetrated, sexually or in combat. A man who can’t protect his body from assault is, at best, low-status, no longer a vir but a pathicus. On the cross, though, Jesus is pierced with a spear, which makes him appear unmanly. Romans would acknowledge a real man might be captured, tortured, humiliated, but Jesus appears unwilling or unable to defend His honor at the point of its greatest threat. Romans would have echoed the Jewish taunt: “He saved others; Himself He cannot save.”[6]

> Christian discussions of masculinity today sometimes appeal to the scientific and social-scientific evidence of sexual difference. I don’t dispute the evidence, though determining what normative conclusions we can draw is a different > matter. My concern is more basic: It would be a travesty if manhood were left unevangelized, unchallenged and untested by the masculinity of Jesus. It would be more than tragic if a social-scientific portrait of masculinity displaced Jesus as the measure of Man.

Again, the issue is that Leithart defaults to trying to understand the Bible through the lens of the culture rather than the Bible itself defining what manhood is. One such example is from David to Solomon on his death bed:

> 1 Kings 2:2 “I am about to go the way of all the earth,” he said. “So be strong, act like a man, 3 and observe what the Lord your God requires: Walk in obedience to him, and keep his decrees and commands, his laws and regulations, as written in the Law of Moses. Do this so that you may prosper in all you do and wherever you go 4 and that the Lord may keep his promise to me: ‘If your descendants watch how they live, and if they walk faithfully before me with all their heart and soul, you will never fail to have a successor on the throne of Israel.’

Yes, men are defined by masculinity but masculinity is defined by being strong to be obedient to God no matter what the cost: whether emotional or not. Whether status or not. Etc.

> 5. No pill of any color can dispel sexual mystery, and those who think they’ve discovered the truth about sexual dynamics need to be cautious. They don’t have women figured out – or men, for that matter. I hope no one wants to dispel the mystery. Dispelling sexual mystery would rob the world of much else besides. Bereft of sexual mystery, creation and human life would be bereft of mystery as such.

This is simply disingenuous. There’s a reason why there’s a common saying throughout the manosphere: “Don’t listen to what they say, watch what they do.”

Most of “sexual mystery” is buried under the disguise of the words of men and women that are incongruent with their behavior. If a woman says she hates bad boys but she keeps getting with them she’s clearly lying, has no self control, or both.

But like many of Leithart’s points before, this is buried under the disguise of another feminist talking point that he’s unconsciously channeling. The Bible lays human nature and human sexuality (both men and women) bare for all the world to see. There’s no tangible benefit from blinding men to a woman’s sexuality or vice versa; in fact, there are numerous downsides especially with ONEitis, chivalry, choreplay, and such things being so rampant.

There’s no godly reason there should be mystery, and a strong case of wisdom against it. A statement like this is similar to a pastor telling all of the men in his congregation to marry a woman like he did while being ignorant that he was attractive because he is the leader of a congregation and has high status. It’s just not good.

Chivalry is anti-Christian in action

It just occurred to me there's an easy way to explain why chivalry is anti-Christian.

A correct marriage analogy is a King and a Queen — the King wields authority over the queen and the rest of the kingdom. Instead chivalry is a knight trying to impress and serve the queen. Remember, chivalry is a knight's code and not one that a king would follow. The knight is to put the Queen up on a pedestal and serve her whims.

It's clearly an inverted roles scenario where the Queen is in charge and the knight is serving her. It's not even the trash term "servant leadership" but literally just serving. No headship and no authority and therefore anti-Christian.

Bill Smith's Attraction: The Biblical Theology of Pickup Artistry

October 16, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The Fourth post in the series. I'll link my post

1. Aaron Renn on The Manosphere and the Church. My post.
2. Alastair Robert on The Virtues of Dominion. My post.
3. Peter Leithart on Side effects. My post.
4. Bill Smith on Attraction: The Biblical Theology of Pickup Artistry.

Let's get into it.

Interestingly, having read some of the subsequent posts, we'll actually see that a lot of the writers increasingly have less and less understanding of the Bible / Christian manosphere concepts and often conflate their cultural lens of the Bible with what the Bible says. We'll hit them as we go there.

> In his opening essay, Aaron Renn provides a good summary of why men in general and Christian men in particular are turning to Pick Up Artists (PUAs) and mentors within the manosphere. To put it bluntly, when it comes to intersexual dynamics and how men attract women, these men know what works. The PUAs assert that Western Culture and the church within it have been sold and are selling a bill of goods produced by Feminism.[1] These men, however, recognize the fact that Feminism is a war on reality. Women do not want what Feminism says they want, and men who have played along are being emasculated. What leaders in the manosphere are discovering is God's created design.
> Renn's references show that the techniques for men attracting women work while the evangelical church's emphasis on "servant leadership" does not. Many Christian young men are attracted to the Rollo Tomassi's of the world for this reason. The servant leadership model (a perfectly fine biblical phrase) has been hijacked by those within the church highly influenced by Feminism. Servant leadership is generally understood now as, "pedestal the woman, give her everything she wants, just say, 'yes, dear,' be a self-deprecating nice guy, and, remember men, it's always your fault." (This is nothing like the Servant.) This is not working. If these men begin to date and eventually marry, attraction, if it ever was there, wanes and the marriages turn sexless all too often. The couple then goes to counseling where the husband learns that he must negotiate for sex with his wife–paying for sex in some form or fashion– following the Al Mohler model quoted by Renn. Things don't improve because that's not what she wants, even though that's what she's been told she should want. She's just not sexually attracted to him. On the rare occasions when they do have sex, it becomes > passionless “duty sex,” which becomes frustrating to both of them. Our churches are filled with married couples like this. (I speak as a pastor of thirty-plus years.) Some of these spouses, believing themselves to be good soldiers, endure. Others are divorcing, not willing to live in “loveless” marriages.[2]

So far so good. I could nitpick some of this, but it’s a fair assessment.

Again, from the previous article I think that servant leader is a misnomer. The Biblical phrasing is a lot better: a leader (with authority) who uses his authority to love and serve. This makes the difference because if you phrase it servant leader, the emphasis is always going to be placed on the servant aspect thus inadvertently inverting the roles in the relationship or marriage.

Indeed, we need to make the distinction with Ephesians 5 on Christ’s love for the Church (which husbands are to emulate) that this sacrificial love is for the purpose of sanctification.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

I’ve heard passages on this preached dozens of times and referred to colloquially hundreds of not thousands. I can count one one hand the number of times it’s been qualified for the purpose of sanctification and not other mumbo jumbo like do what your wife wants.

It means you need to have your love and serving focused on making her more holy. Holiness and feelings are often at odds with each other.

> Enter PUAs. They tell men what has been glaringly obvious through the centuries about what attracts a female’s sexual desire. Men try it. It works. They like it. Game. Set. Match.
> The techniques work. The question is, Why do they work? We can say that it is because of sin, but sin is not a creation ex nihilo. Sin is a parasite that twists God’s creation. So, behind all sinful intersexual relationships is a divine design that is being leeched off of and distorted. These men have tapped into the way God created and sustains intersexual dynamics, specifically what attracts women to men, and they have sinfully used it. PUAs use God’s reality to a perverted end much like any atheist uses language to deny the existence of the eternal Word; he operates within God’s reality while denying his existence. Reality is reality whether you use it for good or ill or accept or deny its Source. Sound epistemological justifications for intersexual dynamics cannot be found in the secular manosphere, but they know reality when they see it. In the area of intersexual dynamics, the manosphere men are images of the sons of Cain who discovered and developed creation previous to the sons of God. In this case, the > manosphere re-discovered and re-developed biblical treasures that the Western Church lost through neglect and allowing the Jezebel of Feminism to redefine masculinity, femininity, and intersexual dynamics.

> Our battle with the manosphere men is, of course, over their misuse of creation and the evolutionary worldview that they claim supports it. But we are working with the same reality and, quite frankly, at some points, they are seeing reality better than many of us Christians. There are good, biblical explanations for why these attraction techniques work in intersexual dynamics. They are rooted in the original creation. Though twisted by sin, our original design, which includes intersexual dynamics, is restored by grace, not obliterated.

Smith goes off the reservation here and makes a common mistake that pastors often make. He's confusing what ought to be versus what is. Usually in Church this is where pastors say "godliness is attractive" instead of what actually is attractive: power, status, athleticism, looks, and money.

He gets it right that Creation is the original design. What he gets wrong is that it's being leeched off of and distorted. God made Adam and Eve with free will and thus the capacity to be tempted to sin. In other words, any temptation that man and woman face is by Design. Otherwise, we wouldn't have the free will to choose between good and evil. This is not a distortion of Creation but flows naturally from it.

It would be better to say that God gave man the capacity to learn and understand and gain wisdom. This can be used to learn about creation and what works with intersexual dynamics. However, if the intent (of the heart) is evil then it will be used to sin. Creation itself cannot be twisted by anyone other than God. It is only the human heart that can become twisted.

> As Leithart notes in the closing paragraph of his essay, attraction is mysterious. Genuine attraction cannot be negotiated. It can be cultivated, but it is never merely contractual. People are attracted to different sorts of people for a myriad of reasons. Our attractions are shaped by various factors: how and where we were reared, our goals, race/ethnicity, culture, brain chemistry, and other conditions. There are characteristics that initially attract us and those qualities that keep us attracted long-term.
> Attraction is what we are drawn to as beautiful and somehow useful to us. While there are a number of micro-factors in specific attractions, there are some common factors that are not so mysterious that attract women to men and vice versa. Qualities that attract men to women are very different than what attracts women to men. Men are attracted to classic femininity; long hair, softness, curves, etc. Feminism, however, has attempted to convince women that men should be attracted to sameness. For example, men should be attracted to a woman if she has power, status, money, and physical strength. In other words, the more she acts like a man, the more she will be attractive to men. Men sexually attracted to women do not want boyfriends. Our polarities attract us to > one another as men and women, not how we are the same.

> We are created to need one another for different reasons to fulfill our created purpose of dominion, and when we see another person who can somehow meet those needs at some level, we are drawn to or attracted to him or her. Opposites attract because we complement one another's strengths and weaknesses. Beauty and utility are friends, not enemies.[3]

I don't think that's where Leithart was going with saying attraction is mysterious as I analyzed in the previous post. We don't want these things to be mysterious because they can often lead to ONEitis and other terrible things. Marriage is a covenant, and we should help everyone understand all of the issues that can affect it.

The rest is fairly straight forward basics.

> The PUAs have developed their techniques around traits of genuine masculinity that attract females. Genuine masculinity is rooted in God's original creation of the man and his relationship to the woman and the rest of creation. God made the man to take dominion. As Roberts rightly states in his essay, this dominion began even before the woman was created as man named the animals and was given the responsibility to guard and work the garden (Genesis 2). God saw that it was not good for man to be alone. He needed the woman to accomplish his dominion mandate. So, God created the woman to be his helper. The woman, Paul says, is created for the man (1Corinthians 11.9). While the man's primary orientation is toward the earth from which he was created, the woman's primary orientation is toward the man from whom she was made.
> The woman becomes a part of the man's mission in the world, so he names her at her creation as well as being tasked with guarding her and providing for her because she becomes a part of the Garden. The woman looks to the man for protection and provision. His ability to provide and protect defines, to a great extent, his masculinity in relation to femininity.

This is half-true and needs clarification.

Man/Adam took dominion over the earth (naming the animals, cultivating the garden, etc.) before Eve came around. It would be more accurate to say that Eve as the helpmeet may help him take dominion. Eve was also needed in particular for the fruitful and multiply aspects of God's command.

This is important to understand as a man's mission (taking dominion) does not need a woman, but can benefit from the help of a woman. An important distinction.

> Adam failed to take dominion over the serpent as he should have, consequently, failing to provide and protect his wife. Since the fall, the man's masculinity must be proven to the woman. She tests him to see if he is a worthy protector and provider. These masculine characteristics, rooted in the original intersexual dynamics, prove to be what attracts women to men.

I disagree with this.

I do not believe there was a change in what men and women find attractive before and after the fall. In other words, God created men to be attracted to physical beauty, and God created women to be attracted to PSALMs. It was natural for Adam and Eve to be attracted to each other given they were masculine and feminine and they followed God's commands prior to the fall. It did not to be proven because it was evident.

What I do think is that the bounds of temptation for men to desire physical beauty above all else or women to be hypergamous was unleashed. In other words, men and women now have their selfish desires fully unleashed and must fight against temptation.

> For a man to be a protector, he must demonstrate strength. This strength comes in many forms: physical, intellectual, social status, competency, et al. So, for instance, women like more muscular men. No woman is going to see Jason Mamoa in Aquaman because of the literary superiority of the film. In Captain America: The First Avenger, when Chris Evans is transformed from scrawny Steve Rogers to buff Steve Rogers, Peggy Carter gets a little flustered when she sees him without a shirt on. This is so common it is cliché. The woman is attracted to power because she was created to need and, therefore, be attracted to a man who can protect her. This is why a professional CrossFit woman will not generally be sexually attracted to some beer-guzzling couch potato who plays video games all the time. He is weaker than her. If she is stronger than him, he cannot protect her any better than she can protect herself. She is looking for someone stronger. (This is one aspect of the hypergamy Renn alluded to.)
> This powerful man exudes confidence as well. He knows who he is, and he knows what he wants to do. He has a mission. He is happy for a woman to join him, but she does not define his mission. Since she is created to be oriented to the man's mission–helper–this masculine confidence is attractive. If he loses this and begins to revolve his life around her, she becomes less attracted to him. This runs contrary to her created design.

And yet the Church doesn't tell this to men and women. Heh.

> The perversion of this is seen with the bad-boy attraction. Bad boys have women flocking to them. Why is that? Because they are exhibiting strength. They are going to do what they want to do, and they don't care what people think. It is distorted, yes, but it is a distorted masculine trait. A woman wants a confident man; a man who will lead her, whom she can join and orient her life around.

Again, Smith like to call these things distortions for some reason which is incorrect.

The heart is oriented in a particular direction (good or evil) and the expression of the heart (aspects of masculinity or femininity) make it come off a certain way. Masculinity in itself cannot be distorted because it is a way of expression and not good or evil intrinsically.

> A man's ability to provide is coupled with his power to be attractive to women. The man was created to work the ground and through that to provide for his wife. Women rightfully want to know whether or not a man will provide for her. Feminism has taught women to be their own providers. Consequently, they have hyper-educated themselves and competed with the men for jobs. Many make a great amount of money. When this happens, they find themselves less attracted to men who make less than them. The woman who is a brain surgeon is not normally attracted to a plumber. Just as with the physical strength mentioned earlier, if she can provide for herself better than the man can provide for her, she will not normally be attracted to him. This is why very unhandsome men with a great deal of money can have physically beautiful wives. We can call it gold-digging if we choose, but a woman sees ample provision. She uses her power–feminine beauty–to secure it. Again, many times this is twisted, but it is twisting the way God created the sexes to be oriented toward one another.

I still like the analogy of the Church pastor and worship band leader vs the Church janitor, doorway greeter, and parking lot coordinator better. Definitely a more illuminating Church-goer way of explaining things.

> Rollo Tomassi, something of the godfather of the manosphere and one who has formalized many of these insights in his The Rational Male series, will tell you that this hypergamous inclination is due to the evolutionary development of the hindbrain in the woman as a survival technique for her and her children. The Bible provides the true foundation. A woman's hypergamous inclinations are in the hindbrain, but they are given to her by God in her creation. She is created to desire a man who will lead, guard, and provide for her. She judges and tests men's masculinity relative to her strengths and weaknesses and is drawn to men who are superior to her.
> Though these creational realities have been discerned, developed, and perverted by the sons of Cain to use to their selfish, sinful ends–namely, to sleep with as many women as possible–the root intersexual dynamics are a distortion of reality: the way God created and sustains intersexual relationships. Recovery of these fundamental dynamics can be quite helpful to the church. Many frustrations in Christian marriages can be traced back to the simple, biblical truths in which men are not being masculine. Because of this, their wives do not respect them as protectors and providers and, therefore, are not sexually attracted to them. Both the man and the woman keep trying everything that they are told in their churches and through the latest marriage books. These tend to be no more than baptized Feminism. Consequently, frustration continues.

> The manosphere men are working with our world and perverting it to their own devices. It is time that we reclaim what rightfully belongs to us, benefitting from their insights just as we would from Aristotle, Plato, Socrates, Freud, or Yogi Berra. We must sift those insights through God's Word. When we do we can find > a reality that is true, good, and beautiful.

Already covered why these aren't distortions but simply an incorrect understanding of Creation. Beyond that, I think that Smith's analysis and wording is very presumptuous and prideful.

In all reality, it's a terrible thing that many a Christian has had to learn from PUAs to know about the true nature attraction and relationships of men and women. This is not something that one should rightfully and willfully benefit from, but instead Churches and leadership should be repenting to God and to their congregations for telling pretty little lies.

We should acknowledge where we went wrong and seek God's grace in preaching what is right and true. We must continually strive to remove the feminism and other worldly lenses that we still have on our eyes, and be humble that God can use others who may not even be Christians to teach us about Himself and His Creation.

Paul Maxwell's The Measure of a man

5. Paul Maxwell on The Measure of a man

Let's get into it.

If you will recall, Paul Maxwell several years ago was the writer of "Real men love strong women" on Desiring God where he grossly misinterpreted several passages of Scripture to agree with feminism. My post in response to that.

He's actually come up a few other times (he seems to have found out about the manosphere somehow) and has progressively become more oriented to the true nature of attraction, but he still has some ways to go. According to his bio, he's no seminary student anymore either but an "independent researcher" and likely entrepreneur or something along those lines.

> But what is a man, really? A collection of necessary properties? Operations? Can a man be uniquely evaluated meaningfully in any way? Can he fail? Can he do what he wishes? What liberties does he have—from whom, and to what? What rights is he able to exercise, and how are those rights sourced, defended, properly and improperly exercised, and most importantly, how are they bounded? Who draws the lines? How are they drawn? Where are they drawn? Why are they drawn there? Why does his maleness shade these questions with gendered idiosyncrasies?
> What happens if a man crosses a boundary? What happens if he crosses it twice? What degree of punitive severity should he expect in proportion to the intensity of his transgressions? What opportunities are available to a man qua man? To what degree are those criteria fixed or flexible? Who sets them, and how, and do they take macro- and micro-social factors into account? Can we know the verdict? Can we appeal the criteria? How ought they to be understood and applied directly?
> What are theologically (and socially) acceptable methods available to a man to cope with sub-optimal life circumstances? What should a man do when he wakes up full of suicidal anguish and can't help but start drinking every day at 2pm? What should a man do when his wife leaves him for another man and sues to > take his children? How should he respond when she documents all of his private failings before a judge as a means to remove his children from his custody? What is a contrite single father supposed to do after he strangles his son with an electrical cord in a drunken rage, and doesn't remember the next day? What happens when he does it again the next weekend? What is the son supposed to do? What is the son supposed to do 20 years later when all of the Christian men in his life are telling him that he is too angry?

All good questions that Maxwell says he wants to answer. We'll see what answers he has.

> Whether William James had a soul or not, he understood how people worked. That is why James's students (such as G. Stanley Hall, who went on to influence John Dewey) founded the American Psychological Association, which reconstructed the failing enterprise of early 20th century German Psychology. The new Westernized, pragmatic, "medicalized" approach to the self produced a sanitary treatment infrastructure in which new versions of licensure were created to service human issues classified within the "personal problems jurisdiction," which came to replace those basic services often provided by Christian pastors for centuries.[1]
> This new space exists, and pastors should feel a legitimate sense of competitive anxiety with the new cohort of secular shepherds. That this movement was founded by the founder of pragmatism is no coincidence. More often than not, the advice of these secular shepherds works. Men see results in the gym. Men learn David Burns' cognitive distortions to achieve emotional regulation. They get what they want. A man might even get a woman to like him—perhaps even to fall in love with him. A man has fun manipulating the mechanics of the universe available to him in order to pursue different values across time. In Erik Erikson's model, between the ages of 17 and 41, men traverse from cultivating fidelity to love to caregiving. Men have fun playing with things, and the laws of nature is the most enjoyable, tinkerable pack of toys a man could have, whichever values are in one's crosshairs.
> But as with all fun and games, there are rules. And if you break the rules, you will be expelled, disqualified or, when the game is real life, cause serious physical or emotional injury to another living being. The National Institute of Health reports: "In 2018, the suicide rate among males was 3.7 times higher (22.8 per 100,000) than among females (6.2 per 100,000)." We might say this is all James's fault — this is all happening within his wet dream, after all. But there are too many variables to consider. Perhaps James saved millions from suicide. We don't know what our culture would look like if conservatives took the intellectual lead in the 20th century and produced significant bodies of practical knowledge related to the psychology of the Christian life in the context of male stress — rather than, say, the justifiably waning biblical counseling movement.
> But the question this data really puts before us are: Why men? What rules are > they breaking? Why such dire consequences? Why such extremely broad spectrums of violence and emotional disruption?

This seems like a long tangent to the issue.

I generally agree that the Church has been too “anti-science” in the past century or so. It was actually the Church pushing science and arts through the dark ages all the way up to the 1800-1900s, but since then it’s become a lot more secularlized. Once the Church abdicated that sphere it’s been used against it.

> It comes down to one thing: We want to be credibly seen and loved by other men. But what is credibility? In the 21st century, it is indisputable competence. For Joe Rogan, it’s that he’s a Jiu Jitsu blackbelt, successful standup comic, a free thinker, in incredible physical shape for 53, and he’s a millionaire. … What’s John Piper? What’s Matt Chandler? What have they said or done in the past 10 years that has made an impact on anything that men face every day?
> Let’s return to what men want. Men desire to be credibly seen and loved. Everything comes down to this. Purpose. Vision. Work. Acceptance. Sex. Faith. Grief. Alcohol. Pills—opioid, red, blue, white, black. It’s all a way to cope with an unseeing love, an unloving presence, both, or neither.

Here Maxwell makes a big mistake that is commonly seen in the ‘sphere.

Men don’t want to be loved. Men want to be respected. The Bible clearly spells this out between husbands and wives, but it is also true between men and other men as well. The main love that men need is only God’s love, but men primarily are love givers and respect receivers.

This mistake is easy to make if you are operating from a feminized (Christian or not) point of view. Women want to be loved. This particular mistake is typically seen in the decline of quality of relationships from father to son which is showing them how to grow into a man who can be respected and typically the other encompasses a mother’s love for her son.

This basic mistake doesn’t give me hope for the rest of the article.

> Can preaching Christ crucified on Sunday morning do something as effective as William James? In my view, the church is called to outdo James. The pragmatism of the left is good at hitting targets, but it’s not good at knowing what targets to hit. The church is good at aiming, but bad at shooting.
> What men need from the church is a cooperative, credible, and holistic endeavor on behalf, not of “the church,” but of local churches, to identify men inside and outside of the church, conduct a triage, and begin helping each man one at a time to get on his feet, acquire the appropriate meta-skills for the task before him (and in light of the path behind him, for good or ill) and supply him with resources that he can leverage to advance the causes in his own life.

OK, sure, that’s part of it. The main thrust of what’s been missing is equipping and discipling men for the gospel mission: evangelism and discipleship.

A lot of the issues of wallowing in mediocrity or despair are immediately addressed by the gospel itself and the hope that comes from it. But it just doesn't stop there obviously.

> This is why pastors often fail to reach men. Reaching men requires more negotiation. And men can be very difficult to negotiate with. Pastors, in one sense, are bracketed from the stresses of the market, and over time can become soft and easily unsympathetic to cutthroat posture many men need to cultivate in order to thrive in the workplace. Men don't want to have this posture all the time. But they need another man who can go toe-to-toe with him, not to fight him, but as a gesture, communicating that trust and respect are worth earning, and that the pastor is willing to earn it. Then he can have a secure place in his life.
> The pastor will only be able to parlay for the membership of a secure man when he is able to explain in the man's own terms what he'll get out of it. I know plenty of men over the past year who have not left the church or the faith, but have simply walked away from evangelicalism — not over theology or ideology, but over the weirdness of the culture and the suspicious incompetence of its credentialed professionals. The manosphere sometimes calls these men MGTOWs (men who go their own way), but most men would just call it being one's own man.
> Pastors desire submission as a down payment for care. And men don't want to submit. Most men already suffer under a crippling deluge of daily anxiety. Anxiety is about control. And the request for the submission of church membership is a request from men to give up what little control they have left in their lives. Pastors underestimate the scale of this ask, which is why they often fail to close the sale — they forget what it's like to be a gunslinger in the West, bearing the burden, not only of providing, but of long-term profitability for the sake of the long-term financial security of their loved ones.

Again, part of it, but not the primarily parts.

Bracketed by the stresses of the market? Give them practical advice to be more attractive instead of the pretty little lies like "godliness is sexy".

Discipleship is the practical part of leading by example, showing these men how to, and then helping them walk the walk.

> This is what men think about. They are not thinking about Adam and Eve. They don't care. They have real problems and need real help. If the church is able to supply men with resources they can leverage to pursue their values, men will come to them. If not, it's up to each church how much marketing work it wants to do in order to acquire men. In business, we call this a "customer acquisition cost" (CAC). What is the highest CAC a church would be willing to pay for a single new male member? They are already paying something, from the pamphlets they > print to the electricity bill they pay. So, what's the number? How much do churches want the real men of the world? The ball is really in their court.

Maxwell goes wrong again here. Drawing on business principles to help grow the Church gets you a Church that is ineffective. The Church must not be business focused but people focused.

> I quit my job last week, because I have quite harshly overworked myself for the past 7 years due to my own compounding trauma, and reached a psychological breaking point. While I'll finally get to build my own business creating courses on theology and meta-skills for young adults next year, writing fundraising letters with my wife was one of the most difficult things I've ever done. I couldn't write the appeal for days. And I'm a full-time writer (er, was … or, still am)! I felt too pathetic. My sense of failure as a man was fortified by the 100 Matt Chandler sermons I had listened to when I was in my early twenties:
> "What will they think?"
> "I'm a failure as a husband."
> "I should be providing."
> "No one will show up."
> "No one cares."
> "Nobody cares about me."
> "This is so embarrassing."
> There you go—that's masculinity. Pushing your neck against the knife blade of reality and saying, "Here's who I am, here's what I've got, here's what I want, and here's how I plan to get it."

That is how the world sees men. Unfortunately, many in the Church have taken up this stance and do the same thing to men as the culture does: the demonization of men and masculinity.

> My dad was a beast of a man. He taught me how to lift weights, pick up girls, and take shortcuts. I had to spit out some bones, but he taught me much that I never would have learned in the context of the church. And that's okay. The church isn't responsible for me. But he did teach me the softness of the most valuable business skills, the harshness of the economy, the abundance of opportunity in every context, a nose for sales tactics and how to parry them.
> I met several men in the church in my early teens who taught me many of the basic competencies, including theological skills. I respected these men, because I saw how hard they worked. I saw them give up their seats for women on the subway. I saw them be gentle with hurting men. I saw them exercise restraint during the psychotic episodes of strong, unstable men. I saw them lead their families in morning prayer. I saw them thank God for Christmas presents. I saw > stability.

> What did I really see?
> Men who were measured by their affection for Christ. Temperate. Controlled. Strong. Crass, but strategically appropriate. Open to the visceral, but spiritually disciplined. Family men, with wives and kids. In my mind, as a young man, if I could be like them, everything would be okay. I would be okay.
> It wasn't until several years ago that I found another man I respected just as much. The CEO of the company I worked for. Previously a church planter, now a tech CEO—no longer helping one church raise thousands, but helping churches across the globe raise millions with technology. He did it. He actually built something. Like Rogan, he had a black belt of sorts—that intangible quality that strikes men with something akin to the beatific vision. His skill, his accomplishments, his winsomeness, was enrapturing. When he spoke, his vision resonated with something deep inside me. What was it? It was the same thing I felt when listening to Joe Rogan. It was the same thing I felt when sitting under my pastor's tree Christmas morning, grateful to have people who saw and loved me.
> What was it? How do men speak in such a way so as to enrapture other men? What is the X factor for male mobilization that makes seeing-love meaningful?
> It is credibility.
> When men are seen and loved by men they find to be credible, they've caught the golden snitch. They've won the cup. Their hearts belong to that man. You know what I'm talking about. There is a male-male parallel to romantic love that operates along the axis of paternal needs in the male psyche—a father-son bond with significantly untapped potential which, unactualized for too long, succumbs to its half life and spoils into frustration and resentment when a man's desire for intimacy is unreciprocated.

Again, Maxwell misses the main issue again: respect.

Masculinity whether via credibility, competency, strength or other traits from other men all build respect.

> Renn makes note of the "incel" (involuntary celibate) community as a "community of low status young men extremely unhappy that they are unable to have sex with or go out on dates with women." The incel movement is the tip of the iceberg. Yes, men want sex. They want the attention of women. They want to dominate, engineer, construct, tear down, burn, build, have sex, achieve spiritual enlightenment, and everything in between. But beneath all of this is a desire to receive credible love that cares about real circumstances and doesn't let go.
> In his article, Renn laments: "The church has adopted a very skewed approach that improperly berates and belittles men, and has badly misled them with teachings that just aren't true."

> Men shouldn’t care what anyone thinks. Men shouldn’t care if churches degenerate them. Who cares? It’s a church. There’s a billion of them. There’s only one of you. Move on.
> The real problem facing young Christian men today is not secularism. It’s not Joe Rogan. It’s not the heathen gurus. It’s suicide, alcohol, drugs, and obesity. Those are the four horsemen of the apocalypse slaying men by the thousands each and every day, and the golden thread among these vices is a lack of credible love.
> The church has no presence in these conversations. Its pleas for abstinence are sufficient for instructing the church in standards for Christian morality, but bad for managing mental health pandemics. COVID tore out the rotting floorboards of social decorum that were hiding the deep state of mental unhealth that permeates the young American male psyche. Now is not a moment for reflection, but action.

Maxwell again misses the main thrust. Suicide, alcohol, drugs, and obesity are all symptoms of the issues of lack of mission, lack of respect, and lack of good discipleship and teaching men accurately about God.

> Men need saving. Saving takes resources. The church has resources. If men can leverage them, they will. If the social interest rate is too high, men will discontinue the church as their spiritual payment provider. Visa can run as many anti-Amex commercials as they want — they will never achieve 100% among credit card users, and neither will the church achieve 100% market share among men.
> When businesses lose market share, they don’t blame the clients — they take ownership and fix the problem. Why, when the church loses market share, does it bemoan the spiritual immaturity of the culture rather than taking ownership and fixing the problem itself? There are men to be gotten. Either you’re getting them or you’re not. There’s not a deep social force at place driving men out of the church. Jordan Peterson once said: “You get the spouse you deserve.” Likewise, the church has the demographics it deserves.
> Conclusion
> The manosphere will be forgotten in 10 years, but we will all still be here. The universe will always bring more suffering. And men will make a choice either to become resentful and cruel, or hopeful and constructive. That’s why they flock to Peterson — men are looking for reasons not to kill themselves, and the church isn’t giving them a good one.
> The real measure of a man is the man in his life who loves him best—he will function as his measure both in the sense that the younger man will strive to be like him, and yet, he also shows him how to be a measured man who, upon hearing what he believes is the church’s disdain for him, simply doesn’t care. To a man, the man who credibly loves him is his measure, for good or ill.

The measure of a man is the man in his life who loves him the best? Nah. That's a recipe for failure.

Maxwell had a good setup to transition this to what a "real man" according to the Bible looks like. For instance,

1 Kings 2: 1As David's time to die drew near, he charged Solomon his son, saying, 2 "I am going the way of all the earth. Be strong, therefore, and show yourself a man. 3 Keep the charge of the Lord your God, to walk in His ways, to keep His statutes, His commandments, His ordinances, and His testimonies, according to what is written in the Law of Moses, that you may succeed in all that you do and wherever you turn, 4 so that the Lord may carry out His promise which He spoke concerning me, saying, 'If your sons are careful of their way, to walk before Me in truth with all their heart and with all their soul, you shall not lack a man on the throne of Israel.'

Real men focus on putting their strength in God first, and everything flows from that. But Maxwell misses the context plaguing men again and again, and if you do a secular based analysis without information your opinion on a Biblical worldview you only get failure.

The posts in this series have honestly gotten progressively worse over time. Aaron's was obviously pretty solid as he's known about the 'sphere for a long time, but the subsequent posters are more and more unfamiliar. Their boomer complementarianism colors their view of what they are saying, or they just aren't taking actual Biblical worldviews and relying on secular analysis.

7. Aaron Renn's final response

I won't be covering Renn's final response because it's just an extremely brief sum up of the articles with one comment. Thus this is the last post.

Honestly, this last one is so dismal I didn't even really want to cover it.

> The continued push for equality between the sexes has been a disaster—not because equality is a bad thing, but because it is a good thing, and good things only come from God.
> Having anything to say on the issue of gender roles is like walking in on a domestic dispute to offer advice. Even worse, being on the spectrum makes me the last person you would ask for help with interpersonal relationships. But a terrible driver might yet make a good mechanic.

There's no such thing as equality. It's not something God cares about which is why He doesn't discuss it at all in the Bible.

What God does care about is headship and submission, love and respect, and honoring others. While one may claim that some of these are analogous to "equality" (e.g. Jesus washing the disciples feet or loving others), that is tunneling in to what the world considers important rather than what God does which is caring about others.

Matthew 20:25 Jesus called them together and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their high officials exercise authority over them.

Trying to force equality on the Bible is the same worldly mistake as high officials trying to exercise authority over others, except in the reverse direction.

> The end of feminism
> Like the movie Thelma and Louise, feminism has been a tragedy in three acts. Abuse led to recklessness, further abuse, and now, despite continued calls to > turn around, third wave feminism, as a vehicle of liberation, has shifted gears into its final nihilistic gesture.

> Freedom from reality is not really freedom, and feminism as a social construct is not reality. Real-life evidence comes, strangely, from the failed UK reality TV show Eden. In an experimental attempt to create a new utopia, the participants were left to fend for themselves for a year in remote countryside. But instead of proving that the differences between the sexes are essentially social constructs, the absence of social structures allowed the sex differences to quickly reassert themselves. The men became lazy brutes, the women were treated as maids and sex objects, and the show was cancelled.
> While it is easy to demonize feminism because of what it has become, the independence it has achieved means that there is no going back. But the agenda will accelerate into oblivion unless the Church can offer a better destination. Providing a Promised Land is, ironically and inescapably, the job of men.

Feminism = bad. Mmmkay.

> ## Dominion, not domination
> That land is not the Manosphere. Like the Death Star, this brave new world was a man-made bubble. Instead of a light filling the earth with abundance, the men's rights movement is a pale moon in a distant orbit with a chip on its shoulder, circling society like a pirate ship. The issue is not a battle but a troubled marriage, which means that ongoing conflict makes everyone a loser.
> Men exploited women, now women exploit men. Men respond by inventing new ways to exploit women. Feminism rebels against the commodification of women but merely results in commodification of a different kind.
> This is domination instead of dominion, a Baalistic appropriation of the blessings promised by God. Seizing territory and farming the land are different things, as different as impatience is from patience. Like feminism, the Manosphere is an expression of angst in the creeping barrenness that is sterilizing secular humanism from the earth.
> As a response to abuses suffered under the overreach of the women's rights movement, masculism boils down to Adam seizing Eve's half-eaten fruit. Like feminism, the men's rights movement desires something good but is disqualified by its method (2 Timothy 2:5). Intimidation is the death of intimacy. Theft is the nemesis of grace. Men calculate and women manipulate, demanding from the other what can only be obtained as a gift. As soon as it is seized, it is a worthless counterfeit, and what was once intoxicating becomes toxic.

Rehashing Peter Leithart and Bill Smith's boomer complementarianism. Already critiqued this in the previous posts.

> God made a world in which equality can never be taken but only bestowed. I know a married couple who have lost all reason. He goes out of his way to love and spoil her, far beyond what she could ever possibly deserve, and she respects and honors him far beyond what he could ever possibly deserve. It is almost comical. Neither of them seems to realize how insane they are.

This is not equality in any sense of the words used by feminism (equals) or the Bible (not used in the Bible). Bull is trying to somehow marry the two — that's exactly how complementarianism was developed in the first place — by impressing feminism onto Biblical concepts.

Bull also conveniently leaves out submission by the wife including only respect and honor.

> The source of all inequality in the world, and its remedy, are found in the relationship between the Father and the Son by the Spirit. For Adam, Jesus, and by extension, Eve, and the Church, equality in any God-ordained sphere is not something to be grasped but received (Philippians 2:6-8). The forbidden fruit always comes to us freely from God's hand when we are ready to freely give.
> This arrangement, so counterintuitive to us, is an outflow of God's own "seed and harvest" character. All of life is death-and-resurrection. To preserve what was intended to be sacrificed is to kill it. He who would save his masculinity will lose it. She who would be delivered from masculinity will be made more vulnerable to it.

It's interesting Bull reference these verses:

Philippians 2:6 Who, being in very nature God, did not consider equality with God something to be used to his own advantage; 7 rather, he made himself nothing by taking the very nature of a servant, being made in human likeness. 8 And being found in appearance as a man, he humbled himself by becoming obedient to death— even death on a cross!

This is an example of Jesus submitting to God, so by the very analogy (e.g. God:Jesus as well as Christ:Church::husbands:wives) we can consider that wives should not consider "equality" with a husband something to be grasped but are servants to their husbands even obedient unto death. This is synonymous with 1 Peter 3 where Sarah is lauded as being submissive and obedient to Abraham even in situations where Abraham lied by omission to Pharoah and Abimelech and almost caused her to commit adultery with possibly the violence of war breaking out.

Oh wait. That's probably not what he was going for there.

> ## The abolition of Adam
> The offer to the Woman was always intended to trap the Man that they might both be cut off.

> Feminism delivered women from bad men by emancipating them from womanhood. Germaine Greer's "female eunuch," repressed sexually by the constraints of culture, sought to be free of the chains of nature but became something unnatural, something sexless. To Greer's chagrin, external feminine attributes are now fetishized by transexuals, so even womanhood has been appropriated by men. The revolution always eats its own.
> As we know, feminism also disenfranchized men. The masculization of women not only emasculates men, it also feminizes the world and alienates men from it. Increasingly, we are a society of male and female eunuchs. What we have stolen from each other has turned to ashes in our mouths. However, "punching up" is not the same for men as it is for women. Given the opportunity, yet at great cost, women can abandon their God-given roles for those of men. But the men who have found themselves without purpose as a result of this experiment have either given mere lip service to the cause, opted out of reality entirely, or circled the wagons to create a "safe space."
> The problem is that in none of these three scenarios can men be men in the way that God intended, so we have to settle for cosplay. S*elf-conscious* masculinity is little more than anti-drag. It looks into the mirror for validation instead of being transformed by the Word of God.
> True masculine attributes are the natural outgrowth of husbandry—the fruit of a life voluntarily given to being food and shelter for others as a tree of righteousness. When it comes to the hearts of men, God judges the book and then designs the cover. Ask Adam. His use of studied externals, a cloak of dead leaves to hide the absence of fruit, was the first act of manly virtue signaling.

Bull's analysis of feminism is too basic and, to no one's surprise, complementarian in nature.

Feminism is not just bad for men, it's also bad for most if not all women. The main women that benefit are the most attractive women because of the ensuing dysfunction in the relationship and marriage marketplace harms most men and women at the benefit of the top few. Feminism pushes not just for the feminization of men but also for the masculinization of women. Both are bad.

These examples and many more are why there are no redeeming qualities of feminism.

> ## A man's world
> Where the Spirit of God harmonizes things that were set at odds by sin (truth and love, man and woman, priesthood and kingdom), the world deals with disharmony by attempting to homogenize them. But the gifts of God can never be revoked, the Man's headship can never be abolished, and his responsibility for the Woman can never be evaded.
> A man is a mission, born as a drawn bow and held in a necessary tension. His life > itself is a tour of duty. His identity is indivisible from his purpose, which is why the pent-up, puffed up potency of the Manosphere is ultimately impotent without God.

> In contrast, a Christian man, whether single or married, is never without purpose. The single life is priestly and the married life is priest-kingly. In either case, and in any domain or pursuit, submission to heaven as a child of God brings dominion of the earth as a father to people. We are to be passive before heaven that we might be active upon the earth. We see this one-and-many in Jesus' ministry of prayerful solitude and public preaching. A godly man mediates between heaven and earth. His strength, like his mission, comes from above.

Generally correct, but like most of the boomer complementarians they also refuse to reject feminism or call out female rebellion. You really can't discuss men without discussing women, especially if we're talking about relationships and marriage.

> In its attempt to deal with rogue males, however, the Church has made the same mistake as the world, turning the exploiters into the exploited. By divorcing Jesus' priestly ministry from His subsequent enthronement, the Church has beaten men into submission under the banner of "servant-leadership." Godliness in now considered to be passivity on the earth. The Man receives orders from God and from the Woman.
> But Jesus now possesses all authority. Priestly humility qualifies one for kingly rule. A priestly man is not a butler but a guardian. The term "servant-leadership," which implies passivity, needs to be replaced with the term "priest-kingdom." A man has the authority required in order to serve but it is still authority. Moses was the meekest man who ever lived and he was no pushover.
> But our rights as heirs are always preceded by priestly responsibilities. Fixation with rights turns everyone into an accuser and results in discord. A focus on responsibilities turns everyone into an advocate and harmonizes the world as God designed.

Bull begins to go astray from the mark again here.

While it's true focusing on rights is often the wrong way to go about things, the focus on responsibilities is as well. Honing in onto responsibilities is precisely what "servant-leadership" purports to do in the first place. This inevitably morphs into the focus of serving your wife, Church, etc. Bull basically just trades servant-leadership for the same thing under a different name.

Finding your mission and thus your role is the most important thing because that grounds your responsibilities to pleasing God rather than your wife, Church, or man.

> ## The Bible is the problem
> The "discord" of sexual hierarchy established in Genesis 2 was not, as some > claim, a result of sin, yet, like the “not-good” firmament in Genesis 1, it is indeed a temporary divide that aches for resolution.

> Complementarians rightly argue that the entire Bible presents male headship as the norm, while egalitarians rightly argue that the Bible itself demonstrates a gradual shift towards equality between the sexes. As in a domestic dispute, both parties have legitimate grievances, and both justify their position from the Word of God.
> The Scriptures themselves thus present us with an apparent contradiction. Is there a theological solution that takes both male headship and female equality in its stride without violating either one? Most certainly.
> Priest-kingdom works with the grain of the created order. God prepares all of us for glory, but men especially, by getting us out of our comfort zones. What He made is good but He intends to make it great—to broaden our shoulders for a more glorious mantle and greater burdens (Isaiah 9:6; Hebrews 2:10).
> The Tabernacle, a tent of sacrifice, was humaniform, cruciform, because a man is a house designed to be inhabited by God (John 1:14; 1 Corinthians 3:16-17). Adam was opened up so that his bride could be built by God. He was then expected to “empty himself” as a safe space for his wife and children. Tested as a servant (priesthood), the house would become a household (kingdom). Adam would then speak as God’s legal representative (prophecy).
> The roles of priest, king, and prophet were expected to be fulfilled by Adam in the Garden. They then played out corporately in the history of Israel. As a process of growth to maturity, they also correspond to the three waves of feminism, but it is a false prophetess. The only lasting solution is a society of priest-kingly men like Jesus instead of usurpers like Herod.

Complementarians argue that headship is the norm is correct, but their headship is figureheadship. Egalitarians are simply wrong there is equality.

I simply have no clue what he is talking about in the last 3 paragraphs though as they don’t even relate to complementarian version of figureheadship and female equality, even if there was such things.

> ## The throne of Eve
> As James B. Jordan has observed, the Bible mentions kings and queens, and prophets and prophetesses, but no priestesses. This is because the empowerment of the Woman depends upon the prior faithfulness of the Man. Like the Man, the Woman was designed for glory, but she requires a godly enabler. This is biblical feminism.
> Women are prone to striving for inclusion at the expense of orthodoxy. Thus, if a woman takes the office of priest, she is sawing off the very branch upon which she sits in safety (Isaiah 47:7-9). The Old Covenant priesthood was entirely male > because the Sanctuary was not safe for the Woman. This is also why Jesus' disciples were all male, even at the Last Supper. The serpent had not yet been crushed by the Man. Until this happens in our culture, the Man and the Woman will continue to crush each other under foot.

> Like Eve, although married to the king, Esther was little more than a chattel, a thing. We see the same progression in the difference between the Ten Commandments in Exodus and their repetition in Deuteronomy. The woman is not longer a possession but has been given co-regency in the "resurrected" order.
> Once enthroned, the ascended Christ sent His Spirit to gather the bride, a corporate Woman who would not be deceived because she had a better Adam than the Herodian "man of sin" (Matthew 24:24; 2 Thessalonians 2:1-4). Revelation begins with a vision of this Adam, ends with a vision of His Eve, and in between there is the "carnage" of the spiritual war against the dragon. Once defeated, the saints are enthroned with Jesus just as Esther was enthroned with Ahasuerus. If Adam had been faithful, both he and Eve would have been robed in righteousness as co-regents and joint-heirs.
> Since God always works through a process of planting and harvest, gender roles, while distinct, are not static. They are covenantal, that is, they proceed from promises to fulfillments. God gives us a "firstfruits" taste of coming glories, a downpayment of grapes or wine or even the Spirit of God, and prepares us for the glorious burden of wise government on His behalf.
> So, the difference between secular feminism and biblical feminism is that feminism grasps (or manufactures) what God has in store while biblical feminism receives it in God's time.
> Biblical feminism sees the Woman exalted to the status of co-regent via the faithfulness of the exalted Man. Feminism seizes the throne, appoints self-interested flatterers and sycophants, and alienates those who would truly protect the people.

One must wonder by Bull keeps pushing a bibical version of feminism. Bull is right that Christians are co-heirs with Christ, but he also misses the point where Christ rejects the disobedient believers in Revelation 2 and 3. Jesus says "if you love me, obey my commandments."

Only the obedient are lifted up by the one in authority. Those who are disobedient are disciplined. The "godly enabler" is only enabling insofar as the one who is being enabled respects and submits to authority. If Esther was disobedient to the king like Vashti then she would have ended up the same as her.

God's love is indeed unconditional, but that love has different responses to obedience (repentance) and disobedience/rebellion (hell). Same with the husband and wife.

This is why we can't understand the roles and responsibilities of only men as has been seen through the past few articles. Ignore womens' agency to sin and rebel is extremely perilous.

> A church truly governed by godly men will be filled with godly, empowered women. But due to a failure to think in terms of covenant process and sacred architecture, complementarians describe the liturgical role of women in terms of what it is not.
> Egalitarians rightly complain that if women are expected to keep silent in the Church, why are there so many vociferous women in the Bible? This is not a question of why but of where and when. The women at the tomb were told to testify about the resurrection of a Man. Their testimony was a response to the Word. Their domain is outside the Sanctuary, an image of the testimony of the Bride of Christ to the nations.

Bull makes a weird argument about outside of the domain vs inside. I don't think that is correct. Evangelizing and prophesying (all Christians) are not the same thing as teaching or leadership positions (men only).

I already covered why some of these types of examples are terrible in other articles such as women in leadership positions.

> The light of the bridal city is the Lamb of God. Only a lamb is worthy to open the scroll in the Sanctuary. A self-sacrificial man in the Garden is a light to all men and women. A female priest has removed the linch-pin decreed by God for the maintenance of the Sanctuary.
> The role of the "preacher" has been conflated with that of the prophet. If there are prophetesses, why cannot a woman be a priest? The answer is that all roles are prophetic. The faithful priest will speak for God. The faithful king and queen will speak for God. The faithful prophet and prophetess will speak for God. The Bible is filled with wise, wily women, yet not a single one of them was an egalitarian.

And not a single one was complementarian.

> The voice of the bride in the Scriptures is always a response to the "male" Word, and very often it is a brutal song of victory. In the case of Esther, the legal "prophecy" was the identification of the serpent. I suspect that if Adam had spoken as a prophet against the lie of the devil, it would have been Eve who suggested that he kill it. It is by God's design that women not only are capable of unfathomable springs of love but also, when betrayed, of a fury that is hotter than hell.

A very strange argument again that is conceptually backwards. Women generally do not instigate violence except through more covert or underhanded means. Esther basically buttered up the king with banquets before exposing Haman. It was also Christ who is coming to rule and destroy the enemy and not really at the behest of the Church.

> All roles require faithful testimony as legal representatives of Christ. Godly women have plenty to say to godly men, as confidantes and advisors. Women perceive things that men do not. But there are also women who are singled out by God with the gift of prophecy. The Word flows out of them as a spring of life. To be encouraged, edified, or rebuked by one of these ladies is to hear from God Himself. Yet not one of them would ever dare to darken a pulpit. Their true glory is in their submission. They are empowered because their deference to God's way enables Him to bestow His power upon them.

And here we go again into the "wife is your Holy Spirit" territory instead of your wife is your helper. Inverting sex roles again like complementarian figureheadship does.

> ## Conclusion
> At the core of the debate over equality between the sexes is our failure to understand that the good things we desire cannot be grasped but only given to us. This is the heart of the Scriptures. Jesus Himself inherited all the kingdoms of the world but would only receive them from the hand of His Father.
> The way in which we receive good things is through patient faith and obedience—not because we are earning them but because we are not yet ready to bear them. That includes true equality between the sexes as co-regents in the Garden, the Land, and the World.

In conclusion, more false boomer complementarianism that you should ignore.

I won't be covering Aaron Renn's final response, but he did take issue to one of the things I said about feminine mystery.

Overall, I was hopeful with this series as Aaron is fairly versed with the manosphere, including the Christian portion of it. However, it was pretty clear starting with the 2nd article that there is still a lot of heretical feminist and boomer complementarian lenses still clouding the eyes of these men where they interpret the Scriptures incorrectly and give poor prescriptive advice.

This article in particular clearly summed it up for us: if you go along with their advice you'll just get more of the same just under a different name. Servant-leadership and boomer complementarian figureheadship are still two sides of the same coin as is men stepping up into responsibilities without authority and calling out female rebellion.

It's pretty sad because these men seemed like they really started to understand some of the concepts of the manosphere, but just found another way to twist the concepts to fit their own boomer complementarianism again. You can lead a horse to water but you can’t make it drink.

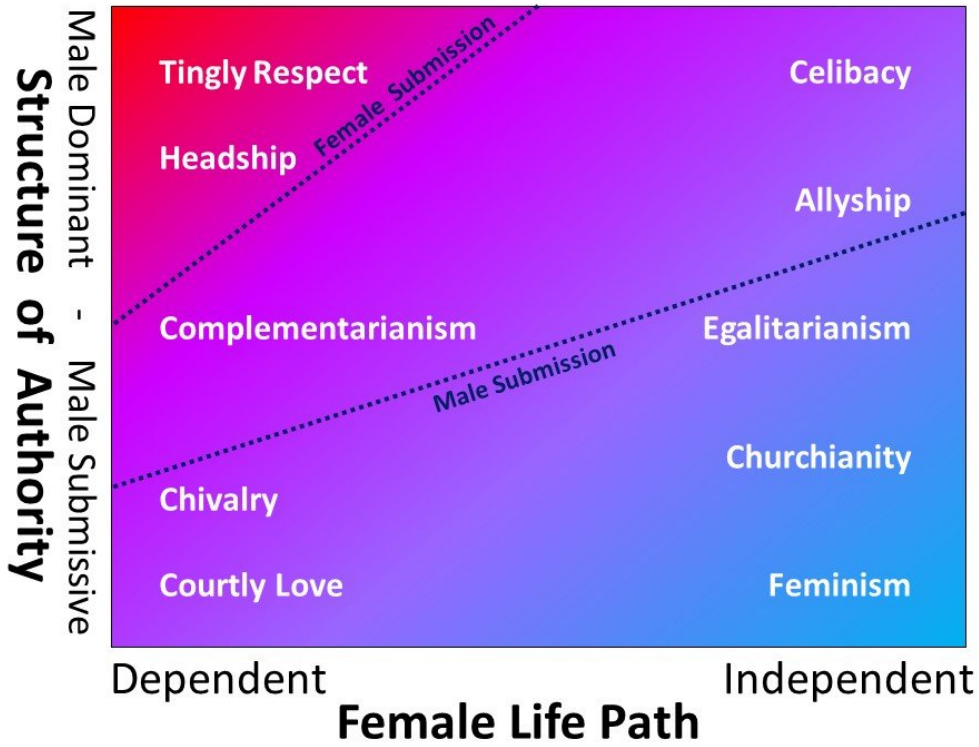
God and Moses and who’s who

November 10, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the more interesting things that I’ve seen as I’m re-reading the Pentateuch is that throughout Exodus to Deuteronomy the Israelites continue to rebel against God and Moses. This leads to conversations between God and Moses where the Lord wants to destroy Israel and Moses is “convincing” the Lord not to do it.

One lecture from the perspective of Jewish history found this particularly intriguing because it seems like Moses is playing the role of God (e.g. in being slower to anger and reminding God of His promises – as if God needed reminding) while God is playing the part of humans (e.g. in that He wants to, albeit justly, punish Israel for their sins).



> Matthew 5:48 Therefore you shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.

Perhaps this is to say that God is giving us a lesson that we too can be more like Him if only we exercised our will to walk by faith and the Holy Spirit. We don’t need to live by our own human temporal standards and instead think both from generation to generation and eternally.

The Bible and female life path

Going back to Jack's chart:

A few personal notes about this chart.

- The Bible commands either Headship or Celibacy. There is no other. That's what Biblical marriage is, and that's where the line is drawn.
- Complementarianism is the most deceptive for Christians because it is the closest to the Truth, but the lies in it produce the same fruit of the world (e.g. divorce, marital strife, etc.).
- In practice, the male submission line is the same line as the female submission line. Complementarians ultimately end up with male submission as they make a husband slave to his wife's feelings. Choreplay being one of the obvious ones, and of course the emphasis on servant*-leadership*.
- I'd argue that feminism is pretty much everything under the umbrella of male submission, just the most obvious word. Egalitarian "Christians" come in two groups; the ones that don't want to be grouped with the feminists and the ones that will admit it. They're both one and the same, except the ones who don't want to be grouped with the feminists are just deceiving themselves.
- To be it's really crazy in retrospect how chivarly and courtly love have been integrated into Christianity by most of western churches.

The more you move down the chart the further you get away from the Truth, and the more earthly consequences become more dire for both the man, the woman, and relationships and marriage. Good fruit is good fruit, and bad fruit is bad fruit.

It’ll be interesting to see how far the Church ends up deviating from this, and the consequences of that. The more progressive churches are losing members in droves and the conservative ones less but on a similar trend. Will be interesting to see at what point it stabilizes, perhaps like post-Christian Europe?

Summary of evaluating relationship or marital status and plans of action

November 26, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I think we should explore some of the processes from the Bible and the female life path.

Generally, the trajectory of a relationship or marriage seems to have several components.

The current status of the relationship or marriage:

- Headship/tingly respect
- Complementarianism
- Chivalry
- Courtly love
- Allyship
- Egalitarianism
- Churchianity
- Feminism

The past status of the relationship or marriage to now:

- Headship/tingly respect -> Headship/tingly respect
- Headship/tingly respect -> others
- Others -> Headship/tingly respect
- Others -> Others

Evaluating the good scenarios

Headship -> headship is the one that usually runs like clockwork and never has much issues, if both the husband and wife are fighting their own temptations and trying to be obedient to headship and love as well as respect and submission respectively.

Others -> headship are the ones that are able to be turned around. There's several examples of this including Dalrock, Cane, and others. Typically, the success of these can be used as a pattern to turn others around into headship.

Dalrock indicates that his was turned around by simple use of game. Whenever his wife tested him instead of DEERing (defending, explaining, rationalizing, or excusing) he either used some "game" (agree and amplify, etc.) or didn't give it attention. This seemed to rapidly turn around his marriage from his account at least. I'd estimate that they were fairly solidly complementarian (believed in headship) but his behavior was just frustrating his wife a bunch when he didn't act as a head should. It was a pretty easy turnaround.

Cane is a slightly different story. From his account I believe that he basically had a heart to heart with God in prayer after what he was doing wasn't working (probably DEERing). Instead, he accepted that being the head was going to make his wife angry sometimes and left that up to God. Act as the head, expect your wife to follow, and don't try to placate her emotions. By my estimation I expect that this was a bit more difficult than Dalrock's.

I'm not sure if there are more difficult examples that I know of, but there are more situations I know of that took far longer to turn around from the RP reddit. One of the mods took several years to turn it around.

Evaluating the bad scenarios

In these scenarios, typically it is the sex drying up that motivates most men to investigate their situation further. It's unfortunate that this is the primary motivator that start to drive them toward change, but at least it helps them understand that they are not in a situation that honors God in obedience with the Bible either on purpose or perhaps inadvertently (usually due to the teaching of churchianity that lines up more with the culture than the Bible).

Headship -> others is typically a scenario where you have the example that a woman was attracted at first because of any number of PSALMs (power, status, athleticism, looks, money) and the man was good to at least decent leader of the marriage. Over time, this is what the secular manosphere typically calls the "lazy or drunk captain" where the man doesn't lead anymore because he got lazy or is drunk and doesn't know what he's doing.

These cases seem to be the most easily turned around if the husband gets fit again and starts leading again. The resistance from the wife typically ranges from none to several months as she may test to see if he's actually back. This also ranges depending on how ingrained a wife is into leading and/or doing things herself and how much she has bought into the culture assumption that she should be doing this. The more in the latter case the more resistance there is to change back to headship.

Going from an other that is higher on the list such as complementarianism will face much less resistance overall than something like chivalry or feminism. This is to be expected because the greater the inversion of the relationship or marriage, the greater change that has to be had and the more drastic it will feel. In these cases, one would expect the reactions of the wife to be similarly drastic in accusative and negative emotions. This can be quite difficult for men to stand up to, especially ones that had very little to no backbone in the first place.

Others -> Others and the status of others seem to be the most problematic. Typically, these tend to be the cases of egalitarianism prior to the marriage and after (e.g. mutually decide on things but the woman is often the “tie break”) or some type of in chivalry/courtly love or feminist life path where the roles are strictly inverted (e.g. she wears the pants). It also seems to be the case where a woman or wife will be more in the relationship for her own status or financial support rather than because she wants to be with her boyfriend/husband as her attraction to him is nil to little to probably less than moderate.

The most common scenario seems to be when women close to the wall who suddenly stop dating bad boys and totally changes her behavior because she “learned her lesson.” Indeed, she will had let past men do more sexually than the man she is currently with and justify it by the same logic.

Now, these types of relationships have pretty much negative relational inertia and are the most difficult to turn around. A man who want to start acting as the head will encounter staunch resistance typically due to his inexperience with acting as a leader and the incongruent behavior that he exudes. His mission, masculinity, and frame have often taken a back seat, so it’s hard to learn how to do this.

The bull in a china shop can apply to men who try to do too much at once at first, but it’s also usually the case that the woman or wife will typically not like it in either case where he is overdoing it or not. However, this should still be calibrated by the man with other experienced men giving him advice. Men who are in this stage typically DEER a lot which sabotages their ability to lead.

In most of these cases, the biggest gains to be had initially are from physical appearance changes. Going from skinny or fat and obese to muscular, dressing well, good grooming, styling, and smelling good typically brings in a notion of rational fear (e.g. RP term dread) to their woman that is beneficial due to both pre-selection of other women thinking he’s more attractive and the fact that he is getting his life together whereas she could only manipulate him before.

Changing behavior that is ingrained as habits is a slower process that is much more difficult to be quantitative on how it is working in the long run. The best advice I’ve found that works consistently is to focus on putting God first in everything especially in obedience to your own marital roles and responsibilities. Yes, you do want to call out your wife if she’s being disrespectful and disobedience, but acting as the head is much more important because she can only follow (at least eventually) if there is a model to follow. In these cases, you basically have to assume that you're literally restarting the relationship over again and therefore you must aim to build her trust in the new you especially by not being butthurt if she challenges you or gets in a huff or upset a lot.

In certain cases, of relationships or marriages that have existed and started in an other state for years or decades, it could be several months to years or more before you start to see an adequate turn around. In some cases, a wife might even just leave, so allow the unbeliever to go as it's more important to obey God rather than placate your wife.

Final thoughts

The vast majority of relationships or marriages seem to fall into generally definable categories that have some common characteristics. Some relationships and marriages are easier to turn around than others, and it is the case that not all relationships or marriages seem to be salvageable (at least by one party) if the other party is dead set on disrespect and rebellion.

One must make their decision to wholeheartedly follow Jesus wherever the path of obedience to God via the Bible may lead. This can definitely cause marital suffering, but it is worth it to obey God.

Relational archetypes and more insight into the false godliness of complementarianism theology

December 2, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Started to comment on Jack's More on Relational archetypes, but the comment was too long so we'll do it here.

> DS disagrees with Rollo's Cardinal Rule, but I think many relationships do play out this way, and so it needs to be considered. I think DS would agree that if both the man and the wife are aiming to glorify God in a Headship structure, then this competition should become much less of an issue.

I somewhat agree and disagree. I think most of the manosphereian rules also fall somewhat prey to the apex fallacy as well. In accordance with the sexual strategy rule, men who are most attractive will tend to default to a polygamist lifestyle and the women who are most attractive will default to a serial monogamy lifestyle.

Things does not necessarily play out to the stated scenario. In most societies, 90-95% of both men and women will marry. Also, most of the men and women who do want to marry — the "good" men — will marry off taking a bunch which means the women who don't marry will complain about "where did all the good men go?" Sure, some men may default to polygamy and some women will default to serial monogamy (the most attractive and/or narcissistic ones typically), but I would say most still prefer one relationship/marriage if they could have it.

The current marriage climate is seeing some disruptions to this model, but it seems to be for the most part not actually a large decline in people getting into relationships and only simply marriage itself. Since Christian morality went out the window more people are considering cohabitation in the short or long term instead of getting married. This makes up for the larger disparities in actual marriage.

> One thing is the placement of Celibacy on the graph. Celibacy is a unique relational position, because the woman is independent, but she still remains under the authority of her father. I think true celibacy is very rare, because most women are sexually involved with a man at least once in their life, and this upsets the clarity of authority over her head. Secular, independent, adult women who may or may not have been previously married, may not recognize any form of male authority over her, and if this is the case, then although she may not be sexually active, she fails to conform to the Christian archetype of true Celibacy. Older widows or single women whose father has died are special cases of Celibacy, if it can be called such. I have to offer a disclaimer on the details, as there are technicalities which I have not yet worked out in great detail.

Numbers 30 on vows is fairly instructive for how it was in Israel.

Young women were under the authority of their father, married women were under the authority of their husbands, and widows and divorced were independent and responsible. At the very least in the latter part of 1 Corinthians 7 seems to indicate that young women were/are still under the authority of their fathers in the New Covenant. 1 Timothy 5 does tell younger widows to marry because otherwise they became busybodies without a husband.

I don't think Numbers 30 applies to all cultures or anything like that (e.g. we're not under the Law and thus not under circumcision nor Numbers 30 vow structures), but they are good principles to understand, especially in light of 1 Corinthians 7 and 1 Timothy 5.

> It is fairly well known that the wife has much more influence than the husband towards creating happiness in a marriage. ("Defensive" may not be a very good word to describe this, but I am hard pressed to think of a better description.) To understand why this is, one only needs to consider the two dichotomies in the graph.
> - The man only has defacto authority if the woman has a "Thing" for him. Besides the plain fact that there are precious few men who are able to instill the blessed Tingles and/or exert masculine Headship, this status is somewhat unstable and always subject to change (c.f. hypergamy).
> - The woman's mindset and habits of submission are subject to her own discretion. She can always choose to be disobedient and/or disrespectful.

> Because of this dynamic, it is more accurate to use the husband's happiness as an indicator of his wife's spiritual maturity, and less accurate to trust the converse proposition as an indicator of the husband's worth, as is customary within Churchianity.

I disagree with the premise that women have more influence. A crappy wife or a crappy husband can make the conditions of a marriage miserable both ways. In particular, to the second point that respect and submission are at the behest of a wife, so too are a husband's headship and love. I do, however, acknowledge there are typically more disrespectful and rebellious wives objectively than lazy and good for nothing husbands. This tendency is more a product of the culture than anything. I'd expect some more of the opposite when patriarchal norms are more accepted at least.

However, the happiness of a spouse should never have dependent on the state of a marriage in the first place. Such is living in step with the Spirit where the disciples can sing joyfully in the prison after they were beaten.

Obviously, God has it right in the fact that He made Biblical marital roles and responsibilities unconditional — the good and godly behavior of a spouse can influence the other toward Christ. The major issue is that we're often bound by our own timelines, and we wish or hope that change is more immediate which can cause mismatched expectations and covert contracts which sabotage the efficacy of God's structures.

> In the former post, DS said that the dotted male submission line is the same line as the female submission line. I separated these two lines because there is a grey area in real-life relationships, in which there is some degree of mutual submission depending on the issue. This is best exemplified by a Complementarian structure in which the man and wife hold traditional gender roles. The man is an authority in certain areas, such as politics, religious doctrines, and which car to buy, while the woman is an authority in other areas, such as the frequency of church attendance, choosing a school for the children, and how child rearing is to be implemented. In a true Headship, the wife consults her husband on every decision and follows his directive accordingly. She rarely (if ever) insists on having things "her way", and instead, finds joy in discovering the purposes behind her husband's directives.

Complementarianism claims that the husband and wife discuss everything and then the husband's vote is a tie break. What happens in practice is everything is all well and good as long as the husband is making decisions that the wife likes, but when he doesn't she emotionally manipulates him until she gets her way. Ironically, this is pretty much similar to how things run in egalitarian and most non-feminist but egalitarian relationships and marriages. The only time you have women in charge explicitly is when the woman/wife actually literally says she wears the pants.

On the surface there is the claim that these things are happening, but under the surface they are all the same: disrespect and manipulation tactics are coming a man's way if he wants something that she disagrees with. That's why I still think the lines are in the same place. When push comes to shove, the wife is in control or exerts tactics to make sure she gets what she wants.

One aspect I've noticed is that the more a husband and wife agree on most everything in the case of complementarianism or other non-feminists structures the more ambiguous it looks to us. However, many of the complementarians will take this as a sign of godliness — "wow, their marriage is so great because they're in agreement on everything." If we remember back to CBMW's definition of headship, their interpretation of Scripture is the husband and wife should agree on everything and if they disagree then the husband gets the tie break.

However, this is not a sign of godliness but just two people getting along well usually by personality and underlying dynamic. When push comes to shove and the husband decides something that his wife doesn't like, we'll see how godly she is with her respect and submission. The wives who pass this test of godliness today are definitely in the minority.

Moreover, this incorrect assumption of “godliness by agreement” gives the layperson husband and wives (and even pastors I believe) the wrong impression and makes it much more difficult to have real* godliness when there is actually a disagreement. For instance, “we had such a godly marriage until this came up” — no, not really. You agreed with each other a bunch because you have similar personalities and there was no conflict. When conflict came, your real character and ability to honor God was revealed. And it wasn’t pretty.

True headship does not require consulting on every directive because authority is able to be delegated in the Scripture and can be by a husband. For example, if a wife has expertise in a certain area a husband might delegate that to her and also if there are minor decisions like day to day life style he can say I trust your judgment on them.

> When people describe marriage as “hard work” or “requiring work”, I like to think they are referring to the daily tasks required to maintain or progress towards a Christ honoring Headship. This may or may not be the case, depending on the personalities involved, but it needs to be emphasized that when we talk about a Christian marriage, we aren’t just talking about a wedding ceremony and the related legal documents. No, a Christian marriage is defined/determined by whether it is characterized by Headship — male authority and female submission. Any other type of relational structure is not a Christian marriage by definition. Either or both the husband or wife may or may not be Christians, but without Headship, they don’t have a Christian marriage.

I mostly agree with this. I have a friend who is a pastor who has said his marriage is hard work. He also married a pretty head strong woman. I don’t know his exact view, but I’m pretty sure they’re both complemenetarians, and they have a hard time implementing it because of her strong will to want to do things her way. Same with my parents.

> This gets sticky when we realize that it is possible for two people to be unbelievers, yet still have a Christ-like relationship. This is true because all humanity remains under the pre-Edenic Covenant.

Yes, the structures of authority that God created at the beginning anyone can benefit from. Hopefully, they are able to recognize that they are in God’s plan and turn to Him, but they still reap many of the benefits of stability and peace from being within it even though they don’t acknowledge Him.

> Another way to succinctly describe this “move” from one relationship structure to another is carried in the concepts of redemption and sanctification. A man’s marriage and family experience redemption when a Headship structure is attained and/or maintained. This means that God is able to use this marriage and family for His purposes towards holiness, glory, growth, and bearing fruit, rather than it being relegated to a common, real life, sitcom drama filled with self-centered sins of ignorance.
> Sanctification is also more likely to occur in Headship. But this is a little more > complicated, because the man, or especially the woman, may not find internal joy and contentment in adopting the Headship structure. This weakness becomes more pronounced with women who are steeped in the Strong Independent Wimmin™ mindset, and/or who have a sordid sexual history and can no longer bond to a man in marriage.

Agree here as well.

What we can say about the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities is that, like the Christ and the Church, they aim to bring about oneness. The husband heads the marriage with love for the purpose of sanctification and honors his wife and treats her like himself, and the wife submits and respects her husband. Both are required to kill their own ego and be concerned about obeying God and giving their spouse what God says they need.

The God ordained way to gain a husband's trust and enable him to lead

December 7, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One thing I find most interesting is the Churchian way of manipulating Scriptures to say what they way. For instance, the passages of Esther, Abigail, and Ruth are particularly instructive to show how women should act to gain the favor and trust of men, but they're upheld as something where the women were acting independent and feminist.

That's hardly the case at all. Let's look into them again.

> Esther 5:1 On the third day Esther put on her royal robes and stood in the inner court of the palace, in front of the king's hall. The king was sitting on his royal throne in the hall, facing the entrance. 2 When he saw Queen Esther standing in the court, he was pleased with her and held out to her the gold scepter that was in his hand. So Esther approached and touched the tip of the scepter.3 Then the king asked, "What is it, Queen Esther? What is your request? Even up to half the kingdom, it will be given you."4 "If it pleases the king," replied Esther, "let the king, together with Haman, come today to a banquet I have prepared for him."5 "Bring Haman at once," the king said, "so that we may do what Esther asks."So the king and Haman went to the banquet Esther had prepared. 6 As they were drinking wine, the king again asked Esther, "Now what is your petition? It will be given you. And what is your request? Even up to half the kingdom, it will be granted."7 Esther replied, "My petition and my request is this: 8 If the king regards me with favor and if it pleases the king to grant my petition and fulfill my request, let the king and Haman come tomorrow to the banquet I will prepare for them. Then I will answer the king's question."
> Esther 7:7 So the king and Haman went to Queen Esther's banquet, 2 and as they were drinking wine on the second day, the king again asked, "Queen Esther, what is your petition? It will be given you. What is your request? Even up to half the kingdom, it will be granted." 3 Then Queen Esther answered, "If I have found favor with you, Your Majesty, and if it pleases you, grant me my life—this is my petition. And spare my people—this is my request. 4 For I and my people have been sold to be destroyed, killed and annihilated. If we had merely been sold as male and female slaves, I would have kept quiet, because no such distress would justify disturbing the king."

Prior to this, Esther prays that God would give her favor so she wouldn't be killed going into the presence of the king.

1. When she goes in she dolls herself up in royal garb and I'm sure she has had a ton of the beauty treatments too.
2. Before petitioning, she butters up the king with a banquet not once but twice! This is the opposite of Vashti who deliberately disobeys the king and humiliates him.

> 1 Samuel 25:23 When Abigail saw David, she quickly got off her donkey and bowed down before David with her face to the ground. 24 She fell at his feet and said: “Pardon your servant, my lord, and let me speak to you; hear what your servant has to say. 25 Please pay no attention, my lord, to that wicked man Nabal. He is just like his name—his name means Fool, and folly goes with him. And as for me, your servant, I did not see the men my lord sent. 26 And now, my lord, as surely as the Lord your God lives and as you live, since the Lord has kept you from bloodshed and from avenging yourself with your own hands, may your enemies and all who are intent on harming my lord be like Nabal. 27 And let this gift, which your servant has brought to my lord, be given to the men who follow you.
> 28 “Please forgive your servant’s presumption. The Lord your God will certainly make a lasting dynasty for my lord, because you fight the Lord’s battles, and no wrongdoing will be found in you as long as you live. 29 Even though someone is pursuing you to take your life, the life of my lord will be bound securely in the bundle of the living by the Lord your God, but the lives of your enemies he will hurl away as from the pocket of a sling. 30 When the Lord has fulfilled for my lord every good thing he promised concerning him and has appointed him ruler over Israel, 31 my lord will not have on his conscience the staggering burden of needless bloodshed or of having avenged himself. And when the Lord your God has brought my lord success, remember your servant.” 32 David said to Abigail, “Praise be to the Lord, the God of Israel, who has sent you today to meet me. 33 May you be blessed for your good judgment and for keeping me from bloodshed this day and from avenging myself with my own hands. 34 Otherwise, as surely as the Lord, the God of Israel, lives, who has kept me from harming you, if you had not come quickly to meet me, not one male belonging to Nabal would have been left alive by daybreak.”
> 35 Then David accepted from her hand what she had brought him and said, “Go home in peace. I have heard your words and granted your request.”

Prior to this, Abigail’s husband doesn’t give any hospitality to David even after he was protecting him for a long time. So David came for retribution.

1. Abigail falls with her face to the ground in a submissive position
2. She apologizes for her husband’s sin (not even her own!).
3. She brings a gift for David
4. She butters him up by saying that God will give him success

> Ruth 3: 1Then her mother-in-law Naomi said to her, “My daughter, shall I not seek security for you, that it may go well for you? 2 Now then, is Boaz not our relative, with whose young women you were? Behold, he is winnowing barley at the threshing floor tonight. 3 Wash yourself therefore, and anoint yourself, and > put on your best clothes, and go down to the threshing floor; but do not reveal yourself to the man until he has finished eating and drinking. 4 And it shall be when he lies down, that you shall take notice of the place where he lies, and you shall go and uncover his feet and lie down; then he will tell you what you should do." 5 And she said to her, "All that you say I will do."

> 6 So she went down to the threshing floor and did according to all that her mother-in-law had commanded her. 7 When Boaz had eaten and drunk and his heart was cheerful, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of grain; and she came secretly, and uncovered his feet and lay down. 8 And it happened in the middle of the night that the man was startled and bent forward; and behold, a woman was lying at his feet. 9 So he said, "Who are you?" And she answered, "I am Ruth your slave. Now spread your garment over your slave, for you are a redeemer." 10 Then he said, "May you be blessed of the Lord, my daughter. You have shown your last kindness to be better than the first, by not going after young men, whether poor or rich. 11 So now, my daughter, do not fear. I will do for you whatever you say, for all my people in the city know that you are a woman of excellence. 12 But now, although it is true that I am a redeemer, yet there is also a redeemer more closely related than I. 13 Remain this night, and when morning comes, if he will redeem you, good; let him redeem you. But if he does not wish to redeem you, then I will redeem you, as the Lord lives. Lie down until morning."

Prior to this, Naomi and Ruth found out Boaz was a kinsman redeemer and so should marry Ruth. However, did they go demand that he did? Nope.

1. Naomi counsels Ruth to doll herself up by washing and putting on her best clothes.
2. Naomi counsels her to be indirect and put herself in a submissive position to Boaz
3. Ruth not only puts herself in a submissive position but makes it explicit by calling herself Boaz's slave before presenting her request for him to redeem her.

In all of these scenarios, there are common themes:

- Make yourself beautiful and dress up in your best clothes
- Make sure the man/husband is well fed directly (throwing banquets) or indirectly (after a celebration/party) so that's he's satisfied.
- Put yourself in a submissive position by either bowing down or getting on your knees
- Apologize if needed without bringing up the faults of others, and bring a gift if needed
- Use wise words to acknowledge leadership: "if it pleases you…", "if I have found favor…", etc.
- Only after ALL of that then present any request that you have

How can a husband not want to lead when his wife is doing all these great things to satisfy him?

Ironically, the common wisdom to win men a generation ago and prior to that was:

1. Keep fit and beautiful
2. Keep your husband well fed
3. Keep his balls dry, ostensibly by enthusiastic and frequent sex
4. Be kind and submissive and not demanding or contentious

Fairly Biblical wisdom at the end of the day, if not worded differently.

Now, women want to confront their husband and demand he do stuff and wonder why it doesn't influence him in a godly or positive manner.

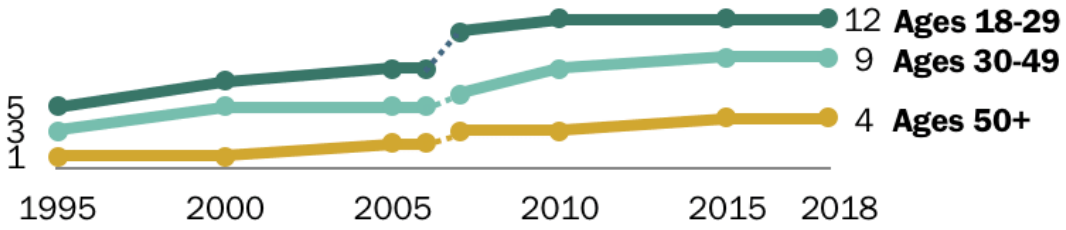
To tie this all together, from the previous few posts:

- Relational archetypes and more insight into the false godliness of complementariansim theology
- The Bible and the female life path

This is how women/wives put themselves into the Biblical headship structure with respect and submission. Is there any doubt that God will usually bless wives with favor if they act in this way toward their husband?

Marriage and cohabitation data and analysis which refutes common assertions

December 8, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link



I went back and looked over Dalrock's most recent never married data from 2017.

[image]

Then I compared it to the cohabitation data over the past two decades.

Cohabitation rates have plateaued over past decade

% of adults who are cohabiting, by age group

Note: In 2007, the Current Population Survey added a new cohabitation question. Estimates from 2007 to 2018 are based on this measure.
Source: Pew Research Center analysis of 1995-2018 Current Population Survey, Annual Social and Economic Supplement (IPUMS).
"Marriage and Cohabitation in the U.S."

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Overall, it appears as if we can approximate the 25-30 and 30-45 data from Dalrock's charts to compare them over to the cohabitation rates to see if cohabitation is making up for the disparity in non-married women.

According to various statistical analyses, 90-95% of women and men across all cultures eventually end up married at some point. Therefore, we want to compare this data to the disruptions in marriage to see how much marriage has actually declined, or if cohabitation is making up the difference between marriage and never marrieds.

18-29 year old range: From 2004, there is an 16% and 11% jump from the 25 and 30 never marrieds respectively. Although we don't have the population numbers, we know the average is within the 11-16% range. From about 2005, the cohabitation rate has gone up from about 6-7% to 12% which is a 5-6% jump.

Therefore, the actual disparity in never marrieds is somewhere between about 6-9% of the population, while another 5-6% of never marrieds have turned to cohabitation instead of marriage.

30-49 year old range: From Dalrock's chart we see that there is an 11% increase in 30 year olds, 7% increase in 35 year olds, 4% increase in 40 year olds, and about 3% increase in 45 year olds. If we assume the population is fairly consistent across all age bands (normally, it's fairly consistent), the average would be (11+7+4+3)/4 = 25/4 = 6.25% increase overall in this age range. The cohabitation rate of 30-49 year old range from 2005-2018 suggests about 4% or so to 9% which is a 5% difference.

Therefore, the actual disparity of marriage to never marrieds is not overall a 6.25% aggregated average difference, but 6.25% – 5% or only 1.25% difference. In other words, cohabitation makes up the significant difference in in never marrieds to married gap.

Also, in another cohabitation analysis I found the first paragraph to be relatively commonplace now though wrong, but the second part I found to be startling.

> Young adults are particularly accepting of cohabitation – 78% of those ages 18 to 29 say it's acceptable for an unmarried couple to live together, even if they don't plan to get married – but majorities across age groups share this view. Still, even among those younger than 30, a substantial share (45%) say society is better off if couples who want to stay together long-term eventually get married. Roughly half of those ages 30 to 49 say the same, as do majorities of those ages 50 and older.
> Views about marriage and cohabitation are also linked to religious affiliation. About three-quarters of Catholics (74%) and white Protestants who do not self-identify as born-again or evangelical (76%) say it's acceptable for an unmarried couple to live together even if they don't plan to get married. By contrast, only 47% of black Protestants and 35% of white evangelical Protestants share this view. And while half or more across these groups say society is better off if couples who want to stay together long-term eventually get married, white evangelicals are the most likely to say this (78% do so). Among those who are not religiously affiliated, fully nine-in-ten say cohabitation is acceptable even if a couple doesn't plan to get married, and just 31% say society is better off if couples who want to stay together eventually get married.

I find the Catholics accepting cohabitation to be very weird given the doctrine on marriage, but the disparity between doctrine and actual results have always been an issue at least in the US. If I remember correctly, US Catholics get 50% of the annulments when they're only like 5% of the world's Catholic populatino.

The other mainline Protestants have fallen to feminism already so that makes sense. However, the rates of the other Protestants aren't particularly that surprising when you consider that they have a divorce rate in the 30-40% range. Clearly the lack of belief in the permanence of marriage and acceptance of cohabitation where ostensibly pre-marital sex is being had is of no big concern.

Overall analysis

This data suggests that in the 18-29 year old age group, the approximate 12-16% never married to married gap is prolonged singleness for about 50-60% of the persons while the other 40-50% will choose cohabitation instead of married. On the other hand in the 30-49 year old age groups, there is no significant never married to marriage gap if we take into account that approximately 80% (5%) of the people select cohabitation instead of getting married while only 20% (1.25%) will be never married and never choose cohabitation.

Thus, even with the ensuing obesity epidemic people are still pairing off by age 45-50 to greater than a 90% rate given the lowest pairings of never marrieds are at 12.8% and the cohabitators at 50 are 4%. This yields: 12.8% – 4% = 8.8% never marrieds and no cohabitation. This is fairly consistent with the 90-95% of people get married across all cultures.

This analysis also refutes the common assertion that there are large scale different outcomes in both the secular and Christian manosphere by age 45-50.

Even though there are disruptions in the lower age group ranges (e.g. 18-30ish), these are probably due to prolonged singleness (e.g. careerism, ducks-in-a-row, life scripts, etc.) as opposed to more permanent disruptions. Almost all adults will still eventually be married or in a cohabitation arrangement by age 45-50 above 90% at the current juncture.

Modern Complementarianism weasels

December 9, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Pretty busy week for posts.

This is one of the more sad examples of probably well-intentioned complementarians arguing for headship but denying it's power.

A commenter named "Petrina" appears out of the blue on the chivalry is anti-Christian post with some comments.

> Her: "A correct marriage analogy is a King and a Queen — the King wields authority over the queen and the rest of the kingdom. Instead chivalry is a knight trying to impress and serve the queen. Remember, chivalry is a knight's code and not one that a king would follow. The knight is to put the Queen up on a pedestal and serve her whims…."
> Don't you think it is anti-Christian that you refused to present the correct analogy, which is the one between Jesus Christ and the church, that God uses to describe the relationship between the husband and wife?
> Isn't it anti-Christian not to relate husband and wife relationship to Christ and the church, the way Ephesians 5: 22-33 does?
> So many men appear to attempt to hijack the gospel and make it about themselves. They want it to suit their fancy, but it is about God, and God's way of doing things.
> God has given men a big responsibility to reflect Jesus Christ in their marriages. If we read our Bibles, we understand the responsibility there. No control, but pioneering in righteousness, leading by example. How strange so many men professing Christianity seem to read the Bible with fleshy lenses on, and their perspective is warped and fleshy. They crave control, dominance, and power and interpret the Bible accordingly.
> They still need transformation apparently, because the born-again man of God should accept God's word and be obedient to it; not use a woman's submission as a cop-out to him leading by love, righteousness and servitude. A woman submits with her free will; it is not up to a man to try to force it on her.
> God does not force people to do anything. Some men don't want to love selflessly, serve, and obey God. That's all there is to it.

> Plenty men just don't want to do what God requires of them, and they teach false doctrine and twist the Bible to fit their wishful thinking.

You can obviously tell she got maybe one thing right, but her view is clearly mired in feminist thinking by buying into believing power structures are abusive at their heart. The feminist power language is pretty much gives away her hand.

Another few comments in, it's clear that there is a sticking point.

> Her: "What I said is that she is to do it on her own, because God commanded HER to do it. He did not command the husband to see to it that she does it."
> Me: It is a husbands obligation to God to help her obey — Christ's love is for the purpose of sanctification. I agree that he isn't to force her to obey, but he should be admonishing her if she is being rebellious, contentious, or disrespectful. Discipline too if it comes to that.
> We have the example of Jesus admonishing and telling the Churches that He may have to discipline them in Revelation 2 and 3.
> Do you agree that husbands have the God ordained duty to help (not force) her submit and obey and to use discipline where necessary? Similarly, that these things are part of the sanctification process? You can answer with a simple yes or no.
> I'm curious to see if you will acknowledge this since this example is Jesus Himself "loving the Church" by admonishing them and telling them that He will discipline them.
> Might be a hard pill for you to swallow.

> Her: "Not a king who is using some kind of control over a queen. A king should treat his queen the way Christ treats the church as well, which is holy leadership, selfless love, harmless; and the queen should submit, the way the church submits to Jesus Christ. Thank God for biblical literacy."
> Me: Yes, Jesus' love for the Church is quite "selfless and harmless" in that He admonishes them for their disobedience and tells them that He will discipline them if they don't shape up.

This is another common theme of the complementarianism boomer theology that submission must be "intelligent" and of "a woman's own free will" and that the husband has no role to play in that. This is not unlike the "agreement" theology where a husband and wife must agree on everything and if they disagree then the husband is the tie break.

Hah, imagine if Jesus had to agree with the Church on His decisions nor couldn't rebuke and discipline His Church. Ephesians 5 states that "husbands should love their wives as Christ loves the Church" for the purpose of her sanctification.

Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless. 28 In this same way, husbands ought to love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself.

The sanctification of wives in their marriages is clearly to help them understand they they need to respect and submit to their wives, and the husband as the head is to help his wife do that.

Her: “You are inserting your wishful thinking and carnal desires into how a husband is to love his wife. The Bible specifies the way that he is to love is the way Christ loved the church and gave himself up for the church.

He mentions nothing about the husband “disciplining” her. Absolutely, it is up to the husband to address sins in her life, but he does not get to discipline her. God does that. A husband doesn’t get to withhold his love or provision from his wife to discipline her. Neither does he get to treat her like a child or spank her.

He helps his wife in the PROPER, God- authorized way. Discipline is not included. So lol, NO, I DON’T agree about that part! ”

Me: Revelation 2:2 ‘I know your deeds and your labor and perseverance, and that you cannot tolerate evil people, and you have put those who call themselves apostles to the test, and they are not, and you found them to be false; 3 and you have perseverance and have endured on account of My name, and have not become weary. 4 But I have this against you, that you have left your first love. 5 Therefore, remember from where you have fallen, and repent, and do the deeds you did at first; or else I am coming to you and I will remove your lampstand from its place—unless you repent. 6 But you have this, that you hate the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. 7 The one who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who overcomes, I will grant to eat from the tree of life, which is in the Paradise of God.’

Revelation 3:15 ‘I know your deeds, that you are neither cold nor hot; I wish that you were cold or hot. 16 So because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will vomit you out of My mouth. 17 Because you say, “I am rich, and have become wealthy, and have no need of anything,” and you do not know that you are wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked, 18 I advise you to buy from Me gold refined by fire so that you may become rich, and white garments so that you may clothe yourself and the shame of your nakedness will not be revealed; and eye salve to apply to your eyes so that you may see. 19 Those whom I love, I rebuke and discipline; therefore be zealous and repent. 20 Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and will dine with him, and he with Me. 21 The one who overcomes, I will grant to him to sit with Me on My throne, as I also overcame and sat with My Father on His throne. 22 The one who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.’”

In particular,

Revelation 3:19 Those whom I love, I rebuke and discipline; therefore be zealous and repent.

This examples are pretty clear cut. So now you agree that Christ admonishes and rebukes the Churches and is willing to discipline them?

> And that husbands should emulate this example?
> Or are you a weasel who tries to wiggle out of what the Bible says about how Christ loves the Church by rebuking AND disciplining them?

Sadly, weasels are weasels…

> Her: I am not a weasel. I'm sticking to the word of God and keeping it IN context.
> This why people need the Holy Spirit to understand. If I was ignorant and not discerning, I could take what you just showed from Revelation and erroneously apply it to husbands and wives.
> The Holy Spirit did not write through Apostle Paul about headship in Ephesians or elsewhere IN RELATION TO HUSBAND AND WIFE, IN THE SAME WAY JOHN WROTE IN REVELATION ABOUT THE CHURCH BEING CHASTENED. You are out of context. It is the husbands duty to lead by righteous, living example, and respectfully address any sins of his wife, while standing firm in truth. He himself ought to be walking right first.
> That is all there is to it. I know you are probably disappointed, and like many men cannot accept what real headship means.
> In the passage that deals with husbands and wives, God could have mentioned disciplining wives in ANY of them, but notice he doesn't do it! Husbands are not authorized by God to do it, but plenty husbands authorize themselves to do what they want to do. They lust for dominance, tyranny.
> God knows how men are and He didn't give them authorization for such a thing. That's just not The kind of relationship a husband and wife have.
> She's not a child, the husband is the greater sacrificer, and often the one in the wrong, stubborn like a wild bull, and the wife is simply responding to his sin, when she sins, in many cases. However, they are both responsible for their own sin.
> Good grief. This is why women need discernment and have to live in truth and have standards accordingly. She must know God's word and His requirements for both men and women BEFORE marriage, so she can REJECT men who live according to their own fantasy and perverted gospel.
> Satan himself quoted scripture out of context.

Revelation 1:1 The revelation from Jesus Christ, which God gave him to show his servants what must soon take place. He made it known by sending his angel to his servant John

Just to be clear, Revelation is Jesus telling this to John, and Revelation 2 and 3 are clearly to the various Churches ("to the angel of the Church of __ write:"). Revelation 2 and 3 are indeed talking about Christ admonishing, rebuking and disciplining the Church in love for the purpose of the Church's sanctification. Coincidentally, Paul mentions the Christ and Church model that husbands are to emulate in Ephesians 5 is for the purpose of sanctification for both the Church and the wife. Direct context of the passage.

To quote one of the RPC leaders on this topic:

> This is why Paul didn't permit women to teach theology. Yes, John DOES in Revelation (chapter 21, specifically) directly call the Church the bride of Christ – and he does it more unequivocally than any other author does. Also, most people assume Hebrews was written by Paul, which also refrains "For the Lord [Kyrios, the word "Lord" often used to reference Jesus] disciplines the one he loves."
> Whether you believe the parallel extends to discipline or not is obviously for you to research and conclude for yourself. But between the options of (a) seeing how Christ treats his bride and doing likewise with mine, and (b) making up my own system that I think is better … I'm going to go with what I see Jesus doing every time.

This is what complementarians are like folks.

They're so mired in trying to stick to the letter of the Bible (e.g. headship) but are implicitly or explicitly attempting to marry it with feminism that they twist headship to something unrecognizable in the Scriptures. When they are confronted directly with examples of Christ literally rebuking and disciplining His Church for the exact same purpose of sanctification, they directly claim Satan quotes Scripture out of context and/or that husbands are power mongers. They are the only true discerners of "real headship."

Sadly, their "loving Christ" is only a neutered dog who is unable to make statements that Christ actually made His bride's obedience: John 14:15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments. Likewise, their Christ's headship has no authority to rebuke and discipline and nor should a husband. This is clearly in alignment with their "agreement theology" which is feminist and egalitarian at it's heart. Zero authority in headship to do what Jesus sets by example for husbands to do.

I want none of that false gospel.

This is why I have been saying over and over that complementarians are the most insidious out of any of the groups of Christians. At least egalitarians admit they are trying to marry the Bible with culture. Complementarians say they are trying to follow the Bible, but have every excuse in the book even when there are direct examples to the contrary. However, it's close to Scripture that many are deceived.

Doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins Part 4

It's been a couple years since my previous posts on this topic, so I went looking for more data. Here are the previous posts.

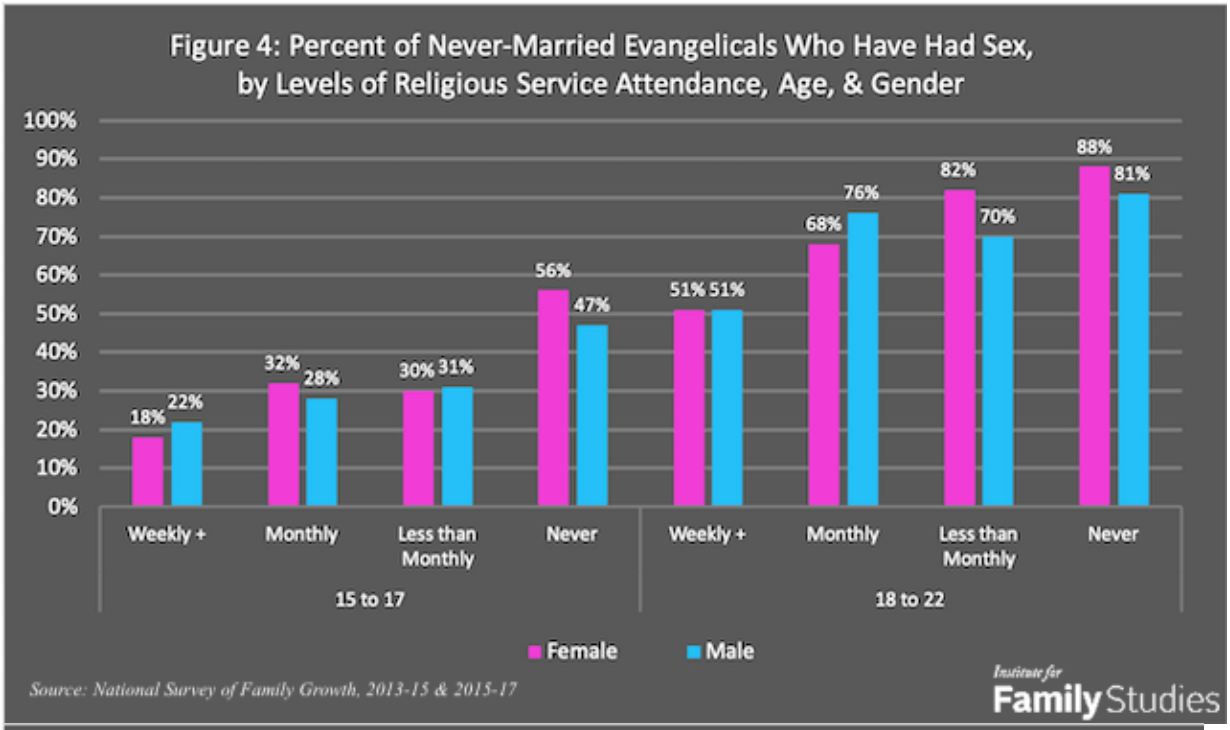
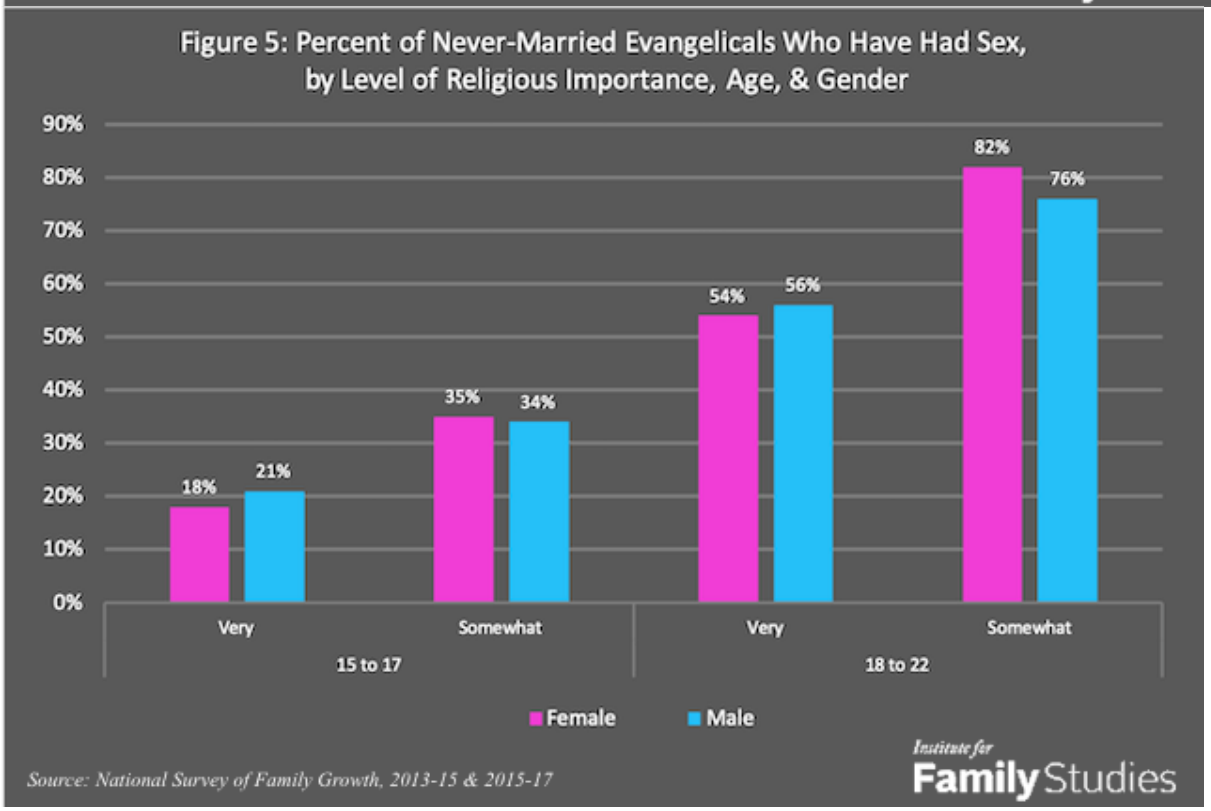
Proportion to have premarital sex by age of first marriage and gender (n = 151)

It appeared, on average, that if you meet a woman in the 21-24 range they would have about 30-40% chance of being a virgin and another 10ish% of having only oral but no vaginal sex. While this is not great in terms of stats, it's relatively than most people think there are now given the fairly lax attitude that many so-called Christians have toward sex now.



Fortunately, we have some more data now at least in the Evangelical segment of the population. From IFS study's Sex and the Evangelical.



All graphs are attributed to their blog.

Overall, it appears all Christian denominations are not doing a good job of teaching sexual morality. It's interesting that it's rarer to find a male virgin than a female though, given that there were more male than female virgins in the Baptist study (though a small sample size).

The more important graphs are as follows though.

The Southern Baptist study specifically measured virginity, oral only, or both at marriage. These specific statistics take into only singles.

First, it appears the college age is where there is a drastic increase in sex which is fairly consistent with the evaluation that college age is where kids are unsupervised and go wild. 100-150% increases over all levels of religious service attendance and level of religious importance.

Second, since 15-17 isn't really marriageable ages, 18-22 is the most consistent thing that we have to look at compared to the 21-24 section in the Southern Baptist study where there was approximately 30-40% virgins and ~10% oral only at marriage.

This new data is approximately consistent with the Southern Baptist data if we consider that it is 50% across the whole 18-22 age group. We'd probably expect a distribution of virginity across this age group to be something like 60% at 18, 55% at 19, 50% at 20, 45% at 21, and 40% at 22. It's possible that it could be more exaggerated at the 18-19 and 21-22 ages, but I'd assume it's pretty close to that.

Third, level of religious service attendance (51% virginity in the 18-22 age group) and level of religious importance (54% in the 18-22 age group) clearly overlap to a great degree, but they probably don't fully overlap. I would expect if you take into account women who cite both that the virginity levels would not be around 51-54% but closer to about 60% given the two populations don't fully overlap.

The amount of attractive Christian virgins

I'm not going to do the whole analysis of the total population, but this gives us some semi-accurate data points to use to estimate the amount of women inside a Church who are attractive, Christian virgins.

In the previous posts, I estimated that about 50% of young adults 18-29 are not overweight or obese based on CDC data. Obviously, this skews greater the older you are, so the number is likely higher for a lower age group and lower for the older segment. In the case of younger marriageable age (18-24ish) of Christian virgins due to the data we have on those above, it's probably about 50-60% of women who are not overweight or obese.

Based on this, we would get a range of approximately:

1. Lower bound: 31% virginity (21-24 age group SB data) * 50% women who are not overweight or obese = 15.5% attractive Christian virgins
2. Mid bound: 54% (51-60% range) virginity (18-22 age group IFS data) * 55% women who are not overweight or obese = 29.7% attractive Christian virgins
3. Upper bound: 60% virginity (51-60% range) virginity (18-22 group IFS data) * 60% of women who are not overweight or obese = 36% attractive Christian virgins.

Obviously, this is spitballing with the data, but in a particular random Church you'd expect that of the women in the 18-24ish range there would be about 15-36% attractive Christian virgins or about 1 in 6.5 to 1 in 3. According to the Southern Baptist study, this approximately lines up with the overall data with the approximate percentage of virgins that actually got married — 5/9 data points with 2 above and 2 below. Some Churches are way better than others though.

Church number
1a	21	66.7	9.5	9.5	14.3	0.002
1b	6	17.0			83.0
2	14	43.0	14.0		43.0
3	28	28.6	25.0	3.6	42.9
4a	12	16.7	8.3	16.7	58.3
4b	21	9.5		9.5	81.0
5	11	18.2	9.1		72.7
6	23	17.4	4.3	4.3	73.9
7	15	13.3		6.7	80.0
"Accept Jesus as Lord & Savior"	151

Honestly, I want to know what they were doing at Church 1a and 2 to get 66.7% and 43% virgins at marriage. I also want to know what they were doing in Church 4b to get such a lower number.

When you get to the 25-29 age range though all bets are off. It's probably closer to 1 in 10 (10%) to 1 in 5 (20%). That's still not great, but again it's probably not that hard to get yourself into the top 20% of men nowadays so you have a shot if you put in the effort.

If you're a man, a 0-4 age gap is fairly normal, though once you start to go to 5-7 it becomes a bit more socially frowned upon. Thus, if you're seeking to marry a woman:

1. In the 18-24 age range for women, you generally have the best shot if you are 18-27 yourself and 18-31 if you can swing that 7 year gap
2. In the 25-29 age range for women, that would be 25-33 yourself and 25-36 for the older gap.

Old age gaps are generally on a case by case basis, and most women at least in their 20s probably wouldn't consider it that much.

Older than these ages, it's hard to say. It's definitely not hard to stand out in the Church but the prospects get worse.

Complementarianism's "intelligent submission" debunking

December 14, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The faith chapter in Hebrews 11 is a very instructive example of man's submission to God. However, it clearly is at odds with complementarianism's push for "intelligent submission" for the wife in marriage.

> Hebrews 11:4 By faith Abel offered to God a better sacrifice than Cain, through which he was attested to be righteous, God testifying about his gifts, and through faith, though he is dead, he still speaks.

In Genesis, it's actually Cain who wants to "intelligently submit" by questioning God why his offering wasn't accepted and how it should be. Abel rightly just gave his best immediately without questioning.

> Hebrews 11:7 By faith Noah, being warned by God about things not yet seen, in reverence prepared an ark for the salvation of his household, by which he condemned the world, and became an heir of the righteousness which is according to faith.

Once again, Noah does not question God about why God wants him to build a boat when everyone is going to laugh at him, but instead Genesis 6:22 Noah did everything just as God commanded him.

> Hebrews 11:8 By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed by going out to a place which he was to receive for an inheritance; and he left, not knowing where he was going. 9 By faith he lived as a stranger in the land of promise, as in a foreign land, living in tents with Isaac and Jacob, fellow heirs of the same promise; 10 for he was looking for the city which has foundations, whose architect and builder is God.

Abraham never questions God about any of these things and just leaves his homeland to be a nomad trusting that God will let me know when and where to go.

> Hebrews 11:11 By faith even Sarah herself received ability to conceive, even beyond the proper time of life, since she considered Him faithful who had promised.

The funny part about this one is Sarah actually doubted and questioned her faith. Her "intelligence" about her being too old was a hindrance to her faith. She was admonished by God and Abraham.

Genesis 18:10 Then one of them said, "I will surely return to you about this time next year, and Sarah your wife will have a son." Now Sarah was listening at the entrance to the tent, which was behind him. 11 Abraham and Sarah were already very old, and Sarah was past the age of childbearing. 12 So Sarah laughed to herself as she thought, “After I am worn out and my lord is old, will I now have this pleasure?”

13 Then the Lord said to Abraham, “Why did Sarah laugh and say, ‘Will I really have a child, now that I am old?’ 14 Is anything too hard for the Lord? I will return to you at the appointed time next year, and Sarah will have a son.” 15 Sarah was afraid, so she lied and said, “I did not laugh.” But he said, “Yes, you did laugh

> Hebrews 11:17 By faith Abraham, when he was tested, offered up Isaac, and the one who had received the promises was offering up his only son; 18 it was he to whom it was said, “Through Isaac your descendants shall be named.” 19 He considered that God is able to raise people even from the dead, from which he also received him back [p]as a type.

Abraham just goes and does it. He doesn’t need to intelligently submit.

Genesis 22:1 Some time later God tested Abraham. He said to him, “Abraham!” “Here I am,” he replied. 2 Then God said, “Take your son, your only son, whom you love—Isaac—and go to the region of Moriah. Sacrifice him there as a burnt offering on a mountain I will show you.” 3 Early the next morning Abraham got up and loaded his donkey. He took with him two of his servants and his son Isaac. When he had cut enough wood for the burnt offering, he set out for the place God had told him about. 4 On the third day Abraham looked up and saw the place in the distance. 5 He said to his servants, “Stay here with the donkey while I and the boy go over there. We will worship and then we will come back to you.”

> Hebrews 11:20 By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau, even regarding things to come. 21 By faith Jacob, as he was dying, blessed each of the sons of Joseph, and worshiped, leaning on the top of his staff. 22 By faith Joseph, when he was dying, made mention of the exodus of the sons of Israel, and gave orders concerning his bones.
> 23 By faith Moses, when he was born, was hidden for three months by his parents, because they saw he was a beautiful child; and they were not afraid of the king’s edict. 24 By faith Moses, when he had grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, 25 choosing rather to endure ill-treatment with the people of God than to enjoy the temporary pleasures of sin, 26 considering the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he was looking to the reward. 27 By faith he left Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he persevered, as though seeing Him who is unseen. 28 By faith he kept the Passover and the sprinkling of the blood, so that the destroyer of the firstborn would not touch them. 29 By faith they passed through the Red Sea as through dry land; and the Egyptians, when they attempted it, were drowned.
> 30 By faith the walls of Jericho fell down after the Israelites had marched around them for seven days. 31 By faith the prostitute Rahab did not perish along with those who were disobedient, after she had welcomed the spies in peace.

> 32 And what more shall I say? For time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, of David and Samuel and the prophets, 33 who by faith conquered kingdoms, performed acts of righteousness, obtained promises, shut the mouths of lions, 34 quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong, became mighty in war, put foreign armies to flight. 35 Women received back their dead by resurrection; and others were tortured, not accepting their release, so that they might obtain a better resurrection; 36 and others experienced mocking and flogging, and further, chains and imprisonment. 37 They were stoned, they were sawn in two, they were tempted, they were put to death with the sword; they went about in sheepskins, in goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented 38 (people of whom the world was not worthy), wandering in deserts, on mountains, and sheltering in caves and holes in the ground.

The examples really speak for themselves, but the few times such as Gideon's and Barak's cowardice to question the Lord on His plans they were rebuked or in the case of Barak and Deborah the gory was given to a woman killing Sisera.

I need not go on about the Israelites complaining and questioning Moses and God in the desert either.

It is nice to know why we need to submit at times, but it is certainly not required. In fact, most of the time it seems to be an impediment to growing in faith and the sanctification process.

It seems that God values the trust that submission shows above "intelligent" questioning and complaining. This isn't to say that a wife should not bring up an her opinion if she has some wisdom, but it must be done within the confines of the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities which is with respect and obedience.

Sources for divorce statistics of ~70% of marriages ended by women

I actually went searching for a source of the statistic a while ago, and I think it was Aaron Renn who eventually came up with a source from this paper. Go subscribe to the masculinist newsletter for free if you haven't already.

> Table 1 and Figure 1 show the percentage of heterosexual couple breakups in HCMST waves 2-5 whose breakup was wanted more by the woman. If the woman wanted the breakup more, that is scored as "1"; if the man wanted the breakup more, that is scored as "0"; and if both partners wanted the breakup equally, that is scored as "0.5." Table 1 shows that women accounted for 69% of the breakups of heterosexual marriages, consistent with the approximately two thirds of divorces wanted by wives reported in other studies (England and Kilbourne 1990; Sayer et al. 2011; Sweeney 2002; Heaton and Blake 1999). Even though only 92 breakups of heterosexual marriages were recorded in the data, the 69% of marital breakups wanted by women is significantly different from 50%, with a 95% confidence interval ranging from 61% to 78%.

The particular study was small in that it was about 100 divorces or so with the 69% rate, but several other studies prior corroborate those approximate statistics. The confidence interval of 61-78% is likely a solid range. I wouldn't be surprised if an analysis of the data suggests that it's actually higher because sometimes the wife "forces" the husband to file for the divorce.

If I remember correctly, men typically divorce more when they marry young whereas women divorce more when they're older. This makes some sense since men's attractiveness increases as he gets older, so there's more temptation for him to want to look for a woman hotter and younger than his wife if they start to show interest in him.

For the women who are older, if the women were college educated the rate jumped up to 90% women initiated divorce, but they have the overall lower divorces by number. The higher the hypergamy, the greater the divorce initiation rate of the number of divorces by a woman, but if they are college educated you do have a lower chance of divorce overall. It's likely that more of the women who were college educated and getting married at a higher age married a "beta bucks" that they eventually divorced. College degree is also associated with greater earning potential which means the wife would not have to rely as much on the husband for provisioning. Thus, not having much "alpha" and not needing "beta" she'll pretty much just jet out of the marriage if she's anywhere remotely unhappy. However, the college women that are fairly happy or very happy with their choice of man will not want to divorce him at all compared to less educated women.

In general, this goes back to my recommendation to young men in doom and gloom and the amount of attractive Christian virgins Part 4 to find younger women in the 21-24 year old age range (or 18-26 or 27) range if you are a man in your late 20s to early 30s. If she's FAST – faithful, available, saved, and teachable that is a good sign along with devotion to God and respect for you. College educated is likely a good thing unless she's looking at you like a second choice and/or beta bucks. I don't recommend revealing any type of finances until she "likes you for who you are" for a while.

Sex and the city author regrets her life choices

December 20, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To no one's surprise, Bushnell ends up regretting the choice she made not to have a family.

> "Sex and the City" may have left a trailblazing legacy for women on television, but the book's original author now thinks her independent lifestyle may not have been as rewarding.
> Candace Bushnell, 60, who wrote the original 1997 novel which spawned the successful TV series for HBO, opened up to Sunday Times Magazine about her 2012 divorce, admitting it made her realize how not starting a family made her feel "truly alone."
> "When I was in my 30s and 40s, I didn't think about it," she recalled. "Then when I got divorced and I was in my 50s, I started to see the impact of not having children and of truly being alone. I do see that people with children have an anchor in a way that people who have no kids don't."
> Bushnell first rose to prominence with a dating column in The New York Observer, whose writings were anthologized in her "Sex and the City" novel. The series' main character, Carrie Bradshaw (played by Sarah Jessica Parker), was created as a fictionalized version of Bushnell.

Sadly, it's very easy to push off thinking about long term consequences of actions only to see regret at the end of the tunnel.

Sleeping around did not catch up with her and she did end up getting married which is fairly consistent with the upper middle class lifestyle that the show aimed to display. It's also pretty crazy how many people are now anti-children as well.

> Bushnell, who is now dating real estate agent Jim Coleman, is preparing to release a new book, titled "Is There Still Sex in the City?" The book, which drops in August, deals with what Bushnell calls "middle-aged sadness," along with the new obstacles women face once they turn 50. And according to Deadline, the heavily anticipated book is already being adapted into a television series.
> The novel follows a group of middle-aged New York City women who travel to the Hamptons in order to find a fresh start. In a recent interview with the New York Post, Bushnell reveals the novel was inspired by her real-life relocation to the Hamptons, alongside several of her friends.
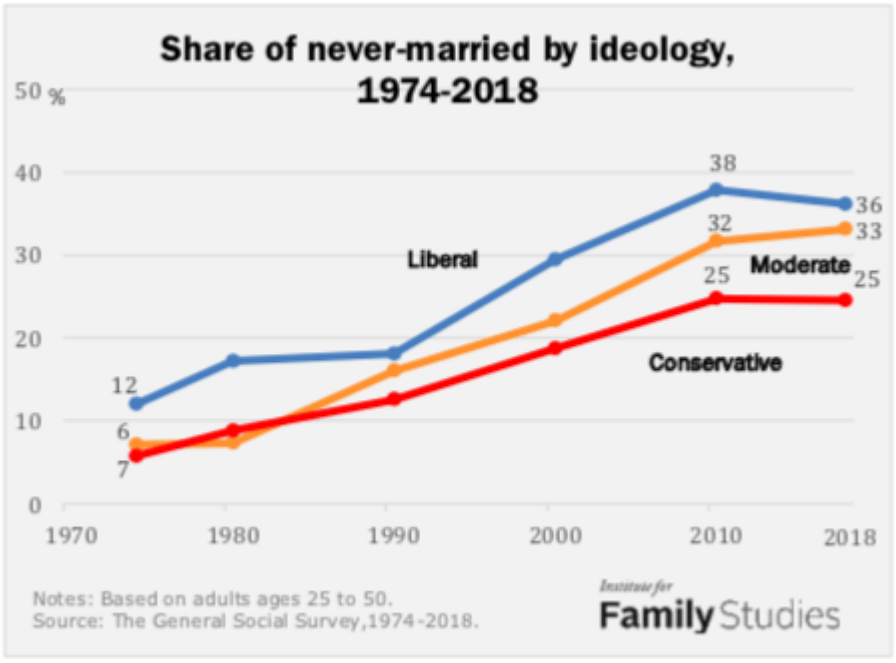
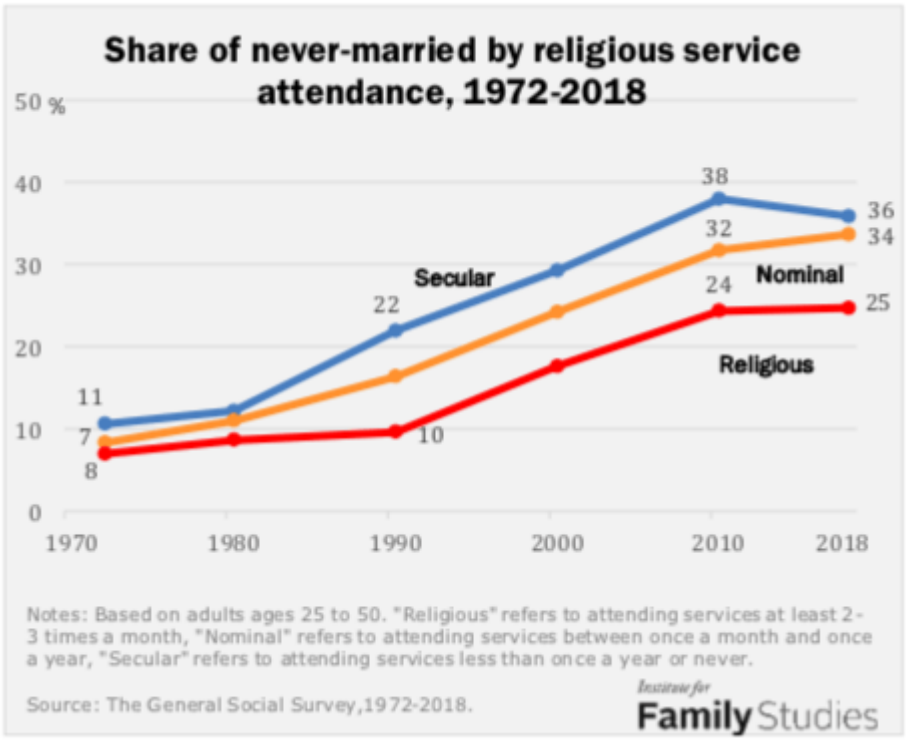
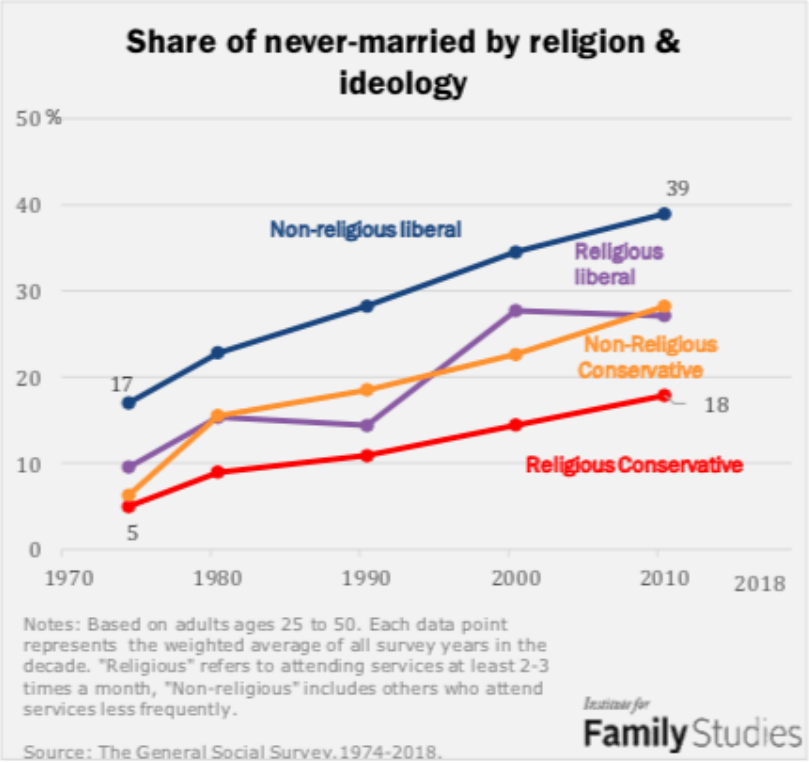
> "We're all single women without children. And you think about, what are you going to do when you get old?" she said. "If you don't have kids, you realize, 'Who is going to take care of me?' Your girlfriends."



There's always a way to spin it to be positive though. Don't worry.



Marriage and kids are one of the things that bring the most happiness in life, so it’s crazy to me that the world has continued to move toward hedonism. I guess long term happiness is really sacrificed for short term pleasure in the sad twist of things.



The effect of the disruption of the marriage marketplace

December 24, 2020 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

IFS studies has another article examining How Ideology and Religion Relate to Marriage.
All charts were created by them.

It actually appears that “religious conservatives” still marry off at a rate higher than the other groups, even with the disruptions in the potential marriage marketplace in regard to sex before marriage and many more requirements/qualifications for marriage.

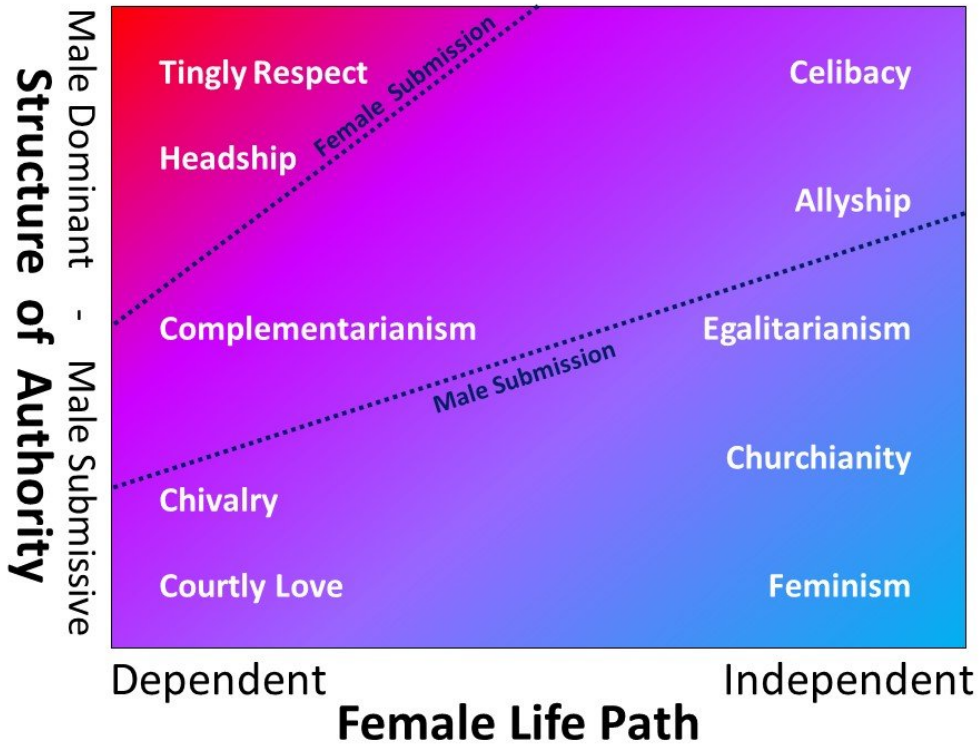
I believe this trend continues even despite the cohabitation data we examined earlier. The overall increases in cohabitation don’t make up for the gaps we see between the religious conservatives and the other groups. I believe this makes some sense because men and women who are targeting marriage are indeed more likely to get married than those who just fall into it.

There is still a significantly large gap from 5% -> 18% (or 8% -> 25% or 7% -> 25%) among religious conservatives is the big issue. EAPs (“Evangelical American Princesses”) are pricing themselves out the market much like some of the women who were following Bushnell’s sex and the city lifestyle. , even though Bushnell herself and other UMC ended up “sticking their landing.” Likewise, the men who “failed to launch” or haven’t been trained properly (by the Church or their family) to lead but instead to be “nice” and “wait for God to bring someone” and “godliness is attractive” are also likely being priced out on the bottom fringes.

All of this to say is that we need to be focused on teaching and discipling our children about these things, and mentoring men and women who want to learn as they are able. Only way you can bring about individual Christian success stories, which may add up to large success stories in the long run. There’s no society wide fix, but God can use individuals to influence those around them.

The friend zone is the same as a feminism in the female life path

January 12, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link



The Masculinist recently had a blog post on how to get out of the friend zone. My piece on it was 5 years ago. I think it's time to go back over it in light of a bunch of the stuff we've been discussing on relational archetypes such as the Summary of evaluating relationships and marriage and plans of actions and the Bible and the female life path.

In the post on understanding the friend zone and escaping it, I detailed 4 main ways that you can "get out" of the friend zone.

- You were her friend, but she always liked you. She was waiting for you to ask her out.
- You were her friend, and you underwent some change to become a man while you didn't see her for a while. When you meet her again you impress her.
- You were her friend, but you are developing into a man. Then one day her friend or some other random act of God makes her reconsider you and her eyes are proverbially opened.
- You were her friend, and she doesn't know a certain side of you. An inadvertent crisis or significant display of social dominance or leadership shows her a side of you that she never saw before. She reconsiders you now as more attractive because of this masculine display.

All of these, aside from the first one where she already wants you to be the head/leader of a relationship, are "epiphanies" where she realized she's attracted and wants to be in a relationship with you.

Let's consider this in terms of the female life path.

Overall, virtually no one gets into a relationship with a woman other than headship or tingly respect. In other words, she must respect you and/or think that you are attractive to go on a date with you and want to be a in relationship. I can't think of any relationships where this wasn't the case, unless the woman in question was trying to use the man for something whether time, money, or other things.

In evaluating the friend zone specifically, we can understand that the vast majority of men in the friend zone are trying to garner a woman's interest by doing things for her that they would do for someone dating them. In other words, they're hanging out with her a lot, spending money to buy her gifts, food, or other things, complimenting her, and things such as these. I've gone over this before on some of my earlier (2013-2015) blog posts. In other words, the men are trying to back into a relationship with the women much like women try to do with attractive men by thinking sleeping with them will make them want to be in a relationship with them. It rarely works, and this is virtually feminism in action.

On a large scale, feminism seeks to re-distribute male resources (typically via the government) to women without any compensation. The majority of government spending on welfare, healthcare, and such goes to support poor women, single mothers, and women's health.

Likewise, we see the same thing with friend zoned men who are attempting to get into a relationship with women. They are spending much of their time, energy, and resources (money or otherwise) on women who don't want to date them and usually just let them do it. After all, who would deny a free meal ticket? Not most people on welfare especially the single mothers or the women getting free healthcare even if they don't need it (e.g. free planned parenthood). I'm not saying that these social systems are bad. They're great for people who are actually in desperate circumstances. I'm criticizing the ease and perhaps ubiquity of the ability to abuse the system much like women who have a ton of male orbiters.

To conclude, to the men who are friend zoned or are trying to get out of the friend zone just stop. You’re acting like a feminist. You’re spending your time, effort, money, and other resources on a woman who doesn’t want to be with you nor does she value you. Move on to a woman who is actually interested in you.

From the mailbag: What should I do with my life if I don't want to use the degree I'm studying for? How should I approach developing in the faith?

January 27, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Haven't been able to get the time to post much with some family issues and work. Will try to get back into things as I am able.

A reader asks:

> I've read your post on your advice to a young man on how he should do in developing Godly masculinity, but I don't know how to adapt it to my personal situation. I am currently studying for my master's degree, but I found that I do not want to work in that particular industry, though the content studied in my degree is interesting.

I wouldn't look at it like this. It's more of a lie of secular culture and American values – you can do anything you want to do and you should only do things you love. It's a very romanticized and ungodly view of the world.

There's nothing in Scripture that says you have to like something to do it as a career or trade. In fact, Paul worked as a tentmaker to support his full time ministry even though it was clear that he really wanted to be doing full time ministry all the time.

Having a job that pays the bills so to speak is never a bad thing. In fact, it may be the thing that is most useful because it can enable to you to have good money to do what you were called to do on the side. Someone who wants to be an artist or sculptor is great, but I'm sure that not many of these people would be able to make money doing what they love.

> And what I discovered is that, I want to set some personal goals, but it's very hard for me. I just know what I 'don't want to do' instead of what I 'want to do'. I have some very short-term ones, like devoting my time in Bible study, to at least go through the whole Bible once (I didn't do so in the past 10 years since baptism). But how about other long-term ones? I have no idea.

Start with the basics from the RPChristians that go a long way toward loving God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength (e.g. physical, mental/emotional, spiritual):

PHYSICAL: How are you doing with lifting? Losing weight? Where's your body fat %? What have you been eating lately? How about your porn/alcohol/drug/cigarette/whatever use? Are you employing kino on your wife properly? Are you going too far with your girlfriend? How's your fashion sense? Are you still lounging around the house in gym shorts and using your ratty flip flops when you go out? How are you spending your time? How's your income doing? Your body is God's temple: are you reflecting that appropriately? For married men: how's your sex life?

MENTAL/EMOTIONAL: How have you been doing reading and learning new things? How's your frame? Do you still struggle with living up to someone else's expectations? Have you mastered the ability to respond appropriately as a leader without getting butthurt or arguing? How are you leading your wife/girlfriend this week? Do you feel pressure from any sources to do something or to act/not act a certain way? Are you depressed or lonely? Are you secure in your heart/mind that God's will is good, even if it's not what you want?

SPIRITUAL: How are you doing on the 7 basics? Rank yourself: Assurance of Salvation, Quiet Time/Devotional, Bible Study, Scripture Memory, Prayer, Evangelism, Fellowship. Have you solidified your mission – and does it have eternal consequences or does it only affect this world? Does your mission extend beyond the home? Do you have someone discipling you? Are you discipling anyone else? Have you talked with your non-Christian friends about Christ recently? Are there parts of the Bible you're just not understanding? How are things going with your church or small group?

Focusing on developing the basics and your mission for Christ is what we're here on earth to do, so it's important to be focusing time and effort into these to be effective for Christ.

> I know I have strong talent in music, so in my church, I mainly serve as a violin, and sometimes as a singer. So I know this is the direction that I will continue to pursue to serve the Lord. Should I pursue a career in music instead?

Great things, but unless you're a full or part-time worship leader you would still need a job. Or unless you're really good enough to get into an orchestra or something like that it's not going to be something that pays the bills. These are areas in which you can serve God, but you need to be practical in the sense that they're usually not jobs or occupations or vocations.

There's a concept called FIRE (financial independence, retire early) which Aaron Renn just covered in the Masculinist newsletter.

Basically, work a good job (that you might not be interested in all that much) and save up as much as you can and be smart investing the money to have it grow. Once you hit a certain point, you're fairly financially independent in which case you don't necessarily need your job or you can pursue what you love more full time.

That's what I'm aiming toward with my family so I can eventually be involved in full time ministry off my own pockets, so like Paul I won't be tempted by any monetary gain and can focus on the Truth and loving others without it getting in the way.

Dating and social dynamics in Churchianity

February 5, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a pretty good episode discussing initiating dating and relationships inside the Church. The cover a bunch of what I've covered before with some unique insight. Check it out.

I'm not going to summarize it, but I will add some structural insight on things from my point of view.

Recall the SNL skit: "Be attractive. Don't be unattractive."

This summarizes the main two things to look for if getting dates are an issue.

Be attractive

- Mission is attractive — you're driven to succeed and you have goals that you're working hard to meet.
- PSALMs – Power, status, athleticism, looks (muscular / Greek god look), money are all attractive to women
- Masculinity and the various traits associated with masculinity is attractive
- Generally, this can be summarized as being a confident, well-dressed, successful, charismatic, muscular and masculine leader.

Don't be unattractive

- Typically, this involves eliminating various factors that are turn offs.
- Eliminating bad hygiene
- Eliminating bad posture
- Eliminating poor eye contact
- Fixing poor social and communication skills
- Understanding context and nuance when talking with women
- Removing fear of talking with and asking women out
- Most of these can be summarized as removing low hanging fruit like bad smells and actually getting out and talking with a lot of people (not just women) and learning how to be interested in others and hold good conversations. Realize that you will fail, but the only way to learn and grow is to fail and keep on going.

Mission is paramount. Evangelizing and discipleship cover many of these categories — both in the "be attractive" and "don't be unattractive" — as you're approaching and talking with many people (again, not just women) and learning to talk about your faith and ask them about theirs and have deep meaningful conversations with others and planting seeds that God can use.

As the "be attractive" and "don't be unattractive" things improve your usually the success rate of dating will improve. It's a process. It takes time.

There are obvious things that are hindrances that aren't changeable like factors in your past, your height, your age, and so on that can make things more difficult but not impossible.

Women’s sexual desire is narcissistic

February 11, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is actually not my original opinion. Novaseeker had a post over at Sigma, and he linked to a sexologist’s interview in regard to “sexual styles” compatibility. I ended up listening to the whole thing. The one comment that she made that stood out to me the most from the interview is that women’s sexual desire is narcissistic. Upon further analysis I find it to be generally true.

This actually makes sense from an uncontrolled hypergamy perspective. Women want to marry up. This leads to several conclusions.

1. They could generally give 0 craps about men who aren’t attractive and who don’t benefit them (narcissism) outside of the sexual hierarchy (e.g. they still care about family).
2. Woman want attractive men to desire them, and will go out of their way to get that attention (narcissism). Sex sells. Instagram, facebook, and the recent surge to places like OnlyFans.
3. When a woman is with an attractive man, the thing that turns her on the most is being the object of his desire (narcissism). The sexologist even made the comment about why 50 Shades of Gray was so popular being that women wanted to be the object of desire (e.g. of a rich, handsome, muscular, successful leader).
4. Ironically, the thing that often turns women on the most is being the object of desire but having the (attractive) man have his way with her. Perhaps this is part of being so attractive that a man can’t help himself by ravish her (again, narcissism).
5. However, the woman in 50SoG also has the power to control or change that man… but only her (narcissism).
6. The reason why women with uncontrolled hypergamy are attracted to men with dark triad (including narcissistic traits) is because like attracts like. In addition, narcissistic men value themselves above any woman who is with them (e.g. stimulates the illusion of hypergamy in that she’s possibly marrying up).
7. Women with BPD who are often touted as crazy and promiscuous but really good in bed have their hypergamy turned up on overdrive. They live in their own bubble of narcissism which means they often can’t see the consequences of their actions.

Christian values and virtues aim at combating narcissism. For example, #1 is combated by kindness especially to those who in no way benefit you, #2 is combated by modesty, #3 is combated by sex within marriage and headship-submission and love-respect Biblical marital roles and responsibilities, #4 is a husband asserts his headship by having his way with her but having enough self control that he doesn’t succumb to potential ONEitis or being a slave to her feelings, etc.

Biblical Masculinity Blueprint discussion topics

Got some questions from readers.

> [The book] has clarified and brought together a lot of things in a very helpful way. Unfortunately, it's pretty much too late for me (I grew up with the blue pill, especially Evangelical variety, and now have a marriage that is de facto separation, due to a lot of my mistakes based on that perspective), but I'm going to work through it with my 17-year-old son.

I don't think it's too late. The PUAs got a couple things right in the context of women, and "You shall make your mission, not your woman, your priority" of Chateau Heartiste's commandments of poon is one of them. Again, this stems from the fact that the PUAs/RP do have a decently accurate understanding of women's nature (from observations about how God made man and woman).

What I am getting at here is that you should have your own mission for God. How are you carrying out the Great Commission in Matthew 28 for Jesus ('Go and make disciples of all nations, teaching everything that Jesus commanded'). How are you utilizing your spiritual gifts to love and serve others? Are you involved with the Church to love and serve others? How are you exemplifying these things and living out your faith in all areas of your life? How are you loving God in all aspects of your life — mental/emotional, physical, spiritual? This includes being faithful to your own Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. Physical especially lifting and putting on muscles, is probably the easiest low hanging fruit that builds up good credibility.

Generally, once you start to put God first and start to be more effective in all that you do for God you start to develop the traits that women are attracted to as a by-product. The ambition, the leadership, the confidence, and the masculine nature of excellence and doing. Then you actually have something that your wife can follow and be a helper to you with (e.g. Genesis 1-3). As you can see, all things start to fall into alignment with God's purpose for your life, and the right frame for the marriage: you are guiding your family being faithful (as a leader of one first commissioned to God's mission and in marriage) so there is no hypocrisy and you are a man she can respect. Not that she should be rebellious anyway as the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities are unconditional, but many wives are… need to get out of that tit-for-tat mindset.

Will all marriages be turned around? No. Just as many of Jesus' disciples left Him (John 6 if I remember correctly), not all wives would decide to end up following their husbands even if they were perfect like Jesus. But I would say many can be. There is hope.

> I'm wondering about the BMB view of classic RedPill stuff, especially as it is put forth on the RPC podcast. Particularly, does the RPC focus on game run counter to BMB's focus on the man's self-development?

Generally, I take the approach that most ‘game’ in terms of trying to act in a more attractive way is unproductive. It’s dancing monkey syndrome. You’re basically trying to ape attractive traits so women will like you. Does it work sometimes or occasionally? Sure. But it’s virtually impossible to be a long term solution so I find it useless and a waste of time and energy you could be used to developing your mission for God.

> Or do the different types of game approaches (e.g., in the RPC episode you recently posted) have a role in the BMB? For example, should a young man practice cold approaches at the store, just to practice getting comfortable talking to women, reading them, etc., so that he can have confidence when he decides to approach a young woman at church or college (since those latter groups are going to be a lot smaller, and if word can quickly get around there if he’s rejected even a couple times)?

I personally don’t see a point to doing this. Instead, what you should be doing as a Christian is learning to talk to everyone — male and female, old and young, and so on — and be comfortable talking about and sharing your faith. Once you can do that, asking out a woman is of very little consequence in the grand scheme of things.

The decision to follow Jesus or not has eternal consequence. A woman rejecting you is good because you found someone who doesn’t want to follow you or would only be partially interested in you. You want your wife to be all in on you. Even if you take it poorly, so what? You’ll probably almost never talk to her again, unless she’s in the same friends circle but it’s just pleasantries after that. It’s just something that passes in the wind and you move on.

This is not to say that RPC or I am trying to find “Christian versions” of anything. Rather, we are looking at the Bible on how to live our lives, and we understand that some of these scenarios on how we are supposed to be living for God are things that can also help in terms of male-female relationships and marriage.

This is important to understand. We are focused on taking off the feminized lenses that we are wearing having grown up in a culture like this and being obedient to God. The fact that God made His creation in a particular way means we can take observations about how He made that creation and be wise in our applications. Sadly, at times it has taken the PUAs/secular RP to cut through the feminized BS since many in the Church have fallen prey to their own is-ought delusions (e.g. “godliness is attractive”) or downplay what is attractive to men and women.

> If you have posts on this already, that would be great. On a similar note, would there be any way you could have a discussion forum for guys who are reading your book? Maybe a weekly open thread for that specific purpose? Thanks again for the great work!

Yup, this can be the first post to ask any questions. Have at it.

Time frames for body recomposition

February 18, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

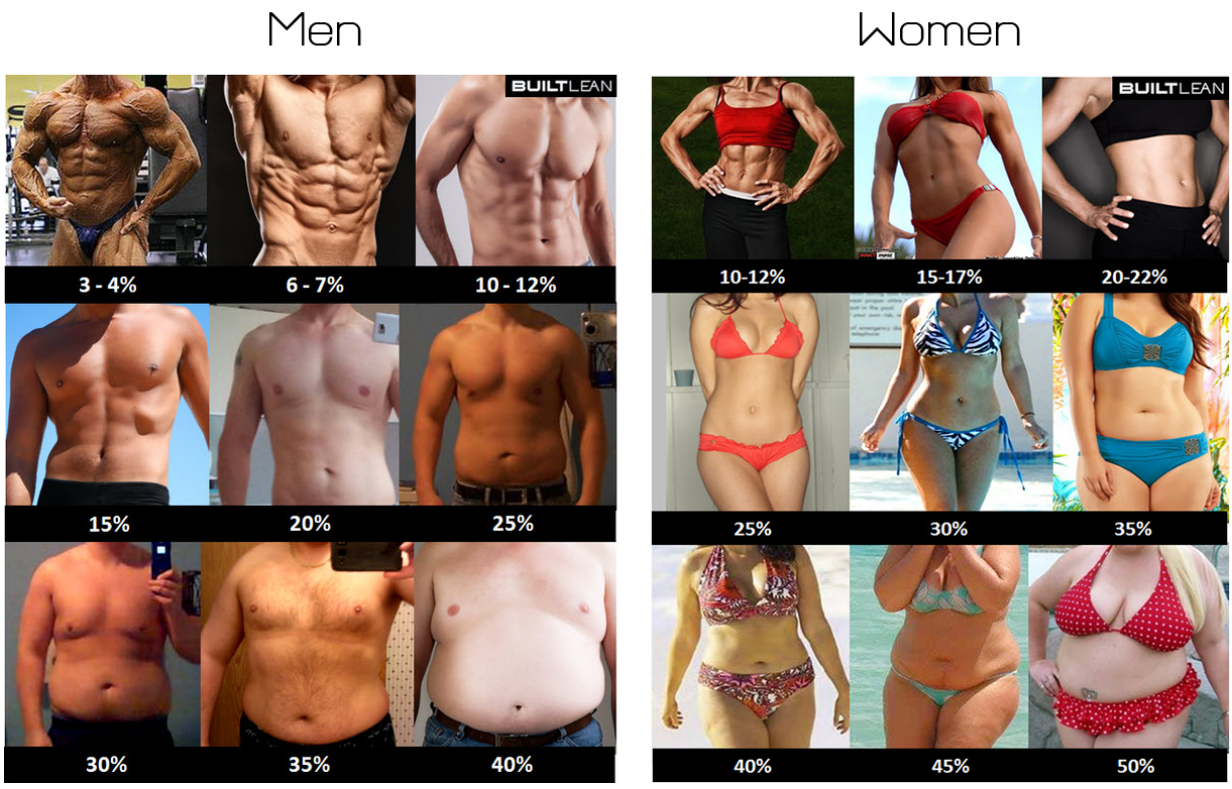
Since some people are having issues with me stating that it's not hard for someone to get into the top 10-20% of men, let's actually go over some scenarios. My comment.

This post looked at attraction to men's musculature. Reliably, if you can get to the 10-12% body fat range for men and you have some musculature you're likely to get some women who want to feel up your muscles and/or "ohh" and "ahh" as they see a transformation. Of course, if you're wearing baggy shirts that cover up your muscles that's a net negative. Fitted shirts that emphasize transformations are generally the most helpful.

For men, visually emphasizing femininity and a woman's waist to hip ratio (.6-.8 seems to be the good range to really get a man going) is what tends to be most attractive which is why women are (or should be?) encouraged to wear skirts and dresses. Likewise, the things that tend to emphasize a fit man to women seems to be something along the lines of the 'greek god' type of physique where you have the illusion of wider shoulders and smaller waist (V-taper) as well as at least some muscle definition in most of the muscles of the upper body.

Your average American man >20 y/o is 5'9″ at 200 lbs (199.8 lbs). This is approximately 29.5ish BMI (overweight is 25-29.9 and obese is >30 range). So your average man is overweight bordering on the line between overweight and obese. For reference, this is approximately what that looks like. (Image is owned by them, obviously).

Now, here are some transformations from reddit's progress pics sub.

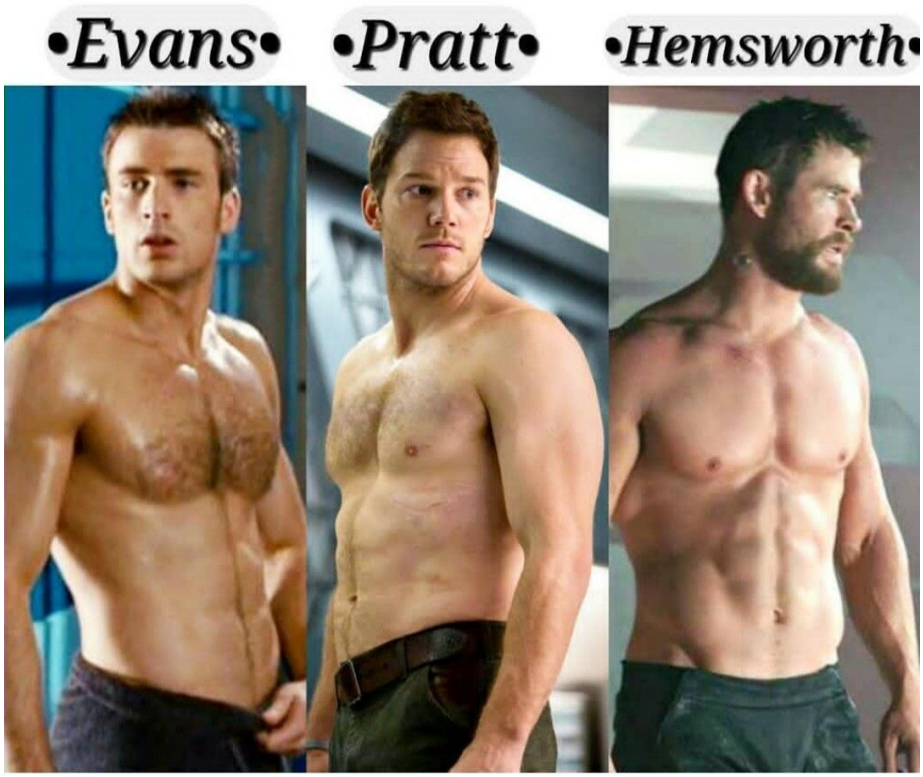


Overall, both men and women who have weight to lose — as a 5’9″ 200 lbs man does — can generally reliably drop about 1 lbs per week with a disciplined diet. This is why you see so many transformations in the 6-12 month range dropping 30-50 lbs or so. Some of the very heavy men and women (200-300+ lbs range) reliably will lose 2 lbs per week, so they can lose upwards of 80-120 lbs in a year. Not all of this is dropping fat but also some non-muscle lean body mass (e.g. non-muscle other stuff to support the weight gain like water weight, connective tissue, blood vessels, etc.).

How much muscle mass can you gain in a year? The articles generally vary, but most of them suggest reliably 10-15 lbs per year with possible upper limits of about 15-25 depending on genetics and other optimizations such as diet and sleep. Bulking and cutting cycles are more efficient than trying to stay the same weight and add muscle (strict same weight body recomposition).

In my own case, when I got into strength training and didn’t even care about adding muscle, I added approximately 10 lbs my first year, 10 lbs my second year, and 7 lbs my third year, and 5 lbs my 4th year. If I had reliably ate for and trained for hypertrophy (slightly different than pure strength training), it would be likely to add probably about 15-20 the first year, and 10-15 the second year.

So let’s say your average dude at 5’9″ and 200 lbs decides to lose weight and gain muscle in the first year. Since he’s losing weight, the amount of muscle won’t be added as optimal (as it’s not a bulk) but with newbie gains he’ll still probably add around 10-15ish lbs of muscle of reliable gains. Thus, he can drop down from 5’9″ 200 lbs to approximately 160 lbs but add say 10-15 lbs of muscles to be at 170-175 lbs.



Now, going off some of the pictures from attraction to men’s musculature,

Your average man is dropping from about the 30% BF range and losing about 40 lbs to get to 160 lbs and adding 10-15 lbs of muscle. If all of that was fat loss, it would be like dropping from 30% to 10% body fat. So what likely happens is you lose about 30-25 lbs of fat and 5-10 lbs of LBM but add about 10-15 lbs of muscle on top of that. That gets you approximately into the 13-18% body fat range of these photos after 1 year.

Add in 6-12 months of disciplined diet and lifting will easily get you into the 10-13% range as exemplified on the photos. Most women from what I've seen don't really prefer the < 10% photos anyway. That's more along the lines of Hugh Jackman, whereas most women tend to prefer Chris Hemsworth or Chris Adams musculature:

As you can see, these physiques are fairly comparable to the 10-13% range from the photos above.

If you use google search (or duck duck go if you prefer) for 1 year lifting transformations and look at the images, you typically see most of the “skinnier guys” get similar to the 10-13% range after 1 year. It’s a bit slower if you’re overweight and close to obese to start, but you can still get there within a 1-2 year time frame.

I stick by my assertion that your average man can get a top 10-20% body in 1-2 years. Faster if you’re skinnier and < 27-30% BF to start. Possibly slower if you’re more obese. Most people would classify the bodies above as probably top 5-10% and not top 10-20%, so maybe you could get there quicker if you were just aiming for top 20%.

If you have even a semblance of said body above, you’ll easily stand out in Church with all of the feminized men.

Is it hard? Well, I suppose that’s relative of what you think is “hard.” The information it out there. Often for free. You have to be disciplined with training and nutrition though. For most people they just don’t want to do it or don’t care to.

Apparently, this post needs some caveats:

- No, you shouldn’t be aiming to improve your physique for women. It makes you more effective for mission especially in people-person things like leadership, evangelism, and discipleship. For instance, it is more attractive and credible — think of a slobby vs fit fitness trainer or a slobby vs fit pastor. Who would seemingly give more credible advice even if they were saying the same thing? Yeah, the fit muscular man. It has the nice side effect of being attractive to women.
- Most points are based on general statements about preferences. For instance, attraction likely works on a bell curve distribution. A majority of women would like a ‘greek god’ physique, while some would like a bear (muscle + some fat) or swimmer (lean, some muscle) physique. Fewer women than those would like a thin or fat man. When talking about the dating market a wide net is better than a narrow one.

- Use your brains people. I’m not here to make absolute statements. Take things with a grain of salt. Yes, it’s “harder” for some men and “easier” for others depending on your starting point. There’s variation just like some men prefer fit/athletic women and some prefer more curvy and softer women.

Optimism and pessimism in the current Christian marriage milieu

February 22, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Scott makes a comment on Nova's recent post on Sigma.

> Like Andy, who could not believe the things he was capable of while trying to escape to freedom, men today descend into a cesspool of fluid exchange and all other manner of things they know are wrong, (even they aren't Christian don't feel right) hoping to find one that will bond to him and say "yes" to marriage. All the while, the Sheila Gregoires of the world shame him for the way is built, and the most strident married men in the manosphere offer him no quarter, or even the opportunity to discuss alternatives. How easy it is for us who have stable loving marriages to look down our noses at those left behind because they weren't "alpha" (or self-disciplined) enough to succeed at this retarded game.

> Myself, fortunate enough to have a decent sized helping of these traits, dove in, swam around in the mud and found mine, and now live like the Eloi, pretending that there is nothing to see here.

I think this has become a larger point of contention given that some people regard me as perhaps much too optimistic/unrealistic.

I'm curious as to all of my commenters thoughts on objectively the percentage of the male population you think has a chance at a godly marriage in this current situation. Make an optimistic, normal, and pessimistic prediction.

I'll go first.

First, let me ignore the top 10-20% of men with the understanding that most of them will have some relative success at finding a solid godly marriage if they tried. I think most people here would agree on this. There's certainly a few marriages in most every Church where you can see this is a reasonable assumption.

Thus, now I am talking about the population of 80-90% of men below the top 10-20%.

- I think any man within this bottom 80-90% of men can get a top 10-20% body within a year or two. This does not mean he will be in the top 10-20% of all men though given other potential traits, but it sure will help given that 60-70% of the entire population are overweight or obese both men and women. This is not including a wardrobe overhaul, good grooming and styling, and such.
- All men have the capacity to do this just like all men look better in a fitted suit as opposed to baggy clothes. How many men will have the commitment to do this? I'm not quite sure. I'm always making the assumption that all these men can do this, but realistically I'd say probably at least half of men or more won't do this even if they knew it would help.

- Give the same man another 1-2 years concurrent practice with pursuing his mission for God, excellence in all aspects of his life (spiritual, physical, emotional/mental), evangelism and discipleship practice, get him in the Word everyday and possible starting to lead Bible studies. This man would at least be prepared to potentially lead a relationship. Maybe not be married effectively, but he has most of the tool to be effective and hopefully a surrounding cast of men to help him.
- In particular, evangelism and discipleship practice is very important because learning to talk about and be open with your faith and be effective in communicating and leading makes things like asking out women pale in comparison. These conversations have eternal consequences whereas asking out a girl has very little. You can just shrug and be on your way if a girl doesn't want to go out with you. You want someone who is interested in you anyway not ambivalent or not interested.
- If he still has issues with improving social communication, get a people job where you have to interact with men and women of all ages and/or take up some toastmaster speaking to improve comfort with public speaking. The more you do these types of things the less scary and sensitive you will be able them. I improved mine substantially by having a people job and then TAing college courses.
- There was a study I can't find at the moment, but the only thing they changed was how much a man made on his dating profile. The ones who made less were rated less attractive than men who made more even with the same photos. The same thing applies to having other physical traits like a muscular body to potentially compensate for below average height or face.
- Most men like most women are not min/max either; it's fairly rare you're going to find someone who is short, fat, ugly, no style, bad grooming, zero social skills, crappy job, etc. Usually he may be short but is around average or maybe even above average on other things. Maybe fat but not short, ugly, or have zero social skills. It's uncommon to have 3 or more of these, so the majority of men aren't fighting an extremely hard uphill battle.
- Given all these avenues of potential improvement, this is why I think it's possible for most men improve enough avenues to where they're overall above average in most categories which on average would rate them at least above 50% of men if not more. A physical body may be say top 10-20%, but maybe his face is average or slightly below average, his style is top 20%, and grooming is top 20%. On average, excellence in most of these areas will pull up his overall attractiveness even if his face is average or below average.

Obviously, improvement is fairly relative. A man starting out at obese and poor style, grooming, and other physical traits along with poor social skills may not improve as much as someone who is average on all of those already. On average, I'd say most men can gain at least 2-4 points on the 10 scale of attractiveness. Some men can get more than that, but most can get at least that much.

Thus, a man who starts out as a 1 can get himself to at least the 3-5 range, a man who is a 2 can get himself to at least the 4-6 range, and so on for your 5 to get to the 7-8+ range. It's likely exponentially harder to get up past the >=8 range except in specific instances where things like exorbitant amounts of money or fame come into play. Again, see various progress pics which show men and women that are 1-3/10 range physically can commonly get themselves up to 5-8/10 range.

I'm not sure a standard bell curve distribution would work based on the 1-10 scale, but if it did then each standard deviation would probably be about 2 points of improvement. You'd have 68% of men between a 3-7 range and 95% of men between a 1-9 range. This means that about 13.5%+2.5%=16% of men are rated 7 or higher which is approximately in line with the fact that about 20% of men are rated as attractive by women. Maybe it's a bit more left skewed at the moment where the average is closer to 4. Your average man who is a "4" could gain 2-4 points to the 6-8 range.

Now to skate back to the original question. What percentage of the male population has an objective chance at a godly marriage?

Unfortunately, this question is mired in the fact that most Christian men and women find it hard to obey Biblical marital roles and responsibilities if their spouse is not attractive. Theoretically, the answer is 100% if people were committed to Christ. Objectively and realistically though the answer is a lot less than that. I certainly know of some godly and happy marriages where the husband and wife are probably 2-3/10 to most people, but this is not the norm. One could argue that it would be questionable or weak faith and trust in God if you aren't able to follow God despite your circumstances.

Given the stats and assessment on attractiveness playing a role in husbands and wives obedience to God (sadly), it's likely given the statistics of the improvement of a "4" to the 6-8 range that about only 50% of the 80-90% under the top 10-20% could do this. That means you have about 10-20% + 40-50% which is 50-70% of the Christian population could do this.

Optimistically, I think it could be more than that, but we have to understand that the Christian population is a subset of the actual total population. It's theoretically possible that we can have most of the Christian men be above average compared to the rest of the population if we had all of them focused on being excellent in all areas of life (spiritually, physically, mentally/emotionally).

Pessimistically, given the apathy of most "Christians" in the Church to actually following God, I think it's more along the lines of similar to the top 10-20% range itself. We must remember that pretty much about 10-20% of people are likely true Christians in the Church given that this 10-20% are the ones doing most of the serving and loving others. The others are just "attenders" to varying frequencies. It's probably about 10-20% higher than this, at least according to those who "take their faith seriously" even if they are not involved with serving in Church.

To summarize:

- Optimistically — 80-90% of Christian men
- Realistic — 50-70% of Christian men, if you build Church communities of men that take their faith seriously.
- Pessimistic — 20-40% of Christian men. What it appears to currently be.

I’m curious as to what others will say are their ranges, and what can be done to start helping men.

What makes a Christian marriage successful?

March 2, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack comments on Nova's most recent post.

> Cameron listed three commonalities with successful marriages (even those that started in sin and without proper screening or planning).
> 1-The marriage is open to (better if enthusiastic for) having children.
> 2-The woman wants to be (primarily) a wife and mother rather than a careerist.
> 3-There was evident attraction from the woman directed towards the man from the get-go. (i.e. Scott's axiom).
> This mirrors conclusions I have made in the past, that marriage is (or should be) about sex (largely dependent on point 3, since women are "gatekeepers" of sex) and having children (point 1), and that it needs to have a Headship structure (implied in the combination of points 2 and 3). Also, point 2 requires the woman's decided rejection of any self-centered personal ambitions, such as the Feminist Life Script or riding the CC. Point 3 and early marriage discourages the latter. Also, a woman's N count sharply erodes point 3 and could affect point 1 (e.g. extended family, paternity fraud, etc.), which is why virginity and chastity are important.
> This also explains why many non-Christians have successful marriages and many Christians do not, as I wrote about in Friday's post.
> I am coming to the conclusion that there is a misconception about what "Christian" truly means in regard to dating and marriage. To wit, we have the notion that a Christian marriage requires two chaste, professing Christians being properly married in a certain kind of church, complete with public vows and golden rings and the rubber stamps of the church and state. You may choose between lillies or roses, and rice or confetti. But all these things are rather superficial. In reality, the collection of factors I listed above (Cameron's 3 points with my extensions) is what truly constitutes a "Christian" marriage (or what should be touted as a Christian marriage). Here, the adjective "Christian" in front of "marriage" carries the meaning that it glorifies God, fulfills His purposes for marriage, and establishes a sanctified home environment that is conducive to the emotional security and spiritual vitality of the family.
> This is what determines whether the marriage is successful, and not the mere absence of divorce.

I wanted to pull this out and highlight it because it's very reminiscent of my attraction post: A Christian understanding of attraction and the role it plays in marriage. This is one of the most important articles that I included in the Biblical Masculinity Blueprint in order to explain attraction to those who read it. I'm not going to cover the whole thing, but I'll pull out the salient topics.

Basically, Jesus indicates in Matthew 22 when He is trying to be trapped by the Saducees/Pharisees that there's no marriage in heaven. This means marriage is an earthly institution, and that we can learn a lot about it for the purposes God created it.

Genesis 1 and 2 are two different accounts of creation. Genesis 1 is an overview of creation, while Genesis 2 more of the human view of creation. Both have components that indicate why marriage was created. For instance, Genesis 1 indicates that God created male and female and commanded them to "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth." (e.g. (1) be fruitful and multiply and (2) take dominion over all the earth).

Genesis 2 indicates the other various duties — Gen 2:15 "…put him in the Garden of Eden to cultivate it and tend it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "… but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for on the day that you eat from it you will certainly die." "18 Then the Lord God said, "It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper suitable for him."

In effect, God's commands of marriage as an earthly institution first with Adam and then as a helper with Eve are to:

1. Take dominion over all the earth
2. Multiply and fill the earth
3. Cultivate and tend to the garden
4. Obey God
5. Eve as a helper

So what are men attracted to? Men are generally attracted to physical beauty (e.g. .6-.8 waist to hip ratio), healthy bodies, beauty, etc which tend to indicate that she is fertile and has a good capacity to bear children — thus fulfilling God's command to multiply and fill the earth. Femininity is generally nurturing and kind, much like a good helper would be.

So what are women attracted to? Women are generally attracted to PSALM – power, status, athleticism, looks (muscle, etc.), and money and similar things. Power and status? Those tend to correlate with taking dominion. Athleticism and looks/muscle? Those tend to be correlated with protecting and caring for things like the garden and her and her children. Money? Provisioning for her and her children. Masculine traits are helpful for improving all of these to varying degrees.

To circle back around…

These obviously look familiar to Cameron's and Jack's assessment of godly successful marriages.

1. Marriage is open and/or enthusiastic about having children. Check. Be fruitful and multiply.
2. The woman wants to be a wife and mother instead of a careerist. Check. Helper to her man (wife) and be fruitful and multiply (mother).

3. Evident sexual attraction. Check. Obviously, a man fulfilling God's mandate to take dominion, protect and provide for himself (and by extension a wife and children) and obey God (e.g. not put his wife on a pedestal — or in Heartiste's rule 'you shall make your mission, not women, your priority') is going to be attractive to women. Likewise, a woman that is generally beautiful and feminine will tend to best fulfill the be fruitful and multiply and helper commands and duties respectively.

It's there all along. We just didn't want to dig through Genesis 1-3 to understand fulfilling God's purpose for marriage means that men and women will be attracted to each other and successful at it.

Vetting is for identifying red flags from past behavior; future behavior needs Biblical solutions

March 3, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Y'all giving me lots of material for posts from the comments section of the same post of my previous post on What makes a Christian marriage successful?

Vetting

There seems to be a very wrong impression about the value of vetting. Vetting is looking at a man or woman's past and identifying behavior that are potential yellow or red flags. These tend to be moderate to high risk factors for divorce.

Vetting does not ensure any guarantee on future behavior, although it can show trends. For instance, one of my oft used examples is this: if a woman had sex with some men before coming to Christ, but once she came to Christ she was devoted to Christ by following Him in her behavior and chaste for several years she would generally be a better choice than a woman who claims to be a Christian but has done everything but sex (while continuing to claim to be a Christian) with the same number of men the now chaste woman is.

The way Jesus said it in terms of behavior/vows was: let your yes be yes and your no be no. Your behavior should be congruent with what you are saying. This is similar to one of the RP maxims: watch what they do, not what they say.

Future behavior

The thing that I see in real life that most Christian husbands who are in marital trouble aren't doing is something that is straight out of the Bible that I've covered dozens of times on this blog.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

Obviously, the Church currently does not do any favors to husbands by claiming this love that Christ has for the Church is to make his wife happy (e.g. happy wife, happy life). Instead, the real meaning of the verse is one of the keys to help influence future behavior of your wife.

How many Christians husbands are taking responsibility for sanctifying their wife — pointing out when they sin and helping them to repent. That number is probably very few. This ideally needs to be started BEFORE marriage to ensure that you don't marry a wife that is contentious to Christian teaching, rebuke, correction and training.

Yes, this is basically akin to discipling your wife in the faith.

This command for husbands to obey is critical for influencing a wife to become more like Christ. The act of repentance means a wife has to be humble enough to admit she's sinning and change her behavior. This also likely means she's humble enough to submit to her husband and follow His lead.

It is entirely possible that a Christian husband could be doing this from the start of his marriage and a wife is rebellious and contentious anyway, but that seems to be rare.

Anticipating and influencing future behavior

March 16, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was thinking about Vetting is for identifying red flags from past behavior; future behavior needs Biblical solutions, and I think there is a need for more discussion on traits that predict a woman will not only stay a Christian but have high character through the changes that life brings in the good and especially bad situations.

The many of these also apply to what to look for in a husband too.

- Submission and respect

These are clear Biblical roles and responsibilities for wives (Eph 5, Col 3, 1 Peter 3, Tit 2, etc.), but a lot of potential husbands will gloss over these to their own detriment.

While a woman or girlfriend does not have to submit to a man before marriage, you can generally get an understanding of how she will act accordingly when a man makes a decision for them on dates or other similar things and if she reacts with respect and deference. Is she happy that he is making decisions or is she challenging and contentious? The list goes on. Look at both her attitude and actions in reference to your decision making. Better yet, how does she react when you do something that she doesn't like?

- Is she teachable? Is she open to correcting, rebuking, and training?

2 Timothy 3:16 All Scripture is God-breathed and is useful for teaching, rebuking, correcting and training in righteousness, 17 so that the servant of God may be thoroughly equipped for every good work.

This one is pretty obvious when you look at Christianity as a whole, but I think a lot of people in the Church are a bit blindsided by the fact that people don't actually obey the Bible when their feelings get in the way.

The big one to look for in this is if a woman is willing to obey the Scriptures even in difficult circumstances or when confronted with her disobedience to Scripture how will she act?

- Is she humble?

Dozens of Scriptures on humility and pride. One who is humble can admit their errors and repent of their own sin. They do not have a narcissistic or overly high esteem where they can only blame the other person. Humility goes a long way especially in conflict situations. If you have someone capable of understanding their own role to play in any particular situation, you have someone who won't think of playing the blame game.

- Does she constantly strive to have good character? How does she exemplify the fruit of the Spirit?

How does she act when no one is around? Does she put on a front when out with people, and does that facade also come around when you are on? How does she act around those less fortunate or those who can do nothing for her? How does she act in difficult circumstances and when things don't go her way?

"He who is faithful with little is faithful with much"
"But I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you"

You may have to ask her friends and family in regular conversation about how she acts normally, and you can usually figure out for yourself after about 3-4 months of dating when people get more comfortable with one another and start letting their guard down.

- Final thoughts for now

Virginity and looking at past behavior is great to identify yellow and red flags, but these types of qualities matter more in predicting future behavior. Overall, this is a solid list to start. There are more that can be added as well.

The common theme around most of these is two-fold:

1. Is she walking the Christian walk, striving to be more sanctified in Christ over time?
2. How does she handle adversity? The measure of a more mature Christian is one who runs toward God when adversity strikes instead of running away from God.

Most Christians out there when adversity strikes will stop going to Church and small group, stop talking with their friends and family, and generally have a bad time when they need to seek God the most. This is the exact opposite thing that they should be doing.

David, who is called a man after God's own heart, was always pressing into God even in the hard and bad times as exemplified in the Psalms. Even when he sinned and did extremely terrible things, he was often quick when confronted with his wrongdoing by others to be humble and admit his fault before God and change his behavior.

A woman who has all of these qualities and a husband who focuses on his own Biblical marital roles and responsibilities to be her head and love her for the purpose of sanctification will be able to make it through life's changes without being blindsided by her randomly changing according to the culture. If there was one trait that is probably the most important, it's humility as most of these other things flow from that. You can't have someone that is teachable without humility or willing to admit their own wrongs without humility. Same with walking with the fruit of the Spirit and high character.

Churches need to stop saying our culture is so sex saturated, and that it's getting so bad we are in the end times

March 24, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a big misconception that needs to go die. It makes it seem like our generation(s) are way worse than any others. I've had to bring this up several times in the past year in different contexts, the most recent one here.

The New Testament epistles were written to men and women in a MORE sex saturated culture than us. Men and women were openly banging temple prostitutes (1 Corinthians 6, 2 Corinthians 6), having sex with their father's wives (1 Corinthians 5 – "even something pagans wouldn't tolerate" per Paul), and things like that. Pederasty/pedophilia (men having sex with young boys) was common and even romanticized some in Greek and Roman culture.

The apostles and Scripture called these Christian men and women to avoid sexual immorality and save sex to marriage.

Yes, the backdrop for which the New Testament Christians was worse than we have it now. Yes, there are now groups that are starting to try to legalize pedophilia, but we are far from there yet.

God's design and morality are universal, but it's easy to think that we are always living in a culture that has it the "worst." I believe this mentality more easily leads to compromise due to many Christians feeling like it's inevitable. It is not. The early Church dealt with it and survived effectively. We can too.

The fear of women leads to failure

March 27, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One consistent thing I keep seeing at Sigma's and in the comments here is that women have power over men. Let me be clear.

Women have zero power over men.

My wife has zero power over me. She can divorce me, but that is no power over me because I don't fear it. It will never stop me from obeying God.

I've detailed before in several posts such as Attitudes and marriage and Fear of marriage: the self fulfilling prophecy.

> A husband that is afraid that he may have everything taken away from him will not act rationally in his best interests in terms of the Biblical roles and responsibilities. What I mean by this is if a husband is in fear that his wife will divorce him, he will not be able to love her through sanctification. He will not be able to call her out and correct her when she is off course. He won't be able to lead the marriage effectively due to being afraid of the potential consequences of her unhappiness. He won't be able to stand firm during her moodiness and eventually capitulate. He'll have a difficult time pushing back against a culture and and the churchians who suggest that "love" is "making his wife happy."
> This is not to say that those going into it with good attitudes will have godly and successful marriages. That certainly is not the case in every circumstance. Everyone has free will and even many people who were following or disciples of Jesus rejected him when the going got rough (e.g. John 6). However, it is true that it is likely that a bad attitude with corresponding responses will eventually lead to marital ruin.
> In this context, we can say that a husband who does not fear his wife but only fears God stands a much better chance at having not only a godly marriage but a successful marriage as well.

You can see this same theme in the disciples in Acts 16.

> Acts 16:16 Once when we were going to the place of prayer, we were met by a female slave who had a spirit by which she predicted the future. She earned a great deal of money for her owners by fortune-telling. 17 She followed Paul and the rest of us, shouting, "These men are servants of the Most High God, who are telling you the way to be saved." 18 She kept this up for many days. Finally Paul became so annoyed that he turned around and said to the spirit, "In the name of Jesus Christ I command you to come out of her!" At that moment the spirit left her.
> 19 When her owners realized that their hope of making money was gone, they seized Paul and Silas and dragged them into the marketplace to face the > authorities. 20 They brought them before the magistrates and said, “These men > are Jews, and are throwing our city into an uproar 21 by advocating customs > unlawful for us Romans to accept or practice.”

> 22 The crowd joined in the attack against Paul and Silas, and the magistrates > ordered them to be stripped and beaten with rods. 23 After they had been > severely flogged, they were thrown into prison, and the jailer was commanded to > guard them carefully. 24 When he received these orders, he put them in the > inner cell and fastened their feet in the stocks.
> 25 About midnight Paul and Silas were praying and singing hymns to God, and > the other prisoners were listening to them. 26 Suddenly there was such a violent > earthquake that the foundations of the prison were shaken. At once all the prison > doors flew open, and everyone’s chains came loose. 27 The jailer woke up, and > when he saw the prison doors open, he drew his sword and was about to kill > himself because he thought the prisoners had escaped. 28 But Paul shouted, > “Don’t harm yourself! We are all here!”
> 29 The jailer called for lights, rushed in and fell trembling before Paul and Silas.
> 30 He then brought them out and asked, “Sirs, what must I do to be saved?”
> 31 They replied, “Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you will be saved—you and your > household.” 32 Then they spoke the word of the Lord to him and to all the others > in his house. 33 At that hour of the night the jailer took them and washed their > wounds; then immediately he and all his household were baptized. 34 The jailer > brought them into his house and set a meal before them; he was filled with joy > because he had come to believe in God—he and his whole household.

The disciples were repeatedly warned through Acts not to preach the gospel nor do miracles in the name of Jesus. They did so anyway. They didn’t fear any woman or man or authority but only God. This led them to continue preaching the gospel and doing miracles. This led to them being thrown in jail.

Yet the fear of jail did nothing to deter them nor did getting actually put in jailed deter them. They even sang songs and hymns in prison that led to them getting witness opportunities.

Whether my wife divorces me or not has no bearing on me as long as I am faithful to God. My money is God’s. My kids are God’s. She wants to take it? She will have to answer to God. He can take care of it all. I don’t have to fear nor compromise on God’s truth.

This is not to say that I won’t take steps to be wise about my marriage. I lead my wife by teaching and correcting her when she goes off course.

However, this serves to illustrate the paradox of the current sexual marketplace. One of the factors that influences the failure or success of them is the fear of women. Generally, men who fear women will inevitably fail. Men who don’t fear women have one of the keys to succeed. This is true whether it’s dating, relationships, or marriage. This is one of the principles where colloquially the phrase “the rich get richer and the poor get poorer” rings true.

The reason why I am the head of my marriage is because God said I am. I don’t fear what my wife could do if she wanted to follow the world. And that is precisely what allows me to lead and influence her effectively and why she wants to follow my lead.

Unpacking and tying together the meta-levels of Christianity, reality and the red pill into a hierarchical understanding: theological, scientific, and philosophical/cultural

March 29, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is not the first time someone has gone into detail about how we view reality, but it is the most recent. Jack's post on A Mystical Approach to Meta Reality approaches the meta-levels of what we understand, although I think his is slightly incomplete.

- Primary Reality — What is - Secondary Reality — What is perceived
- Tertiary Reality — The problems created by the discrepancy between 1(a) and 1(b).

I'd argue this is a bit incomplete. Tertiary reality is instead the philosophy or culture that is layered upon secondary reality. In other words, it can be at total conflict from what we perceive many times as brainwashing is a real thing.

- Primary Reality — What is — Theological
- Secondary Reality — What is perceived — Scientific
- Tertiary Reality — The organized structures upon which we perceive — Philosophy and Culture

It is important to note that most secular sources do not acknowledge a Creator and thus do not acknowledge any type of primary reality ("what is") and thus must operate from a relativistic point of view in that we can only know what we perceive. This is why they cannot have any sort of designations such as good and evil or morality because these are strictly theological concepts based upon God. They can only have good and bad from the perspective of what is perceived by an individual or group.

Now, this can be organized in various ways, and Lexet's Charting the Red Pill World can be organized upon this foundational block.

Generally speaking, the "red pill" as it was originally formulated is strictly scientific in nature where various men wanted to discover (or rather rediscover) what the truth of attraction and inter-sexual behavior in order for their own gain. This was done by trial and error and observation about what women do. Hence, the RP maxim "Watch what they do, not what they say."

This also means via extension that much of what was occurring culturally and philosophically in the eras that RP arose from was not aligning with what we were able to observe in culture.

- Primary Reality — What is — Theological

- Secondary Reality — What is perceived — Scientific — “The Red Pill”: Observation about the truth of what men and women do via attraction and intersexual behavior
- Tertiary Reality — The organized structures upon which we perceive — Philosophy and Culture — “The Blue Pill”: recent and current culture (1980s-1990s and forward) and philosophy did not align with what was observed in reality (e.g. happy wife, happy life, “just be yourself”, etc.)

In the past in some (perhaps many?) cultures, we did have a more clear alignment of Secondary Reality and Tertiary Reality. For example, at least in the 1950s and further back when men were taught to be masculine men and women were taught to be feminine women we had a more natural alignment of Secondary and Tertiary Realities. Some would argue that all of the Realities aligned — Primary, Secondary and Tertiary — but as I have noted on this blog I believe that to be false as no nation has ever striven to fully align itself with God. There may be appearances of such, but in practice it has not occurred.

Indeed, any type of interpretation of what is perceived will tend to spawn it’s own culture and philosophy. Hence, we have various different tertiary realities popping up from “The Red Pill” based on how different groups interpret the scientific and observational data.

Various Tertiary Realities born out of “The Red Pill: Observations” include the one’s Lexet listed:

- The Blue Pill
- Secular Red Pill (PUAs)
- Political Red Pill
- MGTOW (possibly tied for 3rd)
- Christian RP (Catholics > Protestants in number, due to appeals to tradition)
- Other Religious RP
- Incels
- Black Pill

Each of these has their own interpretation of the scientific and observational data. Some are more congruent with the data than others. For instance, it’s clear that the blue pill is not very congruent with actual scientific and observational data as the current cultural and philosophical milieu ignores actual scientific data to keep pushing their own agenda. Common examples of this are preferring blank slate-ism (“you can be any gender you want”) or genetic determinism (“people are born that way” when referring to homosexuality) based on their argument of the day.

To expand on the hierarchical nature of the primary, secondary and tertiary realities in terms of Christianity, we need to understand what we mean by truth and Truth. Since the Creator made the world and created us with senses to understand the world, we also understand that the Scripture that was inspired by Him contains Truth about the world He created.

- Primary Reality — What is — Theological — Truth: The Bible contains Truth about the human condition including how to live lives that are in alignment with God and tend to be successful as that's how God designed us to live. For instance, Adam was created as the head of his wife and Eve was created as his helper. The Biblical marital roles and responsibilities of headship-submission, love and respect, etc.
- Secondary Reality — What is perceived — Scientific — "The Red Pill": Observation about the truth of what men and women do via attraction and intersexual behavior — truth: codifications of observerations that are almost universally successful in relationships made it into various RP maxims. For instance, Heartiste's 3rd of the 16 commandments of poon "III. You shall make your mission, not your woman, your priority."
- Tertiary Reality — The organized structures upon which we perceive — Philosophy and Culture — "The Blue Pill": recent and current culture (1980s-1990s and forward) and philosophy did not align with what was observed in reality (e.g. happy wife, happy life, "just be yourself", etc.) — lies: the various cultural platitudes such as happy wife, happy life or "just be yourself" are typically either conditionally or wholly false and often misapplied to a particular person which leaves them more confused and frustrated.

Understanding the primary versus secondary versus tertiary realities does not mean that the secondary and tertiary realities are all truthful or all lies. For example, "just be yourself" does work with women if you are attractive and a naturally masculine leader.

Likewise, just because some red pill person said it does not mean it is a universal truth either. One must remember the context in which most RP advice is given: they're typically to unattractive men who are unsuccessful with women. In other words, the underlying feature of which most advice is given is aimed at increasing attraction and/or removing behaviors that are unattractive.

One must also understand that much of the secular RP codifications of advice are built off of the premise of having sex with as many women as possible. Hence, the target of specific actions are typically promiscuous women. Thus, certain advice is built on maximizing the possibility of sex and often at the exclusion of possible relationships and marriage. For instance, one of the example of common advice is to avoid paying for dates / going dutch. As I have noted before, if you are a Christian this is a pretty big turn off with pretty much any Christian woman who considers herself traditional which is the largest pool of potential spouses for any true Christian man.

One can also see how, in some cases, RP maxims have almost discovered almost verbatim how God instructs us how to live by simply observing reality. Any Christian man should be putting God's mission first, and his wife is to be a helper to him.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself > the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

Christ set the same example: by dying for our sins and resurrecting for the purpose of the sanctification of His Church, and invites the Church to participate in His mission (The Great Commission) to make disciples of all nations.

Now to get back to the analysis.

Generally, the theological will provide the interpretive lens on which we view the scientific which will provide the lens in which we view the culture or philosophical.

In other words, we start from the fact that God created everything with an intent and purpose including man, woman, and marriage. This includes why each man and woman is attracted to particular qualities in their spouse.

It is extremely dangerous to work in reverse order (e.g. scientific observations informs the theological) because deception is very easy. This is the case where many men enter the manosphere proper (either secular or Christian) and start to put on the lens of RP and impute that onto the Scriptures to make determinations of how to live. I have been guilty of that in the past as well unknowingly and changed my stance once others have informed me or I became aware. These lead to dancing monkey syndrome: one must continually do all of the different behaviors in order to be attractive else you're screwed.

As was iterated in Why we are here, the main concept that that observing RP (e.g. scientific observation about men and women's sociosexual behavior) does is to help us take off the lens of feminism and the current cultural milieu. This allows us to see male and female sociosexual behavior without the common cultural tropes blinding us. The vast majority of us, including Christians, didn't question that we have always lived with the cultural and philosophical informing the scientific observations which was informing our theological beliefs.

This is what typically happens.

- The clash: Theological –> scientific <– cultural and philosophical. (These clash at the scientific and observational level. Many times "happy wife, happy life" wins out over headship-submission and love-respect despite the results of "happy wife happy life" being an utter failure).
- Most people: Theological <– scientific <– cultural and philosophical. (Humans by nature tend to default to feelings and experiences over God due to temptation and sin. Thus, the cultural wins out over any type of theological belief. The vast majority of people don't even realize that this is happening.)
- What needs to happen: Theological –> scientific –> cultural and philosophical. (This is what should be happening. You reach an extremely different culture by having your worldview on God rather than the culture informing your worldview. Many Christians groups have tried to emulate what they've seen in the gospels and Acts and can't do it. One reason is probably not aggressively rooting out cultural heresies.)

We can use the top-down theological perspective to inform of why and how temptations easily blind men and women, husbands and wives, and others and learn to act in a righteous manner to follow God.

The sad part about our cultural milieu is that it's strong enough that most Christian leaders don't realize they're walking in it. They preach complementarianism or egalitarianism (because headship is not enough for them) but in practice they walk as the pagans giving pagan advice. Even those who know that headship is right and they know something is wrong still have the lens of culture on in certain cases and still make the same mistakes. The series on the theolopis is proof as you can see in the posts analyzing them.

I think the reality is that one must first understand that they are called to God and His Great Commission. This primarily includes walking against the culture. Jesus was adamant that if you're not for Him you're against Him, and that His way is the only way. If you're not fighting against the culture in all areas then you're only going to get carried away in it. This includes all the current culture and its philosophy, and it also includes all the various cultural and philosophical offshoots of the RP — Secular RP, Political RP, Christian-ized RP, MGTOW, Incel, Black Pill, etc.

Press the reset button on everything.

Forget what you learned and your previous experiences. Ask the Holy Spirit, godly mentors, and look to commentaries and early Church fathers to help you see the Scripture from the eyes of God and not impute your previous experiences and cultural lenses onto your reading and learning.

Full obedience to God and work on making disciples. This may include teaching the basics which are in short supply nowadays such as men to be masculine men and women to be feminine women.

From around the web: Christianity matrilineal?, hypergamy still ticking, Shiela Gregroire spreading feminism, Aaron Renns's analysis of Rational Male Religion, gender gaps in mental health

April 6, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

- A case for evangelisim being matrilineal.

This one was posted several months ago, but I never really went to analyze it.

I do see some truth in the case being made though, although one can go back very far in this regard I think. It's similar to how Timothy was raised by his mother and grandmother, and then Paul (in 1 and 2 Timothy) has to teach him how to be a leader of the Church.

Readers can draw their own conclusions.

- Hypergamy still ticking in Kay Hymowitz IFS blog post

> But hypergamy turns out to be a stubborn thing. It seems that the highly-credentialed alpha female still prefers a mate above her pay grade. In one of the most widely-cited papers on the subject, demographer Yue Qian compared couples in the 1980 Census and in 2012 American Community Survey. She found that during the intervening decades, though wives became more likely to marry down in terms of educational achievement, "the tendency for women to marry men with higher incomes than themselves persisted." In fact, women with the same or more education than their husbands were more likely to marry up.
> The latest entry to the hypergamy literature, published in the December 2019 issue of The European Sociological Review, confirms Qian's findings and adds some suggestive details. Using Swedish register data for people born across several decades, the two authors, Margarita Chudnovskayaof Stockholm University and Ridi Kasrup of Oxford, divided couples into three groups: 1) couples where a woman is more highly educated than her husband, 2) those in which the husband is more highly educated, and 3) couples where both partners are highly educated. Arguing that social life exists across "multiple dimensions of status," they also looked at the social origin, occupational prestige, and income for the three groups. And they limited their analysis to couples before they had children so as to rule out the regrettably termed "motherhood penalty."
> "It seems that the highly-credentialed alpha female still prefers a mate above her pay grade."
> The results? On several dimensions, status was consistent with education levels: the partner with higher education (male or female) also had higher occupational prestige and social class. But when it came to income, hypergamy re-asserted > itself. In every union type, including those with a more educated female partner, “men are the most likely to be the main earners.” That Sweden’s commitment to gender egalitarianism is close to a state religion and that women have been partnering with less-educated men for decades only adds to the salience of the findings.

And is should be no surprise to anyone that attraction is still base rooted in God’s creation rather than what our brains think about equality or whatever.

It would be wise to only marry a woman who will look up to and respect what you do and who earns less. Otherwise, you’ll have to help her fight temptation there which she may easily succumb to discontent or comparisons.

- In the wake of the Ravi Zacharias scandals, Shiela Gregoire says…

> Evangelicals are pointing fingers at “celebrity Christian culture,” blaming it for the tragic Ravi Zacharias sexual abuse and rape scandal and the extramarital escapades of Hillsong pastor Carl Lentz (as well as so many more). But what if this epidemic is not just — or even mostly — caused by celebrity culture?
> What if it’s the evangelical view of sex?
> Yes, celebrity culture gave Zacharias more access to victims and gave both men cover for what they were doing. But it was not celebrity culture that taught these men to objectify women. Our evangelical culture primed them for it.
> Take the best-selling Every Man’s Battle series of books. “Every Heart Restored” says: “Because of male hardwiring, men don’t naturally have that Christian view of sex.” “Every Man’s Battle” says: “We find another reason for the prevalence of sexual sin among men. We got there naturally — simply by being male.”
> RELATED: Ministry leaders’ rush to empathize with Ravi Zacharias is beyond alarming
> Repeatedly, God-given male sexuality and objectification of women are seen as one and the same. Tim LaHaye, in “The Act of Marriage,” echoes this: “Women must cultivate the problem of visual lust, whereas men almost universally must cope with the problem just because they are men.”
> So if men can’t help it, what do these books propose is the solution?
> Women! It is women who keep men from sinning. And it starts with understanding this is just how men are.

Don’t let any Christian women read her stuff. What’s said is I keep seeing her website and blog pop up on many Christian feeds just like Beth Moore and other women. It’s scary because people can’t see what they’re peddling is not Christian at all.

It sounds good and I guess it’s what 2 Timothy 4 calls “3 For the time will come when people will not put up with sound doctrine. Instead, to suit their own desires, they will gather around them a great number of teachers to say what their itching ears want to hear. 4 They will turn their ears away from the truth and turn aside to myths."

Mike Licona has a good response to the Ravi allegations.

- Aaron Renn had a blog post on Rational Male Religion book

As was probably assumed at least from the review, Rollo mainly analyzes only churchianity and it's fall to feminists and secularism. He doesn't discuss anything in regard to what true Christians should be doing, just his own prescriptions from a purely materialist and secularist standpoint which are not options for Christians.

There was also Renn's shout out to The Biblical Masculinity Blueprint as well.

- Gender gaps in mental health, H/t commenter on Sigma (sorry, forgot who).

> Mental ill-health is a leading cause of disease burden worldwide. While women suffer from greater levels of mental health disorders, it remains unclear whether this gender gap differs systematically across regions and/or countries, or across the different dimensions of mental health. We analysed 2018 data from 566,829 adolescents across 73 countries for 4 mental health outcomes: psychological distress, life satisfaction, eudaemonia, and hedonia. We examine average gender differences and distributions for each of these outcomes as well as country-level associations between each outcome and purported determinants at the country level: wealth (GDP per capita), inequality (Gini index), and societal indicators of gender inequality (GII, GGGI, and GSNI). We report four main results: 1) The gender gap in mental health in adolescence is largely ubiquitous cross-culturally, with girls having worse average mental health; 2) There is considerable cross-national heterogeneity in the size of the gender gap, with the direction reversed in a minority of countries; 3) Higher GDP per capita is associated with worse average mental health and a larger gender gap across all mental health outcomes; and 4) more gender equal countries have larger gender gaps across all mental health outcomes. Taken together, our findings suggest that while the gender gap appears largely ubiquitous, its size differs considerably by region, country, and dimension of mental health. Findings point to the hitherto unrealised complex nature of gender disparities in mental health and possible incongruence between expectations and reality in high gender equal countries.

Much like the Paradox of Declining Female Happiness, it should not be a surprise that when women are pushed to be more and more like men and add on tons of extra responsibilities to try to "have it all" that their mental health is going to deteriorate.

As these pushes continue for women to continue achievement and status grabbing, it's likely that this trend will continue to get worse and worse over time. Who woulda thought that God didn't create women to act like men?

Jordan Peterson and Bishop Barron discuss Christianity and the modern world

April 26, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Sorry for the lack of updates. Life has been a bit busy and will be for another few weeks at least.

In the meantime, I found this to be a pretty interesting listen in terms of what Jordan Peterson has been talking about through his stuff and Bishop Barron's (Catholic) take on a lot of the current events.

It gets surprisingly deep at points especially when they're talking about Jesus. If you have the time it's a good listen despite whatever denomination you are in.

They accurately suss out at least some of the reasons that young men and women are leaving the Church.

Aaron Renn interviews Denny Burk on complementarianism

May 13, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Still here. Working on some longer more practical posts, so I haven't been AWOL totally.

Aaron Renn (The Masculinist) interviewed Denny Burk (current president of CBMW) on complementarianism. Wanted to throw this out there for people who haven't seen it.

I've been pretty critical of complementarianism in the past as mentioned in several posts. Complementarianism's "intelligent submission" debunking, Modern Complementarianism weasels, Relational archetypes and more insight into the false godliness of complementarianism theology, Complementarianism – holding to a form of godliness but denying its power. These are only some of the few at least.

Aside from looking at the distinctions between egalitarians and complementarians, Denny distinguishes between hard and soft complementarians. "Soft" meaning that these people only see that there should be no female leadership in the family or the Church but women can pretty much do everything else. On the other hand, "hard" complementarians — of which he is one — see the innate differences between man and woman in creation (e.g. 1 Corinthians 7 and 1 Timothy 2 referring to creation order) as not just applying to leadership but should affect one's whole worldview of the roles of men and women in the Church.

Denny also talks about the fact that the soft complementarian position will likely devolve into more soft and then overt egalitarianism (e.g. feminism) as it's not rooted in anything the Bible actually says. In other words, if you're not standing for truth you'll likely be swayed away from it as the culture becomes more hostile to Christian positions.

Credit where credit is due in that he seems to agree with the positions that I and many others have touted here by standing on the Truth of the Bible.

Aaron and Denny note at the end it seems like some (a lot? many? most?) pastors and Churches don't give advice that facilitates that they actually believe in a complementarian theological position but instead they tend to give advice that tends to jive with the wider culture. Aaron points out that theme of "servant leader" is pretty much just about serving to most Christians without the leadership/authority. Denny agrees but points out that the serving is not the issue (after all Jesus served), but it's the lack of authority that is the issue not the serving. Aaron counter points out that in most cases what happens is the inverse: it is the the authority who should get to decide how to serve (e.g. Jesus wanted to wash the disciples feet, Peter didn't want Him to do that for Him initially).

Unfortunately, they acknowledge that this is a problem, but they didn't really give any particular time to talk about potential solutions.

The biggest issue that I think that Denny did not understand or at least contemplate is that Jesus' authority is directly tied to love and service. The main point that I continually bring up is the "happy wife, happy life" mentality where the husband gets cajoled by pastors and other Church leaders into thinking that if his wife is happy he's doing a good job of loving and serving her. This cannot be further away from the Truth.

As I've gone over a zillion times, the purpose of Christ's sacrificial love is for the purpose of sanctification not happiness. If a husband is tying his headship/authority/leadership to making his wife happy instead of serving God and wanting his wife to be more holy then that is making an idol out of his wife's feelings.

In any case, I'd be interested in a follow up podcast to see what practical advice Denny Burk would recommend to Churches, pastors, and fellow Christian husbands and wives to live out Biblical headship. That's where the true rubber meets the road.

Potential clarity to 1 Corinthians 14

June 9, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Still here. Still writing the other post, just delayed.

Came across some research on this topic which was interesting. Since there's no punctuation in Koine Greek, you usually see v33-35 written as:

> 1 Corinthians 14:26 What then, brothers? When you come together, each one has a hymn, a lesson, a revelation, a tongue, or an interpretation. Let all things be done for building up. 27 If any speak in a tongue, let there be only two or at most three, and each in turn, and let someone interpret. 28 But if there is no one to interpret, let each of them keep silent in church and speak to himself and to God. 29 Let two or three prophets speak, and let the others weigh what is said. 30 If a revelation is made to another sitting there, let the first be silent. 31 For you can all prophesy one by one, so that all may learn and all be encouraged, 32 and the spirits of prophets are subject to prophets. 33 For God is not a God of confusion but of peace.

> As in all the churches of the saints, 34 the women should keep silent in the churches. For they are not permitted to speak, but should be in submission, as the Law also says. 35 If there is anything they desire to learn, let them ask their husbands at home. For it is shameful for a woman to speak in church.

> 36 Or was it from you that the word of God came? Or are you the only ones it has reached? 37 If anyone thinks that he is a prophet, or spiritual, he should acknowledge that the things I am writing to you are a command of the Lord. 38 If anyone does not recognize this, he is not recognized. 39 So, my brothers, earnestly desire to prophesy, and do not forbid speaking in tongues. 40 But all things should be done decently and in order.

Or:

> 32 and the spirits of prophets are subject to prophets. 33 For God is not a God of confusion but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints.
> 34 The women should keep silent in the churches. For they are not permitted to speak, but should be in submission, as the Law also says. 35 If there is anything they desire to learn, let them ask their husbands at home. For it is shameful for a woman to speak in church.

According to some Roman history, in the battles with Carthage many men died. Thus, their wives started accumulating a lot of money. Oppian law was passed where both men and women had to give money to Rome to fund the war efforts. After the war was over, the men started getting their money back but the women did. The women in Rome stormed the senate to try to get the senate to veto the law which ended up happening.

Livy (a Roman historian) records a debate between Cato and Lucius in the tribunal where they were deciding to veto the law or not. Part of this is Cato's speech:

> "If each man of us, fellow citizens, had established that the rights and authority of the husband should be held over the mother of his own family, we should have less difficulty with women in general; now, at home our freedom is conquered by female fury, here in the Forum it is bruised and trampled upon, and because we have not contained the individuals, we fear the lot…
> Indeed, I blushed when, a short while ago, I walked through the midst of a band of women. I should have said, 'What kind of behavior is this? Running around in public, blocking streets, and speaking to other women's husbands! Could you not have asked our own husbands the same thing at home? Are you more charming in public with others' husbands than at home with your own? And yet, it is not fitting even at home for you to concern yourselves with what laws are passed or repealed here.'
> Our ancestors did not want women to conduct any – not even private – business without a guardian; they wanted them to be under the authority of parents, brothers, or husbands; we (the gods help us!) even now let them snatch at the government and meddle in the Forum and our assemblies. What are they doing now on the streets and crossroads, if they are not persuading the tribunes to vote for repeal? Give the reins to their unbridled nature and this unmastered creature, and hope that they will put limits on their own freedom. They want freedom, nay license, in all things.
> If they are victorious now, what will they not attempt? As soon as they begin to be your equals, they will have become your superiors… What honest excuse is offered, pray, for this womanish rebellion? 'That we might shine with gold and purple,' says one of them, 'that we might ride through the city in coaches on holidays as though triumphant over the conquered law and the votes which we captured by tearing them from you…'
> Pity that husband – the one who gives in and the one who stands firm! What he refuses, he will see given by another man. Now they publicly solicit other women's husbands, and, what is worse, they ask for a law and votes, and certain men give them what they want…
> I vote that the Oppian Law should not, in the smallest measure, be repealed; whatever course you take, may all the gods make you happy with it."

Taking the passage in this context, it appears that the passage which is mainly talking about tongues and prophecy that perhaps the Corinthians Church was denying women participation in this by imputing Roman law into Church meetings.

Thus, the correct parsing of the Scriptures in this case would be:

> 26 What then, brothers? When you come together, each one has a hymn, a lesson, a revelation, a tongue, or an interpretation. Let all things be done for building up. 27 If any speak in a tongue, let there be only two or at most three, and each in turn, and let someone interpret. 28 But if there is no one to interpret, let each of them keep silent in church and speak to himself and to God. 29 Let two or three prophets speak, and let the others weigh what is said. 30 If a revelation is made to another sitting there, let the first be silent. 31 For you can all prophesy one by one, so that all may learn and all be encouraged, 32 and the spirits of prophets are subject to prophets. 33 For God is not a God of confusion but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints.
> Quoting Roman law: 34 "The women should keep silent in the churches. For they are not permitted to speak, but should be in submission, as the law (Roman) also says. 35 If there is anything they desire to learn, let them ask their husbands at home. For it is shameful for a woman to speak in church."
> Repudiating Roman law within the meetings of the body: 36 Or was it from you that the word of God came? Or are you the only ones it has reached? 37 If anyone thinks that he is a prophet, or spiritual, he should acknowledge that the things I am writing to you are a command of the Lord. 38 If anyone does not recognize this, he is not recognized. 39 So, my brothers, earnestly desire to prophesy, and do not forbid speaking in tongue (the context of the passage!). 40 But all things should be done decently and in order.

Doing some further research, apparently this particular interpretation which seems correct has also been latched onto by egalitarians and taken out of context to mean that women can do anything that men can do. However, that still conflicts with 1 Corinthians 11, 1 Timothy 2, and other passages so it cannot be correct.

Specifically, they ignore the context in which the passage which is specifically what I bolded above for prophesy and speaking in tongues. We already know that women could prophesy (e.g. Acts 21, Deborah, etc.) and likely speak in tongues as well so women had the ability to do these things in the Church. I've already covered some of that in previous posts.

It's similar to how egalitarians try to twist other passages like Galatians on "[there is no male or female but one in Christ]" when it's specifically talking about salvation not roles in the Church. Likewise, they try to warp the Ephesians 5 with the 'mutual submission" out of context when there's also Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, and so on which they refuse to touch since it doesn't fit their narrative.

They think they've found that one "gotcha" moment where they can make their culturally relevant position be right and deny the other multiple contexts of Scripture.

> If they are victorious now, what will they not attempt? As soon as they begin to > be your equals, they will have become your superiors… What honest excuse is offered, pray, for this womanish rebellion? ‘That we might shine with gold and purple,’ says one of them, ‘that we might ride through the city in coaches on holidays as though triumphant over the conquered law and the votes which we captured by tearing them from you…’

> Pity that husband – the one who gives in and the one who stands firm! What he refuses, he will see given by another man. Now they publicly solicit other women’s husbands, and, what is worse, they ask for a law and votes, and certain men give them what they want…

Ironically, given the feminist rebellion against God, Cato was indeed right about the consequences of such actions, even if the Corinthians were applying what he said wrongly in Church.

You should be training your wife

June 16, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I went with the inflammatory title for a reason.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands also ought to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are parts of His body.

A husband's love is to emulate Christ's for the purpose of sacrificial sanctification. Christ's loving sacrifice for us on the cross was that so we would be reconciled to God.

> 2 Corinthians 5:16 So from now on we regard no one from a worldly point of view. Though we once regarded Christ in this way, we do so no longer. 17 Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, the new creation has come: The old has gone, the new is here! 18 All this is from God, who reconciled us to himself through Christ and gave us the ministry of reconciliation: 19 that God was reconciling the world to himself in Christ, not counting people's sins against them. And he has committed to us the message of reconciliation. 20 We are therefore Christ's ambassadors, as though God were making his appeal through us. We implore you on Christ's behalf: Be reconciled to God. 21 God made him who had no sin to be sin for us, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God.

Thus, a husband is to love his wife for the purpose of sanctification. How can he do that? By discipling her in the faith, which part of that includes the use of Scripture.

> 2 Timothy 3:16 All Scripture is God-breathed and is useful for teaching, rebuking, correcting and training in righteousness, 17 so that the servant of God may be thoroughly equipped for every good work.

In general, husbands should be discipled by other men in the faith, and they should be discipling others including their wife and children in the faith. Much like God commands the Israelites in Deuteronomy 6.

> Deuteronomy 6:4 Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God, the Lord is one. 5 Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your strength. 6 These commandments that I give you today are to be on your hearts. 7 Impress them on your children. Talk about them when you sit at home and when you walk along the road, when you lie down and when you get up. 8 Tie > them as symbols on your hands and bind them on your foreheads. 9 Write them on the doorframes of your houses and on your gates.

What does this mean? What are some practical examples?

Here's one example I used in the book. While I was dating my wife she was being disrespectful in her speech with other people toward me, so I pulled her aside and told her not to speak about me that way. If your wife is treating you in a way that is not Christ-like with the fruit of the Spirit you should be teaching, rebuking, correcting, or training her to operate in a way that conforms with Christ.

The problem is that many Christian husbands don't do this, so their relationship or marriage devolves into a pattern of disrespectful behavior.

One of the axioms I've used on this blog before always rings true: You teach others how to treat you.

If you let your girlfriend or wife run all over you or treat you with disrespect, that's the type of relationship you are going to have. You need to grow a backbone and tell her disrespectful or non-Christian behavior is unacceptable. Just as Adam failed to rebuke Eve (and the serpent) in the garden when she gave him the fruit, husbands are to emulate Christ to be more like Him instead of doing nothing and allowing the sinful behavior to slide.

Use wisdom. If you and your wife get hotheaded, make a rule that there's no talking about things until emotions have cooled off. If there's name calling don't engage. If she's acting like a spoiled child then call it out.

If you don't tolerate manipulative behavior and don't respond it then surprise surprise it will improve over time.

Unreasonable expectations of American motherhood

June 24, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This article is an example of cause and effect.

> So as a longtime childless woman who is now wading through insurance forms and hospital preregistration and breast-pump reimbursements, I'll offer a personal framework for "solving" the "problem": My family values are fine. The country's are not. For many years I did not have children because, in policies and practices, the United States is hell for mothers.
> I did not have children because day care where I live costs an average of $24,000 per year, and renting a two-bedroom apartment can cost upward of $30,000, and in my childbearing prime my salary ranged from $37,000 to $45,000. Those numbers are far above the minimum wage that many mothers scrape by on, but still the math never made sense.
> I did not have children because while other countries determined that investing in child care — making it free or inexpensive — is the easiest way to encourage motherhood, the United States has determined that what's easiest is simply berating families who can't make it work, telling them that they should have budgeted better, or saved more, or arranged for Grandma to watch the baby. (I did not have children because Grandma, my own mother, is still working full time.)
> Pregnancy and childbirth are bloody, messy, flesh-tearing endeavors after which American women are discharged from the hospital with no codified support. No free Finnish baby boxes containing all necessary baby gear. No free British midwives, dropping by your home to check on the mental and physical well-being of the new parents. No free Swedish lactation consultants, no German hebammen. No mandated paid maternity leave as exists throughout Europe and in other countries like South Korea, Israel, Mexico, Chile.

> Compared with 40 other relatively wealthy countries, the United States is the only one that does not provide paid parental leave, that expects women to discharge themselves from the hospital and then cheerfully return to work, still wearing compression binders to hold in their angry Caesarean section scars, and that is why I did not have children.

Ironically, this is a pretty narrow window of thinking, especially with the context of comparison is the thief of joy. If we stopped to think about why wages have eroded, feminism and flooding the labor market with tons of women did that over time. One could also live in a different area, but that's not exactly a good thing either. Want better healthcare experience? Well, we could raise taxes and do that, but then everyone would complain about that too.

> Our culture loves nothing more than to judge women for the choices they make, and then rejudge them if they make different choices. More than a handful of readers, I know, have gotten this far into the column and have decided that the problem is not a systemic lack of empathy and accommodation for mothers but rather women like me: childless women who should have lived somewhere less expensive, or found unicorn jobs with high pay and flexible hours, or arranged child-care swaps with imaginary neighbors, or just shut up about it and not bore everyone with their whining.
> Or, just not had children at all. Most of us want to be respectable, responsible, contributing members of society, and those options were presented as the only respectable choices: Have children and never expect an iota of help from anyone who is not a blood relative; or don't have them and be forced to explain yourself to people who can't seem to understand childlessness as something other than a sign of dysfunction, weakness or entitlement.

Or maybe that's feminism saying that "women should have it all" and you're placing the unreasonable expectations on yourself. Feminism also says that being a "housewife" is not a respectable, responsible contributing member of society either, so now women think they are being "forced" into placing their value on their work never thinking that it could be a big issue.

I'm not against women or wives working, but when you buy into feminist thinking it leads to awful conclusions.

> Women are not having children because they know if something went alarmingly wrong with the pregnancy, they would have to go to an abortion clinic while strangers lined the building and called them murderers on what was already the worst day of their lives.
> Women are not having children because they know the same people who insisted they cared about what happened to their fetuses would not care much at all about what happened to their children. Because nobody makes signs and marches in support of postnatal extended hospital stays (the average duration of postnatal hospital care has halved since the 1970s). Because there is no powerful, righteous bloc of single-issue voters in America who are threatening to make or break politicians over their support of universal preschool.
> There were other reasons I personally did not have children, of both a thoughtful and ridiculous nature (What if I dropped him? What if I accidentally left her in the car, the way I sometimes accidentally leave my wallet in the car?).

Rolls eyes. No one wanting a kid thinks about this stuff. Money issues, sure. Perhaps not coincidentally, her hate boner for "the people she's referring to" base their lives around actually wanting to raise a family — and not their jobs especially for the wife — because that's their priority. And they're happier. Funny how that works out.

> I did not have children because America is a difficult place to be a mom. And > because every policy-based attempt to change that is met by telling women to buck up, drink a glass of rosé and download the Calm app. Screw that.

> Now I'm having a baby, a plot twist that involved a lot of thinking and planning with my husband, paired with a lucky salary bump, paired with my employer's increasingly generous leave policies, paired with a soulful and biological pull that asked to be listened to rather than suppressed. I'll say that I expect motherhood to be very, very hard, but also as immense and rewarding and transformative and weird as everyone says it is.
> I will also say, as I'm heading off on this immense and rewarding journey, that I will never forget what it feels like to be a woman who is not having children. And how that might be because a woman genuinely doesn't want to — an equal, valid and conversation-ending choice that should be respected unequivocally.
> And how some of those women maybe do want to have children, but they are among the many American women for whom motherhood is not a practical choice. It's not because they are entitled, or weak, or dysfunctional. It's because their country is.

Honestly, I'm pretty sad for her since she's bought the feminist dream lie along with many other women. Everything is still all about basing things around her and her job and blaming others for her choices. I guess the saying is true: if you make your bed you lie in it.

What's crazy is when I saw this going around on FB with tons of women agreeing to it, it was with women who were making good money at least as much as the average American household by themselves not including their husbands. That and they also bought houses or were renting in places that were probably to large for their own salaries. Feminism and keeping up with the Joneses. A bad combo.

The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest part 2

June 24, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack's post on men's fantasy of emotional intimacy seems to have resonated with a bunch of men.

I wrote on this a while ago in The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest, but let's go back into some of the details.

> Men and women tend to express emotions differently. Surprise surprise. We are different.

> 1. Men tend to process emotions internally and solitary.
> 2. Women tend to process emotions outwardly in a social manner, especially with friends and family.
> 3. When women tell men to be more outwardly emotionally expressive, what they really mean is to be more positively emotionally expressive.
> 4. A necessary feature of leadership is the ability to process emotions internally and solitary. That is a leader must be able to filter out their negative emotional displays in order to lead by example and build confidence and trust in the relationship. Negative emotional displays often lead to threats, fear, and distrust.
> 5. Women generally want to share in the joys of your successes, be shielded from the sorrows of your failures, and be her anchor in the storms of life.

As I've learned more about this in marriage, I think there are some more caveats from this.

A. First, I still agree with my prior assessment that most successful outward emotions should be positive. Since women tend to be more empathetic, that means they tend to be influenced and actually feel the emotions that you are expressing. Hence, if you get into a negative mood it tends to influence her into a negative mood as well. That's not what you want.

B. Negative displays of emotions or weakness should generally only be typically expressed through story or "after the fact" type of scenarios where you overcame that difficulty. For example, the oft used bodybuilder wins competition after coming back from injury (?) example below. He's crying and emotionally vulnerable, but it's attractive because he just won a competition and he's hot.

Just as a skinny frail body triggers feelings of revulsion in women, so does weakness expressed in any other way. I haven't had any of the harrowing scenarios in the other comments, but my wife has commented that even me expressing "owww" when something unexpected hits me and causes me pain can bring out feelings of "ickiness" or "mild revulsion" within her. That's just hypergamy. Since men are supposed to be protectors of women by God's design, anything that shows weakness in a man will start to trigger her hypergamy in a negative way. Obviously, this can go haywire just like gold diggers are a twisted expression of providership, but understanding that things like this can be a normal reaction will help you be more aware of it and build habits that eliminate behavior like that.

C. Within that particular context, attractive men (e.g. PSALMs, masculinity, etc.) have more leeway than unattractive men. As some have stated, the rules are different. This also applies to perception because you may be objectively attractive as some celebrities are, but their wives may still divorce them. We don't know what goes on behind the scenes if they are just feminist and/or rebellious, but I've counseled some situations where a husband is objectively attractive physically but he doesn't have other components of PSALM such a strong masculine leadership and is a pushover in his decision making. That turn off overcomes his objectively attractive appearance.

For those in situations with inverted roles or rebellious wives, it is imperative to minimize displays of weakness because that only breeds contempt and disrespect. Standard "RP" advice is to not emote around women at all, and the reason for this is because the general RP population to which this advice is given is unattractive men looking to be more successful with women. Thus, the playbook is to eliminate any potential things that may be turning off women which emoting includes.

E. Turning back to my assertion that negative emotional sharing should be generally be done through story or "after the fact" scenarios means you can show or tell how you overcame a specific scenario in the past with negative emotions. For the woman or wife it brings them through the negative experience but it ends with a positive or happy ending which uplifts rather than drags them down. If you're just worrying all the time like with your job or money or stuff like that then it's first of all disobeying Christ (e.g. Matthew 6), but it's also dragging down the atmosphere on the relationship or marriage.

F. I would also compare this scenario to something I've seen in Christian Churches before which is always being transparent and always being truthful. This can especially be emphasized in marriage by counselors and pastors. This is something that is easily taken the wrong way because you start to lack wisdom and discernment. For instance, if I'm walking through the store or the Church, it's true that many people are overweight or obese but am I going to just share anything and everything that's on my mind about those particular things? No, it's obviously not going to be helpful for building up at all.

Therefore, we have established the fact that being completely honest and transparent with everything we think or feel does not always have to be said. I think this is one of the ways that the perhaps both the culture as well as Christian culture has seeped into our minds as a false reality that we need have our spouse know everything about it us and that it will bring us closer. No, it won't. Sharing every particular thing is simply just dumb from any perspective, except one where you have some type of fantasy that it's a good thing.

I'm not sure where this is rooted from but it might be a type of expression from chivalry or perhaps an influence of a relationship with a mother and son. A mother generally accepts her children unconditionally no matter what they say or do, but this is different than a headship-submission relationship. One should not act in a way with your wife as you did with your mother as that would lead to an inverted role relationship.

I personally have never felt the need to share all things and everything with my wife especially in regard to negative emotions like fears or worries, so I was a bit confused as to why many men on the other post felt like they needed to. Maybe that is one of the more insidious features of churchianity where the church has unknowingly fallen to culture and we can’t discern that it’s a bad idea to talk about everything with our wives.

“That all changed after we married…”

June 28, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is something that has been brought up multiple times through the years, but I think we’ve never gone into depth on this topic.

I want to cover this namely for the singles and people in relationships to look for potential issues where their potential relationship or marriage may devolve into such a state. If you can catch them while you’re still single or in a relationship you can push the eject button.

First off on my end, this has not been my experience at all as my wife is the same person before and after marriage. I’ve done all the posts on vetting and looking at future behavior, and that’s the process I used to evaluate whether my wife would have solid character and virtue and pursue Christ on her own before, during, and after marriage. I’ve also noted instances of where I have had to love her for the purpose of sanctification before and after marriage in teaching, training, and correcting. I’ve also noted that my wife is very attracted to me as well which probably has something to do with it, but that was easily discerned before marriage as well.

So I guess to get into things, why do people think it is that we have the “that all changed after we married…” scenario? I’m just spitballing some common scenarios I can think of, but I’d like a quality discussion on this topic as I’m sure there’s more I haven’t thought of.

- Now, the first one is obviously something akin to infatuation. It’s easy to overlook character flaws if you’re infatuated. I can see this is the case in some scenarios
- Normalization of non-submissive and disrespectful behavior, but you didn’t catch it. This is sort of like the “she’s my better half” scenario which is easily seen, but there are a lot of non-verbal interactions that show a woman is disrespectful and contentious even though she may not verbalize it. Also, some men are a bit blind to disrespectful behavior and just gloss over it from what I’ve seen. I’ve pointed this out to various husbands before about manipulation tactics, and they never saw it until I pointed it out. The blinders were on.
- Attraction likely has something to do with things as well. As we noted previously, the rules are different when a woman is more attracted to a man versus not. This is pretty obvious in popular culture as well as women will still date “jerks” and “assholes” even though they’re treating them like dirt. As it’s typically men asking women out, men are typically attracted to women they ask out, however, at least some men don’t know if the woman they are asking out finds them attractive. Usually women won’t go out on dates with men they find not attractive, but they generally will with men they find some attractive in some instances. Same with marriage.
- Not correcting disrespecful and sinful behavior from the get go. This is also a common one that I see that not many Christian husbands believe they should be doing. Relationship starts out good because they all the good feelings and whatnot, but as those start to go away the man or husband is not leading to correct any disrespecful behavior. This leads to women getting more emboldened to keep doing it until the roles are fully inverted and they're both unhappy. This is the same as what Adam failed to do.

- She was good at hiding her true character. She seemed to walk the walk and talk the talk of being a Christian (e.g. serving in Church, reading her Bible, etc) but she was more or less just faking it. Generally, however, if you're looking closely you can assess this because she will not be fully congruent with how a Christian is supposed to act (e.g. fruit of the Spirit, especially humility when she sins. She may not also change her behavior after so-called repentance).

I'm sure there's more but I'm drawing a blank at the moment.

The most common ones I've seen at least in real life are infatuation glossing over character flaws, usually at least some lack of attraction, and not heading off,correcting or rebuking disrespect.

While it's true that women could be hiding true character, if you've been dating for more than 6-8 months you can usually catch that if you're looking closely. Don't look at the good. Look at how people respond when things don't go their way or they sin.

The corrections are usually pretty obvious, but they take time if the relationship or marriage has garnered a lot of negative momentum.

Plans of action on attractive traits for men looking for a wife for a godly marriage

July 9, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The general consensus seems to be that many Christian men will have difficulty finding a true Christian wife in today's cultural milieu. In this post, I'm going to try to detail all of the different things I did to prepare for a wife (many of which are in the book) but also some of the ones that aren't. I'm also going to include some others that people have observed over time as well.

All of these are going to be in the Spirit of complete obedience to God such as no premarital sex, no questionable moral behaviors, and so on.

This post is also not the place to comment on the difficulty of such scenarios, how many men or women can actually carrying these things out, or why they are needed. That can be the topic for another post.

No one is claiming you must do these things to be a Christian. Many of these things that you would normally do as a Christian and some optional ones that are wise are typically helpful in being attractive to the opposite sex which can help you get into a relationship and eventually get married.

Commenters are welcome to contribute things they did that they believed helped them find and marry a good wife. I will add them to the OP.

To summarize attractiveness, things that women generally consciously or subconsciously look to evaluate whether they want to date and/or marry a man are:

- PSALM (power, status, athleticism, looks, money)
- Biblically, PSALM is typically expressed in terms of headship/leadership, Protector, and Provider (Gen 1-3, Eph 5, 1 Pet 3, Tit 2, etc.).
- Masculine traits — typically expressed through headship/leadership

As for the reasons why God created attraction to exist for marriage, I detail that in my thesis of A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage Part 3.

One analogy that I often use of a house, attraction tends to get your foot in the door but character and virtue tend to sustain and maintain the relationships. Thus, I am going to split the advice into various categories that focus on attraction and relationship although some overlap with both (e.g. leadership).

In this context, attraction tends to be what the outside of the house looks like and attracts while the interior is what makes the home a stable and quality relationship. There's only so much you can do with a shabby exterior as no one will come to find out the quality of the home, but often a shabby exterior hides some rotting infrastructure underneath (e.g. nice guy syndrome). The inside should ideally reflect the outside too, so we'll keep that in mind going through the various points.

I'm going to break these down into the various categories of the OYS that RP Christians uses as it's fairly useful in terms of being wholeheartedly devoted to God in every area of life (e.g. love God with all your heart, mind, soul, and strength): Spiritual, physical, mental/emotional.

Secondly, as we discussed in What makes a Christian marriage successful?, there seems to be a several things that seem to make a Christian marriage successful from the Scriptures:

> In effect, God's commands of marriage as an earthly institution first with Adam and then as a helper with Eve (from Genesis 1-3) are to:
> 1. Take dominion over all the earth
> 2. Multiply and fill the earth
> 3. Cultivate and tend to the garden
> 4. Obey God
> 5. Eve as a helper
> So what are men attracted to? Men are generally attracted to physical beauty (e.g. .6-.8 waist to hip ratio), healthy bodies, beauty, etc which tend to indicate that she is fertile and has a good capacity to bear children — thus fulfilling God's command to multiply and fill the earth. Femininity is generally nurturing and kind, much like a good helper would be.
> So what are women attracted to? Women are generally attracted to PSALM – power, status, athleticism, looks (muscle, etc.), and money and similar things. Power and status? Those tend to correlate with taking dominion. Athleticism and looks/muscle? Those tend to be correlated with protecting and caring for things like the garden and her and her children. Money? Provisioning for her and her children. Masculine traits are helpful for improving all of these to varying degrees.
> To circle back around…
> These obviously look familiar to Cameron's and Jack's assessment of godly successful marriages.
> 1. Marriage is open and/or enthusiastic about having children. Check. Be fruitful and multiply.
> 2. The woman wants to be a wife and mother instead of a careerist. Check. Helper to her man (wife) and be fruitful and multiply (mother).
> 3. Evident sexual attraction. Check. Obviously, a man fulfilling God's mandate to take dominion, protect and provide for himself (and by extension a wife and children) and obey God (e.g. not put his wife on a pedestal — or in Heartiste's > rule ‘you shall make your mission, not women, your priority’) is going to be attractive to women. Likewise, a woman that is generally beautiful and feminine will tend to best fulfill the be fruitful and multiply and helper commands and duties respectively.

> It’s there all along. We just didn’t want to dig through Genesis 1-3 to understand fulfilling God’s purpose for marriage

Overall, a specific situation must take into account both being a man that God intended from creation and also selecting a wife with the right priorities and character traits. Sigma has a more extensive breakdown here.

One must also remember that Vetting is for identifying red flags from past behavior; future behavior needs Biblical solutions. Vetting by itself does nothing. You want to look at the specific character traits and how she acts under pressure or in tough situations to assess her virtue and ability to cling to God or to see if she runs from God (and eventually you likely in divorce).

Why do these?

1. I think it is a fairly established fact that men tend to want to marry a wife they find attractive, and that women want to marry a man they find attractive.
2. Secondly, attraction gives influence. In general, people are more willing to give the benefit of the doubt if you’re attractive. This can be leveraged many different ways including setting a good example. For instance, one personal trainer could be fat and another trainer could be muscular and ripped. People would be more willing to listen and believe the advice of the muscular and ripped one. One practices what he preaches and one doesn’t.
3. Third, the combination of attraction and influence is very useful for leadership of a wife, family, and in the Church where most people care less about attraction than even the world. It gives you more opportunities to influence others for the gospel and discipleship.

One does not have to do these to have a wife or get married, but the statistical probabilities mean that it is much less likely if you aren’t. I believe that most men would like to give themselves the best chance as possible not just to find an attractive (to them) wife but also one that is godly. The more women that you are attractive to, the easier it will be to find one that is not only attractive but serious about following God as well. The latter should be the priority, but of course sometimes Christians ignore that in favor of attractive unbelievers which is why Paul had to tell the Corinthians not to marry unbelievers.

Spiritual

- Be all in or all out on God — Once you make this commitment, it changes a lot. I used to make fun and tease vegetarians all the time during college when I found out, and I was clueless then to why some of them started to like me but it makes sense now. Women like men with a backbone and who are not afraid to put out an opinion and stick on it. Likewise, I've found once I was all in for God and put a lot of effort into studying and applying my faith my backbone in difficult situations has become a lot stronger which has been helpful not only with women but spurring my brothers in Christ on.

- Walk out God's plan for your life and study God's marital roles and responsibilities and start to apply them to your life when single — God says the husband is to be head of the wife, so he's supposed to be the leader with authority. Jesus didn't need permission from the authorities (Pharisees) to do His mission for God. How can you act as a leader of one first? That goes for all parts of your life: spiritual, physical, emotional, mental. Being a leader starts with you and your mission for God. Lead by example.
- Have an evangelism and discipleship focus — being comfortable talking about your faith with non-Christians and Christians is extremely helpful for leadership. It also helps to push away fear of things like asking women out. Asking out a woman is a temporary thing compared to evangelizing which involves something that affects the rest of their life and eternity. Likewise, being discipled and discipling gives you the correct framework to understand the roles of husband and a wife (Christ:Church/disciples::Husband:wives – Eph 5). Jesus Himself was adept in both roles (God -> Christ -> Man -> Woman – 1 Cor 11).
- Study the Scriptures in depth, develop your prayer life, practice other spiritual disciplines — Get a commentary. Understand exegesis and hermeneutics and how to apply them. A husband is be the head of the wife for the purpose of sanctification (Eph 5). Even if you never lead a Bible study, you need to be the spiritual head of a marriage. You can't be a spiritual head if you don't know what God says. This is one of the things where you need to lead by example.
- Get involved in a Church — try to pick one that mostly aligns with what you believe whether Protestant, Catholic, or Orthodox and that fights actively against feminism and the culture milieu. Yeah, easier said than done, but they are out there. Involve yourself in the community to love and serve others. The highest quality prospects that you will have will come from a Church community, and it's also true that men who tend to have the highest prospects will be involved in and/or leading ministries of various sorts (e.g. power, status in the Church). The goal is to serve God, but there are those side benefits of this that will likely help you find a wife.
- Consider taking on leadership positions in the Church — Obviously, do them because you want to serve God. However, whether it's something smaller like leading a small group or Bible study or other things like playing in the Church worship team if you have the talent these things can obviously stand out women.

Overall, most serious Christian women I've met are looking for a spiritual leader (e.g. Eph 5) so it makes within the context of women's hypergamy sense to lead by example through cultivate a strong spiritual life. Thus, you can lead your wife in spiritual matters like evangelism, discipleship, study of the Bible, prayer, etc.

Physical

- Lift weights to gain muscle — We've covered this before on how much muscle and bodyfat: Women's attraction to men's musculature and Time frames for body recomposition. Generally speaking, the more muscular and fit you are, the easier it is to come off as attractive to women and go on dates and sustain relationships with women who you also deem as attractive. To quote Mark Rippetoe — "Strong people are harder to kill than weak people and more useful in general." This is low hanging fruit and if you're not doing it then you're not serious about finding a wife to me.
- Physical hobbies — Martial arts is typically a good one to learn to trigger the protector hypergamy vibe with women, but typically any physical type of sport works as well. If you have the time and effort you can generally excel which can also be attractive. Choose one that you intrinsically enjoy hopefully.
- Groom effectively — This tends to mostly be about eliminating unattractive traits (e.g. messy hair, facial hair, body odor, etc.), but if it's done well enough it can be a net plus as well.
- Fashion sense — This is pretty obvious. As you start to get more muscular wear fitted clothes. Anyone can tell the difference between a fitted suit and a non-fitted one and how sharp and impressive someone looks in each. The same is true with any of the rest of your clothes.
- Learn to hold yourself well — make and hold eye contact, choose open body postures over closed body postures, don't rush your movements, move confidently and with a purpose, work on your voice cadence and tone, etc. Practicing public speaking (e.g. toastmasters) can help out a lot with things like these. These things also go well with evangelism and discipleship.

Overall, increasing your musculature and overall appearance helps make good first impressions and first impressions matter a lot.

Mental/emotional

- Get a job or volunteer somewhere that puts you out there interacting with everyone — if you're any way like me who scores 99% introvert on Big 5 or Myer's Briggs and was scared of talking to strangers and taking phone calls then a service job where you actually have to talk to anyone and everyone can help with this. I took one in high school and college and had one for a brief stint after college which helped develop my social skills. This seems to be a growing problem with Millenials and any generation after them. Crappy social skills. These can be developed.
- Read Great Books for Men (GBFM) — Sort of being facetious with the title of the point, but self-education on all different topics is a good idea in general. It allows you to talk about many different things with many different people.

- Be an expert on life — What I mean by this is learn and know how to do everything in life if at all possible. Be handy around the house. Know how to do finances, invest, and set a budget. Know how to fix a car and take care of various issues. The more things you know how to do and are an expert in, the easier it is to trigger a woman's hypergamy to look up to you and respect you. That's the basis of attraction.
- Develop Anti-fragility — this is a concept where one does not avoid stress or risk taking behaviors but embrace them. Popularized by the book, but fairly common throughout various endeavors without a name. Cold showers, exercise, and other things like this are anti-fragile behaviors that increase mental resilience and ability to hand stressful situations. Reframing the mind and emotions so that negative ones aren't things to shy away from but embracing failure to help you learn and grow. This not only helps with speaking with women but everything else in life.
- Be slow to anger and other negative emotions and be self controlled in all circumstances — these things are especially important for developing good leadership acumen in your relationships including ones with a potential girlfriend. If you easily lose control of your emotions then it's easy to get blown to and fro by them and sabotage any good that you have previously done. People tend to dwell on negative impressions.
- Learn to tease women — this should be pretty obvious, but if you practice and learn to get good at it then it can be helpful not only for generating attraction but also diffusing socially awkward situations or challenges or tests from women.
- Develop a sense of humor — fairly self evident. People like to laugh and have fun. If you're more "fun" to be around especially through humor then it's easier to navigate social spaces.

Education and income

- Mate selection for modernity goes over dozens of studies that look at how hypergamy in women means they tend to prefer men who have more education and more income than them. STEM (science, technology, engineering, math) is always a good prospect, especially since men tend to intrinsically enjoy STEM more than women. Professional jobs or trade jobs are solid on the money front as well. Obviously don't pick one just because you want to earn a lot or have a wife and family, but being able to have money to steward for God and give for charity are good things as well.

Relationship mentality

- "Follow me" leadership — as has been stated over and over on here and in the book, Jesus says follow me to the disciples and His Church (e.g. gospels, Eph 5, Rev 2-3). This is the model that Jesus uses. Jesus does this with His disciples by leading by example: He was doing ministry when He invited the disciples, then he taught them as He did ministry. Then He had them try it out (e.g. Jesus sends out the 70).

Then He had them do it full time in the Great Commission. As Jesus delegated and had expectations of His disciples and Church, so too a man must have an idea of where his potential wife and helper (e.g. Genesis 1-3) fits in within his marriage. He must communicate expectations and hold her to them.

- Make sure you are training your girlfriend or wife — A husband's role is to be a leader and one of the responsibilities to is love your wife for the purpose of sanctification (Eph 5). How can you teach, correct, admonish, and train her in righteousness as necessary? Look for opportunities. Similarly, how can you dwell with her in the knowledge as co-heirs in Christ if you don't know her? Find out what makes her tick. Her strengths and weaknesses, her likes and dislikes, her spiritual gifts. Is she a good fit for you and your leadership style? Does she have room to grow? Is she teachable? Does she respond well to you?
- Make sure she has her own walk with God and is growing in that without you — This doesn't mean you can't or shouldn't do things like studying the BIble, praying, or other things like this with her. What it does mean is that she should be committed to learning and growing more Christ-like before you are there and while you are there. Make sure she isn't a cultural or social Christian who is going through the motions either. See how she treats her family, friends, and even those she doesn't know. Look at her character and virtue.

I'm sure I'm forgetting some, and I will be updating this list as more come to mind.

A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage Part 3

The lens of heaven — marriage is an earthly institution

Marriage is an earthly institution.

> Matthew 22:23 On that day some Sadducees (who say there is no resurrection) came to Jesus and questioned Him, 24 asking, "Teacher, Moses said, 'If a man dies having no children, his brother as next of kin shall marry his wife, and raise up children for his brother.' 25 Now there were seven brothers with us; and the first married and died, and having no children left his wife to his brother; 26 so also the second, and the third, down to the seventh. 27 Last of all, the woman died. 28 In the resurrection, therefore, whose wife of the seven will she be? For they all had married her."
> 29 But Jesus answered and said to them, "You are mistaken, not [m]understanding the Scriptures nor the power of God. 30 For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels in heaven.

Jesus gives us some interesting insight into heaven. There's no marriage there.

This means that marriage is a covenant institution between a husband, wife, and God, but it is also mainly an earthly institution. There are no marriages in heaven. The earthly institution of marriage does not transcend to heaven nor do any of the beings in heaven marry.

If you look closely at the sequencing of events in Revelation the marriage of the Lamb occurs before the new heaven and new earth is created when Jesus comes back again.

> Revelation 19:7 Let us rejoice and be glad and give the glory to Him, for the marriage of the Lamb has come and His bride has made herself ready." … 9 Then he *said to me, "Write, 'Blessed are those who are invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb.'" And he *said to me, "These are true words of God." …
> Revelation 21:1 Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth passed away, and there is no longer any sea. 2 And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband. 3 And I heard a loud voice from the throne, saying, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is among men, and He will [a]dwell among them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself will be among them, 4 and He will wipe away every tear from their eyes; and there will no longer be any death; there will no longer be any mourning, or crying, or pain; the first things have passed away."

Theologically, the marriage of Christ and His bride is literally uniting us and making us one with Him. The ordering of events is Jesus' second coming back to earth to marry His bride, the judgment occurs in Revelation 20, and after that is the new heaven and earth in Revelation 21.

The marriage of Jesus and His bride occurs before the new heaven and new earth is created and the temporal things associated with the old earth and old heaven pass away. This is important to understand because one of those temporal things that passes away is the earthly institution of marriage as is written about in Matthew.

In other words, Jesus must marry His bride before the institution of marriage is abolished when the new heaven and new earth are created. Since marriage is an earthly institution and not heavenly, Jesus marries His bride on the earth.

The lens of earth — the context surrounding the creation of marriage

Now that we understand marriage is primarily an earthly institution, we should understand that its function is to address earthly needs. We have a intelligent Creator and our Creator does not create without a purpose.

To understand the function of marriage addressing earthly needs, we need to go back to the creation. Let's examine the status of man in the garden in both creation accounts. Genesis 1 is considered the first creation account, which gives an overview of all of the creation. Genesis 2 is considered the second creation account, which gives an overview into the creation of man specifically.

> Genesis 1:26 Then God said, “Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [ak]sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth.” 27 God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them. 28 God blessed them; and God said to them, “Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth.” 29 Then God said, “Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed that is on the surface of all the earth, and every tree which has fruit yielding seed; it shall be food for you; 30 and to every beast of the earth and to every bird of the sky and to every thing that moves on the earth which has life, I have given every green plant for food”; and it was so. 31 God saw all that He had made, and behold, it was very good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.

God’s commands to man were two fold in the first creation account in Genesis 1:

- Rule and subdue the earth — 26 Then God said, “Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth.” […] 28b and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth.”
- Be fruitful and multiply — 28a God blessed them; and God said to them, “Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth,

We will come back to these two commands after the next point.

> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, “From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die.”

God has two more commands:

- Cultivate and keep the garden (directed to Adam and not Eve)
- Don’t eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil

> 18 Then the Lord God said, “It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper suitable for him.” 19 Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the sky, and brought them to the man to see what he would call them; and whatever the man called a living creature, that was its name. 20 The man gave names to all the cattle, and to the birds of the sky, and to every beast of the field, but for Adam there was not found a helper > suitable for him.

> 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man. 23 The man said,“This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; She shall be called Woman, Because she was taken out of Man.” 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

Genesis 2 gives us more details about the ordering of creation. Man was created first, but there was no helper suitable for him. Hence, God created a helper suitable for him.

- The first command — rule and subdue the earth — could be fulfilled by Adam himself such as taking dominion over the beasts as they came to him and gave them names. However, Eve could help with that.
- The second command — be fruitful and multiply — was unable to be fulfilled without Eve.
- The third command — cultivate and keep the garden — was being tended to by Adam but Eve could help with.
- The fourth command — Obey God: do not eat of the tree — Eve could obey as well.

God knew before the animals were created and brought before Adam that he had no helper suitable for him. I believe God had this in mind before he did all of this simply because of the examples of sexual dimorphism — two sexes — within the animals he created as well. Indeed, to Adam’s male God wanted to create a female helper for him not only for the loneliness but to fulfill the rest of the command to be fruitful and multiply.

All of these lead into God putting Adam to sleep, taking out a rib, forming Eve (who was still unnamed), and giving her to Adam as an example of the first marriage.

As a side note, Adam was given work in the garden as a steward already, but it was multiplied in punishment. This relates to Genesis 3 and the punishments that God gave for sinning. However, it is important to realize that Adam is already the head of Eve in the way marriage was created.

The purpose of marriage as an earthly institution

To understand the purpose of marriage, we need to examine what tends to drive relationship and marriage formation. Attraction appears to be one of the primary drivers. Thus, since God created man, woman, and marriage we should assume that there is some intent of the Creator behind the phenomena of attraction.

What is attractive to both sexes?

Generally speaking, attraction is different between both sexes.

- Men are primarily attracted to physical beauty and femininity. Examples of physical beauty are a woman's face and her figure like waist to hip ratio. Examples of femininity are long hair and female-only attire like dresses and skirts. These things are [sexually] attractive to men.
- Women are primarily attracted to PSALM traits and masculinity. PSALM is an acronym for power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Generally speaking, these are embodied in a man such as a confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leader. Masculinity also embodies many traits that correlate with this such as strong, confident, independent, driven, tough skinned, competitive, and so on.

Yes, there are exceptions. Yes, these are generalizations. We're not discussing them now.

These are the things that are primarily [sexually] attractive to both sexes. There is a reason for this.

Understanding how attraction plays into the roles and responsibilities of marriage

We, as humans, implicitly understand that attraction — by very definition of the word — is a driving force for marriage. Indeed, typically no one really gets married to someone that they don't find attractive. If you were a Creator, it would make sense that the commands given to man for marriage would directly apply to the things that attract men and women to marriage. After all, these things are to be a preparation for the roles and responsibilities of marriage.

Even in cultures with arranged marriages such as Judaism, the two getting married were required to see each other and they had some influence in terms of veto power over the person they would get married. The families of the two parties 'set them up' on 'arranged dates' that they had to go on to get to know each other. There had to be agreement from all sides, including the two getting married. Very few cultures, if any, have forced marriages.

Now, relating this back to the Scriptures in Genesis 1 and 2 we can logically see how attraction plays into the various roles and responsibilities given to men and women in marriage. The commands of God are directly related to what we find attractive in the opposite sex.

- Rule and subdue the earth
- Be fruitful and multiply
- Cultivate and keep the garden
- Obey God

and

- Men are primarily attracted to physical beauty and femininity. Examples of physical beauty are a woman's face and her figure like waist to hip ratio. Examples of femininity are long hair and female-only attire like dresses and skirts. These things are [sexually] attractive to men.

- Women are primarily attracted to PSALM traits and masculinity. PSALM is an acronym for power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Generally speaking, these are embodied in a man such as a confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leader. Masculinity also embodies many traits that correlate with this such as strong, confident, independent, driven, tough skinned, competitive, and so on.

Thus,

- Men were commanded to rule and subdue the earth: hence, confident, ambitious, successful leaders are likely to do that. It's no surprise that Scripture tells men that they are to be Protectors and Providers for their wives and families. A confident leader won't back down from Protecting his wife when necessary or sacrificing himself as Jesus did for us such as in Numbers 30 and Ephesians 5. An ambitious, successful husband can easily provide for his family such as in Exodus 21 and 1 Timothy 5:8.
- Woman was created as man's helper and so that he wouldn't be alone. Eve was created to be a primary help for multiplying and filling the earth, and secondary help for ruling and subduing the earth and cultivating and keeping the garden. Beauty is a general proxy for healthiness and fertility because it signals less genetic errors and ability to bear children. Waist to hip ratios or curves garners a lot of attention by men because they are attractive, but they are also related to a woman's health and her ability to bear healthy children.

As you can see, these are a good fit for the purpose of Creation and what we observe in real life.

New Testament Scriptures reinforce God's Old Testament design of creation

It should be clear that Adam had headship prior to the fall. God creates Adam first and then Eve as Adam's helper. There's other textual information in the link to corroborate that statement. However, this is also backed up by the stated commands in the New Testament. The NT Scriptures delineate the roles and responsibilities of the husbands and wives as thus (e.g. Ephesians 5, 1 Corinthians 7 and 11, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, 1 Tim 2 and 5, etc.)

- Husband — Headship, love your wife for the purpose of sanctification, live with your wife in an understanding way, don't become embittered at your wife, provide for your family, etc.
- Wife — Submit to your husband, respect your husband, have affection for your husband, main focus should be on the home and childbirthing, etc

These directly align with not only the Creation commands and intent but also with what we observe. The husband's headship directly aligns with ruling, obeying God, provision and protection of his wife and family. The wife's submission directly aligns with being her husband's helper and being a mother aligns with being fruitful and multiplying.

This does not seem to be a mistake unlike the failed egalitarian argument. Since God created woman's attraction to operate on the principle of hypergamy, we can see how she would be attracted to and respect her the husband as he was appointed to lead, protect, and provide for his family. If you try to depose of headship or any of the other parts of the design, you are deposing of God's design intent which more likely leads to a failed marriage. A wife that doesn't follow her husband and disrespects him and is rebellious is only one signature away from divorce.

All in all, there appears to be a consistent affirmation of the the roles and responsibilities of men and women at creation, in the OT, and in the NT that also demonstrate what the sexes tend to find attractive in each other.

This should not be a surprise. God's design was planned from the beginning of creation and continues to persist through time.

Exploring the Scriptures on attraction and sex

Much of the modern Church has fallen ignorantly into the lie that godliness is attractive. This is the Christian ought fallacy which follows that 'because godliness is a good thing it should be what is attractive.' However, when we examine NT Scriptures, we find this to be false.

Paul tells the Corinthians in 2 Corinthians 6 to marry believers and not unbelievers. 'What fellowship does light have with darkness and darkness with light?' However, if godliness and good character were attractive, everyone would be attracted to Christians. That's clearly false. Rather, it's the case that any man exhibiting PSALM traits and masculinity will be attractive to women and they will not necessarily be believers or not. This is why Paul warns not to marry unbelievers because some were attractive but bad choices for marriage.

Similarly, Paul states in 1 Corinthians 7 the only reason given in the NT to marry: "it is better to marry than to burn." In fact, it is even ideal or at least preferable [to him] that all men remain single as he so full attention can be focused toward the Lord. What are the things that cause us to burn for marriage? It is what sexually attracts us. This is the sex drive and beauty for men. This is the sex drive and strong, confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leaders for women. These are the things we look for in a mate, aside from important qualifiers such as godlines and character.

Why should women not usurp authority over man [in the Church and family] and why is she saved through childbearing in 1 Timothy 2? Because she is fulfilling the initial commands of God to be fruitful and multiply, and her offspring like Jesus will take dominion over the earth. Jesus added from the initial command of God to take dominion over the earth to also win the people of the earth through the gospel. Make disciples of all nations.

Another problem, from what I've seen, is not solely that the modern Church parrots false narratives about what is attractive to both men and women. That is definitely harmful. However, there is the issue that makes it seem like godliness is mutually exclusive with the traits that attract the opposite sex. For example, beauty is somehow mutually exclusive with godliness, which 1 Pet 3 does not say at all. Another example is that a successful, ambitious man may be looked on as 'too worldly' because money is evil when it is the love of money that is evil in 1 Tim 6. This is a problem because these things are false. You can be beautiful and godly. You can be a confident, ambitious, and successful Christian leader.

Other Biblical pitfalls of downplaying attraction

Generally speaking, the modern Church loves to downplay the role of attraction in marriage. I believe that this is because it is based on a faulty understanding of why attraction is important.

For example, it's clear from the Scriptures that beauty is what is attractive to men. However, beauty without godliness and character has disastrous consequences result for men. They're carried away to worship idols (e.g. Solomon and harem). They get caught in adultery (e.g. David and Bathsheba). They get scared into lying (e.g. Abraham, Sarah, Abimelech, and Pharaoh). They get dragged down into the pit (e.g. the vast majority of Proverbs on beautiful but deceitful women). The beauty of women is never downplayed. In fact, in Song of Songs Solomon lauds the beauty of the Shulamite woman the entire book without mentioning her character once.

Those who claim beauty is shallow fall into the trap of false humility. God created beauty, and beauty is objective. Some examples are nature, facial symmetry, a woman's waist to hip ratio, and strong, muscular men. Without a God as an anchor, there can be no objective Truth such as beauty. Those who downplay beauty don't understand the role it plays within marriage.

Obviously cultivating beauty or cultivating strong, confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leaders should not be placed over godliness and character. However, they are not mutually exclusive. Beauty is only vanity when focused in the wrong direction. Beauty for attention, beauty for power, beauty for other men are not good. However, beauty for a husband in marriage is good. Similarly, the same is true of the sex drive.

Conclusion

Creation

In summary, the Scriptures describe that God directs commands to man and woman when He made them and married them. These are:

- Rule and subdue the earth

- Be fruitful and multiply
- Cultivate and keep the garden
- Obey God

If we look at them from an observational perspective, we see that these commands also fairly accurately describe what each sex finds attractive in the opposite sex.

and

- Men are primarily attracted to physical beauty and femininity. Examples of physical beauty are a woman's face and her figure like waist to hip ratio. Examples of femininity are long hair and female-only attire like dresses and skirts. These things are [sexually] attractive to men.
- Women are primarily attracted to PSALM traits and masculinity. PSALM is an acronym for power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Generally speaking, these are embodied in a man such as a confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leader. Masculinity also embodies many traits that correlate with this such as strong, confident, independent, driven, tough skinned, competitive, and so on.

Thus,

- Men were commanded to rule and subdue the earth: hence, confident, ambitious, successful leaders are likely to do that. It's no surprise that Scripture tells men that they are to be Protectors and Providers for their wives and families. A confident leader won't back down from Protecting his wife when necessary or sacrificing himself as Jesus did for us such as in Numbers 30 and Ephesians 5. An ambitious, successful husband can easily provide for his family such as in Exodus 21 and 1 Timothy 5:8.
- Woman was created as man's helper and so that he wouldn't be alone. Eve was created to be a primary help for multiplying and filling the earth, and secondary help for ruling and subduing the earth and cultivating and keeping the garden. Beauty is a general proxy for healthiness and fertility because it signals less genetic errors and ability to bear children. Waist to hip ratios or curves garners a lot of attention by men because they are attractive, but they are also related to a woman's health and her ability to bear healthy children.

There are multiple passages of Scripture both from the Old Testament and New Testament that affirm continually affirm these characteristics.

- Husband — Headship, love your wife for the purpose of sanctification, live with your wife in an understanding way, don't become embittered at your wife, provide for your family, etc.
- Wife — Submit to your husband, respect your husband, have affection for your husband, main focus should be on the home and childbirthing, etc

In other words for men: rule your family well, obey God, cultivate and keep your family, and so on. For women: help your husband rule well, obey God, and help him be fruitful and multiply.

These directly align with not only the Creation commands and intent but also with what we observe. The husband's headship directly aligns with ruling, obeying God, provision and protection of his wife and family. The wife's submission directly aligns with being her husband's helper and being a mother aligns with being fruitful and multiplying.

We do both singles and married a disservice by downplaying the role attraction plays in marriage. If we don't show them why, from the Scriptures, God created these traits to be important and attractive to the opposite sex we risk alienating them and/or giving them cognitive dissonance. Exceptions are exceptions. Hanging onto exceptions when you want to be married give you a low probability of success. Sure, some men marry obese women. Most men don't. Sure, some women marry men the stereotype of a man in his parent's basement playing video games all the time. Most women don't.

"Oh? You want a beautiful wife? That's shallow and superficial." However, we implicitly understand that beauty is objective, at least in part. That creates strong cognitive dissonance in Christian men: "Oh, I shouldn't want beauty? Then why do I desire a beautiful wife? Is beauty a bad thing? Why do I want a beautiful wife if beauty is superficial?" Sadly, this is too often the case.

That which God creates is beautiful. He created us, and we were very good. He created attraction and our sex drives. He created marriage. He command us to take dominion and be fruitful and multiply. The loving gaze of a husband on his beautiful bride. The respect of a wife toward her strong, confident husband. Our righteousness is our beautiful clothing to Jesus. The beauty of a large family.

All of these things come together to form a coherent whole that exemplifies the nature of the beauty of marriage and the plan that God created for us to accomplish.

> I was recently at dinner with a group of loose acquaintances of a similar age to celebrate the birthday of a woman I had met 10 years earlier at university. She was turning 31. Also at the table were a divorcée, a single woman, a mother, a woman who had been dating her boyfriend for a few months, and a newlywed. The mood was flat.
> The divorcée had been dating a new man for two years and didn't know where it was going. "He doesn't understand the fertility issues I have. He says he wants a baby, but I try to talk to him about when and he says we don't have to talk about that yet."
> The single woman had gone to a cafe that morning to have breakfast with a guy she met on a dating app. "He just didn't show up. I wasn't even that excited to meet him, but he couldn't even be bothered showing up. Breakfast was his idea, too. It's always something. I don't even really want a boyfriend, but what else should I be doing with my time?"
> The mother's lament was a classic. She had already drunk three glasses of wine to most of the table's one. "I didn't appreciate what I had when I had it: the freedom, the lack of direction. I actually just want my lack of structure back. I don't think I thought enough about what having a child was going to be like."
> The woman with the new boyfriend began talking about work. "I started this job because I thought it was a good opportunity, but now this is my actual job, not just a stepping stone to something else."
> The newlywed described her wedding as an anticlimax. "I had been looking forward to it for so long! And now it's done, I don't know what I should look forward to next. My job has become so uninteresting; it feels like everything has become so uninteresting."
> Different miseries, to be sure – so different it was barely a coherent conversation, more a series of monologues. But I had met this group of women a few times over the past year, and they were not like this 12 months ago. Turning 30 had been such a novelty. It was like we were doing it for a laugh: look at us pretending to have a "milestone birthday", look at us with our gold "30" balloons > and our grown-up parties in proper venues, rather than in our backyards. We were parroting what we thought people should say at age 30, with a nod and a wink. In our hearts, however, we weren't 30. We certainly didn't feel 30. To us, 30 was a lark.

Really just goes to show you people can be unhappy despite any circumstances that they are in, and the general lie of feminist empowerment: 'gotta have it all.'

It all goes back to the paradoxical decline of female happiness. Freedom, a job, marriage, or anything else like that cannot make you happy.

> At 31, I had been in a great new job for more than a year. I had published my novel 18 months earlier and given birth to my first baby just before that. Yet I had been experiencing a certain kind of tedium for a while.
> I had thought my dissatisfaction was perhaps a symptom of my brattiness. There had been no parties in my honour lately, no announcements to make with a satisfied air of self-deprecation ("some personal news"). Intellectually, I knew I was not special, but in my heart I still loved the applause. I wondered if maybe I was experiencing depression for the first time in my life.
> Then I thought it was more likely my feet were getting a bit itchy. Entering my 30s, I was a mother, had a great job, had even published a book. What more could I want? But this gnawing feeling continued to grow. Couldn't I be doing more? Should I have done something different instead? Like become an astronaut? I felt petulant, ungrateful.
> But when I finally lifted up my head and looked around, I realised I wasn't the only one. Surveying people of a similar age revealed I wasn't just being a brat. Everyone seemed to be struck down with this same malaise. Whether they were my close friends or acquaintances, lived in another hemisphere or had never left the state, every 31-year-old I spoke to seemed to be in a state of ennui.

Even the author who is "very accomplished" feels this way. Betty Frieden's "the problem that has no name" never goes away no matter what happens. I suppose that's what happens when you base your identity in external things and accomplishments. It's all never enough for the voracious appetite of hypergamy.

https://www.newsweek.com/millennials-gen-z-are-trying-kill-flirting-will-they-succeed-opinion-1605294

> A new survey of 1,000 American workers by a telecommunications firm found that 93 percent of women consider workplace flirting inappropriate, compared to 27 percent of men who consider it at least sometimes acceptable.
> The more interesting story is not told by mere statistics (though one hopes that 27 percent of male flirters will be smart enough to limit their winking and nudging to the 7 percent of women who apparently don't mind it). It's what the survey reflects about the changing landscape of interpersonal relationships, and > the rapid evolution of sexual mores, which have culminated in a new set of norms that redefines entire categories of human interaction as hopelessly outré.

> It's all a bit whiplash-inducing. After all, it was not very long ago that people not only flirted in the workplace but often dated and married partners with whom they first connected there. The number of folks who met their spouses through work hovered around 20 percent from the 1990s through the early aughts. Back then, online dating was a blip on the radar. It carried the same shameful stigma associated with the newspaper personal ads of old, a last resort for desperate weirdos who couldn't meet partners the normal way—you know, like at work.

The author's analysis is actually pretty good. The rise of anonymity through people meeting on the Internet has dispersed many personal potential romantic interactions to the place of the unwanted and uncomfortable for many.

> Kate Julian captured this dynamic in a 2018 Atlantic article about millennial sexlessness, when her story of meeting her husband in an elevator was met with deeply ambivalent reactions from the article's subjects. Even as the young women she spoke to swooned over the idea of such a meet-cute, "quite a few of them suggested that if a random guy started talking to them in an elevator, they would be weirded out. "Creeper! Get away from me," one woman imagined thinking.
> That gut-level revulsion in response to a friendly overture—"Creeper! Ew!"—is partly traceable to the idea that male desire is in and of itself fundamentally predatory, which is in turn traceable to the trend of viewing sex and love through a power-and-privilege lens. The way the thinking goes, if every interaction between men and women must be contextualized against men's abuse of women historically, as a group, then any man approaching a woman should be rightfully viewed with suspicion; even the most anodyne coffee date comes with an unwanted, non-optional side order of three thousand years of patriarchal oppression. Drink up, ladies!
> But today's horror at last generation's idea of a meet cute also reflects a bone-deep discomfort among young people with the sort of spontaneous, unscripted interaction that can spark an unexpected connection, like chatting up an attractive stranger in an elevator.
> For a generation that prides itself on openness to experience, millennials have remarkably little confidence in their ability to navigate the complicated, confusing, or otherwise ambiguous territory of adult intimate relationships.
> The far-reaching impact of the #MeToo movement may be visible here. What started as a well-intentioned attempt to protect women from pervasive harassment and abuse evolved into something more nefarious; young people have been taught to equate emotional discomfort with trauma and violation, and have thus come to believe that the only "good" relationship offers complete > safety from ever feeling bad.

Only the 2nd time I've ever heard of meet-cute after Scott's reference to it. I think part of this is due to the changing work cultures because from what I've seen and experienced at least this tends to be much less the case when doing hobbies or other functions where it's a more low key atmosphere. Maybe a business vs pleasure scenario. If you're expecting to be working or doing business then flirting is out of bounds whereas if you're chilling at a restaurant or going dancing or something things then people are more open.

> This notion of intimacy without the risk of heartbreak goes hand in hand with our present obsession with "consent," which used to focus on sexual encounters but has since bled over into any and all activities—including flirting or dating—that might eventually lead to sex. If it's not consensual, the argument goes, it's abuse.
> But it's also not unusual to see abuse and harassment broadly defined as any behavior that makes the (usually female) subject uncomfortable, even as the list of things that make us uncomfortable keeps expanding to include more and different types of social interaction.
> Flirting? Uncomfortable. Jokes? Uncomfortable. Ordering a pizza by phone? No thanks, we'd rather starve.
> This is beyond the original notion of harassment as pervasive unwanted attention, the violation of clearly established boundaries; in this new framework, merely inquiring as to the location of the boundaries may render one already out-of-bounds. If saying "no" makes a woman feel awkward, then asking her out, even once, is a violation (and lord help the man who approaches under the mistaken assumption that she's interested!).
> The notion of the "unwanted overture" used to be a question-begger, a running joke at corporate sexual harassment trainings: Until you make the overture, how do you know whether or not it's "unwanted"? Some might argue that the social web has since solved this problem for us, that a person should simply always assume that the overture is unwanted, unless it's taking place on a dating app where the subject's presence implies consent to being approached with romantic intent. The imagined result is a sort of neutered utopia, one where nobody is ever advanced-upon at all, thanks to the assumption that every human in sight is pre-enrolled on the sexual equivalent of the do-not-call list.

The great irony of this is that the people who wanted these things instituted (e.g. feminists and liberals) are typically the very ones crying the most about how men aren't men anymore and there are no good ones left. Well, the cultural changes pushed the feminization of men and many other consequences that have been discussed on this blog and others… so when you make your bed you have to lie in it. You can't 'change the rules' and expect that the other side continues to play by the same ones.

> But while some of our sexual mores are changing as fast as the technology that > fuels them, it’s a good bet that the rumors of the death of flirting have been greatly exaggerated, as evinced by the millennial women who swoon at the idea of meeting someone in an elevator—even though, according to the standards of their own generation, this is simply not done. They’re tapped into something deeper than the trendy, fleeting culture that says it’s traumatic to be desired: the human yearning to connect, to bond, to love and be loved.

> My prediction: in the culture wars, love wins.

Unfortunately, this is where the author goes sour because she doesn’t know the statistics on increasing lack of marriage and sexlessness. Maybe she’ll start to understand as things continue to worsen.

Fake it ’til you make it… or not? Part 2

July 17, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Interestingly, fake it til you make it was one of the first posts I made on this blog when I started blogging in 2012. I still stand by that post in terms of faith, but I wanted to take things deeper into scenarios where I think people are using it incorrectly.

When men/husbands start trying to exhibit leadership in marriage they feel like they’re trying to “fake it ’til they make it.” I think this is the wrong thing to consider it.

If we think about learning a new sport or martial art, everything is going to feel awkward and uncomfortable at first. It’s only through repetition of the movements and learning the various techniques of the sports or disciplines that things start to feel more natural.

For those that have rescinded leadership (e.g. drunk captain) or never had leadership in the first place (e.g. egalitaratians, feminists, “she’s the boss” and “she’s my better half” complementarians) and have fallen into an inverted roles relationship or marriage starting to change the dynamic by acting as the leader is going to feel foreign. One guy I was talking to the other day said it felt like he was LARPing his way with his wife even though she was responding beautifully to his new leadership — respectful, submissive, and wanted lots more sex.

In general, let us not equate feeling uncomfortable or awkward with faking it or LARPing. One can be doing a good or bad job when starting to lead, but each will still probably feel uncomfortable or awkward anyway. One must embrace these feelings because it is normal. You’re doing something that you’re not used to doing. However, you’re not faking it. You’re literally obeying God, and that’s a good thing. It’s just a new skill you’re developing and that’s going to feel uncomfortable as you’re learning it.

The biggest thing to continually lead and learn from the mistakes that you make if any and continue to fulfill the position that God has placed for the husband in marriage. Yes, over time it will become less awkward and less uncomfortable. You will start to build good habits in conjunction with this. But it is a process that you have to go through like with learning any new skill. There’s going to be speed bumps and you’re probably going to feel like an imposter at times.

However, let’s not confuse learning new skills like leadership with faking it. Embrace the discomfort of new situations. Don’t let feelings dictate the way you approach doing what God has called you to do.

Chris Hemsworth's marriage is textbook hypergamy

July 19, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

https://people.com/movies/chris-hemsworth-celebrates-wife-elsa-pataky-45-birthday/

> The Thor: Love and Thunder actor, 37, shared a simple yet sweet message for his wife of ten years on Saturday in honor of the actress' milestone 45th birthday.
> Despite the optics, Pataky told body+soul in August 2020 that while her relationship with Hemsworth is not "perfect," she believes a "relationship is constant work" and is never "easy."
> "It's funny that people think of us as a perfect couple," the actress and mom told the outlet. "No way. It's been ups and downs, and we still keep working at the relationship."
> Hemsworth's career launched to new heights in 2011 when he first starred in Thor. Pataky told Vogue Australia in August 2018 that she wasn't sure how their marriage survived in its early stages.
> Ultimately, she said the couple just found a way to "make it work."
> "In the beginning it was beautiful – when I met him he wasn't known at all and I grew with him and experienced all his successes and changes, and then he became just so huge and I've been sharing that too," Pataky explained. "Going through every moment and being there with him with every success was actually a good thing – we grew together. It's difficult when you go from being an unknown person to a very known person and all the changes that come with that."

A lot to unpack here.

- They married 10 years ago so he was 27 and she was 35. If she was like most women she was feeling the pressure of singleness and no children at 35.
- She met him when "he wasn't known at all," so he was a relatively obscure actor at the time.
- Based on her history, she was a pretty successful model and decently successful spanish actor at the time.
- A year before they were married, he had just gotten his first movie and big break in Star Trek as captain Kirk. Maybe on some people's radar as an up and comer, but definitely not a big name.

In her mind, she likely thought she was settling for him which means by extension they were entering into the marriage with inverted roles. Men who are 27 and are popular with women generally don't marry women who are older than them (maybe within 1-2 years but definitely not 5+). Other parts that indicate she was settling and in an inverted roles relationship are:

- "her relationship with Hemsworth is not "perfect,""
- "she believes a "relationship is constant work" and is never "easy.""
- "It's funny that people think of us as a perfect couple," the actress and mom told the outlet. "No way. It's been ups and downs, and we still keep working at the relationship."
- Ultimately, she said the couple just found a way to "make it work."

Women only say these things when they are unhappy and/or settling with a man. If a woman thinks she got a catch they'll say things are amazing and build him up despite even some or many perceived flaws.

Hemsworth got his big break with Thor, and has since become one of the more popular actors in the world. She then shows how her hypergamy was beginning to be satisfied so that their relationship improved.

> "In the beginning it was beautiful – when I met him he wasn't known at all and I grew with him and experienced all his successes and changes, and then he became just so huge and I've been sharing that too," Pataky explained. "Going through every moment and being there with him with every success was actually a good thing – we grew together. It's difficult when you go from being an unknown person to a very known person and all the changes that come with that."

The last line in particular is strong unconscious projection. She was already an model and actor with attention, so having her husband get attention wouldn't be something out of the ordinary. What she means is that it was difficult for her in the beginning because he was an unknown person which didn't satisfy her hypergamy, but the preceding sentences show that once he was an extremely popular actor things got way better.

Surprise surprise. Once she became more attracted to him because his celebrity status started to outstrip her own, their relationship "grew together" because she was "sharing [in] that too." I'm sure she's been loving that.

I'm unsure if Hemsworth has taken the reins of the leadership in his own marriage and whether that caused any of the difficulties they were "working on," which made things "not perfect" and "never easy." As we know from experience, men who are starting to act as a leader in their relationship start to encounter resistance especially if they're relatively unattractive at first and/or the woman has sky-high hypergamous expectations. However, they've seemingly gotten to a point where most of her hypergamy is satisfied at least.

Just goes to show you that even celebrities have issues if they marry under inverted roles and even if they get more popular afterward it can still be a difficult road. Men need to take a long hard look to determine if they think a woman is settling for him as that can make marriage very difficult.

Post Script

Why was her hypergamy so high? Maybe some career highlight per her wiki:

> Pataky became the female face for the first collection of Time Force's jewelry line Ultimate Jewel, opposite football star Cristiano Ronaldo.[8] She played Officer Elena Neves in the movie Fast Five, with Dwayne Johnson as her partner, Luke Hobbs. MTV Networks' NextMovie.com named her one of the Breakout Stars to Watch for in 2011.[9] Pataky was a stand in for Natalie Portman in the post end credit scene in Thor: The Dark World.[10]

If a woman is modeling or acting across from other extremely high profile celebrities, I'm sure this trigger's a woman's hypergamy just as if she was going on a date or having sex with some of the most attractive men she's ever met. Seems like a recipe for alpha widowhood by association. If Hemsworth didn't get as popular as he did maybe we would have seen another high profile divorce.

Analyzing why the dark triad traits are attractive in context with God's intended creation of attraction and marriage

July 20, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Per wikipedia:

> Machiavellianism
> Named after the political philosophy espoused by Niccolò Machiavelli, people who score high on this trait are cynical (in an amoral self-interest sense, not in a doubtful or skeptical sense), unprincipled, and cold, believe in interpersonal manipulation as the key for life success, and behave accordingly.[22] Scores on measures of Machiavellianism correlate negatively with agreeableness (r = −.47) and conscientiousness (r = −.34).[1] Machiavellianism is also significantly correlated with psychopathy.[23]
> Narcissism
> Individuals who score high on narcissism display grandiosity, entitlement, dominance, and superiority.[24] Narcissism has been found to correlate positively with extraversion (r = .42) and openness (r = .38) and negatively with agreeableness (r = −.36).[1] Narcissism has also been found to have a significant correlation with psychopathy.[23]
> Considered the most malevolent of the dark triad,[25] individuals who score high on psychopathy show low levels of empathy combined with high levels of impulsivity and thrill-seeking.[26] Psychopathy has been found to correlate with all of the Big Five personality factors: extraversion (r = .34), agreeableness (r = −.25), conscientiousness (r = −.24), neuroticism (r = −.34) and openness (r = .24).[23]

The secular manosphere has pushed the dark triad traits as sort of a paragon of masculinity that should be strived to if you want to sleep with women. Obviously I think that's wrong. But sinners want to sin, so that should be no surprise.

However, one of the points of contention among various Christians is why dark triad traits tend to be attractive to women. This doesn't really make any intuitive sense without some careful thought. As a Christian, I think the attractive traits were created by God for the purpose: A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage Part 3

If the attractive traits were created for a good purpose and the dark triad tends to be attractive to women as well, then it must be true that either — or possibly both — that (1) the expression of attractive traits are attractive whether it is for good or evil and/or (2) that the patterning of attractive traits also has to do with the reciprocal rule to some degree.

Narcissism in particular ticks the check box of stimulating hypergamy to a strong degree. Women's hypergamous impulses want to marry up, and someone who displays an attitude of dominance and superiority seems like they are going be someone with power and status. This may or not be the case, which is why women are attracted to narcissistic men who actually have high power and status and narcissistic men who are deadbeats. These tick off the power and status parts of PSALM. Couple that with the extraversion where many narcissists come off as charming social butterflys, and you have a recipe where women can easily be attractedto men who exhibit narcissistic behavior.

Machiavellianism and psychopathy are an interesting pair as they are similar and relate to each other. The machiavellian tends to manipulate people to do things for them. Machiavellianism plays off the Benjamin Franklin effect where doing something for someone makes you like them more than you doing something for that person. Psychopathy ticks the thrill seeking emotional side of women bringing them to emotional highs and lows. This is also similar to the fact that I believe most types of BPD are significantly correlated with psychopathy.

Both Machiavellianism and psychopathy have negative agreeableness, which I think tends to be a stronger factor for displaying masculinity. Girlfriends tend to be very supportive and agreeable with girlfriends, but demonstrating manhood or masulinity has always been about being able to disagree and "grow a backbone" with women. I've mentioned before that in college that it was vegetarian women who seemed to be the most attracted to me mainly because I put down eating like rabbits at any chance I got. Negative agreeableness with vegetarianism translated to having a backbone and not being afraid to show it with women.

It appears that the dark triad traits tend to tick a bunch of the PSALM and masculinity traits, except instead of in a godly manner it is in a sinful manner. Just like authority was created to be good and used for good, it appears that the various attractive traits that were meant for good toward marriage can be expressed in evil ways as well.

In regard to #2 on attraction of reciprocal behavior, the general pattern is that most 'social game techniques' were created to induce attraction and make women want to have sex. Thus, if effective they tend to be the most effective on women who are promiscuous. Most players are probably not sticking around for a dozen dates or a committed relationship or marriage to have sex; they are likely going for women that want to sleep around by a couple dates. Hence, promiscuous men are going to select for promiscuous women. Like attracts like. Likewise, most women or men with physically abusive partners were typically abusive themselves in some way before as they go back to the same pattern of behavior, but someone growing up with a more healthy childhood generally will just leave at the first sign of abuse.

When I've seen some of these things in action in real life, it tends to be predominately #1 that is the major factor but there seems to be a bunch of #2 interspersed as well. It's hard to tell how much of each is involved, but the vast majority of cases the women find those with dark triad traits very attractive compared to most other men. However, it is also the case that women who have average to strong character can spot these traits in some cases and will be turned off in which case I think the reciprocal rule starts to play a stronger role.

Another scenario may also be the common one that I have stated before. The vast majority of Churches are "beta factories" in that they turn men into nice guys instead of masculine men. When women only see attractive non-Christian men they assume that only "bad boys" are attractive because there are no good masculine representations of attractive "good boys." Of course, women that are still attracted to "bad boys" even with attractive good men around typically fall into the category of #2 where they're probably along the lines of more culturally Christian than true Christians. They easily fall into sexual immorality and temptation rather than fighting against it and their life goes from Church to total depravity. Perhaps I am giving this scenario a bit too much credit, but that's what I've seen in my circles at least.

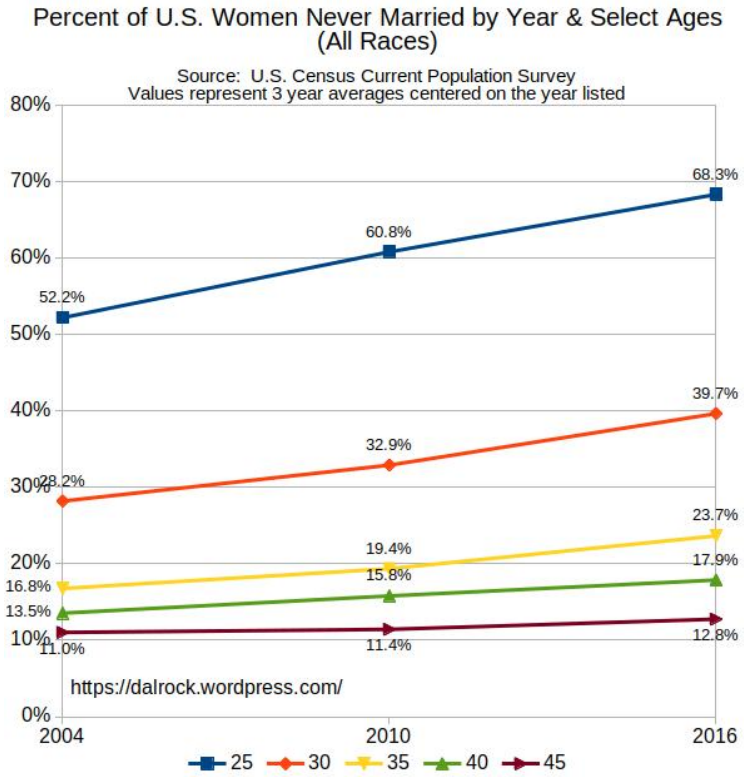
Overall, no Christian man should strive to do anything related to the dark triad, but I think knowing about why women are attracted to dark triad traits and being able to explain it to them can typically be helpful with counseling female friends, wives, and daughters to avoid seemingly attractive men of dubious and deceptive moral character. This is a huge problem in the Church as well.

Also, the institute for family studies has an article on how "family instability" increases propensity for dark triad traits. "Family instability appears to be a stronger predictor than family socioeconomic status for a child's life trajectory."

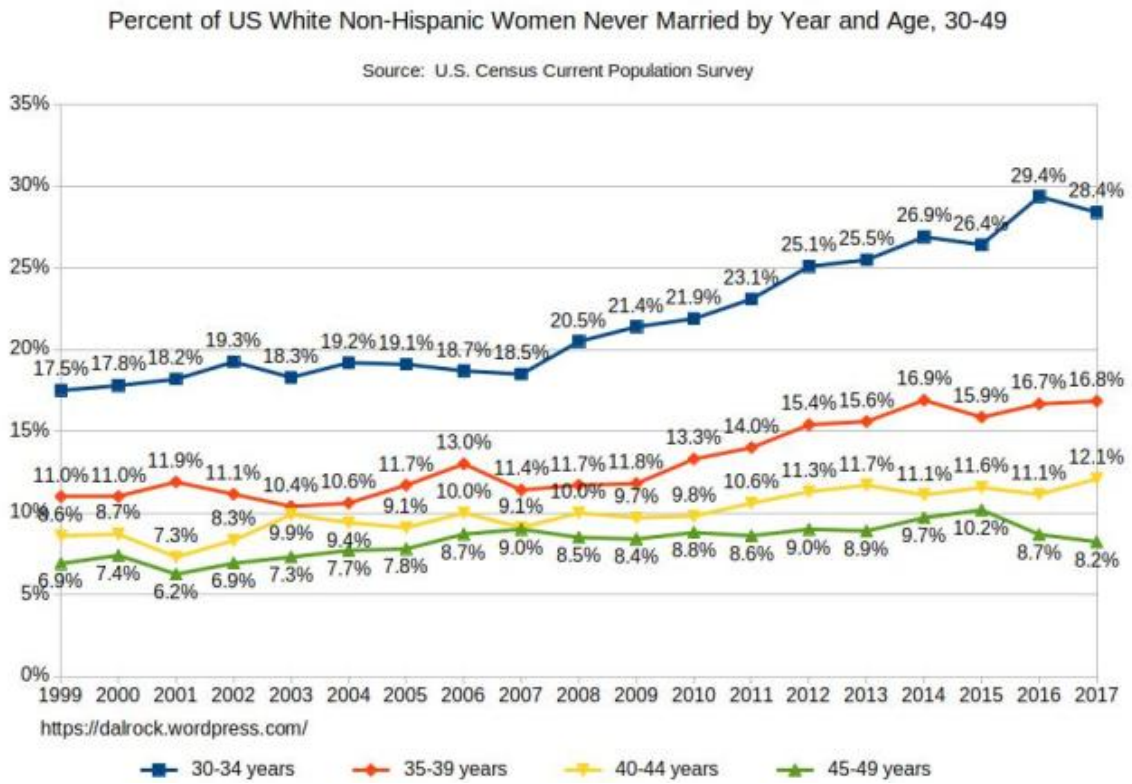
Doom and gloom and the amount of marriages: Do you need to be in the top 20% or not

July 22, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The 20% heuristic of being in the top amount of men who get the most attention, sex, marriage, and so on has been going around for a while. For attention, this is genuinely verified by the OKCupid blog and other studies where women find only about 20% of profiles above average and the rest below average.



However, does that apply to everything including marriage or is that an incorrect extrapolation?

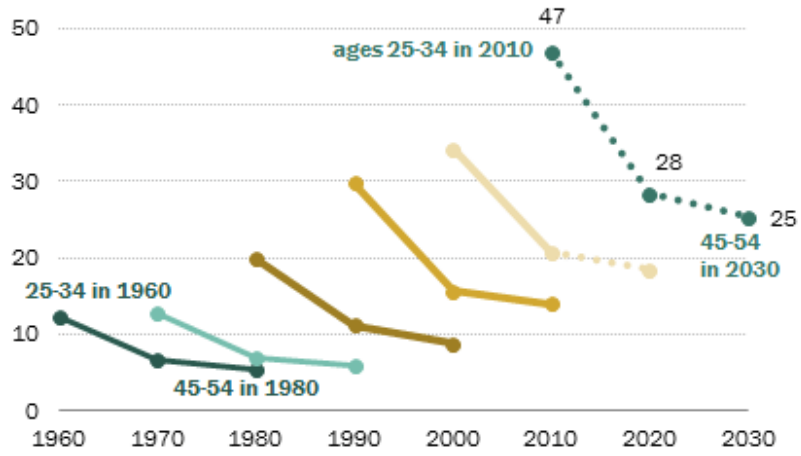


I've discussed before why I think this is a wrong extrapolation which causes an extensive of doom and gloom, so let me cover the statistics for this.

Never married data and predictions

First, Dalrock's analysis of the Census data from 2017 show approximations of trendlines in the 40-44 and 45-49 year old women's age groups.

https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2018/09/04/2017-never-married-data/



We should note that pretty much all the 30-34, 35-39, and 40-44 are ticking up over time. By 2021 we should expect the never married 40-44 to be in the 13-14% range or so, which an estimate of never married by 45 is probably solidly in the 15% range or so. Note the top chart is all women whereas the bottom chart is white non-hispanic women.

This means about 85% of all women by 45 will be married at least once (“ever married”) while 15% are “never married.” Since some men who were married and divorce remarried marry never married women more than divorced women married never married men, the true percentage of men who are never married are about 2-5% less than never married women. Thus, we would expect about 80-83% ever married men and 85% ever married men (or 17-20% never married men and 15% never married women)

Pew’s research into trendlines corroborate this data, estimating by 2030 there will be about 25% never marrieds in the 45-59 age range. The above data estimate around upticks of about 1% per year which goes with this.

One-in-Four of Today's Young Adults May Never Marry

% never married, by cohort (at ages 25-34, 35-44, 45-54)

Note: The dotted lines are projected rates based on rates of the previous cohort.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

This also agrees with my analysis 3 years ago when I looked at some different articles which estimate 25-30%.

Divorce data contrasted with never married data

https://psychcentral.com/lib/the-myth-of-the-high-rate-of-divorce

> It is now clear that the divorce rate in first marriages probably peaked at about 40 percent for first marriages around 1980 and has been declining since to about 30 percent in the early 2000s. This is a dramatic difference. Rather than viewing marriage as a 50-50 shot in the dark it can be viewed as having a 70 percent likelihood of succeeding. But even to use that kind of generalization, i.e., one simple statistic for all marriages, grossly distorts what is actually going on.
> The key is that the research shows that starting in the 1980s education, specifically a college degree for women, began to create a substantial divergence in marital outcomes, with the divorce rate for college-educated women dropping to about 20 percent, half the rate for non-college educated women. Even this is more complex, since the non-college educated women marry younger and are poorer than their college grad peers. These two factors, age at marriage and income level, have strong relationships to divorce rates; the older the partners and the higher the income, the more likely the couple stays married. Obviously, getting a college degree is reflected in both these factors.
> Of course, this has its flip side, that the women who marry younger and divorce more frequently are predominately black and Hispanic women from poorer environments. The highest divorce rate, exceeding 50 percent, is for black > women in high-poverty areas. These women clearly face extraordinary challenges and society would do well to find ways to reduce not just teen pregnancies but early marriages among the poor and develop programs that train and educate the poor. Those will not only delay marriage but provide the educational and financial foundation required to increase the probability of a marriage being successful. Early marriage, early pregnancy, early divorce is a cycle of broken families that contributes significantly to maintaining poverty. The cost to our society is enormous.

> Here is some additional data about divorce in first marriages before moving on to the limited data available about second marriages. Divorce rates are cumulative statistics, i.e., they don't occur at a single moment in time but add up over the years of marriage and do so at different rates. After reviewing numerous sources, it appears that about 10 percent of all marriages end in divorce during the first five years and another 10 percent by the tenth year. Thus, half of all divorces are within the first ten years. (Keep in mind this is mixing the disparate college vs. non-college group rates.)
> The 30 percent divorce rate is not reached until the 18th year of marriage and the 40 percent rate is not reached until the 50th year of marriage!

Generally speaking, the true first marriage divorce rate is probably somewhere in between 30-40%. It's hard to tell the current percentage because although divorce rates have continued to drop over time, the marriage rate has also continued to drop. I haven't found any sources that analyze both together and the data is fairly newer anyway so it wouldn't provide us with a ton of more significance given that the older marriages that are divorcing or not divorcing are more important to the data to see the longevity.

If we use the current 85% ever married statistic, this means that range of people divorcing is approximately:

- 85% * 30% = 25.5% at the low
- 85% * 40% = 34% at the high

Thus,

- 85% – 25% = 60%
- 85% – 34% = 51%

51-60% of Americans will never divorce. This is much higher than most people who know that 20% of the men are above average think.

Edit: If you regularly attend Church and call yourself a Christian it's 30% and if you don't regularly attend Church and call yourself a Christian it's 40%.

Incorporating sexlessness marriage data into the ever married and divorce data

I've actually covered this topic before too, so let's look at some of the data.

Sexless marriage and other relationship statistics

> A few years back, some of us as SSM's were speculating how many marriages were actually sexless and/or unhappy even though they stayed together. I found some stats after stumbling onto a wiki about it.

A sexless marriage is a marriage in which little or no sexual activity occurs between the two spouses. The US National Health and Social Life Survey in 1994 (Laumann et al. 1994) found that 2% of the married respondents reported no sexual intimacy in the past year. The definition of a non-sexual marriage is often broadened to include those where sexual intimacy occurs fewer than ten times per year, in which case 20 percent of the couples in the National Health and Social Life Survey would be in the category. Newsweek magazine estimates that 15 to 20 percent of couples are in a sexless relationship.[1] Studies show that 10% or less of the married population below age 50 have not had sex in the past year. In addition less than 20% report having sex a few times per year, or even monthly, under the age 40.[2]

> It appears that ~20% of marriages are what we would call sexless (<10 times per year) or about once a month.
> We don't know how many of these marriages are going to end up in divorce. Some of these are headed for divorce for whatever reason. We don't really know how much adultery or other factors are going on either.
> Other data show similar qualities:

More than 7 times a week: 3% 7 times a week: 1% 6 times a week: 3% 5 times a week: 9% 4 times a week: 11% 3 times a week: 13% 2 times a week: 21% once a week: 25% once a month: 8% less than once a month: 9%

> Approximately 17% (once a month to less than once a month) are sexless. I would assume that most "once a weekers" are probably unhappy with that. The sex drive of men is typically higher than that of women, but women can become dissatisfied with lack of frequency as well.
> We know that at the lowest 40% of marriages end in divorce. So if we assume that most of the sexless ~20% of marriages end in divorce, a large portion of those in the 25% once a week range are going to divorce as well. This doesn't take into account the potential dissolution of marriages with more frequency sex that have other problems.

> I would suspect many of the cases with the approximate “once a week” don’t actually do it “once a week” but are rather clustered together around a woman’s ovulation cycle. So maybe the week when said wife was ovulating. Otherwise, it’d just be another sexless marriage.
> If you take the “once a weekers” with the sexless marriager, you get approximately 43% low sex marriages and 57% higher sex marriages. Not too far off from the regularly quoted divorce statistics.

Now, it’s true that some marriages don’t end in divorce because of the lack of sex in lieu of other issues (finances, children, disagreeable, and other factors) and some don’t end at all because of lack of sex, but I would suspect that in a lot of cases that sexlessness is a huge symptom of other things going on like a lack of respect of a wife for her husband. Remember that women initiate 70% of divorces and that number rises to 90% in college educated women.

Let’s take the low estimate that 50% of American marriages will not end in divorce while 35% end in divorce (which is 40% of the 85%). This generally correlates with the above that most of the sexless marriages eventually end up in divorce. We would generally expet that the majority of the marriages that never end in divorce (those 50%) will have a regular sex life as well. We might not necessarily say they’re happy given everything that can occur, but things are working well enough that the husband and wife are having regular intimacy at least 2+ times per week.

Conclusions

- Overall, most Americans are still going to get married despite the obesity epidemic and the fallout of the consequences of feminism and demonization of masculinty. About 80-85% still get married by 45, and likely 75% will still get married by 2030.
- Approximately 30-40% of first marriages end in divorce. This means that about 51-60% of Americans will never get divorced. If you’re a Christian and attend Church regularly, you raise up to 70%. This can be boosted more by various vetting and teaching and training likely upwards of 90-95%+.
- Looking at sexlessness and it’s strong correlations with problems in marriage and divorce, we would expect that these 51-60% of marriages that are never divorced the majority of them are having sex 2x a week or more.

What does this data mean for men?

To be married and never divorced and likely have a solid sex life you only need to be in the top 50% or so. Obviously, it’s helpful to be in the top 20% to potentially have a better selection of women so you can vet for character better. However, the top 20% is not required, and the top 20% is often too narrowly defined.

For instance, one can be below average looks and below average height but have qualities that are top 20% that make up for it and have a happy and holy marriage. I’ve mentioned myself as one of those where I'm maybe average looks and below average physical stature but I am happily married to a godly woman who doesn't deny me sex and follows my lead.

Most of the estimates I find beyond the top 20% of men too black pill in nature. It's not the 10-20% of the men below the top 20% who need a lot of work to be successful (e.g. 30-40% of men). It's a whole extra 30-40% of men that are doing "well enough" through no extra effort of their own who will never divorce and likely not be sexless. The top 50-60% of men.

The men within the bottom 40-50% have the opportunity depending how far they are down in the hole in terms of PSALM traits and masculinity to bring themselves up above the average man who is already way overweight and close to obese.

It appears that the major issue where most people are seeing disparities is most likely where they live and who they know. Lower income and lower education areas are more likely to have higher singleness (including single motherhood) while more middle class and wealthy areas are likely to have higher married rates. Several articles above mention the fact that such areas have higher divorce rates as well since stress about money is typically a #1 or #2 reason people divorce.

Overall, work on the things you can change, and minimize or don't worry about the things you can't.

Jason Meyer (John Piper's successor) resigns

July 26, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

---

https://julieroys.com/john-pipers-successor-resigns-amid-allegations-of-abusive-leadership-at-bethlehem-baptist/

> The successor to John Piper at Bethlehem Baptist Church in Minneapolis this week resigned in what appears to be a major shake-up at the church amid allegations of toxic and abusive leadership.
> Piper's successor, Jason Meyer, is the fourth pastor to resign from Bethlehem in the past four months.
> "At Bethlehem . . . there's harm being done," Pickering said. "There's unethical behavior. There's domineering. There's bullying. . . . cultural, damaging behavior that's being done, and has been done, for a long time."
> In a statement from Pickering that elders read to the congregation last Sunday, Pickering further explained:
> "I have seen several congregants (current and former), elders (current and former), and a former administrative assistant profoundly mistreated by elders in various ways. I have also seen leadership act in ways I would describe as domineering. I have also seen patterns of deception among our elders that are deeply concerning. I have tried on several occasions since early 2020 to speak up to others about these patterns of behavior. Increasingly in 2021, especially and intensely since March, I, too, have experienced what I would call bullying behavior. It is now clear to me that it is best for everyone for me to resign."

Doesn't look too good.

> According to Kyle J. Howard, a preacher and racial and spiritual trauma counselor, the pastors' exodus follows a push for reform at Bethlehem regarding the way the church treats minorities and women.
> Howard said that in January 2019, Bethlehem brought him in to teach a full-day, staff intensive on racial trauma in the church.
> Howard also attended an all-minority dinner with congregants that Pickering had arranged, according to Janice Perez Evans, a former member of Bethlehem who's half Latina.

Uh oh, maybe too hasty of a conclusion there.

> He added that prior to coming to Bethlehem, he had spoken with several Black pastors in Minneapolis, who all referred to Bethlehem as a "white church within a Black space that doesn't actually engage . . . or relate to the Black community." Howard said he also had spoken with several people who had been negatively impacted by John Piper's theology of "marital permanence," a theology > maintaining that divorce is never justified, even in cases of abuse.

Ah yes, telling people that divorce is a sin is "negatively impacting" others.

> Shortly after Howard's intensive, Evans said she and several others proposed to the elders that the church establish a task force to examine whether the system at Bethlehem was racially biased. One of the main concerns, Evans said, was that few minorities sat on Bethlehem's Elder Council. At the time, four of the 40-member Elder Council were minorities, she said.
> Evans described the meeting as "excruciating," saying the elders grilled both her and others about the proposal. Yet after the meeting, the elders commissioned a "Racial Harmony Task Force," which Evans said she co-led with Pastor Meyer.
> "It will probably go down in my life as one of the sweetest times I've seen the Holy Spirit come and work," Evans said of her experience working with other task force members. "There was such a unity—and it wasn't in a sense like we all agreed on everything. But it was safe in the sense that we were able to have disagreements as team members and talk through it."
> However, Evans said during this time, she began hearing from congregants and students at Bethlehem College and Seminary that elders were speaking against her and other task force members.
> Pickering said he heard other elders express that they felt the task force had "Marxist" and "woke" tendencies, and possibly was driven by Critical Race Theory—a controversial academic movement seeking to explain issues of race and justice.
>
> "That's fear-mongering," Evans said. "That wasn't what drove us. We're reading Scripture. We're reading the Word. And we've been trained by all of you (the elders)."
> Evans said she and the members of the task force put in over 800 hours researching the dynamics at Bethlehem, as well as other churches that had successfully become multi-ethnic. She said in the summer of 2019, the task force presented its 85-page report to the elders. (Evans said the task force had wanted to present the report directly to the congregation, but the elders insisted that the report go directly to them.)

Yup, now I'm beginning to side with the elders on this. Churches don't have to be multi-ethnic to effectively serve God. There's tons of one type of group Churches (e.g. Orthodox Churches for certain ethnic or nation groups, black or asian Churches, Spanish or certain language speaking Churches, etc.) Sure, some or many people prefer that they do, but when they're trying to do it under the guise of CRT or any other feminist and woke philosophies that's a no go.

Of course, the other people said they weren't doing it under the guise of CRT and such, but in general focusing on these things even in good faith generally produces the exact same result. It is a distraction from the gospel. It's imputing the "virtue" of multi-culturalism from feminism and adding it to the Bible.

I'm not saying there are no issues at the Church when we don't know the whole story, but it looks like their Church was infiltrated and influenced from within by worldly philosophies. Aaron Renn also had an article on Jason Meyer's teaching on leadership abuse which appears to demonstrate that Meyer pulled his teaching straight from the Duluth model and passed it off as Biblical. Ironically, Kathy Keller is a severe abuser under that model when she threw the expensive china and tried to pass it off as a "godly tantrum."

> "It should be alarming when you have a multitude of pastors or leaders leave all within a very short period of time," Howard said. "But what I would want to caution us from is to not only look at the power figures but to recognize that these leaders are the overflow of a congregation loss. There have been numerous people who have left that church, especially minorities, and . . . a lot of women, a lot of battered wives . . . (who) are still healing from that space."

The sin of "not being multi-cultural." While I agree with Piper that marriage is permanent, Piper seems to not cue in on 1 Corinthians 7:10-11a — To the married I give this command (not I, but the Lord): A wife must not separate from her husband. But if she does, she must remain unmarried or else be reconciled to her husband. — that separation may be an option especially if there is a continued pattern of physical violence without evidence of change.

On the other hand, when you start to compromise with the world some it's almost to be expected that you're going to get more people who agree with the world coming to your Church. Eventually you're going to have to fight with them once they want to keep on doing things related with the world and you won't go there. Then they'll pass off your fight against not doing things of the world as "fear mongering" and "abuse" and "domineering" and "bullying." Stating the Biblical view of marriage is permanent and divorce as a sin is suddenly "negatively impacting" people and considered abuse. If that's the case, then any of God's commands can be warped into a sin if someone feels like they're being "negatively impacted."

All in all, it appears the main lesson to be learned from this is don't let any of that garbage into the Church in the first place and stop taking "virtue" lessons from the feminism and culture.

The hypergamy of regret

July 28, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Given that the Olympics have started, there are some great nuggets coming out.

> She gets a gold medal for this mea culpa.
> The one-time girlfriend of New Zealand triathlete Hayden Wilde made a bittersweet confession when the Olympian won the bronze medal on Sunday.
> “I regret breaking up with you,” the unnamed woman gushed to 1 News when asked about Wilde’s victory.
> “I’m so proud of Hayden, just like all the work he’s obviously done to get there, it’s just amazing.”
> The woman was being interviewed while celebrating with Wilde’s family and friends in his hometown.
> “I went to primary school with him and he’s grown so much; and yeah, real proud,” she added.

Translation: I didn’t regret breaking up with you at the time, but now that you’ve become a world-renowned Olympic athlete I now regret having broke up with you. Please take me back.

“He’s grown so much” is the female version of the second point where the man raises his sexual attractiveness and/or masculinity so much that it overcomes her past perception of him.

The sad part is that this type of thing can turn a woman into an alpha widow. She’ll may always pine for him even though he was just some average joe athlete at the time when he was with her, but because he got famous and is now close to the apex of his sport his position in her heart has changed permanently.

Why do most societies have 90-95% marriage rates (at some points)

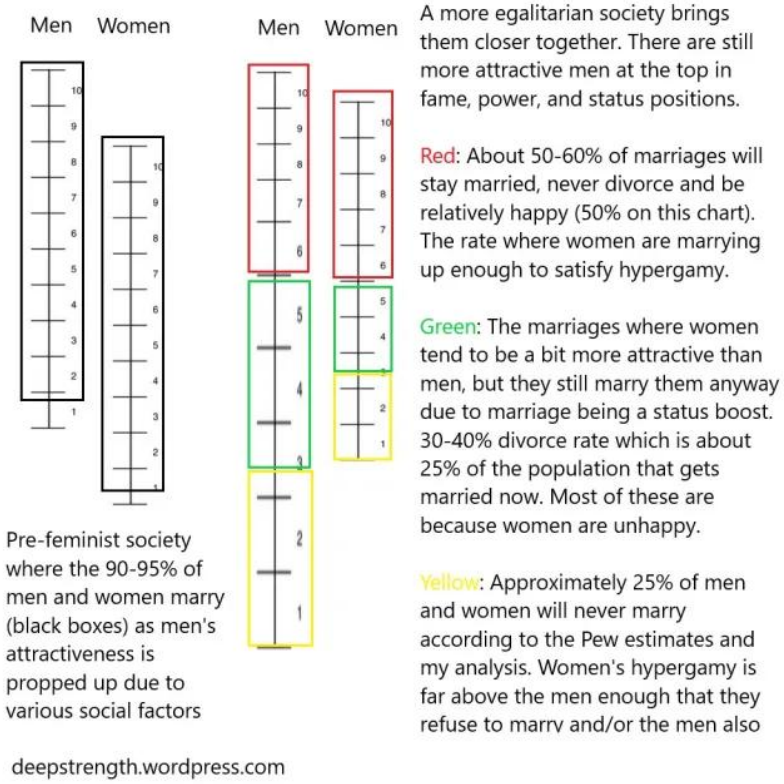
July 29, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I think I've discussed this before, but I can't remember which post I titled it under or if it was on Donalgraeme or SunshineMary's blogs in the past. I'm probably going to repeat some stuff, but I think it's useful to cover again.

Elspeth's comment on Jack's blog jogged my memory.

> My working hypothesis for several years has been that the feminist revolt/sexual revolution was at its original zenith in the 1920s, but that the Great Depression brought it to a grinding halt. Nothing injects reality into folks like lack. Hedonism can only really run amok in the presence of material comfort.

> The devastation of WWII produced a solemnity in many people that kept the madness at bay for a time (or under wraps at least) so that the economic boom was directed toward family formation rather than widespread decadence. But the spirit of the 20s was still there, waiting to be unleashed.



Generally speaking, prior to the start of the feminist movements there were several things working for men.

- The position of man and husband were held with nearly universal respect for what men do.
- Most jobs, especially those which required a lot of expertise hands on or otherwise, were held only by men. By extension, most of those jobs were higher paid.
- Men in general were more masculine
- Lack of obesity. The comparative lack of obesity in the past, male and female 1-3s in the past would be rated higher than the 1-3s of today.

These things propped up the sexual attractiveness curve for men where male 5s were probably comparable to the female 7-8s. Thus, a male rated at a "5" would be considered attractive to women 1-7s because of hypergamy.

The only way you can get societies where 90-95% of all men and women marry is to have social factors propping up male attractiveness to the point where even the 1s and 2s are marrying each other. Generally, the male 1s and 2s tend to be happy marrying anyone given the thirst that we see from many men. Therefore, it's the comparatively low rated women that have want to marry their similar counterparts.

The chart depicted below gives a visual analysis of the past and current situations.

The current situation statistics are analyzed in the do you need to be the top 20% post.

Localization and insulation of various areas contribute as well. If you've lived in a small town for all your life you won't be exposed to a lot more attractive men or women. However, with the rise of easy travel and jobs and the rise of dating apps, the localized areas have become conjoined with larger metropolitan areas. A man in a small town in New York who is the best there is might be a or 7-8 but when you're matched with a 9-10 making the big bucks in New York City only 100 miles away where you can meet up for a date that's going to distort things significantly.

Generally speaking, these are just averages. There are some women and men in the 7-10s who don't marry and some who divorce. There are some in the 1-3 range for men and women that get married and stay married. This is just analyzing the whole situation statistically for what we tend to see on average.

Now to get to Elspeth's comment we first need to analyze attractiveness in context. There's several different definitions in the 'sphere so lemme comment on them first.

> AF/BB (alpha fux/beta bux) is the representation that women tend to prefer direct alpha traits (e.g. power, status, athleticism, looks (PSAL without the M) over money (the M part of PSALM) generally. However this fails to encompass the whole spectrum.
> Alpha/beta/others can also refer to attractiveness vs non-attractiveness. In the above money (M) is actually part of attraction, it's just lower on the totem pole. The whole spectrum of traits of attractiveness and conversely unattractiveness. There's a spectrum of traits that are generally consider attractive and the more that a man has the more attractive he is. For instance, a man with power, status, athleticism, looks and money (PSALM) like a professional sports player or Olympic > athlete would be much higher on the totem pole than someone with only a few of those traits. Someone with a few of those traits would be higher than someone with only one or none.

> Alpha/beta/etc can also refer to Vox's sociosexual hierarchy which is more of a male order ranking than a female one, although women do go through some type of ranking in their own mind as they can rate men higher or lower than others in a pecking order of who they would prefer to date or marry.

In general, most societies follow a certain path although there are various debates as to what the particular phases are. In particular, most societies or civilizations reach a phase after growth to a stage of opulence.

In the growth phases, the contribution of the vast majority of men are necessary to make it grow strong either through warfare or productivity. The best way this happens is through monogamy. Once a civilization reaches a stage of opulence generally money becomes less of a factor because there is plenty of food and other conveniences. At this point generally women have become much more involved in all spheres of life and men tend to become much more disposable.

The growth phases are generally pre-feminism and most of all men and women are married. Male status is higher than women's. Men hold the higher paying jobs, and women are much more reliant on them. Hence, money tends to become one of the strongest factors of hypergamy during the rise of a civilization. Women in general in pre-industrial societies and those in poverty would love to marry a man with money because it satisfies her hypergamy and helps raise her higher up on the Maslow's hierarchy of needs. Survival first.

1. Physiological needs – food, water, warmth, rest
2. Safety needs – security, safety
3. Belongingness and love – intimate relationships, friends
4. Esteem needs – Prestige, feeling of accomplishment
5. Self-actualization – achieving one's full potential including creative activities

Indeed, the God ordained view of marriage and attraction has physiological needs with provider (food, shelter, resources – usually acquired by money) and safety needs with protector (power, status, athleticism). Sex and being a helper generally fall under belongingness and love.

However, once we get to opulent civilizations there's the turnaround. Generally, feminism can only arise from relatively opulent societies: Europe, America, Australia, and parts of Asia. Although feminism is making in-roads into South American and Africa, poverty is still scarce enough that women literally need men not just for hypergamy but to procure basic food and resources.

Elspeth's comment of the Great Depression destroying the burgeoning feminism is correct. Feminism can't grow while women need men which is especially true during times when money and other survival basics are scarce. However, once society trends toward the end stages of it’s growth and egalitiarianism where women can procure their own money, other various traits as such power, status, athleticism, and looks rise up on the totem pole above money.

After all, a women can procure a decent living on her own. Only enough money to secure a significant increase in standard of living or status (e.g. what gold diggers are after and women who marry very very old men looking for inheritance) is worthy of consideration, but in most cases women with decent jobs are mainly looking beyond money to fulfill as many other attractive hypergamous impulses as possible. Of course, men are too with beautiful, fit, feminine women with good character, doting, and respectful.

Maslow's hierarchy of needs as a way of understanding dysfunctional marriages

August 3, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One interesting thing that came to me in the Why do most societies have 90-95% marriage rates (at some points) is another possible way of annotating why God's made attractive traits to be the way they are in the context of marraige.

Maslow's hierarchy of needs.

1. Physiological needs – food, water, warmth, rest
2. Safety needs – security, safety
3. Belongingness and love – intimate relationships, friends
4. Esteem needs – Prestige, feeling of accomplishment
5. Self-actualization – achieving one's full potential including creative activities

In general, money correlates with the ability to fulfill physiological needs. Power, status, and athleticism tend to also correlate with fulfilling some physiological needs, but would generally fall under safety needs. For instance, those with high power or status in a tribe would usually secure food or athleticism as a hunter or warrior can procure food. However, those with higher power and status or athleticism also tend to be able to ensure the safety of those they are with.

This brings us to #3 which is belongingness and love. Sex and marriage and friends fall under this category. When you compare your average overweight and almost obese American man who is the butt of jokes of his wife and his wife wears the pants in the relationship, even if he makes a ton of money it probably won't make up for the fact that he is not a man that inspires feelings of security and safety in her.

This is probably why wives tend to feel revulsion at having sex with men who are lower on the attractive traits, especially barring that money tends to become a non-factor to a certain extend in hypergamy if she has a job of her own. Her physiological and/or safety needs are not being met, especially by a man she is with, so intimacy will become a foreign concept.

The interesting thing is that this hierarchy extends beyond this. If a woman can't find love (e.g. intimate relationships with a man), she defaults to find it with her friends who are doing the same thing as her which is to try to have it all.

The push of feminism has always been toward having it all, and that encompasses both esteem needs and self-actualization. The irony is that feminism pushes male esteem needs through career and women wonder why they don't find that as satisfying as having a family in many cases, and likewise there is the push to "find yourself" through self actualization which has come to mean casual sex and traveling and doing whatever.

In any case, this is an interesting way of looking at it and may be helpful if regular conversation can’t get through to some men.

Lori Gottlieb on the reciprocal rule

August 6, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

If you've been around a while, you may remember Lori Gottlieb from Dalrock's analysis on some of her books and interviews.

Full interview but some of the relevant parts here:

Her book "Marry Him : The Case for Settling for Mr. Good Enough" she claims was misinterpreted in that women were trying to maximize the wrong traits and should be focusing on better traits that are good for relationships instead.

In any case, I brought her up because it was some pertinent analysis into the reciprocal rule I talked about in the dark triad post. Essentially, she says that men and women have general childhood trauma or pick up from their parents different dysfunctional patterns where they look for the same in the person they want to date. Even when they notice something is wrong and they try to date someone who isn't dysfunctional, they will start to feel uncomfortable because they're not used to someone who isn't dysfunctional in that particular way. Because of this discomfort, they stop or avoid dating the functional people and go back to the dysfunctional people. Hence, to get them out of that cycle, they will have to do some introspection and address their own dysfunction in order to have healthy relationships and avoid the dysfunctional people.

Fairly good way of explaining why people tend to continually date people with certain dysfunctions, but it also leaves out the fact that people are indeed looking for multiple things in a relationship (including attraction).

The rise and fall on Mars Hill mini-series on Christianity Today

August 9, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Given both Dalrock and others including myself have talked about Driscoll's stuff before and recently as well, I recently found out about the on-going 12 part series where they look behind the scenes with a lot of the people who were there at the time.

Now, I don't have the time to cover all of these, but the two that caught my eye in particular are the ones I investigated which is his vision of manhood and womanhood.

> I am Jack's Raging Bile duct
> Mark Driscoll's vision of manhood indelibly shaped Mars Hill culture. Drawing from his own difficult childhood story, Mark created an ideal for those searching for meaning and direction. Men responded enthusiastically. From "dad talks" about issues about sex, career and family to "holy anger" over a feminized church culture, he invited men into a stirring narrative where manning up meant passionately loving God and their families.
> In this episode of The Rise and Fall of Mars Hill, host Mike Cosper digs deep into the mythic origin story that shaped Mark Driscoll's ministry to men. He reveals Mark as far more than just an agent of chaos but a man deeply concerned for the health and spirituality of other men, intent on pastoring them toward flourishing. And as Driscoll's particular brand of masculinity grew toxic, Cosper asks the poignant question, "Why do you stay when things get bad?" How do you reckon with the movement of the Spirit in your midst when your community begins to shatter?

This episode covered basically what it describes above including the famous "How dare you" rant which he did at all 4 services. It was a scripted rant. The interviewer claims to talk to dozens of people and doesn't know anyone who it actually helped — but says it could have helped people — though the biggest beneficiary was Driscoll himself who got a book deal out of it.

Fairly good episode overall I think. It does describe a lot of good which Mark did which was that he was effective in calling a lot of men to the responsibility of headship and manhood. Several of the men interviewed spoke of how he was very generous allowing men who were moving to the area to sleep at his house and get on their feet. He would also help struggling men out with rent until they could get on their feet as well.

But obviously as we know a bunch of his problems were similar to the pro-chivalry churchian crowd and federalist headship in that he puts all of the responsibility on men which relegates female agency to nothing. In other words, if anything goes wrong it's the man's fault even if women are being rebellious and sinning.

> The things we do to women
> Sex sells. It might be hard to imagine a church harnessing this popular marketing technique for church growth, but that's exactly what Mark Driscoll did in Seattle in the early 2000s. Whether condemning the Western erosion of manhood or elevating women as Christian pornographic ideals, preaching from the Mars Hill pulpit mixed toxic cultural messages with biblical theology in the name of forming men, women, and families for God. And, like Mark's campaign against diminished manhood, when sex sold in church, both men and women came up short.
> In this episode of The Rise and Fall of Mars Hill, host Mike Cosper addresses the femininity, fear, and fantasy that fueled conversations around gender and womanhood at Mars Hill. With delicate care, he unpacks the reactionary stream of sexuality that emerged at Mars Hill and exposes the struggle for authority and power beneath Mark Driscoll's classic sermons on womanhood and sex. Cosper explores what happens when words meant to protect women end up hurting them and how theology about headship and submission can create fear and shame when wielded by the wrong hands. If you've seen Mark's famous viral videos or heard the sermon sound bytes, tune in to this episode for the fuller story.

Unfortunately, unlike the previous episode this was not a very good one. It was quite biased toward feminism/egaltiarian and "abuse of authority" accusations.

The episode starts out covering the fact that Driscoll and proponents was very pro-evangelical women should not be working at all but be at home to mother children. Anything else was seen as both a husband and wife were failing in responsibility.

I think this is taken out of context in that the Bible suggests women can run a business well (Proverbs 31), but Titus 2 and 1 Tim 5 generally suggest that women should place the the most importance on the home. This also ignores that most of history women and wives at least had some role to play in productivity and generating some economic input throughout most societies as well. The stay at home mom thing is generally an artifact of US culture from the early to late 1900s.

However, the podcast doesn't go into any particular Biblical analysis and compares it to culture instead generally agreeing with more egalitarian beliefs. Similarly, they start to delve into women in leadership which was strictly prohibited (as it should be) and bring in some feminist interviewers on how that was a bad thing.

The episode then transitions to Driscoll's views on sexuality where he preaches that oral sex is Biblical (Song of Songs) and that men do like seeing women visually stripping and other stuff like that. Again, all true things. He adds in the audio where Driscoll is preaching a sermon where a woman came up to him and was trying to get her husband to go to Church but wasn't a believer. She had heard one of his sermons on oral sex, and he encouraged her to give oral sex to her husband where she was denying him oral sex while reminding her of 1 Peter 3 to win her husband with submission and respect. She ended up apologizing to her husband and giving him oral sex and he ended up coming to Church.

However, this was somewhat distorted by the podcasts into repressing women into some type of pornographic-esque pigeon-hole of abuse where women are made to feel bad if they aren't pleasing their husbands. The wife and oral sex comment was distorted into making this wife do what she didn't want to do and is thus abuse. However, I did agree with their analysis in that the results don't necessarily justify the means, but this instance was not a good example. True submission often requires doing things that we don't want to do, and that does not necessarily mean it is abusive to do it. These egalitarian/feminists views could twist this scenario to the fact that God wanted Jesus to die on the cross into the fact that God abused Jesus because He cried out to God in the garden that He didn't want to do it.

The episode also delves back into the "How dare you" sermon and how Driscoll actually did have a heart for single moms often going to buy groceries for dozens of them. However, they conclude that even with the good there some things like the "women as objects" to please their husbands is bad. The interviews end with some excerpts of women who "felt abused" because they felt like they were failures if they weren't pleasing their husband sexually any time he wanted it.

In my opinion, a fairer analysis would be that indeed men do enjoy those things and wives should strive to fulfill their husband's fantasies. However, on the other hand, the command in 1 Corinthians 7 is to fulfill each spouse's desire for sex, so the husband should also strive to do things that his wife enjoys sexually. For example, Song of Songs describes both the man and woman giving oral sex.

> Song 2:3 "Like an apple tree among the trees of the forest, so is my beloved among the young men. In his shade I took great delight and sat down, and his fruit was sweet to my taste."
> Song 4:16 "Awake, O north wind, and come, wind of the south; make my garden breathe out fragrance. Let its spices be wafted abroad. May my beloved come into his garden and eat its choice fruits!"
> Song of Songs 5:1 "I have come into my garden, my sister, my bride; I have gathered my myrrh along with my balsam. I have eaten my honeycomb and my honey; I have drunk my wine and my milk. (God then speaking to the husband and wife as lovers as He views and enjoys their sexual celebration) Eat, friends; Drink and imbibe deeply, O lovers."

In other words, Driscoll isn't necessarily wrong about what men/husband's desire and what women/wives should do to please them. However, he should have addressed the verse entirely in that husbands have a command to sexually please your wife too. A more balanced approach here would make it seem less like "abuse" to your average Christian. Given Driscoll's other federalist-like headship views I can see why your ordinary Christian would think doing such things is "abuse," but I don't think the glove fits in this situation.

Overall, I though this episode was generally a poor take given that they defaulted to the cultural claims of abuse being anything that wives don't want to do or don't feel like they want to do when their husbands want is abuse. Unfortunately, this seems to always be expected in chivalric white-knight boomer Christianity, much like what we saw in Theopolis institute's series on the manosphere. They easily understand the strength and weaknesses of men, but they have huge cultural blinders on about women.

These are the only two I'm going to cover though, but check out the rest if you have time.

Online dating lessons summarized

August 13, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Aaron Renn's blog had several posts where users shared their experiences after his article on online dating. I'm going to group them with the commonalities of the ones that had success and the ones that didn't.

As people know, I didn't have success either with about 200+ messages, 5 replies, 3 multi-replies, and 1 date. Facially I'm probably about a 5 I would guess. Slightly below average height. Definitely not in the top looks or anything. However, I probably had deficiencies with my profile as well compared to some of the other men we'll look at.

Online dating success story

Successfully married:

- Mid 30s, not overweight or out of shape
- Pictures were of activities that he liked to do
- Cast a wide net — messaged all available women he found attractive
- Any received messages try to get to dates with small amounts of messaging
- Owns a house, business, and farm
- Had expectations of other personal details.

Failure but lessons:

- Late 20s at the time. Below average height and a little overweight, but high income for age and owned own house.
- Faith based sites generally better because of more women
- Premium sites slightly better because more people are serious (lifetime fee premium possibly best?).
- Non-religious sites messages are fired off into the ether never to return. Most of his responses coming from women that he found barely attractive to message (e.g. his profile was of probably only slightly above average attractiveness).
- Catholic Match and Ave Maria singles were good as a Catholic. Phoned a few and met two in person.
- "A little more mature at the time, may have married someone he met online"

How to make the most of online dating

Successfully married:

- Early 40s, 5'6″, 185 stocky muscular (not flabby – big difference).
- Own business, has all hair, never married, no children, large southeast metro area
- Little success on match.com, OKcupid, plenty of fish, coffee meets bagel
- Bumble (where women message first) was very good. Swipe right on all 40 profiles per day and wait for them to write. 25 matches/wk and half write. Those half are interested. Could convert to 4-6 dates per week, but 3-5 first dates to improve quality was norm. 1-2 get a second date.

- Biggest change from little to lots of interest: quality pictures. When traveling Europe paid to get stylish and casual photos for a business website, which he used for dating profile. Photos implied financially successful without boat and sport car cliches.
- Profile written slightly obnoxiously to refer to him as the prize. Selective/worthy to join my club type. Made fun of women who like to shop at Target. Only described as Christian looking for a relationship without any other religious references.
- Almost all women who wrote were 28-42. Most were cute, but somehow the algorithm was 'convinced' he 'deserved' cute women.
- Half say what's up or mention the obnoxious profile. Those who reference profile tend to have more personality in person. Establish some points of interest and then after 12-15 messages go on a date if more interest.
- Not relevant to go into detail about what you really want or what your interests are. Few paragraphs about why if you want to read the link.
- Knows how to talk to people and make them feel comfortable which is what men need to learn how to do to be successful on dates and helpful for all aspects of life even in marriage.
- Action points: get good photos, writing should show humor and self confidence, teasing is a plus, take the written parts seriously. Don't go into hyper detail about your relationship with God or views on theology generally as you can do that later. Start with Bumble.

My experience with online dating

Failure:

- Did fairly well with attracting women growing up in high school and college. "Funny enough, smart enough, tall enough and physically attractive enough that was reasonably happy with the prospects able to attract but usually screwed it up once there was interest (e.g. male feminist)."
- First 50% of the post is analyzing about how the algorithms work.
- 28 months went on 6 dates after 70,000 profile views, 60,000 unattractive ones, 800 likes, 75 matches from 800 likes (~10%), 33-34 conversations, 6 dates.
- Saw a great looking girl on the app and liked her. Didn't hear back. Saw her at a party, and she liked him in person since he was comfortable, laughing, and in many ways the life of the party. Didn't work out cause he did some research and she seemed like a cultural Christian.
- "in a global marketplace you need to be the top of the very, very top. In a local marketplace you just need to be the top of WHOEVER ELSE IS AROUND."

Others:

- Met on e-harmony 2007-2008. Hardest part was figuring out who was "above my station” and “below my station” (in attractiveness I guess?) and marketing self toward that.

- Another knows several who met online but not through dating platforms. Mainly specific interest groups.

Overall, it appears that if you want to go the online dating route that you:

- Get professional photos
- At least be in the “top 20%” in a couple categories (e.g. own house, business) if you have some relative negatives like being shorter on average.
- Cater profile to be Christian but also funny and confident and successful (e.g. tick off traits that appeal to hypergamy).
- Cast a wide net, and try to convert any message/interest into dates rapidly.
- Be a bit more selective on the 2nd dates.

I’m not sure my profile would have done any better with some of these things, but maybe it would have. If you’re still interested in online dating, give some of these things a shot.

Paul’s idealism and pragmatism with more wisdom

August 31, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the things that has always stuck with me that I’m not sure I mentioned on this blog before at least is Paul’s idealism with singleness contrasted with the more pragmatic approach he takes later in the pastoral letters. One could argue that scholars believe that the pastoral letters aren’t necessarily written by Paul, but at least if they weren’t then the early Church would still recognize the validity of Paul’s recommendations contrasted with more pragmatic approaches for certain populations.

For example,

> 1 Corinthians 7:8 But I say to the unmarried and to widows that it is good for them if they remain even as I. 9 But if they do not have self-control, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn with passion.
> 32 But I want you to be free from concern. One who is unmarried is concerned about the things of the Lord, how he may please the Lord; 33 but one who is married is concerned about the things of the world, how he may please his wife, 34 and his interests are divided. The woman who is unmarried, and the virgin, is concerned about the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit; but one who is married is concerned about the things of the world, how she may please her husband. 35 I say this for your own benefit, not to put a restraint on you, but to promote what is appropriate and to secure undistracted devotion to the Lord.
> 39 A wife is bound as long as her husband lives; but if her husband dies, she is free to be married to whom she wishes, only in the Lord. 40 But in my opinion she is happier if she remains as she is; and I think that I also have the Spirit of God.

Paul’s idealistic mandate is for people to remain single to serve the Lord wholeheartedly if possible. On the other hand,

> 1 Timothy 5:3 Give proper recognition to those widows who are really in need. 4 But if a widow has children or grandchildren, these should learn first of all to put their religion into practice by caring for their own family and so repaying their parents and grandparents, for this is pleasing to God. 5 The widow who is really in need and left all alone puts her hope in God and continues night and day to pray and to ask God for help. 6 But the widow who lives for pleasure is dead even while she lives. 7 Give the people these instructions, so that no one may be open to blame. 8 Anyone who does not provide for their relatives, and especially for their own household, has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.
> 9 No widow may be put on the list of widows unless she is over sixty, has been faithful to her husband, 10 and is well known for her good deeds, such as > bringing up children, showing hospitality, washing the feet of the Lord's people, helping those in trouble and devoting herself to all kinds of good deeds.

> 11 As for younger widows, do not put them on such a list. For when their sensual desires overcome their dedication to Christ, they want to marry. 12 Thus they bring judgment on themselves, because they have broken their first pledge. 13 Besides, they get into the habit of being idle and going about from house to house. And not only do they become idlers, but also busybodies who talk nonsense, saying things they ought not to. 14 So I counsel younger widows to marry, to have children, to manage their homes and to give the enemy no opportunity for slander. 15 Some have in fact already turned away to follow Satan.
> 16 If any woman who is a believer has widows in her care, she should continue to help them and not let the church be burdened with them, so that the church can help those widows who are really in need.

Paul recognizes that although it's ideal for younger widows to remain single to serve the Lord, that's not what is occurring in reality. These widows would make the pledge to stay single to serve the Lord, but then want to marry and break that pledge. Even those that did not break the pledge were becoming busybody gossips if they were on the support lists.

Proverbs 16:27 (NLB) Idle hands are the devil's workshop; idle lips are his mouthpiece.

I believe this is also why in Titus that younger women are counseled to focus their behavior on loving their husband and children and be busy with their homes.

> Titus 2:3 Likewise, teach the older women to be reverent in the way they live, not to be slanderers or addicted to much wine, but to teach what is good. 4 Then they can urge the younger women to love their husbands and children, 5 to be self-controlled and pure, to be busy at home, to be kind, and to be subject to their husbands, so that no one will malign the word of God.

In any case, I think there is room for both idealism and pragmatism in the Christian approach especially as it concerns behavior. We want people to strive for the ideal, but we have to understand that at least certain populations need their own specific guidelines to help them become more spiritually mature. It may not look for the same for everyone.

Women in particular seem vulnerable and 1 Peter 3 calls wives the weaker vessel, so we must be ready to protect them when necessary even when they don't want it or call it sexist. If they decide to rebel against it then that's on their own head, but that doesn't mean we shouldn't understand that they won't necessarily have the capacity like many men.

Female hypoagency is ubiquitous

September 7, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the common denominators across a wide spectrum including feminists, egalitarians, complementarians, “Christian” dating and marital advice, “Christian” counseling and even the federal headship crew is female hypo-agency.

Full metal Patriarch did a good job at pointing this out with If your husband is a godly man, submission will be easy! in the Christian dating/marital advice crowd.

This almost always follows the variations of “If a man does, then women…”

Feminists use this in terms of their call against victim blaming. Well, if men would only stop raping, while excusing women for their poor choices such as getting blackout drunk. Men shouldn’t rape, but I highly doubt that the men who rape actually care about their moral state or not doing harm to women.

Feminists and egalitarians use this to argue against Biblical headship, but twist it to push women in authority. “If only men wouldn’t abuse their authority…” which turns into men shouldn’t have authority at all.

This is common in complementarian denial of actual headship in practice though displaying lip service to it. The Christian husband can’t be trusted to wield authority in a right way, thus they concede that the husband has a tiebreak vote if he and his wife disagree. “If only we could trust the husband to use authority in a right way… then the wife could submit to him.”

Federal headship is the weird but common case where basically Christians of varying feminist and patriarchal backgrounds claim that the wife is a reflection of the husband. If the wife doesn’t want to have sex with her husband then her husband is doing something wrong. If a wife doesn’t want to obey her husband then the husband is doing something wrong. “If only the man would obey God in everything, then the wife would want to submit to him.”

All of this stems from the underlying assumption of “men bad, women good” where women end up in a faultless or moral compass situation.

This is also why any Christian woman’s Bible study on submission almost inevitably ends up as 90-100% talking about what the men should be doing.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, subject yourselves to your own husbands, as to the Lord.
> 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would > be holy and blameless.

The importance of Ephesians 5 cannot be overstated. Wives have their own role, separate and independent of what the husband is doing, to be accountable to God for and to carry out with all of her ability.

Likewise, husbands have the duty to love their wife for the purpose of sanctification (and not her feelings). This means to point out areas of sin where she should repent and do right instead. This follows the example of Christ, the second Adam, to lead His Church to be reconciled to God rather than the first Adam who followed his wife instead of God.

Conversations on these topics must always be vigilant that they don’t trend toward female hypoagency. Both men and women are responsible for their own roles to play in relationships, even if the other person is doing right or doing wrong.

Complementarian “agreement as godliness” is the same concept as liberal tolerance

September 9, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A very interesting connection popped into my head the other day as I was discussing motivations and desires of wives in the marriage and how it relates to submission.

Relational archetypes and more insight into the false godliness of complementarianism theology has a quote I want to build on:

> Complementarianism claims that the husband and wife discuss everything and then the husband’s vote is a tie break [if there is disagreement]. What happens in practice is everything is all well and good as long as the husband is making decisions that the wife likes, but when he doesn’t she emotionally manipulates him until she gets her way. Ironically, this is pretty much similar to how things run in egalitarian and most non-feminist but egalitarian relationships and marriages. The only time you have women in charge explicitly is when the woman/wife actually literally says she wears the pants.
> On the surface there is the claim that these things are happening, but under the surface they are all the same: disrespect and manipulation tactics are coming a man’s way if he wants something that she disagrees with. That’s why I still think the lines are in the same place. When push comes to shove, the wife is in control or exerts tactics to make sure she gets what she wants.
> One aspect I’ve noticed is that the more a husband and wife agree on most everything in the case of complementarianism or other non-feminists structures the more ambiguous it looks to us. However, many of the complementarians will take this as a sign of godliness — “wow, their marriage is so great because they’re in agreement on everything.” If we remember back to CBMW’s definition of headship, their interpretation of Scripture is the husband and wife should agree on everything and if they disagree then the husband gets the tie break.
> However, this is not a sign of godliness but just two people getting along well usually by personality and underlying dynamic. When push comes to shove and the husband decides something that his wife doesn’t like, we’ll see how godly she is with her respect and submission. The wives who pass this test of godliness today are definitely in the minority.
> Moreover, this incorrect assumption of “godliness by agreement” gives the layperson husband and wives (and even pastors I believe) the wrong impression and makes it much more difficult to have real* godliness when there is actually a disagreement. For instance, “we had such a godly marriage until this came up” — no, not really. You agreed with each other a bunch because you have similar personalities and there was no conflict. When conflict came, your real character > and ability to honor God was revealed. And it wasn't pretty.

> True headship does not require consulting on every directive because authority is able to be delegated in the Scripture and can be by a husband. For example, if a wife has expertise in a certain area a husband might delegate that to her and also if there are minor decisions like day to day life style he can say I trust your judgment on them.

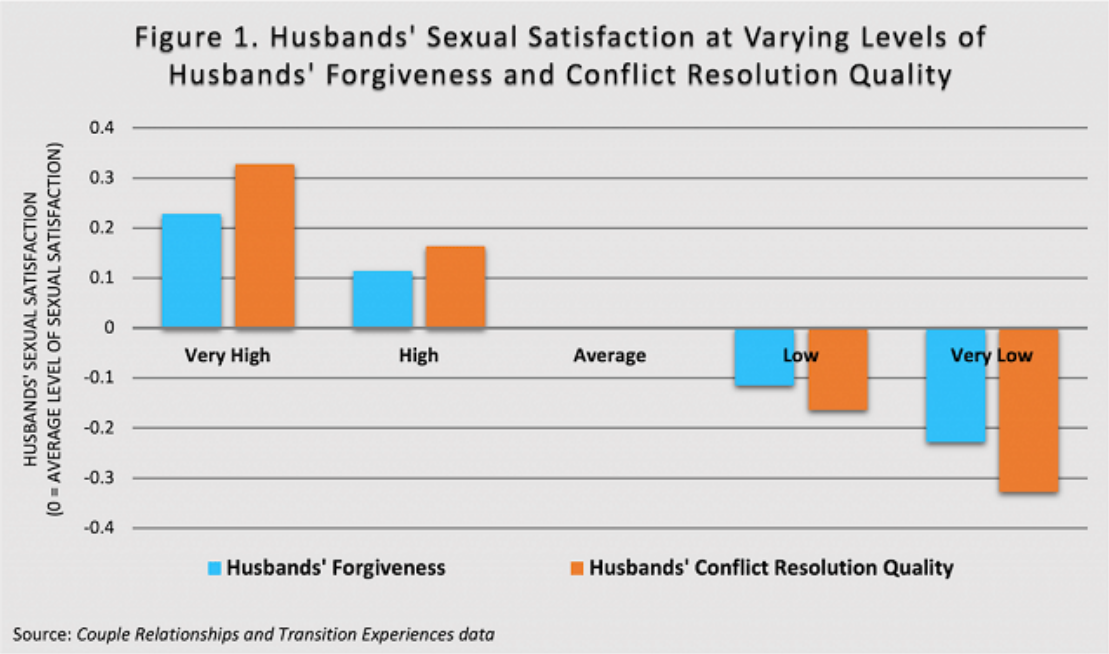
What is interesting about the concept of agreement as godliness is that that it probably has its roots in liberal/feminist philosophies of tolerance. Liberal tolerance is that we accept everyone for who they are and everyone needs to get along. This is one of the highest forms of "moral" good according to them exemplified in multi-culturalism.

The exception, in this case, being much like the complementarians' begrudging husband tiebreaker vote, they take it a step further and if you're not "tolerant" (e.g. not in agreement with their moral code) then it's their way or the highway. They'll mock you, cancel you, vandalize your property, dox you, or whatever else. This is a default to being Gentiles understanding of authority.

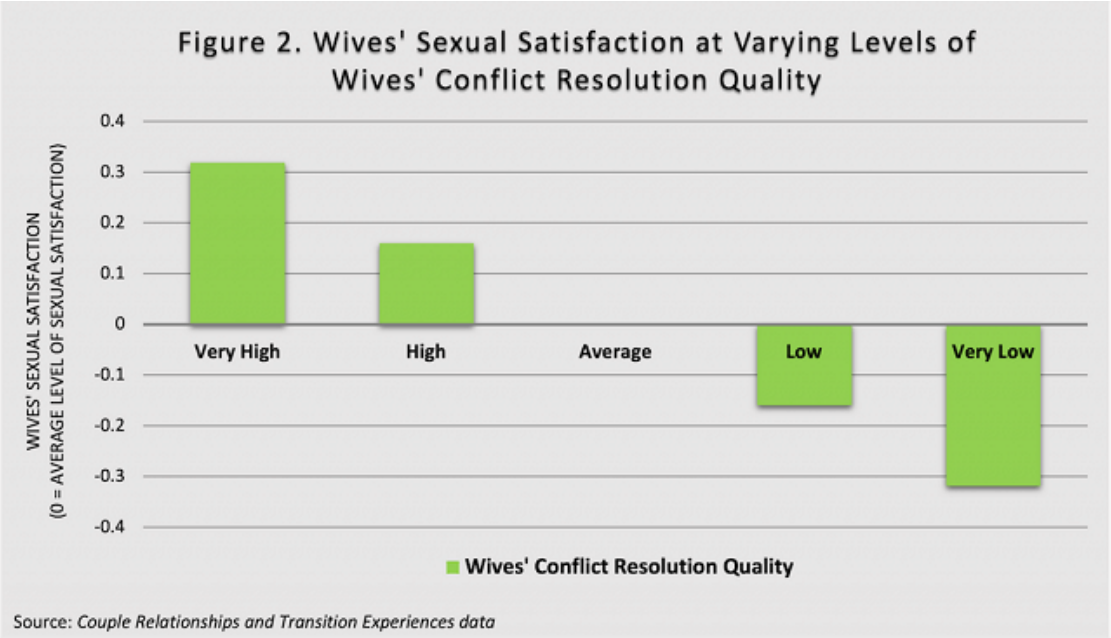
> Matthew 20:25 Jesus called them together and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their high officials exercise authority over them. 26 Not so with you. Instead, whoever wants to become great among you must be your servant, 27 and whoever wants to be first must be your slave— 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many."

Complementarians are so scared of husband authority that they try to marry liberal/feminist philosophies with the Bible instead of believe what Jesus teaches in verses 26-28. Either that or they warp the verses to the ubiquitous "servant leadership" where in practice the husband is a slave to his wife's feelings of happiness or dissatisfaction.

Imagine Abraham when God told him to go to Canaan: "Well God, I actually like it in Ur way better and don't want to wander around for dozens of years. I don't agree with your decision, but since you have the tiebreaker vote I'll go."



Or the disciples to Jesus: "Jesus, I don't like the way you're doing ministry. I'm too scared to go out with you on the road to minister to other people. But since you have the tiebreak, I guess I'll try to do it for you.



You'd get laughed out of the room and rightly so. But somehow complementarians endorse this with wives in marriage.

Forgiveness and conflict resolution effect on sexual satisfaction in marriage

September 20, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Institute for family studies continues to put out some gems here and there. One of the common ones most cited I usually cite is their pre-marital sex and marriage stability one which does some more analysis on the Heritage study like Social Pathologist's posts.

> For forgiveness, our results indicate that wives' forgiveness showed no significant impact on their sexual satisfaction. However, we found that husbands who are more forgiving tend to report that they are more sexually satisfied, as illustrated by Figure 1 below.
> Reading the chart from left to right, we see that husband's sexual satisfaction varies depending on how forgiving husbands tend to be. In this chart, husband's predicted sexual satisfaction at varying levels of husband's forgiveness is represented by the blue bars. Specifically, we observed that husbands with high levels of forgiveness tended to have greater than average sexual satisfaction, where the average level of sexual satisfaction is at zero. In contrast, we observed that husbands with low levels of forgiveness tended to have lower than average sexual satisfaction.
> Of note, greater conflict resolution quality was connected to greater sexual satisfaction for both husbands and wives. This finding for husbands is represented above with the orange bars and below for wives with the green bars.

> The narrative is the same for both husbands and wives: individuals with high levels of conflict resolution quality tend to have above average levels of sexual satisfaction, while individuals with low levels of conflict resolution quality tend to have below average levels of sexual satisfaction.

This one in particular yields some good insights.

Obviously, conflict resolution generally depends on how well a person can think outside of themselves and understand the other person. In particular, for Christians this also means choosing to put on the fruit of the Spirit in the midst of hard circumstances rather than default to conflict, anger, and strife.

Husband forgiveness and conflict resolution ability are both positively correlated with sexual satisfaction. This seems to relate back to some of the Biblical commands, aside from the fruit of the Spirit:

> Colossians 3:19 Husbands, love your wives and do not become bitter against them.
> 1 Peter 3:7 You husbands in the same way, live with your wives in an understanding way, as with someone weaker, since she is a woman; and show her honor as a fellow heir of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.

Indeed, husbands shouldn't become bitter toward their wives which hinders forgiveness. Those husbands that can understand that the wife is different and weaker will tend to have a better time forgiving her and working things out since she is not like you.

Conflict resolution makes sense in that if the couple are fighting they're not likely to be having sex or satisfied with having sex as much. Negative emotions are typically a turn off.

Ironically, only wife conflict resolution relates to sexual satisfaction while forgiveness does not. I suspect there may be several reasons for this. This probably follows along the old saying “it is better to ask for forgiveness than it is to get permission.” In other words, men who are assertively doing things and acting as the leader have much more leeway for forgiveness from their wives than men who are timid and asking for permission.

This seems a bit counterintuitive, but the former assertive man would be more attractive and hence her forgiveness — even if it’s a lot or a little — would be less correlated with her desire to have sex with him. Whereas the undecisive man who is asking for permission all the time and screwing things up — even if it’s a lot or little — does not get the benefit of the doubt in terms of sex. He’s always going to be trying to seek approval of his wife for things, so her forgiveness matters little in terms of sexual satisfaction as she’s not going to be wanting to have sex with him anyway.

It seems in either case, forgiveness is not correlated with the good or the bad which is why it seems to be a wash in this case.

All this is to say, obey God’s marital roles and responsibilities as they’re not just about pleasing God, but they typically help with sexual satisfaction too.

> Although many studies have examined the association between religion and sexuality, the majority of these studies have focused on nonmarital sex. Unfortunately, despite the fact that a satisfying sexual relationship plays a critical role in married couples’ relationship quality and stability, the associations between religiosity and marital sexual satisfaction are not well understood. Thus, to examine the association between religiosity and couples’ reports of married sexual satisfaction, the authors of this study used dyadic data from a nationally representative sample of married couples (N = 1,368) between the ages of 18 and 45. They used both joint and individual measures of religiosity as well as examining the relationship mechanisms that might link religiosity and sexual satisfaction. In the models, individual-level reports of marital sanctification were positively associated with wives’ and husbands’ reports of sexual satisfaction. Furthermore, joint religious activities done in the home were positively associated with husbands’ reports of sexual satisfaction. Marital commitment, relationship maintenance behaviors, and spousal time fully mediated these associations for husbands, while commitment partially mediated the association for wives.

Furthermore, Joint religiosity and married couples’ sexual satisfaction in the abstract above that is linked in the IFS post seems to indicate that doing religious activities in the home increases sexual satisfaction. This lends some good credence to Deuteronomy 6 as well as the NT Biblical marital roles and responsibilities.

In particular, the man acting as the leader and setting an example to follow (commitment, maintenance behaviors, spousal time) fully associated with improved sexual satisfaction. Whereas on the other hand, commitment only partially mediates the association for wives.

> Genesis 3:16b Your desire will be for your husband, and he will rule over you.

I think the partially mediated commitment makes sense in that a wife can choose to follow or not (rebellious and discontent vs fighting against those) is the duality of the choice wives make everyday. For the wives that do, it’s correlated. For the wives that don’t, it’s not.

Geriatric pregnancy

September 26, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the funnier topics I saw the other day on facebook was that some of the older millennial women were complaining and offended about when their doctors used the term “geriatric pregnancy” when they went in to get checkups.

The definition of geriatric pregnancy is having a pregnancy at or anytime you are 35 or older. Of course, this is most of these women’ 1st or 2nd kid (and probably last), and a bunch of them are more at risk for birth defects because of their age as well as various complications.

But they’re “soooo offended” by the term they can’t look to see past the fact that delaying children is indeed not normal and increases risks for everything. Some of the same women were posting about their difficulties conceiving as well in prior posts.

It really just doesn’t register with people that all actions have consequences.

Oh, forgot to add the IFS discussion on this topic.

https://ifstudies.org/blog/fertility-rates-delayed-marriage-and-infertility

> I (Dr. McIlhaney) wrote in a 1998 book, “Gonorrhea and chlamydia are spreading like wildfire among young people in the United States. They are the most rapidly increasing cause of infertility in the United States.” I also noted, “Of women who are infertile, one-third have that problem because of damage to their fallopian tubes from one of these two sexually transmitted diseases.” (Damage to the fallopian tubes may prevent sperm from reaching and fertilizing the egg, or it may prevent a fertilized egg from traveling to the uterus and being implanted there.) Back then, statistics clearly showed that if the woman was experiencing infertility, such damage, caused by STDs, was the most likely reason.
> The CDC confirms that the risk of STD-caused fallopian tube damage remains today—but now, it is only the second most common cause for a woman’s fertility problems. Problems of ovulation have taken over the top spot among reasons women struggle to become pregnant. Such problems can be caused by a fairly common disease called Polycystic Ovarian Disease (or Polycystic Ovary Syndrome).
> However, the social trends already noted also have biological implications. Today the median age of first marriage for women is over 28 years of age. The “median” age of first marriage means that half of all women marry for the first time when even older—with many not attempting pregnancy until well after age 30. Though we were concerned 20 years ago about delayed attempts at conception, those delays generally were not as long as they are today.
> Delays in marriage until later in life do not simply reduce the number of years available for (marital) childbearing. They may make it more difficult to conceive > in the first place.

> Studies show that fertility begins dropping from age 30 on. More significant decline sets in later in the 30s. Many women's ovarian responsiveness moves into the zone of what is now called POI (primary ovarian insufficiency), or "premature ovarian failure." As POI develops, women have less chance of becoming pregnant without new reproductive technologies (which may be expensive, if they are even available for her). If her ovaries have become even more unresponsive, she will often not have an ovum (egg) that is fertile, or at times, she may have no ovum at all—and therefore, no chance of becoming pregnant without assistance.
> So, STD-damaged fallopian tubes are no longer the number one cause of female infertility today. Among women, the number one issue preventing pregnancy is ovulation related. These problems of ovulation are overwhelmingly due to the delayed age at which women are attempting to become pregnant.

Sexual promiscuity promoted via feminism and delayed marriages for improving your career have consequences. Often disastrous ones in terms of infertility. No shortage of women struggling with it on my FB friends as well. Some have gone the route of IVF to varying success.

Can't buck God without paying the consequences.

Reflecting on effective leadership for those in the Church as well as husbands

October 2, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I typically go over the various Biblical marital roles and responsibilities when discussing what to strive for since they are mandated by God for our benefit in marriage.

However, one thing that I don't often talk about are the distinct traits that make one both a good leader in the Church as well as the home.

I included these in the book because I think they are good for all men to strive for in their life even when single to prepare them for leadership roles in the Church if any, and they are helpful prior to getting a wife too as they build both attractive and relationship sustaining traits.

> 1 Timothy 3:1 It is a trustworthy statement: if any man aspires to the office of overseer, it is a fine work he desires to do. 2 An overseer, then, must be above reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, self-controlled, respectable, hospitable, skillful in teaching, 3 not overindulging in wine, not a bully, but gentle, not contentious, free from the love of money. 4 He must be one who manages his own household well, keeping his children under control with all dignity 5 (but if a man does not know how to manage his own household, how will he take care of the church of God?), 6 and not a new convert, so that he will not become conceited and fall into condemnation incurred by the devil. 7 And he must have a good reputation with those outside the church, so that he will not fall into disgrace and the snare of the devil.
> 8 Deacons likewise must be men of dignity, not insincere, not prone to drink much wine, not greedy for money, 9 but holding to the mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. 10 These men must also first be tested; then have them serve as deacons if they are beyond reproach. 11 Women must likewise be dignified, not malicious gossips, but temperate, faithful in all things. 12 Deacons must be husbands of one wife, and good managers of their children and their own households. 13 For those who have served well as deacons obtain for themselves a high standing and great confidence in the faith that is in Christ Jesus.

In these we have this list, of which I only am adding 1 time for those that overlap.

- Above reproach / Be tested to be above reproach
- One wife
- Temperate
- Self-Controlled
- Respectable
- Hospitable
- Skilled at teaching

- Doesn’t overindulge in alcohol
- Not a bully but gentle
- Not contentious
- Free from the love of money <— big one for American Pator
- Manages his own household well
- Children are kept under control
- Not a new convert
- Good reputation with those outside of the Church
- Man of dignity
- Sincere
- Holding to the faith with a clear conscience

It’s a full laundry list of things. Those who strive to do all of these things are generally very mature and effective within the faith and Church already with others, so obtaining a leadership position is generally all but a formality.

Although some of these can only be done with a wife and kids (e.g. husband of one wife, manage children well), most of these can be done absent of a wife and kids, and they are much like 2 Peter 1 in an effective way to practice to be stronger and more mature in the faith.

Some of these expressed in action are attractive to the opposite sex, though most I would say tend to sustain relationships effectively.

> He must be one who manages his own household well, keeping his children under control with all dignity

NASB may not do this passage as much credit as some other translations which say “rules his household well.”

Imagine if elders, deacons, and men’s groups actually talked about how to rule their own households well. If you even mention that to most people in the Church today their heads would explode.

Sexual authority is only for sex and not against sex

October 5, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've seen this often from complementarians and egalitarians but was just reminded of it from Full Metal Patriarch's post on Doug Wilson's quaduple-speak.

He quotes from Doug's book:

> Yes, she must have sex whenever you want it. And you must refrain whenever she wants to refrain. You have authority over her body, but never forget that she also has authority over your body."
> Fidelity, pp. 109-110

Let's actually read the passage, shall we?

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband should fulfill his marital duty to his wife, and likewise the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body but yields it to her husband. In the same way, the husband does not have authority over his own body but yields it to his wife. 5 Do not deprive each other except perhaps by mutual consent and for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer. Then come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

The intent of the passage starts in verse 3 where each spouse to fulfill their marital duty to the other. Thus, verse 4 speaks that each spouse should rightfully give their spouse sex when they desire it. Verse 5 continues along this theme of not depriving each other except for a special situation where both agree to it for spiritual purposes.

It's an absolutely contradictory reading of the passage to suggest that husbandly authority over the wife's body and the wifely authority over the husband's body means that that she should have sex with you but her authority over your body means she can stop you from that. The whole passage including each verse is about fulfilling the marital duty not refraining from it, and refraining from it is only by mutual consent and prayer. The authority is indicated to have sex, but there is no authority to not have sex.

It's no better than the egalitarian cherry pickers saying that Eph 5:21 "and [church members should] submit to one another in Christ" also applies to the marriage verses. It's just bad exegesis of the text.

Disparities in college education might explain much of the gap in marriage

October 14, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Why do most societies have 90-95% marriage rates (at some points) I noted some of the various points such men having higher status as some of the reasons why the assortive mating has dropped.

One of the most recent IFS blog articles on What the Latest Current Population Survey Tells Us About the Future of Fertility has a good chart confirming this. Basically at least up until the 1950s, women married consistently at a 95% rate. However, as the free love and sexual revolutions generations started kicking off in the 1960s and 1970s it has been trending down over time.

I've theorized on several articles that it could reach the 20-30% range with the latest generations giving the delays in marriage and overall dropping patterns.

Several articles have started talking about the men in college gap. One from WSJ is more of an interview piece (though behind a paywall), but the IFS blog on Boys Are Falling Farther and Farther Behind Their Sisters: Should We Care? attempts to tackle it too.

> There is a growing gender gap in higher education. According to the latest figures from the National Student Clearinghouse Research Center: as of spring 2021, women accounted for 59.5% of students attending colleges and universities nationwide. Among four-year private colleges, women now account for 61% of all students. Both figures represent new records. Douglas Shapiro, executive director of research at the National Student Clearinghouse, told The Wall Street Journal earlier this month that if current trends continue, within a few years there > will be two women graduating from college for every one man.

> Well, so what? In 1970, men accounted for 58% of students attending colleges and universities, and there was no great outcry back then about the gender imbalance. Why should we be concerned now that the pendulum has swung in the other direction?
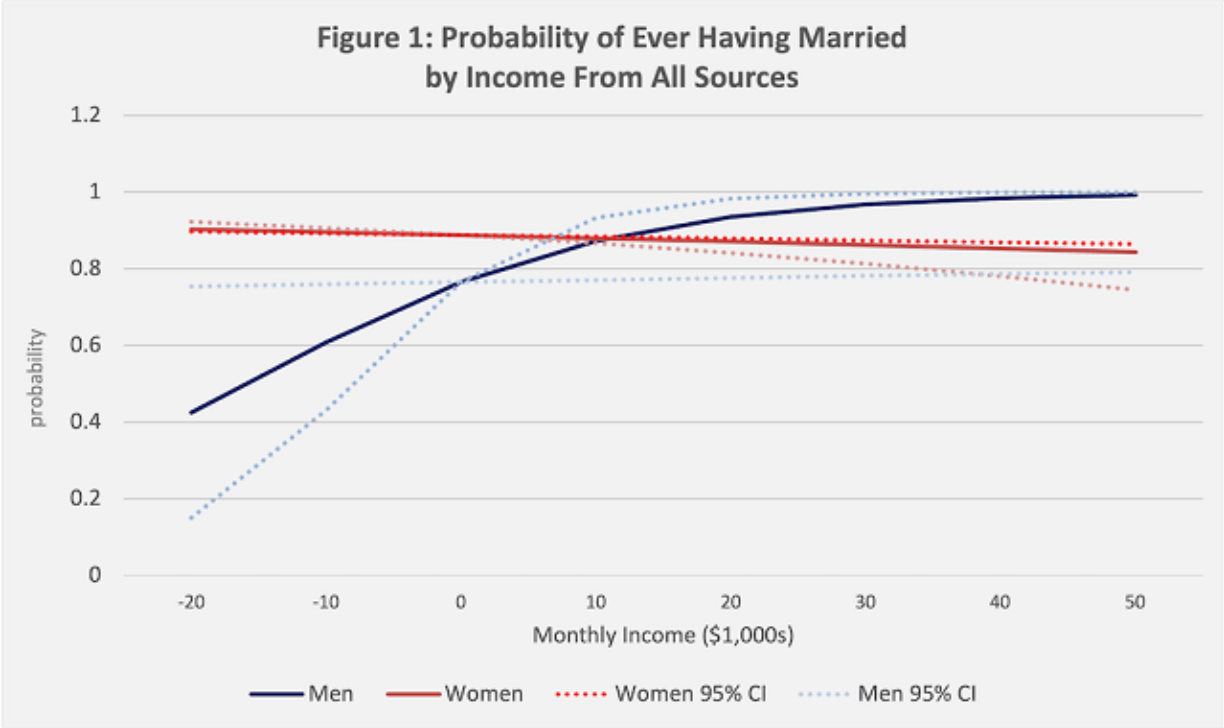
> I think there are good reasons for concern, which can be summed up in three words: “educational assortative mating.” Educational assortative mating means that if a woman has earned a four-year degree and she is looking for a husband, she will usually choose a man whose educational achievement is equal to or greater than her own. Fifty years ago, if a man earned a four-year degree and was looking for a woman to marry, he might have many qualifications in mind for his future wife; but educational attainment was not one of them. In that era, college-educated men were happy to marry women who had never attended college. In our era, college-educated women are hoping to marry college-educated men. And there are not enough college-educated men to go around.



The article continues to go deeper into cultural changes against masculinity and pro femininity that have pushed those trends that way over time from 58% of men in 1970 to 41% of men in 2021. However, the author really doesn’t take it far enough as others have done in which the educational system is biased against men and there is an informal/formal war on boys in many cases.

The gap though between men and women stands at 59% – 41% = 18% populational gap between men and women in higher education. Given that women are hypergamous, it wouldn’t be too far off to say that a lot of women aren’t too happy with marrying down. Education is one of those as both a status symbol and for earning potential as college graduates (who don’t choose liberal arts degrees) have much higher earning potential than their non-college graduate peers.

> Women’s overall physical attractiveness was positively correlated with all six of the good investment abilities, in four cases significantly so—income potential, good earning capacity, college graduate, and older then self.

I suspect the 18% gap is a large portion of the 20-30% unmarried we’ll see as if hypergamy isn’t satisfied women will not want to marry, and the rest at the moment seems to be centered around the sub-cultures in various lower income areas. There’s been much speculation (and correct, I think) that marriage is mostly a middle to upper-middle to upper class construct nowadays. Of course, cohabitation takes up some of that percentage but not all of it.

Of course, this also correlates with the fact that The Ideal Husband? A Man in Possession of a Good Income .

> As Figure 1 illustrates, for men, as income increases, the probability of marriage also increases such that men in the highest income category are about 57 percentage points more likely to marry than men in the lowest income category. The same is not true for women. High income men are more likely than low income men to marry, while income is unrelated to marriage for women. Given that marriage involves choice on both the man and the woman's part, these results suggest that women are more likely to choose to marry men with good financial prospects, while a woman's financial prospects are less important to men when choosing a marriage partner.
> Not only are high-income men more likely to marry, they are more likely to stay married, too. Figure 2 shows the probability of divorce for those who have been married at least once, and reveals that for men the probability of divorce declines as income rises, such that men in the highest income category are about 37 percentage points less likely to divorce than men in the lowest income category. For women the probability of divorce increases as income rises, perhaps mostly due to reverse causality and the fact that divorced women are more likely to have to support themselves financially. For men, the results suggest that women are more likely to divorce low income men than high income men.

We already knew this though. Men that are more wealthy are more likely to marry, and if a man loses his job or earns less than a woman she is more likely to divorce. In the case of women divorcing, it's the hypergamous impulse that drives it but she can generally support herself as well and doesn't need her husband.

Ironically, all of these IFS blogs are by different authors, but they are connected.

Overall, for men who want to be married, being college educated and/or having good income prospects (if non-college educated) are usually looked at highly by women.

However, they are not the only things that women are looking for attraction-wise at least — the rest of PSAL in PSALMs and masculinity.

External locus of control and internal locus of control

October 18, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack's article was on Start Small to Build Internal Locus of Control was a bit interesting to me.

In general, an internal locus of control does correlate well to most successful behaviors, but I think this may be a bit short sighted in terms of being a Christian.

In particular, consider evangelism. Our mission as Christians is the Great Commission — "go into all the world and make disciples of all nations" — which is a goal oriented one that greatly benefits from an internal locus of control. Paul was a good example of this as a tireless worker for the gospel. However, Paul also understood that despite the fact that God is responsible for the outcomes of making it grow.

> 1 Corinthians 3:6 I planted the seed, Apollos watered it, but God has been making it grow. 7 So neither the one who plants nor the one who waters is anything, but only God, who makes things grow. 8 The one who plants and the one who waters have one purpose, and they will each be rewarded according to their own labor. 9 For we are co-workers in God's service; you are God's field, God's building.

This is why in relationships, including those between men and women including marriage, the big thing to focus on is to do what is pleasing to God at all times. You can control your behavior and your behavior can certainly influence the other person, but God is going to be the one responsible for working in their heart over time.

Going back to the main topic like this, I think it's important to focus on being process oriented versus results oriented which I have discussed before.

- Prioritizing intentions and the process versus results
- Process oriented, not results oriented

In particular, being process oriented is an internal locus of control where you are most concerned about how you acted and you are not concerned about her reactions. Results should generally be an external locus of control that God is responsible with, though also understanding that how our obedience to Him can be have the effect of influence them toward the gospel, respect, submission, or any other Biblical quality.

This is why I say things like in Attitudes and marriage that I don't fear my wife and I've counted the cost of getting married. Even if she leaves me I would feel hurt, but it wouldn't impede me from doing what is right and serving God. If we fear any external circumstances and allow them to impede righteous behavior, we already enter a state where it's most likely the case that the process has gone bad and the result follows. Yeah, sometimes the process is right and the result doesn't come, but God calls us to be good and faithful servants even when we don't understand why the results aren't there.

True outcome independence

November 4, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of my favorite passages to meditate on in my walk as a Christian is when Paul and Silas were thrown into prison.

> Acts 16:16 Once when we were going to the place of prayer, we were met by a female slave who had a spirit by which she predicted the future. She earned a great deal of money for her owners by fortune-telling. 17 She followed Paul and the rest of us, shouting, “These men are servants of the Most High God, who are telling you the way to be saved.” 18 She kept this up for many days. Finally Paul became so annoyed that he turned around and said to the spirit, “In the name of Jesus Christ I command you to come out of her!” At that moment the spirit left her.
> 19 When her owners realized that their hope of making money was gone, they seized Paul and Silas and dragged them into the marketplace to face the authorities. 20 They brought them before the magistrates and said, “These men are Jews, and are throwing our city into an uproar 21 by advocating customs unlawful for us Romans to accept or practice.”
> 22 The crowd joined in the attack against Paul and Silas, and the magistrates ordered them to be stripped and beaten with rods. 23 After they had been severely flogged, they were thrown into prison, and the jailer was commanded to guard them carefully. 24 When he received these orders, he put them in the inner cell and fastened their feet in the stocks.
> 25 About midnight Paul and Silas were praying and singing hymns to God, and the other prisoners were listening to them. 26 Suddenly there was such a violent earthquake that the foundations of the prison were shaken. At once all the prison doors flew open, and everyone’s chains came loose. 27 The jailer woke up, and when he saw the prison doors open, he drew his sword and was about to kill himself because he thought the prisoners had escaped. 28 But Paul shouted, “Don’t harm yourself! We are all here!”
> 29 The jailer called for lights, rushed in and fell trembling before Paul and Silas. 30 He then brought them out and asked, “Sirs, what must I do to be saved?”
> 31 They replied, “Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you will be saved—you and your household.” 32 Then they spoke the word of the Lord to him and to all the others in his house. 33 At that hour of the night the jailer took them and washed their wounds; then immediately he and all his household were baptized. 34 The jailer brought them into his house and set a meal before them; he was filled with joy because he had come to believe in God—he and his whole household.
> 35 When it was daylight, the magistrates sent their officers to the jailer with the order: “Release those men.” 36 The jailer told Paul, “The magistrates have > ordered that you and Silas be released. Now you can leave. Go in peace."

> 37 But Paul said to the officers: "They beat us publicly without a trial, even though we are Roman citizens, and threw us into prison. And now do they want to get rid of us quietly? No! Let them come themselves and escort us out."
> 38 The officers reported this to the magistrates, and when they heard that Paul and Silas were Roman citizens, they were alarmed. 39 They came to appease them and escorted them from the prison, requesting them to leave the city. 40 After Paul and Silas came out of the prison, they went to Lydia's house, where they met with the brothers and sisters and encouraged them. Then they left.

Essentially, Paul and Silas turn what most people would think of as the most terrible thing to ever happen to them into many great opportunities.

1. Paul and Silas are walking the walk
2. They get falsely accused, stripped, beaten and thrown into prison
3. Yet they don't react the way most people would: they're praying and singing songs to God
4. This allows them the opportunity to witness not only to the jailer but the prisoners once God has an earthquake

This is applicable to so many life situations and not just with women. If we are walking with God there's no reason for us to be down and depressed about our situation even when the world thinks life has dealt us a terrible hand. Our trials, our suffering, and even our pruning (e.g. John 15) are things that we can rejoice and be glad in because the are helping to build our character and faith into something that will not be shaken by the winds and the rains and the storms of life.

I'm not saying I'm perfect with this, and it's all a process we can get better at over time. Women in particular present a unique challenge for many men in this regard, especially if their wife is contentious. But let us always remember that walking with the Spirit it all circumstances allows us to transcend those circumstances and hopefully positively influence those treating us poorly or harshly to be convicted and repent. It's the kindness of God that brings us to repentance and that we should emulate.

Christians' weird double standards around relationships, marriage, and sex

November 11, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been ruminating on this topic in my thoughts recently. I'm not talking about the double standards in regard to men and women either, although that is certainly prevalent throughout the Church and culture. Men are held to a higher standard of behavior, crapped on more by society, demonized for being male or masculine, and such.

What I am talking about is the advice given or not given when these topics are approached.

For example, if I were to ask a fellow Christian about how I can get closer to God and grow in my relationship with Him I would be given direct actionable advice on this:

- Read the Bible
- Pray
- Meditate on the Word
- Fasting
- Love and serve others in your daily life and through ministries at Church
- Utilize your spiritual gifts for the Kingdom
- Be ready to tell of the hope that you have in Christ (e.g. preach the gospel)
- Help those in need
- Be kind and generous to everyone

Lots of actionable ways to help a new or less mature Christian to grow stronger in their faith.

But when you broach the topic of relationships, marriage, or sex all you get is wishy-washy or totally ignorant or even totally wrong answers.

Why don't women like me?

- "Just be yourself,"
- "Everything in God's timing,"
- "Have you considered that you might have the gift of celibacy?"

This is the type of stuff that really annoys me off nowadays.

Yeah, these topics can be uncomfortable to talk about, but who is going to help Christian men if not other Christian men? You don't want them to be getting the most useful advice from the world which can easily lead them down the road of condemning their soul to hell.

Why are we so afraid of talking about the truth of men and women?

End rant.

Womens' main sin nature: Enviousness, discontent, and validation

November 16, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Have a little time, so I wanted to comment on this conclusion.

> I am quickly coming to the conclusion that women of the modern feminist era are ego buoys. Ebb or flow, high tide or low, her ego will always bob to the surface. Everything women want and every decision they make revolves around whatever happens to stoke their ego in a given context.
> - Why do women want a tall hawt guy? Ego rush.
> - Why do women want a man with power, status, athleticism, looks, and money? Ego dominance.
> - Why do women want some men but not others? Because those men stroke their ego.
> - Why do women buy into the lies of feminism? Having a career, education, financial independence, P-power, sexual liberation, and so on, appeals to their Ego.
> - Why do women want to ride the carousel? Solipsistic Ego trip, one after the other.
> - Why do women refuse sex with otherwise hawt guys? Ego is not being affirmed.
> - Why would a woman abstain from sex? When it's a distraction from Ego primacy.
> - Why do women resort to contentiousness, gaslighting, hamsterbating, $h!t tests, etc.? Ego expression and preservation.
> - Why do women monkey branch? Choice driven Ego.
> - Why do women want to get married? Status and security driven Ego.
> - Why do women settle for Beta Bob? More Ego from getting married than not.
> - Why do women want children? To capitalize on having a family as an Ego investment.
> - Why do women NOT want children? Children mirror adult behavior which is felt as mocking her ego, and thereby interferes with her Ego dominance.
> - Why do women want to control the man in their life? Pride driven Ego with a hefty load of distrust.
> - Why is the word "submission" profane to women? It requires them to swallow their egotistical pride.

While this is true, if we dig deeper it goes back to women's original sin in Genesis 3:

> Genesis 3:1 Now the serpent was more crafty than any of the wild animals the Lord God had made. He said to the woman, “Did God really say, ‘You must not eat from any tree in the garden’?” 2 The woman said to the serpent, “We may eat fruit from the trees in the garden, 3 but God did say, ‘You must not eat fruit from the tree that is in the middle of the garden, and you must not touch it, or you will die.’” 4 “You will not certainly die,” the serpent said to the woman. 5 “For God knows that when you eat from it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil.” 6 When the woman saw that the fruit of the tree was good for food and pleasing to the eye, and also desirable for gaining wisdom, she took some and ate it. She also gave some to her husband, who was with her, and he ate it. 7 Then the eyes of both of them were opened, and they realized they were naked; so they sewed fig leaves together and made coverings for themselves.

The temptation of Eve at it’s core root is enviousness (of God) and discontent with how she is. She is not content or satisfied with being a woman; she desires to be like God.

Feminism, in particular, is rooted in enviousness of men and discontent with her own womanhood. Career, money, education, independence, etc. This is why feminists hate women who love their husbands, families, and staying at home with the kids. They either hate what they gave up or hate what they couldn’t have. They become bitter old cat women.

The third point to is validation. The serpent validated Eve’s own desire to eat the fruit making the temptation more prominent — the temptation was already there as she had been thinking about it before. Likewise, women obtain validation from men, and Adam eating the fruit verified it for her — “She also gave some to her husband, who was with her, and he ate it.” God emphasizes this in His punishment for Adam.

> Genesis 3:17 To Adam he said, “Because you listened to your wife and ate fruit from the tree about which I commanded you, ‘You must not eat from it,’

Social media in particular is the holy grail (in a bad way) for women due to encouraging enviousness, discontent, and validation farming in women. Facebook knew Instagram was destructive for young girls and covered it up. Endless comparisons about the curated only-good stories that most women post or posts about insert-questionable-behavior-here and getting the ‘you-go-grrrl’ comments to validate doing it.

These seem to be the things that women struggle with the most given their sin nature, and focusing on striving for contentment in Christ seems to be the key. However, when is the last time you heard a sermon on contentment, especially one directed at women? I can recall a one or two on contentment. None specifically at women using examples for women.

The 4 interactive pathways of relationships

November 24, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've gone over these 4 before in multiple marriage posts, but never had a post devoted to them solely. They don't just apply to marriage but all relationships as well.

- You're responsible for yourself.
- You're responsible for how you influence others (including wives).
- Others (including wives) are responsible for themselves
- Others (including wives) are responsible for how they influence you

The first is quite obvious and what is addressed mostly on this blog and in the Christian manosphere/manosphere proper. The second is generally folded into it without much distinctions. Technically, things like social charisma, game, and other social interaction techniques tend to fall into the second on being responsible for how you influence others, but also in a negative way in terms of the moral depravity that they aim toward (e.g. fornication).

In general, we can think of the first two as two different subsets of the same thing:

> Matthew 22:37 Jesus replied: "'Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your mind. 38 This is the first and greatest commandment. 39 And the second is like it: 'Love your neighbor as yourself. 40 All the Law and the Prophets hang on these two commandments."

> John 13:34 "A new command I give you: Love one another. As I have loved you, so you must love one another. 35 By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you love one another." – also repeated in John 15

Being responsible for yourself means that we are responsible to love God and love others. Jesus qualifies this by saying the standard should not be "love your neighbor as yourself" but now the standard is Jesus himself "love one another as I have loved you."

The first is making things right with Jesus and developing the necessary character to love God, but then we must apply this outward to influence others in a godly manner. In particular, with wives the way we love God and are responsible to God as the role of husband is to influence your wife toward sanctification.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless.

The key point that I'm making obviously is that we only have control over the first two. Control over ourselves and how we can influence others. The Christian walk is ultimately about our responsibility to God and sanctification process to become like Jesus, and then using our changed lives to influence those around us toward Christ.

We shouldn’t worry about things we can’t change (others’ responsibility and actions) when we are first getting started, but as we start to influence them toward Christ — and especially if they are Christians — they can start to follow our example as we follow Christ. Paul demonstrates this as a leader in the early Church and shows them the way.

> 1 Corinthians 11:1 Follow my example, as I follow the example of Christ.

So too can we also do that with any relationship in our lives, and especially the ones with our wives where we are to lead them rightly.

Intuitive heuristics revisited: Be THE man

November 26, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To summarize from the previous post.

> - Don't be a man… in your relationship
> - Don't be the man… in your relationship.
> - Be THE man… in your relationship.

> The punctuation and emphasis matters. It matters a lot. In fact, I bet most of my readers can implicitly understand what the above statement means without even looking at the explanations.
> Let me explain anyway.
> 1. If you're just "a" man in your relationship, there's no ownership of the relationship. You're setting yourself adrift in the relationship. There's no purpose. This, unfortunately, is one of the many factors of why women are serially monogamous (e.g. relationship hoppers). They try to trade up because if there is only "a" man then he is simply a temporary placeholder.
> 2. If you're trying to be the "man" in the relationship, you're asking for permission from her to be the "man." You don't need permission to be the "man" in the relationship because you are given that position from God. See: Eph 5, Col 3, 1 Cor 11, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3.
> 3. If you know you are THE man, then you know you are the chosen one for the job. There's confidence, swagger, and ambition. You can take on the world with her by your side. You are the rock and leader of the relationship. You are respected. She is submissive to you. If she steps out of line then you gently call her out on it.
> Women don't want "a" man. Nor do women want the "man." Women want THE man.

Donal gave another good analogy in the comments. This is a frame mindset which flows to the rest of the relationship. Emphasis matters.

> STAR WARS spoiler warning
> You can see this same feature- the importance of emphasis- in The Empire Strikes Back.
> When Darth Vader reveals to Luke Skywalker that he is Luke's father, he doesn't say it like this:
> "I am your FATHER."
> Or like this:

> "I AM your father."
>
> Rather, it is done like this:
> "I am your father."
>
> The emphasis is on him, on Vader, on the metal monstrosity that Luke's father had become. This kept the frame solely on Vader, and gave him the power position in that dialogue.
> When you are THE man, then the frame of the relationship is centered on you. You have the power. And as I've argued before, when you have the power, women will be drawn to you like moths to the flame.

There's a another important one that can be added to this.

- Don't BE the man… in your relationship. This is the faux masculinity where it's forced, and it feels like false machismo. You don't have to BE the man and force stuff or try to impress women. It should come from your character and who you are.

To summarize the new ones:

- Don't BE the man… in your relationship — you don't need to have false bravado or try to impress.
- Don't be A man… in your relationship — there is no ownership. Take ownership.
- Don't be the MAN… in your relationship — no need to ask for her permission to lead
- Be THE man… in your relationship — it comes from who God made you to be in the role

I also think there are probably some others, but due to the format I'm kinda blanking out identifying them for now.

In general, like with salvation and peace and joy with God, being comfortable with being THE man and all that it entails (both the role and responsibility) there is also peace and joy and satisfaction with that in marriage. If you don't have that, it's worth exploring and trying to identify why that is the case and possibly rooting out any insecurities.

The Salvation Army has fallen to the woke army

Source

> The Salvation Army — a massively popular Christian charity known for raising money through red collection boxes around the holidays — is now pushing "anti-racist" and critical race theory ideology onto donors.
> This year, in addition to requesting monetary contribution towards the global mission, the organization is calling on donors to reckon with their deep-seated attitudes of racism, the National Review reports.
> In a guidebook titled, "Let's Talk About Racism," the charity asks donors to consider the ways in which they have "consciously or unconsciously" supported prejudicial systems that inflict harm on racial minorities, adding that it "acknowledges with regret, that Salvationists have sometimes shared in the sins of racism and conformed to economic, organizational and social pressures that perpetuate racism."
> Elsewhere in the document, the charity calls on white donors to "lament, repent and apologize for biases or racist ideologies held and actions committed."
> Going forward, the Salvation Army says it hopes white donors will recognize their own contributions to racism and adopt "a posture of … anti-racism," an ideological practice made popular by progressive author Ibram X. Kendi.
> "In the absence of making anti-racist choices, we (un) consciously uphold aspects of White supremacy, White-dominant culture, and unequal institutions and society," the document states.

Ouch. But it gets worse.

> The charity reiterates its viewpoints in another document created by the Salvation Army's International Social Justice Commission, called the "Study Guide on Racism."
> In that document, the Salvation Army plainly claims that racism is obvious and evident in nearly all facets of western society, and argues, "We must stop denying the existence of individual and systemic/institutional racism. They exist, and are still at work to keep White Americans in power."
> White people are in fact guilty of "unconscious bias" and "unwittingly perpetuate racial division" even when they don't demonstrate overtly racist behavior.
> "For instance, devout Christians who naively use racial epithets or a well-intentioned Sunday School curriculum that only uses white photography and imagery," the organization writes.
> In the guide, the Salvation Army makes use of a litany of woke terms to articulate > their message, including “anti-racist,” “colonizer,” “domestic terrorism,” “fascism,” “institutional racism,” “microaggressions,” “systemic racism,” and “whiteness.”

Full uptake of woke-ism.

> The organization’s support for progressive “anti-racist” teaching has drawn the ire from some of its conservative donors, according to Newsweek.
> One of those former donors is Christian apologist and radio talk show host Greg Koukl, who reportedly called out the charity’s progressive drift in a Facebook post earlier this month.
> “In my estimation, CRT is a Trojan horse taking in well-intentioned Christian enterprises that — because they care about justice and oppose oppression — naively promote the most serious threat to biblical Christianity I have seen in 50 years,” the Stand to Reason founder stated in the post.
> The Daily Signal, too, slammed the organization last month for imposing “radical wokeness” among Christians.
> In response to questions from Newsweek, however, a spokesperson for the Salvation Army denied that its position on addressing racism has changed.
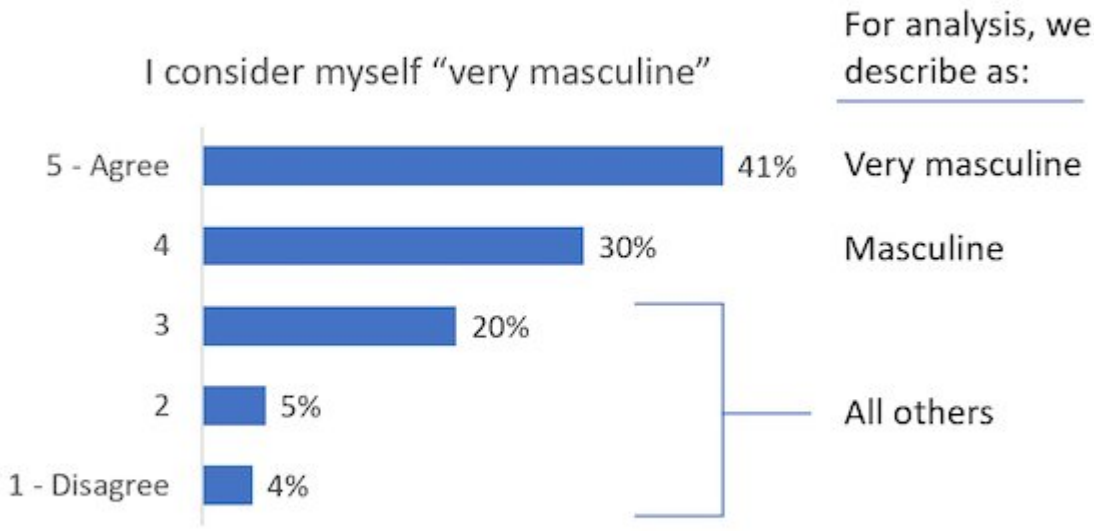
> “Our beliefs have always been rooted in scripture, and they still are. That includes our complete rejection of racism, which is in stark contrast to the biblical principle that we’re all created in the image of God. We believe that, as God loves us all, so we should all love one another,” the spokesperson said.

The old “agree with the culture” stance because that’s what “Jesus did.” More like falling away from sound doctrine to what sounds good to itching ears.

I honestly cannot recall one single thing that Jesus agreed with the culture on. He was always call out the religious leaders and the cultural understandings (“you have heard it said…” in his sermons) to root out the destructive tendencies where people thought they were honoring God but their hearts were far from Him. Same with all of the epistles from the various apostles. Always calling out what was wrong in the culture and instead how to flee from sin and honor God.

This to me is similar to the trap that many Christians who encounter the manosphere fall into. They try to assimilate what they know into some type of “Red Pill Christianity” instead of going back to the root of all things (God’s creation) and understand why some particular observations ring true from how God created human nature.



The healthy effects of masculinity

December 9, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

IFStudies recently had another blog that I thought was worth covering.

They started with some of the stats on men like most of the violence, prisoners, suicides, and also APA's decrying of traditional masculinity ("[T]raditional masculinity—marked by stoicism, competitiveness, dominance and aggression—is, on the whole, harmful. Men socialized in this way are less likely to engage in healthy behaviors."). Yet wanted to go into the positive effects to counterbalance that.

This I found quite interesting because if you take men as a whole you would not expect this. There is definitely not a lot of masculine behavior out there nowadays, so the fact that many men consider themselves more than average masculine (30+41 = 71%) is shocking to me. I think some of this predicated on men interacting in more masculine behavior with other men, but definitely not with women. Men today are fairly timid overall it seems.

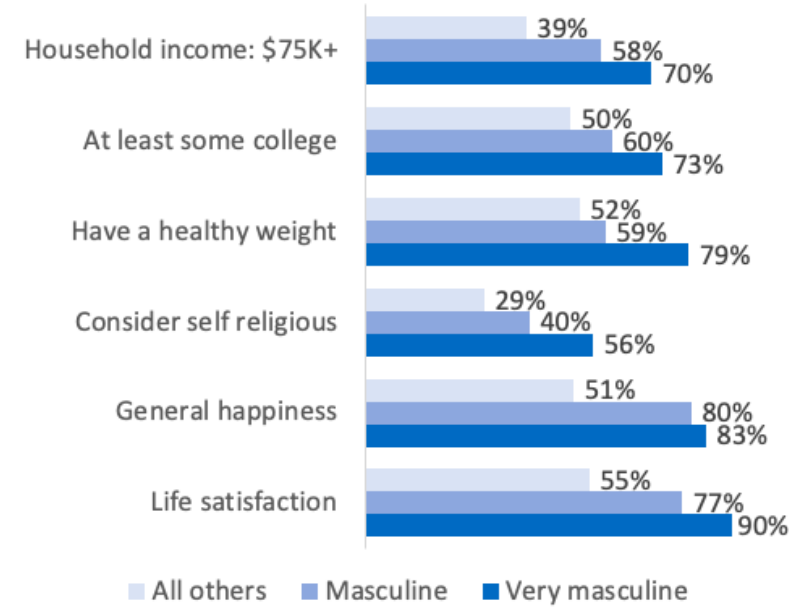
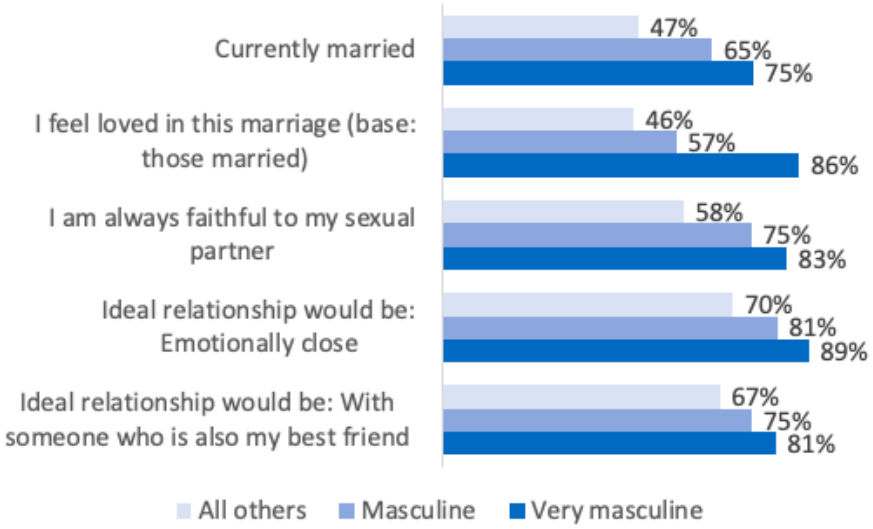
Reported a 4 or 5 on a 5-point scale
Source: US Adult Sexual Behaviors and Attitudes, March 2021 (n=753 males)



The second chart looks over traditionally masculine dispositions. Not sure how much I would agree with some of these, especially since the response rate was so low with the first three. This list seems to be more accurate personally.

Generally, confidence, independence, strength, and such things tend to probably fit the criteria better and would have gotten a better response rate.



Now for the charts describing the general positive effects of being “more masculine” or at least self perceived more masculine at least.

Reported a 4 or 5 on a 5-point scale, except income and education

Reported a 4 or 5 on a 5-point scale

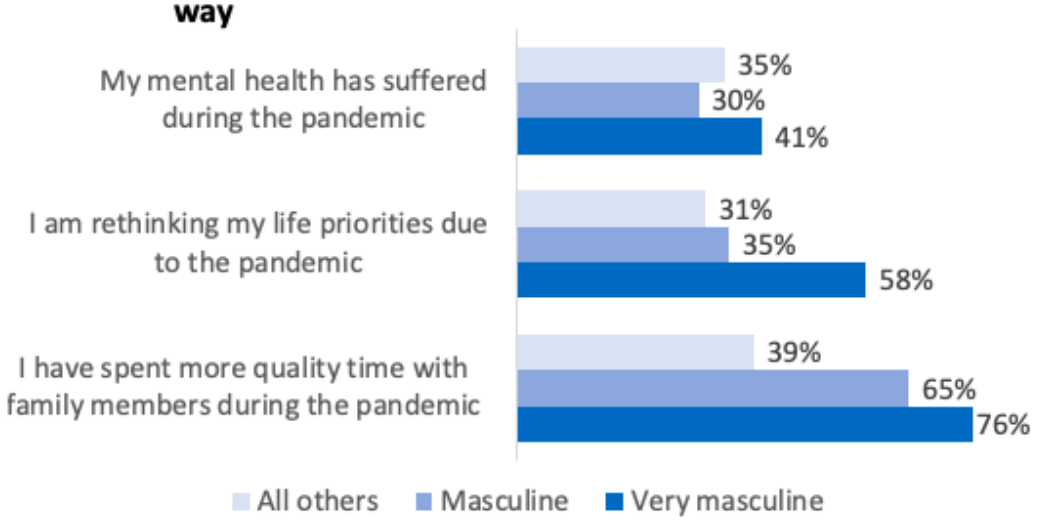
Reported a 4 or 5 on a 5-point scale
Source: US Adult Sexual Behaviors and Attitudes, March 2021 (n=753 males)

Figure 6: High masculinity coincides with willingness to take risk, a confidence in self control, and lower depression

Reported a 4 or 5 on a 5-point scale
Source: US Adult Sexual Behaviors and Attitudes, March 2021 (n=753 males)



All of these are pretty standard to me. Generally speaking, God created men to be masculine and women to be feminine. So it stands to reason that men being self perceived as masculine and acting in a masculine manner causes them to be more fulfilled than those who try to buck their Creator.

One of the things biggest pronounced effects is in figure 4 with all of the stats on marriage, especially the “I feel loved in this marriage.”: Very masculine was 86%, masculine 57%, and all others were 46%.

One of the main ways men feel “loved” in marriage is when their wives regularly have sex with them, so this is indicative of what is similar in the “choreplay” stats that men who do the traditionally masculine chores while women do the feminine have more sex. Men who act as men, especially in accordance with their role and responsibilities in marriage (e.g masculine and husband roles and responsibilities) tend to have wives that respond in the right manner. Not always, but for most at least.

Finally, this chart was a bit interesting to say the least.

Figure 7: More-masculine males experienced more mental health challenges in the pandemic, but handled them in a healthier way

Reported a 4 or 5 on a 5-point scale
Source: US Adult Sexual Behaviors and Attitudes, March 2021 (n=753 males)

The middle question seems pretty standard as you’d expect men to rethink things when things go crazy. However, the last one in particular is striking from the perspective of masculine to all others. The masculine tend to take it upon themselves to connect with loved ones more than the non-masculine. Perhaps that includes those who may be frightened into isolating themselves because of the government?

In any case, it’s more important now than ever for men to act masculine, and the fact that it does help substantially with both male friendships and female relationships is pretty stark.

Fordham U. prof fired after mixing up two black students in class

December 12, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This was ironically hilarious.

> A Fordham University professor was fired after mixing up the names of two black students in class, according to a report.
> Hours after what he called an “innocent mistake,” lecturer Christopher Trogan, 46, sent a rambling, nine-page email to students in his Composition II classes explaining the faux pas — and defending, without being asked, his “entire life” of working on “issues of justice, equality, and inclusion,” the campus newspaper reported.
> “The offended student assumed my mistake was because I confused that student with another Black student,” Trogan wrote, according to a Nov. 29 article in the Fordham Observer. “I have done my best to validate and reassure the offended student that I made a simple, human, error. It has nothing to do with race.”
> He blamed the mistake on his “confused brain” when the two students arrived to class late on Sept. 24, while he was reading a classmate’s work.
> The email was “a little excessive,” one of the two black students, freshman Chantal Sims, told the Observer. “We were not actually that upset about him mixing up our names. It was more so the random things he would throw into the response.”
> In the email, he urged any students upset by the incident to complain to the school. “Depending on your response to the officials above, I may — or may not — be your professor in class next week. It’s all up to you,” he wrote.
> Sims told the paper Trogan’s email stressed “everything he has done for minorities.”
> He was fired Oct. 29, the paper reported.

The headlines for this story are pretty similar, so you’d think it’d be some professor getting canned for overly woke students. But it’s actually the opposite: professor makes a common simple error and then gets fired for an overly woke overreaction.

To pull this back to men and women, being overly concerned about people’s reactions to you is living in their frame. Live your life on mission and admit errors when you make them, but blowing things out of proportion can be a fatal error in relationships. Would not be surprised if this guy was single or had an ex-wife. The excessive people pleasing responses are repulsive to both men and women, and ironically make things way worse than they actually are.

Trust is earned and an expression of the character of godliness

December 20, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Good discussion in the comments on the issue of trusting women on Sigma's. My comment:

> I still think this topic is more nuanced than that which I covered here.
> The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest part 2 (2021-06-24)
> Namely, simply emoting or venting or complaining with no purpose is always going to negative. Emoting and expressing feelings in the context of problem solving or being victorious over a situation tend to be more helpful and can build trust. Also, attractive men have more leeway.
> The other fallacy is obviously that all that one experiences and all that is true does not always have to be said or expressed. This is a big discernment thing that both men and women need to understand not just within the context of male-female relationships.

In general, trusting women — and men for that matter as well — needs to be done on case my case basis and typically a higher degree of trust will result from continued expression of godliness character.

One of my favorite passages is the one in 2 Peter 1 which shows how the progressive qualities of the Christian walk can be developed sequentially in an escalating manner:

> 2 Peter 1:5 For this very reason, make every effort to add to your faith goodness; and to goodness, knowledge; 6 and to knowledge, self-control; and to self-control, perseverance; and to perseverance, godliness; 7 and to godliness, mutual affection; and to mutual affection, love. 8 For if you possess these qualities in increasing measure, they will keep you from being ineffective and unproductive in your knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9 But whoever does not have them is nearsighted and blind, forgetting that they have been cleansed from their past sins.

Godliness is a result of:

- After you come to faith, you now know what is good according to Jesus.
- To know what is good you must study the Bible on what Jesus and the Father are like (knowledge) as well as through prayer, fasting, and other spiritual disciplines.
- Now that you have the knowledge of what is good you must apply it with self control.
- Self control, especially in difficult times, results in perseverance. This is the Greek word hupomone which is also translated as "longsuffering" in some translations

- This perseverance leads to the character of godliness — being like God through good and the bad times.

Obviously, a wife who is respectful and submissive even when it is difficult is much easier to trust than one who is disrespectful and rebellious. But there are many different steps that it takes to get there. For instance,

1. A wife who is disrespectful and rebellious according to her own whims
2. A wife who knows what is right but can be disrespectful and rebellious when things get tough for her
3. A wife who knows what is right but has developed greater self control and perseverance but sometimes slips up when things are tough
4. A wife who knows what is right and it's rare that she's disrespectful and rebellious

There can be many in between with these circumstances like how she responds to teaching, correction, or rebuke for good or for evil. You could probably make another whole list or expand this one to 8-9 bullet points with these.

However, the point is that if you and your wife are a Christian and actively wanting to obey God and His Biblical roles and responsibilities, the sanctification process will be gradual over time in most cases and it is a process. This process is cultivated step by step and large jumps though they can happen tend to be unlikely since unlearning ingrained sinfulness is difficult.

I can trust my wife more than most because I built the foundation very early in dating and have continued it for a long time. I recently had an conversation over on reddit with someone who asked the question: "What do you do when wife doesn't obey your commands." This was my response.

> This is something that is highly contextual.
> My wife rarely disobeys and when she does I just talk with her about it and nearly 100% of the time she apologizes and tries to make it right.
> However, to get to that point that was already a several year plus focus on the Scriptures and going over the roles and responsibilities of a husband and wife in marriage when dating and married, correction and teaching if/when she fell into sin, and things like these. I've also made it a point to act as a strong and effective leader with everything I put my hand to so that I am modeling what it means to be Jesus:Church::husbands:wives. Obviously, this makes it easier for her to submit.
> It was not some abrupt thing where I just suddenly started telling her to obey me or anything like that.
> Doing this will not work for the majority of husbands because they haven't built up the foundation that I did in the past. That's why the advice on /r/RPChristians and /r/askRPC usually looks like:

> - Focus on being excellent in all you do: lift, dress well, confident, masculine leadership, etc as becoming more attractive is going to help make it easier for her to want to submit and obey.
> - Pray, read the Bible with her, etc and start to get into teaching and discipling her as in the long run it will pay dividends if she's serious about her faith (but for now her feelings are making her want to ignore the part about husbands and wives).
> - Focus on your own role and responsibility and what you can change which is yourself
> - Lead, lead, lead but don't worry about if she disobeys or not for now. Outcome independence/don't get butt hurt, etc. You're on your mission for God and invite her along.
> Once you start to build the foundation and trust in the marriage, it's much easier and more effective to call her out in any sin which also includes rebellion and disobedience.

The goal if you're new to a relationship is to build the godly foundation and maintain it. This tends to be easier than trying to change an established relationship which is why we often do not recommend to try to escape the friend zone or go back to exes even if you are willing.

If you are in a long relationship, engagement, or marriage, the foundation can be rebuilt but it takes a lot of effort and influence over time. You need to focus on the things you can do:

- You have control over yourself
- You have control over how you influence others
- Others have control over themselves (you can substitute in wife with others)
- Others have control over how they influence others/you (you can substitute in wife with others)

The bolded you have control over, so those are the things you want to focus on changing in order to please God and not man (or wife). The influence you have on others can be godly or not which makes it easier for them to obey God, while the influence they have on you is either for godly or evil. It is very difficult when you are trying to act godly while they are influencing you negatively, but that is part of growing in maturity in Christ and being perfect like God (e.g. Matthew 5- love your enemies).

The more the foundation of trust is emphasized and built, the greater influence over time the more likely God can use that to grow the seeds planted in them to come to fruition toward sanctification. There are instances where godliness does drive the hard hearted away though and that should not be discounted, but it is still a witness God can use later even if they run or even divorce.

We don't walk this path because it is easy. It is hard. It's always hard to deny yourself and follow Jesus. Some aspects get easier over time as habits are built, but new weaknesses are exposed as we are further sanctified.

Practical advice to single Christian men establishing leadership and the right frame when starting a relationship

December 23, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Responding to this comment as I've encountered some young men I've met from Churches who have asked similar questions to me in real life about this too.

> Hi. I'm a young Christian man about to finish college and start my career. I used to be a clueless pedestalizer, but a painful dating experience led me to the red pill and Christian manosphere blogs about a year ago, and my life has changed as a result. Reading this stuff has helped me trust the Word of God, make sense of my experiences, and grow. That's my background, though I am leaving out a lot of detail.
> Now I have a question: how important is intellectual agreement on the topics of headship and submission if a prospective wife shows promising behavior? Or how–practically–do you broach the topic to find out what she believes?
> I am realizing that believing what the Bible plainly says about men and women puts you at odds with what 99% of Christians believe. I know one or two girls who are sweet and attractive, perhaps even naturally submissive personality-wise, who would probably go out with me if I initiated, but I have a hunch that they would parrot the typical mutual submission or complementarian sentiments if engaged intellectually on the matter of biblical marriage roles. With someone like this, is it ever a good strategy to date and just act like a leader without saying what you're doing and see what she does? Or is it best to go in guns blazing and get the hard topics out of the way early with the idea that the bad ones will filter themselves out? Should I not even waste my time unless I already know what a woman believes?
> Just looking for thoughts on some of these practical issues. I really appreciate all the discussion that happens here.

Good start that more young men are thinking about these questions. However, there is still a significant amount of thinking is embroiled in a lot of nice guy pedestalization thinking. In particular:

> but I have a hunch that they would parrot the typical mutual submission or complementarian sentiments if engaged intellectually on the matter of biblical marriage roles

Why shoot yourself in the foot before you even start? This is classic defeatist thinking whereby a man is literally making up things in his head about women he hasn't even talked to yet. You don't know her, her family, her background, or really anything about her. How can you know how she's going to act? Why assume anything?

Remember, if you start to implant any type of ideas or thinking in your head that can lead to fear over what might happen that is going to sabotage your ability to lead a potential wife.

> With someone like this, is it ever a good strategy to date and just act like a leader without saying what you're doing and see what she does? Or is it best to go in guns blazing and get the hard topics out of the way early with the idea that the bad ones will filter themselves out? Should I not even waste my time unless I already know what a woman believes?

This is precisely what you do. Take the example of Jesus and His disciples (e.g. Christ and the Church, which is the analogy we have for marriage in Ephesians 5) in all 4 gospels:

1. Jesus has started his ministry in Galilee preaching and teaching about the kingdom of God
2. While doing this, he invites various men to be His disciples to help Him (e.g. shades of Genesis 2 where the wife is created to be the man's helper). Fishermen, tax collectors, etc. "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."
3. He continues on His ministry which grows and has the disciples help him with miracles, instructs and teaches them, and then eventually has them go out and try during his ministry (e.g. Jesus sends out the 70).
4. Jesus continually sanctifies them by correcting and teaching them as necessary (e.g. Ephesians 5 – Christ loves the Church for the purpose of sanctification).
5. Jesus does ALL of this BEFORE engagement and marriage. The engagement of Jesus and His bride is generally defined as the body of Christ who have received the Holy Spirit (Eph 1) much like an engagement ring or dowry and the marriage of Jesus and His bride is at the end in Revelation 19.

> Ephesians 1:13 And you also were included in Christ when you heard the message of truth, the gospel of your salvation. When you believed, you were marked in him with a seal, the promised Holy Spirit, 14 who is a deposit guaranteeing our inheritance until the redemption of those who are God's possession—to the praise of his glory.
> Revelation 19:7 Let us rejoice and be glad and give him glory! For the wedding of the Lamb has come, and his bride has made herself ready. 8 Fine linen, bright and clean, was given her to wear." (Fine linen stands for the righteous acts of God's holy people.) 9 Then the angel said to me, "Write this: Blessed are those who are invited to the wedding supper of the Lamb!" And he added, "These are the true words of God."

As an aside, the discipleship model of Jesus generally follows the model of (1) tell them what, (2) show them how, (3) let them try, (4) send them out, (5) have them do the same.

So to go back to the original question:

- Ideally, you should know what your mission for God is and be walking it out already. It's fine if you don't, but this has a big role to play as she is going to be your helper so you need to have a role for her to play
- Yes, act as a leader and see how she responds
- You don't have to go into any deeper topics while dating. Usually only once you establish a relationship (e.g. going steady) that is generally a better time to explore deeper topics. I don't think dating needs to last anymore than a month or two at most. You should be able to get a good feel of her character and personality in a month or two to see if you want to continue
- As a potential husband, you should start emulating the role of a husband prior to marriage. Why? Not only did Jesus do it but it's a good idea to get in the habit of building the foundation of the husbandly roles and responsibility even if you don't have the actual position. For instance, if you start off the relationship with regular Bible study, prayer, and such it's easier to maintain then to try to introduce that later. Additionally, you're already in the habit of 'washing your wife with the water of the Word' (per Ephesians 5), so it's much easier to bring things up from a teaching and correctional standpoint.

In my previous post, I talked about how Trust is earned and an expression of the character of godliness. In particular, there was a section about generally how sanctification is gradual:

> Obviously, a wife who is respectful and submissive even when it is difficult is much easier to trust than one who is disrespectful and rebellious. But there are many different steps that it takes to get there. For instance,
> 1. A wife who is disrespectful and rebellious according to her own whims
> 2. A wife who knows what is right but can be disrespectful and rebellious when things get tough for her
> 3. A wife who knows what is right but has developed greater self control and perseverance but sometimes slips up when things are tough
> 4. A wife who knows what is right and it's rare that she's disrespectful and rebellious
> There can be many in between with these circumstances like how she responds to teaching, correction, or rebuke for good or for evil. You could probably make another whole list or expand this one to 8-9 bullet points with these.
> However, the point is that if you and your wife are a Christian and actively wanting to obey God and His Biblical roles and responsibilities, the sanctification process will be gradual over time in most cases and it is a process. This process is cultivated step by step and large jumps though they can happen tend to be unlikely since unlearning ingrained sinfulness is difficult.

Most women start around a 1 or 2. My wife probably started around a 2 but has made it to 4 over the course of our relationship and marriage. RPA said his wife has made it to about a 3 over the past 2 yeas.

The key, however, is not where she starts but if she has a strong desire to obey God. This is what we've been talking about in terms of the T in FAST on RPC/askRPC — faithful, available, saved, teachable. Is she teachable in that she wants to grow in sanctification (and yes, the journey can be tough, but if she likes you it tends to be easier). If she's teachable she will grow in this as long as you are teaching her what it means to be respectful and submissive to you.

That's one of the key points most men miss. You need to point out to her if she's disrespectful or rebellious. Some women will continue to be as such and if she does that then you can drop her. But if she amends her ways because she wants to honor God — even if it happens with kicking, crying, and screaming — that's a good sign. You can work with that. Obviously, it should improve over time where she gets less and less dramatic or emotional over it.

I've covered some more actionable steps to finding a wife here as well and in the book.

Analysis of alpha widowhood

December 27, 2021 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ran across this article a while back which was of David Bowie and his wife.

> Iman Says She'll Never Remarry After David Bowie's Death: 'He's Not My Late Husband, He's My Husband'
> And she has no thoughts of ever marrying again. When her daughter, Alexandria "Lexi" Jones, now 21, asked her about it, Iman recalls, "I said 'No, I will not.' I still feel married. Someone a few years ago referred to David as my late husband and I said 'No, he's not my late husband. He's my husband.'"
> "I definitely feel his presence, especially when I look out over the glorious sunsets at our home because David loves sunsets," she says. "So in that way he is ever present."
> "Through my memory, my love lives."

Pretty much the definition of alpha widowhood that the 'sphere uses. Even in death she's still married to him and can't forget about him that no other man can compare.

> "I knew him as the man, David Jones, his real name," Iman, the cosmetics pioneer and CARE global advocate, says. "And not the rock star."
> Theirs was always a very private love story but now, over five years after his death from cancer in 2016, she has created her first fragrance, Love Memoir, exclusively available at HSN and hsn.com, a tribute to their "epic romance."
> The idea came to her while living at their country house nestled in the mountains in upstate New York. In the first few years after his death, it had been painful to spend much time there. "I just got very sad and would rush back to the city," she says. "I thought I had processed [the loss] but I had not."
> There, in lockdown, she found a quiet solace amidst his favorite paintings, his ever present books, and the fiery sunsets they both loved. She also found the inspiration for the fragrance which weaves together woodsy vetiver (Tom Ford's Grey Vetiver was Bowie's favorite) and bergamot from Tuscany, where they had married. The result, she says, is "a monument to eternal love."
> It was a love story set in motion in 1990 after Iman moved briefly to L.A. "I had never intended to move there," she recalls in this week's PEOPLE. "It's not one of my favorite places. It's so vast but I personally believe now that was my destiny. My destiny was calling me to get there so I could meet David."

Everything about him is romanticized in the best way possible. She knows only parts of him that everyone else never knew. She needs to remember him by creating things about him, and it was her destiny to meet him.

> They met on a blind date set up by a mutual friend in Los Angeles. He was the > rock and roll genius and quicksilver creator of such hits as Ziggy Stardust and Space Oddity among a galaxy of others. She was the supermodel from Somalia, who spoke five languages and whose beauty and intelligence had enchanted the world of fashion and beyond.

> "David said it was love at first sight," Iman, 66, tells PEOPLE. "It took me a few months but I got there."
> After their first date, she recalls how she flew to Paris to walk the runway for her friend, Thierry Mugler. When she arrived at her hotel room, it was filled with flowers. Gardenias. And when she returned to L.A., he was there to meet her at the airport. "And that's how it started," she says. "He properly wooed me."
> Yes, she was drawn to the musician for his kindness. "Early on, we were walking down the street and my shoelace came undone and he got on his knees to tie it for me and I thought he's the one."
> But there was also their off the charts chemistry. "David was beyond handsome," she says. "He oozed charisma."

In reality, the chemistry wasn't actually there from the start (according to her, at least). Yes, Bowie was handsome, rich, famous and whatever but Iman didn't have the hots for him right off. It's only when he went the extra distance that she started liking him more. This would make sense since as a supermodel she would have been used to meeting attractive men.

However, this does follow the common analogy I use: an attractive man giving a woman flowers is romantic, but an unattractive man giving a woman flowers is a creep. You can contextualize all of the attention, flowers, gifts, compliments, or whatever according to that. This applies to any stage of a relationship too — single, dating, bf/gf, engaged and even in marriage.

There's some other details in the article about how Bowie was his own man but was a strong champion for her which obviously play into the common narratives.

I also think that this tends to more accurately portray real life than the exaggerating tropes that we see in the 'sphere both ways. We can see that there was attraction, but it doesn't necessarily develop into a romance per se unless there is facilitating interactions between the man and the woman with back and forth usually. Attraction does not necessarily mean it can be converted into a relationship and that relationship can be maintained.

There are also cases where attraction can develop over time, more so from a woman's perspective than a man though since men are primarily physical attraction based. However, I think in most of these cases the man was likely somewhere on a scale of semi-attractive already unless there are some other qualifying circumstances such as those mentioned in the friend zone where there is a total shift in her perception of the man.

Does marriage take a lot of work?

January 1, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This was a comment in the previous post on Analysis of alpha widowhood, but I thought it deserved it's own analysis: "Marriage takes a lot of work"

Whenever I hear this phrase it seems like most people are referring to different things depending on the particular dynamics of their marriage.

The general "christo-feminist" and feminist take on "marriage takes a lot of work" whenever both the husband and/or the wife say it is that:

1. The husband is putting up with a the wife being disrespectful and unsubmissive and spraying her emotions everywhere that he has to deal with.
2. Meanwhile, it's possible that the man she is with is lazy but usually he's been cowed and/or emasculated constantly
3. The wife is unhappy because she's always running over him and he's not standing up for himself.
4. This inverted role pattern puts the husband and wife at odds and makes them both unhappy so the illusion of work is there because they're spending so much energy being unhappy and fighting about the situation.

At the heart of this especially when Christians say it they almost always seem to be following the pattern of the world rather than that of God. In the vast majority of cases I've seen when the husbands start explaining it almost always is a case of inverted roles whether consciously or unconsciously. The husband and wife are not following the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities and neither spouse is accountable for themselves to God for it much less the other reminding them of the proper role (perhaps cause they are somewhat opposed to headship-submission and love-respectful structure as well).

In regard to the other side of the coin where a marriage is in proper Biblical marital roles and responsibilities, it usually may be some work at first but after that it's almost no work and easy coasting as long as you keep following the good habits you have built.

For instance, it does take some "work" in that my wife and I needed to learn God's Biblical marital roles and responsibilities in depth. Then we needed to implement those habits into our own life. But now marriage/life is relatively easy because my wife and I are on the same page and walking in what God wants for us.

Personally, I found the Christian manosphere around 2011 or 2012 and started studying them in depth and applying them to my own life in 2013. That was at least a couple years before I met my wife, and then it's been many years of applying them together starting with dating to relationship to engagement and finally to marriage. These are the foundational pieces I talked about in Practical advice to single Christian men establishing leadership and the right frame when starting a relationship.

Some Christians do this naturally — usually raised by a strong father and/or male mentor who puts emphasis on discipling them and teaching them the Bible and manhood — but it does take work for most other Christians. The culture and sadly even the Church are such that they lean toward inversion of roles, so unlearning that type of behavior and making new habits is going to take a bunch of work for most men including myself.

What constitutes “alpha”

January 3, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A bit of discussion about alpha in analysis of alpha widowhood made me want to revisit this topic.

This has been a topic with a large amount of misinformation in both the secular and Christian manosphere. There’s a lot of black and white thinking, and that leads to a lot of loss of hope and despair in some as well as ineffective or excessive macho posturing in others.

Generally, the most basic definition of “alpha” I think most can agree on is the embodiment of certain traits in a man that women are attracted to. This would be the common lists that we have discussed before like PSALMs and masculinity.

- P – Power
- S – Status
- A – Athleticism
- L – Looks
- M – Money
- Masculinity – Traits traditionally viewed as masculine in Western society include strength, courage, independence, leadership, and assertiveness.[9][10][11][12]. (note: to be honest, it’s not just the West that women like these).

I’ve covered why PSALMs are attractive in A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage Part 3. Masculinity is also generally a proxy for headship/leadership (Ephesians 5). To be a leader, one must be:

- Independent (e.g. Genesis 2- a man shall leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife),
- Assertiveness to lead and make decisions (e.g. Jesus with his ministry and the disciples following)
- Courage to face difficulties (e.g. Jesus going against the religious leaders and standing up for what is right and sacrificing Himself for us),
- Strong (e.g. 1 Cor 16:13 Be on the alert, stand firm in the faith, act like men, be strong. and 1 Kings 2:1 When the time drew near for David to die, he gave a charge to Solomon his son. 2 “I am about to go the way of all the earth,” he said. “So be strong, act like a man, 3 and observe what the Lord your God requires: Walk in obedience to him, and keep his decrees and commands, his laws and regulations, as written in the Law of Moses.)

So we know that generally men who embody such traits tend to be more attractive and thus “more alpha” according to some. This also applies not just to the male-female hierarchy but also to male-male hierarchies. Usually the “alpha male of the group” so to speak is usually the leader of men. You usually see the team captain in professional sports have traits like leadership, charisma, strong influence and such over their teammates that they are able to lead them well in the sport.

Usually men who embody traits where they are leaders of men are also attractive with women (e.g. quarterback for football, team captains, businessmen, etc.) but it's not always the case. Some of these men buy into popular culture romance garbage and while they are usually able to end up attracting women due to their high PSALMs and masculinity they eventually end up with multi-broken relationships and divorces. Hollywood and pro sports divorce is a good example of that. You can have all the attractive traits in the world, but if you're trying to be the chivalrous knight in shining armor to your "queen," the queen will eventually replace you for another knight they can play with or a king.

Most people are too black and white on alpha/attraction. In general, there are many difference ways you can become a particular woman's desired man that she is attracted to.

- I know a few guys who are overweight and not lookers themselves but have a commanding presence in niche areas in D&D and such and their wives adore them. Groupies exist.
- Throw a 6-7 guy in a Church where most of the men are 3-5s and you can be the relative alpha there and get much more attention from women. Same with small town type of atmospheres if you live there.
- There are some pretty ugly dudes in pro sports but they're famous and rich enough to make up for it.
- Just as not every man is looking for the most beautiful woman he has ever seen to marry, not every woman is looking for the most attractive man they can to marry. Yes, some to a lot of attraction is important for most. However, there are more than enough ways for men to grow in PSALM traits, masculinity, and other things that are attractive if you want to increase your chances of finding a woman who is into you.

Generally, as long as she is into you and wants you then you're in a good spot.

Like I've said before, most of my friends call my wife a 7-9 but me a 5-6. I'm shorter than average and underweight according to most. But my wife wanted me because I was unlike any man she met when I started talking and dating her as I've detailed the ways on this blog that I prepared for to lead the relationship to obey God. Obviously, she was attracted to me physically at least some, but I'm objectively not a looker to most. I'm handsome according to her but I think average to her sisters, so personality helps shape her attraction some.

In general, I think most men would do well to stop worrying about being absolute cream of the crop. Obviously, if one is below average or average and wants to marry he would do well to take into account that improving attraction through spiritual, physical, mental, emotional, and such will definitely help raise the chances. But too narrow a definition of what is needed to be successful with women is for the most part probably black pill.

Subverting the Scriptures to undermine husbands in marriage

January 7, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a common tactic of “Christian feminists” of which many fall prey to or are swept up in the false doctrine like Gregoire, Kellers, and many of the other common Christian marriage books.

The topic of this passage is a bit irrelevant, but if you want to know basically the wife went vegan and the husband told her it’s not Biblical and now she’s refusing to have sex unless he goes vegan too.

See if you can spot the errors before reading on to my comments and analysis.

> First and foremost, think about what it means to love her in this moment, because when we are called to be like Christ that includes in how he loved his people; that was unconditional love, so even through its unbiblical and goes against your belief, you make it clear you can’t support this lifestyle, that would be hypocritical, but on the other hand it’s not your place to change her, it’s not our job to change people, thats God’s job, and have to trust that he will do what he does best; he cares for us. What she is doing is very clearly wrong, she should not be forcing you to go against your beliefs just like she doesn’t want you to force your beliefs on her. She is in the wrong in this scenario, but that doesn’t make it ok to retaliate, thats not what love is. Remember the verse that says all the wonderful things about love, that is what marriage is supposed to be. I agree with whoever said to bring the pastor into the situation, thats a good third party to mediate, because clearly she isn’t willing to listen to you. But remember she is still deserving of love and respect, this certainly doesn’t warrant a divorce. Marriage is a commitment, we make it work no matter what until what I believe is absolutely rock bottom. God’s heart reflects this. Remember to stay in the word, pray, and look at how God’s heart is reflected in the teachings of the Bible. God tames care of his people, he will certainly take care of you and your wife, this is your chance to be connected with God and learn more about him all the while growing your marriage and in the end becoming more intimate with your wife.

The main errors in this passage are:

- Misuse of God’s/Jesus unconditional love from Ephesians 5. Common tactic of the “Christian feminists”
- “It’s not your place to change her.” Also, a common tactic of the “Christian feminists” with their common saying ‘it’s the wife’s job to submit and the husband shouldn’t be telling her that’
- “wives are deserving of love and respect” – love, yes. Respect no.

- The commenter also doubled down on the first one by saying: (“First, I want to ask you what your definition of ‘love’ is defined by the bible. If you honestly look at it, you will see that its a decision and its sacrificial, its putting others before yourself at any cost, including your life.”)

Unfortunately, these are very common ones with cheap grace theology.

There was a long back and forth, but the rebuttal to these points are many which I’ve covered before (shortened version):

> Misuse of God’s/Jesus unconditional love from Ephesians 5. Common tactic of the “Christian feminists”
> The commenter also doubled down on the first one by saying: (“First, I want to ask you what your definition of ‘love’ is defined by the bible. If you honestly look at it, you will see that its a decision and its sacrificial, its putting others before yourself at any cost, including your life.”)

The purpose of Christ’s love for the Church is sanctification (Eph 5). Jesus put our ETERNAL SOULS before Himself with our sanctification in mind. His sacrifice was focused on our salvation and sanctification. Not on uniformly putting everyone above Himself (false).

Numerous times throughout the gospels, the disciples have their own thoughts about what Jesus is here for. For instance, they think that Jesus is here to save the Jews from the Romans (e.g. military kingdom), to strike down Samaritans with fire after they rejected Him (Luke 9:54), or even that He wasn’t supposed to die (e.g. Jesus rebuked Peter by calling Him Satan because he said he didn’t want Jesus to die).

Contrary to putting everyone before Himself, Jesus did not put the disciples thoughts, feelings, or actions before Himself in these cases. Nor did He say it wasn’t His job to “change their thinking.” In fact, He did the opposite. Jesus was singular minded in His ministry for God, and anyone that stood in His way including His own disciples had to be taught, corrected, rebuked, and trained in the way of righteousness. Heck, in some cases John 6 even tells us that Jesus even let people walk away if they didn’t want to believe in Him wholeheartedly. (e.g. John 6:66 From this time many of his disciples turned back and no longer followed him.).

Love is not love when someone allows another Christian to keep on sinning without trying to change their heart so they repent.

> “It’s not your place to change her.” Also, a common tactic of the “Christian feminists” with their common saying ‘it’s the wife’s job to submit and the husband shouldn’t be telling her that’

Already slightly covered in the above. Jesus did not say “it’s not my job to change the disciples thinking.” He was very adamant about changing their thinking and actions to become more like God, so they would actually become His disciples in true love and righteousness.

Not only that but as we've discussed before in Revelation 2-3, Jesus practically gives ultimatums to the Churches. Repent or get removed.

> Rev 2:4 Yet I hold this against you: You have forsaken the love you had at first. 5 Consider how far you have fallen! Repent and do the things you did at first. If you do not repent, I will come to you and remove your lampstand from its place.
> Rev 2:14 Nevertheless, I have a few things against you: There are some among you who hold to the teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to entice the Israelites to sin so that they ate food sacrificed to idols and committed sexual immorality. 15 Likewise, you also have those who hold to the teaching of the Nicolaitans. 16 Repent therefore! Otherwise, I will soon come to you and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.
> Rev 3:15 I know your deeds, that you are neither cold nor hot. I wish you were either one or the other! 16 So, because you are lukewarm—neither hot nor cold—I am about to spit you out of my mouth. 17 You say, 'I am rich; I have acquired wealth and do not need a thing.' But you do not realize that you are wretched, pitiful, poor, blind and naked. 18 I counsel you to buy from me gold refined in the fire, so you can become rich; and white clothes to wear, so you can cover your shameful nakedness; and salve to put on your eyes, so you can see.

The biggest tragedy is the double standard:

Christian Love requires that you point out sin in other Christians' lives and encourage them to repent (e.g. Matthew 18). Yet somehow all this is thrown by the wayside when you have a wife. You can tell any other Christian that they better stop sinning and to repent and change their ways, but apparently you can't tell your wife that.

It's pure doctrinal delusion.

> "wives are deserving of love and respect" – love, yes. Respect no.

Covered already as well.

- Why I don't respect women
- Why I don't respect women Part 2

The simple fact is that respect mean different things to men and women. Men give respect based on excellence and good results and generally such respect qualifies the respected man as someone worth following (at least in that particular area). Women want respect just because. So when you tell men to start respecting women, you're inadvertently telling tell to put the woman as an authority figure in his life which is directly contradictory to the Bible. It's the same inverted role relationship as chivalry: queen and the knight. That's why these types of things sound good but are destructive in nature for relationships and marriage because it undermines God's creation.

The sad part is that people really believe this stuff.

If you recall back Wayne Grudem posted the reflections on the sex debate and the word Kephale meaning authority or not. After hundreds of pages written and thousands of hours of research, he finally realized that the “Christian feminists” didn’t really care about the Truth but only about what their itching ears wanted to hear.

But for those who do care about the Truth, hopefully they will start to understand that the culture has really brainwashed us to the point that we barely even realize that we treat women with kid gloves when they should be held accountable instead.

Paul Maxwell's journey to apostasy

January 11, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

WinteryKnight posted a couple weeks ago about how Kevin Max formerly of DC talk isn't a Christian anymore. Sad cause DC talk was one of my favorite bands growing up. WK does good analysis that most Christians nowadays aren't grounded in solid apologetics on why God exists and why the Christian faith is true. If their faith is based on a foundation of feelings it is bound to crumble as it not based on a strong foundation.

However, the part I wanted to cover wasn't Kevin Max and DC talk about I saw another guy who's name is familiar in the article the WK linked:

> Max's comments come not long after former DesiringGod.org writer Paul Maxwell announced he is no longer a Christian, which he said in April "feels really good" and has made him "really happy." Former Christian recording artist Jonathan Steingard has also left his Christian faith. In May 2020, he said, "I am now finding that I no longer believe in God."
> One of theologian John Piper's sons, Abraham, has also been open about abandoning his faith, saying he just doesn't believe ultimate meaning exists.

You may remember Maxwell from this SIMP article: Real men don't love strong women.

After that piece he seems to have somewhat found the manosphere because he participated in the theopolis institute series on the manosphere. Paul Maxwell's The Measure of a man. While he had gained a wider perspective of potential truth, he and the other theopolis writers didn't quite get there because they kept trying to intermix boomer theology and "red pill" observations. Measure of a man seems to have been written after that supposed May 2020 confession, so I guess he was mimicking being a Christian still after that.

In any case, it seems his journey has taken a turn for the worse in that he is no longer a believer. Wish I could say that these things aren't uncommon, but if someone is being blown to and fro by feminism and then the secular manosphere it's not really a surprise that they will turn away from God. Many Christians seem to get pulled into the secular manosphere and lose their faith. Some find their way back through the Christian manosphere and ironically some through Jordan Peterson. However, the Church in general needs to do better with the Truth and especially on things like apologetics.

Hopefully, God can use the actual Truth to pull him back. I had my own similar journey when I was post-college where I was agnostic about God for a while due to not strong roots in the faith or apologetics, so it's not the end for anyone as long as they're open to seeking the Truth.

Another reason why Christian marriages are in such a sad spot today

I was going through the YouVersion Bible app a few days ago and looking over the "marriage" courses. This is an app that has over 100,000,000 downloads so it's pretty popular among Christians and well worth talking about. What I found was depressing.

- Over 90% of them had at least 7 days of daily devotionals with 0 (yes, that is right… ZERO) mentions of any of the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities verses. This includes Genesis 1-3, Proverbs 31 & rest of Proverbs on husbands and wives, Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, 1 Peter 3, Titus 2, 1 Corinthians 7, etc. A full 3/4th of these even had verses from Ephesians 1-4 but conveniently ignored Ephesians 5.
- Of the rest of the 10% only 1 (yes, that is right… ONE) did not include the "mutual submission" verse when going over Ephesians 5. That singular 1 only covered Ephesians 5 and didn't talk about any of the other marriage verses.

Unfortunately, this is not an isolated incident. I've gone through several marriage books like Love and Respect and some others and they almost always dance around the marital Scriptures. We can discuss love and respect, but we can't discuss headship and submission. Heh.

You wanna know why marriages are so crap? Christians are too scared to talk about God's design and why it makes for holy and happy marriages. They all implicitly suggest that the world is more important than God.

And of course the video that came out right a few days after I wrote this post… that has been making the rounds:

Fits this post altogether. Christians are going for the MeVersion of marriage instead of the GodVersion.

The Bible and the concept of fitness versus comfort tests

January 17, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the useful heuristics that has come out of married red pill on reddit is distinguishing between fitness (AKA shit testing) and comfort testing from a wife. For those of you not in the know, basically this was figured out through a bunch of trial and error.

Typical tactics that work for fitness testing such as agree and amplify, pressure flipping, ignoring, diversions, and a bunch of others don't work well if it's a comfort test. This is a non-Christian RP guide to fitness testing if you're curious about the concept.

The way to distinguish between fitness and comfort testing is relatively simple, but it can be hard for most men who are not the head in their marriage because they're used to DEERing (defend, excuse, explain, rationalize). A man who consistently DEERs in his marriage is not leading it. The head/leader generally shouldn't be arguing in the first place whether it's a wife, workplace, or whatever type of authority-submission relationship. Jesus does not argue with the Church. He just tells what He expects of us but is also willing to drop us before marriage if we don't follow Him (e.g. Revelation 2-3).

The main ways to distinguish these two scenarios are "you" and "I." I think I've covered this before sometime but a refresher:

- Fitness/shit tests generally start with "You" — You always do X, You are like this and I don't like it, You make me feel so X sometimes, etc.
- Comfort tests generally start with "I" — "I feel so X because Y", I'm not feeling good about this decision, I'm afraid because of X, Y, Z, etc.

In general, the tactics for the fitness/shit tests are the ones listed above while the comfort tests tactics are like the common saying of the strong oak weathering the winds of emotion of the wife. Most of the time it's simply listening to allow her to vent feelings and/or pulling her in a deep hug and kiss and letting her get her tension out. Responding to a fitness/shit test with comfort and a comfort test with fitness/shit tactics can erode trust and make a relationship or marriage deteriorate further.

One common line you see in married RP is the concept of a bull in a china shop. This is where the husband is very inexperienced with RP so he's responding all the time with fitness tests tactics when some comfort is needed sometimes according to the situation. In this case, the wife usually starts to pull away more when the relationship should getting closer, so going back to these two pathways is helpful in that instance.

So where does the Bible fit into these? I never really thought about it before, but it popped into my head that generally these two concepts are also likely Biblical in nature.

- Comfort is along the lines of understanding the wife is a weaker vessel and needs understanding as the weaker vessel at times. You're the strong leader she can confide in and wants to trust. 1 Peter 3:7 You husbands in the same way, live with your wives in an understanding way, as with someone weaker, since she is a woman; and show her honor as a fellow heir of the grace of life, so that your prayers will not be hindered.

- Fitness is generally about diffusing contentiousness and disrespect (Prov 21:9, Prov 25:24, Prov 27:15) but Christianity takes it a step further than secular RP with the goal of the husband influencing wifely sanctification (Eph 5:25-27) and the wife coming to obey God's commands of submission and respect on her own (Eph 5:33, 1 Peter 3:1-6) in the long term. Like we covered in Trust is earned and an expression of the character of godliness this is generally a process.

To be clear, there is no inserting "RP" into Christianity. Christianity is the Truth (big T) but God made the world observable and knowable. Thus, we can learn from secular sources about some aspects of truth (little t) that may be true from a theological perspective but usually incomplete since it isn't a primary reality. Covered this more here: Unpacking and tying together the meta-levels of Christianity, reality and the red pill into a hierarchical understanding: theological, scientific, and philosophical/cultural.

I've used this some in my marriage to good effect though I don't typically see any/many fitness tests. I saw more when I was dating before we got properly established to the headship-submission and love-respect dynamic. Even though we knew in our heads what we were supposed to do, there were times when we didn't know how that was supposed to look. Mostly I really only get comfort tests now if my wife is overly emotional for some reason. I know many of the men at RPC/MRP use this as well to fairly good effect, perhaps not understanding that what they are doing is based on the way God created men and women and marriage.

If you are not interested in having sex when your spouse wants sex then don’t get married

January 21, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Reemphasized with bold: If you are not interested in having sex when your spouse wants sex then don’t get married.

This applies mostly to women but also to some men since typically men have the stronger sex drive.

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 The husband should fulfill his marital duty to his wife, and likewise the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body but yields it to her husband. In the same way, the husband does not have authority over his own body but yields it to his wife. 5 Do not deprive each other except perhaps by mutual consent and for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer. Then come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

Not only is this God’s command as a marital responsibility, but it is important to practicing the Christian faith: meeting others needs and loving others as you love yourself. You don’t want to be denied sex when you want it, so why would you deny your spouse? Be gracious and giving.

By being frigid it’s its own kind of hell. The enemy wants us to have sex outside of marriage and not have any in marriage because it’s contrary to God’s design. The more people that can be hurt the better. Sex is one of the amazing things about marriage and there should be no limits or overt or covert contracts on it. Give freely and enthusiastically and make yourself love it.

It’s not a secret that marriage issues generally improve as the husband and wife are closer. It’s unity. And as always, counterintuitively the right thing to do is the hardest which is to overcome the feelings and have sex. Faith and love requires that we do things even when we don’t want to.

This cannot be anymore plainly stated, and it’s what I’ve started doing when singles and those in relationships come up to me for pre-marriage or marriage advice.

You must ask these questions before marriage to your potential spouse and closely look at their reaction. Are they just saying what they think you want to hear? Do they believe it and want to honor God and you? How enthusiastic are they about overcoming their feelings to do the right thing?

Stop depriving each other.

Cooper and Anna Kupp are currently a great example for Christian marriage

January 24, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I don't say people are great example lightly, but if you've read the recent on Cooper Kupp and his wife Anna you'll see that their story is one many young Christian married people should take note of.

Had another post lined up, but felt this was a better one based on the fact Cooper's team won in dramatic fashion yesterday off two big catches he had on the last 2 plays of the game — 2 minute highlight video of the two teams dueling it out at the end. If you don't follow the NFL, Cooper Kupp is a wide receiver on the Los Angeles Rams and is one of the best receivers in the entire game and playing in the NFC Championship game next weekend. Article below.

https://www.espn.com/nfl/story/_/id/33109684/the-making-cooper-kupp-los-angeles-rams-receiver-credits-wife-inspiration-superstar-turn > Kupp and then-Anna Croskrey met at a track meet as high school seniors.

> "I knew that she was the one that I wanted to marry when we had first met back in high school," Kupp said. "I told my mom the day I met her, 'I'm going to marry this girl.'"
> They began dating before Anna headed to the SEC, where she competed as a heptathlete at the University of Arkansas. But not long after, they decided the distance and separation was untenable.
> Anna enrolled at Eastern Washington, losing nearly two years of course credits that wouldn't transfer and caused her to double-time it so she could graduate on time.
> She and Kupp, both grounded in their faith and family, became inseparable.
> "Coop and Anna — they were a team," said Zach Wimberly, a former Eastern Washington teammate. "No matter what they did, they're doing it together."
> It only seemed natural that they would get married the summer following her return. No need to wait.
> "We just were so aligned in terms of what our goals were and what we wanted to do moving forward and what we wanted to be about as a couple," Kupp said. "And the belief that football was the community, was the place that I was supposed to be, that we were supposed to be, and that's where God placed us."
> After football practice, Kupp drove his white Nissan Pathfinder — often with teammates in passenger seats hoping their ride wouldn't experience one of its infamous breakdowns — across the Eastern Washington campus from the red> turf Roos Field to the restaurant, where a special someone would be expecting him.

> Behind the cash register or serving orders in Styrofoam containers, his wife, Anna Kupp, worked her first job.
> “I supported us monetarily through college,” Anna said, laughing, almost in disbelief she pulled it off. “I was working full time so that he didn’t have to worry about that, so that he could focus.”
> Cooper’s goals pertained to football, and he discovered after a summer of morning workouts followed by an afternoon landscaping gig that he felt exhausted when the season rolled around.
> Editor’s Picks
> Football, along with school, had to be his full-time job. Anna supported and sacrificed, while also attending college, in every way she could.

Fairly humble beginnings. Cooper Kupp has part of mission for God through ministering and working in football and being a good example there. Anna is on board.

Anna basically sacrificed her college (lost 2 years of credits transferring) and worked at a diner through college to support Cooper so that he could fully focus on football. Nothing was too “low” or “demeaning” for Anna to be a great helper (e.g. Genesis 2) to Cooper.

> The question of “Why so soon?” often arose — Cooper was 22 and Anna 21 — with skepticism they would miss the rite of passage young adults experience in college.
> “A lot of people ask, ‘Why did you guys get married so young? Didn’t you feel you were missing out?'” Anna said. “And you’re telling them, ‘No, we actually think the opposite. We feel so lucky to have found someone that we love and cherish so much so early.'”

They re-framed the so-called “worldly wisdom” of:

- experimenting
- getting to know lots of differnet people before marrying (aka fornicating)
- waiting to marry and settle down
- waiting until after college and getting a good job
- and many others

These talking points are always espoused by both liberals and the cucked tradcons instead of understanding what is truly important. The delays in marriage and negative consequences of fornication are becoming more and more prevalent each day.

> “Without a doubt, there’s no doubt in my mind, not only would I not be here where I am today without her or accomplishing the things that I would be doing,” Kupp said. “I really believe I may not be in this — I may not be in the NFL if it wasn’t for her and what she has inspired in me and pushed me to do.”

> But when asked on a late-October day after practice — as his historic season mounted — what we don't already know about him, Kupp was quick to respond.
> Anna, he said, doesn't get enough — or really hasn't received any — credit for his accomplishments.
> And she should.
> It could be curious, given his track record of dedication, why Kupp was so adamant that he wouldn't have been able to succeed at the highest level without Anna.
> "Anna is his rock," said Austin Wagner, Kupp's best friend from high school. "I don't think there's a Cooper without what Anna's done for him. She's a person that really expects a lot out of the people around her and has kind of a high threshold for excellence
> "Cooper works harder because of that."

It's interesting because his friend tries to put it into words but gets it a bit wrong. It's not that his wife is his rock, but that Cooper is sincerely and extremely grateful of having such a supportive wife that builds him up and doesn't tear him down. Wives should be aspiring to that.

> Often, where you'd see Cooper, there'd be Anna. It was the college experience they wanted and created.
> "Being able to find time to be together and find meaningful time together, but also getting things done, I'm just so appreciative," Cooper said. "Appreciative of her and her willingness to do all that."
> Anna was a fixture at pregame movie nights with Kupp and a few of his closest teammates.
> "Movie nights were the best," said teammate Jordan West, one of Cooper's groomsmen. "We'd watch everything from 'Finding Nemo' to 'Gladiator' to 'Miracle.'"
> Anna would work out on the field during offseason 7-on-7 contests and challenge Cooper in the weight room.
> "I'd go and do a CrossFit workout with her and she would just run laps around me in these workouts," Kupp said. "I mean, it is unbelievable."
> She'd watch film with him, usually sitting at receivers coach Nick Edward's desk, where she'd bring her homework or a book.
> "I can't tell you how many times I'd walk in and Coop would be sitting there watching film and Anna would be there with him as well," Wimberly said.
> And on game days, Anna would put together goodie bags, with cookies and a passage or note written by Cooper, to set at players' lockers.

> “This can’t get me into too much trouble now, but I had a key to the facilities and was able to get into the locker room whenever I wanted to,” Kupp admitted. “So I’d just give her the keys to go into the locker room and she would put them in guys’ lockers and get out of there.”
> “If you showed up in your locker and you had cookies from Anna before the game,” Wimberly said, “you were blessed.”
> When Kupp suffered an AC sprain in a shoulder and could barely move or lift the arm, Anna was his caretaker, propping him up with pillows and helping him get dressed.
> “Coop had that support system with Anna,” West said. “She was always there for him.”
>
> And then there were the finances. A young, married couple in college, Anna and Cooper wanted to prove they could make it on their own without relying on their parents.
> “I’m sure if we had asked our parents like, ‘Hey, we really need some help here, they certainly would’ve helped out,” Kupp said. “But as a married couple, we thought we needed to be able to separate and be us and take care of ourselves.”
> Their efforts paid off, as Kupp was named a four-time consensus FCS All-American and established 15 FCS records at Eastern Washington.

West understands it a bit more than the other friend. Anna is like a strong support system who was always there for him.

But most men would be jealous to have a wife like Anna not just because of her sacrifice to help Cooper but because of her graciousness, generosity, and kindness to all those around as well.

Most men, including Cooper, would not hesitate to sing her praises either.

Although I’m sure they’ve had some issues, it appears that they’re modeling Christian marriage very well and are a good examples for others. Cooper identified his mission for God and career path and strives for excellence in that. He clearly loves and is appreciative to his wife for everything she’s done. Anna basically sacrificed her own college and probably career to be supportive of Cooper and is enjoying their family and success. She is also very thoughtful, kind, and generous to those around. Both appear to be setting a great example in their community for their faith.

The biggest takeaway underneath the inspirational story is that modeling the headship-submission/helper and love-respect Biblical marital roles and responsibilities shows that despite their vehement denial that is actually what the world wants. It’s so inspirational and awesome that this happened according to the world. But Cooper and Anna pulled out the Bible and told them about headship and submission they’d “hate” it.

This is why the RP maxim on women “Don’t watch what they say, look at what they do” is so important. Not just because it’s applicable on women (and women dating in relationships with men for that matter as well), but our actions matter more than our words. Jesus even told us that what we say will not necessarily be the turning point of being a good witness but what we do:

> John 13:35 By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you love one another.”
> 1 Peter 2:13 Submit yourselves for the Lord’s sake to every human authority: whether to the emperor, as the supreme authority, 14 or to governors, who are sent by him to punish those who do wrong and to commend those who do right. 15 For it is God’s will that by doing good you should silence the ignorant talk of foolish people. 16 Live as free people, but do not use your freedom as a cover-up for evil; live as God’s slaves. 17 Show proper respect to everyone, love the family of believers, fear God, honor the emperor.

It is by following God’s commands, especially in marriage, and doing good that many unbelievers will see that example and hopefully God can use that seed in their hearts to get the ball rolling for their salvation.

Update:

Cooper Kupp won the Super Bowl with the Rams and won Super Bowl MVP.

He also talks about having a vision 3 years ago that God gave him that he would win Super Bowl MVP.

The insidious nature of chivalry

January 31, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Dalrock has written extensively on this, and there's dozens of pages of posts you can scroll back through. Some of the more popular posts are:

- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2019/01/21/call-me-unchivalrous/
- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2019/11/23/you-say-jesus-they-think-lancelot/
- https://dalrock.wordpress.com/2018/10/24/chivalrys-mortal-enemy-toxic-masculinity/

While chivalry didn't start out as pandering to women, it eventually got there:

> The new courtly love was not one of the original elements of the genre, but quickly became very important when introduced. It was introduced to the romance by Chretien de Troyes, combining it with the Matter of Britain, new to French poets.[34] In Lancelot, the Knight of the Cart (unlike his earlier Erec and Enide), the behavior of Lancelot conforms to the courtly love ideal;[35] it also, though still full of adventure, devotes an unprecedented amount of time to dealing with the psychological aspects of the love.[36] By the end of the 14th century, counter to the earliest formulations, many French and English romances combined courtly love, with love sickness and devotion on the man's part, with the couple's subsequent marriage; this featured in Sir Degrevant, Sir Torrent of Portyngale, Sir Eglamour, and William of Palerne.[37] Ipomadon even explicitly describes the married couple as lovers, and the plot of Sir Otuel was altered, to allow him to marry Belyssant.[38] Similarly, Iberian romances of the 14th century praised monogamy and marriage in such tales as Tirant lo Blanc and Amadís de Gaula.[39]

This is expanded on as part of the various practices.

When examining medieval literature, chivalry can be classified into three basic but overlapping areas:

> - Duties to countrymen and fellow Christians: this contains virtues such as mercy, courage, valour, fairness, protection of the weak and the poor, and in the servant-hood of the knight to his lord. This also brings with it the idea of being willing to give one's life for another's; whether he would be giving his life for a poor man or his lord.
> - Duties to God: this would contain being faithful to God, protecting the innocent, being faithful to the church, being the champion of good against evil, being generous and obeying God above the feudal lord.
> - Duties to women: this is probably the most familiar aspect of chivalry. This would contain what is often called courtly love, the idea that the knight > is to serve a lady, and after her all other ladies. Most especially in this category is a general gentleness and graciousness to all women.

> These three areas obviously overlap quite frequently in chivalry, and are often indistinguishable. Different weight given to different areas produced different strands of chivalry:
> - warrior chivalry, in which a knight's chief duty is to his lord, as exemplified by Sir Gawain in Sir Gawain and the Green Knight and The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnelle;
> - religious chivalry, in which a knight's chief duty is to protect the innocent and serve God, as exemplified by Sir Galahad or Sir Percival in the Grail legends;
> - courtly love chivalry, in which a knight's chief duty is to his own lady, and after her, all ladies, as exemplified by Sir Lancelot in his love for Queen Guinevere or Sir Tristan in his love for Iseult.

As has been explored before the main critique we're talking about is romantic chivalry and how it is unChristian. The above indicates that the duty to woman is to serve here which most men will take to heart and lead to an in-practice inversion of roles in the relationship. Likewise, the ideal for this is Lancealot's adulterous love (as shown by his overly dedicated service) to a taken woman, Queen Guinevere, the wife of King Arthur.

In this, it has been identified that that it's romantic feelings that justify sex (e.g. even when adulteruous like Lancelot) as opposed to the Christian ideal where marriage justifies sex (e.g. the Bible). This leads to feelings being elevated to the status of the truth wherein if one falls out of love that is enough to depose of the roles and responsibilities of marriage.The same is true of things like cohabitation.

Thus, the main negative aspects of romantic chivalry are as follows:

- non-Christian justification of sex when being in love instead of in marriage
- Practical inversion of roles. Instead of leading and follow (e.g. Christ and the Church with headship and submission, love and respect) this is inverted to the lady/Queen having authority over the knight to serve her whims.
- Feelings (of love) are now elevated to truth above morality to where feelings become the new morality

The main thrust of Sigma's Is Married Dread Game a transgression of marital vows? and some of my posts on dread and the feeling of fear explores the question of is dread a sin or not, but the real question we should be examining is this: it feels wrong to men to make a woman feel bad.

In particular, this can be expanded to multiple different things:

- It feels wrong to tell women no. In particular, for Adam it probably felt wrong to tell

Eve ‘no’ to eating the fruit instead of obeying God.

- It feels wrong to correct or rebuke women
- It feels wrong to make a decision where a woman and/or your wife is unhappy (even if it is the right decision).
- It feels wrong to be the authority/head of a wife for most men and expecting your wife to follow your lead and obey what you tell her

Of course, we need only look at the Bible to see many cases where becoming a “yes man” to woman or your wife (e.g. Adam & Eve, Abraham and Sarah and Hagar, Samson and Delilah, Ananias and Sapphira, etc.) instead of obeying God is extremely destructive. Job is one of the few examples of not listening to his wife (“curse God and die”) to do the right thing.

It is possible to get over this feeling with practice, but I think this is one of the temptations that men need to be aware of and overcome. It’s very easy to fall into sin by catering and pandering to women.

I believe part of this is due to chivalry due to how ubiquitous it is and how strongly it has infiltrated the Church, but it might also be part of a general temptation to fleshly human nature for men since even men in the Bible have done it before chivalry was even a concept. The fact that many/most current Churches reinforce it as ‘Christian’ is definitely a very bad thing though.

I think most Christian men and husbands need to renew their mind in Christ to focus what the Bible says about marital roles and responsibilities. Don’t fear women/wives and that it is OK to offend sensibilities at times especially if there is disobedience to God. Calling out sin and diversions from the kingdom of God is a good thing, even if it feels wrong in the moment.

The parallels of temptation with sex and marriage

Chapters are sometimes the bane of good Biblical understanding.

> 1 Corinthians 7:2 But since sexual immorality is occurring, each man should have sexual relations with his own wife, and each woman with her own husband. 3 The husband should fulfill his marital duty to his wife, and likewise the wife to her husband. 4 The wife does not have authority over her own body but yields it to her husband. In the same way, the husband does not have authority over his own body but yields it to his wife. 5 Do not deprive each other except perhaps by mutual consent and for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer. Then come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of your lack of self-control.

Paul overtly tells husbands and wives not to deny each other because it can cause temptations to arise and for the other spouse to stumble at denial.

> 1 Corinthians 8:9 Be careful, however, that the exercise of your rights does not become a stumbling block to the weak. 10 For if someone with a weak conscience sees you, with all your knowledge, eating in an idol's temple, won't that person be emboldened to eat what is sacrificed to idols? 11 So this weak brother or sister, for whom Christ died, is destroyed by your knowledge. 12 When you sin against them in this way and wound their weak conscience, you sin against Christ. 13 Therefore, if what I eat causes my brother or sister to fall into sin, I will never eat meat again, so that I will not cause them to fall.

Likewise, Paul makes a similar point that knowing that another person is weak in an area (e.g. food sacrificed to idols) and causing them to stumble if you do it in front of them (even if it's not a sin to you) is a sin against Christ. Even more so when you deny a spouse because you're both causing them to stumble and it's a direct sin.

Similarly, 1 Peter 2 is cut off from 1 Peter 3 which has been noted many times.

> 1 Peter 2:13 Submit yourselves for the Lord's sake to every human authority: whether to the emperor, as the supreme authority, 14 or to governors, who are sent by him to punish those who do wrong and to commend those who do right. 15 For it is God's will that by doing good you should silence the ignorant talk of foolish people. 16 Live as free people, but do not use your freedom as a cover-up for evil; live as God's slaves. 17 Show proper respect to everyone, love the family of believers, fear God, honor the emperor.
> 18 Slaves, in reverent fear of God submit yourselves to your masters, not only to those who are good and considerate, but also to those who are harsh. 19 For it is commendable if someone bears up under the pain of unjust suffering because > they are conscious of God. 20 But how is it to your credit if you receive a beating for doing wrong and endure it? But if you suffer for doing good and you endure it, this is commendable before God. 21 To this you were called, because Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you should follow in his steps.

> 22 “He committed no sin, and no deceit was found in his mouth.”
> 23 When they hurled their insults at him, he did not retaliate; when he suffered, he made no threats. Instead, he entrusted himself to him who judges justly. 24 “He himself bore our sins” in his body on the cross, so that we might die to sins and live for righteousness; “by his wounds you have been healed.” 25 For “you were like sheep going astray,” but now you have returned to the Shepherd and Overseer of your souls.orality is occurring, each man should have sexual relations with his own wife, and each woman with her own husband.

Scripture tells us to submit to authority even if we don’t agree with it in order to do good, silence the ignorant talk of foolish people, not use freedom as a coverup for evil, bear unjust suffering, and such much in the way of Christ. God uses this to influence those around us and plant seeds in their heart that can make them more receptive to the gospel.

> 1 Peter 3 Wives, in the same way submit yourselves to your own husbands so that, if any of them do not believe the word, they may be won over without words by the behavior of their wives, 2 when they see the purity and reverence of your lives. 3 Your beauty should not come from outward adornment, such as elaborate hairstyles and the wearing of gold jewelry or fine clothes. 4 Rather, it should be that of your inner self, the unfading beauty of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is of great worth in God’s sight. 5 For this is the way the holy women of the past who put their hope in God used to adorn themselves. They submitted themselves to their own husbands, 6 like Sarah, who obeyed Abraham and called him her lord. You are her daughters if you do what is right and do not give way to fear.
> 7 Husbands, in the same way be considerate as you live with your wives, and treat them with respect as the weaker partner and as heirs with you of the gracious gift of life, so that nothing will hinder your prayers.

In the same way, 1 Peter 3 continues on for the wives with unbelieving husbands. How much more should a wife with a believing husband want to obey and submit! Yet, this is the temptation common to all women all throughout history.

It’s ironic. A large delusion that has come over the eyes of the Church. Women have no trouble submitting to their boss at work or their teacher in school or other human authorities because it is normal. But God forbid they submit to the husband to whom they committed their life to, who loves them the most, and the one they vowed to be with before God.

In the area(s) that we are supposed to be the most faithful, we have big delusions over our eyes that blind us to doing what is right. The same is true of the ‘chivalry’ that is a hindrance to husbands leading effectively.

All the lonely men – aka “blame the patriarchy” when we should be blaming feminists

https://www.deseret.com/2021/10/12/22722500/perspective-all-the-lonely-men-loneliness-epidemic-male-friendship-feminism

> Ever since the publication of my new book on raising boys, I have been receiving messages from men. To my surprise, they write with a yearning for a new kind of masculinity. And almost all of them say they feel alone, sometimes crushingly so.
> Sixty-one percent of Americans are measurably lonely, according to a 2019 survey using the UCLA Loneliness Scale, the gold standard for decades.
> A massive study by Brigham Young University, using data from 3.4 million people collected over nearly 35 years, found that individuals who suffered from loneliness or isolation, or even those who simply lived alone, saw their risk of premature death rise by up to 32%.
> One study found that in terms of damage to your health, loneliness was the equivalent of smoking 15 cigarettes a day.
> In her study published in the journal Social Science and Medicine in 2014, Rutgers University sociologist Julie A. Phillips found that male baby boomers in particular were 1.6 times more likely to die by suicide than men in the generation before them. She also found that the generations following the boomers have even higher rates of suicide.
> While researchers are still working on exact reasons for such a spike, they point to growing alienation as a factor. Add to this the fact that men are socialized into a masculinity that simply does not talk about emotions or mental illness, and you have the perfect, looming storm.
> We can turn things around, but it won’t be easy, says Jordan Shapiro, author of “Father Figure: How to Be a Feminist Dad.”
> Shapiro says that he, too, was raised to be “nonemotionally intimate.” American masculinity, he says, is built on putting down femininity, and some traits like emotional intimacy are associated with girls and women. “Men are emotional and vulnerable, but they learn to avoid it with their male friendships. To men, that would be like being in a boxing ring without any gloves.”
> Men aren’t allowed to admit to being lonely. “Patriarchal masculinity is so impossible to achieve that admitting to loneliness would mean confronting our shame. Most men are living with that deep, deep, deep denial of how horrible patriarchy makes them feel and how their participation is causing the feelings that they refuse to feel,” he says.

You gotta love their crappy analysis. This pretty much commonplace feminist tactics. Verbatim:

- Tear something down in the “The Patriarchy(tm)” like the nuclear family with no fault divorce et al.
- Families now have higher incidences of single mothers leading to crappy education outcomes, propagation of single motherhood, drug and behavioral issues, etc
- Blame these bad outcomes on “The Patriarchy(tm)” when it was actually their policies which instituted the destruction.

In this case:

- Feminists tear down male only spaces of “The Patriarchy(tm)” like YMCA, boy scouts, Church activities, etc
- Feminists see men are more lonely than ever
- Blame that men are more lonely than ever on “how horrible patriarchy makes them feel and how their participation is causing the feelings they refuse to feel”

You can’t make this stuff up.

> I asked Shapiro if he has close male friends whom he can call in a moment of emotional overwhelm. He thinks for a moment and realizes, as we speak, that he doesn’t, not really. He is struck by the sadness of this. “Wow, I suppose I am in the same boat,” he says.
> He recalls a moment in the week before the launch of his book when he was overwhelmed with anxiety because his book was taking on masculine culture. “My anxiety was the equivalent of being in middle school when you stand up to a bully and are afraid of showing up at the playground the next day,” he says. He wanted to talk about this feeling with another man but didn’t know whom to call.
> “I can’t remember the last time I felt that level of loneliness,” he says.
>
> Where such despair intersects with feminism is that feminism wants to draw men out of the loneliness of a toxic male culture that is doing them harm and is also harming those around them. When alienated and depressed men cannot speak of what ails them and cannot seek help, they lash out.
> “If you’re trying to be king of the hill, the singular alpha, it’s impossible because there’s always someone who has more power than you — the police, the boss — so you overcompensate in the places where you do have a modicum of power,” Shapiro says. “In the worst cases, it becomes real violence on women or children. It could show up as sexual abuse — the worst sexual offenders are the ones who feel the most inferiority.”
> America has seen only too well the violent and public lashing out of male rage. Even in instances where men’s loneliness and alienation doesn’t lash out, it can often take a hidden toll.

The article obviously doubles down. The feminization of men means that the competitive male environments where iron sharpens iron are now classified as toxic, and men start to believe that men kicking each other's mental butt to grow and get better is now a bad thing.

The reality is also that without good male role models, boys don't generally grow up to be men being able to control their emotions effectively. We also have feminism to thank for that.

> In this past year and a half of the pandemic, in particular, we have heard stories of women's invisible, emotional labor over and above the burdens of housework and caregiving. Workplaces, sports arenas and other nondomestic spaces are no longer outlets for men. A friend tells me that her husband has been "like a caged animal." The office was a place where he could interact with co-workers. With that outlet gone, "He's thrashing about at home and I just cannot sponge up all that trauma," she says.
> The concept of the "cage" shows up in many ways when discussing the constraints of traditional masculinity. A global effort called the "Man Box" study, conducted in the U.S., U.K. and Mexico, showed that young men ages 18 to 30 felt the pressure to "act tough," which led them to harm themselves and those around them. These behaviors led to a cost of $20.9 billion that could be saved by the U.S., U.K. and Mexican economies if there were no "Man Box." What were these behaviors and disorders? Sexual violence, bullying and assault, suicide, traffic accidents, binge-drinking and depression.

"Insert typical women are negatively affected by men talking point"

> In researching my book, I asked Judy Y. Chu, a researcher at Stanford University who works on boys' psychosocial development and is the author of "When Boys Become Boys: Development, Relationships, and Masculinity," about the hurdles toward mindful masculinity. In her role as chair of the Global Men's Health Advisory Committee, Chu found that "men who were violent often talk about how they ended up lonely or isolated."
> Psychologists who work with these men try to get them to open up about their feelings. They tell them, "Your children will feel better being around you. You will feel better about yourself.'' Chu says that these men often ask: "Am I the only one suffering this way?" Society sets men up and then makes them feel like they are alone or individually responsible.
> Fathers and society in general tend to pass on an initiation into boyhood that gradually dissolves the capacity for emotional presence in relationships and replaces it with detachment, Chu says. "We teach boys to abandon women, and the first woman he must abandon is his mother."
> In a longitudinal study that started in Minnesota and included as many as 90,000 kids, researchers found that the single best protector against adolescent risk was > if a boy had at least one close, bonding relationship. Without these close relationships, boys are more prone to loneliness, opiate use and suicide.

> So, experts are telling us that men around us will have to bare their pain. But how do men emerge from the shroud of loneliness, the grip of depression and alienation? Where do they go, beyond sports and bars?

Ah, so close. They almost made the connection that feminism has destroyed families, male role models, and trashed male only spaces.

> I asked Gerald Schley, 79. Schley had once invited me to speak to an all-male book club to which he belongs. I asked him if the book club had been a way to build friendships with other men. “Oh, not the book club,” he says. “You need to know about my men’s group.”
> He tells me about a group of 10 men among whom he is the only African American member. “I was a bit wary at first, but I found they were wonderful, progressive men. We go on hikes, visit museums, art galleries, movies, theater and have potluck dinners. We talk about politics, movies, books, family, health, history, aging gracefully, art,” Schley says.
> “There was one incident that blew my mind,” he continues. “One of the guys had just lost his wife. There were four of us that had lost wives — we just went around and spoke about the losses we’d had. One person had lost his son to suicide. There’s usually a tendency among men to want to try and fix things, but no one did that. Everyone just listened. Some of us were in tears. It was powerful. You listen to the pain and it has an effect on you, too,” Schley says. “I find that having a group of men to talk to and fellowship with is extremely important.”
> America’s men might just be in a moment of reckoning with masculinity, and all of us should be rooting for them to make it more mindful.
> Men are beginning to talk about loneliness, alienation and their hunger for connection. This cultural conversation finds itself depicted in the wildly successful television show “Ted Lasso” (20 Emmy nominations this year), which goes to the heart of stereotypical masculine culture — sports — and turns it inside out through its coach-hero’s homemade baked goods, hugs, pep talks to his players to be tender and to get, gasp, therapy.
> Perhaps we are all ready for a new kind of locker room talk, one that sounds like a really good cry.

Feminization of men complete. Men now act like women. Ironically, this will still lead to worse outcomes cause men aren’t women. And these worse outcomes will still be blamed on “The Patriarchy(tm)”.

Of course, we know the Biblical solution to this for not just men but also women is being engaged in a community of believers and good discipleship. That way men and women will have close friends that they're invested doing life in a Christian way.

Dark triad traits and virtuous victimhood

February 21, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I saw this series of studies recently, — PDF copy — with the name of the study being Signaling Virtuous Victimhood as Indicators of Dark Triad Personalities. Some choice quotes:

> Notwithstanding these benefits, we propose that claiming victim status, an act we refer to as victim signaling, also allows victims to pursue an environmental resource extraction strategy that helps them survive, flourish, and achieve their goals in situations that are responsive to their claims. By resource extraction we mean that resources are transferred from either individuals or larger institutions (e.g., the state, organization) to the person who signals victimhood. There are many resources that can be transferred to someone claiming victim status (Foa & Foa, 1980), and so we use the term resource broadly to refer to any material (e.g., money,jobs, access to education) and/or symbolic (e.g., respect, tolerance,compassion) assets that one party possesses and that another partywants to acquire.

> We argue that contemporary Western democracies have become particularly hospitable environments for victim signalers to execute a strategy of nonreciprocal resource extraction because several features of these societies make victimhood potentially advantageous. First, the spreading of egalitarian values in the West leads many people to perceive any differential outcomes as evidence of overstratification; hence, they conclude that status differences between individuals and groups in society that are associated with these outcomes are illegitimate (Black, 2011). People who signal victimhood because they perceive themselves as being deprived of what others possess, or are treated in a way that others are not, can therefore find a receptive audience among many who detect their signal. Second, the alleviation of human suffering is treated as a paramount value in Western societies. This heightened sensitivity to suffering, coupled with the ease of bidirectional mass communication, such as on social media platforms, has increased the reach and effectiveness of recruiting third-party support for people signaling victimhood (Clark, 2016; Mackey, 2014). Examples can be seen in cases where an individual or a group who claims to be a victim elicits statements of concern and sympathy from politicians, celebrities, media pundits, social activists, and other influential people. Sometimes the victim signalers also receive material or economic support from these parties.

> Based on these observations, we propose that victim signaling can be a mechanism through which a pattern of resource transference can be initiated by the signaler. We define victim signaling as a public and intentional expression of one’s disadvantages, suffering, oppression, or personal limitations. We further > suggest that victim signaling is maximally effective at initiating resource transfers when it is coupled with virtue signaling, defined as symbolic demonstrations that can lead observers to make favorable inferences about the signaler's moral character. We hypothesize that the presentation of a dual signal of virtuous victimhood can induce those who perceive the signal to offer more social and economic resources to the signaler than the presentation of only one of the signals. Moreover, we hypothesize that people willing and able to use deception and manipulation for attaining personal goals—people possessing "Dark Triad" traits (Paulhus & Williams,2002)—will more frequently emit virtuous victim signals com-pared with people lacking Dark Triad traits.

Absolutely true. It's a common divorce tactic to claim abuse by wives in order to get more favor in court. Same with claiming "rape" if a woman was caught cheating or don't want to be known as slutting it up. Men can do the same thing, but it's much more easy to do if you're a so called minority or part of a victim class. In these cases, the left's definition of victims (women, black, LGBT, etc.) have a much easier time signalling victimhood to reach beneficial situations.

The Duke Lacrosse team case is a good example of people just running with it without fact checking and Rolling Stone had to pay out over a million in a lawsuit after the truth came out.

Generally, most of the time victimhood is an excuse to absolve someone of the consequences of their own actions (e.g. not taking any responsibility for what happened / blame shifting) and/or gaining resources or social capital.

> But even if those who possess Dark Triad traits are shown to emit victim signals more frequently, this signal alone is not a foolproof method for extracting resources from others. In environments where many people claim victim status, observers who want to alleviate human suffering or rectify an injustice have to be selective about where to allocate their limited resources. It is also conceivable that many people who portray themselves as victims will appear undeserving of assistance or attention. A person who is paralyzed in a car accident after having robbed a bank is unlikely to receive much public support. We therefore hypothesize that the most effective means for pursuing a strategy of nonreciprocal resource extraction by signaling victimhood is to present the additional signal of being virtuous.
> Virtuous Victimhood
> Virtue signaling is defined as "the conspicuous expression of moral values, done primarily with the intent of enhancing one's standing within a social group" (Oxford English Dictionary). We theorize that three benefits will be accrued from signaling virtue that amplify the effectiveness of a victim signal. First, by communicating one's superior moral character to the outside world, it can project an image of trustworthiness and allude to the signaler's benevolent intentions of reciprocity. Reciprocal altruism is the foundation for many cooperative forms of > social exchange in large groups (Trivers, 1971), and it starts when one party willingly transfers resources to another with the expectation that their generosity will be matched in the future by the recipient, to the mutual benefit of all. A person who can convincingly present him or herself as virtuous should, on average, be able to induce more people to initiate the voluntary transfer of material or symbolic resources to him or her than someone who sends no signal or who signals that they lack virtue.

This makes sense as well. In general, men seem to be easily duped by this type of thing as well. When we see a woman in trouble we like to help. Call it chivalry or whatever else, it's common for men to want to step in to help those who are victims or oppressed at least in certain circumstances. Therefore, if someone can exploit this by not only coming off as a victim but a morally upright victim then they'll likely garner help of many.

The Church is not immune from this. There are many stories of Churches siding with the wife, even if it was the wife divorcing the husband and there was no cheating or anything like that. The Church has implicitly bought into the Duluth model and assumes that the wives are victims since the husband has authority while asserting the wife has hypoagency in that she pretty much has little to no moral responsibility for her actions.

> The findings of this study support our hypothesis that virtuous victim signaling is more frequently displayed by Dark Triad personalities, even when controlling for factors that may make people vulnerable to being mistreated or disadvantaged in society (i.e., demographic and socioeconomic characteristics) as well as the importance they place on being a virtuous individual as part of their self-concept (as measured by the internalization dimension of moral identity). An examination of the three Dark Triad traits as separate constructs showed that Machiavellianism was the only one among them that predicted both victim and virtuous victim signaling. Psychopathy was marginally associated with victim signaling, but not with virtue signaling, whereas this pattern was reversed for narcissism.

Narcissists only care about themselves and their image, so it's not surprised they wouldn't necessarily try to exploit gaining extra resources. However, pure dark triads will probably have both. Psychopathy has a marginal association which seems to be right… if you don't care about others feelings then you could go either way. If you're manipulative like a Machiavellian then you want to get as much as possible.

This may explain why some women want an amicable divorce versus taking their husband to the cleaners. Some are higher on Machiavellianism than others. Some are just narcissists and want out if you're not validating them and their decisions all the time.

The study is 28 pages and 6 different parts of it I believe so I'm not going to go into the rest, but it's a pretty good read. Basically, the gist of it is that if someone is claiming to be a victim and stands to benefit from it either financially, socially, or otherwise it's possible that the so-called victim may have some degree of dark triad traits. It's not always the case that they’re not a victim and claiming it, but those who are trying to do that likely score higher on dark triad traits.

I’m sure many of men who got divorced and taken the cleaners can tell you that their wife was probably BPD or similar which correlates strongly with dark triad traits as well.

Pre-marriage headship and submission

February 24, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Oscar makes a very astute comment on Jack's post about if she loves you then she'll be a PITA.

> There's no Biblical requirement for a woman to submit to a man before they're married, but if she's rebellious before marriage, it'll only get worse after marriage.
> In other words, she's not required to submit, but he's not required to marry her, either.

Precisely what I recommend in Practical advice to single Christian men establishing leadership and the right frame when starting a relationship.

If we look at Jesus' life we can see He offers to become the "head" of the disciples / Church by asking them to "Come, follow Me" and then He leads and teaches them. They voluntarily act according to what He is teaching them about God and how to live life in accordance with how He is going to change the world. John 6 also shows that many disciples who disagreed with Him left Him in great numbers at one time as well.

This is an excellent model to show the types of "bid and response" we would like to see in men and women while dating and then engaged and subsequently married.

I am often fond of making the point that you are the same person that you were before you got married as the day after you got married. So the the potential spouse, whether a husband or wife, is not going to magically change upon saying vows. If they're an untrustworthy or unfaithful person before they say their vows that's not something that changes in the snap of a finger. The same is true of attitudes and actions held by a man or woman because of one day or one commitment (except, perhaps, accepting Christ who can break those chains immediately, though, usually we see gradual sanctification). Who they were before that day for weeks, months, and years is going to be the same person after marriage. The trajectory of their growth pattern or already having the long term habits of obey God and being faithful with the small things and big things is the most important.

The key then, for both sides, is to make good "bids and responses" in terms of proper headship-submission and love-respect lines. The man should show leadership and see how she follows. The wife should be trying to follow and see if he exhibits good headship. The husband should love his wife and see if his wife respects him. The wife should respect her husband and see if it helps him love her more. Building up these good cycles and habits start to hedge against bad behavior from cropping up and going into more destructive behavior cycles.

Obviously, one should be doing these things irregardless of how someone is treating them as God shows us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us (Romans 5).

However, we are not required to marry and thus we should be choosy of only someone who is wants to and is willing to do these things without having to have pressure put on them to do it. If they aren't willing to do things when there's no requirement, it's unlikely that they'll do them when things get tougher like when tough times can come during marriage.

In these we must always be reminded that God's mission and our sanctification are the end goal.

Authority is positional, but effective leadership is by example and action

February 28, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Continuing on with the theme of headship, I think one of the things that most Christians miss is the interplay between authority and effective leadership.

> Matthew 7:28 When Jesus had finished saying these things, the crowds were amazed at his teaching, 29 because he taught as one who had authority, and not as their teachers of the law.

The interesting thing here is that the Bible distinguishes between the differences that one may have the position of authority (e.g. teachers of the law in Jewish culture) from actually having effective leadership. Headship is the position in the case of husband's and wives.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, submit yourselves to your own husbands as you do to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife as Christ is the head of the church, his body, of which he is the Savior. 24 Now as the church submits to Christ, so also wives should submit to their husbands in everything.
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless.

The big thing that is missing from Christian men and husbands these days are the masculine traits that tend to lead toward the difference between the position of husband in God's eyes (e.g. the position of authority) versus acting as the head (e.g. leading as one in authority like Jesus did). Many of the masculine traits are naturally associated with authority such as confidence, assertiveness, and such.

The Church unfortunately only encourages the former rather than the latter. In fact, in many cases, it actively discourages the latter such as with certain Father's day sermons cutting off husband's headship at the knees as has been covered by Dalrock and others. This leads to a huge disconnect.

As we have explored on this blog on attractive traits such as PSALM and masculinity — confidence, assertiveness, independence, etc — tend to signal that a man is good at acting as a leader and/or taking dominion in various capacities. This is also one of the components of Jack's recent post on pre-selection.

A man who is good socially with other women and men (which is why wingmen work) tend to have more PSALM and masculine traits and hence it's a woman's intuitive shortcut that she's dealing with a man she would be attractive to. The case of a husband having regular sex with his wife boils down to he's having his wants/needs met well and thus is more confidence, assertive, and such in both language and body language. Men probably don't notice this but women intuitively pick it up. Pheremones too perhaps.

What helped me the most when I was single to change my mindset to the right frame is what I wrote in Practical advice to single Christian men establishing leadership and the right frame when starting a relationship.

> This is precisely what you do. Take the example of Jesus and His disciples (e.g. Christ and the Church, which is the analogy we have for marriage in Ephesians 5) in all 4 gospels:
> 1. Jesus has started his ministry in Galilee preaching and teaching about the kingdom of God
> 2. While doing this, he invites various men to be His disciples to help Him (e.g. shades of Genesis 2 where the wife is created to be the man's helper). Fishermen, tax collectors, etc. "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."
> 3. He continues on His ministry which grows and has the disciples help him with miracles, instructs and teaches them, and then eventually has them go out and try during his ministry (e.g. Jesus sends out the 70).
> 4. Jesus continually sanctifies them by correcting and teaching them as necessary (e.g. Ephesians 5 – Christ loves the Church for the purpose of sanctification).
> 5. Jesus does ALL of this BEFORE engagement and marriage. The engagement of Jesus and His bride is generally defined as the body of Christ who have received the Holy Spirit (Eph 1) much like an engagement ring or dowry and the marriage of Jesus and His bride is at the end in Revelation 19.
> As an aside, the discipleship model of Jesus generally follows the model of (1) tell them what, (2) show them how, (3) let them try, (4) send them out, (5) have them do the same.

Mission and honoring God above all is paramount. This puts everything in the right frame. Instead of chasing women the goal is to build your life around Christ and executing his mission. Then a woman can choose to follow, but one must act as a leader when single, in a relationship, engaged and married. Indeed, one must first be a good leader of one (yourself) spiritually, physically, mentally, emotionally, and so on prior to marriage otherwise there are many pitfalls along the way to fall into.

I personally found that as I started to act consistently as a leader of my own life and then expanding that into various spheres of influence such as my involvement in the Church, work, recreation, and such that women started to be much more interested. PSALM and masculinity obviously increased by both focusing on some of those but also inadvertently as cultivating leadership naturally improves confidence, assertiveness, and so on.

Implementation is hard because of Church incongruence on the position of headship and headship in action

The big issue with the conservative Church at least as mentioned before is that it actively preaches the position of headship but it actively discourages the example and action of headship. A husband that cannot execute the actions of headship which includes teaching, correcting, and training a wife will be unable to sanctify her much less garner the natural respect for the one who not only has the position of authority to act like one who has authority.

While we are able to respect authority, it is very hard to respect or obey authority that is corrupt. 1 Peter 3 is explicit in it's commands to wives of husbands disobedient to God because it's not a normal response. It must be done deliberately. In the same way, if the Church continues to cut husband's off at the knees then it's implicitly telling wives that husbandly authority is wrong and thus must be avoided in practice. This is why most "complementarians" are actually "egalitarians" in practice: they don't preach "headship" but instead preach the gospel of "husband and wife agreement."

The seeming success of the tingly-respect structure (which includes meet-cutes) is largely due to the fact that the wife tends to meet a man who she tends to naturally admire or respect. This can be due to PSALM and masculinity traits but it can also be due to other factors such as occupational hierarchy (e.g. doctor-nurse, professional-secretary, etc) or also believing she's met a man who is close to the best she can get or that blows her expectations out of the water.

The tingly-respect structure also naturally tends to fit the headship-submission and love-respect model, so it has a big advantage in that respect. However, the problem is that only some percentage of men can get in the top. I think this is a bit too narrow because it's easier to get into the top percentage of men in the Church as the Church tends to not care about physical appearance and obesity as much. However, this requires men to actually care and put in some effort.

The other issue is that other models like arranged marriage or marrying someone that you were only semi-attracted to or other types of models are even worse supported by the Church than headship. For instance,

- Have you ever heard a sermon on obesity and losing weight to take care of God's temple and be more attractive for your spouse?
- When's the last time you heard the fact that people in arranged marriages typically grow to love each other and have a strong marital bond over time?
- How about the fact that almost all societies have had 90-95% marriage rates over time and very low divorce rates if the Church and community actively support them and discourage divorce?

The other scenarios other than tingly respect can work, but they tend to be somewhat to a lot more difficulty to sustain in a culture and especially Church that does not support them well. Even the Church discourages attraction and tingly-respect as non-godly, although it will try to take credit for the successful and godly marriages it produces.

Some or maybe even many pastors have an inadvertent tingly-respect because of their position as pastor attracts women to them. With a tingly-respect structure and a husband who is committed to his mission of building up the Church, usually spending more time with your wife works. However, the same is not the case of other men in the Church who don't have that type of marriage where their wife doesn't already respect them to a decent to large extent.

To put it bluntly, we need to peddle the truth to those in the Church to take it's head out of it's own ass in respect to attraction and preaching Truth about marriage and how God designed it. There's no way it changes otherwise because it's all still going the way of the culture.

The path forward is generally simple but is discouraged by the culture and even the Church, so we need to encourage men to walk that road.

The Lie of Servant Leadership

March 5, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Someone referenced me over to a video about Doug Wilson and Aaron Renn have a sit down chat on the lie of servant leadership. Dalrock covered some stuff on Doug Wilson before where he was in error on a couple topics, but overall ~~it appears that Doug is on the same team~~ he is still in error in some areas (h/t/ FMP). He seems to have come around on some of the particular topics that Dalrock talked about as well which is a good sign.

Here's the summary:

Defining concepts

- Wilson monologues about how the words that Christian use today such as "leadership" are watered down words of other authority words in the Scriptures such as "lord" (1 Peter 2), ruler (when Jesus addresses his disciples), and so on. This is intentional and a bad thing
- Renn and Wilson start by discussing how "servant leadership" is only conservative Christians and not used by egalitarians (for good reason as egalitarians don't believe in leadership). They go into talking about how complementarianism was coined in the late 1980s by CBMW in response to the shifting culture and feminism.
- Wilson makes the astute statement that egalitarians are "paying tribute to the spirit of the age" while complementarians are "paying secret tribute to the spirit of the age."

Elspeth discovered the vid on youtube on Wilson's monologue, so I'm adding it here.

Analyzing the culture and the Bible

- Masculinity generally defined via Piper and Art of Manliness (analysis of various cultures throughout time) generally defined as protect, provide, procreate. In other words, masculinity is defined in relation to women and civilization. Contrast this to the Bible we see that Mission (Jesus, Paul, Adam, etc.) including being strong, preaching Christ, etc.
- In the respect of the above points, a "Servant Leader" defines a man's masculinity and mission to be serving his wife (e.g. idolize his wife).
- Servant leadership is also a prosperity-like gospel vision. If a man does X, Y, and Z, then he'll have a happy wife and happy life. Vending machine guarantee which is wrong.

Attraction traits and comfort/godly/relational traits

- Attraction model is wrong in the vein of 'godliness is sexy' versus PSALM-type traits. Renn uses similar analogies I've used – are women more likely to be attracted to Church worship leader vs the Church janitor or equally yoked (don't have to worry about that if godliness was sexy).

- Church leaders push godliness is sexy versus someone like Jordan Peterson who says women like men who win status competitions with other men. Which one is closer to the truth?
- Need to distinguish between reality, what we want to happen, and what we wish to happen. Godliness is sexy tries to push what we wish to happen to be true but is not true.
- Generally nothing wrong with cultivating attractive traits.
- Women will support a woman if she wants to lose weight, but if she wants to lose weight to be more marriageable that will probably get push back in the Church. Ouch.

Culture and how it impacts Christians

- Most self help gurus that are successful are positive advice or recommendations. Not just critiquing everything and being negative about things. Important now that masculinity is demonized, and there's not many positive examples.
- Church is unsuccessful reaching men. Difference between knocking men down to build them back up and just destroying men without building them up. Similar to iron sharpens iron not just smashes them down. Examples of promise keepers and purity culture imploding — "men can't do anything right" is not the way.
- Implosion of purity culture conflating Biblical teaching with life coaching. Friends first model and platonic issues. Lots of ways to fail but no way for redemption. Teenage and college years awkward and putting a ton of pressure on people for purity expectations contributed to destroying purity culture.
- 1950s culture seems to be idealized by conservative Christians, especially in terms of family roles.
- "Marketplace" dynamics make things much harder, especially with the rise of dating apps

Headship

- Distinguish between responsibility and blame.
- Things may not necessarily be the fault of a man, but he would still need to lead.
- Is the 'servant' the problem in the servant leadership, or is the 'leader' the problem? Most Christians would probably say servant, but Wilson contends it's the leader. It's been sanitized.
- Renn says a lot of questions are swept under the rug such as who determines what the leadership and help are. It's implicitly understood that the wife and children are judging what the man does rather than the head.
- Instead with Jesus and the feet washing Peter actually did not want his feet washed and Jesus said if I don't do it then you have no part of me. In this case, it was Jesus determining how He served His disciples (e.g. they didn't want Him to wash their feet or die for them either).

Dating

- Some general wisdom for dating: “What’s my mission? How do I want to live my life? Then seek out a wife who wants to be a part of that.”
- Marriage markets – would be nice if they went by assortive mating, but typically function in regard to hypergamy throughout many cultures.
- Bad choices: “She’s my better half” and “she’s the boss” very counterproductive as you’re putting yourself down and it can be self fulfilling if she starts to believe that. Top of the pecking order whether pastors or heads of state can self deprecate and get away with it.
- “Servant leadership” plays into that in that it tends to emphasize having the man in a lower status position
- One of the biggest thing is persuasion is social proof. Women interest in a man then more women will be interested. Focus on someone raises their importance in the mind of others.
- Everything in the Bible is True, but it’s wrong thinking to come to the conclusion that not everything outside the Bible is cultural and thus untrue. There are all kinds of sources in truth that are not in the Bible such as the majority of science. Youtube examples of plumbing, electrical, cars, etc. The implication is that we should be wise about other true things such as how attraction is versus trying to make it about how it should be.

Overall, a fairly solid analysis of why things have gone wrong in Christianity. Very much along the lines of my previous two posts on pre-marriage headship and submission and Authority is positional, but effective leadership is by example and action.

The word seems to getting out better these days, so hopefully there will be a renaissance in the Church communities as it continues to grow grassroots.

The “new game plan” for Church marriage renaissance

March 14, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

IFS studies has an article by the same name and why I put “new game plan” in quotes.

https://ifstudies.org/blog/a-new-book-outlines-a-game-plan-for-a-church-led-marriage-renaissance

> 1. Preach regularly on marriage and relationship health.
> In the small churches I attended as a young person, most of the sermons on marriage focused on the “sin” of divorce without much attention to the meaning, purpose, and good of the marital bond. This is not the way it should be, according to Van Epp and De Gance, who emphasize that churches should “preach, teach, model, and celebrate” marriage on a regular basis. This preaching, they explain, requires authenticity from the church’s leaders, who should share about their own relationship ups and downs when they can: “Sharing your own personal struggles places any ‘negative’ message within your own life experience, giving credibility and allowing others in the church to identify with it.”
> 2. De-stigmatize relationship enrichment.
> This recommendation is so important for helping churches get rid of the damaging myth of the ‘perfect’ Christian marriage and the shame that often comes with it. “The single biggest barrier to a successful marriage and relationship ministry is the perception that the only people who attend or participate in such a ministry are people who have problems,” Van Epp and De Gance write. “By making a positive case for relationship ministry—that it’s for everyone at this church, especially for people with great marriages—you allow those who are struggling in their marriage to attend without any shame.”
> 3. Stress that every marriage has seasons.
> “Advancing a message that marriage has different seasons (and some are more challenging than others) can help couples see their struggles as part of the norm of relationship life,” the authors write. “Every couple should be told and understand, through your preaching and teaching, that such ebbs and periodic unhappiness are normal for all marriages—including great marriages.”
> I can’t say enough how much this message matters to a church’s marriage ministry, especially for those who come from broken families and need to hear it again and again. As I shared earlier, this is not a message I consistently heard from pastors or church leaders growing up—or even as a single or newlywed—in the small, Evangelical churches I attended. The ideal of Biblical marriage that is too often presented from the pulpit often feels like a pinnacle of relationship perfection that is impossible to reach. Being assured that there is nothing > abnormal about experiencing hard times in a relationship can encourage couples and free them to seek help when needed.

> 4. Publicly recognize relationship milestones and new marriages.
> Van Epp and De Gance note that marriage is declining in the United States, writing that "every church in America should lean into the catastrophic decline in marriage by holding up and encouraging marriage in creative ways." They recommend highlighting couples who are engaged or newly married, as well as celebrating the anniversaries of long-time married couples. Putting the spotlight on both new and long-term unions in the congregation also helps connect newlyweds to more mature couples and vice versa. Moreover, celebrating couples who have been married 30, 40, or even 50 years sends an inspiring message to the entire congregation that stable, lasting marriages do exist and are attainable. It is a great way for a church to hold up the beauty of marriage and to applaud those who have gone the distance, while offering support to those who are new at it and may have never seen a strong marriage in their own families.
> Of course, there is much more churches can do to strengthen family life in America, and De Gance and Van Epp provide a game plan for faith leaders, including recommending that churches realign their "vision statement to prioritize marriage and family health," conduct regular assessments of relationships in their congregations, and institute "skills-based relationship supports that address the most relevant needs of their people."
> There is evidence that church-led marriage enrichment efforts can strengthen family well-being in entire communities. In Jacksonville, Florida, De Gance led an extensive three-year marriage campaign working with area Protestant and Catholic churches and non-profits. A study of that campaign found that divorce in the Jacksonville area dropped by over 20% during that three-year period—significantly more than the rest of Florida and similar counties across the nation.

I won't argue that these aren't some good things, and that they should help some. At least the study confirms it's helping some.

The big issue is clearly that they're still dancing around the topics like most complementarians.

Let's ignore what the Bible actually says about marriage such as headship and submission, love and respect, not defrauding each other, and all of the other marital roles and responsibilities. Not a peep about the Biblical marial roles and responsibilities in Ephesians, Corinthians, Colossians, Titus, etc much like the YouVersion Bible "marriage courses".

As long as these things are ignored, you may get minor improvements but you will never really fix the issue. God instituted the structure that works best for marriage and how to go about it, and we're ignoring it in favor of putting cosmetic makeup instead of preaching what the Bible says.

Frustrating to say the least.

The despair at the end game of feminism

March 19, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Pretty heartbreaking story honestly. Former Miss USA Cheslie Kryst jumped to her death at 30 years old.

> Former Miss USA Cheslie Kryst penned a heart-rending essay last year reflecting on the pressures of getting older, the need to achieve – and her battle with online trolls who bullied her over her looks.
> Kryst, 30, who tragically jumped to her death from her Midtown high-rise Sunday morning, wrote candidly in an essay for Allure about overcoming the crushing expectations she once placed on herself after she "nearly worked myself to death.
> "I discovered that the world's most important question, especially when asked repeatedly and answered frankly, is: why?," Kryst wrote of her change in thinking.
> "Why work so hard to capture the dreams I've been taught by society to want when I continue to only find emptiness?"
> "A grinning, crinkly-eyed glance at my achievements thus far makes me giddy about laying the groundwork for more, but turning 30 feels like a cold reminder that I'm running out of time to matter in society's eyes — and it's infuriating," she wrote.

As we know, the obvious answer is feminism is an empty push for accomplishments that does not satisfy anyone. It appeals to pride, envy, and greed which all end in despair.

By all worldly measures she had it all:

> The lengthy March 2021 essay provided insight into the mindset of Kryst, who posted a cryptic message on her Instagram page before she jumped, writing, "May this day bring you rest and peace." …
> Kryst went on in her Allure piece to say that "after a year like 2020, you would think we'd learned that growing old is a treasure and maturity is a gift not everyone gets to enjoy.
> "Far too many of us allow ourselves to be measured by a standard that some sternly refuse to challenge and others simply acquiesce to because fitting in and going with the flow is easier than rowing against the current," Kryst continued.
> "Each time I say 'I'm turning 30,' I cringe a little," she wrote. "Sometimes I can successfully mask this uncomfortable response with excitement; other times, my enthusiasm feels hollow, like bad acting.
> "Society has never been kind to those growing old, especially women. (Occasional exceptions are made for some of the rich and a few of the famous.).

> “I fought this fight before and it’s the battle I’m currently fighting with 30,” she wrote. “How do I shake society’s unwavering norms when I’m facing the relentless tick of time? It’s the age-old question: What happens when ‘immovable’ meets ‘unstoppable?’”
> Kryst cited her impressive academic achievements — notably earning a law degree and an MBA at the same time at Wake Forest University after her undergraduate studies at the University of South Carolina, where she was a track athlete.
> “I joined a trial team at school and won a national championship. I competed in moot court; won essay competitions; and earned local, regional, and national executive board positions,” Kryst wrote.
> “I nearly worked myself to death, literally, until an eight-day stint in a local hospital sparked the development of a new perspective,” she said.
> As for her less-than-conventional views, Kryst wrote, “Women who compete in pageants are supposed to have a middle-of-the-road opinion — if any — so as not to offend.
> “I talked candidly about my views on the legalization of marijuana, the Trump Administration’s immigration policies, anti-abortion laws, the confirmation of Justice Amy Coney Barrett, and the successes and failures of criminal justice reform.”

So you have a girl who has tons of accomplishments:

- MBA and a lawyer
- Track and field athlete
- Tons of extracurriculars that she excelled in
- Won Miss USA title
- Had a beach body that many would envy probably

All these things don’t bring happiness.

Ironically, it’s usually the women who are wives and mothers who have the higher happiness and satisfaction with life. Perhaps because it was in alignment with God’s original intent in Creation. Both in those who believe in Him, but also the general positive outcomes following the principles despite whether one is a believer or not.

> Kryst ended her contemplative essay by saying she marked her milestone birthday in her apartment, “parading around in a black silk top, matching shorts, and a floor-length robe while scarfing down banana pudding and screening birthday calls.
> “I even wore my crown around the apartment for most of the day knowing I’d have to give it back at the end of my reign as Miss USA. I did what I wanted rather than the expected,” she wrote.

> “Now, I now enter year 30 searching for joy and purpose on my own terms — and that feels like my own sweet victory,” Kryst said.

The other thing that tends to happen is you have women becoming careerists. They climb the corporate ladder, but that leads to them staying single and personality changes that drive away men. Then they cry out about where have all the good men gone?

As we know from the paradoxical decline of female happiness.

> By many objective measures the lives of women in the United States have improved over the past 35 years, yet we show that measures of subjective well-being indicate that women’s happiness has declined both absolutely and relative to men. The paradox of women’s declining relative well-being is found across various datasets, measures of subjective well-being, and is pervasive across demographic groups and industrialized countries. Relative declines in female happiness have eroded a gender gap in happiness in which women in the 1970s typically reported higher subjective well-being than did men. These declines have continued and a new gender gap is emerging — one with higher subjective well-being for men.

Ain’t no surprise the more you deviate from how God created women to be the more they’ll be unhappy. Women aren’t meant to be like men and/or god as feminism pushes them to be.

Societal expectations are chains that only ensnare and destroy despite how pretty they are to the eye. But trying to find your own way from them almost always leads to ruin too without the truth.

The only real thing that can break the chains is Jesus.

If you have daughters warn them of these things so they are not ensnared and entrapped by the pretty things of the world that only lead to death.

Reality hurts: internet mailbag edition

Lia Thomas (transgender) wins NCAA 500m swimming event

I've been asked what I think of this before, and I actually think it's great. Feminists want to ramrod equality down everyone's throats, but now they moan and groan because the T of the LGBT+ is screwing up women's sports. Actions have consequences.

Babylon Bee hitting it out of the park with the satire:

- After Watching Lia Thomas, Little Girl Adjusts Dreams To Just Winning Second Place At Olympics
- NCAA Swimming Champ Caught In Possession Of Performance-Enhancing Testicles

---

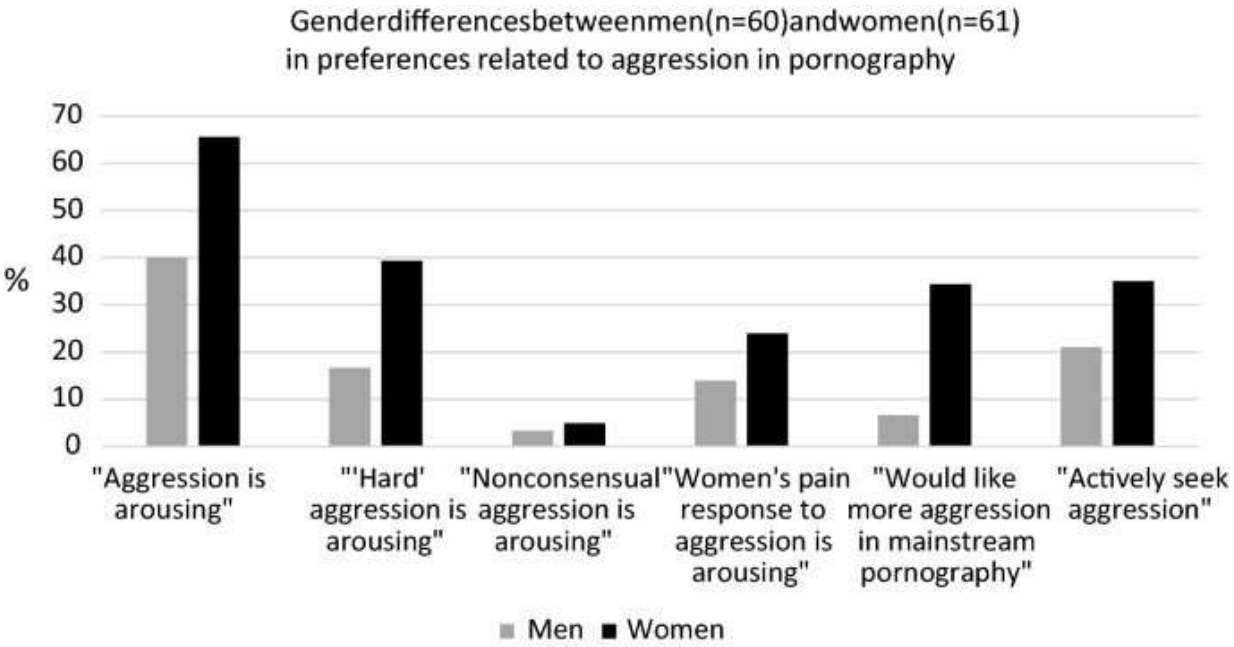
Transgender women in Ukraine labeled as "men" who must stay and fight

This is ironic because prominent Christian conservatives like Piper decry women in the military. Yet they blame men for "allowing" women in the military when in reality it's women trying to force themselves in. However, now that nations are on the brink of war, a lot of women feminists are trying to opt out of the military if they would be forced to fight. Trying to accrue benefits until you actually have to do something you don't want to do.

Women still aren't able to be drafted like men in the US, but you don't see any feminists clamoring for equality there.

Mary J Blige as well as other high profile women forced to pay exorbitant alimony

> 'I Couldn't Pay My Rent': Mary J. Blige Reveals She Had to Go on Tour to Pay Alimony Following Divorce



Only a few high profile women feel the pain that probably hundreds of thousands if not millions of men feel because their wives frivorced them. Many men have to rely on their parents or friends for housing since they can't afford the payments with their kids and homes being taken away.

Ironically, they only feel bad because they're in the situation themselves. It doesn't even cross their mind that so many men are in similar positions unfairly and unjustly at that.

Aggression/dominance is arousing to women

March 29, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Oscar linked to a scientific paper that showed women preferred more aggression in porn.

This is not particularly surprising given that the other preferred women's form of pornography is bodice ripper type romance novels including 50 shades of gray. The cover of these is always a super ripped, handsome, bare bested muscular man dominating the woman he is with (holding her tight, ripping off her clothes, etc.).

Of course, the caveat is that the man is attractive to the woman, which dominance does influence.

I also linked to a similar survey in the Biblical Masculinity Blueprint.

> Oh, and for those that think the "Rough" people are all males, guess again:
>
> | Type of sex | Male | Female |
> |---|---|---|
> | Gentle (slow, rythmic) | 35% | 17% |
> | Not-so-gentle (faster, harder) | 62% | 70% |
> | Rough (spanking, hair-pulling) | 3% | 13% |
> Sorry ladies, the secret is out…

Men have becoming increasing feminized to think that women like gentle and slow sex while women overwhelmingly prefer faster and harder.

We tie this back into Genesis 1 and 2 where God commands man to take dominion over all the earth. That also applies not just "regular life" but also "sex life" with a wife.

It's interesting how Christians tend to want to separate "regular life" from their "sex life" but they are just extensions of the same thing. Taking dominion is not something that you want to turn off or on but a fundamental part of who God designed men to be. Once a man understands that it is much easier to deal with women.

The best reviews are the troll reviews

April 7, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The only text reviews at least so far on The Biblical Masculinity Blueprint are 5 star aside from a few trolls. There's some others 2-4 stars but no one left a review from those, so it's hard to see if Amazon is taking reviews from people who bought the book but rated and didn't want to leave a critique.

All of the ones who actually bought and read the book have the "verified purchase" icon which means that they actually read it and found it helpful.

The best ones are clearly the trolls though. No verified purchase, and no clue what the actual content of the book. They sure love lying though, but are too scared to leave names.

I'll give some serious responses to this regardless because it's instructive.

> 1.0 out of 5 stars If You're Insecure Enough To Buy This, Don't.

> I read this book in order to complete some assigned readings for a class, and was astounded that anyone could actually believe the blatantly manipulative, controlling, and insecure content found inside it. Not only is the attempt at articulating a universal concept of masculinity barely capable of keeping a grasp on reality, it didn't even accurately or fully apply anything broadly enough to be of use to everyone who falls under the label of "masculine." Even under the most narrow definitions, which I'm sure most people who un-ironically read this abide by, where cisgendered, white, able-bodied, upper class men are given priority in meeting the conditions of masculinity, thousands are incapable of attaining any useful semblance of the offered ideal. The hilarious part of this review is how many cliche feminist talking points and shaming tactics it hits but also because it's vague mumbo jumbo because they didn't actually read the book to have anything to critique.

The book is actually opposite of what this review talks about. There is an emphasis on 'leading by example' which including statements like 'not asking my wife to do anything that I wouldn't do myself' is clearly very great "blatantly manipulative, controlled, and insecure." The same is true where I claim that all men should aspire to the qualities of overseers and deacons:

> 1 Timothy 3:1 It is a trustworthy statement: if any man aspires to the office of overseer, it is a fine work he desires to do. 2 An overseer, then, must be above reproach, the husband of one wife, temperate, prudent, respectable, hospitable, able to teach, 3 not addicted to wine or pugnacious, but gentle, peaceable, free from the love of money. 4 He must be one who manages his own household well, keeping his children under control with all dignity 5 (but if a man does not know how to manage his own household, how will he take care of the church of God?), 6 and not a new convert, so that he will not become conceited and fall into the condemnation incurred by the devil. 7 And he must have a good reputation with those outside the church, so that he will not fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.
> 8 Deacons likewise must be men of dignity, not double-tongued, or addicted to much wine or fond of sordid gain, 9 but holding to the mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. 10 These men must also first be tested; then let them serve as deacons if they are beyond reproach. 11 Women must likewise be dignified, not malicious gossips, but temperate, faithful in all things. 12 Deacons must be husbands of only one wife, and good managers of their children and their own households. 13 For those who have served well as deacons obtain for themselves a high standing and great confidence in the faith that is in Christ Jesus.

Quite the male dominated power trip of a fantasy.

This was the funniest statement though:

> Even under the most narrow definitions, which I'm sure most people who un-ironically read this abide by, where cisgendered, white, able-bodied, upper class men are given priority in meeting the conditions of masculinity, thousands are incapable of attaining any useful semblance of the offered ideal.

If anything, I claim that godly masculinity is defined by obedience to God and obeying His commandments (e.g. David's charge to Solomon in 1 Kings 2, 1 Cor 7 and 14, marital roles and responsibilities, etc.). All of the examples in the Bible are actually men of the middle east exhibiting these qualities, so at best you could say I was making the claim that it would be middle eastern men are the epitome of masculinity.

> Biased – red pill, MGTOW philosophy
> Reviewed in the United States on January 10, 2021
> Sadly, this tome is filled with worldly, patriarchal red pill philosophy. It is not Christian. It is not a picture of Jesus who washed his disciples' feet. It is not a picture of how a husband should lay down his life for his wife, just as Jesus' laid down all his heavenly glory to come to Earth to save his church. Do not recommend.

This is the other 1 star and it's much shorter, but more packed with vague mumbo jumbo.

This person clearly does not understand MGTOW because MGTOW has nothing to do with the patriarchy or even marriage as most of the MGTOWs just don't like women. So why would they marry them or try to become a patriarch?

Similarly, the book actually covers the topics of Jesus washing the disciples feet — not denigrating authority but saying to use it rightly to love and serve others. Gasp. That is actually what is recommend in contradiction of this review.

However, obviously this is not the point of this negative review. Rather, this review probably is under the common assumption that being Christ-like is defined by the wife being the judge of a husband's behavior. In other words, the inversion of roles by happy wife, happy life where the husband ends up a slave to his wife's feelings.

All in all, good for a chuckle.

Perseverance of effort or “grit” is tied to well being

April 19, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Perseverance of effort or grit tied to well being study.

> One theory is that grit might be related to subjective well-being by facilitating successful goal pursuit and achievement. Another is that grit is associated with positive and optimistic attitudes toward oneself and life, which then may cultivate a higher sense of well-being.
> Results showed a strong relationship between overall grit and perseverance of effort with subjective well-being. On the other hand, consistency of interest (i.e., passion for long-term goals) was weakly related to subjective well-being. The latter relationship became even weaker for older participants. Culture was not related to the grit-subjective well-being relationship.
> Results also allowed the researchers to disentangle grit from the trait of Conscientiousness in the Big Five Personality inventory. Conscientiousness, or thoughtfulness, is a similar trait that may contribute to higher subjective well-being in that it also facilitates goal pursuit and achievement. Although research shows conscientiousness and grit to be highly correlated, this meta-analysis indicates they are separate constructs that contribute to subjective well-being differently.
> The authors of the study caution that improving an individual’s subjective well-being is not as simple as conducting grit intervention programs aimed at “teaching” or “improving” grit. It still cannot be known whether grit causes improvements in one’s subjective well-being or vice versa. The researchers also caution that there are likely other variables relevant to grit and subjective well-being that were not included in this study.

This is an interesting study that I hadn’t even thought about, but it ties nicely into the Scriptures.

Man was created by God to rule over the earth, yet when sin came to be it corrupted and destroyed many things. Sin, moreover, dominated man such that our efforts were futile before a righteous God. Yet Jesus came to save us from our sins, to those who repent and follow Him.

> Matthew 11:28 “Come to me, all you who are weary and burdened, and I will give you rest. 29 Take my yoke upon you and learn from me, for I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. 30 For my yoke is easy and my burden is light.”

This cultivates joy, thankfulness, and gratefulness to the God who was willing to give it all to save us. Hence, our well being transitions from hopeless to the hope that is in Jesus. Not only do we have joy and peace through the Spirit (our well being) but also the fruit of the Spirit that manifest in our lives allow us to be fruitful and disciplined in Christ.

> Galatians 5:22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, forbearance/patience/long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness and self-control. Against such things there is no law.

Long suffering, faithfulness, and self control are likely tied to the “perseverance of effort” or “grit” that this study is referring to, and we are to use these things to carry out God’s mission to make disciples of all nations.

Women want men to “just get it” and how that plays into submission

April 22, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There was a longer comment chain started by deti about how women want men to just get it. I wanted to analyze it further.

> Women do not like it when men talk about this stuff.
> Women want men to be red pilled. But they want men to figure it out without being told. Or, they want men to have this figured out by the time they encounter the men they date, have sex with, and marry.
> Women do not want to have to be the ones to explain this to men. They don’t want to have to explain it, because…
> — It means he doesn’t “just get it”, which in turn means he can’t think for himself and he’s letting her lead.
> — They don’t want “unattractive” men to be red pilled. If you had to learn this online, it’s not internalized, you didn’t “just get it”, you’re probably a fake, and you can’t sustain what you’ve “learned”. Women don’t want non-naturals to know these things about them.
> — She would be giving up all her secrets which abdicates a lot of her power.
> — His deep knowledge of her, which she revealed, leaves her vulnerable to him judging and ultimately rejecting her.
> — It lays bare women’s depraved sexual natures.
> This is why women love men who act red pilled; but hate men who talk about being red pilled. This is why women want men to be red pilled, but they don’t want men to talk about being red pilled. Women don’t want men who didn’t “just get” this on their own.

I think the intuitive crux of this situation for women is incompetence.

Not only is a man who doesn’t know what he is doing not leading, but he doesn’t even know what to do or even what the problem is. The rest are probably off shoots of this.

For a man on a mission, the vast majority of competence is perfunctory. He knows what the goal is, he’s pursuing his ambition, he’s made plans to start getting that into action, and he’s actively doing that in the real world. Women like and appreciate that, and the same is true of actually leading a woman. Leading a woman is a mission or perhaps “sub-mission” in and of itself. Pun intended.

1. God creates man and makes woman his helper (Gen 1-2).
2. In the ‘New Creation’ Jesus commits Christians to the mission to make disciples of all nations (Matthew 28).
3. Christ and the Church is the perfection of marriage that husbands and wives are to emulate, thus we have a situation of Christ delegating part of His mission to us (Eph 5 + Matthew 28).

4. Husbands then need to know where they fit within the mission of Christ, and delegate some of that to their wife (Matthew 28, Eph 4, etc.).
5. Therefore, a husband's main mission is to carry out the call of Christ, and part of that mission (e.g. a sub-mission) is to lead a wife in that if he has one.
6. The wife's submission to her husbands "sub-mission" can only be true if he actively leads and delegates to her what he wants her to do.
7. Thus, a husband must not only know but he must be competent in leading for her to be a submitted helper.

I don't think it's a coincidence that that the word submission is like this. Both the Greek and English translation have submission as being "under authority." The double entendre Scripturally is equally consistent that a wife is not to be the main mission of a man but God's mission while the wife is a sub-mission under submission.

Technically, Christian husbands are on both sides of the coin as well: a husband is in submission to Christ, and Christ's sub-mission to each husband is his mission in the body of Christ which is made up of many members.

Men who don't understand women either via BP conditioning or were taught incorrectly or are SIMPing for women are inverting the roles in the relationship and don't get it. Hence, the natural repulsion of women to these men. This is also why women can't teach men to be men and nor do they generally want to.

For women, incompetence in men easily leads to contempt. Competence and excellence generally lead to respect while the opposite leads to the latter. And we know how destructive contempt is for relationships and marriages. Gottman's #1 predictor of divorce.

The key takeaway, though, is that anything that doesn't feel like good leadership is generally disliked by women. This includes many things that are often not a man's issue but her own issues. For example, women can have the expectation that good leadership means actually reading her mind instead of her verbalizing things which end up being covert contracts. The same is true of cultural things like sexual experience versus virginity.

It is the mission which gives authority

Expanding on and going up a level on Women want men to “just get it” and how that plays into submission. Some of this is also covered in A Christian understanding of attraction and the role it plays in marriage Part 3.

Mission and the Great Commission

Dominion from the beginning is tripartite.

> Genesis 1:26 Then God said, “Let us make mankind in our image, in our likeness, so that they may rule over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky, over the livestock and all the wild animals, and over all the creatures that move along the ground.” 27 So God created mankind in his own image, in the image of God he created them; male and female he created them. 28 God blessed them and said to them, “Be fruitful and increase in number; fill the earth and subdue it. Rule over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky and over every living creature that moves on the ground.” 29 Then God said, “I give you every seed-bearing plant on the face of the whole earth and every tree that has fruit with seed in it. They will be yours for food. 30 And to all the beasts of the earth and all the birds in the sky and all the creatures that move along the ground—everything that has the breath of life in it—I give every green plant for food.” And it was so.
> Genesis 2:15 The Lord God took the man and put him in the Garden of Eden to work it and take care of it. 16 And the Lord God commanded the man, “You are free to eat from any tree in the garden; 17 but you must not eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, for when you eat from it you will certainly die.”

- Take dominion over all the earth
- Cultivate and keep (the garden) and by extension the earth
- Obey God by not eating of the tree

These 3 commands encompass the nature of man, and the creation of woman falls into that same plan.

> Genesis 2:18 The Lord God said, “It is not good for the man to be alone. I will make a helper suitable for him.” 19 Now the Lord God had formed out of the ground all the wild animals and all the birds in the sky. He brought them to the man to see what he would name them; and whatever the man called each living creature, that was its name. 20 So the man gave names to all the livestock, the birds in the sky and all the wild animals. But for Adam no suitable helper was found. 21 So the Lord God caused the man to fall into a deep sleep; and while he was sleeping, he took one of the man’s ribs and then closed up the place with flesh. 22 Then the Lord God made a woman from the rib he had taken out of the > man, and he brought her to the man.

> 1 Corinthians 11:3 But I want you to realize that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is man, and the head of Christ is God. 4 Every man who prays or prophesies with his head covered dishonors his head. 5 But every woman who prays or prophesies with her head uncovered dishonors her head—it is the same as having her head shaved. 6 For if a woman does not cover her head, she might as well have her hair cut off; but if it is a disgrace for a woman to have her hair cut off or her head shaved, then she should cover her head. 7 A man ought not to cover his head, since he is the image and glory of God; but woman is the glory of man. 8 For man did not come from woman, but woman from man; 9 neither was man created for woman, but woman for man. 10 It is for this reason that a woman ought to have authority over her own head, because of the angels. 11 Nevertheless, in the Lord woman is not independent of man, nor is man independent of woman. 12 For as woman came from man, so also man is born of woman. But everything comes from God.

Woman was created to be a helper for man, and the mission was there from the beginning. In other words, authority was established so that man can effective carry out the Mission of God.

> Matthew 28:18 Then Jesus came to them and said, "All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. 19 Therefore go and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, 20 and teaching them to obey everything I have commanded you. And surely I am with you always, to the very end of the age."
> John 5:19 Jesus gave them this answer: "Very truly I tell you, the Son can do nothing by himself; he can do only what he sees his Father doing, because whatever the Father does the Son also does. 20 For the Father loves the Son and shows him all he does. Yes, and he will show him even greater works than these, so that you will be amazed. 21 For just as the Father raises the dead and gives them life, even so the Son gives life to whom he is pleased to give it. 22 Moreover, the Father judges no one, but has entrusted all judgment to the Son, 23 that all may honor the Son just as they honor the Father. Whoever does not honor the Son does not honor the Father, who sent him.

Instead of the beginning dominion in fellowship with God, we as Christians are invited to be helpers 'redeem' what Adam did in the beginning. In other words, we know that Jesus:Church::husbands:wives, the Church is a helper to Jesus while wives are a helper to their own husbands.

I've said before that the position of authority is given to the husband by God. While that is technically true, the position of authority is given because of the mission. A husband that is not striving for Christ's Mission is missing the big picture as that is what gives the position purpose and meaning. Purpose and meaning change how you act.

The mission giving man purpose and meaning give him and goal and direction. This goal and direction needs foundational establishment (spiritual disciplines) and equipping (evangelizing, discipling, teaching, etc.). This leads to leadership, ambition, competence, excellence, and other masculine traits.

As we've discussed before, the side effects of the mission such as living out your life's purpose is beautiful and very attractive to women. It's not a coincidence that all of these things are intricately intertwined especially understanding that a husband's authority is from the overarching mission and the purpose of a husband's sub-mission requires his wife's submission.

How are we supposed to become more like Jesus?

May 3, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Redpillboomer asks:

> The thing with Jesus is that He is the perfect man. I believe all of what we talk about on this blog concerning masculinity is tied up in Him in some way or the other. The difficulty I have with Jesus as a role model for me is exactly what am I to emulate in Him? The closest I can get is to let His Spirit work in me over time (sanctification), and gradually I begin to look more like Him, but always an imperfect version of Him and the process (towards sanctification) is a bit mysterious to me. It just seems to show up over time as I put the time in getting to know Him and endeavor to walk with Him, however imperfectly.
> I will say, over the Easter season I watched two programs, The Chosen and The Passion of Christ, and I thought the actors did a good job portraying Christ. Good in that I could relate to Him more in his physical presence on earth and his masculine presence in general; however, still, even in the actor portrayals, Jesus always maintains frame, like he ALWAYS knows how to show up POWERFULLY PERFECT in any given situation, I admire that in Him so greatly; but me be like that? Good luck, not this side of heaven is it going to happen.
> I seem to be able to relate more to Biblical characters that have strong masculine traits and corresponding weaknesses about them. It's like, "I recognize that trait in me too." I like King David's resilience and patience with letting God work things out and not trying to force outcomes, I can relate to that and attempt to emulate it. And, what man cannot empathize with David when he sees Bathsheba bathing? Of course what he subsequently did was totally wrong, aka sin, but being mesmerized by a naked beauty and lusting for her, "Yep, I can relate to that one alright." So David, even though he's a larger than life figure in so many ways, his masculinity is relatable to in many ways as well.
> So, maybe relating to some sort of composite picture of masculinity in the Biblical men is a possible way to get at the question I originally posed, "So what exactly does a man respected by other men look like?"

I totally get this. A good analogy may be meeting an expert in a sport or certain field today when you're just a beginner in that field. They just know soooo much more than you and have been in that field so long that it seems overwhelming and you cannot compare at all. Then you realize that we're supposed to emulate God/Jesus who is literally way above any human expert.

What has worked for me personally is focusing on incremental improvement. I was not really a fan of the proliferation of "What would Jesus do?" especially since most of the Christians who parroted it didn't have an accurate picture of who Jesus was (e.g. feel good nice guy). However, seeing how Jesus didn't fall for verbal tricks and kept focusing on His mission and showing fruits of the Spirit while calling out hypocrisy is a much broader but simpler thing we can all do.

I think the biggest thing that most men aren't doing is making God's mission for us paramount. How are we living that out everyday of our lives? It's easy to get sucked into life and get busy and ignore making disciples and evangelizing or not using our spiritual gifts. Most Christian men (and women) for that matter would do well to actually write down a mission statement and then taking logical and practical steps to follow that.

That's the biggest thing with Jesus that stands out to me: He was always on His father's business no matter if He was with the Pharisees, people who needed healing, crowds, His disciples, in foreign lands and foreign peoples, with authority figures, and whoever else. He found a way to have those spiritual conversations that hit to the heart, even when others were trying to distract Him with worldly things.

The Biblical characters and associating with the traits also appears to be like the Catholic and Orthodox 'veneration' of the Saints. It can be hard to say to emulate Jesus, but many of the saints despite their flaws were good with certain virtues that they are known for. We can try to emulate those in our lives.

Christianity is not as bad as you think?

May 7, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ironically, this article on No, Christianity Is Not as Bad as You Think 5 Statistics That Reveal It's Good for the World is somewhat relevant now that Roe v Wade is apparently being revisited by the Supreme Court.

The 5 stats being:

- Cultural narrative #1: Christians aren't really pro-life; they're just pro-birth.

Christians adopt at 5% vs 2% rate for non-Christians. Surprise. Christians actually care more about orphans than the world.

- Cultural narrative #2: Christians are sexually repressive and anti-sex, creating a toxic purity culture.

Highly religious couples have the highest rates of sexual satisfaction compared to less religious and mixed/secular couples.

- Cultural narrative #3: Christianity is emotionally repressive and bad for your mental health.

Instead, data shows less depression, less suicide, less emotional-pain medicators, such as smoking and substance abuse, greater social support, greater meaning in life, greater life satisfaction, more volunteering, greater civic engagement, and children more likely to grow up happy.

- Cultural narrative #4: Christians don't care about the poor—only political power.

Data shows Christians more often give to the poor and do volunteer work

- Cultural narrative #5: Christianity is gender-oppressive, a tool of the abusive patriarchy, and creates toxic relationships for women.

Data shows that church attendance yields the most enjoyable and least abusive relationships for women.

I guess this data is useful to some extent in verifying things we already know, but it's unlikely to convince non-Christians of anything when their primary disagreement with Christianity isn't logical in nature in most cases I've experienced. Most of the time someone under the guise of 'Christianity' or something did something to hurt or exploit them or they had a bad experience with Church or something similar. This is where Jesus' statement of loving your enemies, praying for them, and doing good to them tends to make the most difference in the long run as it shows them love rather than trying to argue an easily winnable yet technically unwinnable argument as arguments don't change hearts.

I suppose much like most apologetics that hard data is the most useful for Christians to understand and confirm that God's ways are always beneficial for us compared to the destructive ways of the world. Something something about wisdom in Proverbs.

This also goes to show Christians how much they need to be aware of deceptions from the world. It's very easy to fall into a trap thinking one thing is true when it is not, especially if it is repeated over and over again. "Happy wife, happy life" is definitely one of those that many Christians have become deceived over.

The blind side: what works for the pastor usually does not work for you

May 9, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Remember back to the typical maxim I use:

- Women are attracted to the pastor, worship band leader, Bible study leader and not usually the Church janitor, parking lot helper, or door greeter.

In general, the vast majority of pastors and other popular Christians seem to have a big blind spots in in terms of their what the Scriptures say about husbands and wives and what should actually be put into practice.

As Jack has been pointing out with the series in articles like the responsible figurehead and the bungling dimwitted lazy husband, it seems to be the case where the Christian pastors or popular Christian authors fall into a warped view of Christian marriage. For instance, it's common for pastors to refer to things like hyper-patriarchy (e.g. the alternate named 'abusive authority' via feminists) or the wife is the ruler of the home based on a misinterpretation of Titus 2. Likewise, it's common to fall into the trap of attempting to headship a version of appeasing wives' feeling (e.g. happy wife, happy life).

There also seems to be multiple reasons for this.

- Focus on the family articles with Dobson, Mohler, and others typically fall into the trap of an actual husband being so committed to the ministry that his wife is getting ignored. Once they start to pull back from their ministry and give more attention to their wife, their marriage improves. This gives them the impression that to fix their marriage problems most other men would do well to focus on their wife more.

However, most men are actually focusing on their wife too much! They are making their wife their mission instead of actually having a mission aligned with the Great Commission. Therefore, this often backfires.

The PUAs got at least one thing right which is #3 of the 16 commandments of poon:

> III. You shall make your mission, not your woman, your priority

If your wife is your mission then you are serving her and not God. The Bible clearly states that from the beginning that God's mission takes priority (e.g. take dominion over the earth, cultivate and keep the garden/earth) and that hasn't changed with Jesus' Great Commission which is make disciples to take dominion over the earth and cultivate people. Your wife is your helper in this, and she is not the main mission.

- As pointed out in the responsible figurehead, it appears Doug Wilson along with Bnnon and Foster seem to fall into another trap that is common with pastors. Since pastors and other leaders in the Church have authority and high status, it is much easier for them to actually have authority to abuse. The various scandals coming out of different Churches seem to confirm this fact. This appears to also sometimes be blended in with the first point of too much time spent in ministry rather than at home.

However, your random average man in the Church is nowhere even close to having some hyper-patriarchy or authoritative abuse occur in his home. In fact, in most cases it's the wife who is wearing the pants and has the authority. When a husband takes steps to actually start to be the leader in his home, his wife's distress at destroying the inverted role relationships may often be interpreted by these pastors as abuse.

This misattribution seems to be fairly common where your pastor can't understand the steps that work for them don't work your average man. It's two different situation altogether, and in the case of the random average man we should actually be teaching him to have a strong, authoritative leadership of his own home.

- The reason why Dalrock's insight was so useful is that he was just your random average Joe in the Church. He didn't have a pastors authority or status working for him. He could make some keen insights into the differences between pastors and your average man that showed distinct differences in how women responded in those situations versus with your average man.

This is very similar to the analogy that an attractive man giving a woman flowers is romantic and an unattractive man giving a woman flowers is a creep.

A pastor pulling back from his ministry work and giving more "quality time" to his wife is likely going to be interpreted as romantic since he has multiple lines of attractive traits working for him (Church leader, status, authority, respect, etc), while your average man may not necessarily be attractive to his wife anymore especially if she is running the marriage because he loses the status and respect from being the leader in his own home. Hence, any type of spending more time, choreplay, or other types of 'service' related activities toward her tend to be met with trying to win her favor and thus contempt instead of being romantic.

My conclusion is thus:

- If pastors want to help men, they need to be teaching them to have full authority in their own homes and telling wives to fully submit like the Bible states (e.g. Eph 5, 1 Peter 3, etc.).
- They need to stop assuming your average man is an abuser and stop spending so much time writing about the exceptions like "what if he tells me to sin." If exceptions come up they should be dealt with, but your average man who is not an abuser should not have to continue hearing about things that he would never do in the first place. This is the same as the 'anti-rape' courses in colleges and universities. Your average man is not a rapist, and rapists will rape even if you tell them not to. Waste of time on the wrong things and doesn’t help men get it right.

- Your average man should be learning how to make confidently decisions and expect to be obeyed by his wife. More time should be spent on male headship and wifely submission from the pulpit. Use your authority as a pastor to teach what is right. You will easily be called an abuser in the world for this, but Christians need to stand united and refuse to concede any ground on that.

Another divorce (Lysa TerKeurst of Proverbs 31 ministries) part 2 redux

May 13, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The another divorce post I made in 2017 on Proverb's 31 ministry's Lysa TerKeurst has an update (h/t Deti). It's currently the most commented post on my blog, mainly because tons of trolls came out of the woodwork when I criticized that at the very least she shouldn't be in ministry anymore.

Any man who can't keep his household in order (even a wayward wife) should not be in ministry per 1 Timothy 3 qualifications of elders and deacons. Regardless of if you believe women should be leaders in ministry or not, you'd think that women would be held to the same standard.

To reiterate: now that the divorce is happening again she shouldn't be in ministry.

To recap the previous post the situation seems to be:

- Art TerKeurst seems to have some substance abuse problems and cheated
- Lysa TerKeurst filed for divorce in 2017
- Supposedly 1 year later they tried to reconcile (which I gave her props for).
- Since then all seemed well until she filed for divorce again

To update the situation, Christian Post supposedly has more details.

> A recent court filing has shed light on the divorce proceedings between Proverbs 31 Ministries founder Lysa TerKeurst and her husband, Art, including evidence the latter spent over $100,000 of the couple's money on an "illicit sexual" extramarital affair with a woman he met online.
> Lysa TerKeurst filed for divorce in December 2021 and publicly announced her decision in January, revealing her husband of nearly three decades had engaged in "chosen patterns of behavior that dishonor God and the biblical covenant of marriage." The couple has five adult children together.
> In 2017, TerKeurst revealed she would be pursuing a divorce from her husband due to his infidelity and struggles with addiction. At the time, she wrote he had "been repeatedly unfaithful to me with a woman he met online" and was abusing substances. However, the couple renewed their vows just over a year later after working to restore their marriage.
> In her latest divorce announcement, TerKeurst said her husband had "broken" those renewed vows.
> In February, Art TerKeurst filed a response to the divorce petition, requesting post-separation support, alimony, an equitable division of property, damages and the rescission of a post-nuptial agreement, Ministry Watch reported.
> He claimed that he signed the post-nuptial agreement under duress, at a time when he was suicidal and preparing to enter a treatment facility for alcoholism. Art TerKeurst argued that after he finished treatment for his addictions and the couple renewed their vows, he believed the post-nuptial agreement was invalidated as part of their “fresh start.”

Though admitting he’d engaged in “illicit sexual behavior” prior to the post-nuptial agreement, he claimed to have been a “faithful and dutiful spouse” ever since. Seeking post-separation support, Terkeurst said he is “actually and substantially dependent upon [his] wife for his maintenance and support,” adding the does not possess the “financial ability or adequate resources” to meet his accustomed standard of living.

But in April, Lysa TerKeurst entered a motion to dismiss Art’s counterclaims, a request to compel arbitration and a reply to his allegations, according to Ministry Watch.

In her filing, the ministry leader said her husband freely agreed to the post nuptial agreement and voluntarily withdrew from the alcohol treatment program without completing it. She claimed his allegations of being suicidal were false, and that Art TerKeurst had exhibited “narcissistic and sociopathic tendencies” over the years.

The Forgiving What You Can’t Forget author claimed that the couple “maintained completely separate financial accounts pursuant to the post-nuptial agreement” even after reconciling, and said that post-separation support and alimony ought to be denied due to her husband’s infidelity.

The filing also includes text messages between Art TerKeurst and “Mistress X.” He allegedly met the woman on the website SugarDaddy.com and spent at least $118,000 of the TerKeursts’ money on the relationship. Expenses included paying for the mistress to move from Atlanta to Charlotte, North Carolina, and buying her a “pre-engagement left hand ring.”

In her January divorce announcement, the 52-year-old said she’d fought “really hard to not just save my marriage but to survive the devastation of what consistent deception of one spouse does to the other.”

“It’s brutal and heart crushing to constantly fear the hurtful choices of someone you love. I’ve had to learn the hard way there’s a big difference between mistakes (which we all make) and chosen patterns of behavior that dishonor God and the biblical covenant of marriage.”

In an April Instagram post, the ministry leader shared an update with her followers, reflecting on the moment she said, “No more. No more devastation. No more betrayal. No more being lied to. No more.”

“Sometimes ‘no more’ means implementing good boundaries that will help hold each person accountable to healthier relational patterns,” she wrote.

“Sometimes ‘no more’ means acknowledging a heartbreaking reality that wise > counsel has helped you see is no longer sustainable. Both dynamics require that we pursue healing. We need solid truth from God's word to help guide and direct us. We need a godly professional counselor who is specifically trained to educate, comfort, and challenge us."

In short,

- Supposedly after they reconciled Lysa made him sign a post-nupital agreement
- Art contests that he has remain a dutiful spouse since then, though Lysa alleges that there are text messages between him and a mistress and that he spent over 100k on her
- Art is supposedly ""actually and substantially dependent upon [his] wife for his maintenance and support," adding the does not possess the "financial ability or adequate resources" to meet his accustomed standard of living."

There's two big things here of note.

The first being who is able to spend over 100k from their finances and the other spouse not notice it until then? Lysa is not aware of her finances such that her husband can just drop 6 figures before she even notices? Something doesn't add up here. I'll come back to this later.

The second is the irony of the almost comical inversion of roles in the marriage.

Lysa is the one in big time ministry. Lysa is the breadwinner. Lysa is the one leading the marriage, and the one who wanted the post-nupital agreement. Art is acting as the scorned and cheating wife who would claim that her husband has no time for her. Art wants alimony to support his standard of living.

Of course, we can also see the double standard. If a Christian man wanted his wife to sign a pre-nup or post-nup pretty much all Christians whether liberal or conservative would jump down his throat and condemn him. If a Christian wife cheated on her husband, there are many Christian denominations today that would jump to support the wife and excuse her behavior: 'the husband clearly wasn't loving her enough so she cheated.'

Deti comments similarly:

> Evidence that Christian women marry and divorce just like nonChristian women. To wit: Lysa and Art reconcile; but Lysa makes Art sign a postnup (presumably limiting Art's access to Lysa's income and/or limiting/eliminating his right to alimony if they divorce, and requiring that they arbitrate any post-agreement divorce proceedings). Lysa presses with the divorce. Art asks for an "equitable" property division, and for alimony, stating that he's financially dependent on Lysa. Art asks that the postnup be torn up because he signed it under duress and he believed the postnup was invalidated by their reconciliation and "fresh start".
> Lysa argues that Art was a cheat, a drunk, and a sociopath who didn't complete alcohol treatment. She has asked the court to enforce the postnup and to compel arbitration. She argues Art isn't entitled to alimony because he cheated on her.

> (Funny – there are tons of men paying alimony to wives who cheated on them. In the current iteration of divorce law, parties are entitled to property division and spousal support “without regard to the parties’ conduct”, which means “it doesn’t matter if he cheated; if the law and circumstance gives him a right to alimony, then he has a right to it”.)
> Lessons:
> 1) Christians litigate their divorces just like everyone else.
> 2) Witness the demonization of the husband (as always happens) and the lionization/canonization of the wife – even in Christian media covering Christian “ministers”
> If Lysa and Art were divorcing in my state, Art would be entitled to lifetime alimony, at least under the law’s technical requirements. That law is not applied uniformly as between men and women. If a woman asks for alimony, she almost always gets it. If a man asks for alimony, he is routinely laughed out of court and told to get a job.

Now, obviously none of us condone Art’s apparent substance abuse and cheating and supposed misuse of finances, but Lysa is clearly not really handling this in a Christian manner either especially with litigation and continuing in ministry.

Why would she want to turn off the money maker though? Heh.

How much of this is due to the influence of inversion of roles and the wife out-earning the husband?

Typically, there is a much higher risk of divorce when a woman out-earns a man. In real life, women are not attracted to men they out-earn. In many cases, they won’t even date them or if they find out their relationship starts to sour. However, in this case Lysa was married to Art. This is predictable behavior confirmed by studies.

> Studies also show that when a wife out-earns her husband, he is more likely to cheat. In fact, about 15% of the men in a study by the American Sociological Review who were 100% financially dependent on their wives had affairs. That’s three times higher than the 5% of high-earning wives who strayed, the study showed.

https://www.kiplinger.com/personal-finance/603298/women-who-make-more-than-their-husbands-should-watch-out

The above article suggests the main reason for him cheating is that a man can feel emasculated and his self-esteem can take a hit by being out-earned by a wife, and sometimes that is true. However, it’s also a favorite feminist shaming tactic, which is why it cannot be fully trusted. What is also true is that the disrespect from the wife toward her husband for out-earning him is also prevalent but less talked about because it’s not flattering to women.

Doing some google-fu, Proverbs 31 ministry started 30 years ago (1992) which directly coincides with Art and Lysa's 30 year marriage. What seems likely is that the as the ministry grew bigger and bigger this changed the relations and roles in the marriage over time. This has all of the trappings of the typical husband-wife cheating scenario, except with the inversion of roles.

What typically happens is that the husband gets so caught up in ministry he supposedly 'neglects' his wife. This turns into a cycle where she starts to feels neglected and lose respect for him and since she starts to disrespect him then he turns more of his time to ministry. This destructive cycle continues until she turns to other emotional outlets which leads to an emotional affair and cheating

What happens in the opposite case is a woman's career (Proverbs 31 ministry) starts to take off. Since she is now out-earning her husband she starts to lose respect for him. This subtly changes her stance toward him where she starts to be more disrespectful to him and he starts to withdraw from the situation. Her earning more than him can make him feel emasculated as well which contributes to the negative feedback loop. His withdraw from the disrespect is generally interpreted by the wife as a 'lack of leadership' which means she probably throws more time into the ministry and this leads to the similar destructive cycle above. This continues until the husband cheats or divorces or the husband does, or it becomes some type of impotent sexless marriage.

Lysa's divorce litigation seems pretty much like a woman scorned. A woman who respects her husband would never do this. Couple that with Art supposedly cheating and spending 100k without her noticing and things don't really add up. It seems likely that she was intentionally waiting until she had enough evidence so she could win her court case. Not that I blame her, but it is clearly not the Christian thing to do either. What is 100k lost if you can get out of alimony when your ministry annual revenue is over $6-7 million and nets over $1 million per year.

How much the inversion of roles (disrespect and/or emasculation) and her out earning him contributed to the divorce we may never know… but the likelihood is a lot. We know that when women cheat they are already checked out of the relationship (disrespect), but when men cheat they usually aren't checked out and can make the marriage work. However, in this case it's hard to say because substance abuse can confound things substantially.

Also, this is not to say that a wife earning more than her husband is wrong, but Christians need to take care that if this does happen the wife must respect her husband and the husband must love his wife despite any feelings that may tempt them toward divorce otherwise. Obey the Bible.

Update:
https://www.todayschristianwoman.com/articles/2008/september/i-had-abortion.html

Did a bit of digging and basically their past has:

1. Sex before marriage

2. Abortion
3. Shotgun marriage after abortion
4. Cycles of disrespect-anger dysfunction from both

Not surprised this ended in divorce 30+ years later. I highly doubt Lysa is innocent in this divorce either given their history.

Women are attracted to the pastor, worship leader, bible study leader and not the Church janitor, parking lot coordinator or door greeter redux

May 17, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

My wife was talking to the worship leader the other day about his relationship. Apparently, the story goes that when he became the new worship leader for the Church it was only a month later that he started dating his girlfriend. He admitted that he was scoping out the women once he got there.

Then my wife follows up with the classic line. To paraphrase her: “When we (women) would go to Church services or Church conferences we would look at the worship leaders hand (to see if there was a ring) to see if he was single and if he was then potentially get to know him.”

Obviously, this statement does not need confirmation, but it is still nice to hear what women are actually thinking about their attraction as many men don’t even know this fact.

The positions such as pastor, worship leader, bible study leader, and such naturally have some of the attractive traits of PSALM – power, status. athleticism, looks, money. Typical, power and status within the Church itself that is attractive to women. Additionally, there are some masculine traits present such as confidence playing in front of a lot of people, leadership within the worship team itself, excellence/competence, and others. In the case of the worship leader add on musical talent — men get 3x more interest with guitars in their profile — and it’s clear why women are attracted to a man in that position.

For those who haven’t been around the blog that long, attraction is explained thoroughly in A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage Part 3.

It’s also more often the case where the latter positions are mostly with single men. Most pastors are already married as women grab them when they’re on track to be a pastor. Worship leader or Bible study leader are typically a bit more hit or miss if they’re married or not, so those are typically the ones most women will flock toward if there’s no single pastor availability.

Of course, every man who wants to be married or who is married should be cultivating their masculine traits at the very least (confidence, leadership, courage, assertiveness, etc.) in order to be an effective Christian in evangelism and discple making which also help with leading a wife as well.

Study: Education and income predict indicators of interest

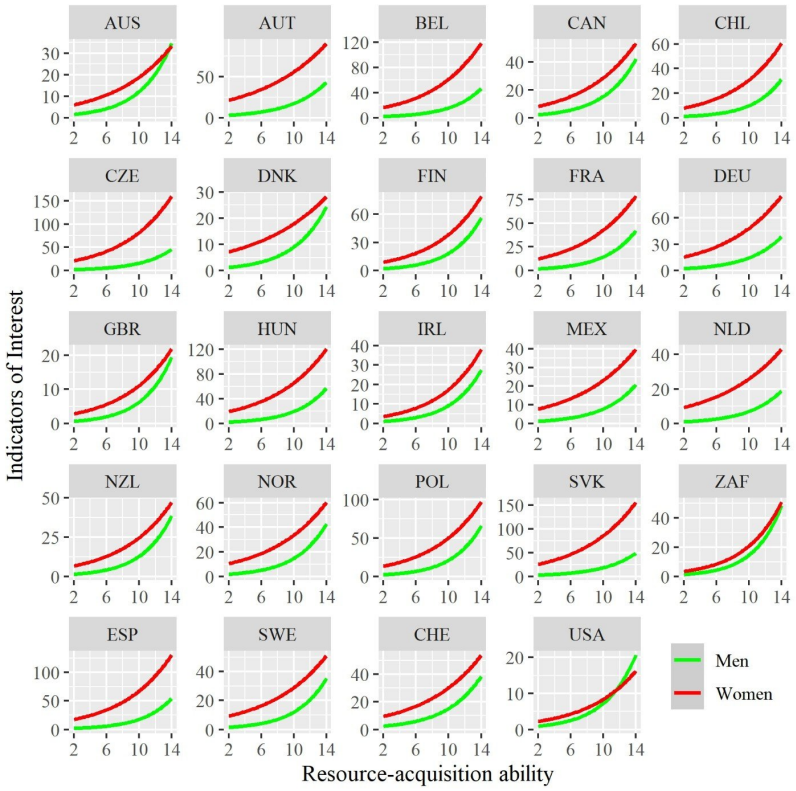
May 23, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since this study has been making the rounds, thought it be interesting to analyze in light of some of the other posts like the pastor, worship leader, etc in regard to the M part of PSALM.

IFS blog goes over this study too.

They basically used data from some of the dating websites. They made their own selection criteria for “Indicators of Interest” (funny that they use that term that the PUAs use) basically based on half on income and half on education level.

> Each member’s record contained dozens of variables, ranging from height to personality to religion. For brevity, we mention here only those that we included in our analyses. To capture how much attention each profile received, we created a composite variable called IOI (Indicators of Interest). This variable was formed by combining the number of messages, “likes,” and “winks” a member had received from others (Cronbach’s $\alpha = 0.72$). To predict IOI, we used the member’s country of residence, sex, and their resource-acquisition ability. Resource-acquisition ability was measured by combining ($r = .32$; $M = 7.75$, $SD = 2.48$) the member’s income (1 = Very low; 7 = Very high [based on local currency]) with their level of education (1 = No High School Degree; 7 = Doctorate [e.g., MD, PhD, JD]) consistent with work suggesting education and intelligence may operate as resource-acquisition ability markers (Fletcher et al., 1999; Jonason & March, 2021).Footnote 5



Participants could score 1-7 on income and 1-7 on education. Their scores seem to be combined to get a composite score. Thus, someone who maxed out on income (7) and had only a high school education (1) could score an 8, and someone who had minimal income (1) but had a doctorate level education (7) would also score an 8 total. They then charted these to various countries that they had data from.

> Women received between 540% and 780% more indicators of interest than men

Pretty obvious. Women in general generate so much interest on sites because it’s more men overall, and men are messaging a ton more than women since men are generally supposed to be the initiators.

> Men with a resource-acquisition ability 1 SD greater than the mean received 255% more IOI ($M = 15.48$, $SE = 0.84$) than those 1 SD less than the mean ($M = 4.36$, $SE = 0.24$; $p < .001$). In contrast, women with a resource-acquisition ability 1 SD greater than the mean received 103% more IOI ($M = 36.79$, $SE = 4.06$) than those 1 SD less than the mean ($M = 18.11$, $SE = 2.00$; $p < .001$).

Women's interest in men who earn more than average versus less than average increases substantially more than men's interest in women. Again, not a surprise.

Male interest for women rises with increasing income and education level, but generally not as much as women's interest for men (for obvious reasons). I suspect there's more interest for women with higher income and education because that allows certain types of lifestyles and possibly less divorce risk for men (if she has her own income less likely to be divorce raped for half if she's bringing in a lot). While women find money/provision attractive, men don't and usually consider it some sort of plus on the side.

In particular, the US curve seems to be exceptionally exaggerated compared to other countries where if you're earning in the 5-7 range (e.g. 4 is the middle that would mean average household income of around 67k in 2020... so probably above 80-100k+) and education in the 5-7 range (I assume this means if average is some college to college degree then it would be masters-doctorate) then your interest can actually out-pace women. It appears on the US curve that men hitting around 11-12 range start to outpace the lols that women get. 11.5-12 range on the 2-14 scale ironically represents approximately the top 20% of men (thus, again confirming the 20% rule).

In regard to these types of things, I think it's generally biased towards the PSAL more than the M. All are attractive, but the preference women have for is more in PSAL more than the M because most women have access to M now through working a job themselves.

What we typically end up with is some sort of semi-hierarchy where we have a 3 tiered type of system:

1. Attractive – PSAL (power, status, athleticism, looks) and masculinity (confidence, leadership, assertiveness, courage, strength, etc.)

2. Semi-attractive/semi-desirable – M (money)
3. Desirable – Relationship traits (e.g. kindness, virtue, and character, fruit of the Spirit, godliness, good with kids, etc.)

For sex mainly 1 but sometimes 2. For relationships, generally women tend to want all 3 but may settle with 1-2 in some cases. Similar with men who may have just sex with beauty, but want to marry someone with both beauty and kindness.

Attraction factors tends to dominate on dating websites, although money can and has been shown to play a modifying type of role in that women find men more attractive if they earn more. The general thing though with dating websites is it's hard to show power, status, and athleticism without coming off as try-hard, so looks tend to dominate especially with shirt off muscle showing pictures. Money obviously can be a secondary factor too.

In general, though, the downside is that you are at a higher risk of attracting gold diggers if you display your income, so it's generally unwise to do that on dating websites or even talking about it when dating. You want a woman to be with you aside from the money not for the money.

They can’t bring themselves to recommend the right solution

This article from the Washington Examiner gets so close.

> So why is marriage so much stronger among the college-educated than the non-college-educated? Cherlin doesn’t connect these dots, but he does note that “the norm that men must have steady jobs to be considered as good husbands remains strong. It may be desirable for wives to work too, but it is not required. In a 2014 national survey, 78% of never-married women said that whether a man had a steady job would be very important criterion for them in choosing a spouse or a partner, whereas just 46% of never-married men said it would be important that their spouse or partner have a steady job.”
> The problem is, there simply aren’t as many gainfully employed men to go around as there used to be. A 2012 Pew Research Center survey found that, “among never-married adults ages 25 to 34, the number of employed men per 100 women dropped from 139 in 1960 to 91 in 2012, despite the fact that men in this age group outnumber young women in absolute numbers. In other words, if all never-married young women in 2012 wanted to find a young employed man who had also never been married, 9% of them would fail simply because there are not enough men in the target group.”
> Where men have jobs and their “living is assured,” marriage is as strong as ever. Unfortunately, fewer and fewer men are reaching a place where their living is assured. And the problem is only looking like it will get worse. Women make up 60% of all college students and 66% of all college graduates .
> If we want more children to have an equal opportunity to succeed, we are going to have to find ways to get working-age men into well-paying jobs.

The obvious solution being that boys and men are struggling in the “feminized school system.” Therefore, we need to de-emphasize female achievement and push male achievement so that more men get good jobs and also go to college and graduate school.

Let alone any liberals… most conservatives would die before they spoke out against female achievement for male achievement. They’ve tied their wagon to feminism and can’t get off the death spiral ride.

Look at how people went crazy over Lori Alexander’s Men prefer debt free virgins. Not only liberals but many conservatives and Christians. She’s right though. Not only do men prefer debt free virgins, but women prefer high wage men. Ironically, the two go together.

If women are sucking up tons of high(er) wage jobs then they’re either going to have to marry down (which they won’t) or become cat ladies (the higher likelihood).

Why do women always screech when virginity is brought up?

May 30, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

To follow up a bit with the previous post on they can't bring themselves to recommend the right solution, there's been several questions on reddit and discord about this.

Overall, women HATE being judged and rejected. The reason why Lori's "men prefer debt free virgins without tattoos" and NYCpastor's "10 women men should not marry" went viral is because women can't stand those two things. Virginity is the double whammy in that if she's had sex or "made a mistake" before she's being judged… but not only that she's being implicitly rejected by tons of men.

- https://thetransformedwife.com/men-prefer-debt-free-virgins-without-tattoos/
- https://thetransformedwife.com/godly-men-prefer-debt-free-virgins-without-tattoos/
- http://web.archive.org/web/20150119232801/http://nycpastor.com/2014/12/29/10-women-christian-men-should-not-marry/
- http://web.archive.org/web/20150121003501/http://nycpastor.com/2014/10/23/ten-men-christian-women-should-not-marry/

The irony is NYC pastor also did a 10 men women should not marry but it only had like 2 comments before the 10 women men should not marry blew up to 1000+. Only then did it start to accumulate the same comments and hate.

Psychologically, women are turned on by being the object of desire (e.g. of a successful, handsome, charismatic leader… 10 shades of gray and other romance novels). Conversely, if women are the object of judgment and rejection that initiates their rage. It's like an on/off switch type of thing.

The reason why women are so into social media is that they get positive attention and affirmation. Judgment and rejection rips that away into negative attention/criticism. Some women are OK with negative attention as long as they are getting paid (e.g. porn, only fans), but if they're not getting paid and receiving only judgment and rejection they HATE it.

Women don't really care if you hate them or whatever, but one of the worst things you can do to a woman is reject and judge them.

The rising popularity of revenge regret videos

June 3, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's several types of videos going around that are pretty popular nowadays. For instance,

Girl Friendzones The Nice Guy, She Lives To Regret Her Decision

Gold Digger Dumps Broke Boyfriend, Then Regrets Her Decision

These videos have some good lessons under the guise of saying "don't be with women who are using you for your money" or "don't try to friend a woman into a relationship who treats you as her emotional tampon."

But on the other hand, they also don't tell men what is attractive. A man may still think the incorrect things about relationships even while learning this "lesson" and still be in deep doo doo because his framework about understanding what attracts women hasn't changed at all. Similarly, a man who acts the way that the actor does in these videos would be unlikely to actually get into another relationship in the first place, and if he did it might be as dysfunctional as the first if he didn't change at all and was "just himself."

The major bad part about these types of videos is they tend to be wrapped up in over-dramatic "get back at the other person" type of mentality which is very harmful. If someone doesn't want to be with you just leave and move on. In this respect, revenge porn is much like bitterness that keeps on giving. Ultimately, I've seen some men get in the cycle of bitterness and hating women and then that's all they can think about and mull on. Leave the revenge and bitterness alone. Move on with your life.

“Red pill” real world studies and interaction

June 5, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Watched several of Alexander Grace Youtube videos. It appears he’s one of the few going out and doing so called “red pill” interviews and looking at various studies to help me see what female nature is like in real life.

A few of the studies he goes over are:

- Study: Height of choosiness – youtube vid

The big takeaway from this one is that the shorter you are the number of competitors you have to find a potential mate goes way up for men.

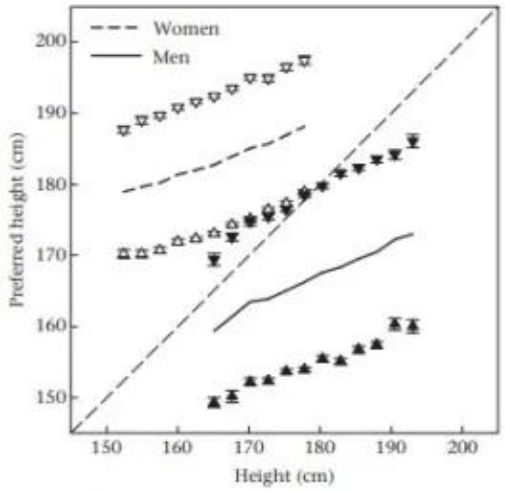

Figure 1. Minimum and maximum preferred height (means ± SE) in relation to subject height for men (filled triangles) and women (open triangles). The lines reflect the midpoint between the minimally and maximally preferred height. For men, bins below 65 inches and above 75 inches, and for women bins below 60 inches and above 70 inches, were collapsed.

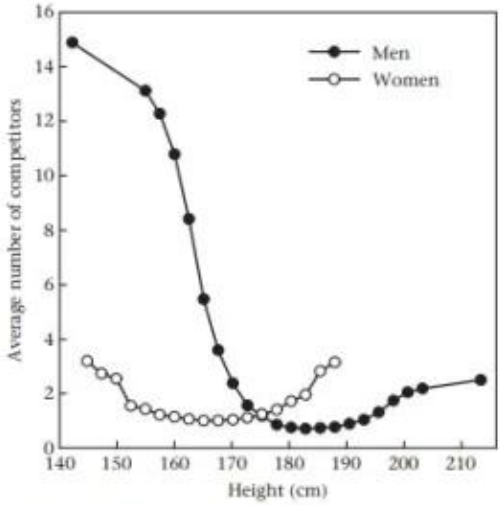

Figure 2. The number of competitors in the speed-date population for men and women in relation to their height. High values indicate that the number of individuals of a given height is high relative to the number of opposite-sex individuals for whom that height falls within the acceptable height range. See text and Tables A3 and A4 for further information.

Any man below 170cm (5 feet 5.7 inches) has 2-16x as many competitors, mainly because women generally prefer a man that is taller than her. Since the average female height is around 5’4″ish range that means the population significantly dips the shorter you get as a man.

The easiest male height appears to be 180-190cm which is 5’11” to 6’3″. This hits the often stated “women like men who are 6 feet” mantra while not being too tall where most women wouldn’t feel too short against that height.

- Study: Casual sex action and inaction regret – Youtube vid

The selected study is actually very interesting because the researches looked at “inaction regret” and “action regret” and see how it affected behaviors. Inaction regret would be like if you had the opportunity to do something and didn’t do it (e.g. have sex but chose not have sex) and action regret is the opposite (e.g. you had sex and then regretted it).

Basically, with action regret and casual sex they found some of the following conclusions for women, contrary to what the researches thought.

- Action regret did not reduce casual sex for women
- Action regret did not increase the probability that women would enter a long term relationship instead of having more casual sex and in fact increased the probability that they would have more casual sex
- Women chose partners the same, even when regretting them

Basically, reconfirming old wisdom like “you can’t turn a hoe into a housewife” and the obvious virginity and divorce statistics.

Also reconfirming the general wisdom that women tend to be bad choosers of potential mates. Some women can be good choosers, but they generally have to be taught much like men have to be taught to be a man. Leaving women to their own devices generally trends to the casual sex and regret cycle.

- Study – Ugly truth of people’s decisions in speed dating – Youtube vid

This is probably the most telling picture, but there are more in the link above.

Generally, men were pretty accurate on how much they valued attractiveness and fun, but were off on some of the others. I don’t find this surprising since most men aren’t attracted to sincerity, intelligence, or ambitiousness in women, but the biggest change is in the common interest which is relatively common. Among friend groups with similar interests like sports and other hobbies there’s usually men and women forming relationships.

Women are totally off and don’t really know what they want. Obviously, we know women won’t talk to any men they find unattractive, so it’s not surprising that they vastly underestimate attractiveness in wanting a second date. Interest and fun I think are second namely because it's hard to show ambitiousness and intelligence except in real world scenarios and not artificial ones.

In any case, I thought those were some interesting vids to look through overall if you wanted to understand the nature of women better. The vast majority confirms most 'RP' concepts on hypergamy and some of the other ones listed in this post.

This post was written before he dropped a vid a day or two ago on his own relationship, so I'm adding this section in too.

h/t TomA's summary on RPC discord:

> Very interesting to watch Alexander immediately DEER (defend, excuse, explain, rationalize) the leadership role in his relationship and (1:44:20) then admit he only leads her as far as she agrees with his leadership.
> He offers RP dating advice with a focus on empirical psychology and evopsycho theory. He tries to clean up RP material by being very empathetic to men and women, talks a lot about trauma (he clear had it and its a big lens of his onto the world), and is a Randian.
> Check out the description of this video, he dishes it pretty straight. I like him 9 times out of 10.

Fairly good summary having watched about 10-15 of his vids and watched the above link as well.

Obviously, AG doesn't have the Biblical perspective of Jesus choosing his disciples but they also had to be willing to and commit to follow. It's not a "democratically elected process" as AG mentions in the video which means he only leads her insofar as she agrees with his leadership.

The sad part is that most of the Church gets thing wrong as well. Most Christian Church "the man leads the relationship" complementarians are like this as well. The husband is supposedly leading and doing his thing, until there is some disagreement to which many in the Church would often say "listen to your wife." What this actually means is the wife is the authority and not the husband. Yeah, the husband may be the "final chooser" supposedly but often he is brow beaten if his wife gets unhappy or he SIMPs to her if she complains enough.

It's excusable from AG but not from Christians. However, many/most Christians seem to really like this "democracy" for some reason.

“Beautiful, High Character Women”

June 9, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Continuing in the vein of more “RP” related youtube media as I covered in the last one with Alexander Grace, the Roommates seems to be another one that could fit the bill at least part way.

Interesting video Title which is why I put it in quotes…. Ran across this vid and thought it was worth sharing.

Essentially, it was a fairly good back and forth about men and women in the Church from a realistic point of view. Also goes into a ton of the topics I’ve covered here before.

Attractiveness is not mutually exclusive with spirituality

- Host: Hard to meet quality men and women. Maybe youth groups or college groups
- Both: States that beauty and character are not mutually exclusive. Should want both
- Host: Articulates that men often go for one or the other (e.g. God or money) and same within the Church on women going ‘toward Proverbs 31 while neglecting beauty.’
- Guest: Lack of knowledge. Not money that’s evil but the love of money. If you have money you should steward it well
- Host quotes someone: “Excellence glorifies God and inspires men.” Christian music/films/etc are considered secondary

The obesity pandemic

- Host: When he sees obese/overweight pastors definitely thinks there’s something wrong unless they have a disease. Alcoholism not tolerated but gluttony is.
- Both: Dialogue on inconsistency with gluttony vs alcoholism. Pastors need to be accountable to their Elders/board.
- Later: Hard when you see a lot of overweight or obese people in Bible studies and want to say something about it

Men and women at odds in dating

- Host: Big things for women: Beauty, character, and spirituality. But double edged sword where some men feel women become so spiritual they don’t feel like a person anymore or set in spiritual ideologies that they become unrealistic (e.g. want Jesus but He was perfect).
- Guest: True, but we don’t necessarily know if a woman is coming off very spiritual if she’s just excited or perhaps if testifying about Christ all the time that there might be something in the man where he feels insecure about his own walk with Christ

Although we say otherwise, physical attractiveness tends to matter the most or at least a lot

- Host: Last men you dated what was the missing piece from 4 areas: physical attractiveness, emotional maturity, spiritual maturity, financial stability
- Guest: Spiritual maturity. She admits she was still half foot in the world and half foot in Christ. Dated a bodybuilder as she works out too but he was a lukewarm-ish (read: not) a Christian.
- Guest: Once she was 'all in' supposedly her appetite for men changed. Wants a muscular protector type man but her taste supposedly changed back to pre-workout days.
- Host: So you went from 1% to 10% type guy? So basically he has to workout but not necessarily the best guy in the gym?
- Host: What would you consider the most important of the 4? They both agree on spiritually.
- Host: What he's found personally is that even though most (Christian) women say spiritually, in practice it's physical attraction that is the most important
- Guest: Likes the friendship component and then getting into relationship. Sometimes attractive men don't mesh with when dating
- Host: Some brothers are just consistently overlooked because they don't have the sauce (read: appearance).
- Guest: Some also need work too. It's OK to up your fashion and style game

Church has been creating beta factories; how that plays into women and relationships

- Host: Church problem has created men who want to be like the 'lamb of God,' but not like the 'lion of Judah.' Wants Church to create top notch men of God and excellence all around and not just focus on spirituality
- Host: If someone is going to be an example why not God's people? Need to model for both men and women to see that it can exist
- Host: Men sometimes feel like with certain Christian women it may be "too much extra work" to be with them
- Guest: Never has heard of that but has heard of woman stepping into a man's role being too strong. May also be due to a man's own walk like with Deborah
- Host: Agree and disagree. Religious women tend to put on air of perfection where she's going to expect me to be perfect. Guest reiterates the same in a different way with a man telling her she's perfect and she was turned off because it feels like she can't make a mistake
- Host: Seems like religious women may be built for pastors wives, missionary wives or nuns. Want a level of personality. Fun, fit, flexible (not rigid), etc.

Possible unrealistic expectations and why that has happened

- Host: Have you met one guy that you want to marry?

- Guest: Talks a bit but comes to the conclusion maybe just one.
- Host: Christ doesn't count as a standard because he's perfect. The guy you want, is he even a person? Perception of a man you are looking for who may not even exist?
- Guest: A lot of women look at men who are already built like a pastor (e.g. where they are now) but not how they got there. Pastor now versus the pastor's journey to there
- Host: Claps. A lot of women look at their dad as a standard, but many dad's are great and have tons of energy with their daughters and were not always like that when younger. Father is a 40+ year old man who is mature who wasn't always like that

Friends first before dating and why that might not be good

- Guest: Wants someone who she can talk to about everything (e.g. probably the 'best friend' stereotype). Wants to be friends first before dating
- Host: How does a guy get to know you? How much time do you invest?
- Guest: Friends at the beginning helps to guard your heart so if you see them with someone else it's not a downer. Didn't really answer the rest of the question but I assume just talk until there's mutual interest and ask each other out
- Host: How to balance sexual interest while not sinning? Important to show interest in someone if you want to date and/or marry them.
- Both: Back and forth between things friends do for each other versus what it may look like if someone you want to date or marry. Women have to make men feel like they desire them.
- Host: Admissions process of Arizona versus Harvard. Why want to do Harvard than Arizona?
  Guest: Go through the process of friends and figuring the process of what marriage looks like, finanaces, etc

Christian books suck

- Host: Christian books on relationships today suck cause often times they're written and then the author changes opinion later. I Kissed Dating Goodbye one of the big ones. Followup Harris admits he was wrong about a bunch of it
- Guest: Figure out a process in a set amount of time (2 months used as an example) to see if they want to date and grow or not
- Host: How many real believers? Financially stable? Then emotional maturity? Then also physical attractive? Very small portion of men.
- Host: Men want women to follow their process who will follow them vs Christian women's books which give women their own process
- Guest: Going off Dr Miles (?) book about engagement being similar to marriage
- Host: 1 Cor 7 says if Christians are having sex they should get married.
- Both: Go on about Joseph and Mary and whether 'put away' means 'divorce' or not and how much engagement matters there. (My thoughts: Obviously, it doesn't, though Jewish engagement is much more serious than ours is now).

More disconnect between getting into relationships

- Guest: Wants man to take the time to get to know and looks at how a man talks and also acts
- Host: Still disconnect about how men perceive it and women do. Usually the men who tend to put in the most time to get to know and be nice to a girl are going to be the 'nice guys' so to speak. Can be mixed messages when friends are doing things that people are doing in relationships. Don't want a Harvard level process just getting to know you
- Guest: Can build with 5 love languages stuff. Host comments about "physical touch" and they go back and forth with more platonic and possibly massage

Women "break the rules" for alphas and some men do too

- Host: Do boundaries get crossed when you're with someone you're most attracted to?
- Both: Yes.
- Host: Repent but there is a lesson there in that it shows desire from both man and woman. How can that be shown without sinning though?

How to not get friend zoned?

- Host: What can men do to not get friend zoned?
- Guest: "Relationship with God" – act different and there's confidence. Character and fruits of God. Women get to choose who they submit to. Instagram wasn't always like it was. Changed it to Bible stuff and more modest fitness stuff
- Host: Want to show more examples of women of God. Went from world to God and how can God use me in the world. Similar to "The Roomates" (this youtube channel).

My thoughts overall

Host did a good job asking questions and bringing up men's perspective. The guest woman is probably better than most women in recognizing that men and women's process in dating can be at odds with each other, but she is fairly committed to the way in which she does things which means it's probably going to be at odds with the way men typically want to date.

I find this to generally be normal since women have more investment in the person they choose to follow, and the host was good about articulating that she and other women do get to choose the man they want to submit to. However, it can definitely sabotage and/or turn off some men from wanting to get to know said women. Most women probably aren't going to worry about that though since if they're reasonably attractive they probably have a bunch of men wanting to be with them. However, it would be wise of them to better sort and make their interest known earlier and often for the men they do want.

I don’t think most women will ever be able to overcome this type of thing where they want men to do everything whether it’s spending time or whatever, but the ones who are like Ruth will more likely get a husband if they are able to get over it and show interest.

The Lie of Servant Leadership Part 2

June 13, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Building on the previous post The Lie of Servant Leadership, this one comes to us from a series of IFStudies articles. Aaron Renn actually leads off the first one with similar stuff from the previou spost.

- https://ifstudies.org/blog/what-is-healthy-masculinity

Renn makes the case in that often most Christian and conservatives are hyperfocused on masculinity not own it's own but always on what it can do for women and children. He echoes this in the bulleted article:

> Healthy masculinity is when men flourish first for themselves, then for their families, posterity, and communities. A man embodying healthy masculinity knows who he is. He is physically healthy and strong. He is pursuing and developing his skills and capabilities to make him more competent and able to take action. He has a sense of agency, drive, and desire to make his mark on the world, not just have the world make its mark on him. He is someone who exists in a world where it is realistically possible for him to develop his potential, fulfill his own ambitions, and leave a posterity and a legacy for the future.

Hence, in his article on IFStudies he notes that healthy masculinity is first for themselves, although in Christian terms it's first to please God with how He designed us to be then to build a legacy. Women and children can be part of that, but mission is always paramount (and for Christians obviously Christ's mission).

Only then is a man actually able to lead by example as the Bible states rather than walking backwards into some form of slavery where a man's duty is defined by what he does for his wife and children or how he makes his wife and children feel.

Some of the rest in the series usually start out fine, but then devolve into everything about responsibility.

- https://ifstudies.org/blog/making-boys-into-men

> The first lesson is that no man should feel ashamed of being male, because God created him that way. I also believe that men function best in environments marked by order, so I will teach my sons that men who want to lead families need to be led by God's word.
> They also need to know that women are neither enemies to be engaged with on the battlefields of the culture wars, nor objects to be demeaned through music and media. They should see their female counterparts for who they are—created beings made in the image of God who are equal in worth but distinct in form and nature. Men and women are meant to complement, not compete, with one > another. Rejecting these differences is how we came to see chivalry as patronizing and pornography as empowering. Part of my job is to ensure my sons don't fall prey to that type of thinking. The familiar motto of "provide and protect" feels countercultural in an era of "degrade and neglect."

Good start, but then starts to get a bit hazy into the typical "equal but different" spiel in the second paragraph.

> American boys and men also need to know that, despite what some people think, "responsibility" is not a dirty word. In fact, the ability to care for yourself and be accountable for others is what separates boys from men. The ultimate act of manhood is being willing to commit to one woman and the children you create for a lifetime.
> Men and boys today need to see the vocations of husband and father as central to their identity. This is how I was raised. My father and his peers would frequently remind the boys in our church that laziness and unwillingness to provide for your household were traits of an ungodly man.

And then the definition of a manhood and masculinity is always what you can do for women and children.

- https://ifstudies.org/blog/does-the-word-gentleman-still-mean-anything-today-heres-why-it-should > Incidentally, I have found that asking "what does it mean to be a gentleman?" leads to a conversation much more fruitful than "what does it mean to be masculine?" or "what is healthy masculinity?" For better or worse, many boys equate masculinity with physical strength and endurance, weight training and football. As a matter of language, they can't really get their heads around a masculine man engaging in visual arts or poetry or ballet: they start laughing, imagining an NFL offensive tackle wearing a tutu. But they can readily accept the idea of a gentleman who excels in visual arts or poetry or ballet.

> However the term is defined, there are not many gentlemen to be found among young male celebrities today. Bruno Mars earned six Grammys for a song in which he tells a young woman "You and your a invited" and offers her money if she will just "turn around and drop it for a player" because "That's What I Like" (the title of the song). Drake conquered the pop charts last September with his album "Certified Lover Boy," taking nine of the top 10 spots on the Billboard Top 100, a feat never equaled by any artist in history, not even the Beatles. Drake likes to boast "I'm undoubtedly the hottest and that's just me bein' modest."

Already starts off pretty faulty by only using society comparisons.

> I have visited more than 460 schools over the past 21 years, and I have found that most boys are hungry to have a conversation about what it means to be a > good man. I have led those discussions with boys, where I suggest the following definitions as a starting point for conversation:

> - A gentleman governs his passions rather than being governed by them. As Supreme Allied Commander during the Second World War, Dwight D. Eisenhower would quote Proverbs 16:32: “Greater is he who can rule his own spirit than he who takes a city,” a verse his mother had taught him in childhood.
> - A gentleman never strikes a woman, not even in self-defense.
> - A gentleman never touches a woman without her consent.
> - A gentleman does not look at pornography, because pornography is degrading, not only to the woman who is objectified, but also to the man who uses it. I have heard from boys at high schools across the U.S. that their teacher in health class encourages them to masturbate, and porn is a useful adjunct to masturbation. The teacher explains that masturbation is safe sex, without the need to worry about obtaining a partner’s consent. Such advice reflects an impoverished view of what boys are and what they can become.
> - A gentleman does not bully the weak; instead, a gentleman defends the weak against the bully.
> Each of these comments inspires a lively response from American teen boys–especially the comment about pornography. These are conversations boys need to have with an adult man who has the courage to use the word “gentleman,” in defiance of the current mainstream disapproval of the term as reinforcing the heteronormative patriarchy.

Everything is again reduced to how men can serve women or avoid thinking about women badly.

- https://ifstudies.org/blog/the-essence-of-masculinity

> All living things live in such a way as to ensure the survival and prosperity of their species. This holds for plants, animals, and men. In our time, mankind not only threatens the survival of many other species but now even its own. All nations are either heading towards or already are significantly below replacement fertility rates. And in the OECD, member countries that have attempted to reverse this decline have no success to report. This a masculinity/femininity problem because it is a “complementarity of the sexes” problem.
> No matter which way you look at it (theologically, philosophically, biologically, evolutionary, or in social science), the division of mankind into male and female is present for producing children. Both sexes can do an infinite number of other things, but they rarely need to be male or female to do them, and most of these things they can do alone. But they need their difference and their union to > produce a baby. We are male and female primarily (even solely) to have and to raise children. [……]

> Thus, the core measure of masculinity—the male's complementary relationship to the female and the child—is whether a man can sustain an intact marriage. If he does, both the mother and the child thrive most in society, no matter which way the data is sliced. If he is not capable of sustaining marriage with the mother of his child, he is 'toxic' to her and to his child.

This one just jumps straight into defining masculinity in terms of how it impacts women and children.

This always seems to be the common theme with the combination of any of these descriptors in varying degrees.

- Boomer
- Conservative
- Churchian

Manhood is never defined in relation to Christ and His mission and how marriage may be a part of it, but how manhood and masculinity is central to wives and children.

While it's clear that manhood and masculinity are indeed central to impacting women and children, to focus on that actually creates an inversion of roles "servant leadership" that ends up being destructive to relationships and marriages instead of enhancing them.

Yet it is the same old thing consistently preached at Promise Keepers, conferences, man-up services, and the like.

When will they learn? Maybe never. But the death of their Churchian Churches shows us why it's rotten.

Is it possible for a woman to be too godly?

June 16, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This question came up on the discord, and it's worth exploring.

> There's another quality that I'm ambivalent about. Is it possible for a woman to be too godly (when dating)?

The true answer is no, but most people misinterpret this.

A true godly woman (with great character, humility, etc.) will respect and submit. Albeit, sometimes needs some prompting and sometimes slips up but will get back on track.

However, what tends to occur in reality is that women can easily let FALSE HUMILITY and PRIDE get in the way of actual HUMILITY. They think they are better than the man/husband because they are reading the Bible more, praying more, going to Church more, or more of whatever "spiritual" things. However, doing more spiritual things does not make you more godly — it's obedience to God that makes someone godly. Thus, they fall into a place of disrespect, contentiousness, and rebellion, but think they are actually doing the right thing. Very insidious.

In other words, a woman cannot be too godly for a man (as a true godly woman will respect and submit even to an unbeliever… e.g. 1 Peter 3), but a woman who believes they are more godly than the man usually falls into the trap of pride and false humility. She would actually disobey the Bible's teachings such as 1 Peter 3 and usually starts tearing down her own relationship and marriage thinking she is better than him.

Not only women fall into this trap, but many Christians men can fall into this trap as well. I've heard things like "she's too godly for me" or "she's too godly for him." Godliness is not a comparison game. It's obedience to the Lord, and one can never be too obedient to God despite whatever circumstance they are in.

However, it's also true that a woman who is actually trying to obey God and spending a lot of time in spiritual disciplines would also probably more easily submit to and respect a man who has put a lot of time into obeying God and his own walk with Christ including the spiritual disciplines as well.

This is also true in various other circumstances. For instance, in False humility is insidious and shallowness is false humility I explored some of the other trappings of this.

Another one of the big areas of false humility with wives who actually want to obey their husbands is they read so many "Christian books" about how they're supposed to do certain things to submit to their husband when in reality they should be asking their husband about how they want to submit. Then when they do these various "things" trying to make their husband happy and he is not she gets all mad that she is trying and not succeeding. This anger is not a righteous one because she is actually following the books, blogs, podcasts, and whatever advice instead of following her husband's lead. In other words, she is getting angry over her submitting to the books, blogs, podcasts, and other advice instead of her own husband.

In this way, a wife gets off track from actual submission to her husband and into obeying everyone else but her husband. However, since these “everyone else” sources is supposedly godly, she is duped into believing she is doing the right thing. Hence, the false humility because she thinks she is doing the right thing but she is not.

Divorce Part 8 (Actual Final)

June 17, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This post is the actual final consolidation and simplified explanation of the Scriptures on divorce. Previous discussions include several conversations and much of the same material from On divorce and On divorce Part 2 and On divorce Part 3 and On divorce Part 4 and On divorce Part 5 and On divorce Part 6 and Divorce Part 7 Final.

What prompted this extra analysis is more information from a Mike Winger video (3 hrs). Upon analyzing some new information I hadn't heard before, much of it seems to support this case rather than what he claims which is support for divorce for adultery, physical abuse, abandonment, and other situations.

Also related: polygyny and the Lysa divorce fiasco (which they are currently reconciling which is good).. and then now (2022) divorcing again under suspicious circumstances. This is one of the original research articles that got me started on analyzing the Scriptures on divorce and also evidence by Leslie McFall.

The "Betrothal position" has the most evidence to support it given the context from Matthew 1 (in the same book), the narrow scope use of porneia in certain circumstances John 8 (Pharisees call Jesus a "born of fornication (porneia)," as well distinguishing porneia from moichao (adultery) within Matthew, the gospels, and the whole NT.

John Piper gives a good summary. That's my official position on the topic after having done more research from the past post. Another paper on the The betrothal position of divorce and remarriage David W Jones and another David Janzen The Meaning of Porneia in Matthew 5.32 and 19.9 an approach: From the Study of Ancient Near Eastern Culture (though he thinks porneia means adultery and betrothal fornication which I disagree with he provides a good background) that I came across while looking at Winger's material. Jones' paper covers the narrowing scope of porneia the most thoroughly.

There's also several other books and papers that do not support it gathering available evidence. Instone-Brewer's book is one of the most quoted. Here's a thesis paper that summarizes most of the pro-divorce arguments but has several critical errors in my opinion.

Additions since the last post:

- Added more analysis in the OT sections.
- Added a section on the debate on the word "porneia." (Section 10)
- Added analysis/refutation of common talking points of pro-porneia divorce in the NT passages.
- Added section on the binding nature of vows (which no pro-divorce people have a counter argument for that I've seen).

1. Deuteronomy 24 — What is legal divorce according to the Scriptures?

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

Legal divorce is composed of two parts in Mosiac law. This will be important later.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.

2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

---

2. Deuteronomy 22 — What constitutes marital fraud?

Marital fraud is found in Deuteronomy 22.

> Deuteronomy 22:13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14 And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:
> 15 Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; 19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away (shâlach) all his days.
> 20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die: because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

From a historical perspective, at the time of Jesus no women who were caught in marital fraud were stoned (due to the Romans not permitting the Jews to execute anyone, which is why the Pharisees had to take Jesus to Pontius Pilate to have Him executed). Women caught in marital fraud were simply put away without being legally divorced (put away + writ of divorce) as the couple was not considered legally married.

Distinguishing legal divorce from marital fraud is important because it shows how a woman could be put away (without being legally divorced). Basically, invalid marriages allows one to put away without being divorced.

---

3. Jeremiah 3 and Isaiah 50 — The adulterous cases of Israel and Judah

The Lord acquiesces to the laws He outlined in Deuteronomy 24 for legal divorce in the cases of Israel and Judah.

> Jeremiah 3:6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned > not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away (shâlach), and given her a bill of divorce (sêpher kerîythûth); yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

Israel was not brought back out of Assyrian captivity. By the NT, they were no longer "Jews" but "Samaritans" because they have been divorced by God and intermixed with the surrounding nations. The Samaritans were despised by the Jews because they were no longer part of the God's chosen people.

But the Lord still wants repentance in Jeremiah 3:14 even though He legally divorced Israel. Since they are part of the 'Gentiles' now, they can now be redeemed by Christ. See: Samaritan woman at the well in John 3.

On the other hand, the Lord speaking to Judah does not divorce her even though He puts her away.

> Isaiah 50:1 Thus saith the Lord [to Judah], Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement (sêpher 'êm kerîythûth), whom I have put away (shâlach)? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away (shâlach). 2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. 3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

In the case of Judah, we know that Jesus comes from the lineage of Judah and David. The Lord allows Judah to be put away into captivity for their transgressions. Afterward, He redeems and delivers Judah out of captivity as read in Nehemiah and Ezra and upholds His covenant with them through the rebuilding of His temple. Then He brings full redemption to them through sending His Son Jesus to die bring forth the New Covenant.

4. Malachi 2 — The background from the Old Testament to the New Testament

Malachi is the last prophet for 400 years before Jesus. Malachi points out Israelite backsliding due to assimilation of the surrounding cultures much like today.

> Malachi 2:14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. 15 And > did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.

> 16 For the Lord, the God of Israel, saith that he hateth putting away (shâlach): for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously. 17 Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or, Where is the God of judgment?

The passage talks about putting away and not legal divorce under the Law of Moses. "Divorce" in surrounding cultures was simply putting away (without a writ of divorce). Husbands sent their wives out of the house and that was a divorce. Husbands probably mimicked the surrounding culture because of two reasons:

1. Selfish gain. If a wife was legally divorced — put away with a writ of divorce — she would receive back the dowry that the bride's father paid. However, if she was put away without a writ of divorce she would not receive back the dowry.
2. Marginalized wives. A legal divorce — put away with a writ of divorce — would allow the divorced wife to remarry. However, if a wife was put away she would still be legally married to her husband, which allowed her unable to remarry without committing adultery.

This is why putting away only is termed treacherous by the Lord. This assimilation of the surrounding culture sets the stage for Jesus' interaction with the Pharisees in the New Testament. This is not to say that "divorce" (putting away + writ) is good — it's not as Jesus said divorce was added to the Law for hard heartedness. This is only distinguishing it.

Janzen covers the dowry issue more depth in his analysis.

5. Deuteronomy 24 and Matthew 5 and 19 — The synonymous terms of legal divorce in the OT and NT

The OT was written in Hebrew and the NT was written primarily in Greek. There are synonymous terms in the Hebrew and Greek.

> Deuteronomy 24:1 When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and give it in her hand, and send (shâlach) her out of his house. 2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement (sêpher kerîythûth), and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth (shâlach) her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which > took her to be his wife; 4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

1. Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause? 4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)? 8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. 9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another,commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo'-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) ~~divorce~~: – (let) depart, dismiss, ~~divorce~~, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.
> G647 — ἀποστάσιον — apostasion — ap-os-tas'-ee-on > Neuter of a (presumed) adjective from a derivative of G868; properly something separative, that is, (specifically) divorce: – (writing of) divorcement.

1. GREEK Apostasion and HEBREW Sepher keriythth — Writing and giving the wife a bill of divorcement.
2. GREEK Apoluo and HEBREW Shalach — Sending her out of the house or away.

I crossed out the two instances of "divorce" within Strong's definition of apoluo because apoluo does not denote a legal divorce according to the Law of Moses and according to Matthew because it is a gospel to the Jews. Jesus would not have used apoluo to mean "divorce" in Matthew because He does not abolish the law but fulfills the law.

---

6. Matthew 19:3 — the Pharisees' multi layered trap

Line by line analysis, given our solid background:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?

Your spider senses should be tingling with the tricky wording of “lawful” with “putting away” (without writ of divorce) and “every cause.”

The first trap is the Pharisees are pitting Roman law versus a specific interpretation of Jewish law. In Roman law you could “divorce” your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo) much like the surrounding cultures in Malachi 2. However, Jewish law in Deuteronomy 24 you could divorce your wife by “putting her away” (apoluo or shalach) AND giving her a bill of divorcement (Apostasion or Sepher keriythth).

The second trap of the Pharisees, specifically the Hillelites, claimed you could legally divorce for “every cause” due to an interpretation of uncleanness in Deuteronomy 24 meaning any form of displeasure. (The article gets the conclusion wrong, but the background is important). Roman husbands could just send a wife away to divorce her whereas Jewish Law required broad or narrow cause.

The trap: If Jesus answers that you can “put away a wife without a bill of divorcement” the Pharisees can call Jesus a blasphemer as He is not following Jewish law. If Jesus says that you “need a bill of divorcement” or “a narrow range of causes” to put away then the Pharisees accuse Jesus to the Romans and say that He is subverting Roman law (like they eventually did before Pontius Pilate as they claimed Jesus was a ‘King’ which was antithetical to Roman rule).

The NET Bible translator notes echo similarly: “sn The question of the Pharisees was anything but sincere; they were asking it to test him. Jesus was now in the jurisdiction of Herod Antipas (i.e., Judea and beyond the Jordan) and it is likely that the Pharisees were hoping that he might answer the question of divorce in a way similar to John the Baptist and so suffer the same fate as John, i.e., death at the hands of Herod (cf.14:1-2). Jesus answered the question not on the basis of rabbinic custom and the debate over Deut 24:1, but rather from the account of creation and God’s original design.

Other similar Pharisee traps:

- ‘Is it lawful to pay taxes to God or Caesar’ (Matt 22, Mark 12) which would pit Jewish law against Roman law.
- ‘In the Law Moses commanded us to stone such women. What do you say?’ (John 8) with the woman caught in adultery. The Law required stoning, but Romans did not allow the Jews to execute anyone.

There is a pattern of Jewish vs Roman law interpretation.

7. Matthew 19:4-6 — Jesus goes back to the creation

> Matthew 19:4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, 5 And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and > they twain shall be one flesh? 6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Jesus knows that it's a no-win question. He sidesteps the Pharisees' trap by avoiding talking about Roman and Jewish law and causes. Instead, Jesus discusses the creation of man and what God intended. He would know because He was there in the beginning (see: John 1:1-4).

This is Jesus' answer on divorce: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

No (man initiated) divorce.

8. Matthew 19:7 — The Pharisees' confusion

> Matthew 19:7 They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos)?

The Pharisees see that Jesus has cleverly sidestepped their trap and are confused. If God did not intended for any divorce then why divorce in the Law of Moses in Deuteronomy 24?

The Pharisees acknowledgement that the Law of Moses declared that a divorce is composed of putting away AND bill of divorcement reveals their trap that we saw earlier. The Pharisees knew that a divorce was putting away and a bill of divorcement, but they only tested Jesus on putting away only.

9. Matthew 19:8 — Jesus' response of hardness of heart

> Matthew 19:8 He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away (apoluō) your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

Jesus responds that this part of the law was created by Moses because human hearts are hard. Jesus agrees with God: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

Jesus is saying that any who thinks divorce is an option for them has hardness of heart.

10. Matthew 19:9 — The heavily misinterpreted passage of Scripture

Jesus answers the original question that the Pharisees posed: "what lawful instances can a man put away?" You can see the mirror of the verses which confirms this:

> Matthew 19:3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife for every cause?
> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his > wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Jesus is answering the Pharisees original question. Next, read the verse without the "exception clause" to understand why it makes sense.

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, ~~except it be for~~ ~~fornication (porneia)~~, and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> Simplified:
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, …, and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).
> In plain English:
> If you put away your wife and marry another you commit adultery and whoever marries her commits adultery.

This is what is said in Mark 10 and Luke 16, and the meaning is obvious. If you put away your wife without legally divorcing her — give her a writ of divorcement before sending her away — you're still married to her. If you're still married to her, both you and her commit adultery if you marry another.

Similarly, if we interpret "putting away" to also mean divorce, then the passage reads the same: "If you divorce your wife and marry another you commit adultery and whoever marries her commits adultery."

Either way you interpret putting away here, it's the same thing especially in the context of Jesus mentioning that Moses inserted divorce into the Law for hardness of heart and that God's will is "what God has put together let no man separate."

Now to add in back the exception:

> Matthew 19:9 And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

What is the only case you can "put away" a "wife" without legal divorce? In the Law of Moses that would be Deuteronomy 22 where the marriage was invalid because of fraud. Since the marriage was invalid because of fraud, you can put her away without giving her a writ of divorce.

Porneia, in this case, refers specifically to invalid marriages because of marital fraud. However, some betrothal positions also interpret porneia to mean any case where an invalid marriage is formed such as incest (e.g. 1 Corinthians 5). I'll cover why in the next section.

Therefore, Jesus makes two distinct statements in this entire passage:

> On marriage and divorce:
>
> Matthew 19:6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> On putting away in regard to fraudulent marriages (referencing Deut 22):
> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) [illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage], and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

In conclusion, Jesus says there is no divorce. You can only put away if there is marriage fraud (or some type of porneia/sexual immorality where an invalid marriage is formed such as incest).

For example, in the case of fraud, a wife that lies about her past sexual history can be put away because it's a fraudulent marriage. Interestingly, though we often negatively critique him, Mark Driscoll experienced this. You can see the devastation, which is why God makes an exception for this.

11. The hotly debated term of porneia

The interpretation of porneia is the probably the most contested term in the passage because the meaning around it can change the whole meaning of the passage. This section is going to be long because there are several considerations.

Most who believe that you can divorce for adultery point out that "porneia" is a supposed to be a catch all term including fornication, adultery, incest, bestiality, and other manners of sexual impropriety. According to them, this means the Matthew 5 exception clauses allow for divorce for any of these instances.

Let's look at this logically.

> Matthew 5:18 But the things that come out of the mouth come from the heart, and these things defile a man. 19For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murder, adultery (moichao), sexual immorality (porneia), theft, false testimony, and slander.

In Matthew 15, we have a passage that distinguishes that porneia is not necessarily synonymous with adultery. Galatians 5 also similarly separates them in comparison of fruit of the flesh versus fruit of the Spirit and distinguishes between them.

> 1 Corinthians 5:1 It is actually reported that there is sexual immorality (porneia) among you, and of a kind that even pagans do not tolerate: A man is > sleeping with his father's wife. 2 And you are proud! Shouldn't you rather have gone into mourning and have put out of your fellowship the man who has been doing this? 3 For my part, even though I am not physically present, I am with you in spirit. As one who is present with you in this way, I have already passed judgment in the name of our Lord Jesus on the one who has been doing this. 4 So when you are assembled and I am with you in spirit, and the power of our Lord Jesus is present, 5 hand this man over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, so that his spirit may be saved on the day of the Lord.

In this passage, porneia refers to "incest." Thus, this also means that porneia can have a narrower scope than as just a catch all term. Similarly, 1 Corinthians 6 and 7 as well as Colossians 3 and 1 Thess 4 appear to refer to fornication as "pre-marital sex."

Another point is that that no translation of porneia (aside from the supposedly contested usage in Matthew 5 and 19) in the NT refers to it to include adultery or translated exclusively adultery. When adultery is referred to the term moichaeo is used.

> John 8:37 I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you. 38 I speak that which I have seen with my Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father. 39 They answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham. 40 But now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham. 41 Ye do the deeds of your father.
> Then said they (Pharisees) to him (Jesus), We be not born of fornication (porneia); we have one Father, even God.

The vast majority if not all Biblical commentaries assert that this is a Pharisaical jab at the fact that it was known that Mary was pregnant before her marriage to Joseph. Hence, "born of fornication" in this case specifically refers to Mary's supposed pre-marital sex during the betrothal period. Therefore, we can establish that fornication can actually even refer to the narrow scope of "pre-marital sex" in the betrothal period.

> Jeremiah 3:2 "Look up to the barren heights and see. Is there any place where you have not been ravished? By the roadside you sat waiting for lovers, sat like a nomad in the desert. You have defiled the land with your prostitution/adulteries (zanah – porneia) and wickedness. 3 Therefore the showers have been withheld, and no spring rains have fallen. Yet you have the brazen look of a prostitute; you refuse to blush with shame. 4 Have you not just called to me: 'My Father, my friend from my youth, 5 will you always be angry? Will your wrath continue forever?' This is how you talk, but you do all the evil you can."
> 6 During the reign of King Josiah, the Lord said to me, "Have you seen what faithless Israel has done? She has gone up on every high hill and under every spreading tree and has committed adultery (zanah – porneia) there.

> 7 I thought that after she had done all this she would return to me but she did not, and her unfaithful sister Judah saw it. 8 I gave faithless Israel her certificate of divorce and sent her away because of all her adulteries (zanah – moicheao). Yet I saw that her unfaithful sister Judah had no fear; she also went out and committed adultery (zanah – porneia). 9 Because Israel's immorality (zanah – porneia) mattered so little to her, she defiled the land and committed adultery (naaph – moicheao) with stone and wood. 10 In spite of all this, her unfaithful sister Judah did not return to me with all her heart, but only in pretense," declares the Lord.

Mike Winger in his video (linked at the top & here) notes that porneia is translated as adultery in the Greek Septuagint in several difference cases. For instance, Jeremiah 3:2,6, Eze 16:23, Hos 2:3,5, Amos 7:17. I'm not sure if this was an exhaustive list on his part, but this is the Hebrew terms for this passage compared to the Greek terms above.

The first thing to note is the Septuagint is generally imprecise with the terms as well with zanah being translated as both porneia and moicheao though naaph is only translated as adultery.This is similar to some instances in English translations of the Bible being imprecise with several terms like Matthew 5 'lust after a woman is committing adultery in your heart' versus translating the same word as 'covet' in Romans 7. That's how you get almost ascetic-like things where 'lusting after any woman is a sin' instead of understanding it to be Jesus' extension of 'don't covet your neighbor's wife' raised to the level of don't even think about coveting her in your thoughts otherwise your heart is going the wrong way.

Generally the term for actual adultery is Naaph which is also the same word used in the 10 commandments in Exodus 20, Leviticus 20, and Deuteronomy 5. zanah and it's variants (H2181 through H2184) generally refer to prostitution — to idolatry, literal prostitution e.g. Lev 19:29 whoring out your daughter, or in the case of Rahab and Tamar Gen 38, Josh 2,6.

Given the imprecise nature of the Septuagint translation and the general Hebrew terms, it seems to me that this doesn't help us determine much of anything. As I've looked at earlier, the NT is more consistent with the translations and general meanings.

> Matthew 5:27 “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall not commit adultery.’ 28 But I tell you that anyone who looks at a (taken) woman lustfully has already committed adultery with her in his heart.
> 31 “It has been said, ‘Anyone who puts away his wife must give her a certificate of divorce.’ 32 But I tell you that anyone who divorces his wife, except for sexual immorality, makes her the victim of adultery, and anyone who marries a divorced woman commits adultery.
> 33 “Again, you have heard that it was said to the people long ago, ‘Do not break your oath, but fulfill to the Lord the vows you have made.’ 34 But I tell you, do not swear an oath at all: either by heaven, for it is God’s throne; 35 or by the earth, for it is his footstool; or by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the Great King. 36 And do not swear by your head, for you cannot make even one hair white or black. 37 All you need to say is simply ‘Yes’ or ‘No’; anything beyond this comes from the evil one.
> 38 “You have heard that it was said, ‘Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth.’ 39 But I tell you, do not resist an evil person. If anyone slaps you on the right cheek, turn to them the other cheek also. 40 And if anyone wants to sue you and take your shirt, hand over your coat as well. 41 If anyone forces you to go one mile, go with them two miles. 42 Give to the one who asks you, and do not turn away from the one who wants to borrow from you.

In Matthew 5, Jesus is telling us that God’s standards are actually above the standards of the law. For example, instead of what the Law says which is “don’t commit adultery” (10 commandments) the standards of God are higher than that which means don’t even covet your neighbor in your mind. Don’t make any vows but let your yes be yes and no be no. Don’t try to get revenge but rather be kind to change others hearts.

Winger and other commenters note that it’s likely the Pharisees would have heard Jesus preaching on this and asked him about it later in Matthew 19. However, Jesus being a Jew who knew the Law more thoroughly than any other would have known about the Hillel (any cause) versus the Shammaite (only adultery/sexual impropriety) divorce debate.

This presents many big holes in their logic.

- Jesus agrees with Pharisees? – If Jesus permits divorce for adultery then he would agree with the Shammaite Pharisees in saying that you could divorce for adultery like in Deut 24. The pattern throughout the gospels is Jesus does not agree with the Pharisees.
- No reason to ask Jesus again as He already took a side — If Jesus is agreeing with the Shammaite Pharisees in Matthew 5 (before they asked Him in Matthew 19), then there would have been no reason to ask Him again in in Matthew 19!
- Jesus calls His own heart hard and contradicts God’s plan? — Jesus would be calling His own heart hard to permit divorce like Moses did as He states earlier in the passage, and it would be contradictory to “what God has put together let no man separate."

- Jesus agrees with the Law and doesn't raise the standard? — Jesus' standards like in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt 5-7) are always raising the bar from the Law to a higher standard. For instance, in Matt 5 Jesus also says "27 "You have heard that it was said, 'You shall not commit adultery.' 28 But I tell you that anyone who looks at a woman lustfully/covetously (epithumeo) has already committed adultery with her in his heart. … 48 Be perfect, therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect." If Jesus is permitting divorce for adultery not only is he agreeing with the Shammaite Pharisees but He is also agreeing with divorce Law in Deut 24.
- Disciple reaction would not be extreme if he was agreeing with a sect of the Pharisees and the Law – Disciples reaction saying it's "better not to marry." That would not be the case if he was agreeing with a sect of the Pharisees and with the Law in Deut 24, but it would be the case if He was raising the bar very high like in the rest of His teaching. – This is covered in the next section as well.

There is additional evidence why porneia does not refer to adultery here.

- If Jesus was talking specifically about a legitimate divorce for adultery specifically, according to the Law of Moses, He would have said

> He would have said in reference to Deut 24:"Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) with a writ of divorce (apostasion) his wife, "except it be for adultery (moichiao),
> Instead, He says in reference to Deut 22:"Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, "except it be for fornication (porneia),

The Greek wording is important because it tells us what passages Jesus is referencing in Mosaic Law. The answer is Deuteronomy 22 and illegitimate marriages as opposed to Deuteronomy 24 and rules on divorce.

- This also explains exactly happening in Malachi 2 and Roman times. Husbands were defaulting to the culture and putting away their wives without a writ of divorce contrary to the Law of Moses. The wives could not marry again because they were still married to their original husbands. If they did they were committing adultery. Possibly stealing dowrys as well.
- Also, Jesus continues to avoid the Pharisees' trap. Remember, "putting away" in Roman culture is synonymous for divorce. Jesus references the only part of the Law where "putting away" is valid, which would not conflict with Roman divorce laws.
- Sacraments/covenants like marriage cannot be formed if there is deception by any party. They require that the full Truth is disclosed. This is similar to contract law and why there are annulments for invalid marriages.

Overall, it appears a preponderance of logical evidence backs the "exception clause" referring directly to the Deuteronomy 22 and/or betrothal period sex. The husband could put the wife away (without a writ of divorce) because the marriage was a sham. Thus,

> And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, except it be for fornication (porneia) (illicit/fraudulent sexual deception which forms an invalid marriage), and shall marry another, commit adultery (moichaō): and whoso marrieth her which is put away (apoluō) doth committeth adultery (moichaō).

Let's look at some more passages.

12. Matthew 19:10-12 — the disciples actually understand the gravity of marriage

> Matthew 19:10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

The disciples, despite how they are often mocked at not understanding things, readily understand that Jesus is saying that there is no divorce. The only exception is that you can put away a wife if she fraudulently married by deception. Obviously, lots of these were covered in the previous section.

- If Jesus was saying you could divorce for adultery (like in Deut 24) and agreeing with the Shammaite Pharisees, the disciples would not have responded like this. It was already acknowledged that you could do this, which would not be surprising to the disciples.
- If Jesus was saying you could divorce for adultery (like in Deut 24), He would have been calling His own heart hard since He had earlier stated "Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so."
- When Jesus fulfills the Law, it is always to a much higher standard than the former Law. For example, "Love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength and love your neighbor as yourself" (Matt 22) is transformed to "a new command I give to you: that you love one another, just as I have loved you, that you love one another" (John 13, John 15). Now, Jesus is the standard.
- In the case of divorce, Jesus instead goes back to Creation which was Perfect: "What God has put together let no man separate."

The standards for Christians in the New Testament always supersede that of the Old Testament.

No divorce period except for fraudulent marriages is a hard word. A really hard word.

The pro-divorce proponents contest this point saying that the Jewish people at the time say you had to divorce for adultery and that Jesus was claiming that you only may divorce for adultery. This doesn't make any logical sense either as it would contradict Jesus' sermon in Matthew 5 raising the bar for Christian standards, and God's patience with backsliding Israel and Judah and the ultimate plan to reconcile them to Himself.

Additionally, as has been stated before, this would make Jesus agree with the Shammaite school of thinking where you can divorce for sexual immorality (Deut 24) which would make Jesus agree with them. Whereas in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5) and other places Jesus raises the standards for Christians. Why would the disciples say it's better not to marry if He was agreeing with one of the Jewish sects on divorce and remarriage?

13. Matthew 1:18-19 — the case of Joseph and Mary and John 8:39-41

> Matthew 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus Christ was as follows: when His mother Mary had been betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be with child by the Holy Spirit. 19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away (apoluō autos) privily.

Joseph engagement and marriage with Mary would have been fraudulent because he was supposed to be marrying a virgin. To him Mary was not a virgin because she was with child. It took an angel of God to convince him otherwise.

> John 8:37 I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you. 38 I speak that which I have seen with my Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father. 39 They answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham. 40 But now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham. 41 Ye do the deeds of your father.
> Then said they (Pharisees) to him (Jesus), We be not born of fornication (porneia); we have one Father, even God.

As we covered earlier, the Pharisees even accused Jesus of being "born of fornication."

This is probably the reason why Matthew includes the "except for fornication" clause in Matthew 5 and 19. He was defending Jesus' birth. The Pharisees and others accused Jesus of being illegitimate in the Scriptures (Mark 6, John 8).

The pro-divorce proponents have no answer for this as they can only say "porneia" is supposedly more broad than this while the main gospel uses of porneia actually support that it's referring to the betrothal.

14. Mark 10:2-12 and Luke 16:13-18 — the unification of Matthew with Mark and Luke

In Mark 10:

> Mark 10:2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away (apoluō) his wife? tempting him. 3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement (apostasion), and to put her away (apoluō autos). 5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.
> 10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11 And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away (apoluō) his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery (moichaō) against her. 12 And if a woman shall put away (apoluō) her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery (moichaō).

And also in Luke 16:

> Luke 16:13 No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. 14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him. 15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. 16 The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. 17 And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.
> 18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

First, there is no “exception clause” in both Mark and Luke. This would conflict with the passages in Matthew passages if it referred to adultery. As we now know, Mark and Luke do not conflict with Matthew because the “exception clause” refers to fraudulent marriages and not divorce for adultery.

Second, the background behind these passages is that Mark and Luke were mainly written to the Gentiles while Matthew was written to the Hebrews. The reason for this is that “putting away” was “divorce” for the Gentiles. The instruction is that they should not do that at all. As they were not under the Law of Moses, this goes back to Jesus statement of original intention: “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” There is no divorce for Gentile believers.

Third, note the bolded passage of Mark 10:10 – the disciples ask again in the house for clarification. Thus, the actual sequence of events looks like this:

1. Pharisees try to trick Jesus on divorce (Matthew 19:3, Mark 10:2)
2. Jesus answers Creation from the beginning and ‘what God has put together let no man separate’ (Matthew 19:4-6)
3. Pharisees ask why they were allowed to divorce in the Law (Matthew 19:7, Mark 10:3-4)
4. Jesus replies that it was in the law for hardness of heart but it wasn’t that way from the beginning.(Matthew 19:8, Mark 10:5-9 – Mark includes the ‘What God has joined’ statement here)
5. Then Jesus replies with the classic statement with the exception clause BECAUSE he is answering lawful instances of putting away — e.g. Deut 22, Matthew 1. (Matthew 19:9)
6. Since this was potentially confusing, the disciples ask him again in the house on his stance. This time he replies to them solely from His New Covenant standard so they get it: “anyone who divorces and marries another commits adultery.” (Mark 10:10)
7. Then the disciples reply with the sentiment that is better not to marry. (Matthew 19:10-12)

It’s important to distinguish why Jesus answers with the exception clause and then differently in the house.

The disciples asked him in the house later about Jesus’ true thoughts in private: no divorce (which goes along with “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.”). This is similar to the disciples always asking about the interpretation of parables and teachings. If Jesus had said this out in public, the Pharisees could have had him stoned as divorce was lawful for Romans. Hence, Jesus would have been recommending that Roman Law was wrong for His followers.

This is similar to the tricks of “should we stone the adulterous woman” and “should we pay taxes to Caesar.” The Pharisees were always trying to get Jesus in trouble with the Romans. In this case, since they were in the region of Judea across from the Jordan this was the area of authority of Herod Antipas who had John thrown in jail for criticizing his marriage to his brother’s wife. It is likely that the Pharisees were hoping a similar thing would happen to Jesus.

Matthew omits information on the disciples asking about it later because he would reasonably expect that the Jewish believers would understand that the exception clause is based on defending Jesus’ virgin birth background in the Law. In addition, the disciples response already indicates that Jesus' true thoughts on divorce is tougher than the Shammai's stance which is already divorce for adultery. Thus, it's easy to conclude that Jesus true thoughts are "What God has put together let no man separate" and the lawful instances of divorce in the Law spoken in public are to defuse the Pharisee's trick question and get them thinking about what God actually intended from Creation.

Even if you conclude that Jesus is talking about divorce for Christians and not "instances of putting away under the Law" then the conclusion is still the same when cross referencing the same gospel.

> Matthew 5:32 But I tell you that anyone who divorces his wife, except for sexual immorality, makes her the victim of adultery, and anyone who marries a divorced woman commits adultery.

It is adultery for marrying a divorced woman there regardless if there was the cause of adultery as there are no exceptions here. Hence, exception likely refers not to marriage adultery but pre-marital fornication (e.g. Deut 22, Matt 1, John 8) unless Jesus was referring to some exception where husbands and wives have different standards for remarriage. But again, Luke at plain reading refutes that as it's the same for husbands and wives.

> Luke 16:18 Whosoever putteth away (apoluō) his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (moichaō): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away (apoluō) from her husband committeth adultery (moichaō).

The pro-divorce proponents assert that this "no divorce" is the rule, but there are exceptions to the rule such as Matthew 5 and 19. They point out that several times Jesus seems to contradict Himself in Scriptures sometimes. Thus, we should mainly be considering the Spirit of the Law rather than the Letter of the Law.

> Matthew 5:21 "You have heard that it was said to the people long ago, 'You shall not murder, and anyone who murders will be subject to judgment.' 22 But I tell you that anyone who is angry with a brother or sister will be subject to judgment. Again, anyone who says to a brother or sister, 'Raca,'is answerable to the court. And anyone who says, 'You fool (moros)!' will be in danger of the fire of hell.
> 18 You also say, 'If anyone swears by the altar, it means nothing; but anyone who swears by the gift on the altar is bound by that oath.' 19 You (Pharisees) blind men (moros)! Which is greater: the gift, or the altar that makes the gift sacred? 20 Therefore, anyone who swears by the altar swears by it and by everything on it. 21 And anyone who swears by the temple swears by it and by the one who dwells in it. 22 And anyone who swears by heaven swears by God's throne and by the one who sits on it.

I agree that we should be interpreting by the Spirit of the Law. The Spirit of the Law in the case of marriage is: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

Why are we making excuses and exceptions to lower than standard when Jesus pretty clearly laid out the standard?

One could argue that it would be compassionate to allow the "innocent party" in hard marriage situations (e.g. adultery) to divorce and remarry. God is quite compassionate in the Bible to innocent parties (e.g. widows and orphans), but it's also true that this line of thinking may suffer from the slippery slope. The liberals also say that it's being compassionate to affirm the positions of LGBT+ and that you can call yourself whatever pronouns you want. However, this position while it could possibly be true seems to be at odds with most of the other textual and contextual arguments.

15. Romans 7 — understanding the context of Jewish divorce

> Romans 7:1 Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? 2 For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. 3 So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

In Romans 7, Paul is speaking that the covenant of marriage is unbound by death only.

Winger argues this by saying that this is an analogy, and the meaning of the analogy (continued on) is actually that we died to the law so that Christ lives through us. Hence, this is not necessarily accurate to what is prescribed for Christians on how to live since analogies aren't meant to hyper-acurate to the underlying statement's point.

While I agree with that analysis, he errs in applying his analysis to God's plan for Christians. If we take the full analogy into context which is 'being dead to the law and sin and alive in Christ to serve the Spirit' then rather than supporting the divorce point it would support the no divorce point: "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

This is the way it was from the beginning. As Christians with new life in the Spirit we are to return to marriage as it was before the fall (perfect) through being new Creations in Christ. This would mean we are not to revert to the exception Moses put into the Law in Deut 24 which Jesus calls hardness of heart. That would be obeying the Law rather than dying to the Law to live in the Spirit.

16. 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 — the Lord's command to husbands and wives

The Lord speaks through Paul:

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart

> (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.
> G5563 — χωρίζω — chōrizō — kho-rid’-zo
> From G5561; to place room between, that is, part; reflexively to go away: – depart, put asunder, separate.
> G863 — ἀφίημι — aphiēmi — af-ee’-ay-mee
> From G575 and ἵημι hiēmi (to send; an intensive form of εἶμι eimi (to go)); to send forth, in various applications: – cry, forgive, forsake, lay aside, leave, let (alone, be, go, have), omit, put (send) away, remit, suffer, yield up.
> G630 — ἀπολύω — apoluō — ap-ol-oo’-o
> From G575 and G3089; to free fully, that is, (literally) relieve, release, dismiss (reflexively depart), or (figuratively) let die, pardon, or (specifically) divorce: – (let) depart, dismiss, divorce, forgive, let go, loose, put (send) away, release, set at liberty.

The Lord speaks through Paul that any type of separation (legal divorce or not) that those in the marriage are to stay single or reconcile. In other words, do not divorce. If you separate, you must stay single or reconcile. There is no remarriage.

This agrees with Jesus’ original statements on divorce: “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” Jesus and the Father are one, and they are in agreement.

17. 1 Corinthians 7:12-15 — Paul, not the Lord, says to live with unbelieving spouses

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 But to the rest speak I, not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put away (aphiēmi autos). 13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him (aphiēmi autos). 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. 15 But if the unbelieving depart (chōrizō), let him depart (chōrizō). A brother or a sister is not under bondage (douloo) in such cases: but God hath called us to peace. 16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

This passage is also used as a so-called exception clause for remarriage. “If I’m not under bondage anymore because my unbelieving wife or husband left me then I can remarry.” This interpretation is incorrect.

If you examine the wording closely, the passage only says that if they depart then you’re not under the bondage (douloo) anymore. Greek douloo is from doulos which means servant/slave and is the verb form of slave which means enslavement. This is bondage is our duty to God for the marital roles and responsibilities.

Paul references this authority-slave/servant relationship earlier in the passage on the spouses owing sex to each other.

> 1 Corinthians 7:3 Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewise also the wife unto the husband.4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.5 Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

This verse must also be taken in context with the other verses in the Bible and passage. As Romans 7 and 1 Corinthians 7:10-11 show, the Christian must stay single or reconcile and that the marriage covenant is only broken by death.

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart (chōrizō) from her husband: 11 But and if she depart (chōrizō), let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away (aphiēmi) his wife.

Notice the same wording of an unbeliever departing (chorizo) and a wife departing (chorizo). They are still under the marriage covenant and must stay single or reconcile.

Likewise, the end of the 1 Corinthians affirms this too:

> 1 Corinthians 7:39 A wife is bound (deo) as long as her husband lives; but if her husband is dead, she is free to be married to whom she wishes, only in the Lord. 40 But in my opinion she is happier if she remains as she is; and I think that I also have the Spirit of God.
> G1210 — deō — deh'-o — A primary verb; to bind (in various applications, literally or figuratively): – bind, be in bonds, knit, tie, wind. See also G1163, G1189.

This is affirmed again at the end of 1 Corinthians 7. Notice the difference in the Greek word deo versus douloo used in the other verse. Deo means to bind. This is the same language that is used for the marital covenant as oneness/binding and is only broken by death.

> Genesis 2:24 Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave (dâbaq) unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh
> H1692 — dâbaq — daw-bak' — A primitive root; properly to impinge, that is, cling or adhere; figuratively to catch by pursuit: – abide, fast, cleave (fast together), follow close (hard, after), be joined (together), keep (fast), overtake, pursue hard, stick, take.

The covenant bond is one of permanent clinging together.

There is no divorce or remarriage for Christians with unbelieving spouses either.

Winger contests this by asserting that “deo” for the bond in marriage is a less extreme form of “douloo” which is typically translated to servant/slave in the Scriptures. This is a good point, but he errs in analysis by stating that since an unbelieving spouse leaving means that being in a marriage with them would be “enslavement” rather than the bond “deo” of marriage. In other words, it’s a worse situation not of “deo” but of “douloo.”

On the surface this seems true, but there are two strong points that counteract this.

- 1 Peter 3 discusses wives of unbelieving husbands and shows that the proper role is to respect and submit and control their behavior so as to set a good example and possibly win their husbands to Christ (agreeing with 1 Cor 7 on unbelieving spouses that consent to live with the believer). Along with Romans discussing the context of our salvation (e.g. Romans 5:8 God shows his love for us in this: while we were yet sinners Christ died for us) the actual onus is on the Christian to live in a Christ-like manner despite any circumstances. This would more align with the stay single and reconcile point as it’s not anymore “enslavement” than to be with an unbeliever as with a believer as your conduct should still be godly.
- “Douloo” is often used by Paul to refer to Himself at the beginning of his epistle letters (Slave to Christ) and also in the various epistles to refer to us as Christians as “slaves to righteousness.” Rather than being a bad thing, this is actually a good thing.

This is why that the “enslavement” likely refers to the roles and responsibilities of the marriage. After all, it would be tough to hold to the roles and responsibilities of marriage if the unbeliever leaves. Additionally, if it referred to breaking the marriage bond it would contradict the theme and Spirit of all of the rest of the NT Scriptures.

18. The binding nature of vows

This is one of the points that I’ve never seen the pro-divorce for adultery (or “porneia”) address because they have no good argument against it.

Probably all Christian marriages (and even secular marriages) took vows when they married, which God takes very seriously.

- Story of Jephthah sacrificing his daughter because of his vow.
- Vows in Numbers 30,
- God on vows
- Jesus affirms the seriousness of vows.

The only time in the entire Bible where vows can be nullfied is in Numbers 30 where a husband can nullify them if he hears his wife made them when he wasn’t around. Even then if he doesn’t then after a certain time passes they become binding.

Yeah, the secular non-Christians don't care they broke their wedding vows and divorced, but Christians are held to a higher standard. Vows are not null and void because someone else did something wrong.

19. Summary of all available evidence against divorce and remarriage

1. Jesus notes the standard is "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."
2. Divorce from the Law of Moses is for those hard of heart.
3. Putting away is not divorce according to the Law of Moses, which both Jesus and the Pharisees knew.
4. Jesus was answering the original question the Pharisees were asking about "putting away."
5. Textual analysis points to "except for porneia" pointing to Deuteronomy 22 instead of Deuteronomy 24, especially in context of Matthew 1 Joseph and Mary and the trap the Pharisees were trying to trick Him.
6. Moichao = act of adultery specifically. Jesus doesn't use that word in the "exception"
7. Disciples response ("it is better not to marry") indicates that it does not refer to Deuteronomy 24 where you can already divorce for adultery.
8. Why would Jesus repeat and agree to with the Pharisees that you can divorce for adultery. Hint: He wouldn't.
9. Precedent of Joseph and Mary where "putting away" is the righteous option for marital fraud (not killing her according to Deut 22).
10. Agreement of Mark and Luke with no exceptions. If Jesus made an exception Matthew, then Mark and Luke would not agree with Matthew and the Bible would contradict itself. It is not an 'addition' to Jesus' statements in Mark and Luke.
11. In Mark, the disciples ask Jesus again privately, and He clarifies any putting away = adultery. If he had done this publicly, the Pharisees could have had him stoned as Roman Law said you could put away to divorce which would make Jesus deny Roman Law.
12. Romans 7 and 1 Corinthians 7 showing that death breaks marital covenants with no other exceptions.
13. 1 Corinthians 7, the Lord says that a wife and husband should not separate, but if they do, they should stay single or reconcile. This agrees with "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" and does not agree with an 'exception' for divorce.
14. The whole book of Hosea is about God commanding Hosea to marry a prostitute and how that symbolizes God and His people who are adulterous. God still wants them to come back to Him. We are to emulate God.
15. The seriousness of vows you took in the sight of God and according to God. Vows are not null and void because someone else did something wrong.

16. In the same way with vows, all the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities are unconditional (Eph 5, Col 3, Titus 3, 1 Peter 3, 1 Corinthians 7). You don't get a "get out of marriage free" card or "I can act mean to my wife if she treats me poorly" card if the other person is sinning. The Bible still commands husbands to love their wives and treat them with honor and calls wives to submit and respect their husbands…. no matter how bad the other spouse acts.
17. Our ministry as Christians is the ministry of reconciliation (2 Corinthians 5) which also includes marriages that have had crazy sins happen in them.
18. This other paper I found analyzes the Ancient Near East (ANE) customs (which is the context of when Matthew was written) and comes to the conclusion porneia referse to the betrothal position and marriage with a man other than the husband. I covered some of the evidence int his post, but there's more if you want to read more.

Other evidence:

- A husband who runs off with another woman is still married to his former wife, and he will be held accountable for judgment to God for that.
- The early Church fathers held the view of no divorce and remarriage. It's funny that Christians now think they know more about it from their own Biblical interpretation than those who were passed down the Standard directly from Jesus Himself.

Piper has some additional points based on hypothetical scenarios that support the no divorce position.

Overall, I can't think that much evidence in combination with looking at both the Old and New Testament that indicates one can divorce for adultery. The only circumstantial evidence that those who support divorce for adultery keep trying to stand on is that "porneia" can refer to adultery in some instances according to Strong's. Unfortunately, it is never used to refer to adultery in the NT, especially when there is a more suitable word which is moichao.

There are also no Christian traditions that support divorce for adultery. The only exception is in the past century or so with the rise of feminism.

20. Conclusions

Jesus talks about marriage, divorce, and putting away. Understanding which passages Jesus refers to is critical to unifying all of Scripture on the topic of divorce.

1. Putting away is NOT divorce in the context of Mosaic Law and in the gospel of Matthew. It is a two part process of putting away and a bill of divorcement. – Deut 22, 24; Mal 2; Jer 3; Isa 50; Matt 5, 19
2. Putting away is synonymous with divorce for the Gentiles. — Mark 10; Luke 16; 1 Corinthians 7
3. God and Jesus' plan for marriage is that "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." – Gen 2, Matt 19; Mark 10

4. There is no get-out-of-marriage adultery clause. Who you are married to you should stay married to regardless of any sins they commit. This is a hard word as even the disciples said it was better not to marry. Separation seems to be an option if you can't live with them. Reconciliation is ideal. – Matt; 19, Mark 10, Luke 16, 1 Cor 7
5. Under the Law of Moses and according to Jesus, a marriage is illegitimate if your wife committed sexual fraud prior to marriage. Example: Claiming she was a virgin when she was not (Deut 22). Hence, you can put her away without divorcing her since it was a sham. – Deut 22, Matthew 5, 19; Mark 10; Luke 16,
6. If a spouse leaves stay single or be reconciled. – 1 Cor 7, Romans 7, Mark 10, Luke 16
7. If an unbelieving spouse leaves you are not under bondage of marital roles and responsibilities. You are still under the marriage covenant, and you cannot remarry. – 1 Cor 7
8. Those already remarried in their second and third marriages are NOT to divorce and reconcile with their first spouse if they come to Christ (See: Note 1 for more details). The heretical interpretation is perpetual adultery with the new spouse. In this line of thought, divorce and reconcile and remarry with the first spouse. This view goes against what Deuteronomy 24 says in that if a first husband divorces a wife and another marries her even if she is divorced or her husband dies then she is not to remarry him again otherwise is it an abomination. – Deut 24, Matthew 19

Note 1: Divorce, remarriage, and perpetual adultery:

> 1. There is perpetual adultery if the participants are made completely aware of the roles and responsibilities and the everlasting nature of marriage. In other words, "sacramental marriage" affirmed by the Church. If you know you are held accountable to a greater standard, just as Christians are held to a greater standard than non-Christians.
> 2. However, those who were not made aware sinned in their ignorance. Those that don't undergo the rites of the Church in the marriage ceremonies in both (?) Catholic and Orthodox tradition means that the marriage formed is potentially invalid. Hence, since the marriage wasn't valid they are free to marry another. A marriage can be affirmed sacramental in which case divorce and remarriage is a sin.
> 3. This would also go along with the position that those in their 2nd or 3rd marriages and then come to Christ would not have to divorce and go back to their first spouse. They can get their current marriage affirmed by the Church with all of the details of the Covenant.

Final Conclusion, according to Scriptures, for Christians

1. No divorce period. “What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.”
2. Stay single or reconcile. No remarriage. This includes marriage to unbelievers who leave.
3. Your recourse is separation if you absolutely can’t live with them or actual scenarios where physical harm can be present (though not ideal).
4. Fraudulent marriages are not marriages. Covenants require truth from all parties to be established.
5. If you have a “Christian marriage” (or sacramental marriage) — both of you know that marriage is forever on earth and the accompanying roles and responsibilities — then any divorce and remarriage is perpetual adultery.
6. 2nd or 3rd marriages that come to Christ can be affirmed as Christian marriages. They would not have to go back to their first spouse and are not in perpetual adultery. Prior marriages are effectively “annulled” as you did not understand Christian marriage.

This is why I believe (as a Protestant) that the Catholic method of sacramental marriage is probably the best method to deal with marriage and divorce in a broken world. Orthodox I can see the reasoning on, but it is not as strictly faithful. Protestant views on marriage are trash, and it is no surprise that they have the highest divorce rates of any denomination of Christianity and divorce rates almost as high as secular culture.

Since this is my own opinion, I don’t force it on others. Don’t bother claiming me as some authoritative figure.

Read the Scriptures and study them in depth for yourself. If you come to a different position then hopefully you do it in good conscience before God. All I would say is don’t be like the feminists and other heretical people who go into reading the Scriptures to twist and distort them because you want a particular outcome.

This is the only position I have found to be in good conscience before God that goes with the theme of the God and Jesus’ example for us in the NT.

Regarding replies again: Probably won’t reply to much. I’ll only respond to actual comments discussing quality of evidence supporting a point including Bible verses and analysis of why you think it’s that way. If you’re just claiming something I’m not going to bother.

Obesity may explain a large percentage of the problems in marriage rate dips

June 25, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This photo has been making the rounds:

Basically, the caption being something like “there’s no one fat in this 1970s beach photo… fast food industry and obesity.”

Can’t say they’re wrong.

Given the posts I’ve written on:

- obesity, sexlessness, and overall demographics
- Obesity, marriage rates, and spinsterhood predictions
- Beating the obesity dead horse and attractiveness
- And many more

Even in this specific photo a large portion of the men look like they actively play sports or work out because they have a decent amount of muscle. You don’t have to have bodybuilder levels of muscle to be more attractive either.

It’s quite obvious that a large part of the declining attractiveness is due to the fact that both men and women are getting out of control obese. Declining attactiveness means that less people are likely to go on dates (because they wouldn’t meet the attractiveness criteria of the opposite sex) and hence less people are likely to get married.

Clearly, there’s likely some other factors involved such as the feminization of men and masculinization of women and other things such as these, but this really does drive home the point that if you’re muscular and fit you have a huge leg up. Especially in the Church for men where caring about physical appearance is even less important about sometimes than in the secular world (although it shouldn’t be).

Top things women don’t want men to know about (or just won’t tell you)

June 30, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Bardelys the Magnificent posted this video in one of the comments:

His comment:

> There’s a young chap on YouTube named Casey Zander, who put out a video outlining the things women won’t tell you. Honestly, one of the best videos I’ve ever seen. The gist is this: women want to submit to a dominant frame, but since they have no idea how to create that for themselves, they can’t articulate what that looks like. They just know it when they see it, which is why they can say with a straight face they want one thing and go after another. They don’t know how the sausage is made, they just know if it tastes good (pun intended?) so if you ask them if they prefer certain ingredients or methods they’ll agree with you, then choose the one they want. They have no clue, so it’s up to men to figure out our masculine identity and invite a woman to join. If she rejects you, next.

My comments:

I wouldn’t really say it’s things women don’t want you to know about or necessarily won’t tell you. However, they do generally expect these things out of men unknowingly as these things tend to satisfy their hypergamy.

The basic summary is:

- How to be a man – “he just gets it,” knows what “safe” means, turned on when she’s told what to do, admission into his frame.
- How to outwit her – Proactive vs reactive, too much investment, weakens masculinity
- What she’s thinking – knows his job, cares less about what she’s thinking, no longer own mental point of reference, focused on her rather than on his mission
- Dominance is her polar opposite – male aggression is sex, ties to belief set, decisive, subconscious frame control
- Command arousing presence – ability to say no more than yes, not sex focused, words matter, be direct.

I think the points are a bit poorly worded, but he does explain them fairly well.

My summary given Biblical terms would be:

- Knows what his roles and responsibility for relationships/marriage are and does them (point 1). This naturally makes a man be a man because he knows that he is supposed to be the head/leader and acts like it. This includes things like being a protector and provider.

- Establishes and maintains natural order (points 2 and 3). A woman's hypergamy is built in. It has the capacity to go haywire, but all women exhibit it to some degree. If you are in a relationship with a woman you need to be able to recognize when her hypergamy is rearing its head and maintain God's order in the relationship and focus on God's mission. Related: Christian masculinity, mindset, and fitness testing. Adam failed this by listening to Eve rather than God.
- Masculine traits must shine to maintain polarity in relationships (point 4). If a man starts to act less masculine — with masculine type traits being independent, assertive, strength, courage, leadership, etc. — then in most cases the woman will become more and more dissatisfied as well as potentially try to pick up the slack. A man must maintain strong masculinity in order to have good polarity with femininity. Avoid women who respond to masculinity with masculinity themselves (e.g. strong independent women who don't need no man) instead of femininity. The masculine-feminine polarity creates sexual tension.
- Men are made not born and why discipleship/mentoring is important (point 5). "Presence" is more or less a combination of the rest of the 3, but how a man generally matures into a leadership role over time. Think of the pastor who has been giving sermons for 1 year versus 20-30. The skill of public speaking, leadership, and consistently doing it with a lot of people through the years. As one gets better at it, one can better discern things with more simplicity and respond correctly with nuance and cut to the chase. Women love competence.

Generally speaking, the various attractive traits (PSALM), masculinity, and leadership, and all such things are learned over time. This is why it's important for men to be on God's mission. Better younger than older, but the more time practiced the better things will be.

How can you lead a woman spiritually if you don't know what you believe? Getting into the Word and the various spiritual disciplines in earnest helps to build that foundation. How easy is asking out a woman when you have regular spoken with people about the gospel and been discipled or have started discipling others?

There's obviously many more like these, but I think the points are fairly clear. Even many of the RP proponents have discerned that Mission is important and not putting women first is the most successful. Doing what the Bible says we should be doing builds a lot of the skills and leadership qualities that it takes to be successful with women. If only most Churches actually preached that to men.

John Money and a foundation of perversion

July 9, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I just learned about John Money, and it's fascinating (in a bad way – or perhaps disturbing is a better word) how much of his theories have influenced modern psychology.

> Money proposed and developed several theories and related terminology, including gender identity, gender role,[13] gender-identity/role and lovemap. He popularized the term paraphilia (appearing in the DSM-III, which would later replace perversions) and introduced the term sexual orientation in place of sexual preference, arguing that attraction is not necessarily a matter of free choice.[1][2]

So now we know he's pretty much the guy which all of the various gender identity stuff has come out of and also changing words (perversions to paraphilia) to make them more sanitized and less demonized.

> Money was a professor of pediatrics and medical psychology at Johns Hopkins University from 1951 until his death. Between 1960 and 1961, he co-authored two papers with Richard Green, "Incongruous Gender Role: Nongenital Manifestations in Prepubertal Boys" and "Effeminacy in Prepubertal Boys: Summary of Eleven Cases and Recommendations for Case Management."
> Money established the Johns Hopkins Gender Identity Clinic in 1965 along with Claude Migeon who was the head of pediatric endocrinology at Johns Hopkins. The hospital began performing sexual reassignment surgery in 1966.[14] At Johns Hopkins, Money was also involved with the Sexual Behaviors Unit, which ran studies on sex-reassignment surgery. In 2002 he received the Magnus Hirschfeld Medal from the German Society for Social-Scientific Sexuality Research.

He was also involved in getting gender assignment surgery off the ground and his books are veneers for pedophilia. This is seen more clearly:

> Money participated in debates on chronophilias, especially pedophilia.[38] He stated that both sexual researchers and the public do not make distinctions between affectional pedophilia and sadistic pedophilia. Money asserted that affectional pedophilia was about love and not sex.
> If I were to see the case of a boy aged ten or eleven who's intensely erotically attracted toward a man in his twenties or thirties, if the relationship is totally mutual, and the bonding is genuinely totally mutual [...] then I would not call it pathological in any way.[39][40]
> Money held the view that affectional pedophilia is caused by a surplus of parental love that became erotic, and is not a behavioral disorder. Rather, he took the > position that heterosexuality is another example of a societal and therefore superficial, ideological concept.[39][40]

Clearly a great guy that they're basing modern psychology and sexual theory on.

But that's not all. The tragedy of David Reimer.

> During his professional life, Money was respected as an expert on sexual behavior, especially known for his views that gender was learned rather than innate. However, it was later revealed that his most famous case of David Reimer, born Bruce Reimer, was fundamentally flawed.[23] In 1966, a botched circumcision left eight-month-old Reimer without a penis. Money persuaded the baby's parents that sex reassignment surgery would be in Reimer's best interest. At the age of 22 months, Reimer underwent an orchiectomy, in which his testicles were surgically removed. He was reassigned to be raised as female and his name changed from Bruce to Brenda. Money further recommended hormone treatment, to which the parents agreed. Money then recommended a surgical procedure to create an artificial vagina, which the parents refused. Money published a number of papers reporting the reassignment as successful.
> During subsequent appointments with Reimer and Reimer's twin brother Brian, Money forced the two to rehearse sexual acts, with David playing the bottom role as his brother "[pressed] his crotch against" David's buttocks. Money also forced the two children to strip for "genital inspections", occasionally taking photos. Money justified these criminal acts by claiming that "childhood 'sexual rehearsal play'" was important for a "healthy adult gender identity".[24]
> For several years, Money reported on Reimer's progress as the "John/Joan case", describing apparently successful female gender development and using this case to support the feasibility of sex reassignment and surgical reconstruction even in non-intersex cases. Notes by a former student at Money's laboratory state that, during the yearly follow-up visits, Reimer's parents routinely lied to staff about the success of the procedure. When Money learned about this, he continued to misrepresent the results as a success for decades. By the time this was discovered, the idea of a purely socially constructed gender identity and infant Intersex medical interventions became accepted medical and sociological standard.[25]
> At 14 years old and in extreme psychological agony, Reimer was finally told the truth by his parents. He chose to begin calling himself David, and he underwent surgical procedures to revert the female bodily modifications.[26]
> David Reimer's case came to international attention in 1997 when he told his story to Milton Diamond, an academic sexologist, who persuaded Reimer to allow him to report the outcome in order to dissuade physicians from treating other infants similarly.[27] Soon after, Reimer went public with his story, and John Colapinto published a widely disseminated and influential account in Rolling > Stone magazine in December 1997.[28] This was later expanded into The New York Times best-selling biography As Nature Made Him: The Boy Who Was Raised as a Girl (2000),[29] in which Colapinto described how—contrary to Money's reports—when living as Brenda, Reimer did not identify as a girl. He was ostracized and bullied by peers (who dubbed him "cavewoman"),[30][31] and neither frilly dresses[32] nor female hormones made him feel female.

> On 1 July 2002, Brian was found dead from an overdose of antidepressants. On 4 May 2004, after suffering years of severe depression, financial instability, and marital troubles,[33] David committed suicide by shooting himself in the head with a sawed-off shotgun at the age of 38. Reimer's parents have stated that Money's methodology was responsible for the deaths of both of their sons.[34]
> Money argued that media response to Diamond's exposé was due to right-wing media bias and "the antifeminist movement." He said his detractors believed "masculinity and femininity are built into the genes so women should get back to the mattress and the kitchen".[35] However, intersex activists also criticized Money, stating that the unreported failure had led to the surgical reassignment of thousands of infants as a matter of policy.[36] Privately, Money was mortified by the case, colleagues said, and as a rule did not discuss it.[37]

All in all you have a clearly evil individual who caused a lot of damage based on using his theories to experiment on people. Yet his "theories" are basically dogma to modern psychology and sexual theory.

You wonder how people can believe such crazy things now like the recent trend of "What is a woman?" and you have this guy to thank in large part of that. It's insane to me how what he advocated for made it into mainstream when he left a trail of destruction behind him. That would be like people today glorifying Epstein instead of everyone trying to cover it up, which is even more confusing.

How did this stuff get so much traction in a more 'conservative' point in the US?

Update – IFStudies usually has good stuff, but they interviewed someone who was trying to combine "gender" and Christianity. You can see it's warped, even though she mentions Money and his bad perspective.

Black pill analysis

July 16, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Going to go over some black pill videos, since we've gone over some of the more RP ones with Roommates, Alexander Grace and Casey Zander. Wheat Waffles (WW) seems to be one of the biggest YT black pill creators.

Instead of classifying men according to a number scale, he opts for 3 categories named sub5, normie, and chad. The following 2 videos analyze the different characteristics between these categories.

The first one is supposedly classifying yourself to sub5, normie, or chad depending on how women react to you with their facial expressions. The second video focuses on 40 different ways women react differently to men within these categories.

I watched a few more videos aside from these and it's worth noting that the "sub 5" population that he says generally gets negative feedback right off tends to be < 10-15% of the population and generally has some type of large physical defect. Chad generally falls into > 10-15% of the population. So normies are approximately 70-80% of the population and on the number scale range from about 5-7 or so with some of these men being more attractive than others but not enough to jump to Chad status.

Here is his face rating guide if you wanted to know more about how he does it. While I agree with the overall theme, I do think he does underrate some faces that many would think are more attractive, and you can tell that at least in the 4-6ish range there will definitely be some women interested in some of the specific looks.

He also has a Looksmaxxing guide which if one is not doing many or all of these things he asserts can add 1-1.5ish points to a man's looks. So a 3.5-5ish man (originally sub 5) might be able to go to a normie, but if a man was < 3.5 to begin with especially with significant facial issues then he's likely to stay sub5 according to him.

It's also worth noting that he believes if you are sub5 and obese even if you had a 2-3 type of face the lost facial fat can sometimes boost a man into the normie or even Chad range depending on the underlying facial genetics once the fat is lost.

He also has a flow chart on what you should do in your dating life depending on if you are sub5, normie, or Chad.

Aside from "looksmaxxing" there's also the potential for other things like moneymaxxing (career that increases money to catapult you to another status level), surgerymaxxing (plastic surgery to improve looks like women do), or traveling to other countries where your status would be higher. He also advocates for warm approach and daygaming, but mainly for Chads since it works best for them. Maybe for normies but not for sub5.

Thoughts

I tend to agree with him in the general theme of things, but I think overall it's a bit too simplistic and nihilistic. Given that approximately 10-15% of men are "sub5" according to him, there's probably a decent to large portion of these are likely self inflicted (e.g. obesity, not even close to "looksmaxxing," etc.). It's likely most men (probably 95% or so) can get themselves to the normie range barring some type of facial deformity or anything like that.

Like I've stated in the How attraction works and misconceptions, there exists a statistical framework in what someone finds attractive. Based on my high school appearance when I was significantly underweight (16-17 BMI) looking back in my memories I had maybe 1-2 women all 4 years that I would say were attracted to me just because. Once I gained a bunch of muscle in college and starting doing things where I could stand out in terms of sports and hobbies I garnered much more attraction from women. I don't think it's a surprise that most of the sub5 and normie Christian leaders in college groups all had girlfriends either contrary to popular belief. For myself the interest was there despite being in the solid "normie" range. If I randomly go out in public I pretty much get all normie looks from women according to WW videos.

Similar to my teaching assistant (TA) stories — even though I get mostly normie looks from women — once you get into a status/teaching position and engage everyone effectively you start to generate a lot more interest as PSALMs (power, status, athleticism, looks, money) and masculinity start to shine through more. Leadership, independence, assertiveness, etc.

This is the biggest flaw of the black pill IMO. Although (L)ooks is a large component of attraction, there are definitely other ways to induce attraction. For the black pill or at least most of the black pill creators, they would just give up if a woman isn't initially attracted or categorize themselves into some sort of self defeating or nihilistic mindset once they've placed themselves there. This translates to defeated body language and is a self-reinforcing downward spiral.

Yes, not everyone is going to be interested unless you're a Chad per se, but you're not aiming to get everyone interested in you. You're aiming for a subset of the population that can find you attractive. There's a few cases where escaping the friend zone is possible, and those tend to have women see you in a new light because of a change in personality or exhibited masculinity. Statistically, your chances with the overall population of women increases as PSALMs and masculinity increases. Maybe it's 1% of the population if you're sub5 on the outset. But with putting on 20-30 pounds of muscle it jumps 5-10% to 6-11%. Style, skincare, good haircut, grooming, and all such things maybe adds some 3-5% to 9-17%. Then being athletic, having a good job, being a leader in Church, being charismatic, and all such things can increase the percentages more. Unless you're "Chad" you're probably not going to hit 30-50%+ rates, but even single digit rates are enough if you work on expanding your influence and social network especially within Christian circles.

You only marry 1 person, so you only need 1… but improving your situation to increase the percentages will help the vast majority of men that aren't Chad. Even the supposed "sub5s."

Sexual morality and civilization

August 4, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I have not disappeared. Just really busy for the next few months on real life stuff. Will try to get out a post here and there sporadically for now. Aiming for every week but might be every 2-3 weeks at the moment.

It's Good to be a man newsletter linked this gem by Unwin (on Kirk's blog) on sexual morality and how it affects civilization. To quote the article:

> ## Unwin's cultural categories
> Unwin described four "great patterns of human culture" and degrees of flourishing measured in terms of architecture, art, engineering, literature, agriculture, and so forth. The primary criterion for classification was how they related to the natural world and the forces it contains.[3]
> 1. zoistic: Entirely self-focussed on day-to day-life, wants, and needs, with no interest in understanding nature. Described as a "dead culture" or "inert".
> 2. monistic: Acquire superstitious beliefs and/or special treatment of the dead to cope with the natural world.
> 3. deistic: Attribute the powers of nature to a god or gods
> 4. rationalistic: Use rational thinking to understand nature and to make day-to-day decisions.
> ## Unwin's degrees of sexual restraint
> Degrees of sexual restraint were divided into two major categores—prenuptial and postnuptial. Prenuptial categories were:[4]
> 1. Complete sexual freedom—no prenuptial restraints at all
> 2. Irregular or occasional restraint— cultural regulations require an occasional period of abstinence
> 3. Strict Chastity —remain a virgin until married

There's also some variations/combinations of the degrees of sexual restraint in things like modified monogamy/monkey branching, modified polygamy, and others.

Obviously, rationalistic deist and strict chastity are the ones generally espoused by Scripture.

The results are what you would expect by a God that created the World with those principles.

> 1. Effect of sexual constraints: Increased sexual constraints, either pre or post-nuptial, always led to increased flourishing of a culture. Conversely, increased sexual freedom always led to the collapse of a culture three generations later.
> 2. Single most influential factor: Surprisingly, the data revealed that the single most important correlation with the flourishing of a culture was whether pre-nuptial chastity was required or not. It had a very significant effect either way.
> 3. Highest flourishing of culture: The most powerful combination was pre-nuptial chastity coupled with "absolute monogamy". Rationalist cultures that retained this combination for at least three generations exceeded all other cultures in every area, including literature, art, science, furniture, architecture, engineering, and agriculture. Only three out of the eighty-six cultures studied ever attained this level.
> 4. Effect of abandoning prenuptial chastity: When strict prenuptial chastity was no longer the norm, absolute monogamy, deism, and rational thinking also disappeared within three generations.
> 5. Total sexual freedom: If total sexual freedom was embraced by a culture, that culture collapsed within three generations to the lowest state of flourishing — which Unwin describes as "inert" and at a "dead level of conception" and is characterized by people who have little interest in much else other than their own wants and needs. At this level, the culture is usually conquered or taken over by another culture with greater social energy.
> 6. Time lag: If there is a change in sexual constraints, either increased or decreased restraints, the full effect of that change is not realized until the third generation.(Note: I've added a clarifying footnote at the end of this article. See footnote #13)

God's 'curse of sin' to the "third and fourth generation" in the OT Scriptures is looking more and more reasonable.

Obviously, it's pretty clear to us in hindsight of both European and American culture when it stayed within the general bounds of Judeo-Christian morals flourished. However, as more immorality has become acceptable there's clearly been the obvious downward trend.

Being that a "generation" is about 30-40 years and supposedly the 1960s-1970s is where most of the sexual moores and marriage were destroyed, we're about 1.5-1.75 generations into the collapse. In another 10-20 years we'll probably be seeing a generation that totally rejects God aside from the remnant. But the fields are always fertile for God to work with.

Headship is an extension of the life you built when single

August 14, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack has been going on a good tear recently with:

- Sexual authority and sanctification
- It's too easy to blame everything on feminism
- Headship authority takes work

Let me go over some thoughts I had on these.

> The fulfillment of sexual authority that a husband or wife has over their spouse is an ideal for the married person to strive after. Done well, this should usher in sanctification and God's glory in the marriage. To some, it will come naturally. To most, they will have to make a diligent effort to be obedient to God in order to attain a state of sanctification. Too many will neglect this marital duty altogether, and reap the bitter consequences thereof.

Sexual authority is an interesting term. Don't love it as it's not intuitive, but I think the concept is sound.

One thing I think most men don't get with "sexual authority" is that it's harder to learn. The "not about the nail" tends to be a fundamental misunderstanding of men to grasp how to be dominant toward women in a way that increases sexual desire.

We know that men can increase their sexual attractiveness through various traits such as PSALM (power, status, athleticism, looks, money) as well as headship/leadership and masculinity. This is the first step — be attractive. However, seduction of a wife is based on dominating her both physically and mentally and making her feel like the object of desire (of an attractive man).

If we think back to most women's porn (50 shades of gray, etc.) it's the handsome, muscular, confident, rich, assertive leader who selects that "one woman to make her feel special" and then dominates her life. That's the fantasy. Yet to get from fantasy to reality requires skills that most men aren't taught (and will never be taught) and tend to be more obscure in nature. Improving attractive traits has been well covered by the 'sphere and other places, but seduction itself tends to be harder to teach and thus not as well taught as sexual attraction.

I'd say the hardest part about seduction that I think most men will never be able to truly grasp is being socially dominant over women. Women from a young age basically are taught to be pros at verbally sparring, backstabbing, socially manipulating things, and so on, so it's any wonder why women always run circles around men in the verbal dominance circle. Yet to truly seduce a woman you need to dominate her mind.

Fortunately, the masculine shortcut at this is physical dominance which is much easier to display, which is why packing on the muscle and working out is a must. A man must be able to pick up his wife and softly or roughly man handle her. The literal sweep her off her feet to kiss her. Pin her against a wall and take a kiss and end it abruptly. Leave her wanting more. These types of things can get you most of the way there by increasing the polarity of the masculine-feminine dynamic especially in the bedroom.

But back to the nail on the head, getting into arguments is by nature not leading or being the head, so these things will inevitably be turnoffs. Most men can't win with the verbal spar of words, so by proxy we have a situation where the husband gets dominated by his wife in an argument. Not only did he fail to lead but he got crushed in the war of words which her hypergamy hates. Big sexual attraction turn off. Only way to win is not to play that game in the first place.

Maybe I can elaborate more in another post if people want more discussion on this.

> So instead of quarrelling about which came first, the chicken or the egg, eventually, we're going to have to stop ascribing such overwhelming power to Feminism in the abstract, and start picking apart the tacks and threads that hold it all together. In practice, we should start engaging in some brinkmanship with those who are limited by their need of a rhetorical catharsis and those who presume Feminism will continue to be the overriding norm to which all others have to bow.

Largely, I think this goes back to my 4 areas of responsibility in marriage.

1. Men have a responsibility for their own actions
2. Men have a responsibility for how they influence their wives
3. Women have a responsibility for their own actions
4. Women have a responsibility for how they influence their husbands

In the case of feminism, let's say the "woman" in this scenario represents that. Yes, that woman/feminism has a negative influence on the man, but the man still has a responsibility for his own actions and how he influences others. So all in all I don't see anything wrong with subscribing some blame to "sin," but that blame should not absolve anyone from continuing to do what is right in their lives.

> Headship authority takes work

I found the comments to be the most instructive.

> RPA –
> The answer to your questions about how a patriarch would handle certain situations actually starts with mindset, and that mindset is highly offensive to modern sensibilities. It's part of what men used to express in male only spaces, but now is what we must think but not say out loud, but I'm feeling good because it's Friday stateside, so here it goes … in writing.

Every husband needs to understand that in order to do his job as a husband he must think of his wife as the most responsible teenager in the household. When a husband thinks of his wife as his equal in authority bad outcomes abound, very similar to when a child is treated like an equal instead of setting boundaries for them and holding them to the standards you set.

Your traffic violation hypothetical is close to reality for me, except instead of violations the issue is accidents. Mrs. Apostle has had an accident in every car she's ever had over the past 25 years and has even wrecked 2 of mine. In total she's been involved in 8 accidents, 3 of which totaled vehicles, 2 others came very very close to being total losses and has resulted in over 100k in liability because 2 of the other drivers were injured.

So what was I to do with my wife's abysmal driving? To start, we had a month-long argument 2 years ago over who was going to be the driver of the more expensive car. I held my ground and used the insurance money from her wreck to get myself the newer vehicle and gave her the older one I'd been driving, which she then wrecked. We lucked out and found a well maintained 10 year old Toyota for her for under $10k. That's the limit I'm willing to risk on her driving and I've placed strict limits on phone use and other areas of driving that she needs to improve on. Her main issues are focus and attention, which is what I've tried to make her correct.

Time will tell if she complies, but if she messes up again she'll be in a purely functional junker that we can send to the scrap yard if anything goes wrong. The other implications are that she is working extra cases to cover the increased insurance costs and she is not allowed to drive my Tundra or Land Cruiser.

My wife is a middle aged woman with 2 graduate degrees who finished with a 4.0 GPA. She is highly capable of focus and attention to detail when she chooses to put her mind to a task. She merely has to feel like attentive driving is very important to her, which, based on her history, means it is up to me to make her feel that attentive driving is important. Hence, my mindset that she's the most responsible teenager in my household. Thinking otherwise puts my family at risk.

(There are other quite applicable examples of how this mindset applies, but the driving is the easiest example to give.)

Deti –

The mindset is one of husband being the "responsible" one, setting boundaries, and then holding to them. If the husband has made a decision and set a boundary, then he needs to keep to them.

Not to steal RPA's thunder, so I'm going to put this under here.

Mrs. deti is a capable, efficient, hard worker who can think rationally when she wants to. Her one area of irresponsibility is her emotions. She is highly emotionally overreactive. Her negative emotions run out of control. She can be overcome with fear, anger, rage, or despair. She has routinely injured her relationships with others with her emotional overreactions, worst of all me.

When this is pointed out to her, she does better. But this is one of her weaknesses and faults. This is one area she struggles in. The only things that seem to improve it are her constant mindfulness and being reminded by me of boundaries I've set for her in her treatment of me and our son. Those boundaries have to be constantly manned and defended.

RPB –

Not to steal deti's thunder, Mrs. Boomer's area is spending money, not in a reckless spendthrift way, but in a "Hubby's got the budget, not my area of responsibility" kind of way. When she goes out of town for an errand or two, it seems she can't just make one or two stops to get stuff, but three or four. And when she has her 78 year old, dementia addled mother that lives with us, it seems to always have to include a food stop along the way. We recently got a puppy, so extra stops to get stuff for the pup, are the "errands du jour."

She knows I'm on top of the budget, and that I'll "figure it all out," but try as I may, I haven't been able to get her to be more aware exactly WHAT the effect is on our budget. For example, last month I budgeted $500 for the pets, because we had vet expenses. When all was said and done for the month, we'd spent $800 on the pets. The extra three hundred had to be shifted from another area of the budget, or come out of savings. Fortunately, I had no car maintenance in July, so that line item on the budget compensated for the pet's over spending.

I'm not super complaining here because I'm sure some guys have wives who MINDLESSLY spend money, i.e. with no relation to the family budget at all, aka budget busters; my wife just seems to think, "We need this, or the pup needs this", so hubby over there will just have to figure it out.

She used to do this with her spending money line item in the budget, however after about two or three months of me, the Patriarch, showing her proof that she busted her spending money budget every single month, she finally got that under control. The point is, I had to show her this until she finally got it; got it like in, "Oh yeah, I see it now. Okay, I'll watch it closely." She did for about six months, then I noticed it starting to creep back in, so back on went my Patriarchal hat and she's reigning it back in, but not at first without a bit of a snarky attitude about it. I gave her the old "Patriarchal stare" when she snarked at me, and she got the message.

Here's the thing gents, my wife's not real bad about her spending, she's actually, from the stories I've heard other men tell, fairly mild with her spending habits… BUT she's still a female, and it's my job, as that d@mmed, ass-holish Patriarch to > reign her in on it, for the good of our family. She benefits too when the monthly budget is adhered to. When we come in under budget for the month, it's extra money for savings, or something that we/she may want to get.

> Just as a final aside, I help people with their personal or family budgets because I'm pretty good at it. I'm just starting to help a guy on my men's team who has problems with his family's monthly budget making ends meet. In our first meeting, I asked him, "Who handles the family budget?" Do I even have to tell you what the answer was to that question? LOL! His wife of course! He makes the money (her too, both have jobs), and she handles all of it. He doesn't even see his family budget because, "Mama's got it." Step one buddy, time to get your "Patriarchal hat" out of storage and get back in the family budget game, besides just handing over the moolah to mama to manage.

All of these anecdotes are particularly instructive namely because the Church wants nothing to do with them.

If we look back through the Scriptures, we see the Jesus:Church::husbands:wives analogy as is oft stated. However, Jesus was readily there to correct, teach, rebuke, and chasten the disciples when they started to go off course. Of course, it's right there in the Scriptures – Husbands are to love their wives like Christ love the Church for the purpose of sanctification.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

Whether feminist infiltration or not, the Church does a crap job at this. Egalitarians deny husbandly authority while complementarians try to neuter authority and everything in between. Hence, marriage for men becomes more like "loving your wife as she is" and not using your authority to be her head to teach, correct, and help her be more like Christ.

I get it. Most men are never taught this. Even if they learn it it's like RPA, deti, and RPB above where they had to come to the "Christian manosphere" for actual Biblical teaching. It leaves a sour taste in your mouth that your marriage could flounder and often be on the brink of destruction for so long because we had not been taught the right things.

Each man who wants to be married or will get married should be taught that he is responsible for being her head and teaching his wife what he wants his household to look like and to be a responsible steward with it. This is a basic minimum, and I would tell any man to dump a woman who doesn't agree. If she's rebellious to him being her head before marriage he should run away. The proverbs are clear about contentious and rebellious women in marriage. You don't want that headache.

If we actually had these things taught in our Churches and to our Christian sons and daughters then the expectations would be there, and we would not be surprised or have a bad taste left in our mouths. It's like the Church often lying or omitting or just not knowing anything about sexual attractiveness. It's bitter because we feel like we've been living a lie for our whole lives.

But back to sanctification, it's a continual process. Trust is earned and an expression of the character of godliness

> Obviously, a wife who is respectful and submissive even when it is difficult is much easier to trust than one who is disrespectful and rebellious. But there are many different steps that it takes to get there. For instance,
> 1. A wife who is disrespectful and rebellious according to her own whims
> 2. A wife who knows what is right but can be disrespectful and rebellious when things get tough for her
> 3. A wife who knows what is right but has developed greater self control and perseverance but sometimes slips up when things are tough
> 4. A wife who knows what is right and it's rare that she's disrespectful and rebellious
> There can be many in between with these circumstances like how she responds to teaching, correction, or rebuke for good or for evil. You could probably make another whole list or expand this one to 8-9 bullet points with these.
> However, the point is that if you and your wife are a Christian and actively wanting to obey God and His Biblical roles and responsibilities, the sanctification process will be gradual over time in most cases and it is a process. This process is cultivated step by step and large jumps though they can happen tend to be unlikely since unlearning ingrained sinfulness is difficult.

If you have a wife at 1-2 but wants to be more godly it take time to get her to 3-4. But you must be vigilant and persistent about being the head of your family and taking responsibility to say "no" (when Adam didn't) and teach, correct, and train her in righteousness. Even when the world and especially the Church says you are not doing the right thing.

Finally, circling back to the headline of the post: Headship is an extension of the life you built when single.

Building headship (of one) in your own life and taking the steps to master verbal sparring / flirting and all such manner of leadership skills and setting your expectations for marriage right are preparation for marriage. This continues when you get a girlfriend, engaged and married. They all build into each other and take work and practice. Like any new skills they are hard work at first, but once you build the habits of them they become easier and simpler. Hopefully, if you're reading this you are not surprised by them, but know they are expected by the Bible and you should strive to do them if you want to be married or you are married.

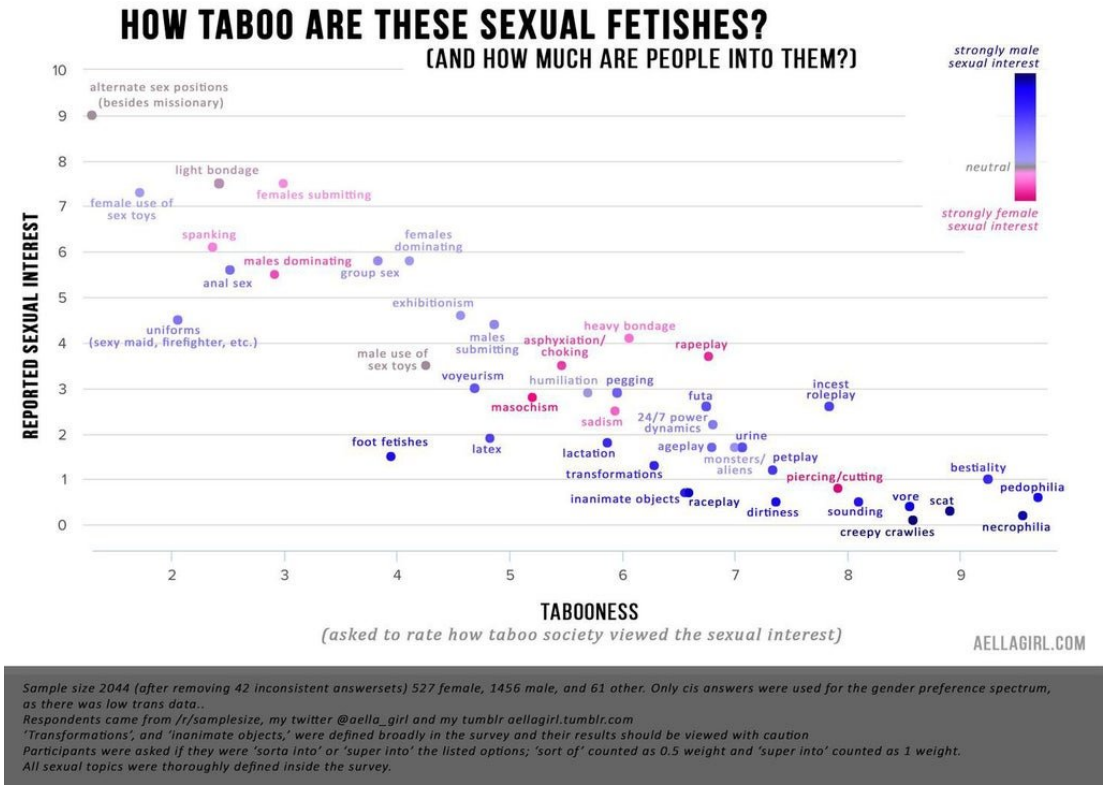
Objective and subjective attraction measures and what the Church can do about it

August 18, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There seems to be some confusion and possible disagreement on various objective and subjective attraction measures on Respect makes all the difference! and On Curating a Christian Culture of Attraction.

Objective attraction measures would probably be what we could call in-built from Creation. These seem to include:



- Muscle and V-shape for women, and waist to hip ratio in women for men
- Masculinity and masculine traits and femininity and feminine traits – polarity of the sexes
- PSALM traits for women, and beauty for men. Includes things like facial and body symmetry.
- Leadership/headship for women, and respect/submissiveness for men.
- Possibly some others, though to varying degrees. For instance, “intelligence” can sometimes be an attractor for women, but it’s not actually intelligence they’re attracted to but usually the display of intelligence morphs into some type of dominance in a social situation or knowing how to solve a problem with competence, excellence, etc).

I would say most subjective measures seem to be variations off of these certain traits, and that men seem to have more variance than women in this regard. For instance,

- Different men prefer different color hair such as blond, brunette, black
- Different men seem to also have more variance in fetishes such as feet and such.
- Men and women can have race preferences. Race preferences also vary from culture to culture, though across the world women tend to find white men the most attractive because of the relative dominance of western civilization. Men are more varied in this regard too.
- Different cultures view skin color differently — usually lighter skin color is preferable since it means someone is relatively wealthier and they don’t have to work outside in the sun all day. Contrast this to most Western cultures now where a tan seems to be a bit more attractive.
- Weight seems to be one that is variable according to culture. Mild/plump women figures used to be the most attractive before the 20th century due to wealth allowing those who are rich to eat more, but now what tends to be the most attractive seems to be low body fat with at least some muscle for women. Muscular men have always been in regardless.

Additionally, you go to a porn site and you name it there’s a category for it. Mostly for males, although there has been a stark rise in female porn usage too. There's even an informal study that looked at sexual fetishes versus social acceptability.

As you can see in this study (although might be a bit hard to read because of the blurriness), generally male fetishes vary widely including things like foot fetish, latex, exhibitionism, and such and then go all the way into disgusting ones like necrophilia, pedophilia, bestiality, etc. I highly encourage you to not look up the ones you don't know that are > 5 on the taboo scale.

Virtually all female fetishes are actually small in variability and revolve around male dominance. All of the ones listed include: females submitting, spanking, males dominating, masochism, asphyxiation/choking, heavy bondage, sadism, rapeplay, piercing/cutting.

I think Jack errs a bit in using his own experience for saying that "You Breed What You Feed" and using his own example.

> After dating several Asian women and then being married to one for a while, I now find Asian women to be more attractive than white women. Part of this is because of Western women's slide into disrespect, depravity, and obesity over the past 20 years, but part of it is because I have had many more positive interactions and good memories with Asian women than I ever had with white women.
> These days, I don't find white women attractive at all any more. I can recognize that they are beautiful, but I can't take them seriously because they don't arouse me or move me.

While that is true to some extent especially in regard to polarity of the sexes (masculine-feminine dynamic), it's also true that there seems to be less variability in female attraction. I think Jack is right in that his attraction toward white women seemed to wane the more he got respect from asian women, but this is not necessarily an indicator of attraction toward asian women but a specific turn off toward western women. After he was more turned off by western women because of lack of respect and such, then his brain probably patterned stronger because of positive reinforcement. The brain is particularly good at patterning positive and negative reinforcement. Same with porn, dopamine, and desensitization.

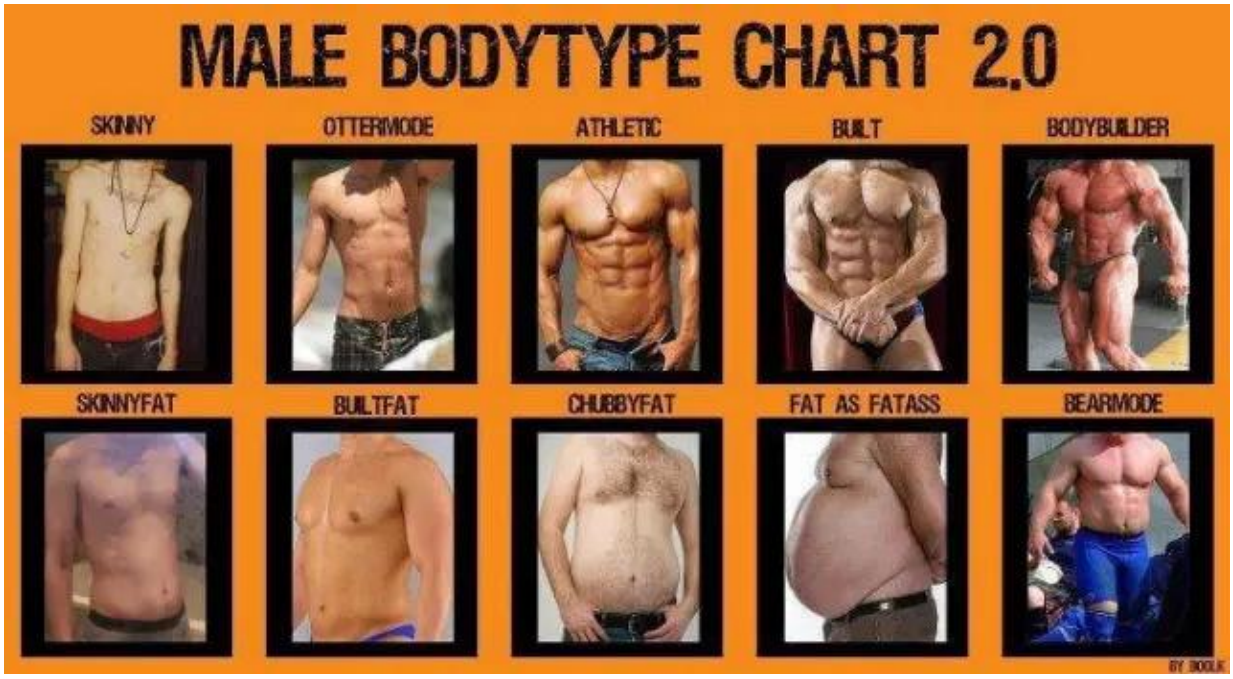
The male brain in particular seems to be able to — for lack of a better word — fetishize certain traits in women based on experiences. I recall being generally attracted to most different body types of women in high school, but when I got into working out in college my preferences started to change toward more athletic-type build women. I can go back and see what women I have been previously attracted to in high school and college via FB pictures and it's definitely not the same as it is now.



Additionally, most men go through a similar phase in regard to filtering better with turn offs. When men are inexperienced with women they tend to tolerate a woman's BS a lot more because of general sexual thirst. However, as a man gets older and more experienced, even if the woman is more beautiful or hotter, he may not engage with her because her attitude and disrespect toward him is too annoying and not worth the hassle. However, this is not attraction based but learning to implement a correct "turn off filter" so that beauty isn't as blinding anymore.

Going back to attraction it seems that the less variability in female attraction is clearly shown through the oft-used example of female porn which is virtually always focused on the handsome, rich, muscular, confident, assertive, leader. If there's any variation it's usually just in the role of the man. For instance, the man could be a wealthy businessman, an adventurer, a savior or hero, or even other "taboo" but dominant toward women non-humans like vampires or werewolves (looking at you, Twilight). You get the beastial nature which is animalistic-like dominance like the female fetishes indicate.

There is also some variability in polarity though mostly from the men's side. Cuckolding, male submitting, pegging, and other fetishes for men that are growing in popularity with the rise of more female dominance in culture. The corresponding dominatrix is definitely less common.

The main variance in women's attraction seems to be a relatively "narrow" window of the already mentioned categories. For instance, these are different physiques that have different responses from women.

Warning following image has some NSFW physiques for some.

- Most women prefer the the athletic, but less prefer ottermode, built, builtfat and bearmode. They wouldn't kick the latter ones out of bed either though.
- Some women prefer builtfat, bear, ottermode, built, and occasionally bodybuilder over fit/muscular.
- It also depends the relative physique of the woman as well. Even most skinny woman will prefer men to be at least ottermode or athletic up to built and more, just like most women will prefer 6ft men even if they are only 5'0″ themselves.
- Likewise, the more muscular a woman's physique from athletics or hitting the gym their relative hypergamy also kicks in to want a man more muscular than them.

Somewhat similar to small variance in facial genetics or some small preferences in things like hair and eye color (dark hair and dark eye color part of the "tall dark and handsome" versus say a nordic country look).

Since these are generally fall within a small variance range, the best thing to do is focus on the thing you can actually change socially and within certain communities.

What the Church can do about it

In any case, attraction and sexual arousal are generally not negotiable. People like what they like, although there is some variability in how some are influenced due to wider culture. Men also seem to have more variability than women in sexual attraction, and let's also not get turn offs confused with attraction either. But as a whole most men and women generally follow most objective measures of attraction.

As I stated in Why do most societies have 90-95% marriage rates (at some points), your average man was propped up to a higher scale through several of the following means which means that hypergamy was satisfied in most women.

> - The position of man and husband were held with nearly universal respect for what men do.

> - Most jobs, especially those which required a lot of expertise hands on or otherwise, were held only by men. By extension, most of those jobs were higher paid.
> - Men in general were more masculine
> - Lack of obesity. The comparative lack of obesity in the past, male and female 1-3s in the past would be rated higher than the 1-3s of today.

Obviously, women would need to do their part too in some of these like cultivating femininity and not being obese.

In regard to PSALMs and masculinity these are ways to encourage these types of things within the Church:

- Power/status – equip men for leadership positions in the Church and in the broader community. If it's not the vocational calling like pastor and occasionally other paid positions like worship leader, men should still be leading the Bible studies and other ministry opportunities within the Church ideally. Learning how to lead men and women helps with relationships obviously.
- Athleticism/Looks – have lifting and other sports related groups in the Church, encourage the men to dress well, good grooming, and healthy lifestyles. Obviously, these are things women can be encouraged too to avoid obesity as well.
- Money – Encourage men to go into well paying trades or if college/university to go into higher paying fields like STEM/finance
- Masculinity – obviously, raise masculine men with masculine traits and show them how Jesus was a strong masculine leader who didn't bend to societal or religious Pharisaical pressures. Expect them to be able to shared their faith effectively and get them experience leading groups within the Church.

Help them to maximize the attractive traits while equipping them to be leaders in their Churches and communities.

These are things that can be implemented in various Churches and the wider community, as well as teaching men and women that some of their feelings/desires in the opposite sex are flirting with disaster. It's easy to be enticed by the "bad boy" and the "promiscuous woman" or in the equivalent Biblical terms the "sexual forbidden fruit," but we should vigilant to look for someone who we are attracted to but has good character, morals, and wants to grow in the Biblical roles and responsibilities with us in marriage.

Preparing young men and women for that is critical, and it needs to be followed through. Others have commented that even if you prepare young men and women for Biblical roles and responsibilities in marriage, but then send them off to college/university fornication factories and discourage relatively early marriage compared to society then you're really sabotaging your own teachings. It is does not appear that men and women were created to have sex drives for 15+ years until late 20s/early 30s to marry because sexual temptation is too much. Maybe marriage in late teens right now can be a bit much for some parents, but at least early 20s and family oriented individuals should have a solid handle on general trajectory for quality men and women

Biblical Christianity is both good and attractive while Western Christianity is not

From my comment on deti's post The Delusion of the Good.

Deti makes several good points.

> This is what our churches are telling men: That women are basically good, they're better than men are, women are not depraved, and women are "attracted" to "Good Men". Since women are so good, then when a man is faced with problems in a relationship with a woman, then it must be entirely the man's fault. He has to "make concessions" and "do what it takes" to keep her.
> Then they tell you, "Well, if it doesn't work, you might get divorced. This is war. Some men die in battle. Oh well, guys, if your marriages fail, too bad so sad, you're just unlucky, you'll just have to suffer and die. We'll carefully and assiduously ignore that any children you had will suffer too, but they're just collateral damage. It was probably your fault anyway."
> No.
> Guys, I've already done this. I've done everything men like Kristor and Roebuck told me to do. I was good, kind, nice. I got the education. I got the career. I made the money. I did the work. I went to church. I treated everyone well. I was virtuous, good, and kind. I asked permission. I stayed inside the lines.
> I was a stellar man, by the world's standards, and also by God's. But it was all an effort in the flesh. I thought that if I fit the image of an ideal man, then I should have the concomitant rewards. But it just doesn't work that way.
> What did I get for all that effort?
> I ended up in a very unhappy marriage to a headstrong and rebellious woman. Now, I'm just trying to save my own life and that of my children's.

The slight error he makes is based in the difference between actual Biblical Christianity and western Christianity.

Commenter info identifies this as well.

> What is is considered Good has departed from what God actually considers Good.
> For example, the conception that Jesus didn't have "Game" as part of the repertoire of Righteousness. The son of God was sinless and the Perfect Man:

My reply:

Agreed with info.

Jesus despite having "He had no beauty or majesty to attract us to him, nothing in his appearance that we should desire him." per Isaiah 53 exuded masculine traits (e.g. confidence, assertiveness, independence, leadership, etc.) and charisma such that dozens of men and women wanted to follow him for life (e.g. the disciples and women) and thousands of people gathered to hear him regularly.

When talking with and advising men the thing I find that most differs with "modern western Christianity" and "Biblical Christianity" is the misinterpretation of Ephesians 5 that I've continually harped on my blog.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless.

- Biblical Christianity is headship for the purpose of sanctification. Being the anti-Adam (who listened to his wife to eat the fruit instead of sanctifying her) much like Jesus' purpose for the Church is salvation and sanctification. This is also correction and rebuke as evidenced in Revelation 2-3 where Jesus provides a rebuke for the Churches or they have no part of Him.
- Modern western Christianity twists this Christ's love to mean care the most about your wife's feelings. For instance, if she's "feeling unloved" you must do all you can to sacrifice to make her feel better because Christ's love was sacrificial. It sounds good, but then you realize that actually trying to make someone feel better is just being a slave to their feelings. This leads to an inverted role relationship where the woman's feelings are the head and a husband is merely submitting their every whim as a supplicating wimp.

Wives may not like being corrected or taught, but they will respect it even if they don't like it or try to rebel. Supplicating to her feelings inevitably leads to more unhappiness and almost always some sort of desire for divorce or adultery. No woman respects a supplicating wimp nor listens to him either.

Biblical Christianity is GOOD and actually doing it has some components of attraction. But western Christianity has gotten things twisted because of notions of chivalry, marrying feminism with the Bible, pastoral blind spots and other things of these natures which leads to not only no attraction but worse marital outcomes.

The distorted Western Christianity take on "love" is a disaster for respect, attraction, and marital outcomes. However, the Biblical headship may or may not get the right marital outcome if a wife is dead set on rebelliousness, but it will at least keep some components of attraction and respect.

This is why your average men in the Christian manosphere who actually starting taking headship seriously sometimes turn their marriages around, whereas Christian marriage counseling is a sham and never works. The only exception it seems to work in and only occasionally at that is where a husband is already attractive (e.g. pastor) who is so consumed with his ministry that he neglects/abandons headship of his wife. Then when he actually starts being the head to her again she feels more loved, but it's only the case because he was attractive before (e.g. has the status of pastor, leader of congregation, was so driven/ambitious by his mission for God).

The major problem with this becomes quite clear which is the aforementioned pastor blind spot. The pastor thinks that his situation is the same as any average man. Thus, he tells husbands to focus on their wives and their marriage will improve. After all, it did for him. But this advice is ignorant of the true reality that the pastor is already attractive and his specific circumstance is actually being neglectful of being a head to his wife. The common man's issue is often not being attractive in the first place. Yes, this in part may be due to abdicating headship as well, but it usually is also with letting himself go (obesity) and otherwise already supplicating to his wife (e.g. she's my better half, wears the pants, makes the decisions, etc.) which the pastor was not doing. Your average man doubling down on trying to satisfy her feelings of unhappiness only leads to more unhappiness.

I believe type of experience, along Christians believing chivalry is good and incorporating feminist influences into Scripture, are probably the largest reasons why the Ephesians 5 passage gets misinterpreted. To the detriment of all Christians: husbands as the perpetual supplicators instead of leaders and wives in a more unhappy situation to choose to rebel and divorce.

Classic case of the blind leading the blind into a pit.

What sexual attraction does and does not do

August 28, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Given some recent misinterpretations on my position on (sexual) attraction, this post may be warranted. If you're new and want to know the Biblical understanding of attraction see the post linked.

Gonna go through my main points and elaborate on them a bit more.

> I'm one of the ones who initially pointed out that Game does not produce sanctification. One cannot rely on attraction to produce sanctification either. One must deliberately do it. E.g. Be the head, love her for the purpose of sanctification, etc.

My post on the interaction of game, attraction, and sanctification.

Generally speaking, attraction can assist in sanctification in that a it's more likely a wife will not be as contentious or rebellious if a husband is more attractive. In this way, a good analogy for sexual attraction is that it's like influence.

For instance, an attractive man has "influence" in asking a woman out on a date that she is more likely to respond affirmatively. Attractive men and women generally get more social benefit of the doubt and tend to benefit more from raises, social situations, and other positive interactions from said influence.

This is the reason why men in the Christian manosphere can sometimes turn the marriages around. Once they start acting like the head, leading, and generally being more masculine they start to become more attractive to their wives. This is generally met with more compliance if not outright respect and submission. Yes, there are some exceptions such as if the wife already checked out and is heading toward divorce. However, the general trend is the wife was just unhappy her husband wasn't doing what the man is supposed to do in the relationship then it usually turns out better. Some resistance can be met (e.g. overcoming fitness tests) to generally prove to her it's not fake and/or if there are ingrained inverted role relationship habits that need to be broken.

Compare this to the overweight nice guy husband who defers to his wife on everything. He has little attractiveness (e.g. little to no influence) over his wife. Therefore his relative 'bids' or requests such as initiating sex or attempting to make decisions or lead the family are generally met with contentiousness and disrespect. If this pattern of behavior has been going on years possibly scorn or disgust.

> I'm advocating that men should consider increasing their attractiveness if they want a wife and are having trouble getting dates. This includes any man not just men on the cusp. A chunk of this is by actually doing what the Bible says anyway.
> I'm not advocating attraction is "all that." But it helps. Most men and women can't get a date from the opposite sex if they don't find them at least somewhat attractive. At least get your foot in the door.

Both of these tend to fall in this category.

For the most part, there's no reason to not work on attractiveness as everyone stands to benefit from it. All men and all women can benefit from more influence in life especially in regard to the social interaction, even if it's not being more attractive for a potential spouse. You're more likely to be taken seriously when talking with others, preaching the gospel, and taking the initiative to do things if you look are attractive. For instance, you're confident, dress well, and are fit and muscular versus look like you're overweight/obese, unkempt, and generally crawled out of a dumpster.

The only reason why you might not want to work on it anymore is the value of time. If a man or woman is already say an 8-10 in the looks range, it's not likely that they're going to benefit from improving their looks much compared to the time they could use to do other things. However, any man or woman going from 3 to 5 or 5 to 7 definitely ups their positive interaction rates in the dating game.

In regard to the Biblical Christianity as opposed to Western Christianity helping with attractiveness that was covered in that last post.

> I'm advocating that Church communities help improve men's status and other factors that can help relative hypergamy and affirm men and women flee sexual temptation.

This is a separate thing from someone improving their attractiveness (e.g. influence) as it involves the community doing things to facilitate a culture to improve and reinforce marriages from divorce. Covered in the post before the last on objective and subjective measures of attraction and what the Church can do about it.

The brief summary is that men were held in high respect for who they are and what they do. Men generally had more well paying jobs. Men were expected to be leaders in their family and the Church and general civic life. The Church and community pushed for these things, and the Church should be pushing for strong masculine men in their own Churches. Likewise, teaching men and women to flee sexual immorality (promiscuous women & bad boys).

Attraction / influence can be used either positively or negatively and obviously one of the ways it's used negatively is temptation for sin such as premarital sex, frigidity, and other such things.

And to review on what we know about sexual attractiveness to women via PSALM + masculinity:

> Godliness is not attractive.
> But godly activities expressed in a certain way (PSALM + masculinity) are attractive.
> Godliness by itself is not attractive. It has the capacity to be so if expressed in a certain way.
> Again, Pastor, worship leader, Bible study leader vs Church janitor, parking lot > coordinator, etc. In most Churches, all of these men are doing all they can for the glory of God. Only some are sexually attractive to women.

> Another example. Prayer at home [edit: by yourself] is not attractive. Prayer in a group where you're leading it? Some. Prayer at a Christian conference? Yeah. It's the leadership and status associated with the context that makes it attractive.

If we again use the analogy that attraction is influence, we can see that we can see that positions of power, status, athleticism, looks, money, and masculine traits all have that type of influence on women. They want to be around them more, and also want to be with them. Prayer by itself means nothing in regard to attraction.

clarification: In regard to the prayer by yourself instance, leading your wife in prayer, Bible study, and other spiritual disciplines can be attractive as the context is being the head/leading her. However, a wife simply knowing that you're praying a lot by yourself is not attractive in itself.

The same is true of the difference of attractive man giving a woman flowers being romantic versus the unattractive man giving a woman flower being a creep.

Same thing for godly activities. A woman's nice guy friend can pray for her and she isn't attracted to him, but if her attractive friend will pray for her and it's romantic and sweet. In the same way, if an unattractive woman prays for a man he'll just tell her thanks. If an attractive single woman offers to pray for the same man he'll probably get a bit excited and think that she may be interested in him.

Godly activities are contextually attractive only if they are expressed through the various PSALM + masculine traits or a woman already thinks a man is attractive.

In other words, to quote Deti: "women want a loving, kind, good-with-children, patient man who is already attractive." However, they usually won't tell you the underlined part, and most of them won't even know what their attraction triggers are in the first place.

The differences between sexual attraction and sexual arousal

September 1, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the bigger confusions about Deti's and Rowena's points seems to be the distinction between sexual attraction and sexual arousal.

> ### SMV = 8-10 "The Have's"
> Only 8-10's (men very high in good looks and athletic ability – a part of LAMPS) can elicit the raw visceral sexual attraction that Scott and Thedeti are referring to.
> For 8-10's, the Tingle button is permanently ON. These men are ALWAYS sexually attractive to women. And to practically ALL women. Even though they may not show it, respond to it, or express interest (because that would be a pay off.)
> In this case, Rowena and Thedeti AGREE.
> ### SMV = 5-7 "It depends on maybe's"
>
> There is no sexual attraction but there is no sexual repulsion either. However, sexual attraction or sexual repulsion can be generated if the context changes.
> So in this case, Rowena and Thedeti DISAGREE.
> For men in the 5-7 category, the question is how to change and/or control the context. The contextual factors of attraction will be covered in the next section.
> ### SMV ≤ 4 "The Have Not's"
> For men below 5, the Tingle button is permanently OFF. This includes the morbidly obese, profoundly ugly, etc. These men are sexually REPULSIVE. This is not the zone of a lack of sexual attraction, it is the zone of sexual REPULSION, meaning, "No way will I ever let this person touch me!" Nothing can change this.

This type of system is comparative to Wheat Waffle's Chad / Normie / Sub5 I covered in Black Pill analysis as I commented over there.

In general, I find this system to a solid one. Most Sub5 / Have Nots can usually get themselves at least to Normie / Maybe range if they become muscular and fit and generally clean up as opposed to be more grungy and unkempt. There's not that many truly unfortunate people out there, so for all intents and purposes we'll skip that for now.

Deti seems to be describing something different than just sexual attraction which generally would be defined as sexual arousal.

> This is where I want to focus effort. Here's the main point: With these men and women's interactions with them, what is generated in women is not "sexual attraction". It's not any kind of "attraction". The only kind of "attraction" that there is or that matters is SEXUAL attraction.
> It's not arousal or desire. It's utility and exploitation. It's that the woman sees an opportunity to use, exploit, and take advantage of a man for whatever it is she wants from him (usually indicia of commitment and access to resources). She's not attracted to him. She does not really want him. She wants him to commit to her so she has unfettered access to his resources into perpetuity even after she has decided that staying with him is no longer advantageous to her.
> I used to believe that the S, A, and M of PSALM generated real sexual attraction. I don't believe they do now. Of course, looks generates real, actual sexual attraction. I believe P (power) can generate real sexual attraction if it is combined with looks, but not alone and not when combined with anything else.
> The only thing other than being 8-10 as Rowena describes it that generates sexual attraction, temporarily, is Game/charisma/whatever it's called now. (Hey, guys- remember Game?) Game can generate some attraction in some women, for a while.
> The point is that the only thing that lasts is being an 8-10 (in her eyes, anyway). That's what works. That's Scott/Mychael. That's SAM/Elspeth ("he was the most beautiful man I had ever laid eyes on" "He has a beautiful visage"). Nothing else lasts. Nothing else works.

My comment as follows with some expounding after that.

> I think what you're getting at here is the difference between attraction and sexual arousal.
> Women generally won't date or marry someone they aren't at least somewhat attracted to (PSALM + masculinity) unless they are going for the status of married (which there are some). However, attraction does not always lead to sexual arousal.
> Expressed dominance is what usually leads to arousal. An already attractive man (e.g. PSALM + masculinity) applies a dominant frame and actions in a sexual situation. For instance, hunky, muscular romance novel lookalike pushes the women up against the wall and kisses her deeply. Then picks her up and throws her on the bed and has his way with her. Conversational dominance/flirting/charisma is another way.
> I'd say most 5-7s don't develop that kind of frame unless they read about it here or PUA forums or whatever. While they may be somewhat or maybe even reasonably attractive to some women (and may even marry said women), they aren't able to give women tingles that the expressed sexual dominance does.
> I think I differ from you a bit here in I think that even average men can attract a > woman and then be dominant enough toward her to generate tingles.

The thing is with men sexual attraction and sexual arousal aren't all to different.

- Sexual attraction for a man is seeing a beautiful or pretty woman, especially in feminine clothing, demeanor, long hair, etc.
- Sexual arousal for a man is seeing a beautiful or pretty woman in less clothes and/or acting sexy, seductive, and enthusiastic about having sex with him. In other words, he finds her attractive and his nether regions start to act on it.

Men's sexual attraction and sexual arousal are pretty simple, but yet most women won't do the former latter unless she is attracted to the man. The Madonna/whore complex where a man's wife is the former and he seeks out other women for the latter, but I don't think it's that prevalent. It's usually based on some weird notion that the wife shouldn't be there for his sexual arousal and that she's supposed to be "pure." Some type of gnosticism probably.

For women this differs from men.

- Sexual attraction for a woman is seeing a man with PSALM + masculinity traits. These traits are expressed in varying degrees and usually having at least an extreme of 1 trait guarantees that at least some women will be interested. For instance, with power such men such as the president of the US or mob boss or any other people who can wield lots of authority (ostensibly with threat of violence) over others is attractive to women. Status/fame you see ugly celebrities with women. Money you see ugly billionaires with women. Athleticism you see ugly professional sports athletes with women. Obviously, all things being equal women want all of the categories maximized, but you can get away with being sub par in some if you're good to excellent in others.
- Sexual arousal for a woman is seeing a man with said traits act sexually dominant toward her. Generally, a woman with a man with Chad looks will want him to have her babies. This is the most straight forward. The other traits, though, are not necessarily connected. A man must display said traits toward her in a sexual way. For instance, there's successful business men who are SIMPs with their wives. Anthony Bourdain was basically SIMPing Asia Argento and couldn't stand to see her with someone else before he committed suicide. Little wonder why she was constantly on again/off again. He was famous, wealthy, and not even bad looking… but his behavior was repulsive toward a relationship. Same with Will and Jada Smith where she constantly wants the open relationship and acts on it. There's no shortage of celebrities who easily get with women, but always have failed relationships or marriages because they put their woman on a pedestal. Whereas there are men like Leonardo DiCaprio, Paul Walker, and others who seem to know they are the man and know how to act as a man with women. They're usually the one to dump a woman rather than the reverse.

To go a bit further on women's sexual arousal it's what makes her nether regions wet and start to feel tingly. Hence, the common term tingles.

Womens' pornography — romance novels and romance porn — proves the point as well. 50 shades of gray and so on. The man is attractive with the PSALM+masculinity traits like looks, muscles, and always very powerful or successful… but he has the added component of actually acting on it toward the woman he wants and takes/ravishes the woman. Sometimes even despite her 'weakhearted' protests which muddles the water even more for men.

Womens' turn offs seem to be stronger than men given that their hypergamy ensures that they are more selective. An example of this is if husband could be arguing with his wife and then if his wife wanted to have sex he'd be up for it. However, if a wife was arguing with her husband it's unlikely or just rare that she will want to have sex with him after it. Thus, overall navigating sexuality tends to be more difficult for men than it is for women. No shortage of women nitpicking their way through men much more than men nitpick women.

Normies / Maybe's generally are at least somewhat attractive to women to where they can get dates and marriage, but I think largely (unless their wife is a virgin) they tend to have trouble generating sexual arousal. Being dominant in a relationship and also in the bedroom are not traits that are taught. Even if a man is the leader and masculine it seems to be rarer that he would also be sexually dominant as well unless he actually has taken the time to research this or experiment.

In general, Christian men seem to have it worse:

- Misinterpretations of Matthew 5 where Jesus said 'if you look lustfully a woman you have committed adultery with her in your heart' still reign supreme. It should be 'covetous' as it is a reference to the 10 commandments & same word is translated as covet in Romans. The passage is not talking about expressing sexual desire of a single man toward a single woman (e.g. 1 Cor 7 – if you burn with passion they should marry) which is actually a good thing if it promotes sex in marriage.
- Churches are beta factories pumping out nice guys that don't lead relationships and by extension are definitely not sexually dominant in the bedroom.
- The Church tying itself to chivalry (Queen-Knight inverted role) instead of Biblical headship. This makes the man/husband a slave to his wife's whims and feelings.
- Most men think women like romantic sex whereas most women actually like fast/rough and potentially rougher sex. The idea of romance is tied with Christ-Church in a multitude of ways (not just chivalry). For women fast and rough dominant sex with an attractive man is romantic. See: women's porn examples.

Dominance for Christian men often feels wrong both in leading a relationship and also in the bedroom. It seems that most of the men who never got the memo are the ones who came to Christ later after having lived a life of debauchery and fornication. While this is not a good thing, what is worse is the Church neutering the non-fornicating husbands in their marriages.

Personally, these were two separate things for me to learn as a “Normie / Maybe” range man. Yes, the manosphere helped, but I had to experience and learn from them myself. I think most Christian men don’t know that they should be leading.. or at least actually leading in a Biblical manner. And most definitely don’t know the dominance during sex part. Surprise, surprise, the more dominant I got during sex the more my wife liked it. Now it’s just my natural frame, but it definitely felt unnatural before that.

Now clearly most of what this blog talks about is sexual attraction and not sexual arousal namely because most Christian men need help getting dates first. But discussing sexual arousal definitely needs to be talked about as well, and I can plan some more posts on that.

I think these things are achievable for most men (e.g. most Normies / Maybe’s which most men fall into) excluding Chads, but it’s definitely a process. I think this would probably work best in a discipleship-type environment where older men can explain to younger men and newly married what masculine headship/leadership looks both in a marriage and in the bedroom.

Let me conclude by saying that one does not have to have sexual attraction and sexual arousal maximized to have a successful and sanctified marriage either. A lot of husbands and wives have been happy and holy throughout history without any focus on these things. Much of that has to do with instilling loyalty, commitment to vows, and fleeing outside temptations. But having sexual attraction and sexual arousal does seem to enrich the marriage by making the bond stronger if the descriptions of those men and women who have strong sexual attraction and arousal for each other are any indicator. It also makes it more likely that they will be more willing to do the Biblical roles and responsibilities, but they still have the choice to disobey God which can happen.

Torturous logic on divorce and complementarian trashology

Somewhat off topic given the current trends, but haven't posted in a while and wrote this a while back. Have maybe 1-2 more on this topic, before we head back into the current discussions.

One of the depressing things to me is how people can use crazy logic to get to the wrong conclusion. Take for example this back and forth divorce on RP Christians with this follow up. Refer back to the Divorce Part 8 Actual Final for more in depth arguments.

> At the bottom line, it seems like your position results in the Mosaic Law permitting sin. Something to the effect of, "Yes, Moses allowed this sin. But Jesus, who raised the bar, doesn't allow it." This comes out clearly in your third point. I think the first and fourth points beg the question, so I'm only going to address the second and third points you listed.
> Second point: I understand your point. If hardness of heart is sin, and divorce always involves hardness of heart, then isn't divorce always sin? Of course, I would say that one or both of the premises is wrong, but I will admit that I need to study this more.
> Third point: This appears to contain the critical assumptions of your position. This idea that Jesus was "raising the bar" has major theological problems. The Mosaic Law had already been declared perfect by OT prophets (Ps. 19:7), not to mention that obedience to it could produce life (Deut. 6:25). Jesus declared that he would perfectly fulfill the Mosaic Law (Matt. 5:17-20) . Your position seems to result in a new law: "Christ's Version of the Mosaic Law", which is superior to Mosaic Law. Even then, its unclear why the inferior Mosaic Law would permit sin.
> This is the standard type of response I've come to expect from you. When I point out a contradiction or a problem, you wave your hands, beg the question, perform semantic gymnastics, and/or copy-and-paste another word bomb. Nevertheless, you write with such confidence that I'm sure it impresses the undiscerning mind. Notable examples would include your position on vows, Christ's "ability" to contradict the Mosaic Law, marriage can be "annulled" but this isn't a real divorce.

This position uses torturous logic to eventually get to the wrong conclusion. One can cherry pick examples of OT Scriptures to try to justify an OT stance on divorce, but when one looks at the whole picture the positions become even more stark as one is clearly wrong.

> Your position: Jesus agrees with Shammai Pharisees in Matthew 19 that you > can divorce for adultery with the exception clause. Not only that, according to Mike Winger's position which you seem to accept has even more exceptions for divorce than even the Pharisees such as abandonment, abuse, etc.

> My position: Jesus is right in showing that Mosaic law won't pass away (for the Jews), but raises the standards in His "New Testament/Covenant" for Christians. For instance, Matthew 5-7 sermon on the mount… ("You have heard it said don't commit adultery (10 commandments)… but I tell you… anyone who looks with covetous/lust on [another man's wife] has committed adultery with her in his heart"). Clearly raising the bar here. Same with His statement on the beginning in Matthew 19 on divorce: "What God has put together let no man separate."
> My position is not even a contradiction unless you intend that Jesus wants to hold Christians to the standards of the Jewish law which Paul says is wrong. Moreover, what's more likely? Jesus lowers the bar or raises the bar when establishing the New Covenant? The clear theme throughout the NT is Jesus raises the bar.
> If you still think my position has all of those flaws that you say, I just can't see how your think your position is more logically sound. Jesus agreeing with the Pharisees and lowering the bar for divorce for Christians? Really?
> RE: marriage can be "annulled" but this isn't a real divorce and vows
> Literally examples of this in the Bible. Deut 22 – marriage is annuled because of no blood on the sheet means the wife is not a virgin. Matthew 1 – Joseph wants to put away Mary secretly because he is a righteous man and she is pregnant not by him. Her pregnancy annuls the betrothal marriage contract. Also referring to John 8 where the Pharisees quip that Jesus is a "son of porneia (fornication)" which ties back into Matthew 19 exception.
> Same with examples of vows. Jesus cautions us because of the seriousness of them and to just let our yes be yes and no be no. You think your vows you said before God and man can be broken because of what someone else did? I don't think mine can. There's no Biblical support for the opposite either.
> I don't know how you think these Biblical instances are an example of "wave your hands, beg the question, perform semantic gymnastics, and/or copy-and-paste another word bomb" but ok.

The problem seems to be that people get so entrenched in their position of pro-divorce that everything turns into a justification for that. This particular man has an unrepentant narcissistic wife who is divorced, so I definitely understand how that turns into that. I would never wish that on anyone.

However, it's very easy to reconcile the supposed problematic portions of my position with Scripture, but it's impossible to do that with the opposite position. Yes, the Mosaic Law can be 'perfect' and 'obedience to it can give life' for the Jews. But clearly Jesus communicates to us in the NT that His New Covenant is fulfilling the Old and giving us a New Covenant that teaches us to "be perfect like our heavenly father is perfect." Moses permitted divorce in the OT for hardness of heart. That doesn't mean it was good. It was merely permitted as "not sin." But hardness of heart to Jesus is clearly not a good thing and not something we should strive for as it's always negatively talked about in the Bible.

Moreover, clinging to the Mosaic Law version of divorce leads someone in the exact wrong direction of "what God has put together let no man separate." The said debater brings up Mike Winger's video which my new post on divorce covered. Winger comes to the conclusion that Jesus agrees with the Shammai position on divorce for adultery, but when you watch further into the video he adds in more exceptions than even the Pharisees for abandonment, abuse, and so on.

Not only in this position does Jesus not raise the bar, but according to Winger clearly Jesus has a lower bar for divorce than even the Pharisees now. Torturous logic. Scripture now means the opposite of what it has previously said.

Now, obviously, I have stated that this is my conclusion based on studying the Scriptures in-depth. If you're in a faith tradition that allows annulments or divorce with wise counsel then more power to you. No divorce seems to be the most accurate position, with possible exceptions for annulments given that a covenant marriage must be established. That's why I think the Catholic position on marriage seems to be the most faithful to the Scripture.

However, at the end of the day you don't have to justify your position to me, but you will answer to God.

Complementarians

To tie everything back to the title, this is the same type of logic that complementarians use to deny husbands headship authority.

Like the pro-divorce people they say no divorce is good. Look at what Jesus said! "What God has put together let no man separate." Oh wait. But now if we read further we have an exception where divorce could be acceptable. How do we pick out Scriptures that fit this position? Also, let's ignore the context of Mark 10, Luke 16, Romans 7, 1 Cor 7, and others not permitting any divorce and hone in on this exception. Let's also ignore Joseph and Mary (Matt 1), Deut 22 (annulments), and the Pharisees calling Jesus a "son of fornication/porneia" (John 8) which provide strong context into the exception clause.

Likewise, complementarians pay lip service to headship. Headship is good they say. But then they use torturous feminist exceptions and passages taken out of context to deny that husbands should have authority over wives creating a neutered version that makes the husband into a sock puppet.

Headship is good. But clearly abuse is bad. Since abuse is bad, we can't be having husbands have authoritative headship. Preaching that husbands should have authoritative headship would clearly create too many tyrant husbands (…when we see the exact opposite in real life. Too many husbands are wimpy cowards).

- That is why now that husband and wife agreement is the most godly — the husband gets the "final tie break vote". A husband who makes unilateral decisions that does not have support of the wife is clearly operating in bad faith.

- Mutual submission. Husbands should be submitting to their wife's decisions too while ignoring how authority works.
- Husbands and wives are of equal worth and value before God but different roles…. but oops now their roles are the same because we're partners in marriage! We work as a team! We're all in this together, equally. Women can do anything men can do!
- Husbands love your wives and if they aren't feeling loved you need to do more to make her feel loved. Ignoring the fact that Christ's love is for the purpose of sanctification which is to lead, teach, train, disciple, and correct a wife toward righteousness.

Now Scripture is reduced to something that is totally the opposite of what is written.

Eventually you get some twisted form of slavery where the husband has all the responsibility with no authority. Then they wonder why a wives have a hard time respecting their husbands or don't want to have sex with him. It's because YOU neutered the husband. What wife will get the hots for a neutered husband?

Yes, the husband is reduced to the status of a neutered dog who exists to make his "owner" feel happy.

Complementarians, like the egalitarians, twisted Scripture to fit the spirit of the age instead of standing on the hard truths of what God has said. At least the egalitarians were more honest about warping it and bowing to the culture.

Complementarians are the New Pharisees – blind guides leading the blind.

Pericope adulterae

September 22, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This has been referenced a few times on Jack's and my blogs comments recently.

> John 7:53–8:11
> 53 Then each of them went home, 8:1 while Jesus went to the Mount of Olives. 2
> Early in the morning he came again to the temple. All the people came to him > and he sat down and began to teach them. 3 The scribes and the Pharisees > brought a woman who had been caught in adultery; and making her stand before > all of them, 4 they said to him, "Teacher, this woman was caught in the very act > of committing adultery. 5 Now in the law Moses commanded us to stone such > women. Now what do you say?" 6 They said this to test him, so that they might > have some charge to bring against him. Jesus bent down and wrote with his > finger on the ground. 7 When they kept on questioning him, he straightened up > and said to them, "Let anyone among you who is without sin be the first to throw > a stone at her." 8 And once again he bent down and wrote on the ground. 9
> When they heard it, they went away, one by one, beginning with the elders; and > Jesus was left alone with the woman standing before him. 10 Jesus straightened > up and said to her, "Woman, where are they? Has no one condemned you?" 11
> She said, "No one, sir." And Jesus said, "Neither do I condemn you. Go your way, > and from now on do not sin again."

Figured I'd throw it up real quick. Apparently Scott just found out about it recently though:

> "Wow man. I went to look that up and you are right. Depending on where you line you line up on the text criticism spectrum, it really doesn't belong in the Bible. And the implications are pretty far reaching. A major (and really bizarre) passage is found in there that we base a big part of our understanding of what it means to be a hypocrite is in that section."

Here's the general manuscript evidence for those wondering. It's all over the place for John.

My general response.

> I'm of the other opinion. Even though it's not in John 7-8 in the majority of the oldest texts, it consistently in a few different places in the various gospels (namely, Luke as one). This means it's likely a legitimate story about Jesus, but the scribes didn't know where to put it and eventually it settled in John 7-8. Other Church fathers reference it as early as around mid 100s AD, and that's before most of the early manuscripts which are usually 200s or later.
> The major point issue is not the story itself which is consistent with Jesus' > character but modern interpretations of the story.

> For instance, we know that the modern interpretations of various verses are warped:
> - Eph 5:21 "Submit yourselves to one another in reverence of Christ" – Egalitarian drama
> - Eph 5 "Husbands, love your wives like Christ loved the Church" while leaving out the purpose is sanctification and not about not making her feel bad.
> - Matthew 7 "Don't judge lest you be judged" … and ignoring the context of hypocrisy and other passages which state Christians are supposed to call each other out.
> - Matthew 5 "…anyone who looks at a woman/wife with lust (actually covetousness) commits adultery in his heart" while 1 Cor 7 says that if a single man and single woman want to do things with each other they should marry and it's not sin. It's only coveting something that is another man's that is adultery in the heart.
> For pericope adulterae — "Let he who is without sin cast the first stone" is clearly aimed at the hypocrisy of the Pharisees trying to trap Jesus in his words. If they truly cared about the adultery in the Law, they would have brought the woman AND the man caught to be stoned. But here they only brought the woman, so it's clear they're targeting Jesus on purpose.
> Modern interpreters treat this passage much like Matthew 7 "Don't judge lest you be judged", but the full context is don't be a hypocrite and remove the plank from your own eye before you judge. Not that you shouldn't judge at all. They also ignore Matthew 18, 1 Cor 5, and other places in the Scriptures where it says explicitly to call out other Christians who are caught in sin to repent. Jesus is consistent by telling her to "go and sin no more" or in other words repent and change your ways.
> I don't see a problem as long as it's interpreted correctly, but it is an easily warped verse.

As an aside, most Pharisee traps against Jesus pitted Jewish Law against Roman Law such as "Should we pay taxes to Caesar?" In this case, only the Romans had the ability to execute people. The Pharisees are trying to trap Jesus to say to stone her (e.g. "stone her" – break Roman law and accuse him to the Romans) or break Jewish law ("don't stone her" and then they can call Him a blasphemer and not listen to Him anymore).

Overall, like I said I think this story is consistent with Jesus' character, but it's easily warped into an unintended meaning by modern "Christians." However, I don't mind not using it as an example if people think it's questionable, especially because Jesus character can be established through other passages of the Bible just the same.

I also do not believe that this verse is any major determining factor in women being painted as angels that can do no wrong much like the culture suggests. If someone ("Christian" or not) already has that position, it's because they believe it despite what the Bible says. Those in the 'sphere, on my blog, or Jack's, or any others suggesting that it has caused any havoc in Churches are probably wrong.

What is true, however, is that the Ephesians 5 passage is easily warped (e.g. "love your wives" instead of "love your wives for the purpose of sanctification") and is likely 1000x more destructive on current Christian homes than pericope adulterae.

Pros and cons of distinguishing sacramental/covenant marriage from natural marriage

September 23, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is a side topic from the Divorce Part 8 Actual Final where I mention I tend to find the Catholic position on divorce the most Biblically consistent. Although that is the case, there are some pros and cons of this position.

First, we need to distinguish marriage as God created it.

1. God created marriage (Gen 1-3).
2. Marriage, per Jesus & thus God, was intended as one man and one woman with no divorce ever (Matt 19, Mark 10)
3. I think we all agree that covenants in general, at least in the Bible, require full admission of the terms of such a covenant and vows to sustain it. This is true for all covenants in the Bible such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Mosaic Law, Believers in Christ, etc.
4. Non-believers are going through the motion of "marriage ceremony" of whatever culture they are in but they clearly don't believe in the specific covenant of marriage that God created. Non-believers have no objective moral grounding because they don't believe in God and thus only believe in a subjective good and evil. Therefore, they cannot assent to the terms of God's conditions on marriage.
5. Thus, we have the possibility of distinguishing God's covenant of marriage to what both the Catholic and Orthodox term as "natural marriage." This natural marriage is a general following of God's principles without actual belief and is generally facilitated by how God created us. For instance, God created men and women to be attracted to thing in the opposite sex that fulfills the creation mandate which I covered in my series on attraction. PSALM+masculine and beauty+LAMPS generally help fulfill dominion and procreation, and it's clear both unbelievers and believers tend to follow this consciously or unconsciously.

It generally follows, I think, that one must make a distinction between a believer's marriage and non-believers marriage because one is affirming and establishing a covenant between a man and woman with God as a witness whereas the other is just conforming inadvertently to God's original Creation.

Now to elaborate a bit more.

> I think we all agree that covenants in general, at least in the Bible, require full admission of the terms of such a covenant and vows to sustain it. This is true for all covenants in the Bible such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Mosaic Law, Believers in Christ, etc.

Based on Jesus' statement on "What God has put together, let no man separate" I believe that most Christians would agree that an actual established covenant marriage between Christians is indissoluble if affirming the following things.

1. All parties are Christian and believe in God through faith in Jesus
2. All parties know the what marriage is and entails and their Biblical roles and responsibilities
3. All parties vow to uphold that and know the permanence of marriage.

This type of marriage cannot be annulled or divorced and thus one would fall into perpetual adultery if they divorced and remarried.

> Non-believers are going through the motion of "marriage ceremony" of whatever culture they are in but they clearly don't believe in the specific covenant of marriage that God created. Non-believers have no objective moral grounding because they don't believe in God and thus only believe in a subjective good and evil. Therefore, they cannot assent to the terms of God's conditions on marriage

Sacramental/covenental marriage is somewhat ad hoc, but the other position that the Prots use seems to be less internally consistent.

For instance, unbelievers can partake in "marriage," sure. But since unbelievers have no objective moral grounding they can also redefine "marriage" to be whatever they want. True Christians all affirm that there is no such thing under God as gay marriage. But oddly if two unbelievers who were a man and woman got married they would generally be considered "married" by most Christians. Sure, they are "married" but they definitely did not enter into that marriage as a covenant with God.

So how can it be the same as a believer's marriage?

Sacramental/covenant marriage seems to make the best of things. It's not perfect by any means, but there needs to be a way to distinguish between (I) a covenant marriage in the eyes of God as God intended and (II) one of unbelievers who don't believe in God and/or possibly also disagree with His definition of marriage.

Unbelievers are married due to God's natural creation that generally drives them to be married. However, they are not the same as one who has affirmed the sacrament/covenant of marriage and assented to all of God's terms and conditions.

> Thus, we have the possibility of distinguishing God's covenant of marriage to what both the Catholic and Orthodox term as "natural marriage." This natural marriage is a general following of God's principles without actual belief and is generally facilitated by how God created us.

Distinguishing between sacramental/covenant marriage and a natural marriage tends to open up a few cans of worms. The issue then is 3 fold:

1. What do we do with a supposed 2 believer marriage where 1 person becomes supposedly apostate and possibly treated as an unbeliever?

2. What do we do with a believer and unbeliever marriage where only the believer assents to the 3 above things?
3. What do we do with unbeliever marriages who obviously do not consent to the 3 things above?

Let's explore these.

What do we do with 2 believers where one has supposedly become apostate?

There's 2 different interpretations of this.

- The first is that the marriage is dissoluble. Both Christians agreed to that and it's binding.
- The second is that the believer turned believer is to be treated in respect to Matthew 18 and should be expelled normally (them leaving also works). This then tends to fall under the camp of #2 where it suddenly becomes a marriage of a believer with a believer to a believer with an unbeliever.

Based on my divorce article, I fall into camp 1 for many different reasons. Not going to elaborate on that here.

The second point obviously opens up another can of worms in that it bleeds into the next section since the believer turned unbeliever now makes the marriage fall under a different category even if they affirmed the permanence of marriage before.

What do we do with a believer and unbeliever marriage where only the believer assents to the covenant?

Again, there is 2 different interpretations of this, but now I can also consider a 3rd.

> 1 Corinthians 7:12 To the rest I say this (I, not the Lord): If any brother has a wife who is not a believer and she is willing to live with him, he must not divorce her. 13 And if a woman has a husband who is not a believer and he is willing to live with her, she must not divorce him. 14 For the unbelieving husband has been sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife has been sanctified through her believing husband. Otherwise your children would be unclean, but as it is, they are holy.
> 15 But if the unbeliever leaves, let it be so. The brother or the sister is not bound in such circumstances; God has called us to live in peace. 16 How do you know, wife, whether you will save your husband? Or, how do you know, husband, whether you will save your wife?

Here's the 3 different options.

- The believer is not enslaved is to the covenant of marriage. This seems slightly implausible to me because of the Greek wording for "douluo" servant/slave is not the same as the other wording that refers to the marriage bond earlier in the passage and elsewhere in the NT which is "deo" – to bind together which is reminiscent of Genesis 2 ‘a man shall leave his father and mother and cleave (dabaq Hebrew and translated as deo in Greek) to his wife and they shall be on flesh’ Even later in the passage Paul affirms this wording distinction later in the passage.

> 1 Corinthians 7:39 A wife is bound (deo) as long as her husband lives; but if her husband is dead, she is free to be married to whom she wishes, only in the Lord. 40 But in my opinion she is happier if she remains as she is; and I think that I also have the Spirit of God.

- The believer is not enslaved to the roles and responsibilities of the marriage anymore. In other words, if the wife leaves then the husband is not required to perform the duties of the husband such as being a protector, provider, headship, and so on. Based on the evidence in my article and some mentioned above, I’ve always considered this point to be most likely which is why generally think it falls in line with the verses prior “stay single or reconcile”
- In discussion with another brother on RPC, I am potentially considering that it’s possible that the 2nd is the ideal and the 1st point is not ideal but may not be sin either. For instance, in this specific case Paul states “To the rest I say this (I, not the Lord)” which means this is Paul speaking from his wisdom here and it’s not specifically a command of the Lord. Obviously, the ideal is being like God and Israel where God may have divorced Israel but made a way back for them like the Samaritans & our Ministry of Reconciliation in 2 Cor 5.

Prior to the passage of believers married to believers the command is from the Lord:

> 1 Cor 7:10 To the married I give this command (not I, but the Lord): A wife must not separate from her husband. 11 But if she does, she must remain unmarried or else be reconciled to her husband. And a husband must not divorce his wife.

I still have not decided between point 2 and 3, and I’m still mulling it over.

However, there is a post hoc slippery slope.

A believer-believer marriage which has affirmed God’s standard of permanent marriage can now be altered for annulment or divorce because the “believer” you were with is now an “unbeliever.” Now that this is not a believer-believer marriage but a believer-unbeliever marriage, the believer has some sort of carte blache to which they can choose to stay single or reconcile or choose to be remarried.

This is clearly not what God intends.

I suppose the former point is more reasonable if a Church council decides whether a marriage can be annulled or not and not the spouse(s) in question because of the biased nature of the situation. A council would provide a more objective ruling in theory. This is more in line with the lawsuits among believers passage rather than having them in the world versus the Church. However, the fact of the matter is if that a supposed believer becomes an unbeliever then they aren't going to go to the Church anyway and rather have the state rule on it, especially since 70%+ divorces are by women (90% among college educated) and they get an advantage (e.g. cash and prizes) by divorce raping their husbands.

I believe US Catholics make up 5% of the worldwide Catholics but have 50% of worldwide annulments. This does not necessarily make this wrong just like because some men abuse headship authority does not make headship bad. But it does at least call into question the poor state of the Church today.

What do we do with unbeliever marriages who obviously do not consent to covenant marriage?

It's obvious that the 2 unbelievers do not believe in the covenant/sacrament… so do we treat it the same as indissoluble? Or should we just say it is sin for them to divorce but not perpetual adultery?

The former seems more reasonable to me at least given that the Law of Moses allowed divorce for hardness of heart which is what unbelievers have. Not saying that unbelievers are subject to the Law of Moses or anything like that, but the underlying principle is the same. They are clearly in sin, but since they do not know of the permanence of marriage they are not in perpetual sin as they have not assented to such a covenant. Hence, it probably should not be counted as perpetual adultery.

Other thoughts

Orthodox sacramental/covenant marriage is interesting scenario. For those of you not in the know, only the first marriage is considered a happy occasion, but a second and third final marriage are somber affairs done in penitence.

I'm not sure where the the 2nd and 3rd times come from (maybe my Orthodox readers know?), but my guess would be similar to Peter denying Christ 3 times but receiving redemption in the end. Since both Catholic and Orthodox believe Peter is the "rock" upon which the Church is built then that would make sense as it potentially embodies the Christ-Church marriage.

To my estimation this can potentially solve two issues:

- Men and women are more likely to sexually sin more single than married. This is especially true if an innocent party is divorced or abandoned. It would be difficult on them sexually.
- Another obvious solution is that children tend to do better with a father and mother, although this can have its cons with previous spouse(s) being involved heavily in their lives.

This has some decent reasoning behind it even if it does not strictly adhere to "what God has put together let no man separate."

The Protestant assumption that all marriages are the same (believer-believer, believer-unbeliever, unbeliever-unbeliever) seems to be logically inconsistent because no unbelievers will apply Biblical standards to their marriages much less agree to God's covenant of marriage in the the first place.

It also makes ruling on divorce much harder because we know it's a sin, but one cannot necessarily rule on the permanence aspect which is what God intended. One could claim that "What God has put together let no man separate" that although God says don't do it that man can separate. Usually this is argued in the context of the Law of Moses specifying conditions for separation/divorce (which Jesus also calls hardness of heart… so I find that line of thinking dubious) and that man only separating is a sin. But this gets into more muddled waters given the covenant nature of believers marriages.

For example, those that claim it is just a sin and that adultery breaks the covenant point to God divorcing Israel, but they conveniently omit that although Judah committed adultery with idols and foreign nations too God merely separates and reconciles with her. Additionally, they omit the fact that although Israel is divorced, God makes a way through Jesus to be reconciled. Both cases reconciliation is the answer with God, and clearly adultery does not break that bond if the innocent party does not want a divorce.

In any case, divorce in Protestant Churches has just become a free for all, much like my analogy that Protestants are in the time of the book of Judges where "there was no king in Israel and everyone did what is right in their own eyes" — There is nothing new under the sun Christian denominations. I've probably studied more about divorce than 99% of Protestant pastors which is probably not a good thing, especially since many went to theology/divinity schools. But the quality of students these schools are pumping out is severely compromised by the culture anyway, so that's not a surprise.

At the end of the day, however, I suppose earthly rulings on such things are merely best attempts to follow God's design. God knows everyone's hearts and knows if they are trying to follow Him or trying to please their own desires. I know — at least for me and my study into such matters — I will follow the permanence line of marriage and live that out by my convictions. Whether someone comes to a different conclusion or not is ultimately between them and God, but I leave my analysis here to hopefully convince people to the path which I find most consistent with Scripture.

The desecration of femininity

September 26, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It’s always interesting to see how concepts talked about here are starting to make it out to the wider world of popular culture.

Basically, the whole video talks about the ways in which the current brand of feminism is misogynistic.

In other words, the brand of feminism that pushes women to be more like men are themselves deeming women and femininity inferior. If all women have to act like men then being a woman or mother or stay at home mom/homemaker is a bad thing. If that’s a bad thing, they are actually trashing women and deeming being a woman inferior to men.

It’s ironic but the things done in the name of “empowerment of women” are actually degrading to women.

This is seen most clearly in the push for women to be able to choose sex work. This so-called empowerment is simply degrading to women, and virtually any woman who does that can tell you the consequences are not worth it on their personal lives.

But we already knew all of this because rebellion against God is choosing sin and the negative consequences thereof. It’s perhaps a revelation from God that at least some of secular culture is now recognizing this fact, just as Roosh and other PUA who had player burnout has led them to seek God. There’s only so far you can go into a life of emptiness before you hit rock bottom.

From IFStudies – marriage for the religious, common mistakes that can undermine a marriage, hookup culture among Christians, where have all the good men gone part zillion

September 29, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since I'm a bit backed up on too many tabs, going to cover all of these in a couple shots then get down to similar topics as Jack.

Marriage is Increasingly an Institution of the Highly Religious: Why That Might Be a Problem

> Marriage appears to be a dying institution that fewer couples are choosing. Year after year, couples who marry are increasingly becoming a unique group compared to their peers. A recently published study suggests that perhaps, more than ever before, marriage is becoming a relationship status tightly tied to a dwindling religious sub-population in the United States. While some may look at these findings and feel mostly apathetic at the potential death of an institution, there are many important reasons gleaned from recent social science research to be concerned about these trends.

Basically, more young adults and such don't believe in marriage. Probably bad examples from their parents. Increasingly it's looking like prolonged singlehood and cohabitation are the primary selections. Marriage is being more confined to middle class-upper class and increasingly religious.

This has been explored in previous posts on spinsterhood predictions, but another study on it has 'confirmed it' so to speak.

Basically, for Christians this is actually a good thing and likely not a bad thing. The primary caveat is that we are able to model good marriages and families to our secular counterparts.

Clearly, though, this is part of the issue as probably most Christian Churches are not teaching God's roles and responsibilities and generally catering to the culture which are some of the reasons why divorce is only somewhat lower than the secular counterparts.

There is opportunity for the Church, but they need to teach the Bible on this.

Three Common Mistakes That Can Undermine a Happy Marriage—and How to Avoid Them

> Mistake #1: Getting Too Comfortable
> Mistake #2: Talking at the Wrong Time

> Mistake #3: Failure to Make Time for Fun

The author is seemingly not a Christian, but he does have a wide reach according to his website.

> From my work with more than five thousand couples over the past 18+ years, I am convinced 50% of marriage misery would be eliminated if couples just had a shared calendar.

Overall, these are just superficial things. If the underlying dynamic and foundation of the marriage is cracked, then addressing superficial things like this are just merely going to prolong the explosion/implosion of the marriage.

I would bust on him if he were a Christian and was giving this advice without even talking about the Bible, but it's not the case with IFStudies that all the posters are Christian. Nevertheless, this is the type of crappy thing out there that makes it seem like you're doing something to help your marriage, but isn't actually going to solve the underlying problems in the long run.

Hooking Up and Checking Out: Patterns of Dating, Sex, and Marriage at One Elite Evangelical University

> Despite a prominent Christian presence, hookup culture is undoubtedly alive at the university. Most respondents were surprised by the casual boldness with which their peers discuss sex. They mentioned that many young men attend parties where "the whole goal is to get laid" and later banter competitively about their sexual exploits.
> However, this behavior is not restricted to males. One sophomore described her first day in the dining hall freshman year where a group of girls "started comparing how many boys they'd slept with in high school." Meanwhile, one senior recounted walking past a male dorm room and hearing one young lady proudly proclaim, "I'm the last one who had sex!" For an institution that claims to uphold the value of waiting for marriage, surely these stories are cause for concern.
> In my own interviews, when I asked why students hook up, I consistently heard, "it's the college experience," confirming the precedence of the "party pathway" even at this Christian university. This disjunction between evangelical belief and behavior is consistent with David Ayers' IFS findings on evangelical young adults' sexual behavior before marriage, which showed that 51% of evangelical 18-22 year olds who attend church weekly have had premarital sex, and about 56% of young men and 54% of young women who say that their religious beliefs are "very important" have had premarital sex.
> Sexual permissiveness is prevalent, even among Evangelical young adults, a finding that was confirmed in my interviews with Evangelical university students.

> In fact, I heard several stories about students partying, hooking up, and then going to church together the next morning. Whether this attendance was motivated by contrition, or a sense of self-justification, these students embody the sentiment expressed by one junior male: “socially speaking, the ideal Christian male at [this university] is both a partier and a churchgoer.”

To those of you concerned that your children are going to university, even Christian ones, is basically sending them off to be sexually immoral this should not surprise you. Lori Alexander was generally on the mark on that front on Christian virgins and advising them not attending college.

However, that said this generally agrees with the data on Christian virgins that I have looked at in the past which is probably around 30-40% of women in the 20-24ish age around are still virgins. So there is hope if you were holding out, but you probably need to be in the top 40% of men within the Church (which is not actually super hard perhaps?).

Overall, I think if you’re sending your kids to college then them living at home tends to be the best option if possible. Definitely having them still engaged with Church and likely Christian groups on campus. It’s more likely to be the case that they will flee sexual immorality with more Christians around them than surrounding themselves with worldly friends who want to have sex and party.

Where Have All the Good Men Gone?

> The relationship frustrations of women like these are rooted in a broader problem: They do not have a ready pool of good young men to date, partly because many of our nation’s young men are floundering as they make the transition from adolescence to young adulthood. This problem is visible in our schools, colleges and universities, and today’s marketplace. Young men are increasingly less likely than women to enroll in college and less likely than women to apply themselves even if they land in college; a growing number of them are also idle or underemployed as they move through their 20s.
> Our “young men problem” is rooted in a range of factors — the rise of electronic opiates, which distract young men from education and work and have come to replace traditional avenues of social relations; the absence of models of pro-social masculinity that furnish norms for male engagement in school, work, and relationships as they move into adulthood; a culture that discounts commitment; and biological differences in rates of male and female maturation.
> But a new report from the Institute for Family Studies, “Life Without Father,” suggests that another issue is in play. Too many boys have grown up in homes without engaged or present fathers, which has left them especially unprepared to navigate school, work, and relationships successfully.

Brad Wilcox’s latest boomer treatise on where have all the good men gone… when the problems are systemic. 60%+ of college and graduate students are female.

Waiting for the “conservative” articles that state the obvious:

- Schools are biased toward women
- Stop trying to push womens’ achievements to college and graduate school and push more men instead.
- Tell women stop being masculine and be more feminine.
- Tell women that they have to have something to offer men.

Of course, the latter are already being told men, but no responsibility is ever placed on the women.

Leadership in dating determines a large part of what happens in marriage

Most of these, at least from my experience (actionable steps to find a wife), are headed off by strong leadership early on in a relationship.

For instance, weeding out the unbelievers and especially the lukewarm Christians cuts this list in half already. This doesn't take into account that some supposedly strong Christians can turn away from the faith later, but it does weed out the bad apples right away.

Likewise, in Practical advice to single Christian men establishing leadership and the right frame when starting a relationship I give the analogy of Jesus and his disciples (Christ:Church) as an example of the dating/going steady/engagement phase. This type of stuff in dating will show if a woman is truly devoted to following you or has other priorities.

> Take the example of Jesus and His disciples (e.g. Christ and the Church, which is the analogy we have for marriage in Ephesians 5) in all 4 gospels:
> 1. Jesus has started his ministry in Galilee preaching and teaching about the kingdom of God
> 2. While doing this, he invites various men to be His disciples to help Him (e.g. shades of Genesis 2 where the wife is created to be the man's helper). Fishermen, tax collectors, etc. "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."
> 3. He continues on His ministry which grows and has the disciples help him with miracles, instructs and teaches them, and then eventually has them go out and try during his ministry (e.g. Jesus sends out the 70).
> 4. Jesus continually sanctifies them by correcting and teaching them as necessary (e.g. Ephesians 5 – Christ loves the Church for the purpose of sanctification).
> 5. Jesus does ALL of this BEFORE engagement and marriage. The engagement of Jesus and His bride is generally defined as the body of Christ who have received the Holy Spirit (Eph 1) much like an engagement ring or dowry and the marriage of Jesus and His bride is at the end in Revelation 19.

One thing to also take into account is that even in the engagement phase Jesus is still leading toward sanctification, but still rebukes/warns the Churches in Revelation 2 and 3 if they are getting off track. In some of those instances, He even "threatens" to remove the Church.

> Rev 2:4 Yet I hold this against you: You have forsaken the love you had at first. 5 Consider how far you have fallen! Repent and do the things you did at first. If you do not repent, I will come to you and remove your lampstand from its place.

Like Christ, Christian men (and Christian women) would be smart to drop their potential spouse even in the engagement phase if they saw more yellow/red flags coming out.

This allows singles to narrow down the pool of potential prospects to the believers and followers.

> 1. Believing wife, faithfully devoted to the man/marriage, low body count, great sex life.

> 2. Believing wife, faithfully devoted to the man/marriage, low body count, terrible sex life.

> 3. Believing wife, faithfully devoted to the man/marriage, high body count, great sex life.

> 4. Believing wife, faithfully devoted to the man/marriage, high body count, terrible sex life.

In the actionable steps to finding a wife above, I included my post discussing how I approached discussing sexual topics with my potential wife and other women I dated before her.

Bible study on the marriage roles and responsibilities of marriage is a must. Not only on the typical marriage passages (Gen 1-3, Prov 31, Eph 5, Col 3, 1 Pet 3, Tit 2, etc.) but on 1 Corinthians 7 sexual topics as well.

Setting expectations is important too. It's normal if both are inexperienced to have some type of learning curve. This must be expressed that things are obviously not going to be amazing or even great at first. The goal, like any new activity, is to learn and grow as you do it.

There are varying degrees of sexual experience from either party likely, at least in today's culture. In general, this must be approached with grace. If someone is shying away from discussing their sexual history that's a yellow to red flag. The godly attitude toward past sin we should emulate is similar to Paul in the NT – ashamed that he was murdering believers, but it made him work all the harder for the gospel and to do right by God and fellow believers. Those with past sexual experience should not look back on it like they are good times (hard, for most) but should be more than willing to go out their way to please their spouse.

Sorting out sexual hangups from what parents, Church, culture, and other sources of information have taught you over your childhood to adulthood compared to what the Bible says can be rough, but it's much better addressing it prior to marriage than try to navigate the waters having brushed it under the rug.

Overall, this process is much harder if you are already engaged or married, which we have discussed before as well. But the best way to start is always by leading by example.

All of these things discussed so far are part of headship/leadership toward sanctification. Leadership on the sex topics are part of that sanctification. This is why when RPC uses the acronym FAST – faithful, available, saved, teachable. The FAS is obvious, but the teachable is the willingness to follow your leadership which is the biggest indicator of something going terrible wrong in engagement or marriage. If she doesn’t listen to you or respect your wishes when you are dating or going steady then she ain’t gonna do it when you’re more committed either.

What does redemption look like for men in churchianity

October 10, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been trying to figure out how I wanted to address this topic while I've been relatively more inactive.

Jack and the other commenters have gone over a lot in the previous topics:

- Roundup on Attraction and Marital Sanctification
- Red Pill Redemption
- Restoring Respect
- Understanding Respect

The fundamental issues have never really changed.

In the past, culture more willingly resembled Christian values, though if you dug under the surface there was a lot of rot that led toward the path of destruction we are on now. The great resemblance of Christian values allowed the Church and marriage to flourish. As we've trended toward an increasingly more secular culture (e.g. positive, neutral and negative worlds h/t Aaron Renn), much of the Church has willingly gone the way of culture on many topics closely related to sexuality.

Thus, what we have come to in these discussions are simply that there are roles to play from the perspective of:

- The Church
- The individual man
- Father figures and disciplers

The Church

In regard to the Church there are clearly pockets where marriage still flourishes. This is generally propped up by both the men and women in the Church. The different actions of men and women can also sabotage it via male white knighting or anti-Titus 2 older women influencing younger singles and wives negatively. The more a Church conforms to Christ the tendency is to get propping up of the positive structures that lead to flourishing families while the former leads to more brokenness.

No single Church or community will be perfect, but clearly some are worse than others. It's obvious with the more liberal Churches which even deny the gospel. However, the conservative Churches are still hit or miss. I generally recommend against Church hopping most of the time, but men getting into an actual solid Christian environment that encourages and uplifts men is important.

Some men in RPC have had the influence to start to change their pastors' or other leaders beliefs on intersexual dynamics, but some men get booted like JoJ and others. This is problematic but you can only do what you can do. For those influencing the Church this is a long term process and often fraught with errors, but it can be done.

For most men they are not ready to build a culture within a Church and influence the pastors, so continually looking at various Churches is going to be the best route. Regardless of it you've been hurt by the Church before, those who are serious Christians need to get back into going to one. The Christian walk is not meant to be done alone.

The individual man

Now what is redemption for the individual man?

Redemption from my perspective at least has been about me going over all of the lessons that I have been taught about God, man, woman, intersexual dynamics, and all such things and seeing if they align with Scripture or not. If they don't I discard them. If they do at least on the surface, I take a much deeper look at what I was taught and see if the interpretation is correct.

One must go no further than the 'lust' vs 'covet' verse in Matthew 5 to see that the purity culture of the conservative Christian Churches of the '90s and '00s were teaching was off. Single Christian men should've covet another man's wife, but if she is single by all means potentially get to know her and marry her if also has good character and virtue. The sex drive is a good thing. The secular culture actually has a valid point that many Christians today are sexually repressed. Not in the way they mean that virginity is outdated and sex is love, but that Christian men and women are beating themselves up for finding the opposite sex attractive.

It's say to sad but most Christian Churches have become Churchianity peddlers. Whatever the culture says gets injected into the Scriptures and twisted so that it sounds good but is inherently bad. For instance, I always talk about the Christ:Church::husbands:wives love is for the purpose of sanctification but many teach it to mean make your wife feel good under the surface. Another one is the complementarianism teaching that husbands are a "tie break vote" and that "agreement is godliness" in marriage. A man that is scared to make decisions and fears his wife is not going to be as effective of a leader which can tempt his wife (she still has to make the choice, though) to be more contentious and rebellious.

For your individual man regarding singleness versus marriage it goes something like I outlined in the Biblical Masculinity Blueprint:

1. Decide if you want to follow God or not. Be all in or all out.
2. Decide if you can stay single and serve God or probably need to be married.
3. If you decide to stay single then great. Could change down the line, but live your life to serve God wholeheartedly in everything. If you choose marriage, it would be wise to study the marriage Scriptures and start learning how to lead, wield authority righteously, and do all of the roles and responsibilities associated with marriage.
4. Relationships to marriage and children as a process that builds on itself with increasing responsibility. You are responsible for yourself, then partially for a woman while dating, then wholly in marriage. Then for more with children. Each of these steps to success build upon the previous, so if your life is not built excellently in all aspects while single — spiritually, mentally, physically, emotionally — then you are going to have problems in the next phase.

In Jesus' life – lead by example. In Biblical terms 'take the plank out of your own eye before trying to help the speck in your brothers.' As the common airplane emergency saying goes, 'put on your own oxygen mask before helping others.'

We know that God created man and woman in the beginning and also created attraction. Attraction generally points both men and women to qualities in the opposite sex that helps them to have a successful family if one also takes into account good character and virtue. Yet we often forget that it is ourselves, first and foremost, that we have to be devoted to God with and have our life as a living example of Him working through us.

For single men and marriage absent of a solid Church community this is almost inevitably going to come down to each man's individual choice. I am relatively optimistic and not as pessimistic as others on the odds of your average man getting married and his wife being attracted to him because I am relatively average in looks myself. However, each man needs to make such decisions for himself.

One of the most common errors that most make in regard to this topic is to broadly apply secular norms to small communities. For example, if a man is comparing his physique to men who are at the gym all the time and use steroids I am going to be in the bottom 20% of them, but if I compare myself to the vast majority of men at Church I have a much better physique than 80% of them. Most men can get to a relatively athletic looking physique with 1-2 years of dedicated strength and hypertrophy training even from being overweight or obese. That is a fact. The vast majority of men in the Church are overweight or obese, so a fit physique will stand out.

Now pour some excellence into the other areas of your life such as studying the Scripture, career/occupation, social skills, and all such things and it's relatively easy to start to stand out more. Again, most single and married Christian men are not doing such things.

There has been some talk on various personalities not being up for this. Well, this is where community comes in. Sports teams have this. If you don't want to do the training but your buddies are going to rag on you then you're likely going to put up and shut up and just do it. So too if you have men at Church spurring you not just spiritually but also:

- Physically in the gym or various sports
- With evangelizing and discipling (free social skills!)
- Growing your mindset toward godliness and self control and conforming your emotions to Christ (mentally, emotionally, etc)

A lot has been written about this on the blog. But at the end of the day it comes down to the individual man. His redemption is based on seeking first God's kingdom and following in Jesus' steps. So too if he believes it includes marriage to prepare himself for marriage roles and responsibilities.

Father figures and disciplers

This is where many of us come in who have the intersexual dynamics experience. For the most part this goes many different ways.

- Teaching proper intersexual dynamics and warn them of the consequences of attraction without godly character and virtue. Warning from the Bible on these topics abound. None of the godliness (itself) is sexy nonsense. The qualities attractive to each sex are readily observable such as PSALM+masculinity and beauty+femininity.
- Teaching their sons and daughter to obey God and put him first. Even if that means not taking the route that the world loves via whatever life scripts are out there such as College -> job -> explore yourself -> settle down and have marriage and family. If that's not going to college and going into trades or whatever then do it.
- Teaching men what godly masculinity looks like all throughout the Bible, and how some aspects of it can be attractive in certain circumstances.
- Fathers with daughters should be looking to approve of men and disciple them to be a good husband and father. They should not be doing the old conservative meme of threatening them with a gun.
- Partake in being discipled and discipling others. This was the core of Jesus' ministry, and what Jesus commanded us in Matthew 28 – make disciples of all nations and teach them all of what he commanded us. Yes, your discipler might not always be right about everything. I've had some that were very iffy if not heretical on intersexual dynamics in some aspects, but learning from those with more experience is generally useful. You don't throw out the baby with the bathwater even though some of the bathwater can be really dirty sometimes.
- As many over at RPC say, discipling others does not mean you need to know everything or be a pastor. If know how to pray and do a Bible study you can help to disciple new Christians to do that. Start with the simple spiritual things you know how to do, and then branch out as you gain more experience.
- Above all, be encouraging, building up, growing, and helping others. The world tears down enough. We don't need to be doing any of that if we want our young men and young women to be able to navigate this world as wise as serpents but as innocent as doves.

With all that said, I am regularly discipling some young men. If any man wants to talk to me and/or be discipled then send me an e-mail through the contact page.

Surprising insight from a sex worker on the burden of being a man

October 13, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In Objective and subjective attraction measures and what the Church can do about it, I linked to a chart on the variations in sexual fetishes to show how different men and women. Turns out the author is/was a sex worker and grew up in a Christian home (be aware, there are potential NSFW.

> Growing up, my world was complementarian, which is a fancy way of saying everyone was waaaaay too into gender roles.
> We viewed men as stronger, braver, and less prone to irrational emotions. They were the federal head; the point of representation for their families. I remember asking my mom why we were moving states if she didn't want to move; she said she must submit to the decisions of her husband, and her husband's decision was to move. I remember our pastor's daughter sleeping in a bunkbed at home at the age of 22 because she was required to always have male headship, and thus couldn't leave her father's house or go to college until she had a husband to take on that role. These are two easy-to-convey examples, but there's a thousand more that manifested in tiny, insidious ways, that I can't do justice to in this short an essay. Men could be pastors and elders in the church, but not women. Men were the gender that God had created to symbolize His relationship with His bride, the church; in this symbolic sense, men were to women as God was to mankind.
> From the outside view into my old culture, the patriarchy ends there. Men, in charge, oppressing women.

Unfortunately, the warped federal headship view which may have played a role in exiting the faith, but the general theme is based Scripturally. The short of why federal headship is garbage is that it places an inordinate amount of blame on men for the free will of those under their responsibility. For instance, God would be blamed for Judah and Israel following after other gods when that is clearly not true. God sent prophet after prophet and gave numerous chances for Judah and Israel to repent, but they still chose to rebel.

> But this view of male rulership also put a lot of pressure on men, and so the standards and punishments for them were higher. My father was an ordained minister and served as an elder in a church; he taught that eldership was contingent on having believing children. If someone under his headship screwed up, like hypothetically renounced her faith and did sex work, the formal consequences went to him, and he's now no longer allowed to be an elder.
> The financial success of the family lay entirely on the man – he was expected to work however much it took to support his family (and stay-at-home-wife), which > often could grow quite large. Any decisions for his family were his, and if anything bad happened, it was entirely on him.

> I suspect this is how most traditional gender role systems work. I once spent a long layover in Saudi Arabia and had a discussion with a man about their gender roles. I told him that in the US, people feel bad about the way women are treated. He seemed taken aback – women are queens, he said. Men's role is a burden; all the pressure is on them. Women's domestic lives are lighter – they are protected from external threats, and get to live in a softer internal bubble. He viewed the pressure on men as a huge, forgotten element, so important that all the restrictions women suffered were worth a release from that pressure.

Now I don't want to quote the whole article, but this is already a surprisingly fresh take from someone who is not a Christian. Very few women recognize that men bear a lot of responsibility as a husband and father.

> I suspect that most people were more chill with the patriarchy in the past because the whole "men go to war" and "men have to earn enough for their family or else" thing made being a man way less exciting, and the benefit of safety for a woman, as touted by the Saudi Arabian man, was actually a way more important thing to have.
> But the world got way safer – and when men stopped dying, maybe their advantages started looking way juicier. If you and your friend have had a delicate responsibility equilibrium that allows you to fight unique types of foes, and then your friend's foe disappears, you might look over your shoulder and go hey, wait a second, why do you get to vote and I can't?

Precisely. It's also true that men are still in more highly dangerous situations — men still have over 95% of the workplace deaths, suicide rates, make up most of the military, and other such maladies or issues.

> The fundamental divide in my culture of traditional gender roles was the allocation of responsibility,and I see no evidence that our current culture is doing much different. Everywhere I look, in our advertisements, in conversations at parties, in our movies, I see men held self-responsible and women as environment-changers.
> This is a bit of a meta-problem. Both roles create issues; men tend to be stoic/emotionally repressed (it's my fault), in greater positions of power (i need to work harder/provide for my family), generally over women. Women tend to view themselves as more helpless than they really are (society is the problem).
> But society's answer to this isn't to lower the amount of responsibility we give men and raise the responsibility we give women, or even to just acknowledge the responsibility gap at all, it's to blame the issues that arise from the responsibility > gap, on the side of the gap that is built to accept responsibility – men.

> Patriarchy? Men's fault. When women support it, we say they've simply internalized the messages of men, and then pluck that glowing ball of responsibility right out of their dainty little hands.
> Victim blaming? When we decry suggestions that women alter their behavior to reduce risk of assault (though appearance influences catcalling), we're shoving responsibility straight into the environment.
> There's almost no body acceptance movement for men. Advertisements portray men as either the butt of jokes or muscular and handsome. Why? The attractiveness of a man is their responsibility. Contrast this to one out of a billion ads for women where their feelings about their attractiveness are taken out of their arms and placed directly into the environment. It's also easy to find articles that place responsibility in the environment by listing ways workplaces can be more woman-friendly.
> If women aren't in enough powerful roles, society's reaction is to place the fault outside of the woman. Reversely, I tried to find articles on how to make women-dominated workplaces or housekeeping advertisements/communities more male-friendly, but I couldn't find any.

Correct again. Everything is always blamed on "The Patriarchy ™" and the fact that men have more responsibility and women are the victims even though that cannot be any farther from the case today. In fact, most of the ills we see in society can be placed at the foot of feminism and such as I described in The Demise of Marriage: Cause and Effect.

The rest of the article goes on and comes to conclusion to have compassion for both men and women, although more from a humanistic perspective.

> And to be clear again – I don't mean to minimize what women have gone through. I remember with great pain what it was like to be a woman in a complementarian household. I watched my mother unable to separate from her abusive husband because the pastor told her she needed to submit and pray more. I remember my parents' horror when I suggested that I didn't understand why I should go to college if I was only meant to be a housewife, and that maybe I didn't want to have children. I remember crying myself to sleep when I was ten, asking God why He'd made me a girl and not a boy, because I had so many dreams I would never be able to fulfill, because I was ashamed at being so emotional. I remember refusing to cry for years, because I wanted to be respected like boys were. I hold visceral empathy for every woman who's had to wear her gender like chains.

To bring this full circle, it's pretty clear why she probably departed from the faith now.

I think most pastors if there is actual abuse in the household say that it's a good idea to separate and stay single (per 1 Cor 7). I'm not sure where she grew up, but the impression I have from Doug Wilson's federal headship camp they will stage an intervention with the husband (though I could be wrong). The other federal headship that don't come down on the husband for actual abuse are in clear hypocrisy because they are supposed to be "blaming the head" when things go wrong (e.g. "husband abuse") but they aren't.

Also, interesting that 1 Cor 7 correctly describes that if the author wanted to stay single and serve God that would be the best and that pushing her to be something she didn't want to do (with their horror). That also probably pushed her away.

The latter issues of wanting to be more like men instead of embracing her femininity is from the lie of feminism though. Ironically, though she is quick to spot that feminism plays the "internalized misogyny" card for women who do desire to be wives and mothers, she also seems to have internalized the desecration of femininity as a kid where it's better for women to be and/or act like men.

Sadly, when talking with former Christians a lot of these types of stories pop up. People are more ready to blame Christianity and reject God for that when it's mainly Christians sinning against them and not repenting or teaching them something against what the Bible actual says. In essence, the Christians were acting like non-Christians, but Christianity and God still gets blamed. This seems to have always been a huge problem with Churchianity because of inserting cultural crap into Christian beliefs.

Overall, some cogent insight from a sex worker into the problems of today that many in the Church can't even see. I suggest reading the whole thing as I didn't quote everything as there is some more good insight.

Obviously, be wary of potential NSFW content as I warned before as a sex worker is going to talk about potential NSFW topics. No explicit images or anything like that from what I saw. Substack probably doesn't allow it.

Why expectations of men and women are out of control

October 14, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Rowena asks the question here about why sexual partner accounts are bad.

> As a woman, I respectfully ask a question to the men in this forum. I ask only to understand things from a man's point of view.
> There is a lot of talk about body count of a woman. Higher the body count, worse the chance of pair bonding and greater chance of divorce. I am assuming that means number of men she slept with. Or is it number of times she has had sex?
> Just asking – as assuming there is a girl LIKE Jill (not above Jill who is married) who has a relationship with a boyfriend like the above post. She has a sexual relationship with this man like above. So – after 10 years of being with this man – they break up.
> Technically, she has a body count of ONE. In a committed relationship with ONE guy. For 10 YEARS. Would this make her better wife material than the girl with 5 one night stands over same 10 YEARS?
> Obviously, she likes and enjoys sex. So one would think that she could replicate this with a future husband.
> As a woman, I feel any man who FOLLOWED the boyfriend would find it challenging to generate that kind of attraction. Which is why I feel once virginity is lost, it is just a question of chance (God's grace) and your ability to generate that attraction.
> In the above context, does body count really matter? Once she has lost her virginity, does having a low body count mean anything? It just means she gave it up without a ring for a fewer NUMBER of men than others (maybe more number of TIMES than others). Is that a worthwhile metric of measurement?

In general, the why higher partner counts is bad is already proven:

- https://ifstudies.org/blog/counterintuitive-trends-in-the-link-between-premarital-sex-and-marital-stability
- http://socialpathology.blogspot.com/2012/03/promiscuity-data-guest-post.html

The studies show that number of sexual partners for women is fairly correlated to divorce risk.

There's various working theories, but the most prevalent seems to be that the higher the number of sexual partners the more comparisons she has to make toward her husband. Thus, if her husband doesn't measure up in some way to partner #1, 2, 3, 4, etc up to say 10 (n count = 10) in various different areas then she is more likely to be dissatisfied and start disrespecting and/or rebelling. For instance, if #2 made 6 figures, #5 had an athletes muscular physique, and #7 had his own house, even though all of these are different people she will generally expect that her husband should have most if not all of those qualities.

This is why expectations seem to be sky high with women nowadays. They're taking aggregate comparisons of lots of men they slept with and expect the next one (e.g. their potential husband) to have all of the best qualities of all of those men put together.

This video shows a woman (dating coach) discussing it. She had to be checked herself by an older male mentor when she started doing it, and then she realized that all of the other women she was coaching were doing it too.

A similar thing tends to happen in men with the desensitizing nature of airbrushed women on social media, advertising, and porn. Once a man has seen so much "beauty" per se, he becomes more desensitized toward normal looking women in everyday life (not counting overweight/obesity type stuff). Hence, normal women can't meet his unrealistic standards anymore.

This male phenomena is generally known by most, and both women and men will berate other men for doing this. But it's rarely the case that anyone talks about womens' unrealistic expectations at least in real life.

In regard to the rest of the question about women being with one man (and having sex a lot of times) versus being with many men, the male commenters have generally covered that. Men generally evaluate promiscuity as casual and may date and/or have sex with such women but they won't marry them. If they're looking for a wife and children they're going to look more highly upon a woman who is able to commit and stay loyal.

Expectations and boundaries

October 23, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack's recent articles on this topic: Women submit to their Head, Laying out Boundaries, Laying out Expectations.

For those of you who have followed me since January 2014, I've laid out most of what I did with my now wife over time. Since these posts are coming up on this topic, let's go back and cover some ground on what I did at the outset of dating.

From My 5 step process to maturity in relationships which I consider one of the most important posts on this blog there were 5 topics that I covered that I looked at before my wife and I even met. I studied on these in depth and came to form a plan of action of what I wanted to do with any girl I dated.

1. Know what God says about relationships
2. Know your priorities: dreams and 5 year goals
3. Know your standards for women
4. Know your standards/boundaries in a relationship
5. Know how to assertively communicate

#1 — Know what God says about relationships — is fairly obvious. If you want to get married you need to know what God says about marriage. Yet if you ask most married people in the Church they wouldn't even be able to tell you more than 1 passage on marriage in the Bible is located much less give an accurate summary.

As the man is given the role of "loving his wife for the purpose of sanctification" he should know what God expects and what is expected on both him and his potential wife. Then hold himself and her accountable to that. This is what is missing in a lot of dating nowadays – men let the sanctifying slide just like Adam did with Eve. If she continually resists correction any sanctifying in dating when you call her out on her sin or other wrongdoing you should run.

#2 — Know your priorities: dreams and 5 year goals — is essential for any man to know his purpose in this life. This is not only with whatever your vocation or occupation is but knowing your spiritual gifts and role(s) as part of the body of Christ and the Church. Men who have a sense of ambition and purpose are attractive to women, but that is a side effect of men knowing who they are in Christ and what they were put on the earth to do.

This is the central focus any man must have before having a wife because developing it in a relationship often comes with a lot of tension. This tension can be anywhere from being in a dysfunctional relationship where the roles are inverted to something like you may need to start "spending less time" with your wife because God is more important. Breaking dysfunction is hard because of the relationship inertia and does not feel good for both parties even if it is the godly thing to do.

Having this established early builds a good foundation for marriage.

#3 — Know your standards for women — is about vetting to remove some potential red flags but also about finding a woman that has the qualities and habits of godliness that will be essential in overcoming feelings to push for holiness.

For me I did include some things like cooking and whatnot because that's one of the ways I grew up, but it could really be anything. Just make sure that you really have non-negotiables in the right place with God's.

#4 and #5 — Know your standards/boundaries in a relationship and Know how to assertively communicate — are essential and the main topic of why I am writing this post given Jack's background articles. These were my 3 main boundaries that I told my wife within the first week when were dating.

> My first boundary that I set is that God comes first in everything and that His Scriptures are our guideline. Even if I think that she is perfect for me and that I am perfect for her, and we're praying and fasting about the relationship and God answers with a no then we're done. Likewise, disagreements are to be resolved with Scripture first, and then will default to the authority in the relationship.
> My second boundary is to never lie. Relationships are built up trust. The trust in a relationship is built on truth in interactions with each other. If I ever find out that one of the building blocks of the relationship was a lie then who is to say that every other interaction I've had with her is a lie? You can't really tell, and you won't be able to trust the woman. Thus, straight out I tell her that if I ever find out about her lying to me that it will signal the end of the relationship. I won't lie to her, and she won't lie to me.
> My last boundary is based on relationship growth. Obviously, there is a three pronged approach: I should be growing in my relationship with God, she should be growing in her relationship with God, and we should be growing in relationship with each other. Growth requires change which is often uncomfortable. Thus, my third boundary is to be comfortable with being uncomfortable.
> Strong boundaries facilitate trust within a relationship. By introducing them as a man will result in you taking the reigns of leadership within the relationship.

Obviously, one needs to communicate these confidently and effectively. My wife was a bit skittish when I said I had some boundaries I wanted to discuss, but after going over them she agreed. I kept us accountable to them all of the time as well from what I can tell and the trust between us appears to run very deep because of them.

I had some other ones that I implemented to build intimacy and for fun such as always helping each other wash in the shower. However, some of these tend to go by the wayside given that we have vastly different shower routines! But it is fun when we do get together some.

Despite that, I credit a lot of success of my marriage so far to the implementation of these principles when I was dating. It set a strong foundation for leadership but also adherence to God's Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. It is much easier to call out bad behavior (for her, or even her for me given that I sin too) when you know that both of you want to be accountable to what God says.

Contrast this to having a relationship or marriage that has negative relational inertia with inverted roles or a lack of leadership whether unknowingly or knowingly. It's likely that you're going to get resistance toward implementing things like this, though it is possible and doable. Yet it is that much harder if a husband (or wife) is unattractive because you don't have that relational good will that most humans grant toward the attractive members of the opposite sex.

This is why turning around a relationship or marriage tends to be the most effective if a man is starting to strive for excellence in his life spiritually, physically, emotionally, and mentally first for himself to live up to God's standards (without making any demands on the wife at all) until he has changed enough that it would be reasonable to say that he's "taken the plank out of his own eye" per Matthew 7 before "looking at the speck in his [brother's] eye" — or wife in this case.

Like has been laid out in the Jack's post on women submitting to a head – women are going to submit to someone. It just depends who (or what such as the culture). Thus, building excellence and competency as the head as well as attraction is going to help to hopefully revert her to you from all of the other things if that is an issue.

Roosh's wisdom for Christian men interested in women

October 25, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Roosh recently posted an article on 33 Things Christian Men Should Know About Women detailing his wisdom on things that Christian men should look for and avoid in women they are interested in to date and marry.

> I have tried to be thoughtful about what I'm about to share so as not to interfere with God's will in bringing together man and woman in one flesh within the Church sacrament of marriage, because most of my experiences with women took place sinfully outside of marriage, causing me to lose all manner of healthy child-like innocence when viewing the opposite sex. I do not consider myself bitter, but I am surely cynical from partaking in behaviors that went against the commandments of God for so many years. If you perceive undue pessimism or even anger in my words, it is due to the damage I inflicted upon myself, not because God made a mistake in how he constructed man or woman. If you participate in evil for a prolonged period of time, you will carry distorted views of reality even long after repentance.

He also added this caveat that the damage he inflicted on himself from the sinful behavior persists even after he was saved which jives with a lot of player burnout and the continual consequences of actions from sin despite repentance. The same is true women that have had a lot of pre-marital sex. These consequences can last with you even after repenting from it.

I'm glad he has recognized that and is truthful with it to warn men not to go down that path.

Here are the topics of the 33 recommendations he makes:

1. Assume that you will never change her
2. Women are capable of deceiving men
3. If her spirit and behavior are more secular than Orthodox, she is abiding by the secular world
4. A woman who maintains a perfect physical appearance may crave validation from men more than God
5. You will not choose a woman with wisdom if your passions are elevated
6. Beware if "game" works on her
7. A woman who simultaneously communicates with numerous men likely has an addiction to male attention
8. A woman who can't maintain small commitments may not be ready to make larger ones
9. A woman is capable of making it crystal clear that she likes you

10. There is no excuse for an Orthodox woman to support leftist causes like feminism, climate change, and abortion
11. Beautiful women live in a different reality
12. You must examine yourself if you pass on a woman of strong faith because you seek a more beautiful woman
13. A woman who is overly comfortable around strange men may have had a lot of experience with men
14. She may hide her most negative qualities, behaviors, and admissions until you have invested in her
15. A woman who constantly updates her social media profiles should be examined closely
16. Unless you have evidence to the contrary, she will become her mother and treat you like her mother treats her father
17. Take signs of heightened passion, mental instability, mental illness, self-harm, and a violent or abusive upbringing very seriously
18. Do not delude yourself into thinking that you can command a woman to do whatever you want
19. If she's an adult and doesn't yet know how to cook, bake, or sew, she may never learn it
20. If she has a career, don't assume she will quit when you want her to
21. She will lose respect and attraction for you if you become emasculated and allow her to take control
22. No matter how thoroughly you vet her, you will be upset at her behaviors during marriage
23. If she doesn't like to be corrected, signifying a strong will, you will have many disagreements
24. She may lie to you but not think it is a lie, because she believes the lie to be the truth
25. It's common for a woman to conform to a man's interests and hobbies to receive his affection
26. If she's had sexual experiences in the past, look for undeniable repentance
27. You don't fully know a woman unless you've seen her angry
28. Be extremely suspicious of a woman who still communicates with past boyfriends
29. Don't confuse her physical and emotional attraction towards you for deep compatibility
30. Evaluate her for the potential to become a great mother
31. An examination of her living quarters can reveal gaps in what she tells you
32. If a woman complains a lot about other people, she will soon complain about you
33. Trust in God to find a wife, not in your own abilities

Overall, a very good list basically detailing a bunch of yellow and red flags to look for in women and also some to examine in yourself as a man. I'd suggest reading through the whole thing as there are at least 2 if not up to 4-5 paragraphs for each of the points (which make it a very long article).

The general theme that most men should take away from this is the T part of FAST that I keep harping on.

- Is the woman you are with Teachable and actually interested in following you rather than the world, others, or even friends and family.
- A wife is going to be your helper, so she needs to want to be there to help you rather than be confrontational or against you.
- The vast majority of these things like looking at feminism, familiarity with strange men, how she acts with family, her history, her potential anger or keeping up with past boyfriends, complaining, and such things all can point to ways in which she is influenced by others and won't be a good helper to you. She may still be taking her advice and cues from others.

This can be added to the list of potential vetting that I mentioned before, but also that you should be forward thinking in terms of making her your disciple/follower on the path of sanctification.

Roosh's definition of game and social charisma going forward

October 26, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since game is coming back up via Jack's recent post on Game is an invitation to humility, it's probably worth discussing from the previous post that Roosh actually mentions what he defines as "game" and that he is specifically anti-game.

For those of you who were not familiar with Roosh, the 3 Rs — Roissy, Rollo (Tomassi of Rational Male) and RooshV — were the pillars of the secular manosphere from probably around 2007 to 2019ish or so. Since then then manosphere fractured. Roosh converted to Christianity in 2019. Roissy got booted from WordPress, the RP reddit got quarantined, and Rollo barely blogs anymore preferring to engage on Youtube it seems.

Regardless, here's what Roosh thinks of game now.

> I will often use the secular word "game" in this article. Game is a collection of psychological and behavioral techniques to attract a woman physically and emotionally for the purpose of fornication and fleshly pair bonding. Game includes: approaching an unknown woman in a public place while play-acting as a confident man, optimizing one's aesthetic so that it pleases worldly woman, using salesman techniques of rapport building and scarcity to make a fast "sale," hiding flaws while showcasing strengths, deliberately pumping up a woman's emotions, lying, omitting the truth, putting a woman in a negative state of anxiety or dread to modulate her attractive feelings, and exploiting a woman's human weaknesses for selfish gain.
> In the game process, God is absent, and the primary goal of the man is to satisfy his selfish craving for positive female attention, worldly love, and physical pleasure. Even if you claim to desire abstinence before marriage, you can still be using game by implementing secular techniques to meet women, get their phone number, arrange dates, and so on. A sign you are not using game is if you adhere to the old cliché "be yourself," where yourself is a child of God who follows His commandments with the understanding that marriage is a sacrament whose purpose is to usher two souls into heaven. The Christian way is to trust in God to pair you with a woman who is on your social and spiritual level instead of pretending to be an alpha male to deceive a woman into liking you using mostly physical and psychological means.

Roosh gives a fairly accurate assessment of game in my opinion and concludes why he is anti-game. His statement is a fair depiction of what most observers would say is game from the standpoint of players. The definition keeps on varying depending on what people define as game, so there has never been any significant headway into such things among Christians. In Roosh's definition above, I think most Christians would also say that if this is what “game” is then it’s likely not something that a Christian should be doing.

I’ve been one of the few traditionally anti-game Christian manosphere bloggers, mostly from the perspective that ultimately game does not produce sanctification.

However, this is not to say all of the various aspects of social conversation are things that are bad. For example, social charisma such as the ability to lead conversations, flirt, make others laugh, and generally express forms of social dominance are neither good or bad. Instead of calling everything which causes sexual attraction from women in the social department as “game,” maybe we can start just calling the parts that we should put into practice “social charisma” or some other term. This gets us out from the umbrella of having to mention game and have to do with the nebulous nature of the term.

To sum up, Roosh’s definition of game which is negative and deceptive social manipulation is generally not something what Christians should be doing, but having “social charisma” can be a very good thing for single Christian men and married Christian husbands. Maybe we should lose the term “game” and use something else for the aspects of “social charisma” (or a different term) that we would like to see Christian men develop.

Sustainable leadership

October 31, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Scott makes an common sentiment that I frequently see on Very few women can be moulded.

> It's so weird how at the beginning of a relationship she will practically turn herself inside out to become whatever it is you say you like.
> And at the end, if you ask her to bring you something from another room she'll roll her eyes at you like you are the laziest ungrateful POS in the world asking her for such an off-putting request.
> It's the "breaking rules" for you when she perceives you as "alpha" and then as you transform right in front of her (in her eyes) into a "beta" with "boyfriend behaviors" she starts piling the rules back on — thing.
> I wrote about it a few posts back.
> The "molding" is way easier at first. Then they resent it because they think all your cocky "alpha-ness" when you first met was a ruse and they were fooled by an imposter.
> When what really happened was you assumed she loved you "on the inside" and you could just relax and be yourself.
> It's why having to constantly keep your "game" up just to have her behave like she always did sounds exhausting (and not worth it) to most men.
> Unless you figure out a way for your relationship to smoothly transition through this phase, serial monogamy is again the most rational answer for guys who can pull it off.

A few things to note:

- This is why any dating and engagement should generally last past a honeymoon phase so you start to see each other's flaws and people can't continually hold up a facade about who they truly are.

Holding out past this and especially some harder or difficult times really reveals the character of both yourself and a potential wife. If you can't engage well when things get rough, it's going to be amplified to the extreme in marriage.

- The "love on on the inside" and "relax and be yourself" is like makeup for women. It's best to not do too much of that at all if any ever. Like with makeup and 'game' in this case, both men and women can be fooled respectively and then will lose that attraction and/or respect when they find out it's a different bill of goods.

Charismatic leaders may be that way because they tend to have some personality traits that lends toward that, but effective and engaging public speaking can be learned and developed. In the same way, developing effective behaviors and traits and turning them into habits is one of the keys to aspiring toward excellence as a man and not putting up a veneer or facade of pretending to be someone you are not while dating.

Developing PSALM and masculinity shouldn't be about just displaying it for women like game as defined by Roosh. This is why I keep harping on things related to discipling and being discipled as a lot of the keys to developing the habits of leadership (that lead to PSALM + masculinity).

1. If you are confident enough to share your faith with others it's not that hard to ask a woman out. One is honestly much scarier than the other, since you're actually more likely to get rejected and more harshly for sharing your faith than asking women out (nuclear rejections not withstanding but they are rarer).
2. If you're being discipled and discipling others (or mentors not even just in the faith) you are getting good experience from both the leader-follower perspective that goes into sustaining a headship-submission relation.
3. If you're continually growing in the faith and fruit of the Spirit you have better tools to deal with adversity.

I can go on and on but a lot of maturity in the faith and doing things the way Jesus said to do it — make disciples of all nations teaching what He commanded to us — really does give a good framework, skills, and practice for men and husbands to use in marriage.

When I was growing up there didn't seem to be much of this in the Churches I attended, but once I truly began to serve God and get involved in the discipleship process it did help develop skills and traits that I needed to be successful with in marriage. Obviously, you can develop them without mentorship and discipleship but it is harder to do alone.

Developing these habits and skills makes it so you don't have to pretend or try to "game" or do anything like that. It's not exhausting either. There's no need to play games or anything like that. Simply use what you already should be using for being more mature in your faith and apply it to your relationships or marriage.

Any two Christians can have a godly marriage

November 3, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Sensational title and something I've been thinking about for a long time.

1. Literally, any two Christians (male and female) can have a godly, successful, happy, and lots of sex marriage.
2. The only thing it requires is obedience to God's marital roles and responsibilities.
3. But this appears to be hard for many or most "professing" Christians in our current culture/world.
4. Perhaps less difficult in the past when there were various factors that propped up 90-95% marriage rates in most societies, but there was still divorce, cheating, and all of that back then even when it was more frowned upon.

This should be the norm among Christians but sadly it is not, but where do we draw the line on it being realistic for most? How do we help those to where it can be realistic for most?

Here is a list of traits — many of them Biblical and non-exhaustive (add some in the comments if you think they should be here) — that likely contribute to this.

- Naturally fall into a headship-submission dynamic. Male natural leader / female natural follower.
- Are inclined toward love-respect (perhaps particular combinations of big 5 personality traits?)
- Are Christians that are focused on following Jesus and implementing the fruit of the Spirit in their lives
- Likely being discipled by older men/women in the faith with lasting marriages
- Very attracted to each other
- Willing to follow 1 Corinthians 7 on giving each other sex despite feelings (much rarer, I think).
- Ability to communicate effectively and assertively and not go into passive/passive-aggressive/aggressive communication methods?
- A good knowledge and practice of who they are in Christ, so they are not looking to their spouse for needs that can only be met by God?

It would be hard to put percentages on these types of things, so I'm not going to try. But what should we be telling single men and women to look for in terms of these? All of them to a good degree? Perhaps as screening for yellow or red flags?

For instance, some level of attraction is probably necessary. It's one of the strong drivers of the desire to have sex with your spouse which helps significantly in obeying 1 Corinthians 7. Maximizing attraction tends to lead to ruin such as those examples in Proverbs. But how do we counsel men and women on what is good enough to look for?

Somewhere between a man or woman's attraction floor for marriage but below a level where it significantly changes their behavior to not want to obey Christ but their spouse instead? What if their attraction floor is too high?

That seems to have always been one of the big questions of the Christian world as even those in the wrong ("godliness is sexy" or "godliness is attractive") implicitly know that attractiveness is important.

Another thing is I think the willingness to continue to be faithful to God and love and serve others despite if you feel like it or not is of primary importance. How do we help singles get there?

Womens' moral agency and the interplay between mercy and judgement

November 10, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As an aside, Jack looked at a bunch of my quotes on womens' moral agency if you were interested in what I think about the topic.

Mercy and judgement see to fit into this topic as well. I was listening to a Jordan Peterson interview the other day, and he has some interesting thoughts on the Bible but one in particular was some very good insight. To paraphrase: 'we all need mercy in that despite our flaws we need others to accept us just as we are (in terms of human dignity and worth), but we also need judgement to be there to call us higher from those flaws.'

I think it's pretty clear if one looks at the Scriptures (OT and NT) as a whole, the general theme that God is focused on from the OT is judgement and the general theme of the NT is mercy. However, you cannot have one without the other as there are shades of mercy in the OT and there are also shades of judgement in the NT.

When discussing the gospel message, it's clear there must be both:

- God is righteous and judges sin accordingly. The wages of sin is death.
- However, God sent Jesus to die for us in order that if we humble ourselves, repent, and turn from our ways and follow Him, then we are given mercy to blot out our sin through the blood of Christ and adopted into God's family by faith and grace.

As western Christianity has fallen to various forces and become churchianity, one of the distinct markers has become the "don't judge me" mantra. This is true with any sort of flaws whether it's sex, body positivity, if you can't love me at my worst…, or whatever else. Mercy is expected but judgement is eschewed.

Christianity should be the opposite because Jesus along with the rest of the epistles readily say to call out our brothers and sisters in Christ if they are in sin (judgement) so that we can call them to repentance and they can be right with God. Then if they repent we are to forgive them completely (mercy).

In regard to womens' moral agency, we can see often that both sides of the equation are warped.

- When women commit wrong they beg for mercy and no judgement.
- However, if there is judgement it is typically off loaded to the back of male responsibility for it (blame game or in the case of men blaming other men for womens' bad behavior white knighting).

Yet mercy in reality cannot exist with judgement, and judgement cannot exist without an objective standard of right and wrong. Therefore, judgement and mercy cannot exist without God. Those who reject God are moral relativists, and their world view is inherently nonsensical. You cannot logic them out of it.

Going back to what Peterson said, I think the insight resonates on the level of understanding that we need both God's mercy but also the fear of His judgement (e.g. work out our salvation in fear and trembling) in order to push us to continually grow in sanctification.

By analogy, also, no marriage will work without both judgement and mercy working together in tandem within the roles and responsibilities of headship-submission and love-respect. We need to be able to give each other grace and mercy but also recognize right from wrong and call each other higher, just like the Father and Jesus do with us as Christians. True sanctification cannot exist without both.

There still are no unicorns and recommendations on just getting into dating women

November 13, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

locustplease makes the observations about modern Christian women and dating:

> After years of introspection I have decided I wanted/needed too much from a Christian woman if I found one. Since I see these relationships from the outside I developed a composite and it's just not based on any one person. For instance the very strong godly dedicated ride or die Christian women I meet. They all made serious mistakes. And the ones who nailed everything from the start they never had to put their foot down on their own sin behavior and exercise moral agency.
> I've had 2 church girls express interest lately but they both have feminist traits. Both are good looking have dedicated Christian mothers. The one I can say from what I've been around is the most godly single Christian woman I've encountered and really I can't think of a second. Buuuut of course she's a career gal. And since she didn't get divorce raped she may b in a better financial position than me. Part of me says why bother telling this career gal with plenty of expendable income I'm looking for a stay at home wife. Another part says she's probably barely making it like most career gals and desperate for an off and nobody ever offered her. I have too much pride to ask this girl out she'll b way to hard to impress.
> The other has some feminist calling cards but is a blank slate. It's like I'm not willing to engage with a woman with anything I don't like off the bat. But in the past I just dated them then did the filtering. Am I just afraid of telling them something they may not want to hear. Not very patriarchal of me. The one is younger barely out of highschool and not had to engage with her agency. The other one mid 20s has already and seems to have succeeded. Inexperienced — experienced. Somehow their both wrong.

Here's the thing. This is not an uncommon sentiment from men today. I've seen it from the men I've discipled in the 'sphere and also from those IRL. I do think there is some validity in being concerned about these things which I have noted in my various vetting and teachable posts. But I want to drive this home further.

- First, don't look for a unicorn. Everyone here has always preached they don't exist.
- If you think you're going to find a woman who is already "perfect" you're never going to find one. Even if there was one, she would already be scooped up by "Chad" when they're in their late teens or early 20s.

100% of women you meet are going to have "feminist traits" because that's the culture we live in. If you're going to exclude women for that you might as well just stay single forever.

The true key is starting to lead a woman and see if she responds like a good follower. If she does, you can teach her what is right and disabuse her of cultural notions that are not Christian. That's what Bible study and prayer with her is for before marriage. You can go over the marital passages and see what she thinks and correct her. Then see if she changes her behavior over time.

To use another analogy for the same concept: Jesus doesn't give up on us because we are sinners, but He is looking for us to repent and follow Him. He's not looking for someone perfect, but for someone who is imperfect who wants to make the sanctification journey with Him.

Obviously, this doesn't mean we ignore yellow or red flags or attraction. You can screen generally using that. But if you meet some women that seem to have only a couple things off about them as long as they're not egregious then as you lead and teach her she can change.

I've made the point before that we all teach others how to treat us. The same goes for training your wife. Both men and women, husbands and wives, should be changing over time toward Christ through the sanctification process. You can and should look for good potential in a wife (or husband for that matter), but these are not static things that don't change over time. Just like we develop in the spiritual disciplines, train our bodies, or become more mature mentally and emotionally so too should we do the same things with ridding ourselves of worldly desires and passions.

If you do date women and they are fairly resistant to following you or want to continue in their ways then you can just part ways. It's not a big deal. But if you are not even dating to see if women do this I think you are wasting a lot of valuable opportunities not just to learn how to lead better but also to see if a woman has the potential to become a good wife.

There's a lot of women out there who look like a potentially perfect wife but then you find out she's a rebellious nag, and there's some women out there who may look like they have some cultural traits that are going to be negative but then they're actually good followers once they have someone leading them. Appearances can be deceiving until you actually find out first hand how they respond to you leading her.

Trust, attraction, and the Biblical female marital roles of helper, submission, and respect Part 1

November 17, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've sitting on Jack's good summary of A distrusting woman is a divorcing woman for a while and have found a way to tie things together.

My quoted analysis:

> When some people are stuck in patterns and habits of inverted relationships/marriage so long, then that becomes their normal. Normal is comfortable. She can manipulate you and has control over you and everything is good.
> If you flip the script and start leading the relationship/marriage, then this is simply too much for some women. They are scared out of their minds not being in control because (surprise surprise) BPD and other types of women like that have trust issues, usually from broken homes, sexual abuse, or whatever else in their history. Most normal women who grew up in a healthy home will be uncomfortable at first but when you're actually leading well they'll start to fall in line.
> This is pretty much what cognitive dissonance is. BPD women and women with trust issues can't handle NOT being in control. They'll do anything to get out of it, even if it's in a better situation. They'd rather go back to the control and dysfunction. Similar to battered women syndrome and Stockholm syndrome.
> This is also why we say, usually when you start leading, women will fall in line. Most women that actually are interested in serving God and have a reasonably healthy background will. But there are relationships where women are too dysfunctional to change and instead of starting to follow you, they'll likely try to rebel more or just nope out. Just let them go per 1 Corinthians 7:15. Their choices are on their head as long as you are striving to uphold God's commands."

His analysis:

> After considering these examples, I think the issue here (at least for these types of women) is not so much about personal gain and control as it is about trust. The reason that these women withhold sex and grasp for control is not for the control itself, but it's because they are unwilling or unable to trust. Having control allows them to avoid having to be trusting, and this is their primary motive for maintaining control.
> In addition, building trust in one another is only half of the equation. These examples also indicate that it's crucial for one to be trusting as a personal quality, and for one to trust as a general habit. Women with various disorders, emotional scars, and trust issues just can't do that, no matter how trustworthy > the man might be.

> The commonality of these distrusting types of women is that they would rather cop out of the marriage altogether than learn how to trust, even when the sex is good (for the woman) and it is obvious that they would have a much better life if they stayed. This observation greatly emphasizes the centrality of trust in a relationship, and suggests that trust is a much deeper issue than control (i.e. the Curse of Eve), or even hypergamy and the Tingles.

In general, this seems to be the theme of the past couple posts under the surface:

- Any two Christians can have a godly marriage
- There still are no unicorns and recommendations on just getting into dating women

If both men and women are committed to following the Biblical roles and responsibilities and growing in sanctification as mature Christians they can have a godly marriage, no sex denial, and all such successful metrics. Similarly, men should be not be looking for the perfect prospect (unicorn) but rather a woman who is getting most stuff right and is willing to follow the man and is teachable.

When we go back to all of the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities we end up with:

- Provider & protector (of the garden) – helper (Gen 2)
- Headship – submission (Eph 5, 1 Cor 11, Col 3, Tit 2, 1 Pet 3)
- Love – respect (Eph 5, 1 Pet 3)

What all of these seem to have in common from the woman aspect — helper, submission, respect — is the underlying theme of trust. She is to be a helper and not a harmer. She is to follow his lead and not be contentious or rebel, and she is to respect and not disrespect. This is adequately summed up by Proverbs 31.

> Proverbs 31:11 The heart of her husband trusts in her, And he will have no lack of gain. 12 She does him good and not evil All the days of her life.

Although the passage only says that the husband trusts in his wife, v12 also requires that a wife trust her husband with the result of that building him up and not tearing him down. Those with trust issues or mental health issues (e.g. BPD, NPD, etc) all tend to fail this test because they can't trust the man for whatever reason. They are in essence unable to be good followers without divine intervention such as surrendering to God and having him heal their hearts.

Circling back to the "any two Christians can gave a godly marriage" and the Teachability part of FAST, we can see that teachability and ability to be effective in applying the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities require a fundamental heart trust in the man.

Scientific research has shown repeatedly that we tend to trust attractive people more. This appears to be the reason why the "tingly-respect" model tends to naturally fall into alignment with the headship-submission model from the Biblical marital roles.

Womens'/wives' attraction to their husband naturally increases their heart trust in their man/husband. This leads to greater willingness to naturally help him (helper), follow him (submit), and respect him (respect).

Obviously, this is not always the case as women and wives have the choice to rebel and be contentious regardless of attraction, but we can see the general strong correlation of this pattern. Conversely, we see the opposite also be true. If a man or husband lets himself go and becomes obese and lazy a woman's attraction wanes and her likelihood of adhering to Biblical female roles and responsibilities gets way tougher. She is more likely to nag, be contentious, rebel, and otherwise be negative toward her husband.

Thus, we end up with a general schematic:

- Womens' ATTRACTION to men (via PSALM and masculinity) tends to lead to TRUST in the man
- TRUST leads to a woman more naturally following Biblical female marital roles and responsibilities
- Thus, TRUST leads to a woman being more willing to help, follow, and respect the man

This also ties together my Biblical analysis of how God made attraction and the role it plays in marriage. Men who strive to be fully who God made men to be — take dominion, provide, protect, etc — tend to build the PSALM and masculinity traits naturally. This also naturally starts to attract women and that attraction builds trust. This trust helps them more naturally want to fulfill the Biblical female roles and responsibilities.

In essence, attraction via fulfillment of God's creation mandate provides the benefit of oil does to a car engine. It helps the gears and pistons to run more smoothly. Yeah, a car engine can run with minimal to no oil, at least for a time, but it will generally start to break down or be destroyed eventually. Not the best analogy ever but it provides a good reference for everyone to understand.

Trust, attraction, and the Biblical female marital roles of helper, submission, and respect Part 2

Trust, attraction, and the Biblical female marital roles of helper, submission, and respect Part 2

November 21, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the last post we explored the theme of why attraction leads to trust and why this trust increases female compliance with the Biblical female marital roles and responsibilities. Let's put together some more pieces.

Over the past few months, Jack has written about validational versus transactional sex. I've written on this topic as well in terms of the transactional versus desire dynamic and also how this relates to our relationship with God in performing versus doing things from desire.

> Thus, we end up with a general schematic:
> 1. Womens' ATTRACTION to men (via PSALM and masculinity) tends to lead to TRUST in the man
> 2. TRUST leads to a woman more naturally following Biblical female marital roles and responsibilities
> 3. Thus, TRUST leads to a woman being more willing to help, follow, and respect the man

Since womens' attraction and desire is governed by hypergamy — the desire to marry up — this gives us some perspective on why women employ a performance/transactional or desire/validational mindset toward men.

Those they find unattractive do not trigger their hypergamy so most interactions tend to trend toward performance and transactional nature. The example of the nice guy or friend-zoned man fall into this category. He has to constantly prove his worth to her for what rationed attention she gives to him, and in most cases he will never get sex. Even if he does it's along the lines of tit for tat. In other words, it's similar in nature to the sugar daddy-sugar baby or in more vulgar terms the john-prostitute relationship. Favors are being exchanged either for attention, sex, or some other thing that a man wants from a woman.

Alternatively, underneath the attraction model comes the desire to have sex which also validates the woman. Those men that display PSALM and masculinity traits tend to be naturally attractive to women which triggers her hypergamy that he is better than her. This attraction also builds trust. Hence, such as a woman is much more open to be vulnerable and humble and to want to be humbled (by having sex) with a man who is attractive and arousing.

I don't think it is a coincidence that God made men and women like this. The various Biblical marital roles and responsibilities of the man seem to be aimed at reinforcing an increased attraction, trust, and general humility to a wife so that she responds to a husband's love for the purpose of sanctification. The more a wife trusts in her husband the more likely she is going to respond to her husband if he is correcting, teaching, and training her in righteousness. This seems to be a reinforcing positive behavioral cycle that also increases the propensity for sex between a husband and wife.

In other words, the Creation design of men and women and marriage all fit together nicely to positively reinforce Biblical marital roles and responsibilities and desire to have sex with each other.

Repentance to God also mirrors the the humility that a woman experiences when she is with a man who is very attractive and arousing to her. One must be humble to admit they are a sinner in need of a Savior.

Jack sums this up in his equation for validational sex in what we've learned about female submission.

> Validation = Domination + Defilement –> Humility + Ego Affirmation –> Her Feeling Loved
> In terms of "game": Game –> Humility –> Her Feeling Loved
> My aside comment on game: Much of the various immoral pickup techniques work because they tend to attempt to try to trigger a woman's hypergamic impulses by knocking down a woman's pride or even insulting her or the other various methods (DHV/DLV — demonstrate high value versus demonstrate low value).

Although hypergamy is termed that way for a woman's desire to marry up, it can also be defined in terms of humility in the opposite direction. The one a woman wants to marry up with triggers her hypergamy so that she is humble toward him because he is a relative 'superior' in what she wants while she is a relative 'inferior.' This explains why women always want men who earn more than them, are more popular than them, have more power, status, athleticism, muscles, and all other PSALM and masculinity traits than them.

This also explains the extreme cognitive dissonance liberal women have with wanting equality with men, but then are attracted to the men they so-called hate. Conservatives are generally no better with threatening their girls boyfriends with violence and guns which sabotages relationships. Churchians are likewise no better because egalitarians basically being feminists and complementarians saying equality in value but different in roles but pushing for equality in roles — agreement is godliness and the fallacy of intelligent submission.

I believe the explanatory scope extends further into why women with multiple partners tend to divorce more readily. Why expectations of men and women are out of control describes the inflationary expectations which raises the bar for a woman's hypergamy. Suddenly a man is not just compared to himself but all of the good qualities of men she previously dated and all of the "good" various sexual experiences she had. This raises her hypergamic filter so high that she can only be humble to very few men if any at all. In the vast majority of cases, probably no one. Hence, promiscuous women tend to marry for the status and not because they actually desire their husband and end up going down the road of divorce or sexless marriages.

More thoughts on the Validational sex equation

December 2, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been mulling over the equation, especially after Jack's most recent comment on me endorsing it.

> This is what I observed about female nature while writing about Feminine Submission back in October. It IS VERY WEIRD to men, until you understand why. My conclusion was that this is a necessary (or at least a concomitant) element of Validation — of women feeling loved and becoming fully satisfied with the relationship.
> Validation = Domination + Defilement –> Humility + Ego Affirmation –> Her Feeling Loved
> It's a "medium" (Rollo's word H/T: deti) that expresses the Dominance / Submission structure of Tingly Respect / Headship.
> I was somewhat surprised that even Deep Strength confirmed this.
> I think the important takeaway for Christian men is that they should not be pansies with their wives in the bedroom. Doing crazy stuff to her can increase sanctification. Of course, Scott's addendum applies here, as elsewhere: "IF she thinks you're hot…"
> The other important takeaway (that is rather regrettable IMO) is that those of us who have experienced this in a past relationship (deti, Scott, and me included) are rue to discover only now (too late) that THIS is true Biblical Headship, and that we threw it away, not knowing what it was, nor the value of it — and worse, dismissing and rejecting her as weird, debased, defiled, low-class, unChristian, etc., which comes off as a form of punishment for her conforming to the Headship structure. Then only later in life, we slowly begin to understand that THIS is what constitutes a truly good relationship.

Also, his explanation on sanctification and defilement:

> Here it should be noted that Sanctification and Defilement have many similarities, and the thing that sets them apart is the context. Sex sanctifies a woman to one man and defiles her to all others. Thus, sex contributes to sanctification within marriage and to defilement outside of it.

The main thing I've been mulling over is defilement/sanctification, and the reason for that is not all sex in marriage is sanctifying. There are frigid wives and occasionally husbands who are doing it transactionally. Additionally, for non married women we also don't necessarily get the defiling nature outside of marriage, and women have been known for serial monogamy and man-hopping at least if she's promiscious and "trying to find herself."

Liberal women for as much as they decry the patriarchy are turned on the most by male domination and humiliation. Validational sex for these women could be one night stands as much as with a boyfriend or in marriage.

Defilement, at least in terms of validational sex, seems to be the feelings result of domination. In other words, domination over a woman makes her feel like she is possessed by an attractive man. This is the main turn on for women in romance novels/porn where a man who ticks all the boxes of hypergamy — PSALMs + masculinity — such as the dominant, confident, successful, masculine, leader wants to take her and have his way with her. Hence, she is made his.

It seems to me that this would slightly change the equation of Validational sex to a string of causal consequences. Domination generally only occurs if a man is able to trigger her hypergamy strong enough.

1. Domination (before, during, and after sex)
2. Feeling of being possessed
3. Humility (he takes what is his) + Ego affirmation (he wants me) + defilement (she is his, and no other*)
4. Her feeling loved

Equation form: Validational sex = Domination (before, during, and after sex) –> Feeling of being possessed –> Humility (he takes what is his) + Ego affirmation (he wants me) + defilement (she is his, and no other) –> Her feeling loved

This is the reason why validational sex can create alpha widows is because of the aspect of defilement that is included with her feeling loved by that man, and not necessarily the true sanctification/defilement that is supposed to be only in marriage.

In other words, as Dalrock aptly pointed out, the feeling of love is what sanctifies marriage instead of the commitment and covenant of marriage. This leads to to the elevation of validational sex as marriage, and why women feel like they’re being violated (or being forced, raped, etc) when they are not attracted to their husbands.

Narrative denial – The crushing loneliness of the girl boss

> When the COVID lockdowns began in March 2020—that great sterilization of our personal lives, that mass removal of distraction—I observed something strange. My peers, ordinarily proud of their independence, realized that they didn't just love their families but kinda liked them. Other friends—friends who'd been stuck quarantining with roommates or, worse yet, alone—yearned for families. They began joking about how nice it'd be to have a husband and kids for company in eating or drinking themselves to death or, less gloomily, in sharing their freshly baked sourdoughs. With the mounting pressure of COVID restrictions, many people learned that their "chosen families" of friends and colleagues were less durable than they'd thought.
> I wasn't a detached onlooker. I, too, worked a tech job 3,000 miles away from my family, the kind located on a plush campus with floor-to-ceiling windows and on-demand gelato. Then suddenly the artifice was stripped away, and my time was no longer broken up by campus bike rides or leisurely strolls to the office sushi chef. I was alone facing the silence of the day, and I found myself confronted by questions I hadn't asked since my early twenties: What am I for? Why am I doing any of this?

The consequences of believing that women should be just like men! Feminism is great, am I right?

> It was around this time that I noticed an uptick in feminism-skeptical social media content. There's always been a market for anti-feminism online for the same reasons that being a "gamer girl" sells: It leverages a niche position that's in high demand but undersupplied. And yet this felt different. The feminism-critical content I was seeing came from all points on the political spectrum, across every race and economic demographic, and, importantly, from people who didn't appear to be selling anything. Of course, there were some people angling to become capital-p Personalities, but mostly I saw ordinary women venting their frustrations, many of them spurred by the conditions brought on by the pandemic. Some of these women were part of larger digital subcultures, like the modest fashion movement, or the now infamous subreddit, Female Dating Strategy. Others were part of nascent philosophical and intellectual scenes, a reactionary feminism spearheaded by writers like Mary Harrington, Louise Perry, Nina Power, Helen Roy, and Alex Kaschuta.

> But this didn't seem like a case of subcultural capture, or a trendy ideology amplified by a small group of vocal spokespeople. It was a much broader feeling that something had gone terribly wrong, leaving so many women so deeply unhappy in lives that seemed, on the surface, to be tolerable, or even good.
> "The 'I'm an independent strong Black woman' narrative is a scam," said one TikTok video personality in August, cautioning Black women, in particular, against buying into the familiar "girl boss" narrative, and encouraging them to seek stability in their communities. Alt-girls with septum piercings and tattoo sleeves shared how the microblogging site Tumblr's glamorization of sex work and BDSM put them in harm's way. Another video, since taken down, featured Muslim women discussing the pitfalls of Western feminism.
> These critiques crept into explicitly left and left-liberal spaces, too, not just those prone to agree with socially conservative thought. In the wake of the West Elm Caleb episode—a peak COVID-era social media spectacle in which several women realized they'd been ghosted by the same man—even the notoriously and often punitively "woke" Washington Post journalist Taylor Lorenz levied criticism against the excesses of #MeToo. Porn came under the microscope; dating app burnout escaped its manosphere containment zone; the perception of OnlyFans evolved from a "great way to make this month's rent" to a predatory multilevel marketing scheme.

The women skeptical of feminism are that way for good reason. They see the despair at the end game. What is truly fulfilling? Your job? In all reality, it's the family and relationships you make with others.

> There's this fashionable notion that women without children or husbands are happier. Let's assume that's true and not just a decontextualization of some rogue statistic with perfect headline potential. That would only be true in a society that can support it: a stable society built by people who make sacrifices and raise kids so that the childless rest can enjoy their lives. And importantly, it would only be true of some people, people who are aberrations to the norm. If everyone's single and childless, then society stops being able to function. It's like being a celebrity. If everyone is a celebrity, then nobody is a celebrity. Being unshackled from adult responsibilities is only attractive in a world that demands them in the first place.
> The same realizations spurred by the shock of mandatory quarantines—that the burden of a family isn't necessarily a bad one, that a life alone is only as fun as the distractions available—will come into even sharper relief as millennials enter middle age. Marriage and fertility rates continue to decline; meanwhile, the rates of deaths of despair, friendlessness, and loneliness balloon. Recognizing systemic problems is nothing new to us millennials, but what does seem to be new is the need to expand our purview beyond the realm of economics. If capitalism failed our generation, then it failed more than just our bank accounts. It disrupted > everything from our identities and our family life to the way we make friends and find love. Suffering through this latest crisis isn't just being burdened by student loans—it's putting off kids, too. And the culture of capitalism is about marketing those failures as cool lifestyle choices. Podcasts like "Sofia with an F," and "Why Won't You Date Me," are filled with reassurances that women can settle down whenever they want to. The horizon on choice doesn't have to end if you have the right mindset and a willingness to freeze your eggs or make good use of IVF.

> It's not so much that millennials were just fed a bunch of lies and need to fix their behavior; it's that their environment didn't allow them to behave any differently, and they attacked anything but the root cause. The "girl boss" makes sense in an environment where you're going to have to work a soul-sucking job no matter what; why not add a veneer of glamour to it? In a world where day care is an expensive necessity, there is a womblike comfort in telling yourself stories about how staying childless is an "act of heroism" or even a ticket to happiness….
> …. Women are waking up to the truth through new expressions of feminism, growing digital subcultures, and reanimated political movements. But more broadly, they're waking up to the truth in ordinary ways. They're looking around at their lives and realizing that time is finite, and they're long overdue for a change.

Ah, so close. We can't blame feminism, but we can always divert blame back to easily scapegoats causes like capitalism. In this particular case, ironically there is no blame of the patriarchy (although I thought it was coming) or even men as men are typically the source of all of womens' problems.

There's always something to blame other than yourself or feminism for the choices that you make.

Actions have consequences. If you buy into feminism you get feminist results. The tragedy of it all is that feminist results are fairly predictable. Massive unhappiness, >30% of women have mental health issues, and so on. As commenters have noted, few from feminism "stick the landing" and even the examples of those who appear to have supposedly stuck the landing are probably unhappy in various different ways just like the glamor of celebrities is not all that.

Cheap sex leads to decreasing marriage rates or not?

December 15, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Back and forth articles on IFStudies.

- https://ifstudies.org/blog/new-research-on-cheap-sex-and-marriage-chances
- https://ifstudies.org/blog/sex-is-still-cheap-marriage-is-still-declining-a-response-to-wolfinger-and-perry-

I found these articles silly in terms of trying to understand why marriage rates have dropped because of 'cheap sex' or not. In them, basically they're arguing the back and forth whether cheap sex has an influence on marriage rates given the decreasing amount of marriage formation the more sexual partners that one has.

While there is some validity in that notion — some men don't want to marry women with very promiscuous pasts — the bigger issue is always going to be the nature of the expanding expectations that women have and the obesity(1) epidemic(2) for real(3).

Even in the "free love" 1960s-1970s most of the men and women there still got married. Dalrock's coverage of the never married data shows that even with people racking up higher partner counts from 1960s-1970s (the 45-49 year old age groups in the 2000s and 2010s) they still got married past 90% rates like most successful civilizations.

The big meaningful differences between 1960s and 1970s is the rates of obesity have skyrocketed in addition to social media literally destroying the dating markets. Social media has become so curated that people only put out the best, and everyone needs to be in some neat little package. So when you meet other people that are not all that like most people are then there's going to be mega-differences in expectations versus reality. I don't even have to mention feminism in making womens' expectations skyhigh either. Porn, being raised by divorced parents or single parents, and other factors likely play an influence as well.

Cheap sex may well explain a bit, but the bigger issues still loom.

Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives through sanctification

December 17, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack's distribution on Zippy's moral agency reminded me of most of the Big 6 personality trait distributions, male-female IQ distributions, and others. This seems to me like a fairly good way to assess moral agency as it stands.

Perhaps reading or math level could be a decent analogy. In inner city schools if the parents don't teach their kids to take school seriously then they're going to be stunted in their education. Their reading and writing and math will start to lag behind. However, the capacity for something like say math is relatively similar for boys and girls except boys generally trend stronger in the STEM subjects. Let's go with this analogy.

There's a common RP saying that "wives are the most responsible teenager in the room." We'll assess this later.

Cane Caldo made an astute observation on the temptation nature of men and women that has stuck with me for almost a decade now.

> The typical desire of a typical man is weighed thus: "Can I get the goods without getting in trouble?" A woman says to herself, "How do I get the goods without getting in trouble?" While the difference in words is subtle to the ear; the meanings are widely separated. The thought of doing without is a secondary consideration at best. That's just in the nature of a woman, and why they need a leader.
> Now, try and imagine successive generations of women; each raised on more and more skewed diet of unmerited praise and affirmation, but without hearing "No" and without consequences. If you can't imagine it, then go to the mall, or the office, or the DMV and open your bloody eyes.
> So A power-play by a woman is not a misguided come-on. It's a power-play. There could be a come-on mixed in, but the attempt at control is for its own sake; simply because she is driven to strive to be in control. The come-on (if there) is for him, but the power-play is for power.
> Women who don't want to be in control are a figment of the imagination. It's their sin nature. The marriageable ones are those women who struggle against it. The honorable women are those who redirect their desires, and only ask themselves "How do I get The Good?"

The difference, as Cane explains, is very similar to how men and women evaluate right and wrong and their consequences.

- Men – Right or wrong? -> if wrong and I want it badly, can I do it without getting in trouble? -> if I can do it without getting in trouble, how can I do it without getting in trouble?

- Women – Right or wrong? -> if wrong and I want it badly, how can I do it without getting in trouble?

This is perhaps related to solipsism. As Cane says, the thought of doing without is a secondary consideration. When a woman really wants something she will do everything to make it happen (e.g. pursue an alpha). This is why Eve is easily deceived into taking and eating the fruit. Envy and jealousy are two of womens' biggest struggles.

Now, we have some type of scenario where most men and women are able to get to college level of moral agency. Men probably have some sort of inherent advantage where they are more inclined to be 100% moral actors, but moral agency can be blunted if right and wrong are not taught adequately. Hence, why God instructed Israel's men (Deut 6) to constantly teach the law to their children. Parents need to teach their kids right from wrong.

However, some men and even more women get stunted in their educational growth on moral agency. Just as rich parents who spoil their kids get kids who have no morals or responsibility, so too the culture at the moment pushes women to less morally capable than they are able to be.

When Judeo-Christian values were nearly universally accepted in the West most men and women got to at least high school or college level — probably 80-100% range — of being capable moral agents. However, with the increase in victimhood culture especially with women and minority groups, moral agency has started to plummet. We are seeing grade school and middle school level moral agents these days. Perhaps even some toddler level.

However, for Christians, Christ exemplifies this for the Church which is the analogy used for husbands and wives.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless.

Sanctification can only be had if someone is a moral agent and able to determine right and wrong. Only if they know what is right and wrong are they able to be convicted by their conscience and repent of their wrongdoing. Hence, why husbands are tasked with sanctifying their wives like Christ does the Church.

This is how the process usually goes:

> Obviously, a wife who is respectful and submissive even when it is difficult is much easier to trust than one who is disrespectful and rebellious. But there are many different steps that it takes to get there. For instance,
> 1. A wife who is disrespectful and rebellious according to her own whims

> 2. A wife who knows what is right but can be disrespectful and rebellious when things get tough for her
> 3. A wife who knows what is right but has developed greater self control and perseverance but sometimes slips up when things are tough
> 4. A wife who knows what is right and it's rare that she's disrespectful and rebellious
> There can be many in between with these circumstances like how she responds to teaching, correction, or rebuke for good or for evil. You could probably make another whole list or expand this one to 8-9 bullet points with these.
> However, the point is that if you and your wife are a Christian and actively wanting to obey God and His Biblical roles and responsibilities, the sanctification process will be gradual over time in most cases and it is a process. This process is cultivated step by step and large jumps though they can happen tend to be unlikely since unlearning ingrained sinfulness is difficult.

Regardless of the level of moral agency of a wife started at or has grown in the process, the goal should be to continually sanctify her to be more like Jesus. Thus, her moral capability to acknowledge any wrongdoing and repent should increase over time. As she becomes a stronger moral agent, she will become a more mature Christian who can resist temptation more effectively.

Circling back to the "women are the most responsible teenager in the room" saying, I think this is conditionally true. It can be true if a woman is stuck a middle school to high school level of moral agency with associated responsibility. However, like most RP sayings they ignore the absolute truth from the Scriptures that women do have the capacity for moral growth through the sanctification process.

The general process of sanctification with moral discernment, moral agency, and mature theosis

December 20, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Reviewing one my comments, I never really thought of it as the process of sanctification as grounding moral agency. This in part stems from the previous post as well on Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives though sanctification.

> "I've even come to the conclusion that Moral Agency is what the Bible refers to as Freedom in Christ."
> Interesting way to put it. I've said something similar, but not in those words.
> I've always thought about it being the flipside Paul's assessment that we once were "slaves to sin" and by repenting and following Jesus we have "freedom in Christ."
> Talked about this in Not Curses but Punishments (Genesis 3) Part 1 (2016/5/28). Not Curses but Punishments (Genesis 3) Part 2 (2016/5/28) alludes to the choice:
> "Prior to the fall, Adam and Eve lived in perfect headship-submission in harmony. However, after the fall, Eve gets her just desserts punishment from eating of the fruit of the knowledge of good and evil — the choice to choose between good (submission) or evil (usurpation, rebellion, desire to be like man) in her relationship with her husband. Prior to the fall, her submission was present and easy; after the fall, her choice is more difficult, much like the other punishments."
> Moral agency… the choice to choose between good and evil. Though as sinners without a Savior we were almost doomed to fall to temptation. But Christ brings freedom to go beyond our circumstances there.
> I'd also argue that moral agency is a process built up progressively as mentioned in 2 Peter:
> 2 Peter 1:5
> For this very reason, make every effort to add to your faith goodness; and to goodness, knowledge; 6 and to knowledge, self-control; and to self-control, perseverance; and to perseverance, godliness; 7 and to godliness, mutual affection; and to mutual affection, love. 8 For if you possess these qualities in increasing measure, they will keep you from being ineffective and unproductive in your knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9 But whoever does not have them is nearsighted and blind, forgetting that they have been cleansed from their past sins.
> Faith -> goodness/virtue -> knowledge (of right and wrong) -> self control -> perseverance -> godliness
> This is the path that a moral agent should take. The first 3 from faith, goodness / > virtue, and knowledge help you to understand right from wrong, and then self control, perseverance, and godliness help you act on that. That culminates in 'loving God and loving your neighbor as yourself' with brotherly love / mutual affection and love.

What we have in 2 Peter 1 is the 3 part process of sanctification:

- Moral discernment — faith, goodness/virtue, and knowledge (of right and wrong)
- Moral agency — Choosing right (or wrong) based on moral discernment through self control, perseverance, and godliness
- Mature theosis (becoming like Jesus/God) — brotherly love and (agape) love.

We are all in the process of the spectrum of sanctification in many different areas of our lives.

Like with "natural marriage" as opposed to God's "covenant marriage," God has Created human conscious and interactions that those who follow His principles are generally successful (though not always) whether they consciously follow Him or not. This can be seen clearly as societies based around following Judeo-Christian ethics, virginity at marriage, lifelong marriage, and other sexual morality tend to be the most successful over time.

A society with a foundation of Judeo-Christian ethics generally conforms to the first 2 processes of moral discernment and moral agency. This is why both men and women were more mature in the past, yet going away from that over time leads to stunting of moral discernment and agency. This is why we have many men and especially women out there now with grade school, middle school, or high school level of moral agency at best.

Societies that encourage victim-hood or oppressed classes will naturally have increasing stunting of moral discernment and moral agency in those specific classes. After all, if you are a victim you can do no wrong because wrong is being done to you. It is the illusion of "no choice" and without choice you do not need moral discernment or moral agency.

Mature theosis seems to confined to maturity in Christ. The ability to transcend suffering circumstance with joy can only be done through the power of the Holy Spirit working in concert with a foundation of moral discernment and moral agency. These are some of the examples:

- For the joy set before Christ (we are that joy), He endured the cross – Hebrews 12
- The disciples being joyful and singing hymns after being beaten and imprison – Acts 16
- Christ's call for us to love our enemies and pray for those who persecute us — Matthew 5

Drawing this back to womens' moral agency, Adam was tasked with being the head of Eve in the garden and failed God by listening to Eve's voice instead of God's. Christ renews that with the New Creation in the New Testament with Paul showing us that we should emulate Christ's example of being a head and loving the Church through the analogy — Christ:Church::Husbands:Wives.

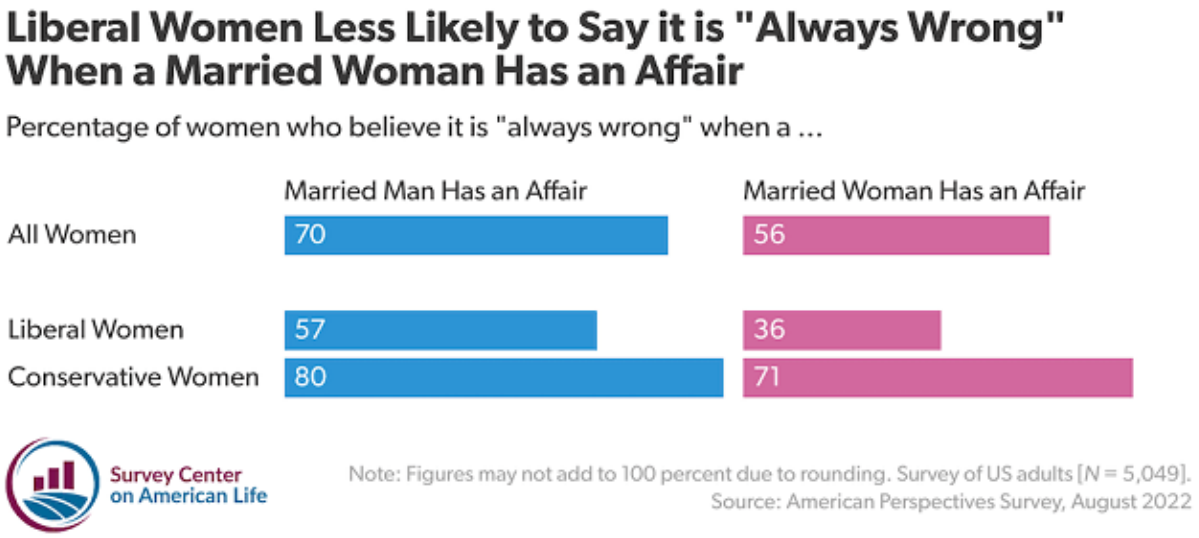
This task bring us to the main 4 points of Jack's summary on female agency in regard to being wives. To summarize, in my words:

1. Women's capacity in moral agency is more difficult compared to men as they are more easily deceived and tend to be averse to accepting consequences of their actions. Husbands as such must live with their wives in an understanding way showing honor as women are a weaker vessel but co-heirs in Christ (1 Peter 3).
2. Women's and men's responsibility with their agency is sex specific to the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities. Men are to be the head/lead and love their wives, and wives are to be helpers, respect, and submit to their husbands.
3. Women's agency in full maturity is weaker than men's, but it still must be led and encouraged through a husband's emulation of Christ's love of for the purpose of sanctification. A woman/wife who has been more grounded in the Christian faith and practice will show obvious fruit in how she acts toward her husband and others in her life.
4. Women's culpability in moral agency is still present and active. Eve was held responsible for God for listening to the voice of the serpent and being deceived and eating of the tree. Women are not victims. They have a choice to obey God or not from the beginning until now, and that has not changed.

This reminds me of the differential things we need to do for different scenarios from the Scriptures.

> 1 Thess 5:14 And we urge you, brothers, warn those who are idle and disruptive, encourage the disheartened, help the weak, be patient with everyone.



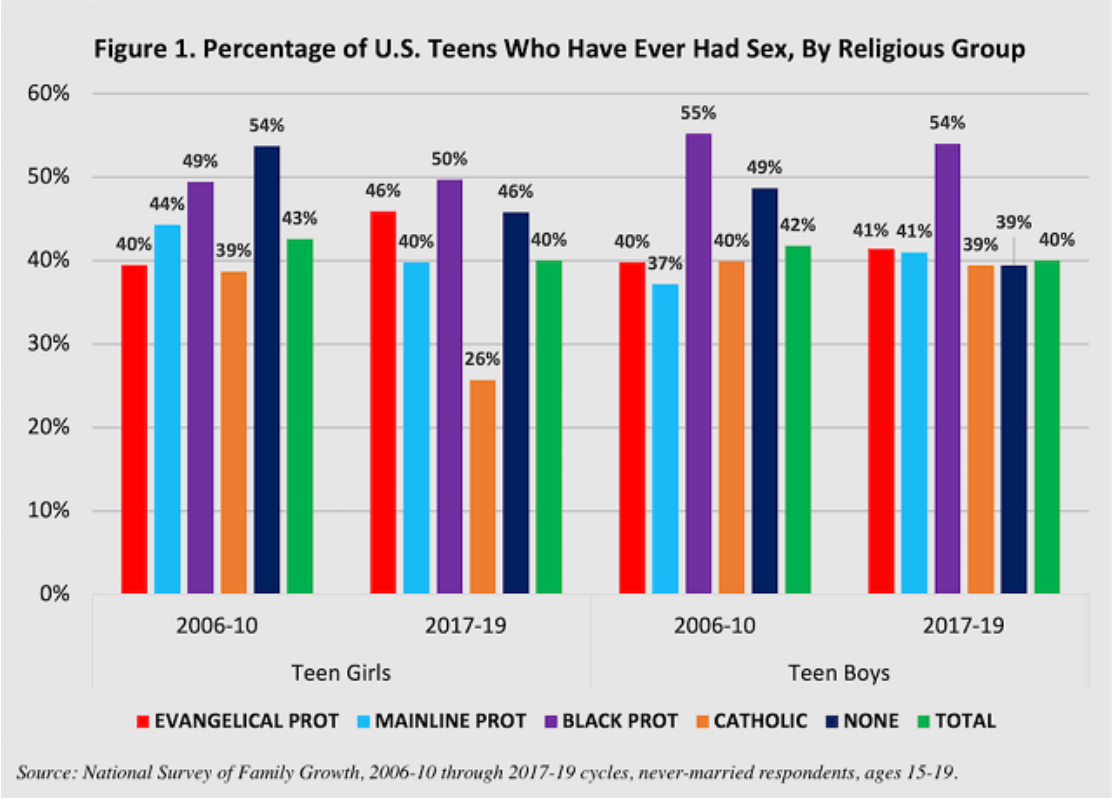
Depending on what is happening there needs to be a variable response to the situation. Boys and girls that are growing often need encouragement and help and definitely patience. However, if they are disruptive or idle they need warnings, rebuke, or correction.

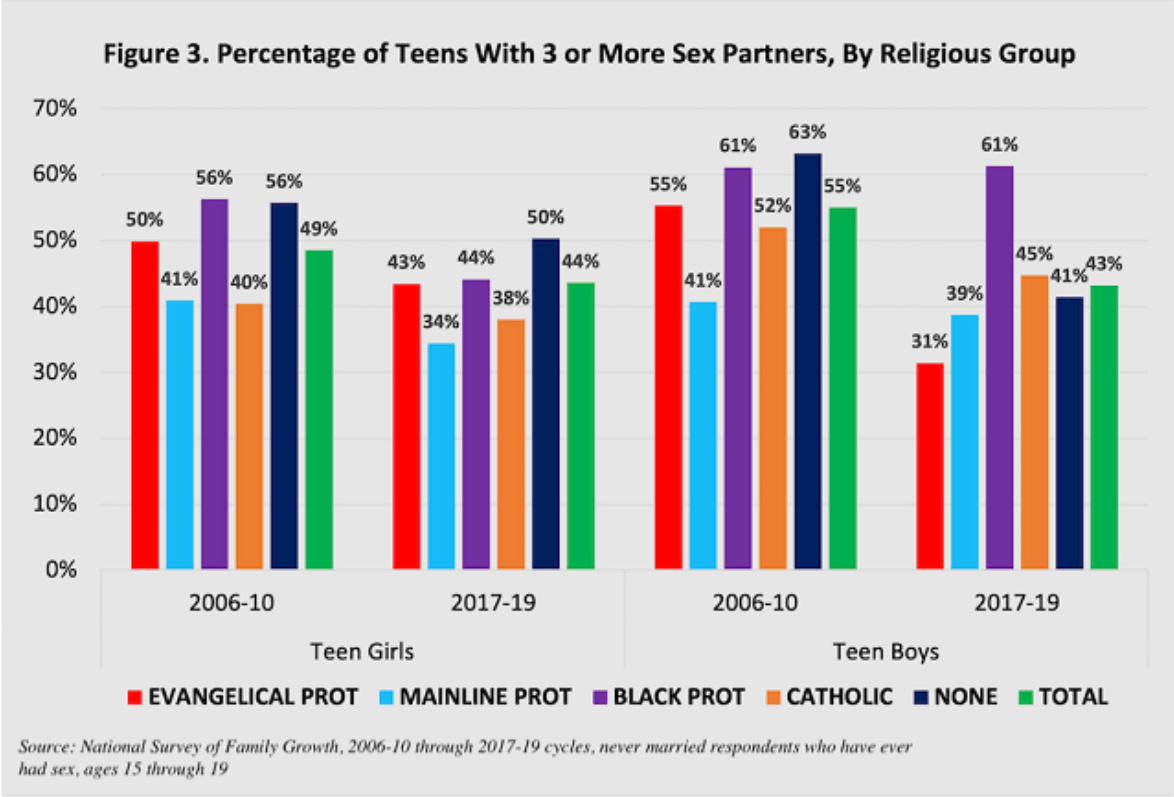
The same can be true of a wife — and new brothers and sisters in Christ in discipleship — who may have stunted moral discernment and/or moral agency in certain circumstances to push them on the path to mature theosis. While patterns of behavior (both male and female) show that different frameworks are effective, we must take into account the specific circumstances surrounding the right or wrong and how to lead and teach effectively.

Morality and trends in sex

December 27, 2022 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Wholly unsurprising analysis about the difference in morality of liberal versus conservative women. Obviously, the picture is from the link.





I'm a bit confused on people who would call themselves conservative but not 100% say that adultery is wrong. I know that not all people who are conservative are also conservative Christians, but I think that's hard to find nowadays. Most people who call themselves conservatives and are probably not Christian likely do have vestiges of Judeo-Christian ethics though.

However, I'm not surprised that liberal women have a big gap in saying that a married woman having an affair is more acceptable than a man. Liberal women are the queens of the feminist double standards: "Men are more wrong, and generally women can very rarely do wrong."

https://ifstudies.org/blog/trends-in-sexual-activity-among-religious-teens (images from this source).

This is, again, wholly unsurprising given what came out of purity culture and whatnot.

Churchianity has replaced Christianity completely in this area. The few Churches that do preach against against sex don't practically do anything about it: they don't help parents teach their children at home (such as Deut 6 shema- teaching is supposed to not just be done by the Church or pastors but by fathers and mothers), the Church and parents still send the kids out to do whatever for singleness without giving them the tools for what to look for in a marriage and how to go about it, and other things like these.

It’s no wonder you can’t really tell a difference between the various forms of Christianity and non-Christians here. Same with the divorce rates. If you do the same things as the world then you’re going to look like the world.

The rising popularity of women supposedly understanding men

January 16, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Info posted this vid in the comments on Jack's post. Interestingly, I was in the middle of writing something on this.

The video basically mentions several women making in-roads into the "manosphere" by basically parroting "red pill" talking points. I didn't know about RomaArmy before, but it proves the point.

- https://www.youtube.com/@RomaArmyMensRights/videos
- https://www.youtube.com/@JustPearlyThings/videos
- https://www.youtube.com/@CourtneyRyan/videos

Essentially, what is happening is something that is similar to what happened mid-manosphere. Dozens of women's blogs popped up around the 'sphere and men generally flocked to them. For the Christian manosphere that was Sunshine Mary's blog for a while.

This is why around 2015 I wrote a post on why I stopped reading women's blogs and that men should stop doing that.

> What I see tend to see is that men who need to grow in masculinity read womens' blogs is that they get very complacent with their own growth. In addition, what usually ends up happening is that any discourse usually devolves into the blame game or patting on the back which wastes valuable time that could be spent elsewhere.
> On the other hand, some men get set off track and end up holding said women as 'paragons of virtue' when they are simply women who have the nature of women and make mistakes too. Married men often become discontented in their own marriage at this, and it sets up unrealistic expectations for single men looking to be married.

In general, obviously I'm a small blog but the theme remains for social media content like it does for blogs. Don't follow women in general.

Women who are able to understand and articulate the male experience (or at least parrot it effectively) have an exponential power to gain a following from men and women. For instance, I've noticed a general phenomena on Instagram where men and women with about the same level of status or fame, then the woman has about 10x the amount of followers. So if the man has 100k followers, the woman will usually have 1 million followers. If he has 10k she will have 100k.

While many women distrust said women in this instance, some of the women who are not woke will implicitly trust what the woman is saying because it comes from a woman and not a man. The vid makes the point that Rollo has 200k followers on Youtube and has been doing it for 20 years whereas these two in the past 2-3 years are already over 1M.

From the men's side, it appears many men have this some sort of fantasy where they want to believe and want to think that women understand them. When women can articulate some of the male experience and how much harder it is compared to women and how the majority of men have gotten a really bad deal in the dating market it gives them hope.

While it's true that some women can be taught these things and understand men better, I think generally it's a big waste of time for men to invest in these types of things. We like to call the men that subscribe to a woman's OnlyFans SIMPs, but this is nearly the same thing under the guise of supposed male improvement. It's an emotional investment into something that isn't going to be building you up that much and virtually places you in an echo chamber.

It's attempting to find some sort of fantasy fulfillment in women, and even a woman that you're not in a relationship with or married to. Neither is good, but the former seems more innocuous when it can be as destructive.

The “jezebel spirit”

January 19, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of my readers sent me a article on the jezebel spirit in today’s women.

> • She is very manipulative
> • Hates men of God especially if they’re faithfully doing the work of God
> • She joins weak churches and destroys them
> • She hates prophets
> • She targets single men to destroy their anointing
> • She Operates in witchcraft; this includes jealousy, pride, envy, intimidation, manipulation, hatred
> • She twists scripture
> • She is Religious
> • She Hates women and men in authority especially in authority over her
> • She Seeks attention; looks to always gain a place of power or authority and would do anything to take someone’s place
> • She Hates the Truth
> • She will not submit to a man; if she does it’ll only be in order to gain ground or pretense, Conditional submission. “As long as you do this and this, I’ll submit to you”. Some wives allow this spirit to seduce them and they become submissive to their husbands only when it’s beneficial to them. This is rebellion in the Marriage bed. Submission is powerful and invites God’s blessings but the enemy lies to some wives enticing them to operate in a Jezebelic manner.
> • She may look innocent and be widely known as being very helpful and friendly, but he/she is deceitfully cunning and subtle; like a snake.
> • She has this deep feeling of wanting to be praised, worshipped, told nice things and complimented all the time. The Jezebel spirit likes to be adored like a God.
> • She never forgets when she is wronged because people with the Jezebel spirit struggle to forgive others. Even capable of killing or destroying your life. They’ll even wait years to get revenge or find out something happended to you. They often believe everyone needs to pay for what they’ve done or said to hurt her.

While all of this is true, I’m very skeptical of people saying that they’re tempted by spirits or Satan. Heck, I’ve said Satan is a scapegoat before.

> James 1:13 No one is to say when he is tempted, “I am being tempted by God”; for God cannot be tempted by evil, and He Himself does not tempt anyone. 14 But each one is tempted when he is carried away and enticed by his own lust. 15 Then when lust has conceived, it gives birth to sin; and sin, when it has run its course, brings forth death.

When you have a culture that diverges from Judeo-Christian ethics, you have increasing moral immaturity. This leads to people not knowing right from wrong and with their conscience’s seared they will be much more strongly prone to give into whatever desires their heart wants. This is where things like the destructive “jezebel spirit” comes in.

While I am not denying that Satan and demons are real, but in most cases humans — both men and women — fall to temptation of their own desires rather than having actual spiritual warfare against them.

In other words, most of the women who display the “jezebel spirit” are just doing it because it feels good to their flesh to play the victim and blame men for everything.

It is the women who are supposedly Christian who do the same thing that should know better. However, like all women it is easy for them to fall for the same temptations that display themselves in culture and to act the same way — to the destruction of their own marriages. Yet many of them claim to be Proverbs 31 and Titus 2 women.

Men supposedly dropping from the labor force because of social status

January 23, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This article was a head scratcher.

But part of the population has been silently walking away from work for several decades—well before the COVID-19 pandemic began.

> Men without four-year college degrees, between the ages of 25 and 54, have left the workforce in higher numbers than other groups. And they're leaving in part because of their perceived social status relative to better-educated men of similar age, according to a new study from the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.
> Non-college-educated men have seen their pay shrink by more than 30% since 1980 compared to the average earnings of all other prime-age workers. Their weekly earnings have declined 17%, while those of college-educated men rose by 20%, adjusting for inflation. That earnings loss has caused a decline in their social status, prompting them to walk away from work entirely, Pinghui Wu, the author of the study, wrote.
> "For many workers, a job not only offers financial security, it also affirms their status, which is tied to their position relative to their age peers and many social outcomes," Wu wrote.
> The study found that the decline in earnings for non-college-educated men over the last four decades has increased their likelihood of leaving the labor force by nearly half a percentage point. That also accounts for 44% of the increase in their exit rate.
> Even though the pattern of men withdrawing from the labor force dates back several years, it has been more pronounced in recent years, as a number of men who left the workforce during the pandemic chose not to return.
> Nearly 89.7% of men between 35 to 44 years were looking for jobs or already working as of November. That's down from 90.9% before the pandemic, according to the New York Times.
> Younger white men in particular were more likely to leave when their expected wages fell relative to their more educated peers, according to the Fed study. Unlike men, women have not seen the same level of decline in their wages based on education. That group has seen a 32% increase in weekly earnings, irrespective of their educational qualifications.

Essentially, because white men and other men are supposedly seeing their wages drop they're leaving the workforce more often. This seems like garbage post-hoc analysis.

For as much as many people and companies say that you shouldn't discuss pay, there's not a lot of pay discussing going on for the most part. And even when someone hears about pay being discussed they're not going to rage-quit their job because someone makes more than them. They're just going to update their resume and apply for a different job or ask for a raise.

What is more likely is that failure to launch is increasing. One of the men I know is in his mid 30s and has basically given up. He's working part time if at all and just living at his parents house after he couldn't really find much job prospects after college.

I suspect this is the case with most of the statistics. They only look at the general aggregate and it seems like men are dropping out as wages are dropping. However, failure to launch has less to do with wages but the detonation of various college degrees that promised to have certain job prospects where there are few — AKA the "liberal arts" degrees in gender studies and whatever as opposed to STEM. Even STEM isn't what it once was where the only useful science degrees are the ones that are related to engineering such as petroleum or chemical engineering. Biology and other science degrees are virtually worthless except as a stepping stone to professional degrees like medical doctors, nursing, and so on.

A solid job but underpaid men are still going to take it. This can be easily improved upon. But the total loss of job prospects with no way out leads men into a downward spiral of hopelessness. You see this all throughout the rust belt and cities where steel and other manufacturing jobs basically tanked.

5 years later: marriage rates and spinsterhood projections

January 30, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

About 5 years ago I posted on Marriage rates and end game spinster predictions. In that article I estimated approximately:

> 1. 9-14% "unwanted spinsterhood" — about 1 in 10 women
> 2. 19-24% "unwanted cohabitation and unwanted spinsterhood" — about 2 in 10 women

IFStudies has a blog about: 1-in-4 projecting childlessness among today's young women.

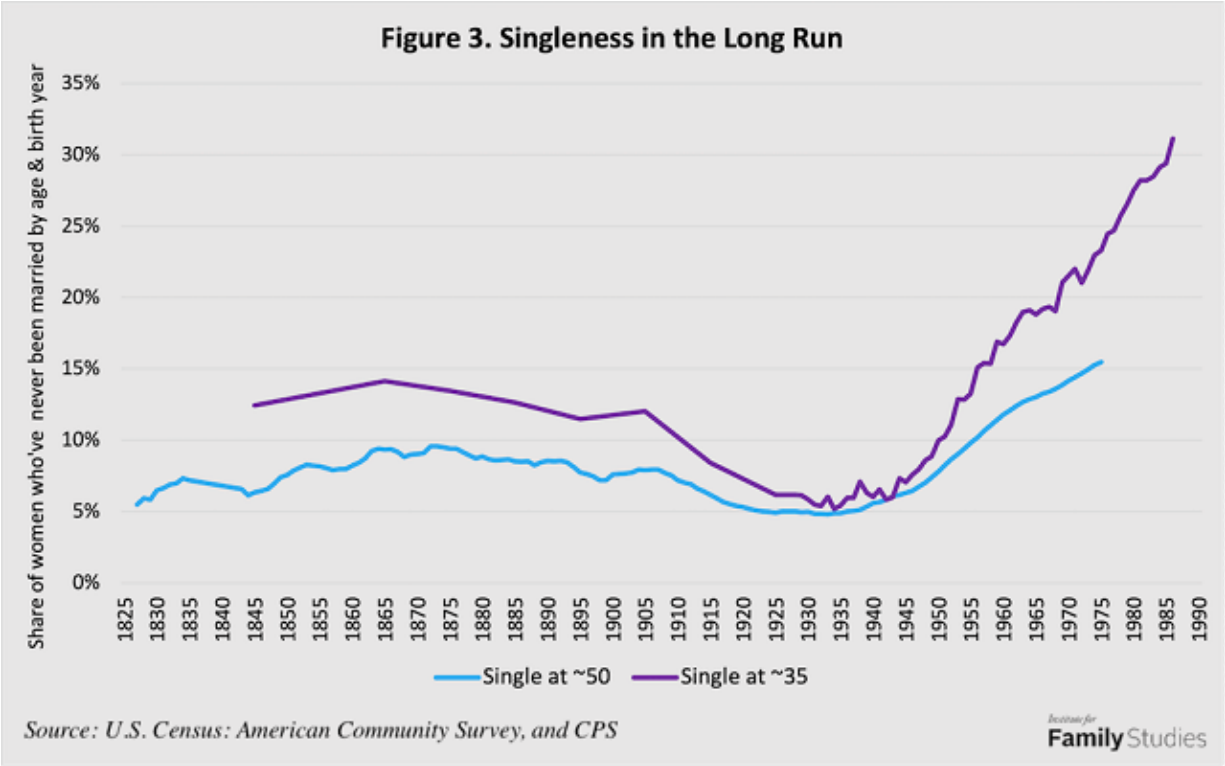

Image is from the above link.

Already over 30% of women are single at 35 years old, and only 15% are single at 50 years old. I believe this includes cohabitation data as well. My data I was working with in the other post was only up to age 44-45ish (same data as Dalrock), so going up to 50 provides even a better snapshot of what is going on. Currently 15% of women are single at 50% and that appears on the rise.

They estimate it's going to be about 25% in the long run, or approximately on the upper bounds of what I estimated. However, that's just singleness and doesn't necessarily include unwanted cohabitation. Therefore, the number of women that are unhappy is likely about 10% larger than that which would place that around 35%.

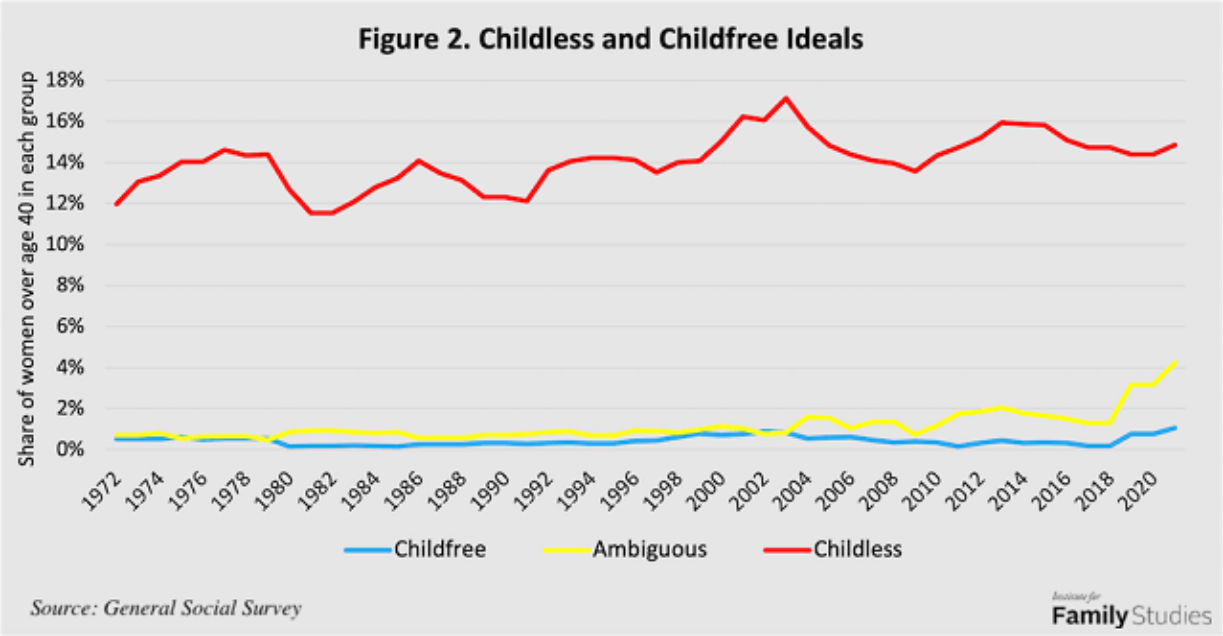

Image is also from the above link.

Additionally, the try to control for those with “child free” ideals.

> About 1% of women over the age of 40 are “childfree,” meaning they don’t have kids and they report having a zero-child ideal (or believe it’s not ideal to have children). An additional 2-4% are ambiguous; they might be childfree or childless. But even if those two groups are added together, yielding maybe 5% of women being childfree, about 15% of women over 40 in the GSS report having no children, yet having a fertility ideal higher than zero. These women are childless. In other words, even today, about 75% of women without children who are past their reproductive years are properly described as childless, not childfree.

Grouping the ambiguous with the childfree is being charitable. Instead of about 75% of the childless women, it’s likely to be closer to 80-90% or so are childless.

In another analysis, I talked about how it is likely obesity that is driving the decline in marriage.

Currently,

- 15% of women are childless.
- 34% of women have children out of wedlock (40% out of wedlock * 85% women with children).
- 51% of women have children in marriage

Both childless and out of wedlock births are increasing, so it’s possible that we’ll ultimately see only 30-40% or less children being born in wedlock.

This makes it all the more imperative to have good father figures, mentors, and discipleship programs from Churches. Lots of kids are going to be coming from broken families, and lots of men and women are going to be single.

Discussing sexual past history with women

February 1, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in with some questions.

> Recently started going to a new Church which seems promising…
> Anyway, in one of your posts you talk about vetting a wife and how you would expect her to confess her sexual history. You mention being able to boldly confess your own past sins as well. I'm quite sure this church would advise a similar exchange for anyone pursuing marriage. My question is how should a man conduct himself in confessing sin to a woman, or even a fellow man, such as a pastor or accountability partner? I've felt convicted to go to someone and open up about my struggle, and I want to be prepared to have The Talk with a possible spouse.
> Is it wrong to want to be stoic? Not have a tearful breakdown in front of a woman, but also be reserved in sharing secret sin with a brother?
> I've struggled with porn use throughout my life. Recently I've been successful in cutting it out of my life. This has led to me accomplishing goals and getting the ball rolling on several more. I'm on a hot streak (for me at least). But I know this will need to be brought up in future relationships. I can't lie about it. And I figure I shouldn't wait to only confess to a potential wife. I need tips on confessing, because I've only shared this with a few close friends (non-Christian) and you. What is the "masculine" way to confess sin? How many details do you share (is the less said the better)? If you can give me any help with this it would be much appreciated.

If you're newer here, I have a ton of posts in the Actionable Steps to Finding a Wife section. Some of these include the following ones on what I've written of my own experiences.

- My 5 step process to maturity in relationships
- A detailed timeline and how-to guide on the process of finding a wife
- Discussing sex and virginity with a potential spouse is important
- Questions and topics to learn about your prospective spouse

There are multiple questions here to go through, so let's address them in order.

> My question is how should a man conduct himself in confessing sin to a woman, or even a fellow man, such as a pastor or accountability partner? I've felt convicted to go to someone and open up about my struggle, and I want to be prepared to have The Talk with a possible spouse.

Generally speaking, with women The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest part 2 rings true. Vulnerability can be a good thing with women as it exposes that you're human and not perfect, but usually it should be done in a masculine way. In this respect, it is usually a good thing to be stoic and objective about it.

If a man is getting all weepy and teary the vast majority of women are going to find it a turn off and unattractive. How can they trust a man who breaks down when he shares his faults or makes a mistake? That type of man is going to cave if being put up to tough situations in the future where he may have to protect her.

With other men that tends to boil down on how close you are with them. If they're very close brothers you can get as emotional as you want. I am generally not built that way personally, but I've had friends who were. If I do get emotional about something I tend to take it directly to God. But either way is not wrong.

> I've struggled with porn use throughout my life. Recently I've been successful in cutting it out of my life. This has led to me accomplishing goals and getting the ball rolling on several more. I'm on a hot streak (for me at least). But I know this will need to be brought up in future relationships. I can't lie about it. And I figure I shouldn't wait to only confess to a potential wife. I need tips on confessing, because I've only shared this with a few close friends (non-Christian) and you. What is the "masculine" way to confess sin? How many details do you share (is the less said the better)? If you can give me any help with this it would be much appreciated.

Most of the time the best way to approach these situations is the masculine way: Here's what happened. Here's what I did to fix it or move on from it.

I told my wife I used to watch a ton of porn. I didn't think it was an addiction but in retrospect it was. However, since actually experiencing the gospel for real, being baptized, and starting to walk the path of being a disciple of Christ, my desire for things of the flesh went down over time and porn trickled from being a daily thing to weekly to monthly, and then occasionally like a few times a year at the point I told her. Of course I had to also be disciplined and not do it as temptation does not go away like that either. If you have an accountability partner all the better too and you can mention that.

Basically, it comes down to: "I struggled with this in the past, and by God's grace I've been conquering it." With additional help such as accountability if you also had that.

In the case of talking about it, generally the less details the better as well. Just an overall summary is usually good enough. Same with discussion of any other sexual history with women, if she wants to know. My wife didn't really want to know, so it wasn't a big deal but some women do. Sometimes you can discern if it's something that you should reveal or if it's more of a trick question like "do these pants make me look fat" in which case you should warn her several times. Details on sensitive topics are like gossip — it tends to get the juices flowing and on these particular topics it's generally in a negative manner.

The essence of the gospel is that we are all sinners in need of a Savior and that He has helped us conquer our flesh. This is a good thing. If a woman starts to be less attracted to you for past failings then just move on. If she's unattracted and upset with you for failing, then she’s definitely going to see you at times when you fail in marriage and it’s going to be doomed from the start. You don’t want this type of noose hanging around your neck, just as you don’t want to marry a woman who is constantly disrespectful. Similarly, a woman holding past sins against you.

This isn’t to say a woman should be perfect or anything. You can try to lead and admonish for her if she is not acting Christ-like in any way, but if she is resistant toward your leading that is another red flag.

In most cases, at least nowadays, women will have some sort of sexual history to confess as well. Heck, even many women today have watched porn and/or are addicted to some form of it. So it’s not like this is something that only men deal with. At the end of the day, if a woman is rejecting a man for past porn, it’s highly unlikely she’s going to find a marriage partner who hasn’t seen any.

Discussing sexual past history with women Part 2

February 3, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The previous post on Discussing sexual past history with women was about how to talk about past sexual sin. This one is on things to look for when a woman confesses her past to you.

The commenter writes:

> I'm also wondering, what should a woman's attitude be in confessing her sin? What should a man look for when she confesses? Should a man resist the urge to fish for details as well?

There's several things you want to look for here.

- Genuine contrition. The modern liberal feminist women are proud about their past sexual history. A Christian should be ashamed about theirs, much like Paul was about his prior persecution and murder of Christians. In fact, it made Paul work all the harder than the disciples since he had 'more to be forgiven for.'
- Beware the woman who looks fondly remembering past sin. Similar to the above, but you can generally tell this from her body language, facial expressions, and so on, especially if she was with someone she found to be a 'Chad' or very attractive in the past. You don't want to be plan B (or plan C, D, E, F, etc.).
- A distinct pattern of good behavior with no 'continual mistakes.' I've said before on this blog that I'd rather be with a woman who has had sex prior to becoming a Christian and has been celibate since her conversion than with a "Christian" virgin who has done everything but sex while still being a Christian. One shows they understand the gravity of their faith and the other is flirting with sin.
- Additionally, just an overall pattern of fruit of the Spirit and maturity in Christ especially in regard to discussing sensitive. If a woman is getting upset about you asking then that tends to be a bad sign. The past is one of best predictors of future behavior, and it's important to know what you are going to be dealing with even if things in the past have changed since becoming a Christian. If a woman is consistently dismissive, changing topics, and obfuscating that right there shows a lack of respect for you as a man who wants to talk about important things and shows she probably has something to hide or insecurities.

Should a man resist the urge to fish for details?

This is something every man must discern for themselves. Will they get more upset the more they know, especially if she has some things in her past? Some men will, but some men won't. Will it do something irreparable to the relationship to know that? Is it that important to know specific details? Sure, knowing if she had sex with some men in the past is important, but you don't necessarily need to know the details about what positions they did or anything.

What may be important is potential triggers that got her into that situation — drinking, bad persuasion from ‘friends,’ and other things like that. Can give more of a background on how she is influenced in certain situations.

> I think it was one of the writers at Sigma Frame who mentioned that his wife enjoys rough sex, including slapping. How in the world does a couple, let alone a Christian couple , come to discover this kind of compatibility? Before or after getting married?
> If before, how do you go about communicating this sort of thing to your girlfriend in a Godly way (if that’s possible). If after, what happens if you reveal a sexual desire to a wife and it scares her or disgusts her? Especially if you had confessed to past porn use. She could play that card “you learned that from porn, no way, what’s wrong with you,” etc.
> I’m sympathetic to the woman’s perspective here. It’s also entirely possible a wife might want to try something that the husband would hate or that would give him pause as to his wife’s feelings for him. There’s the possibility that the desire for a particular fetish or sex act might come from a place of trauma as well, man or woman.
> I don’t know if the biblical principle of not denying sex to one another would apply here. It seems a stretch to say “sorry honey, the Bible says you have to do that for me, our bodies belong to each other.” To be clear, vanilla sex can be passionate and fulfilling. I’m not talking about a wife being totally lifeless in the bedroom, I’m wondering if a less adventurous wife is something that just has to be dealt with (with love and understanding).

The 1 Corinthians 7 conversation doesn’t need to happen early, but it should happen sometime mid-to late relationship and definitely before engagement. The sexual preferences conversation usually should happen around late-relationship prior to engagement or during engagement.

Presumably by engagement you trust her since you want her to become your wife, so I tend to prefer pre-engagement but usually late relationship as if she wanted only vanilla sex and you wanted more then that could be a big issue.

Like the study I’ve referenced before, most women actually prefer rough sex. Hard and fast over slow and intimate. This is clearly also seen in most of women’s porn — 50 Shades where the charming, muscular, dominant, successful leader ravishes the woman. Yes, this even includes virgins. Maybe not wedding night, but usually after. The exceptions are usually sexual trauma (e.g. rape, molestation, etc.) in past history which is important to find out.

In regard to figuring these things out, the obvious is talking. But that doesn’t always reveal everything. While some couples don’t kiss until marriage, most do including Christians. You can generally see some things in regard to this if you pull her in to ‘take’ a kiss usually the response is positive then she will tend to like the ‘ravishing’ nature of a man being dominant in the bedroom.

In some sex talks during engagement you can just get a list of different kinks and go through them together. See what the other wants to try, is intrigued by, or definitely doesn't want to do. Throw it out as a no judgement zone. In most cases, if you think one is particularly sensitive such as some form of slapping (whether that's on the butt, or other places), you can throw it out as an 'intrigued by' and not a 'want to try' and gauge her reaction.

I'm not saying my marriage is perfect or anything like that but we've generally been open to trying out things the other wants to do. You'd hopefully expect that from both Christian men and women, but it's true that many can have hangups for whatever reason. Sometimes discussing the hangups and understanding where they come from (such as parents or Church) can help resolve them too, but trauma is harder and may need counseling.

Overall, though, it probably depends a lot on case-by-case scenarios. Not everything always works out perfectly, but if you can find a wife willing to do things where you are happy enough and not deny you much if ever then you are in a better spot than the vast majority of marriages.

Rules to love/live by were shaped by masculinity, but without masculinity they become garbage

February 7, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

In the lie of romantic love, Jack points out the following:

Rules that men were told to love by:

> - "Good" Men should be "nice" to women.
> - "Good" Women are attracted to "nice" men.
> - Men believed that Women were kindhearted, loving, and romantic by nature.
> - Chivalry and preening consideration for women's wants and needs was the polite norm.
> - Female hypoagenticity was presumed and fully acceptable.
> - Male hyperagenticity was proof of a man's love and care for a woman.
> - The Feminine Mystique — Woman were seen to be mysterious and of a higher spiritual conscientiousness.
> - Men should maintain a positive attitude towards women and dating, even when nothing was going right.
> - Men were to presume that women had positive motivations, even when there wasn't any evidence of such.
> - Men were to gracefully assume that women were caught in difficult or unjust circumstances whenever they displayed bad behavior.
> - Men were expected to "respect women", which basically meant to tiptoe around her Feeelz. (This is different from men's understanding of respect and was often misunderstood and misapplied.)

Ye Olde Lie was Once True

In some respects, the older generations (Greatests, Silents, and early Boomers) were probably not lying to us in teaching these things. Several decades ago (early half of the 20th century and continuing longer in Christian circles) this approach probably worked. A man who acted in this manner was distinguishing himself as one who would be a fine, loyal, and caring husband. Marriage minded women could then pick these men out from the crowd and move forward towards marriage. But after the sexual apocalypse, this became a recipe for disaster. "Nice" men who were clueless about the shifts in the SMP and continued to act in this manner clearly distinguished themselves as men who were explicitly marriage minded, just as before, but now this meant something completely different. It meant they could not compete with Alpha Chad in the back seat of a > Buick. Thus, such men summarily rejected themselves from the gene pool.

Some of this is a holdover from general Judeo-Christian ethics, but some of it is from the notion of chivalry. I think, also, the big thing that we are leaving out is there was practically a war every 10-20 years from the 1700s onward.

1. American Revolution
2. War of 1812
3. Indian wars
4. Mexican war
5. Civil War
6. Spanish-American war
7. WWI
8. WWII
9. Korean War
10. Vietnam War
11. Desert storm
12. War of terror (Afghan, etc.)

The thing is that a large minority if not a majority of the population was involved in these wars of some sorts at least up until the Korean/Vietnam wars, but only a small portion has been since Desert Storm.

Men are not as violent and with feminism and the demonization of masculinity men are actually more feminine than ever. A lot of the “Rules men are to love by” are there to soften overly violent men who already have a strong foundation of masculinity (so to speak) from encountering actual war, fighting, and dying.

In the same way, chivalry while anti-Christian in terms of it being Queen-Knight role inversion, was in a way aimed at softening the knights because they were accustomed to fighting and dying for their lands in Europe.

Women in general were attracted to most of these men, but they were told to pick the “nice” men because those that could reign in their violent side and not do it toward women would be the ones who would be good husbands and fathers rather than wife beaters.

However, being “nice” and “romantic” without the foundation of masculinity, toughness, courage, and all other masculine traits that are developed from war or making your own way in the world makes one wholly unattractive rather than the attractive man with kindness.

Of course, the aspects of supplicating, respecting, and otherwise informally taking the woman’s role in the relationship were always unattractive regardless of it a man is attractive. However, that’s because of the inversion of roles from chivalry and other sources which sound good but aren’t the way God created man and woman.

To be clear: I’m not advocating for any of these rules to live by. Some are straight heresy. But others may have been effective as general heuristics for men living and shaped by different times.

Biblical masculinity is the same regardless of time though, and what men should be striving for.

Help versus approval and the complementarian bait and switch

February 11, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is one distinctions that husbands often fall into the other.

As we know, God's created man and woman in the beginning. Woman was meant to be man's helper in marriage. This is affirmed in the rest of the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities with Paul outlining the headship-submission and love-respect that Christ has for the Church in the New Creation in Christ.

It is one thing to ask for advice or an opinion on a certain situation and take that into consideration, and ti is another thing to loo for a woman's approval on a topic. The former falls in line with leadership and decision making that goes with it and the wife as your helper. The latter is basically an inversion of the roles.

For instance, in the military someone a lieutenant could bring a plan to his captain for approval. This would be the inferior bringing it up to a superior and having the superior make the decision on if it was good to go or not. Similarly, this could be like someone working under a boss at work coming up with a plan of action and asking the boss to approve it. On the other hand, it's the captain's job or the boss's job to delegate the tasks and ask for advice and lead the group. If she's looking for approval rather than help, then that's going to invert the roles.

It's very easy for husbands to fall into the trap of instead of asking for help from their wife to look for their wife for approval. This is the complementarians bait-and-switch as well. Because agreement is godliness to them, if the husband is making the plans and decisions he must get his wife's agreement for it to be good and godly. This is no different than an inferior bringing a plan to the superior for approval.

Generally, a leader needs a mission and should set the terms of the mission. That way the help of the helper can be readily acknowledged and not turned into nagging or approval issues. Hence, why mission has always been one of the themes of the Christian walk as well as in marriage.

The main event for married men

February 15, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been meaning to get this out.

Edit: Apologies, Jack said it was an anonymous reading sharing their story.

Jack shared ~~his~~ an anonymous reader's story with his ex-wife a while ago on her behavior near the end of the marriage.

> Seven months after that revealing disclosure, she began a 4-day assault of verbal and physical attacks. It was as bad as it had ever been. My description here grossly understates the intensity and the confrontational nature of her approach with me. It is hard to capture in writing the tone of contempt and hate. It is not a demeanor one presents to those they love. It is not an approach of seeking understanding, let alone seeking reconciliation. She persisted intensely for four days. I told her that if she wants to divorce me, to go ahead — we would each take half. She responded with fury, stating that she was going to take EVERYTHING. A couple days later, when she cooled down, I told her she could have everything if that's what is important to her. I'd rather live in a cardboard box than with her abuse.
> "A day later she came on to give me a kiss in the kitchen. It was a kiss that I don't recall her ever giving. It happened a couple times throughout the day. Later she told me that our kissing got her wet. This is so far beyond what she had ever said in terms of coming on to me in our 30 years of marriage. When I went to bed that evening, she was wearing a nighty and a thong and asserted herself like she hadn't done in at least 15 years. This went on four or five times more for the next five or six days.
> Then it all ended.
> It confirmed what I already knew, that she used sex to either get what she wants or to claw me back into the relationship. It was straight manipulation. After the "make me wet" stuff, my thoughts were, "So she had this in her all throughout our marriage, but she held it back by her own will." Where did this idea ("You make me wet!") come from within her? From within this woman who had presented herself to me for 30 years as a somewhat prudish Christian woman; who called me a pervert for wanting sex with her on a regular basis. Suddenly this? What I would have warmly welcomed at any other time in the past became something tainted. Where did it come from? Did she recall it from her past relationships years ago before we met? I had never heard it from her before."

This strikes me more as "The Main Event" which occurs frequently in Married Red Pill (MRP) on reddit. In other words, there was already some level of dysfunction in the marriage — whether it's inverted roles or whatever — and then the powerful display of backbone of the husband leading happens and drastically changes the attitude of the wife for a bit.

It’s pretty long, and I didn’t include the extra bullet points so if you want to get the full story and summary you can click on the link.

> My Main Event came this July. I had been introducing RP changes since around March. I had read NMMNG a couple years ago and laid a small foundation of boundaries at the time, but the major changes came after the rest of the RP thought was introduced to me. In a casual conversation one afternoon, she threw down some BS request, and I refused. Long story short, she hit the roof, left the house (dinner half-cooked, kids hungry, etc, etc), and moved her stuff into the guest room when she returned hours later.
> In hindsight, I probably could have avoided the fight if I had seen the comfort test underlying the BS request, and responded to it instead of the request. That said, her reaction went completely nuclear, and it seems that this had been brewing for a while. I figure she was poking the bear looking for a fight, and if I got that one right, it was just a matter of time before this blew up over some other irrelevant topic. She was just about to get her period (not a coincidence), and I was already preparing myself for one of our typical tough weeks.
> For three days she went rolling in the bat guano. Completely off the deep end. I held frame as best as I could. I probably talked with her too much, and I let my frustration show a couple times, but I held the line that I would not be ordered around and I would not tolerate her emotional outbursts. Mind you, when I said she was crazy, I’m not exaggerating. She accused me of everything she could think of, no matter how cruel or detached from reality. Some good examples include accusing me of conspiring with her mother to take away the kids, having a girlfriend on the side, not responding to her so that I could work with a lawyer on divorce papers. Obviously, none of these were true. She even tried to shame me for “letting” her stay in the guest room knowing that she had more stuff and that I was being controlling by not offering to switch with her. Dark days.
> After around three days, she calmed down and said she’d like to discuss what was bothering her. We set up a time after the kids were asleep. She calmly laid out her concerns, dealing with the changes that had taken place, she felt that I wasn’t being empathetic enough, and that she felt powerless because I “held all the cards” (I make the money and when push comes to shove she knows that I’d be fine on my own). She also expressed that she didn’t know where these changes (the new me) were going.
> Since then, after months of contemplation, I’ve boiled her concerns down to the following:
> - She was pissed about the loss of her comfortable marriage to a guy that just gave, did everything she asked, and asked nothing in return.

- There was the big dread that she realized she might lose me.
- Once she was able to calm down, she started to realize that the hamster was way out of line and she was embarrassed by it.

At the time, I just tried to reassure her that my main commitment still resides with the family (not her specifically, but always with the kids first), and that I have come to realize that I have not been getting from the marriage what I needed. When she brought up that I seem like I'd be happier by myself, I didn't refute it.

*While I was kind and supportive of her feelings, delivered calmly, I didn't want to let her off the hook, apologize profusely for her sadness, or give her any indication that things were going back to the way they were before. I also told her that her emotional outburst was complete unacceptable, no matter how upset she was, but that she was always welcome to bring concerns to me in a respectful manner. *

Once she felt heard (it took a few hours), something incredible happened. I gave her a hug and a kiss on the forehead (a powerful paternal gesture, I might add in passing), and she buried herself in my arms. It was very loving and submissive, and I was a little shocked.

Things were never the same after this.

At this point, I felt it was appropriate to invite her back to the bedroom. Once we finally made it to bed, she came over and snuggled in to me and started escalating. It had always confused me how women will do this after a fight, but now with my RP perspective, it makes perfect sense. We had enthusiastic sex that night and the next morning before work, and continued to have sex almost every day for the next three weeks (the timeframe is not coincidence). This had never happened – not when we first started dating, not during our honeymoon, never.

She later admitted to me that despite being pissed, she was also incredibly turned on by my dominant stance during our cold war.

The Three Week Afterglow

So, things were great for three weeks. The mood around the house was a lot more positive, we worked well together, and we had much more fun around each other.

It was easy to get complacent. Things were going great, she got it! She was going out of her way to make me happy, and it was a huge difference. It's important at this stage to keep two things in mind: this won't last for ever, and she will go back to her old ways when she gets comfortable again. Stay vigilant. Remember, she hasn't changed, she's still like that. She's just in a little attraction bubble.

Secretly, she was recollecting her strength and starting to pick out the little issues that she would use against me. There is still some fear, uncertainty and doubt about this new way of things around the house, and she will test it. Since things were going so well, I let the little things go. She'd give me an occasional order instead of a request. She'd start throwing little tantrums about the kids or things that need to get done around the house. I would just ignore them instead of more proactive responses to nip them in the bud (in fact I'm still struggling with this). None of them escalated, so I didn't think anything more of it.

The Backlash

But then Aunt Flo comes knocking again. The frustration with kids and house chores come back, then the moods, then the cramps, headaches, and before you know it, the box of tampons are on the counter. In my case, things were still in pretty good shape going into the cycle. They changed quickly. As she became more uncomfortable and frustrated, she got back into the mode of avoiding or defending my advances. She became noticably less playful and Since we stopped having sex for a few days, the attraction momentum trailed off.

Almost overnight, we seemed to go right back to our old ways. My natural reaction was to get discouraged, give up, and resign myself to the conclusion that this was just the way is was going to be. I lost any incentive to make it work, and turned my attention to just living my life while minimizing the wreckage of my home life.

The True Rebuild

Once this cleared, months of a long slow slog through the crap have passed now. The difference was that we had hit a tipping point and she now knew the New World Order, and her only choice was to be on board or move on. Things are improving slowly. She's starting to truly internalize that I am a new man, that it is good for her, that she actually prefers her new role and is more comfortable there. She of course unconsciously tests me, and will throw unbelievable crap at me to see how (or if) I react.

The key has been the overriding mindset of outcome independence and confidence in my own direction. If she doesn't want to be part of it, then that's her issue.

As a status indicator, I came back this last Monday night from a business trip, after the kids were in bed, to find her in the kitchen, lingerie'd up, baking me a pizza. She had been teasing me with texts all afternoon: "please hurry home, I've really missed you", etc. She planted a huge kiss on me and dragged me straight to bed while the pizza cooked, followed by serving me a late dinner in the bath and another romp in the sheets. In all, 4 enthusiastic times in the next 24 hours. Again, that had never happened in our 16 years together. After one of our sessions, she told me she realized while I was gone that our marriage meant > everything to her and that she had not done enough to try to make me happy. She felt bad about the years of neglect.

> A little absence is golden. It also doesn't hurt that she knew I had a cute, younger, recently divorced co-worker who works for me along on the trip. Her hamster was imagining long company-paid dinners and drinks.

Essentially, the point is that if a man is making whole scale changes to his life to improve it then that tends to create dread in his wife. This usually builds up into a culmination of a single event or multiple events where the dynamic can flip on it's head for a while.

In particular with Jack's example is flipping the script on her expectations. That's the stuff women get high off of. Men that want them but they don't need them. The aloof mysterious independent man that they don't understand. Clearly, she had not been expecting the aloof manner of you just responding calmly that "you don't care if she takes everything and that you'd rather live with nothing than her abuse." This basically put her in her place, and made her take a hard look at her actions.

However, over the course of the next 6+ days whatever pattern Jack was in started to reassert itself and so did her sex drive tanking. I don't know how "blue pilled" Jack was before then but falling back into those ways would definitely destroy what happened there.

If Jack had known how to act in an RP manner after "The Main Event" and had continued being a strong, confident, charismatic leader that was able to put her in her place, then it's usually likely that she probably would have mostly fallen in line. However, this does happen and obviously sometimes women eventually choose to leave. Her total sanctification might be in question. If she had continued to follow then you could have worked on her sanctification.

Essentially, both of these scenarios require a man starting to actively take responsibility for his part in the relationship or marriage and work on becoming excellent in all areas of life — spiritual, physical, emotional, mental, etc. Women will go from a position of potential inversion of the roles in the relationship to a place of insecurity because the husband is becoming a lot more attractive. She doesn't know where she stands anymore in his eyes, and that can be a disconcerting prospect. Hence, an emotional response of dread and fear of what is happening.

This can be flipped and turned into the sanctification of the wife if properly used with the husband leading the way and the wife starting to follow. However, men who don't know what they are doing and how it happened will often have confusion issues, or if a wife is too far disinterested and already wants out it's possible she may just leave. Either scenario is fine as you can't control the other person, but you can still serve God despite whatever happens. And, as it says in Proverbs — Better to live on a corner of the roof than share a house with a quarrelsome wife — it may be better to live without her anyway so you can focus fully on serving God.

female SMV and male avoidance

February 21, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Running behind here, but RPA posted on Why are attractive women more dangerous to beta men than their less attractive friends?

> Men are largely unaware of this temptation when confronted with shimmering beauty, and so the risk goes under men's radar. Thus, high SMV women are dangerous to men because they appeal to men's primal instinct which shuts down the prefrontal cortex of sound reason.
> In addition to this temporary insanity, it's also easer for men to get drawn into a high SMV woman's frame, especially when there is a significant SMV disparity, and since women have no respect for non-Tingle inducing men, once she's given the power of laying the frame, she'll take him to the cleaners just for the fun of it (re. Jack's comment).
> Tying this back to risk, the hot chicklet with the ugly character is potentially a huge risk. If a man does not keep his head on straight and analyze the risk well, he's stuck with all the misery she causes. He's the Proverbs 21 husband.
> Hence we have the wisdom of the bible telling us that inner beauty matters a whole heck of a lot because (1) most of married life is lived after the looks fade, and (2) this advice is necessary to help keep men level headed in the heat of temptation. The warning for men then is to not let a vixen's youth and beauty cause the rational analyzer to get glitchy in a way that it would not with a less attractive woman.

One of the interesting phenomena that Jack didn't cover here is the natural tendency that some (or many?) men have to avoid beautiful women. I distinctly remember I had this all throughout high school and college. Not sure why this the case, but I think it's fairly prevalent.

Basically, if I saw a beautiful woman my natural tendency was to:

- Avert my gaze
- Look down
- Try to avoid contact

This is something that when men or women meet another man or woman like this, it's a natural humility/inferiority thing. I believe this is somewhat where the origination of the "out of your league" sentiment comes in, though the other part of that particular sentiment is other people telling a man or woman that the another woman or man is out of their league because of perceived SMV differences.

This made my life fairly difficult in the past, but with proper conditioning men are able to get past it. You basically need to condition yourself so you don't avert your gaze, don't look down, make solid eye contact, and are able to talk, communication, and lead a woman who is is attractive to you.

I also wonder if this is potentially a natural phenomena. I'm probably the Normie range as far as SMV goes (though I've known some women who would've said sub5, and maybe a couple Chad — normal distribution around average/10). It would make sense at least in the context of assorted mating for men not to overcome this phenomena and pair off with their general range of partners who of the same SMV attractiveness as it happened a lot in the past. There would be a natural deterrent for a man with this psychological state to avoid trying to ask out women that are perceived to be above his league.

Even then as Jack notes, a man must also overcome the other natural instincts to put an attractive woman on a pedestal as well and have the inverted roles happen to him.

I've still occasionally encountered this as I've gotten older even after all of the deconditioning. I'd be interested to know if this is a somewhat universal phenomena in men or if it's just some sort of feature or glitch with others.

It seems there are a lot of potential things going against men in this situation them to be successful in leading a potential relationship or marriage with an attractive woman. Hence, why these are probably skills that should be taught as a boy becomes a man rather than trying to learn them later in life.

Depedastalizing sex

February 27, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There's lots of different opinions on this from the Christian side of things.

In general, having lived and gotten married in today's SMP, I think there are several things that are important to understand from the Christian view.

What I practiced and counsel young men is mastery.

- There's many times in marriage when you may not be having sex for whatever reason. Birth of a child, illness, stress, actual life busy-ness, etc. Obviously, and hopefully you've led your wife into a discussion about sex not denying one another and that doesn't happen, but these periods can occur for periods of time. If one does have mastery over oneself, it's easy to fall into temptation during these times.
- Contentment. Prior to meeting my future wife, I came to a place with God where I was content being single my entire life, even if meant struggling with my sexual urges until death. Probably not everyone can fully come to that place of contentment in Christ, but that is something you want to strive for regardless. This state has been very effective in being able to stay objective in leading marriage without being otherwise tempted to fall into patterns of inverse relationship roles or other temptations.
- Destroying the habit of porn or other vices in regard to self control and mastery over oneself. It you cannot control your impulses, adding another flawed human (women) to the mix is going to lead toward a multiplication of destructive tendencies.

Having sex is not needed nor is it morally acceptable. Sure, it may give some confidence at having sex, but it's similar in nature to faux confidence. One cannot build a strong foundation on sin.

As I've reiterated before, it has been my experience with true Christian women that the Reciprocal Rule generally applies. The usual analogy I use is going dutch. Pretty common to split the bill the first date in the secular world now. However, if you try to do that with Christian women the vast majority of them are not going to give you a second date. They still expect you to be a provider.

Likewise, most true Christian women who value their own chastity or purity are going to be looking for something similar in men. This is a preference — meaning neither attractive or unattractive. While it's not immutable (e.g. they'd probably still go for "Christian" Brad Pitt or Chris Adams who probably have had sex with many women in their past), many true Christian women prefer low partner or no partners in their men.

This also shows that the most important traits are still sexual attraction for women — PSALMs (power, status, athleticism, looks, money) and masculinity — and most of these are built on excellence and mastery in all parts of life. Mission for Christ is paramount, and this is shown through increasing spiritual, physical, emotional, and mental excellence. Also in the various aspects you apply them in such as job/career, being molded into a disciple and eventually discipler of others in Christ, being involved in Church and growing to be a leader in certain areas/positions, building up strong male friendships and iron sharpening iron, etc.

Building excellence in all of these areas means you'll be much more prepared for the leadership role of marriage. Often first you have to be a leader of one (yourself), and this prepares you for that role. It's often the conventionally attractive men who do not have to work for it that have issues in marriage because they have not built the strong foundation first. They're easily able to attract women for relationships and marriage, but often their relationships or marriages fall on hard times and fail. The Church is complicit with this too. Similar to the notion that many of the best coaches are the ones who have to grind for every ounce of sports ability, but the naturally gifted ones tend to be bad coaches because they've always gotten by on their gifts.

To summarize:

- Mission for God is paramount. This has always been the core of what Christian men need to do. The excellence in this leads towards building attractive traits — PSALM and masculinity — which makes you more attractive to women by not even striving for it.
- Mastery, contentment, and destroying bad habits are important to not only depedastalize sex, but align yourself to practice the fruit of the Spirit (self control, etc.) and not let those things control you.
- Make sure you don't use secularized promiscuous women as the indicator for what all women want. Yes, AWALT (all women are like that) in terms of wanting sexual attraction (PSALM and masculinity), but sex or no sex is a preference that is aligned with what a woman values. Promiscuous women value hedonism, so they want an experienced man. True Christian women will tend to prefer low to no partner count or simply don't care as long as he's a Christian now. If you encounter one that prefers men with high partner count, then I'd question her values toward chastity and purity.

Sex is a large part of marriage, but the desire for sex must be mastered like any other desire lest it run out of control.

Constraining sexual attraction

March 1, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in:

> I want to ask regarding the subject of Hypergamy. Is it possible that a woman's Hypergamy can be detrimental to their pursuit of marriage? Can women be too hypergamous for their own good? For example, if a woman really wants a husband and states that she wants to be in a job that makes six figures. She mentioned that she still wants someone to make more money than her and wouldn't settle for less. What would be your response to that kind of situation?

Yes, of course. Hypergamy itself is a good thing as that's how God created women. However, it can be easily twisted into a bad thing.

The Bible has constant warnings to men about the traps and pitfalls of beauty — what is sexually attractive to men. Beauty in women without godliness, character, and the fruit of the Spirit is often wayward leading to things like prostitution and the grave as the Bible puts it often in Proverbs. Solomon was led astray to foreign gods. Although we don't worship literal foreign gods nowadays, our society's foreign gods are pre-marital sex, hedonism, porn, chasing / idolizing / pedestalizing sex and many others.

Similarly, hypergamy was created to be good by God. It's natural for a woman want to marry up and therefore respect her husband. However, hypergamy is easily twisted. Women pursue their hypergamy — what is sexually attractive to women — at the expense of similar traits that men can go awry with beauty such as godliness, character, fruit of the Spirit, and so on. This is why you have women chasing after PSALM – power, status, athleticism, looks, money – at the expense of morality.

You see this all the time. Women chasing after and cheating with professional athletes, Hollywood stars, politicians, and even some women send love letters to mass murders for the power and status. They turn down the so-called 80% of below average men and flock to the top 20% to spread their legs even though they know those men won't be with them and are just using them for sex for chasing after athleticism/muscles, and looks. Gold digging for women has also been one of the oldest ways women chase after men to their detriment.

God makes it clear that sexual attraction for both men and women should be constrained. Men are warned constantly about falling for beauty and ignoring godliness. Women were (and are) supposed to be under the authority of their fathers and taught to not fall for or be seduced by attraction and ignore good character. Ignoring the constraints on sexual attraction leads to derangement as we can all see in society.

Simply put, it's better to marry the "7" who adores you and follows your lead than to marry the "9" who has terrible character, gaslights you, and is probably going to divorce you because she's contentious and rebellious. The same is true for woman to marry the "7" man they can be happy with and who would be a great husband and father rather than the “9” womanizing athlete who would cheat on her and divorce her and treat her like crap. Obviously, this are made up examples and life is not always a dichotomy, but it should help drive home the point.

Now, to come back to the question:

- A woman seeking to earn say 6 figures is neither a good or bad thing. Money is a tool that can be used for the Kingdom, but it is also very easy to fall in love with money which is the root of all evil (1 Tim 6).
- Likewise, a woman seeking a man earning more than her is neither a good or bad thing. However, it vastly constrains the amount of potential men that are marriageable to her. If she’s OK with that then she can have any constraints she wants on her prospective mate choices, just like any man can have whatever traits he wants (e.g. debt free, no tattoo virgins).

In general, a woman that makes 6-figs and requires her man to make more than 6 figs is likely going to be in statistical trouble. For instance, we have the female delusion calculator which is based on US census data. Given the following constraints…

- 6 figs
- 20-45
- Exclude married
- Any race
- 5’0″
- Include obese

Only 4.5% of the population fit into that category.

Typically, a woman who makes 6 figs has advanced in her career and is probably at least late 20s, so she wouldn’t want to marry someone younger than her. She might have race preferences or might not. We’ll leave that the same. And then clearly 5’0″ is usually not a woman’s choice. We’ll be generous and say above 5’9″ which is approximately 6 inches taller than the average woman. And most women do not want to marry an obese man, so we’ll exclude obese.

Given the following constraints…

- 6 figs
- 30-45
- Exclude married
- Any race
- 5’9″
- Exclude obese

Only 1.3% of the population fit into that category.

If you include the 6 figs and 6 foot height then you get down to .44% of the population having that.

This does not also include the fact that any men in this small percentage might not have the best looks, personality, or even any of the traits that are good for being a husband or father. Once you start to add those on the percentages drop even further.

Thus, as we can see a woman that has specific immutable requirements on sexual attraction — hypergamy via PSALMS + masculinity — is going to have huge statistical problems on her potential dating pool. It's generally very unwise for women to do this.

For the vast majority of men and women there's no woman or man that is going to fit 100% of the criteria you are looking for. That's why it's important to narrow down "needs" versus "wants."

What I look for in a potential wife was a general exercise for me as a man to determine the main things I wanted to look for. Most of the requirements were around being a solid Christian, and obviously you want someone attractive to you but it does not necessarily have to be someone who is the most attractive person you've ever seen. This is where most people get tripped up. As long as they are attractive to you then they're a solid potential candidate as long as they meet Christian criteria. Women's expectations in general have been inflated much more than men's but some men's are too.

The happiest and unhappiest workers are predictable

March 3, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Almost a decade ago survey of specifically white collar workers, but I doubt any thing has changed. In fact, if anything has changed the happiest are probably more happy and the unhappiest are even less happy.

> A survey of white-collar workers has produced a profile of an unhappy person at work—and she's likely a female lawyer or doctor.
> According to the profile, the unhappy worker is a 42-year-old unmarried woman with a household income under $100,000 working in a professional position. In other words, she's a doctor or a lawyer, according to a press release.
> The profile of a happy worker, on the other hand, is a 39-year-old married man with a household income between $150,000 and $200,000 in a senior management position, with one young child at home and a wife who works part-time.
> The profiles were developed from a survey of more than 670 North American white-collar workers by Captivate Network, the company that publishes news headlines on elevator and lobby screens.
> According to the survey summary and a chart (PDF):
> • When it comes to extreme happiness, men are consistently happier than women. Men are 25 percent happier at work than women, and 8 percent happier at home.
> • Men are 35 percent more likely than women to take breaks "just to relax" and 25 percent more likely to take breaks for personal activities. Sixty-eight percent of happy people take breaks during the work day, compared to 41 percent of unhappy people.
> • Seventy-five percent of men are happy with their work-life balance, compared to 70 percent of women. Eighty-nine percent of happy people leave work at a reasonable hour, compared to 49 percent of unhappy people.
> • Ninety-three percent of happy people take vacations, compared to 79 percent of unhappy people.

Unsurprisingly, the 42 year old unmarried woman who relatively "failed" at her white collar profession is the most unhappy. Docs or lawyers making less than 100k probably took a wrong path somewhere. I'd also bet that unhappiest of the unhappy unmarried woman is childless. Her prospects for children are dwindling to 0 at that point.

And the happiest is not a surprise either. The married man with a high income, wife and kid, and the wife is not is not married to her job so she's more focused on the family. The husband likely has a relatively attractive wife with a professional job and the wife has her hypergamy satisfied with a man who is relatively high status occupation and high income. She has the option of working some and focusing on taking care of her family.

Also goes to show that women tend to be worse than men at compartmentalizing work from the rest of life which agrees with Genesis that it was commanded to man to keep and cultivate the garden.

Mastering the “domain” of women

March 12, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I’ve been meaning to delve into this topic for a while now.

We’ve all heard the evolutionary schtick of men having physical dominance over women, but women, as the weaker sex, generally cannot fight men physically so they have to resort of what we would say is a war of words. For instance, women if they want to fight against women and men for that matter almost always use words to do it. They emotionally sabotage, blackmail, and otherwise aim to harm the reputation of those they consider enemies.

This is one area that the vast majority of men are bad at since women have vastly more practice from birth doing it with other women through elementary, middle, high school, and beyond.

- Jack has posted before about 50 female control tactics
- Shaming tactics are also extensively documented that almost all women use.

Shaming tactics in particular are well used by the Church, feminists, and women against men and husbands. You see a slew of these come through with random female commenters every once in a while when we discuss female bad behavior. These are some of the examples from the link above:

> Charge of Irascibility (Code Red)
> Discussion: The target is accused of having anger management issues. Whatever negative emotions he has are assumed to be unjustifiable. Examples:“You’re bitter!”
> Charge of Cowardice (Code Yellow)
> Discussion: The target is accused of having an unjustifiable fear of interaction with women. Examples: “You’re afraid of a strong woman!”
> Charge of Hypersensitivity (Code Blue) – *The Crybaby Charge
> Discussion: The target is accused of being hysterical or exaggerating the problems of men (i.e., he is accused of playing “Chicken Little”). Examples:“Stop whining!”
> Charge of Puerility (Code Green) – *The Peter Pan Charge
> Discussion: The target is accused of being immature and/or irresponsible in some manner that reflects badly on his status as an adult male. Examples:“You are so immature!”
> Charge of Endangerment (Code Orange) – *The Elevated Threat Charge
> Discussion: The target is accused of being a menace in some undefined manner. This charge may be coupled with some attempt to censor the target.

> Examples:“You guys are scary.”
> Charge of Rationalization (Code Purple) – *The Sour Grapes Charge
> Discussion: The target is accused of explaining away his own failures and/or dissatisfaction by blaming women for his problems. Example:“You are just bitter because you can’t get laid.”
> Charge of Fanaticism (Code Brown) – *The Brown Shirts Charge
> Discussion: The target is accused of subscribing to an intolerant, extremist ideology or of being devoted to an ignorant viewpoint. Examples:“You’re one of those right-wing wackos.”
> Charge of Invirility (Code Lavender)
> Discussion: The target’s sexual orientation or masculinity is called into question. Examples:“Are you gay?”
> Charge of Overgeneralization (Code Gray)
>
> Discussion: The target is accused of making generalizations or supporting unwarranted stereotypes about women. Examples:“I’m not like that!”
> Charge of Misogyny (Code Black)
> Discussion: The target is accused of displaying some form of unwarranted malice to a particular woman or to women in general. Examples:“Why do you hate women?”

I only listed 10 of these, but there are 6 more on the site. As you can see, we’ve all seen some form of these from women and men, though mostly dominated by women conversation.

The correct response to the vast majority of these is not to play, at least if you aren’t very good with words. Indeed, most of the PUA responses were built to take on charges like this with tactics such as agree and amplify, ignore, reframing, etc.

However, most manipulation and control tactics are actually a response to the insecurity of the person and their projection of their own insecurity onto what you are saying. Hence, why arguing is almost invariably a 100% wrong response. You can’t win an argument against the insecurities of another person. You need to dig and address those insecurities.

It is often the case that many of these responses come out of nowhere. In other words, if you’re on a topic and everyone is calm, but then there’s a disproportional response to something said. This typically means someone has some history with the topic and is insecure about it for whatever reason. If you want to help them resolve it you can — and usually at a later time when emotions are lower — ask them what seemed to provoke that type of response. Usually it’s something in their past with their family, friends, enemies, or whatever issues they haven’t resolved. Once they realize that they can work through it with Christian values forgiving if they need to forgive, prayer, meditation on the Word for the topic, and other things like fasting.

Yes, Jesus says to let our yes be yes and our no be no, but women more than men tend to struggle with this more often. Hence, that is one of the ways husbands can call out their wives to sanctification.

Women tend to have more than just 1 layer of communication and prefer indirect and vagueness so as to maintain plausible deniability, so understanding this and developing your communication repertoire to understanding this aspect of women can help to connect better with them. This is similar to reading body language, but much less emphasized or talked about.

This is why flirting with sexual innuendos with women tends to be preferred by women rather than just flat out asking about sex. Sex is implied and it's a little secret between you two.

Most men who have very good charisma with women very good at picking up all of the cues that women pick up from each other. Hence, mastery of what would be traditionally a "woman's domain" yields good results.

Overall, if you want to connect better with women you need to start learning and mastering the "domain of women." This will assist you in regard to:

- It will help you understand women at a better level
- It will help in understanding and diffusing arguments and when you should avoid some particular areas of discussion
- It will help with understanding how to help women with their sanctification in Christ – Eph 5.
- It will help you be more "understanding of your wife as the weaker vessel" – 1 Peter 3.
- It will help you flirt better and get sex on her mind, and it's more enjoyable for you both so you don't have to press for sex.

This is one of least talked about topics, but one of the most important you can learn. Obviously, I'm no master but I understand and can apply enough to be reasonably effective in a lot of situations with my wife now.

How do you truly become outcome independent?

March 28, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Life is extremely busy, but I'm still here. Will be trying to get out some more posts weekly, but we'll see.

A reader writes in:

> How can I truly be outcome independent? I know we must be consumed with God and loving Him with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength, but I need help practically doing that. I still find myself being dependent on woman's approval and I long to have true biblical outcome independence. Please what are some practical steps I can take to achieving this confident mindset?

There's some of the fundamental articles here. I would also suggest reading starting in the posts of "the framework of the mission" where I put the most important articles for the first 5-7 years of this blog.

The basic summary is a few things.

- What is your mission for Christ?
- If that is not the most important thing in your life then why not?

Overall, relationships won't work well and possibly if at all if you don't put God first. If you're constantly looking for approval from women, this is the mindset that is going to have you as a slave to a wife's feelings in which case you disobey God and obey your wife. This leads to the inverted roles marriage, and often leads to destructive divorce. Only by following God's model are you able to lead and love her with the purpose of sanctification.

Don't get me wrong. It's nice feeling to have a girl like you or be attracted to you, but that shouldn't drive your actions.

In most cases, the feeling of approval of women is from a feeling of scarcity. Men who have women falling over to date them don't care about the approval of women because there is always another woman who wants them. This is where the "PUA mindset" of there is always another fish in the sea and just talking to tons of different women and other people is helpful. If you're desensitized to talking to people and even to rejection from women, then you start to care way less about it.

Indeed, the vast majority of focus should be on God's mission and becoming excellent in all areas. This leads to the development of traits that women find attractive anyway, and as you are pursuing God and excellence in the spiritual, physical, mental, and emotional you'll find that your mindset changes because you are doing what is right and other things don't matter as much. Including women's approval. And that's generally when you become more attractive to women anyway.

> Also, how do you get over a girl? How to move on? How to heal from a breakup?

> Or if not a blogpost any practical advice on that matter?

This is somewhat of an extension of the above. Focus on what matters.

What matters for eternity? God's mission. Consider this post on true outcome independence of Paul and Silas in prison.

Heck, even what matters in 1 year? Are you going to be stuck on the what ifs? Or are you going to keep pursuing excellence and maybe be in a different relationship in a years time?

A rejection or an ended relationship will hurt no doubt. But it can only hurt insomuch as you linger on it. Focus on the things you can control and not on what you can't control. Don't be someone who lives in the past but focuses on the present and plans for the future.

If a woman doesn't want to be with you that's a good thing. You don't want someone to be with you who doesn't want to be there. They will start turning bitter and resentful over time. Not something you want to deal with. There's always worse and worse consequences that we never think of that would happen if someone is forced to stay when they don't want. We want to focus only what we want to all the time and fictionalize it to be the best thing ever, but life doesn't work that way. This idealization can only hurt you, so don't fall prey to it.

Should fathers perform wedding ceremonies?

March 30, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Another reader writes in:

> Do you think that fathers instead of pastors should be the one performing a wedding ceremony? I'm leaning towards "yes" but not certain.
> – If performing a wedding constitutes approval of the marriage, fathers have more skin in the game than pastors. If the marriage goes bad, it affects the 2 immediate families most of all.
> – Father of the bride gives her away, approving of her vows (Numbers 30). It seems logical that the father of the groom would preside over the ceremony in which his household gains a daughter-in-law. It is his extended household, after all.
> – No Bible verse I'm aware of says pastors are needed for a marriage to be official. Fathers are the spiritual authority in the family, and therefore seem like a more logical choice.
> – I'm not sure who performed weddings in the Old Testament, but I would guess the father was involved. At minimum he would be involved in arranging the marriage.
> I'm not saying it is 100% wrong for a pastor to do a wedding, but I am thinking that preference should probably be given to the father of the husband if he is spiritually able to fill that role. If you are able to address this I would be interested if you think there is any merit in what I'm thinking.

While the idea is interesting, the father of the bride — at least in the Bible — presumable always plays a big role in the wedding. The man in virtually all examples in the Bible must get permission from the father of the potential bride to marry her. This is seen all throughout Genesis and much of the rest of the OT.

Even 1 Corinthians 7 affirms that the father has authority over his daughter to be given in marriage, and you don't see that much mentioned in Church.

> 36 But if anyone thinks that he is acting dishonorably toward his virgin, if she is past her youth and it ought to be so, let him do what he wishes, he is not sinning; let them marry. 37 But the one who stands firm in his heart, if he is not under constraint, but has authority over his own will, and has decided this in his own heart, to keep his own virgin, he will do well. 38 So then, both the one who gives his own virgin in marriage does well, and the one who does not give her in marriage will do better.

I agree that there is no reason why a pastor or priest must officiate a wedding. A father (of the bride or husband) could presumably officiate it, but in most cultures including Christian the father of the bride is part of the ceremony symbolizing giving the bride to the husband. Father of the husband presiding over it would seem a bit awkward perhaps in that case.

In any case, I think it doesn't really matter. What tends to matter if we are speaking strictly Biblical is the marriage framework in Genesis 2:

1. Father giving the daughter to the man — God giving Eve to Adam
2. Separating from family(s) — leaving father and mother [to make an independent family unit]
3. Coming together [to be with and live with] — joined to his wife
4. Having sex — becoming one flesh
5. In the presence of witnesses [traditionally with a wedding celebration] — in this case, Father/Jesus/Spirit and potentially angels.

Vows are usually exchanged with a covenant as well, but not necessarily present in Genesis. After all, if you have a Biblical marriage it is supposed to be permanent and you are supposed to follow the Biblical marital roles and responsibilities.

Someone presiding as a "master of ceremony" is just a nice thing that the family could participate in or leave up to someone else. If it seems like a good idea to you then by all means get everyone on board and go for it.

Studies from around the web: Equality has gone too far and single American stats

April 8, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Now this was a funny article from the NY post based on a survey

> According to the results, 52 percent of Gen Z and 53 percent of Millennials agree that “we have gone so far in promoting women’s equality that we are discriminating against men”.
> This is compared to 46 percent of Gen X and 40 percent of Baby Boomers.
> The majority of Gen Z, Millennial, and Gen X respondents also agreed that men are “expected to do too much to support equality”, with 55, 57, and 54 percent respectively.
> However, less than half of Boomers agreed with this statement.
> In another surprise result, Gen Z and Millennials were the generations that most believed a father who stays home to look after his children is “less of a man”, with 30 percent of both groups agreeing with this statement.
> This went down to 22 percent for Gen X and reduced even further to 14 percent for Boomers.

It’s clear the younger generations think feminism is going too far. After all, they see it in the education system and the discrimination in their own jobs.

> For example, 45 percent of Gen Z and 44 percent of Millennials define themselves as a feminist, compared to 37 percent of Gen X and 35 percent of Baby Boomers.
> The majority, 68 percent, also say they have taken at least one action to promote gender equality in the past year, compared to 41 percent of Boomers.

The last statement in particular is pretty permanent. The younger generation is supposedly doing “more” to be feminists than the boomers, which generally mean they think they’re taking it too far. While the boomers aren’t doing as much and thus they don’t think it has gone far enough.

The amusing thing is that the younger generation is doing it but complaining about it, but the older generation is doing nothing and saying they need to do more. Both are hypocritical in that regard.

5 facts about single Americans from Pew Research

> Roughly six-in-ten young men report being single
> Adults under 30 are the most likely age group to be single, with roughly half > (47%) falling into this category. In contrast, 30- to 49-year-olds are the least likely to be single (21%). About three-in-ten adults ages 50 to 64 or 65 and older say they are single.

> When looking at age and gender together, 63% of men under 30 describe themselves as single, compared with 34% of women in the same age group.

This is not that surprising. Younger women tend to be going for the older more successful type of man trying to maximize their attraction.

Younger 20s men have to work to get themselves there.

> The majority of single adults are not interested in being struck (or even grazed) by Cupid's arrow. Among Americans who are single, the largest share – 57% – say they are not currently looking for a relationship or casual dates.
> Single men are more likely than their female counterparts to be searching for romantic experiences. Half of these men are looking for a committed relationship and/or casual dates, while 35% of single women say the same.

Single women are more likely to be trying to play the field – 65% of them, compared to 50% of men. Again, not very surprising when they command the majority of SMV when they are younger.

They should be trying to maximize that for relationships and marriage, but they've bought the feminist life script.

> The percentage of single Americans who are looking for a relationship or casual dates is lower than in 2019, especially among men. Some 42% of single Americans say they're looking for a committed romantic relationship and/or casual dates, down from 49% in 2019 (but similar to the proportion found in the Center's February 2022 survey).

COVID wrecked the in-person dating market.

> The type of relationship single Americans are looking for varies by gender. Among singles who are on the dating market, about half (51%) say they are open to either a committed relationship or casual dates. Looking at those who are only open to one of these options, daters are more likely to be exclusively looking for a committed relationship over casual dates only (31% vs. 17%).

Most are still looking for relationships though.

> Nearly half of single-and-looking adults have turned to online dating in the past year. Some 45% of single Americans who are searching for a relationship and/or casual dates have used an online dating platform within the past year, including those who were on one currently as of the July 2022 survey.

And this is why online dating has taken off, but is very terrible for men. Most dating sites still skew heavily toward many more men on them, so tons of men are fighting for fewer women which means most men will fail.

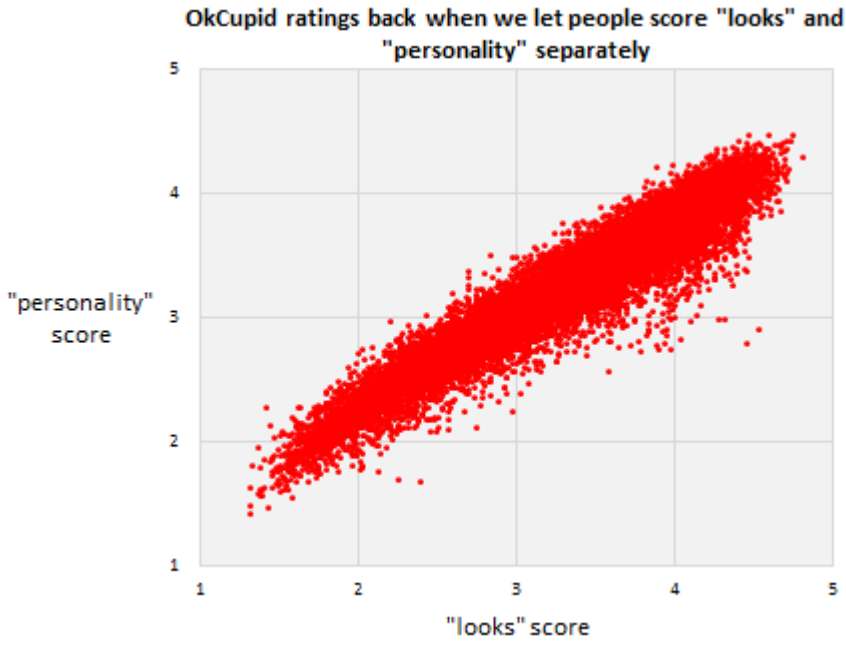
As it is, I think most men in their 20s should be committed to being excellent in everything and try to move up in job and general PSALM and masculinity traits. If they can pick up a woman along the way in the 20s that is ideal, but as they hit mid to late 20s into early 30s they should start to hit their prime and be looking for women probably 3-7 years younger than them.

The Chosen sabotaging Christian husbands

April 15, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

For as much as the Chosen has been fairly good at portraying the intent and message of the gospel, they are doing their best to sabotage husbands as well.

Not only is has the “happy wife, happy life” become ubiquitous in the Church, the Chosen has termed it “he’s speaking gospel truth.”



When I first saw it in the episode I thought maybe they’ll spin it as something that Peter tried and failed, so when he went back he could say it was bad advice. But I guess that was me thinking too optimistically. The irony is it was bad advice and failed during the show, just like it fails in real life. Yet they still called it gospel truth.

Makes me sick.

More interesting studies on women's perception of attraction and orgasms

April 17, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Another OKCupid chart of independent ratings of look and personality.

Something we already generally knew, but improving PSALM and masculinity traits helps.

Regarding the photos, it's going to be improve your own looks such as muscular build, skin care, style, hair style, grooming, and such. Then professional photos are usually the most helpful.

Other studies have shown that putting that 6 figure income next to a man's dating profile raises their "looks" or "attractiveness" score.

This chart is for both men and women, so attractiveness is a bias filter that makes us look more favorably on others. This is why the Bible warns about favoritism especially in regard to status or position as well.

Do Orgasms Give Women Feedback about Mate Choice?

Since this was college age study it's not as super generalized to the population, but it does give us several things to look at.

Frequency of orgasm:

- Partner's family income – I assume this is family income since most college aged men don't have a job. Once they have a job it will be related to that. For example, Chinese women orgasm frequency depicted by their partner's wealth.
- His self-confidence – obvious
- How attractive he was – obvious

My comments – ALM of PSALM (power, status athleticism, looks, money) and masculinity traits.

Orgasm intensity:

- How attracted they were to their partners – obvious
- How many times they had sex per week – more practice = better
- Ratings of sexual satisfaction – next topic
- Friends rated as more attractive also tended to have more intense orgasms – pre-selection
- Orgasm frequency was highly correlated (r = .82) with orgasm intensity – more practice = better
- Orgasm intensity was a marginally better predictor of sexual satisfaction than orgasm frequency.

My comments – S and L of PSALM and masculinity traits.

Sexual satisfaction:

- How physically attracted women were to their partner – Looks and muscles
- Breadth of his shoulders – basically, a good V-taper

My comments – Hit the gym to build muscle

Initiated sex more based on their partner's:

- Motivation
- Intelligence
- Focus
- Determination
- Sense of humor

My comments – First 4 are masculinity traits that can be summed up by AMBITION, and the last is close to the command presence of amused mastery.

Sense of humor predicted:

- Self confidence
- Family income
- propensity of woman to initiate sex
- frequency of sex
- enhanced orgasm

My comments – Amused mastery I believe is also built on a foundation of knowing you're successful.

Last tidbit: "Women who began having sexual intercourse at earlier ages had more sex partners, experienced more orgasms, and were more sexually satisfied with their partners." – Unsurprising. Promiscuous women are good at hedonism.

In conclusion, orgasm frequency, intensity, sexual satisfaction, and initiation of sex all pretty much go back to the PSALM and masculinity traits for attractiveness. Not really a surprise, but supports the Bible's model of sexual attraction.

If you want to date and marry, work on God's mission and excellence in all the areas of physical, spiritual, emotional, and mental generally lend toward improvement in PSALM traits and masculinity.

What the Church and The Chosen should be teaching

April 20, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The Chosen was peddling the Happy wife Happy life mantra and Jack did a layman dive on Headship = Authority after I brought up Wayne Grudem's research on headship again. So what should the Church be teaching?

They should be teaching:

- Headship is authority, and submission to authority is good. Even if the husband is not a Christian. 1 Cor 11, Eph 5, 1 Pet 3, etc.
- Authority is not bad. Rather, God created authority as Good for those under it. 1 Peter 2, Romans 13, etc.
- Jesus shows us how to use authority to love and serve others. Matthew 20, Luke 22.

> Matthew 20:25 Jesus called them together and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their high officials exercise authority over them. 26 Not so with you. Instead, whoever wants to become great among you must be your servant, 27 and whoever wants to be first must be your slave— 28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many."

Authority is not canceled or removed, but it is to be used responsibly as Jesus used it.

In other words,

- Men should be exhorted to lead their relationships and marriages and use their authority to love and serve others.
- Women should only follow men who demonstrate faithful use of authority to love and serve.
- Arguing for or against authority and submission is the type of foolish controversy that the Biblical authors wanted us to avoid. 2 Tim 2, Tit 3, etc.

Unfortunately, we got the complementarianism nonsense which is basically all but egalitarian in practice and muddies the waters. This gets blended with failed teachings such as agreement as godliness (two) and intelligent submission (two, three).

Clear and accurate teachings from the Scripture are best — even if they are hard.

At least if they are hard serious Christians will rise to the occasion as opposed to being duped and deceived leading to failed marriages where both the husband and wife are confused as to what happened. They followed what they thought were "Christian" teachings but they were actually following culture under the guise of the Church's deception.

No, godliness is still not attractive

April 21, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack covered some DP Monahan's Godliness is not attractive? post in his Comparing Carnal Chads and Churchian Cucks, but I want to dig deeper on the main misconceptions.

> Christian Red Pill bloggers like Aaron Renn insist (against the claims of Evangelical preachers) that godliness does not attract women. Women, instead, are attracted to power, what we call "alpha" attributes, i.e. size, strength, status, confidence, money. In fact, godliness is unattractive. Godliness is "beta". Women will settle for "betas" because they are good providers, but will secretly despise them. Women pick alphas for sex and then settle for betas to take care of the alpha's bastard kids. Therefore men have to be taught not only how to be godly but also how to be alphas.
> I understand what they are getting at – we do observe these kinds of behavior and the examples he gives of what passes for Evangelical marriage advise are ridiculous – but I think the model for understanding the behavior is flawed. From a theological perspective it can't be the way God intended human nature to work; since status is purely relative, by definition not all men can be high-status. There will always be inequality of alpha traits. But since God wills that the great majority of men marry, it cannot be the case that God makes a condition for being married the display of these traits.

This is a fundamental misunderstanding that he would understand if he had read my post on A Christian understanding of attraction and the role it plays in marriage Part 3.

Essentially, attractive traits — PSALMs (power, status, athleticism, looks, money) and masculinity — or however you classify them are a subset of the main aspect which God created to be attractive to women: Dominion. This is directly related to the commands God gives to man from Genesis 1 and 2. Analysis of these verses are handled in the attraction link above.

To use the example of status, Monahan is correct that not every man can have high status. However, status is only one indicator of relative dominion within a group or from group to other group. Not every man needs to have mainly status either. He can have relative dominion over other areas of PSALMs + masculinity.

For example, not every girl is interested in the high school or college quarterback or sports athletes (though most of them are). Even within "nerdy" video game or D&D or anime collectives, there are women who are groupies toward men there. These latter groups have virtually no status within a school or university hierarchy, but they have their own sub-group hierarchies and the people within those groups have their own non-status attractive traits.

While display of many of these traits are not needed, there usually is at least one or couple of aspects of dominion that men need to display to be in relationship or married.

Pretty women sometimes go for the ugly rich man or fat celebrity. However, let us also not forget the quintessential example of the 40 year old obese man-child living in his parents' basement playing video games. When you display virtually no dominion subtraits — sexual attraction — like the video-game-basement-obese-man, no woman is going to want to marry you.

A man who is generally excellent in all he does (e.g. "do everything you do for the glory of God") naturally develops PSALMs and masculinity by being excellent at his job, learning to be discipled and discipling others (good socially, learning how to follow and lead, etc.), cultivates physical fitness, etc.

> The alpha / beta dichotomy is basically a Nietzschean one in which the ubermench takes what he wants while the ordinary people huddle in fear of social scorn. It is not a vision of an orderly society but of a fundamentally disordered one. It is also based on evolutionary psychology which tends towards just-so stories: an evolutionary explanation of how the alpha got his game is analogous to a wives' tale of how the cat got his tale, tending towards tautology and generally free of evidence. (To be fair, Renn himself makes these same criticisms.)
> Most Christian Red Pill types are Protestants which means they labor under a distorted view of human nature: in classical Protestant doctrine human nature is totally corrupted by original sin, so a Protestant can imagine a world in which the natural order is a Nietzschean one while the divine law is something completely different.
> Catholics don't always have a consistent view of nature and grace, but in general they do not see human nature as totally corrupted by sin, but as weakened while retaining its inherent goodness. Catholics don't typically speak of godliness but of virtue, which is the development of the good capacities inherent in human nature. There is no set of good Christian "beta" virtues on one side, and human "alpha" virtues on the other. Rather both are sets of human virtues which work together, and which are perfected and elevated by the infusion of the supernatural virtues of faith, hope, and charity.

This too is another common misunderstanding, and to be fair, there is probably a large component of the 'sphere which also misunderstands this.

Consider the "ideal man" so to speak for a Christian woman. This is the Brad Pitt / Chris Adams / Chris Hemworth type that ticks all of attractive dominion related traits of PSALM and masculinity, but also has all of the virtues as well. Christian, faithful, kind, good with kids, humble, etc.

In other words, these traits are not mutually exclusive to each other.

The reason why it's a common misunderstanding is that many men have observed the "bad boys" getting the girls where they display the PSALM traits and then assume that women are only attracted to the combination of PSALM and masculinity with evil.

Likewise, they see the Church producing Christian nice guys who are not attractive but supposedly exuding all of the virtues. Hence, they believe that these things are mutually exclusive to each other. However, they are not.

As I have stated before, the reciprocal rule is another reason why this misunderstanding persists. If the populations you look at for understanding women are only promiscuous women then you are going to get the wrong impression that all women act like prosmiscuous women. The majority of women who desire relationships will also value the virtues that we have mentioned above.

Monahan's unification falls a bit short which we'll explore in the next part.

> God does not expect all men to be powerful in the hierarchies of the world, but he does expect all men to be virtuous. He also expects men to exercise authority according to their state in life. For most men, that means exercising authority over their families and property. So the virtues of manhood should be those virtues ordered to the exercise of authority: prudence, courage and creativity in the face of opposition, obedience to higher authorities, integrity, accountability, and the ability to take counsel. (I am sure there are others, these are the ones that occur to me).
> Virtue understood as the perfection of a good potential is attractive because there is nothing else a person can possibly be attracted to except for virtue. Problems arise when a person is attracted to lesser virtues instead of higher, or is so enamored of one virtue that they ignore vices in other areas, something that happens all the time. This is probably not a simple matter of nature but also of social conditions: our society encourages young people to start fornicating in the second half of their teens and marry ten to fifteen years later, which means we are habituating them to judge members of the opposite sex and themselves in terms of what makes for a good fornicator and not a good spouse, hurting their marriage prospects later in life.
> I suppose someone like Renn would accuse me of imposing a theological framework on reality, when reality is completely different. Just like the Evangelical pastors I want virtue to be attractive because of my theoretical commitments. Fair enough.

Monahan is close here but makes a classic blunder confusing cause and effect.

Again, if the virtue itself is attractive, let me know when the Christian women are flocking to marry the virtuous Church janitor.

- Let me know when the gorgeous Christian women want to marry the church janitor
- Women are attracted to the pastor, worship leader, bible study leader and not the Church janitor, parking lot coordinator or door greeter redux

A pastor and janitor can be equally as virtuous. Heck, some janitors can be more virtuous as we see with tons of pastors and priests with massive sex or money scandals. Yet, women still want to marry the leaders and not the janitors.

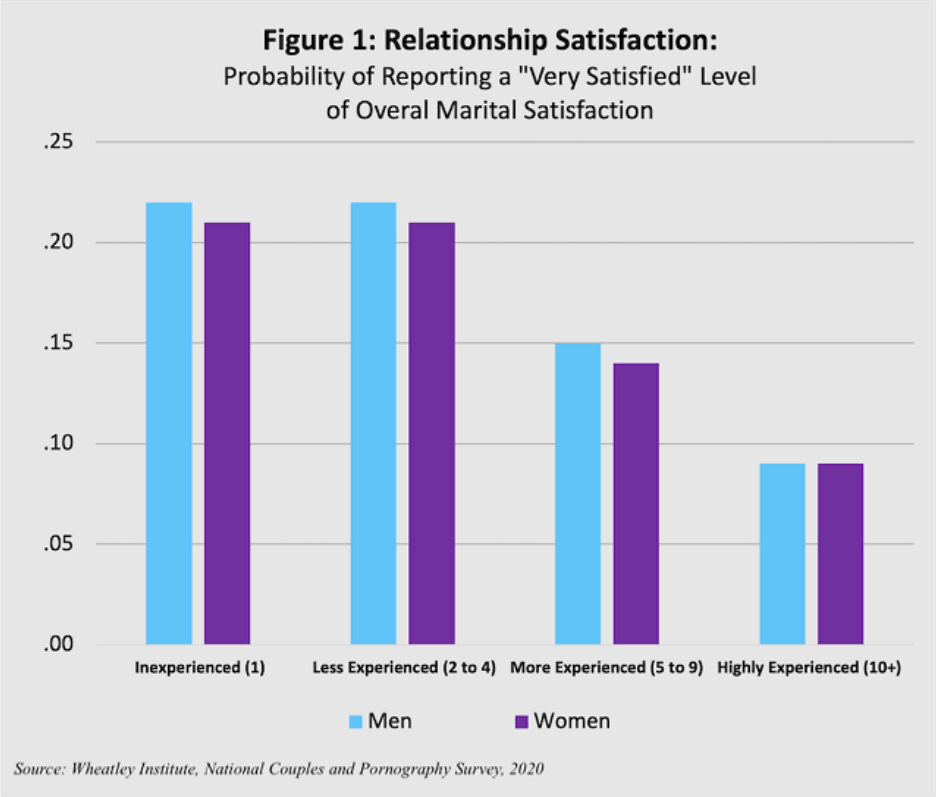
No one who reads these two posts can tell me with a straight face that virtue itself is attractive. Virtue is good and definitely something that both Christian men and women want in a mate (again, they are not exclusive), but virtue is not attractive except in the context of dominion in the form of PSALMs + masculinity or other categorizations.

- Women are attracted to dominion and the relative sub-classification of that (PSALMs + masculinity) as that's how God created them to be in Genesis 1 and 2.
- God wants us to be virtuous because He is good. Virtuous behavior over time leads to life and positive reinforcement cycles (e.g. Proverbs on wisdom and doing good). Not because virtue is attractive.

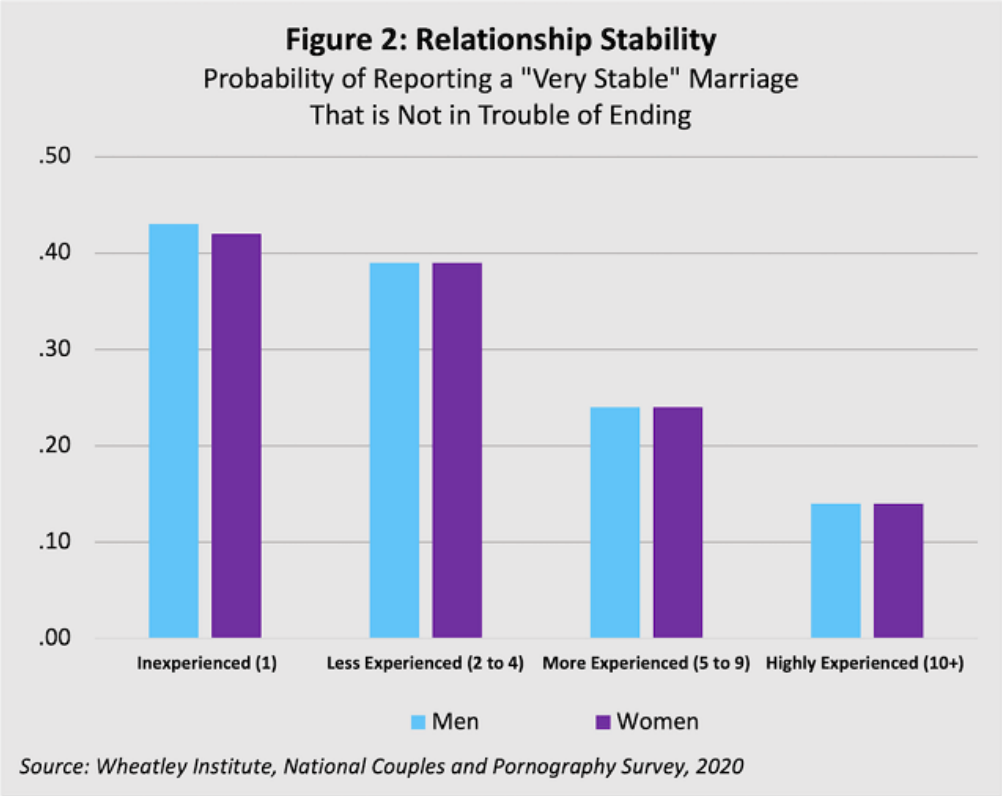
The main reason people can get confused is that:

- Virtuous actions can sometimes be attractive (e.g. running into a burning building to save someone, pastor giving a sermon, worship leader leading worship),
- But not all attraction is virtuous (e.g. bad boys using their attractiveness for promiscuity), and
- Not all virtuousness is attractive (e.g. virtuous janitor vs pastor).

As I stated before men that seek to be "excellent in all things" God has for them generally develop both attractive traits and virtues. But this does not mean that attractive traits cause virtue or virtue makes things attractive. They are two separate things because they were created differently by God.



Additionally, to hammer home the point on general leadership being attractive. Not every man can be a Bible study leader for the Church, but every man can be a Bible study leader for his girlfriend or wife. Not only does this fulfill God's role for men in Ephesians 5 on helping sanctify his wife, but he is also leading which is attractive and being virtuous doing it.



God’s way is still the best – Myth of sexual experience, cohabitation, and pornography

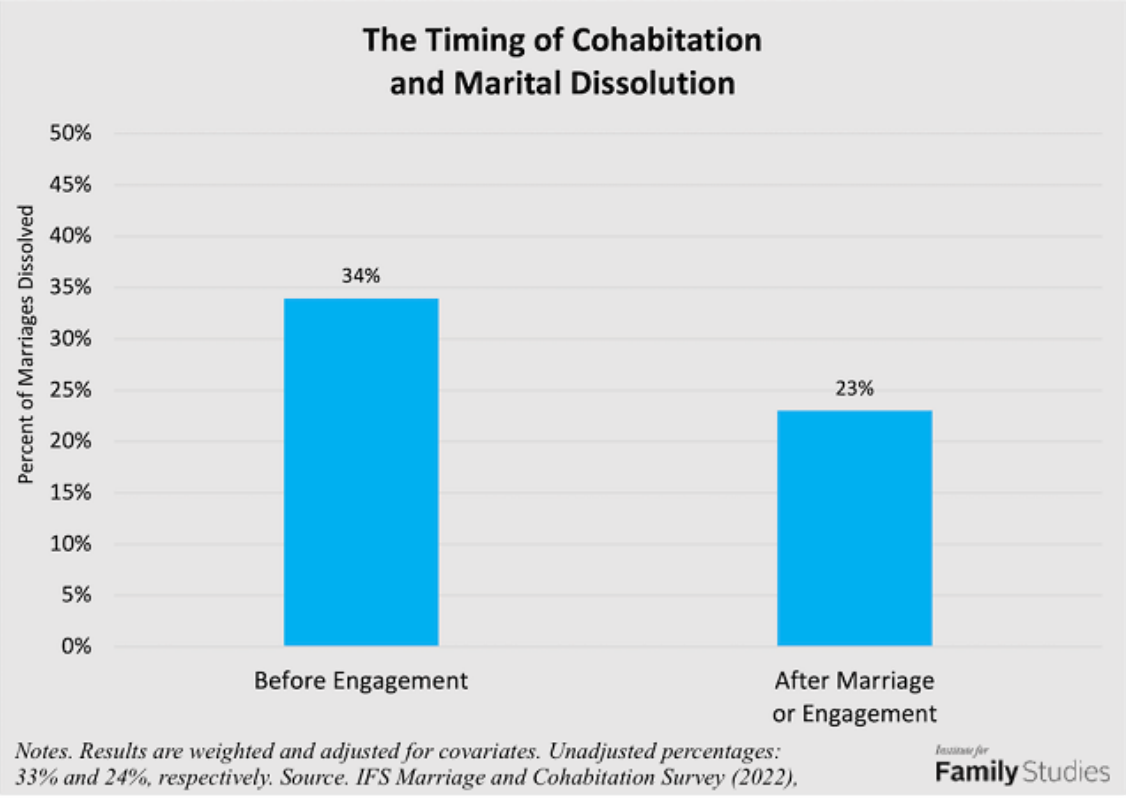
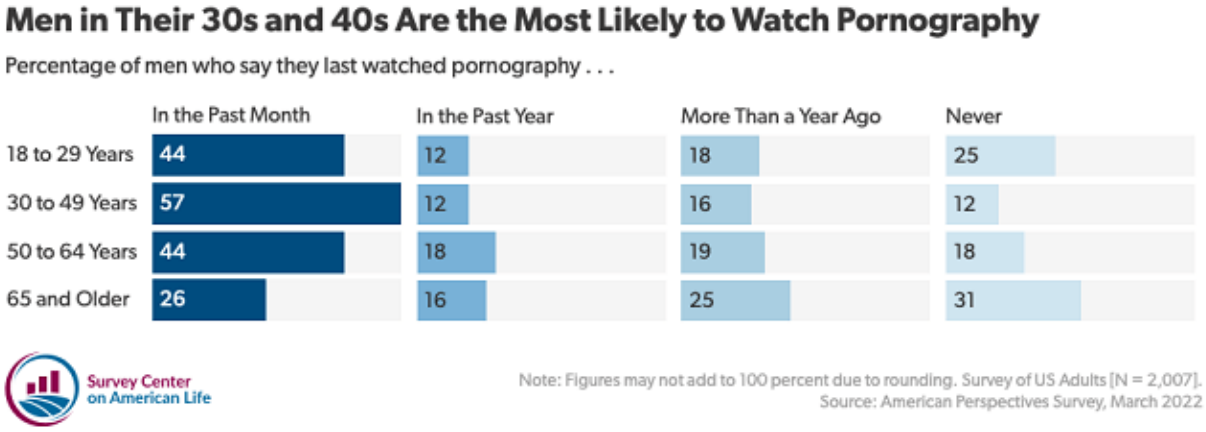
Myth of sexual experience

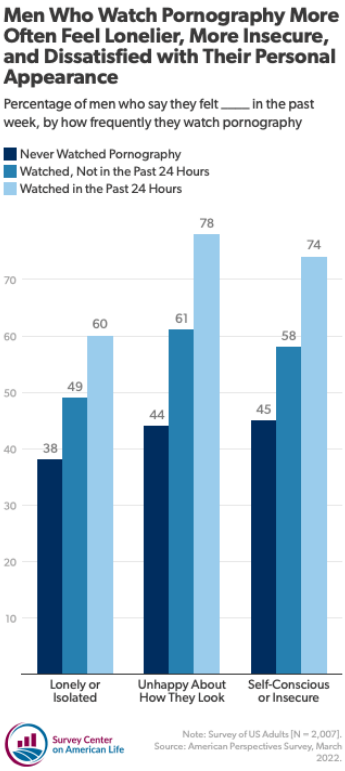


Higher relationship satisfaction, relationship satisfaction, and sexual satisfaction. This doesn't even take into account the divorce rates for increasing partner counts for women either which are drastically higher as well.



Also note that sexual experience seems to negatively affect women more than men, although just slightly in these analyses. Would be interesting to see if that's statistically significant too.

Cohabitation doesn't help your odds of marital success



The decreased seriousness of cohabitation as a “trial” means that people will break up at more frequent rates if they experiencing things they don’t like. This is compared to marriage where it’s a commitment / covenant first which people are more willing to take seriously and work things out.

How prevalent is pornography

This chart is interesting because the 30-49 range likely has a lot of men that are being frozen out of sex in their “marriages,” or men that have failed to launch and think that porn is the only experience they are going to get. That would be my speculation for why that rate is the highest.

This chart also makes sense from a Christian perspective.

Christian men who are mission from God have a sense of purpose. Hopefully, they are working to be excellent in all they do physically, emotionally, mentally, spiritually, and also from a discipleship perspective. Purpose and working toward that purpose changes a man.

Porn is only a symptom of the problem in that respect. If a man isn't attractive enough to get dates he's more likely to be lonely or isolated, unhappy about how they look, and/or self conscious or insecure and satisfy sexual urges on porn.

The alternative is porn or the gym. One is the long term answer that can raise attractiveness to date and marry. Porn is the symptom of a short term medication much like alcohol to mend the wound.

Woman don’t understand the male experience or what men want

May 2, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A commenter called “anti-deti” tries to push back against deti’s comments on the terrible state of men and marriage by asserting how his marriage was different. Yet, it is precisely the comment that gives away that this “man” is almost certainly a woman. Let’s take a look.

> Deti initial comment:
> We all know men marry for sexual attraction and love. A man will not, absolutely will not, marry a woman he does not feel love for.
> A man will not, absolutely will not, marry a woman he does not want to bang.
> Women know this.
> This is why men have to go into a marriage knowing their own value and what they bring. He has to be prepared to walk away at all times. He has to be prepared to say, in effect, “I get what I want and need from this relationship, or I’m leaving. You do what you promised, you give me what you promised, or I’m leaving.”
>
> More to the point, though, he has to know in his own mind and heart that he’ll be OK and that he can eventually replace her if he wants to. Most men are so beaten down that they don’t know this. They don’t even know that “no involvement with women” is an option. They don’t even understand “no woman is better than a bad woman”.
> It never occurs to them, “Hey, you know, I don’t have to take this sh!t. I don’t have to put up with your BS, your temper tantrums, your sexual deprivation, and your all around bad treatment. Being alone would be better than this.” And then go do it. It doesn’t occur to them because of the blue pill / churchian complex keeping these men in mental and emotional prisons.
> One of the things a man needs to do to choose a wife wisely is to know his own value, and withdraw all of it promptly from any woman who can’t or won’t give him what he wants and needs.

Although I slightly disagree with some of the points on how a man must deal with things, it’s for the most part an accurate on the male experience.

> Anti-deti response: I disagree. I neither loved my wife nor was sexually enamored with her when I got married. I married her because she was a smart, hardworking girl that I thought would make for a good partner in life. She loves me, I’m more or less ambivalent. She cooks, cleans, works, and f_cks, while staying out of my way for the most part.

As we will analyze, a woman 100% of the time wrote this comment.

> I disagree. I neither loved my wife nor was sexually enamored with her when I got married.

A. Very few men, aside from maybe players, won't marry a woman for love.

B. Women don't know how strong a man's sex drive is. Virtually 100% of men will marry a woman because he is sexually enamored with her.

The first sentence alone almost assures that a woman wrote it because this woman does not understand the male experience.

> I married her because she was a smart, hardworking girl that I thought would make for a good partner in life.

C. Notice the attributes that this woman describes that she likes in a "woman." It's the exact attributes that women like in a man.

They want a smart, hardworking man that is a good partner in life.

Very common saying that women say they want. Pure projection.

> She loves me, I'm more or less ambivalent.

D. The woman again projects her own feelings on this imaginary wife. This is why the Bible says men are to love their wives and wives are to respect their husbands. Different needs.

Men want respect from women not love. If a wife respected and adored her husband, he would love her and not be ambivalent about it.

> She cooks, cleans, works, and f_cks, while staying out of my way for the most part.

E. Finally, the woman attempts again to think like what a man would want, but stumbles in the middle. Yes, men generally want good cooking, cleaning, and sex.

However, most men absolutely do not care if a woman works and if she's sweet he definitely doesn't want her to stay out the way but be around him a lot.

TL;DR: The troll accounts always give themselves away because they don't understand the male experience and what men are looking for in the opposite sex. The reason for that is because the literally don't care, otherwise they would put some effort into learning about what men want and actually try to do it. Women like this are few and far between today.

Hypergamy galore: college vs HS or less education preferences

May 23, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ironically, IFStudies article on The College Dating Divide shows hypergamy in action.

> For single women, education appears to have a profound influence on dating expectations, according to a new report from the Survey Center on American Life. Close to half (45%) of college-educated single women say their relationship status is largely due to an inability to find someone who meets their expectations. For single women without a college degree, only 28% report that this is a major reason for their lack of a partner or spouse. Of six different reasons single women give for why they are not dating or in a relationship, the inability to find partners who measure up was cited most often.
> Women appear much more discerning than men when it comes to dating. However, there is a massive educational divide among women in their dating priorities. College-educated women are far more likely than those without a degree to say a partner's political views, personal habits, and current financial situation are important considerations.
> Of 10 different attributes measured in the figure below, a majority of college-educated women would consider nine of them to be liabilities in a potential partner. For the majority of women without a degree, only three—being unemployed, living with parents, and smoking—are dating liabilities.

We already knew this, but now we have a quantified chart!

There’s a few things of note on this chart.

- Women are more picky in a good way on health aspects – smoking
- Women are more picky with height, lives with parents, and monetarily/job wise when they make more. Something we already knew to be true for women – 6 foot, needs to be independent, and “his money is our money, and my money is my money”
- Most of the rest are due to leftist indoctrination – Trump, vaccines, religious, did not go to college, has children, is republican.
- Then the last one is similar leftest indoctrination but reversed which is interesting – More college educated want to date a feminist, but much HS or less people do.

Of course, even though the college educated women SAY this, that’s not what they actually want. Their hypergamy wants the masculine man, and they don’t actually like the liberal male feminist as has been proven time and time again.

The biggest gap is in did not go to college. This is profound because the gap in college education is now like 60:40 women:men in university. This means about 33% of those women (40:40 pair off, 20 left over out of 60 total women 20/60 = 33% of all women) are left over and if 50% of them are hypergamous enough to not want to date a man if he did not go to college, that means about 16-17% of women that are college educated women may not marry.

This is not including the fact that marriage being eliminated and cohabitation is mostly on the rise in lower incomes and non-college educated, so that’s why the estimates are closer to something like 30%+ of women may not marry. Many of them likely due to being priced out hypergamously because they won’t get a reign on it.

Authority in marriage is a must

May 27, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Now that the incendiary title is out of the way, I've been thinking about this for the past few weeks.

Essentially, how the world works is that everyone is under some sort of authority.

- When you're a child you're under the authority of your parents, teachers, and whoever else there is teaching or discipling you.
- When you're older as a student in university or a job you're under the authority of the school, teachers, or your boss
- Whatever opinions you hold such as if you're a democrat, republican, liberal or conservative, you're under the authority of whatever indoctrination they are trying to pile into your head.
- Jesus claimed to be under the authority of God, and the Bible makes clear that the Church is under the authority of Christ just as the disciples followed Christ.
- So the main thing under fire, especially in the Church, is the authority of husbands over wives.

Authority in all of these examples in essence is influence. It's not being able to force someone to do what you want, although you could probably do that. However, they would likely do it unwillingly.

Therefore, it's stupid for any man to enter a marriage where a woman is not under his authority and willingly following his lead. It's been said before that submission is not submission until there's disagreement. Many a wife will willingly follow her husband until she disagrees with something he said or does. It's not submission if you agree but when you disagree.

We can see the example of this with God and Jesus and Jesus and his disciples. Jesus sweat blood but submitted to the father's will in the garden. The disciples had many opinions about Jesus being the Messiah, but Jesus had to continually rebuke their notions of what they though the Messiah should be and to show them that His purpose was not a military kingdom but a spiritual kingdom that would reign forever.

The problem then is that if a wife is not under a husband's authority that means she's under someone else's or something's authority.

- Whether that is at the whims of the cultural tides
- Her friends or family whispering in her ear
- Her boss at work dictating her schedule
- Even her own feelings or prioritization of children over her husband
- Materialism or keeping up with the Jones'

As I've said before, this is the big temptation for wives as deti referenced in the recent post:

> It’s ironic. A large delusion that has come over the eyes of the Church. Women have no trouble submitting to their boss at work or their teacher in school or other human authorities because it is normal. But God forbid they submit to the husband to whom they committed their life to, who loves them the most, and the one they vowed to be with before God.

You can see how this can get messy real fast. If you don’t have authority or influence over her then someone or something does. She does what she wants, and what she wants is going to be deleterious in the majority of circumstances to the family unit.

Husbands can say they want an egalitarian marriage — and that is acceptable if a husband is willing to choose that by God’s authority vested in him as the leader in marriage — but this scenario only works in the specific instance of a woman submitting herself to God, being trustworthy, and having near if not full maturity in her own moral agency. This combination of 3 aspects is unlikely for many women to have in today’s culture and even the Church.

Therefore, any man that wants to be married should take the proper precautions and leadership reigns of any relationship he is in and ensure that such a prospective wife is willing to follow his lead even if she disagrees before marriage. There are many ways to test this that have been covered on this blog before, but it is imperative that he does this.

There are too many things out there that vie and fight for the authority and influence over a wife that can erode it slowly or quickly from a husband. Many many examples in the Church and even the sphere.

Don’t make the mistake of going into a marriage without knowing your wife will submit to you especially when she disagrees with your words or actions.

The unhaaaapy divorces affect kids the worst

May 31, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Aaron Renn covered this article in his newsletter, but I wanted to look at it more in-depth. This is actually a very old study (2000) and article (2001).

> After examining 300 marriages that ended in divorce, the researchers found that there were two types headed for divorce: high-and low-conflict. The prevailing wisdom is that most marriages that end in divorce are fraught with conflict, but the sociologists found the reverse: 60% of low-conflict marriages ended in divorce, compared with 40% of high-conflict ones. “I didn’t trust these findings, because they were counterintuitive,” Amato said.
> The researchers checked the statistics against an independent sample of 5,000 married individuals who, before divorcing, were also interviewed every few years by researchers from the University of Wisconsin at Madison. The results were the same: 60% of low-conflict marriages ended as compared with 40% of high-conflict unions.

This confirms what we know. Most divorces out there are not for cheating, partner violence, or any other “exceptions” that feminists and churchians hang their hats on.

I suspect these stats have gotten worse this study was published in 2000 and was recording married couples during the 1990s for 3-5+ years. It’s likely that most of the marriages divorcing for high conflict are likely under 40% and perhaps as low as 20-30%. The rest then would be low conflict divorces which would make up 70-80%+.

The reasons for this are obvious. Feminism, sex and the city, and all manner of divorce if you’re unhaaaaapy has become more normalized. Wives will jettison a “good man” over pretty much nothing. Include the college educated divorce rates that are now oft-quoted of 90% of divorces and you have likely much higher increased stats.

> “Being stuck in a household where there is a lot of discord puts children at greater risk for depression, problems in their own marriage when they do marry, problems in friendships and a tendency not to go on to college,” Amato said. “Divorce benefits these children because it removes them from an aversive, conflict-ridden, hostile home.” Perhaps most important, Amato said, divorce excises a negative role model of love from the home.
> “If you ask what is wrong with the marriage, these couples just go on and on,” Amato said. “These are what you would call terrible marriages–marriages that fit our preconception of divorcing couples.”
> But children whose divorced parents had low-conflict marriages (that is, they rarely fought and reported being pretty happy during the marriage, then continued to socialize and said they still loved each other after divorce), fared worse in adult romantic relationships. “When kids grow up in families with > parents who had these ‘good enough’ marriages that end in divorce, they do badly,” Amato said. “They are more likely to see their own marriages end in divorce and have problems in general forming intimate relationships.”

> Children in low-conflict households grew up thinking everything was OK, Amato said, and then the marriage suddenly ended. To them, the divorce was inexplicable. “These children,” Amato said, “have trouble making a commitment, question how much one can trust love and commitment, and in marriage, they have a lower threshold for problems which trigger thoughts of divorce.”
> Wallerstein found similar effects upon children whose parents’ divorces were not precipitated by conflict. “What I found from the children was that as adults they suffer from the fear of the second shoe dropping,” Wallerstein said. “I associate this with the fact that their parents’ divorce came out of the blue. They were horrified when their parents met them at the door after school and said, ‘We have decided to divorce.’ Some came home to find a parent gone.”
> The moral of the story is that parents who don’t have a combative relationship but are bored might want to ditch divorce plans to work much harder at their relationship. Or they may want to pause before filing those divorce papers in hopes that their marital happiness quotient will spike.

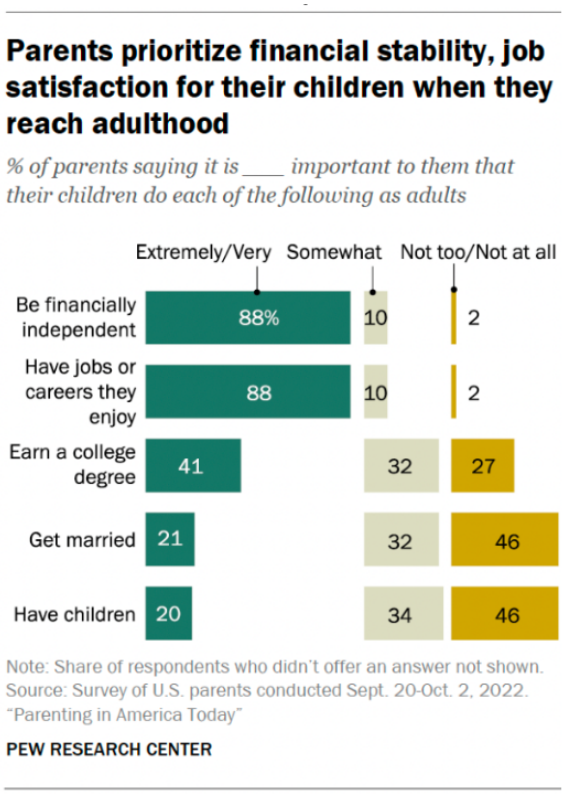
On the surface this does not make sense, but when you think about it does. Marriages that seem good and happy and then a parent just leaves will really shock a kid making them basically trend in a very negative direction on the Big 5 personality traits that increase risk of divorce:

- Less trusting/agreeable
- Less openness
- More neuroticism

It also teaches them by poor role model instead of a removing a poor role model. The high-conflict you’re removing the poor role models, but in the low-conflict or frivolous divorce you’re teaching them that a parent can leave at any time for even dumb reasons. This is probably why both men and women start to be either paranoid or fear avoidant. They’ll leave before the other person can leave them, or they will be walking on egg shells all the time because they fear someone will leave them.

Frivorces affect kids the worst.

> Linda Waite, a University of Chicago researcher, discovered that 80% of people who rated their marriages “unhappy” in a national survey, when asked five years later, ranked it “happier.” Of the couples who rated their marriages “miserable” (2%), about 77% rated them as “very happy” five years later.

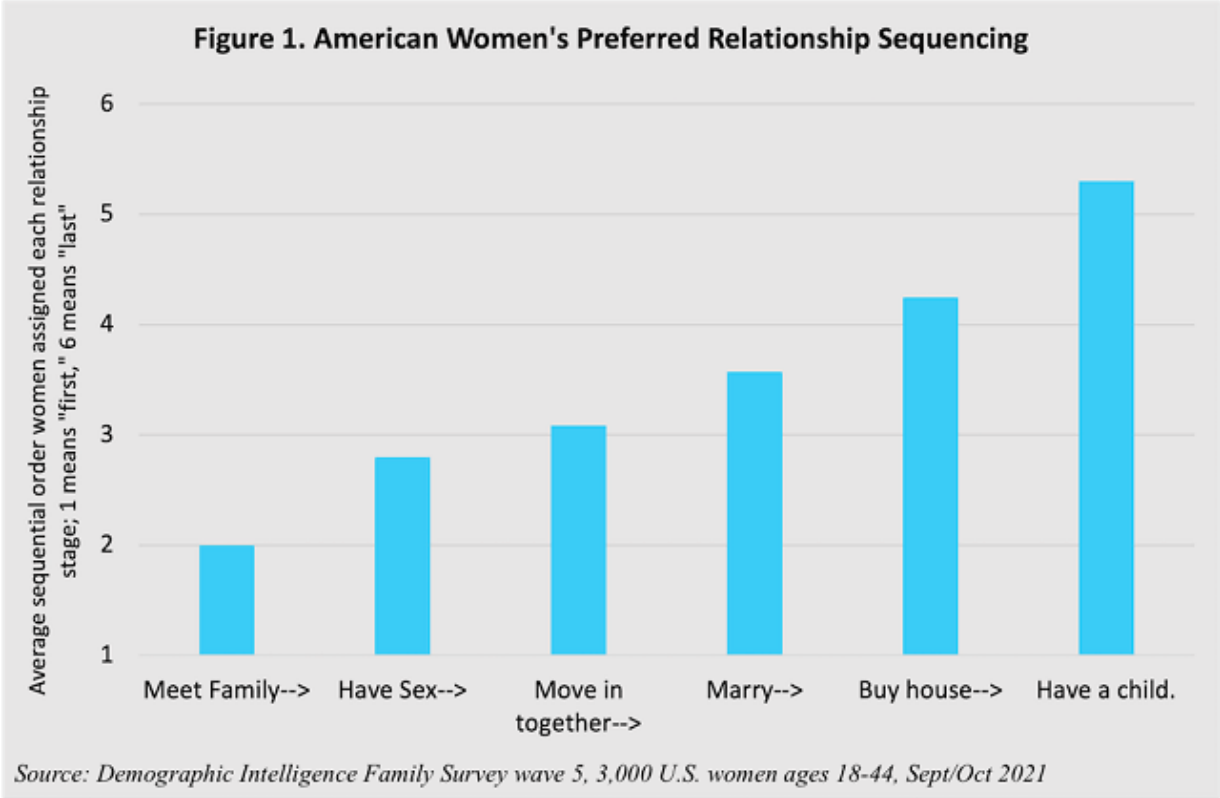


And of course if you work through it then most are happier later. Surprise surprise.

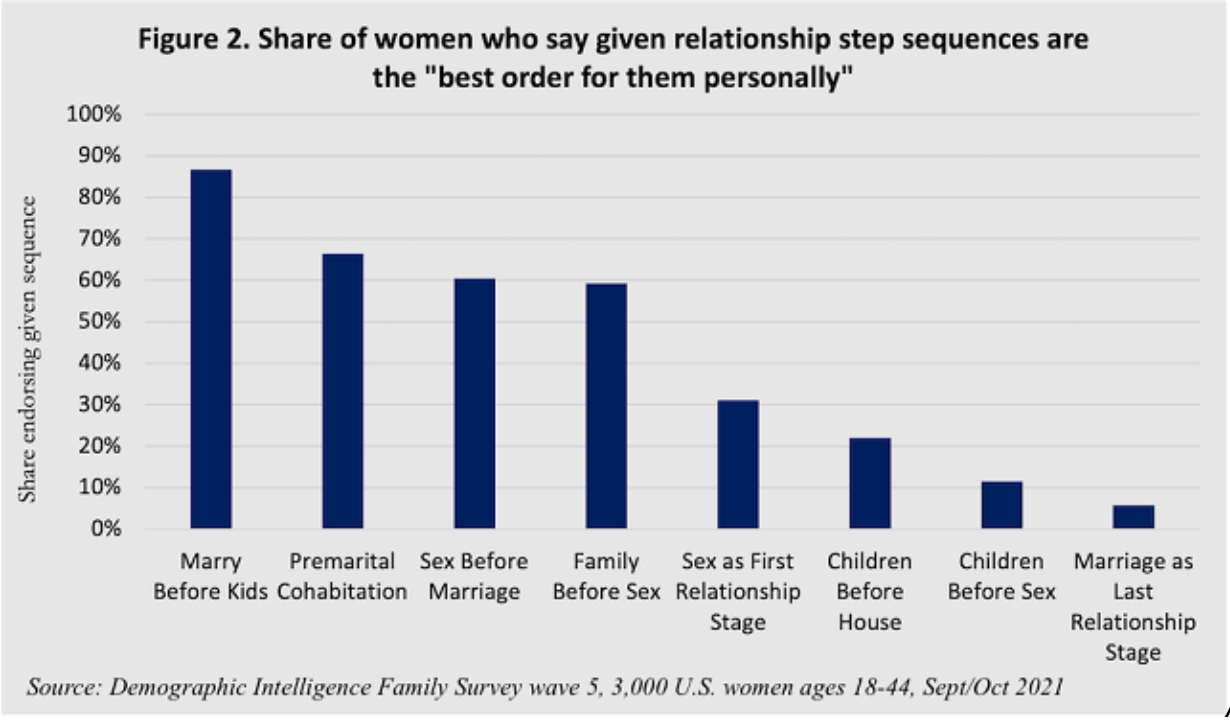
Research on how Life Scripts are the new normal

June 4, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

We've been talking about lift scripts for years now, but there's now actual research about how American parents are pushing it and the ordering of it in young adults.



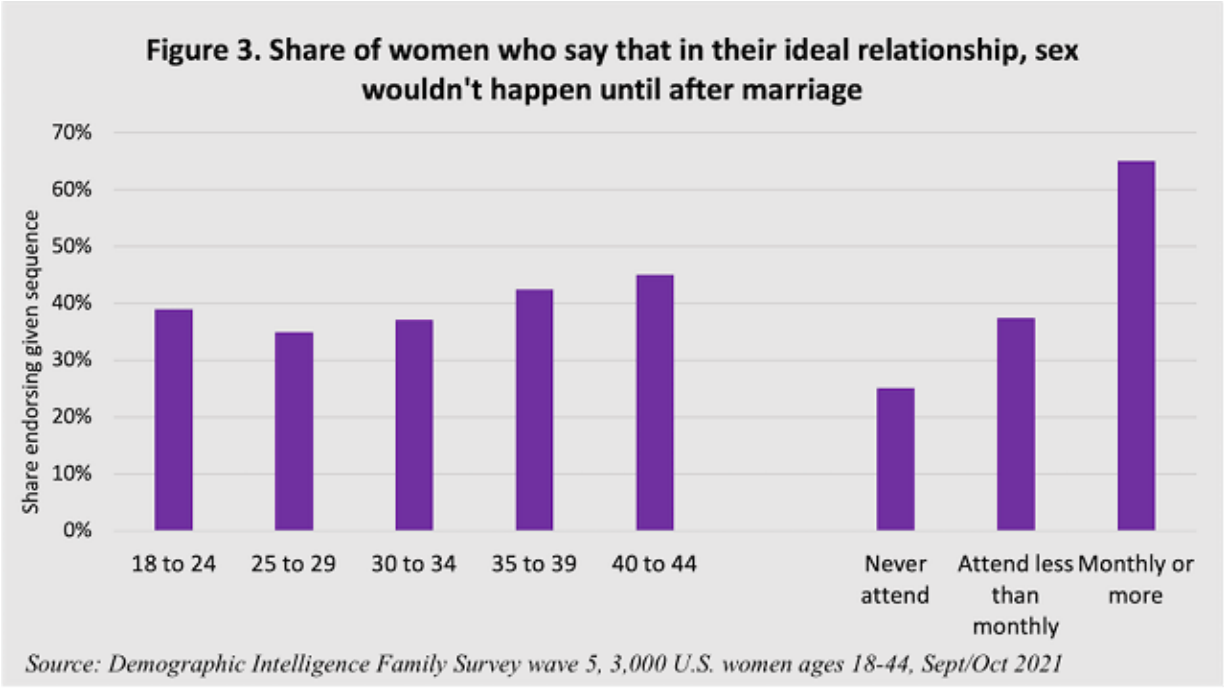
American parents are prioritizing university and having a job over getting married and having children.



All images from IFStudies links provided.

This is fairly obvious if you ask men and women about what they were taught when they were growing up. Almost everything is about doing good at school so you can get a good job and do stuff. Not much is taught about relationships and marriage or even important things in them

Putting Things in Order: Relationship Sequencing Preferences of American Women

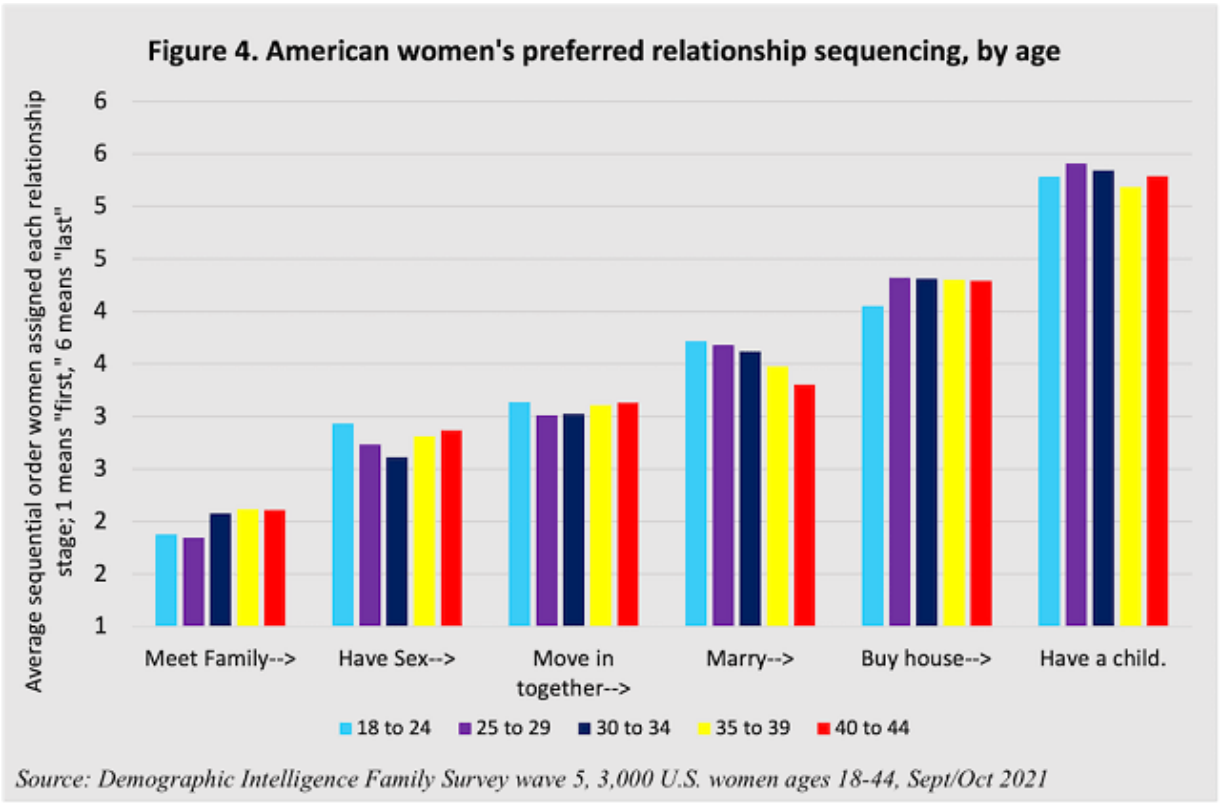


All images from IFStudies links provided.

In the preferred sequencing order, having sex and cohabitation are before marriage whereas they were traditionally and for Christians after. Can't tell much about the house as that's probably some part of the American Dream.

Now figure 2 is very interesting.

- 30% of women are whoring it up – sex as the first relationship stage
- The majority of women ~60-70% want cohabitation and 60% want sex before marriage. Clearly shows there are not much Christian values anymore.



- 60% saying they want family before sex doesn't show much except that a slight majority of women still have some extremely basic standards images from IFStudies links provided.

I assume this chart mainly shows women who call themselves Christians. The only thing of note in this chart is the Church attendance. Weekly attenders are the most important and like the other studies I've talked about there are more likely to be women that are virgins in Church.

Of course, ideal is not always what happens, so you can assume that many women have delusions of ideals but rarely do they happen.

images

from IFStudies links provided.

Finally, all fertile women have bought the cultural life scripts. The cultural penetration into the Church is pretty much standard. Pun intended.

The only good thing is that looking for a true Christian has never been easier. You just bring up the hard topics in the Bible and see if they agree and actually do what it says in their daily life. It’s just that there are few of them.

Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment

June 9, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Expanding on my comment on Jack's latest post.

> "Another way to comprehend the Peaceful Unity Marriage Model is by regarding the marital relationship as DeepStrength outlined in Structures of Authority Summarized (2014/5/16). Here, DS describes how the husband's perspective is to view his wife as a co-heir, companion, and friend, while the wife's perspective is to respect and submit to her husband as her authoritative Head."
> "Derek's view of marriage lines up with DS's model to a tee."
> "Based on how Derek describes this from his own personal perspective, yes, it does sound like what we would call egalitarian, but that's not it at all, and he doesn't seem to be able to articulate this difference very well. Also, we cannot observe the graceful faith of his wife's submission, which makes all the difference in the world, so this absence of information further obscures the truth of the matter."

Maybe.

Agree — On the surface, this appears to potentially be what Derek is saying, based on his agreement with your take here.

Disagree — Derek's wording is still suspicious because he does not believe husbands have any authority in marriage when it is clear that they should.

However, what may clear up a potential disconnect is that Jesus makes it clear that authority is present, but it is not "Gentile" authority but "genuine" authority.

> Matthew 20:25-28 (ESV)
> 25 But Jesus called them to him and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great ones exercise authority over them. 26 It shall not be so among you. But whoever would be great among you must be your servant, 27 and whoever would be first among you must be your slave, 28 even as the Son of Man came not to be served but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many."
> and
> John 13:12-17 (ESV)
> 12 When he had finished washing their feet, he put on his clothes and returned to his place. "Do you understand what I have done for you?" he asked them. 13 "You call me 'Teacher' and 'Lord,' and rightly so, for that is what I am. 14 Now that I, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also should wash one another's feet. 15 I have set you an example that you should do as I have done > for you. 16 Very truly I tell you, no servant is greater than his master, nor is a messenger greater than the one who sent him. 17 Now that you know these things, you will be blessed if you do them.

Jesus makes it clear that His authority is to be used to love and serve the disciples and by extension the Church, which makes this a clear analogy for husbands and wives with Christ : Church :: Husbands : Wives.

If Derek agrees that (1) a husband has authority in marriage, and (2) a husband's authority in marriage is to be used to love and serve, then I agree with him.

If he denies the husband has any authority, then I still cannot agree as that does not fit the model represented in Scripture at least according to my knowledge.

He may also disagree that a husband has authority to discipline and reprove his wife though, and that much is clear in our relationship with God in Hebrews 12 and Revelation 2-3. If so, it seems like there is still a clear distinction from what he believes and how headship can be applied to a rebellious wife.

As other commenters make clear, he doesn't have any solutions for the husbands with rebellious wives, even though we know that a husband acting as the leader / authority is a step on the way to the model I made on my blog.

More elaboration

Derek's response is a bit confusing to me.

> (1) "A husband's [right to give orders, make decisions, and enforce obedience] in marriage is to be used to love and serve."
> (2) "A husband's [having power in the marital sphere] in marriage is to be used to love and serve."
> (3) "A husband's [power to influence his wife by his commanding manner or knowledge] in marriage is to be used to love and serve."
> Of these candidate paraphrases of Ephesians 5, I do not see how you get any of them from Matthew 20:25 and John 13:12. A servant or slave does not have authority of the types above: they take orders from another. When Jesus washed of feet of his disciples, he was socially debasing himself. None of these definitions seem to capture the essence.
> I can agree that a husband has the authority to love, serve, and sacrifice as Christ did, but I'm not sure this is what you mean when you say a husband has authority. Unless the definition of the English word is getting in the way, you are implying much more from authority than I am reading in the words of Jesus.

Jesus was not simply socially debasing himself. He was using the example of him having authority over his disciples and then using it to love and serve others to the point of debasement/death. There's no other way to understand it because he references his authority in both passages which means he is saying this is "genuine authority" and how a leader should act.

> Matthew 20:25 But Jesus called them to him and said, “You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great ones exercise authority over them. 26 It shall not be so among you.
> John 13:13 “You call me ‘Teacher’ and ‘Lord,’ and rightly so, for that is what I am. 14 Now that I, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also should wash one another’s feet. 15 I have set you an example that you should do as I have done for you.

Similarly, we see the same thing as wives are compared to slaves in submission to their husbands and masters respectively as per the analogy in 1 Peter 2 and 3.

> 1 Peter 2:18 Slaves, in reverent fear of God submit yourselves to your masters, not only to those who are good and considerate, but also to those who are harsh. 19 For it is commendable if someone bears up under the pain of unjust suffering because they are conscious of God. 20 But how is it to your credit if you receive a beating for doing wrong and endure it? But if you suffer for doing good and you endure it, this is commendable before God. 21 To this you were called, because Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you should follow in his steps. …
> 1 Peter 3:3 Wives, in the same way submit yourselves to your own husbands so that, if any of them do not believe the word, they may be won over without words by the behavior of their wives, 2 when they see the purity and reverence of your lives. 3 Your beauty should not come from outward adornment, such as elaborate hairstyles and the wearing of gold jewelry or fine clothes. 4 Rather, it should be that of your inner self, the unfading beauty of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is of great worth in God’s sight. 5 For this is the way the holy women of the past who put their hope in God used to adorn themselves. They submitted themselves to their own husbands, 6 like Sarah, who obeyed Abraham and called him her lord. You are her daughters if you do what is right and do not give way to fear.

Jesus clearly shows how to use authority as genuine vs Gentile. Paul tells us that Christ:Church::husbands:wives which means headship authority and submission of Church and Christ also applies to marriage. Similarly, Peter demonstrates that even unjust masters and husbands authority over their slaves and wives should be met with respectful submission.

Clearly, though, Christian husbands are to not use their headship authority as Gentiles but Jesus’ example of genuine, but for those wives with unbelieving husbands they are still to act in the same Christian manner regardless of Gentile or Genuine Headship.

To distinguish the difference between Gentile and Genuine authority more:

- Gentile authority – lording and exercising authority over others
- Genuine authority – using authority loving and serving others

The specific problem that we run into is that many of Jesus’ actions toward the disciples often can seem like Gentile authority. For instance:

- Jesus regularly chastises the disciples for their lack of faith
- He rebukes the disciples when they stop the little children from coming to them
- The disciples regularly insist that they start arming themselves to oppose the Romans, but Jesus tells them to lay down their weapons and that His kingdom is not of this world
- He also tells them several times to do things like ministry, get things to eat, get a donkey for the triumphal entry, and other things. This is quite clear.
- Even in Revelation 2-3, Jesus rebukes the Churches for several different reasons and says that if they don't repent then they'll be thrown out

It seems safe to say that Jesus is acting as the head and authority by leading and teaching the disciples about His kingdom and how to act it in. The same analogy Paul makes about Jesus:Church::husbands:wives and Peter makes about wives' submission to their husbands like slaves to their masters. Additionally, I think that most of us would assert that Jesus was doing all of these things so that he could teach his disciples about God's will and not to lord his authority over them.

Thus, it can be established that chastising, rebuking, telling the disciples to do certain things, and even making ultimatums toward the disciples/Church is not necessarily "lording authority" over them. His ultimate goal is their salvation and sanctification. Even though it may seem like Jesus may be using his authority/headship harshly at times. Indeed, even though Jesus was harsh in calling out the Pharisees' sin especially in Matthew 23, it seems that some Pharisees did end up repenting and following like Nicodemus.

The main disconnect appears to be that for those that believe in egalitiarianism or headship != authority is that they don't understand that authority can be used lovingly to do similar things that Jesus did or they want to deny authority altogether. Jesus called out others wrong thinking and sin — even the disciples and Church — and calls them to repent and be sanctified. Husbands are tasked with that headship authority in their marriage to do that, even though it can seem harsh at times.

Moral agency and sex define a marriage

June 14, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've given my opinion on what marriage components are from the Bible, but I've also been thinking about this as bit more with Jack's series trying to think of an improved framework.

- https://sigmaframe.wordpress.com/2023/06/03/are-common-law-marriages-the-most-biblical/
- https://sigmaframe.wordpress.com/2023/06/04/bridal-charades/
- https://sigmaframe.wordpress.com/2023/06/12/a-concise-history-of-marriage-regulations/
- https://sigmaframe.wordpress.com/2023/06/14/superposition/

Then it all came to me based on what we learned from the previous series on moral agencies of wives.

- Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives through sanctification
- The general process of sanctification with moral discernment, moral agency, and mature theosis
- Jack's summary of many posts on moral agency (of wives).

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless.

To summarize the above, husbands are tasked by God to improve the moral agency of their wives during marriage especially because they are more easily deceived.

Thus, the parallel before marriage starts is that some amount of moral agency is needed from both the husband and wife in order to create a marriage along with sex.

The example that always bothered me was that virtually everyone — Christian and non-Christian alike — would say that two teenagers who promise to be married because they want to have sex with each other and then have sex are not considered married. It's an empty promise spurred on by hormones and temptations.

What then does some of the Scriptures say about moral agency and marriage?

1. In the Scriptures there are some limited times such as in Exodus 22 where a father can veto a marriage. This is basically saying that the daughter/woman does not have enough moral agency to assent to the marriage herself.
2. Similarly, in Numbers 30 husbands can nullify vows from their wives which also says that wives may be too rash and not have good enough moral agency to fully understand what she is doing.

3. Also, God tasks husbands in the NT to sanctify their wives so they can mature to have full moral agency.

What we have here is a pattern where moral agency is a primary aspect of establishing a marriage along with sex, and God still requiring that mature moral agency be the full end goal as well.

Given this pattern, it stands to reason then that the various other factors that often go along with marriage in the Bible also tend to approximate establishing enough moral agency for the marriage to be legitimate.

- Sacrament through the Church with Catholics and Orthodox, and likewise with Protestants but not as formally. Moral agency to formally assent to what God says marriage is.
- Parental agreement is one of the ways moral agency of those being married may be affirmed such as with the Patriarchs getting a bride for their children or arranged marriages. The children getting married usually affirm this through participation in a wedding ceremony/vows and sex.
- Ceremony and vows are another common way this is affirmed. Again, moral agency to assent to the the marriage.
- State-based marriage also approximates this as well. Moral agency to agree to be married in the eyes of the state.
- Sex = marriage is possibly, in the context of the assent of unhindered moral agency to become one.
- Lack of moral agency of the infatuated teenagers means that their supposed marriage is not a marriage.

Essentially, the various components of marriage aside from sex across the Bible and various cultures are there to help approximate moral agency of those married to become one which creates the unity of a family.

Why moral agency and sex?

Moral agency is also the way we as Christians become believers. We admit we're sinners, confess our sins, and believe that Jesus rose from the dead and follow His example. This is the mystery of Christ and the Church, and through our moral agency we agree with Jesus and become His followers to participate in the oneness of the Christ-Church. This is the analogy for the marriage of husbands and wives – Christ:Church::husbands:wives.

Conversely, it was a sinful moral agency at the fall that separated Adam and Eve from the fellowship/oneness with God in the garden. It is a sinful moral agency that where the Pharisees were divorcing their wives.

It also appears to me that moral agency led Jesus to say the phrase: "What God has put together let no man separate." Spiritual unity through moral agency along with the physical manifestation of unity in sex results in a marriage, just as with the Covenants in the OT and NT they are assented by the parties and sealed in blood.

Thus, moral agency and sex define a marriage.

Marriage simply looks messy in the Bible because moral agency can be expressed through many different forms.

Sex is not marriage in certain Biblical circumstances

June 27, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

This is not really worth it's own post given the last two posts. But here we go anyway.

- Moral agency and sex define a marriage
- Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment

The example that just popped into my head where Sex is not Marriage even in Genesis is Judah and Tamar. It also gives us some background on what is considered not marriage = sex.

> Genesis 38:11 Judah then said to his daughter-in-law Tamar, "Live as a widow in your father's household until my son Shelah grows up." For he thought, "He may die too, just like his brothers." So Tamar went to live in her father's household.
> 12 After a long time Judah's wife, the daughter of Shua, died. When Judah had recovered from his grief, he went up to Timnah, to the men who were shearing his sheep, and his friend Hirah the Adullamite went with him.
> 13 When Tamar was told, "Your father-in-law is on his way to Timnah to shear his sheep," 14 she took off her widow's clothes, covered herself with a veil to disguise herself, and then sat down at the entrance to Enaim, which is on the road to Timnah. For she saw that, though Shelah had now grown up, she had not been given to him as his wife.
> 15 When Judah saw her, he thought she was a prostitute, for she had covered her face. 16 Not realizing that she was his daughter-in-law, he went over to her by the roadside and said, "Come now, let me sleep with you.""And what will you give me to sleep with you?" she asked.
> 17 "I'll send you a young goat from my flock," he said."Will you give me something as a pledge until you send it?" she asked.
> 18 He said, "What pledge should I give you?""Your seal and its cord, and the staff in your hand," she answered. So he gave them to her and slept with her, and she became pregnant by him. 19 After she left, she took off her veil and put on her widow's clothes again.
> 20 Meanwhile Judah sent the young goat by his friend the Adullamite in order to get his pledge back from the woman, but he did not find her. 21 He asked the men who lived there, "Where is the shrine prostitute who was beside the road at Enaim?"
> "There hasn't been any shrine prostitute here," they said.
> 22 So he went back to Judah and said, "I didn't find her. Besides, the men who lived there said, 'There hasn't been any shrine prostitute here.'"23 Then Judah said, "Let her keep what she has, or we will become a laughingstock. After all, I > did send her this young goat, but you didn't find her."

> 24 About three months later Judah was told, "Your daughter-in-law Tamar is guilty of prostitution, and as a result she is now pregnant."Judah said, "Bring her out and have her burned to death!"25 As she was being brought out, she sent a message to her father-in-law. "I am pregnant by the man who owns these," she said. And she added, "See if you recognize whose seal and cord and staff these are."
> 26 Judah recognized them and said, "She is more righteous than I, since I wouldn't give her to my son Shelah." And he did not sleep with her again.

Presumably, sex via prostitution was not considered sex as marriage. This means that there is something else involved in creation of marriage, and I believe it to be the moral agency in making the marriage covenant along with sex.

> John 4:16 He told her, "Go, call your husband and come back."
> 17 "I have no husband," she replied.
> Jesus said to her, "You are right when you say you have no husband. 18 The fact is, you have had five husbands, and the man you now have is not your husband. What you have just said is quite true."

The same is true with the Samaritan woman at the well. She was married several times, but the man she was living with and presumably having sex with was not her husband. Sex was not marriage in this last instance, even if she was able to be married several times before.

It's also common knowledge that many of the other probably prostitutes of the Bible such as Rahab were not married, but were eventually able to be. Both Rahab and Tamar were included in the line of Jesus for being righteous despite their pasts.

The vast majority of sex outside of marriage today may very well be termed prostitution or whoredom. In other words, the people doing it are not trying to get married. They are shrine prostitutes for the temple of hedonism.

Thus, it seems to be that despite what regulations have been put on marriage from the Bible to the Church to secular sources until now, that there is an understanding that some type of moral agency agreement of a marriage must be in place in addition to sex to create a marriage. The sex = marriage commenters like to gloss over the fact that most of the common law marriages in the past were people who agreed to live together as married or in the Bible had their parents, themselves, or a servant (e.g. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, etc) negotiate with the father for the bride and sometimes agreement of the bride.

Maybe the agreement to live together as married didn't have a ceremony, vows, or other things that we traditionally associate with weddings now, but they did have that understanding that they were married along with the sex. The moral agency of the marriage agreement in particular seems to be the dividing line between the teenagers who want to be "married" just to have sex and the father annulment of the potential marriage in the Law of Moses. Those would not be true marriages but the ones where people are exercising moral agency are.

Past sexual history and willingness to engage in relationships or marriage

July 3, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Since we're on the topic of marriage, recently ran across an interesting study done 6-7 years ago.

Sexual History and Present Attractiveness: People Want a Mate With a Bit of a Past, But Not Too Much

> The aim of this study was to explore how people's sexual history affects their attractiveness. Using an Internet survey, 188 participants rated their willingness to engage in a relationship with a hypothetical individual with a specified number of past sexual partners, ranging from 0 to 60+. The effect of past partner number was very large. Average willingness ratings initially rose as past partner number rose, but then fell dramatically. For short-term relationships, men were more willing than women to get involved (although the difference was not large). For long-term relationships, in contrast, there was virtually no sex difference. Thus, contrary to the idea that male promiscuity is tolerated but female promiscuity is not, both sexes expressed equal reluctance to get involved with someone with an overly extensive sexual history. Finally, participants with an unrestricted sociosexual orientation (high SO participants) were more tolerant than low SO participants of prospective mates with higher numbers of past sexual partners but were also less tolerant of prospective mates with low numbers of past sexual partners.

Essentially, they have confirmed several things from culture which we will go over in the charts. The problem with this study is mainly that the low amount of people who did it means it's not necessarily representative of entire populations, but given the data I think it's fairly reliable as it shows practically what we have known.

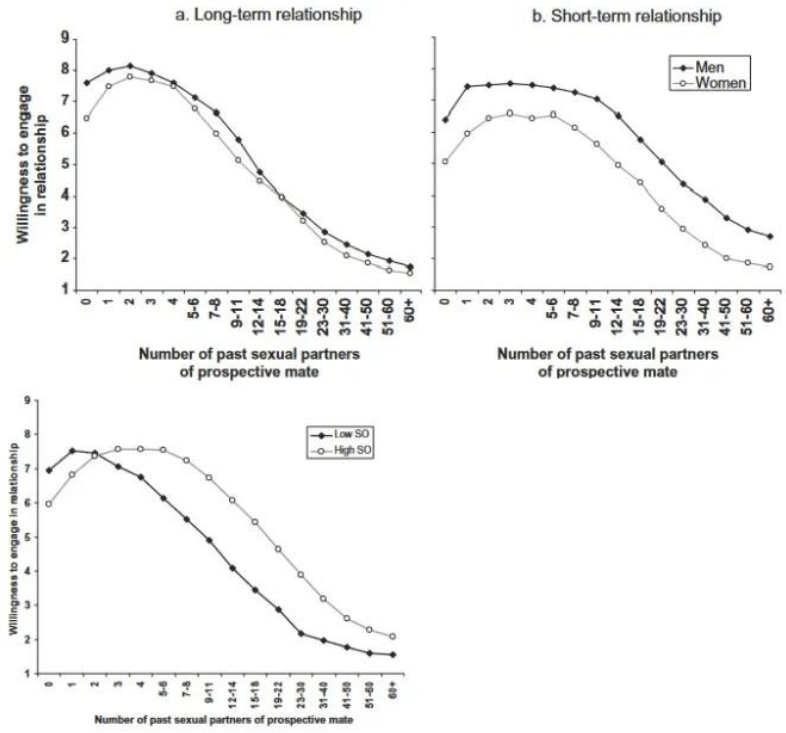

Figure 3. High-SO versus low-SO participants' willingness to engage in a relationship as a function of a prospective mate's number of past sexual partners.

The first two charts show that for long term relationships both men and women prefer overwhelmingly that their husband or wife have low partner counts. This may seem intuitive to the manosphere but it makes sense from a trust perspective. You implicitly don't want someone who wants to go out and play the field when married. Both men and women prefer that their husband or wife have < 5-6 partners with a precipitous drop after that.

The difference in the long and short term relationships is stark. Men overwhelmingly are much more willing have sex with everyone, but their filters for long term and marriage relationships are stronger.

Conversely, women as a whole are less likely to sleep around in short term relationships, but when they do they reduce the amount of 0-22 partners they are willing to be with and actually increase the total number of 22-60+ partners they are willing to be with over the long term willingness. This supports the point that the minority of promiscuous women are sleeping with tons of men.

The last chart shows that low N-count men and women overwhelmingly prefer a woman for long term or marriage that has 0-4 partners or less. The high N-count people tend to be more lax in their preferences. I wouldn't be shocked if you separated the low SO counts out that men would prefer virgins more than women though.

Generally, the study as a whole does demonstrate at least for long term partners, people still prefer that their partners have lower N counts. This makes sense as you're able to trust people who have lower N counts more than men and women who have been playing the field for a long time and likely have greater propensities to cheat.

This chart is a wide dispersal of people, and it's not a survey of Christians. I'd expect most Christian men to overwhelming prefer virgins or at most like 1-2 partners. I'd expect similar of Christian women but probably a little less pronounced than Christian men as women are not as worried about past sexual history as men. However, the chaste Christian virgins usually do prefer their man to be a virgin or in the 1-2 partner range for the most part.

Sex is not Marriage Final Thoughts

July 15, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've written many posts on this, but let's sum up the evidence.

- Sex is not marriage in certain Biblical circumstances
- Moral agency and sex define a marriage
- Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment
- Marriage marriage components
- Marriage

Genesis 2 – Marriage is not Just Sex

As a review, marriage in Genesis 2 is not simply "and they shall become one flesh." We can see that God acts as the first Father to give Adam his wife Eve:

> 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place.
> 22 The Lord God fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man.
> 23 "This is now bone of my bones, And flesh of my flesh; She shall be called Woman, Because she was taken out of Man."

Likewise, there is the aspect of separation and joining, and sex:

> 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

The original marriage is a framework. It tells us important components of what a marriage, which are namely:

1. Father giving the daughter to the man — God giving Eve to Adam
2. Separating from family(s) — leaving father and mother [to make an independent family unit]
3. Coming together [to be with and live with] — joined to his wife
4. Having sex — becoming one flesh
5. In the presence of witnesses [traditionally with a wedding celebration] — in this case, Father/Jesus/Spirit and potentially angels.

Now, there are examples from the Scriptures where some of these components are missing, but ideally you want all of these to make up a marriage given our example from Genesis 2. Jesus celebrating with the wedding at Cana and His own marriage to His bride in Revelation 19 are obvious examples. Jesus and the Father also bear witness for themselves and others as Jesus indicates in the gospels.

Now, we can generally group the 5 above components into 3 categories.

1. Agreement of the Covenant — Father giving the daughter, separating from family to be an independent family unit, and coming to live together. 1-3 above.
2. Having sex — becoming one flesh
3. Witnesses — for proof, and also for celebration usually.

Theoretically, a husband and wife can be witnesses for each other in the sight of God. But the agreement of a marriage covenant and sex are required.

Why covenant agreement is a necessary part

All covenants in the Bible are composed of an agreement, blood, and witnesses. In the case of the Lord's covenants with others such as Noah, Abraham, Jesus, and so on, the Lord is the witness. For instance, the Abrahamic covenant God starts with promising Abraham an heir before making the covenant.

> Genesis 15:1 After this, the word of the Lord came to Abram in a vision: "Do not be afraid, Abram. I am your shield, your very great reward." 2 But Abram said, "Sovereign Lord, what can you give me since I remain childless and the one who will inherit my estate is Eliezer of Damascus?" 3 And Abram said, "You have given me no children; so a servant in my household will be my heir." 4 Then the word of the Lord came to him: "This man will not be your heir, but a son who is your own flesh and blood will be your heir." 5 He took him outside and said, "Look up at the sky and count the stars—if indeed you can count them." Then he said to him, "So shall your offspring be."
> Genesis 15:6 Abram believed the Lord, and he credited it to him as righteousness. 7 He also said to him, "I am the Lord, who brought you out of Ur of the Chaldeans to give you this land to take possession of it."8 But Abram said, "Sovereign Lord, how can I know that I will gain possession of it?"
> 9 So the Lord said to him, "Bring me a heifer, a goat and a ram, each three years old, along with a dove and a young pigeon." 10 Abram brought all these to him, cut them in two and arranged the halves opposite each other; the birds, however, he did not cut in half. 11 Then birds of prey came down on the carcasses, but Abram drove them away.
> 12 As the sun was setting, Abram fell into a deep sleep, and a thick and dreadful darkness came over him. 13 Then the Lord said to him, "Know for certain that for four hundred years your descendants will be strangers in a country not their own and that they will be enslaved and mistreated there. 14 But I will punish the nation they serve as slaves, and afterward they will come out with great possessions. 15 You, however, will go to your ancestors in peace and be buried at a good old age. 16 In the fourth generation your descendants will come back here, for the sin of the Amorites has not yet reached its full measure."

> 17 When the sun had set and darkness had fallen, a smoking firepot with a blazing torch appeared and passed between the pieces. 18a On that day the Lord made a covenant with Abram

Verifying the covenant starts in v9.

- God establishes the covenant
- The blood sacrifice of animals
- The Lord bears witness

Noah, Jesus, and all other covenants follow the same pattern.

Other examples of marriage in Genesis

- Abraham goes to negotiate with his relatives.
- Abraham sends a servant to negotiate for Rebecca for Isaac.
- Jacob negotiates with Laban for himself.

The example of Abraham, Isaac, and Rebekah is oft touted as sex = marriage because "Isaac went into the tent and had sex with Rebekah, but this is clearly not the case from examining the context of the passage.

> Genesis 24:50 Laban and Bethuel answered, "This is from the Lord; we can say nothing to you one way or the other. 51 Here is Rebekah; take her and go, and let her become the wife of your master's son, as the Lord has directed." 52 When Abraham's servant heard what they said, he bowed down to the ground before the Lord. 53 Then the servant brought out gold and silver jewelry and articles of clothing and gave them to Rebekah; he also gave costly gifts to her brother and to her mother. 54 Then he and the men who were with him ate and drank and spent the night there. When they got up the next morning, he said, "Send me on my way to my master." 55 But her brother and her mother replied, "Let the young woman remain with us ten days or so; then you may go." 56 But he said to them, "Do not detain me, now that the Lord has granted success to my journey. Send me on my way so I may go to my master."
> 57 Then they said, "Let's call the young woman and ask her about it." 58 So they called Rebekah and asked her, "Will you go with this man?" "I will go," she said.

Both Laban and Bethuel agree to marriage, as well as Rebekah herself. Father and daughter agreement for marriage, which is consistent with Jewish tradition that the daughter can potentially reject suitors.

> Genesis 24:62 Now Isaac had come from Beer Lahai Roi, for he was living in the Negev. 63 He went out to the field one evening to meditate, and as he looked up, he saw camels approaching. 64 Rebekah also looked up and saw Isaac. She got down from her camel 65 and asked the servant, "Who is that man in the field coming to meet us?" "He is my master," the servant answered. So she took her > veil and covered herself. 66 Then the servant told Isaac all he had done.

> 67 Isaac brought her into the tent of his mother Sarah, and he married Rebekah. So she became his wife, and he loved her; and Isaac was comforted after his mother's death.

Isaac clearly agrees, and goes into the tent and consummates the marriage by having sex.

This clearly follows the pattern established in Genesis 2 of:

1. Father giving the daughter away
2. Separating from family
3. Isaac and Rebekah agreeing and coming together
4. Sex
5. Witnesses – her family and Abraham, the servant, and his family

This is just elementary stuff comparing the passages. The only way you can get sex = marriage is to cherry pick the singular verses.

Examples of sex not equaling marriage

In the recent posts, I detailed why sex is not marriage through other various examples.

- Prostitution was common such as the example of Tamar and Judah, the woman at the well (John 3 – 5 husbands but living with one who was not her husband), and other examples. It was sinful sex but not marriage to sleep with a prostitute.
- In the Law a father can say that his seduced daughter is not married if he sees that the man is not right for his daughter or his daughter did not make a wise decision.
- In a similar manner, a husband can also nullify his wife's vows via not immature moral agency on her part

But you may ask, what about the example of being unevenly yoked in the Bible? Good question.

> 2 Corinthians 6:4 Do not be unevenly yoked with unbelievers; for what do righteousness and lawlessness share together, or what does light have in common with darkness? 15 Or what harmony does Christ have with Belial, or what does a believer share with an unbeliever? 16 Or what agreement does the temple of God have with idols? For we are the temple of the living God; just as God said, "I will dwell among them and walk among them; And I will be their God, and they shall be My people. 17 Therefore, come out from their midst and be separate," says the Lord. "And do not touch what is unclean; And I will welcome you. 18 And I will be a father to you, And you shall be sons and daughters to Me," Says the Lord Almighty.

Obviously, we do not want to be unevenly yoked with an unbeliever, but if it has already happened the marriage is sanctifying for the unbeliever if the unbeliever decides to live with the believer.

> 1 Corinthians 7:13 And if any woman has an unbelieving husband, and he consents to live with her, she must not divorce her husband. 14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through her believing husband; for otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 15 Yet if the unbelieving one is leaving, let him leave; the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God has called us in peace. 16 For how do you know, wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, husband, whether you will save your wife?

This also informs us about the one flesh verse.

> 1 Corinthians 6:15 Do you not know that your bodies are parts of Christ? Shall I then take away the parts of Christ and make them parts of a prostitute? Far from it! 16 Or do you not know that the one who joins himself to a prostitute is one body with her? For He says, “The two shall become one flesh.” 17 But the one who joins himself to the Lord is one spirit with Him. 18 Flee sexual immorality. Every other sin that a person commits is outside the body, but the sexually immoral person sins against his own body. 19 Or do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, whom you have from God, and that you are not your own? 20 For you have been bought for a price: therefore glorify God in your body.

Paul makes the distinction of marriage from the one flesh.

- The one flesh union of the prostitute with the believer does not sanctify the prostitute like marriage of a Christian does with the unbeliever. Hence, the distinction between prostitution (porne like porneia in 1 Cor 6) and unbeliever (apistos – used in both 1 Cor 7 and 2 Cor 6).
- Obviously, you are not supposed to marry an unbeliever regardless, but at least they can be sanctified through the marriage. Those who do will have many troubles in marriage.
- The one flesh union is distinguished that it is supposed to only be in marriage like with the Lord (Father and Jesus) as with Jesus and Christians.

Regarding the second point, the intent of the one flesh union is only supposed to be in marriage. However, it is a mistake to think that means that it is the only component of marriage.

This is a syllogism fallacy. For instance:

1. Having sex with a prostitute is becoming one flesh
2. Becoming one flesh is marriage
3. Therefore, marriage is having sex with a prostitute.

#2 is an improper premise, when it has clearly been established in several different points above with numerous examples in the Scripture that marriage is not just formed with sex. It has the agreement component which is clearly established through the first several sections of this post.

It's the same as saying something like:

1. All cows produce milk
2. Producing milk is something all mammals do
3. Therefore, all mammals are all cows.

This is clearly not the case. All cows are mammals, but that doesn't mean that all mammals are cows. In the same way, Paul's point is that sex with a prostitute can produce a one flesh union that is supposed to be only for marriage. You don't want that. But that also doesn't mean that the one flesh union is all of what constitutes marriage.

Joseph and Mary

Joseph and Mary are an interesting example in the Bible because of Jewish customs at the time.

> Matthew 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus the Messiah was as follows: when His mother Mary had been betrothed to Joseph, before they came together she was found to be pregnant by the Holy Spirit. 19 And her husband Joseph, since he was a righteous man and did not want to disgrace her, planned to send her away secretly.

We know that engagement between Joseph and Mary when Mary was found pregnant was a binding form of engagement which required an annulment at the time to break much like marriage. If sex = marriage, there is no reason that an annulment of the engagement is necessary because there was no marriage.

Jesus was directly against many of the additions to the Law of the Pharisees and mentioned them by name, but He distinctly does not discuss this case of Jewish customs supposedly adding to the Law. The likely reason for this is that covenants, including marriage, require both agreement and sex/blood.

Jesus New Covenant in His blood with Christians the Church is the analogy for husbands and wives

If all these examples for the agreement and sex as marriage and against sex = marriage are not enough, there is crystal clear example of Jesus and the Church.

- Jesus' New Covenant in His blood is formed when Christians agree to believe in Jesus, repent of their sins, and follow Him.
- Ephesians 5 is clear on the analogy of Christ and the Church for husbands and wives: Christ:Church::husbands:wives.
- Hence, marriage is an binding moral agreement between Christ and a Christian (who make up the Church), much like husbands and wives need to agree to be married to live together and have sex.

The marriage of Christ and the Church is not formed by Jesus' blood only (e.g. sex for marriage), but by the agreement of the Christian to follow Jesus and Jesus accepting that both with the individual Christian and the Church along with Jesus blood (e.g. sex for marriage).

> Ephesians 1:11 In him we were also chosen, having been predestined according to the plan of him who works out everything in conformity with the purpose of his will, 12 in order that we, who were the first to put our hope in Christ, might be for the praise of his glory. 13 And you also were included in Christ when you heard the message of truth, the gospel of your salvation. When you believed, you were marked in him with a seal, the promised Holy Spirit, 14 who is a deposit guaranteeing our inheritance until the redemption of those who are God's possession—to the praise of his glory.

The Holy Spirit is given to us at engagement of the Covenant — the binding verbal agreement — and the marriage takes place in Revelation 19. Of course, one can engage in apostasy such as in Hebrew 6 and walk away or not obey like the Churches in Revelation 2-3 and have the lamp stands taken away.

Likewise, marriage is not determined by sex with a prostitute only. Nor is marriage determined by a man seducing a virgin without the father's agreement. Nor is marriage determined by two horny teenagers "agreeing to be married" just so they can have sex. The moral maturity to form the covenant agreement is not there in the latter two examples, much like many "Christians" who say the sinner's prayer without repenting and changing their life to actually follow Jesus are not part of the New Covenant in Jesus' blood. The agreement is evidenced by the repentance and turning away from sin to follow Jesus.

Why is there still confusion?

It's God intent that sex should only be in marriage, but that doesn't mean sex is marriage. God created marriage from the beginning to be a covenant that is more than just sex just like the other forms of covenants in the Bible.

This is similar the is-ought fallacy where many pastors and Christians believe that godliness should be attractive, but it's clear that godliness is not attractive except in the context of PSALM + masculinity traits. The same thing is true of marriage. Sex was intended for marriage, so sex ought to be synonymous with marriage is the fallacy. But like godliness, sex is not marriage without the covenant agreement, like godliness is only attractive in the context of the attractive traits.

If you believe still sex = marriage, that's your prerogative but there a stronger argument against it from looking at the full context of the evidence presented in the Bible in my opinion.

Conclusions

Sex does not make a marriage. The marriage covenant, like all covenants in the Bible, is composed of:

1. The moral agency to make the agreement,
2. Blood or sex in the case of marriage,
3. Witnesses

To summarize the evidence:

- Genesis 2 follows the pattern above by not cherry picking the one flesh verse from the prior passage.
- The pattern of marriage in Genesis 2 continues for the rest of Genesis, the Law, and the New Testament.
- Other discrete examples of where sex is not marriage are in the case of prostitution, father refusal, moral immaturity such as two teenagers “agreeing to be married” to have sex, and others.
- The sex = marriage proponents take all of the “one flesh” verses out of context and exclude the evidence of Genesis, all covenants, and non-sex marriage examples.
- All other covenants follow the same pattern.
- Joseph and Mary had a binding engagement that required annulment when Mary was found pregnant
- The New Covenant between Jesus and Christians/Church is analogous with the marriage covenant of husbands and wives. Both of these require moral agency by agreement, blood/sex, and witnesses (God in the case of salvation, and other believers in the case of Baptism and Communion).
- The Holy Spirit is given as a sign of engagement/seal of promise to Christians to participate in the marriage of Christ.
- Confusion exists because of the is-ought fallacy. Much like many pastors and Christians believe that godliness should be attractive, but godliness is only attractive in the context of attractive traits like PSALM and masculinity. The Bible in Genesis 1-2 lays out why God created certain traits attractive to fulfill the commands of dominion. Similarly, we see in Genesis 2 that marriage is composed of more than just sex.

It’s fairly clear that sex is not marriage is most consistent with the evidence of the original Genesis 2 passage, covenants in the Bible, obvious exceptions, and such. To get to the other conclusion you must cherry pick Genesis 2 verses on marriage out of context and then read into that to pick other Bible verses out of context as well.

I don’t subscribe to the view that those who broken the Law in various forms or fashions should have been put to death under the law is simplifying the matter that they are now single via widows or widowers. If that was the case, then Joseph would not have been considered righteous for wanting to put Mary away quietly instead of obeying the Law and having her put to death. This is a complete rehash from the divorce posts on which I elaborated extensively on the case of Joseph and Mary, so I’m not going into that further.

If you still disagree you may post your best arguments on your own blog and post a link to it here.

Husbands and Husbandry

August 5, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

There seems to be 2 common definitions of husbandry:

1. The care, cultivation, and breeding of crops and animals. “crop husbandry” Similar: farm management farming agriculture land management agronomy agronomics agribusiness cultivation tillage animal husbandry
2. Management and conservation of resources. “low borrowing demonstrates astute husbandry of resources”

Interestingly, what you can draw from these two definitions is ownership and leadship/stewardship of what you need to do with crops, animals, and resources.

This is also pretty much verbatim what husbands are tasked with in the Scriptures as a husband:

- Husband has a wife as a helper (to run the family and household)
- Husbands are the head and leader of the wife
- Husbands are to love their wives for the purpose of sanctification
- Husbands are not to become embittered toward their wives
- Husbands are to love their wives as coheirs as the weaker vessel
- Husband who aspire to be leaders in the Church are to be respectable and run their households well

In all of these circumstances, there is basically care, cultivation, and breeding (ha!) and management of resources. Except it’s not with crops or animals but a family.

It’s sad that even the word etymology aligns with the Bible when even Churches often get it wrong despite having clear Scripture from the Bible to understand the Biblical roles and responsibilities of husbands and wives.

Around web: teen who aborted gets potential jail time, the fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest

August 15, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Nebraska teen gets 90 days in jail

> An 18-year-old north-eastern Nebraska woman was sentenced on Thursday to 90 days in jail and two years of probation for burning and burying a fetus she aborted with her mother's help in a case watched by advocates as a slew of states move to restrict abortion access.Celeste Burgess, of Norfolk, was sentenced in Madison county after pleading guilty earlier this year to concealing or abandoning a dead body. Two other misdemeanor charges of false reporting and concealing the death of another person were dropped, in an agreement with prosecutors.
> Burgess and her mother, 42-year-old Jessica Burgess of Norfolk, are accused of working together to end the pregnancy. The abortion, well into her third trimester, violated Nebraska law at the time that banned abortion after 20 weeks of gestation. Officials have said Jessica Burgess ordered abortion pills online, which she gave to her then 17-year-old daughter in the spring of 2022. Jessica Burgess pleaded guilty earlier this month to providing an illegal abortion, false reporting and tampering with human skeletal remains. In exchange for her plea, charges of concealing the death of another person and abortion by someone other than a licensed physician were dismissed. She faces sentencing on 22 September.

When I first looked at the article and it initially said court documents said the teen was about 28 weeks pregnant at the time, but when I came back to write this article that was conspicuously absent. Which means they edited it. I then looked at several variations of the article picked up by various sites such as NYT, and they also did not include that information. I had to dig through several articles until I found one that mentioned it again.

Clearly the media does not want you to know that she was 28 weeks pregnant which coincides to the fetus/baby being about 14-15 inches long and 2.2 lbs. Definitely viable in the womb and would be a preemie, but would definitely live. Literally infantcide at this point.

Obviously, I think all abortion is murder, but it's particularly bad after 20-22 weeks when all of the organs are formed and babies can live outside the womb after that point.

The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest and The fallacy of teaching men to be emotionally honest Part 2

This one comes from something someone showed me on reddit:

Men that have opened up to your girlfriend/wife when they asked you to open up and be more vulnerable, how did it work out for you?

Top responses:

- Deleted but based on the comments they said it “backfired”
- “She broke up with me 2 days later”, with a lot of people affirming that it happened to them too
- “Ever see that episode of Curb Your Enthusiasm where Larry walks into a glass door and afterwards Lucy Liu can no longer stand the thought of fucking him? Was kinda like that.”, with many people affirming that too
- “Got used against me in arguments and my ex continues to bring it up in angry, likely drunk late night texts.”
- “Not gf but I opened up to my mom, crying. She told that is not how men act. Wake up call.” Another mom called her son weak.
- “I was told that I’m disgusting for looking for sympathy when I told her I was feeling sad on the anniversary of my friends suicide. I apologized ”
- “The comments here saying “Dont give her that ammunition!”, “Very badly”, “Not well” is pretty depressing and sad”
- “She made sure I regretted it.”
- “Despite my now ex-girlfriend pleading with me to open up to her on my personal issues, she did a complete 180 regarding how she treated me afterward. I could tell there was just a complete loss of respect and attraction after that moment. She would even go as far as to bring it up in heat-of-the-moment arguments as ammunition. Never again.”
- “She left me for my emotionally constipated friend, because she thought I was weak for showing my emotions. She badgered him to open up, then left him too.”
- “They get mad and tell me my problems don’t matter and to shut up.”
- “It was then held against me at every opportunity and I was made to regret opening up at all”
- “Opened up about feeling lonely since I didn’t have any friends. Ex GF used it against me saying she felt she wasn’t enough for me. What was bs was that she would always tell me she felt lonely with no friends. I was there and supportive for her, encouraged her to contact old friends. When I fell into the same position as her she made me feel selfish for wanting friends and used it against me. Now I have trouble opening up sometimes.”
- “You have the right to remain silent anything you say shall be used against you.”
- “Told me I was gay and that’s not how real men act. Bitch we have emotions too, needless to say she’s an ex blocked and gone from my life.”
- “They stopped being my partner”
- “Told her about the significant emotional abuse I suffered under my first fiancée. Told her how it still affected my view of relationships and made it difficult to trust.

She didn't laugh, but she got defensive and went on a tirade about how men can't be abused by women and how female victims have it so much worse."

- "She told me to stop being a ridiculous baby because Black men aren't supposed to this this shit. How am I going to "lead" a family if I can't control my emotions and also her father and brothers would find it weird. So I dumped her."
- "She asked to open up and feel free to cry with her then she made fun of me for it and used it to demean me for months afterwards. It took nearly 15 years for me to open up again with my current wife. And when I did she didn't seem to know how to handle it. But after some time we've bonded and we support each other and I feel like I can be vulnerable now. I think there's something evolutionary or instinctual in some women that makes emotional men less attractive or something, idk why but I've been burned more often than not"

A few positive results:

- "She supported me through everything and was the first person in my entire life to not judge me. I broke down and cried like a baby in her arms because no one had ever loved me like that before. My parents just raised me because they felt obligated to, they never loved me. Telling her everything was the best thing I ever did."
- "Usually good. But once, so bad it made up for the others."
- "I've always been very vulnerable and open with everyone I've dated and it's always gone really well. That's one of the perks of being in a good healthy relationship, you both have that openness."

As we've discussed many times before, it's basically not good to be emotionally honest with women with negative emotions.

The main exceptions we've covered already are usually:

1. When you already have the problem solved, and you can talk about it in retrospect of being a man that already solved the problem. You can talk about the negative emotions more objectively and say you overcame them — hence, framing it in a masculine manner of overcoming or dominating or solving them.
2. If you're open with your positive emotions because that gets her in a positive mood.

In general, women's default setting of seeing men display negative emotions is absorbing them and feeling negative herself and that's not the place you want to see a gf or wife in.

I highly suspect that the positive results the women were either already extremely attracted to the man such that anything he did was viewed in a positive light. Or possibly along with the caveat that the man introduced it in the context of the exceptions above.

If you need to vent negative emotions and problems you should pretty much always do so with your male friends or mentors. Doing it with gf or wife is usually asking to sabotage your relationship via loss of attraction, respect, and so on. Don't let others con you into being emotionally available unless it is on your terms with the exceptions above.

Misconception about college educated women and divorce

September 5, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I largely agree with Jack's general categorization of red, yellow, and green flags in vetting. However, there is one major issue that I want to point out in regard to college age women and divorce.

> - Green – Attended a private high school or home schooled.
> - Yellow – Public high school education.
> - Red – College education.
> - Overall – Education — Less is more.

This is incorrect based on the statistics.

It is true that women in general divorce 70% of the time, and college aged women divorce at the 90% rate. However, this is just surface level analysis.

- Divorce rate is about 40% for first time couples.

This is fairly easily searchable. Next, pew research on marriages that last at least 20 years:

- 78% college educated women or 22% total divorce rate.
- 49% for some college or 51% total divorce rate.
- 40% for high school or 60% total divorce rate.

Pew does not have this stat, but the general statistic is about 25-26% divorce rate for lifetime college educated women which is slightly higher than the 20 year rate. Let's estimate that the lifetime divorce rate for high school at 65% lifetime.

Additionally, more college educated get married than non-college educated women, so the some college and high school are significantly dragging down the stats.

College age vs high school divorce rate totals are as follows.

- College – ~22.5% women initiated total population divorce rate (90% x 25%)
- Non-college – ~45.6% women initiated total population divorce rate (70% x 65%)

The divorce rate of women vs men is way higher among college educated women. But since there are a lot more divorces among non-college educated women, you are still more overall likely to be divorced by a high school educated woman. Therefore, you should get married to a college educated woman if possible as the total divorces of only high school educated women is about double that of college educated women.

In short, if you can you should marry a college educated woman as they have the lowest total divorce rates of the whole population.# and ## – Possible caveat is if you have lower education attainment than your college educated wife. Even if you make more money, some women aren't able to control their hypergamy and will be dissatisfied and disrespectful. Of course, college educated women are less likely to find a main with lower education attainment attractive, so it may be self selecting.

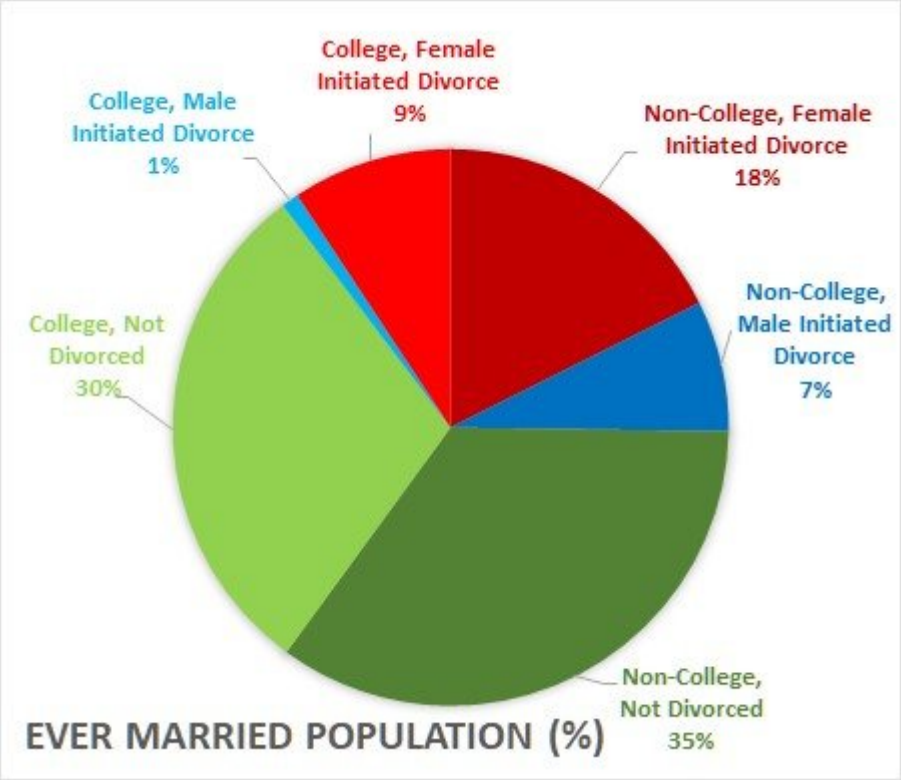
– Ideally, be more educated and make more than her. Satisfied hypergamy goes a long way toward fulfilling her attraction and sex life for you. Same with physical attractiveness. PSALMS + masculinity.

Misconception about college educated women and divorce Part 2

September 9, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I wrote Misconception about college educated women and divorce and Jack responds Are College Educated Women Less likely to divorce?.

Post was gonna be too long for another comment, so posting it here instead.



> "The Census Bureau reported the divorce rate for individuals with some college education as 36.3%, while the divorce rate for those with an associate's degree was 30.1%."
> "The divorce rate for individuals with a high school diploma was 38.8%, while the divorce rate for those with less than a high school diploma was 45.3%.
> So DS's 65% figure is too high. It should be between 38.8% and 45.3%. For the sake of calculation, let's assume the average is ~42%.

I figured out why there is a such a big discrepancy between the two figures. The rate is currently 45.3% for only high school education, but the rates I used are a projection for those married within the past 13-17 years based on current divorce rates in this population.

"Researchers at the National Center for Health Statistics estimate that 78% of college-educated women who married for the first time between 2006 and 2010 could expect their marriages to last at least 20 years. But among women who have a high school education or less, the share is only 40%."

This seems to be probable, since we are seeing many articles coming out now about how marriage is only for the elite, and how many working class marriages are imploding. Aside from infidelity and addictions, financial issues are one of the highest reasons for divorce.

> Jack's Pie Chart

The proposed estimated numbers above would drastically change the pie chart from this:

- 30% college not divorced, 1% male initiated, 9% female initiated
- 35% non-college not divorced, 7% male initiated, 18% female initiated

To this:

- 30% college not divorced, 1% male initiated, 9% female initiated
- 26% non-college not divorced, ~8% male initiated, ~26% female initiated

Currently at a 2:1 ratio of non-college vs college educated divorce risk (9% vs 18%) but that would jump up to about 3:1 ratio under the proposed estimate (9% vs 26%). Still better to marry a college educated woman than not.

> https://sigmaframe.files.wordpress.com/2023/09/pew-marital-status-by-religion.png
> If we put all this together, a man's best chance for marriage is to marry a highly educated atheist. Is this really where we are now? This just doesn't sound right to me.

That Pew research data is not correct because they don't separate out the nominal Christians from the regular attenders. Nominals are those who call themselves Christian but never attend or go to Church a couple times a year. This is a 30-50% lower risk of divorce depending on study. However, the gap might be shrinking probably due to the fact that there are a lot more progressive/liberal Churches that don't actually adhere to the Scriptures and are more worldly.

- 36% atheists married, ignoring cohab (IC), 12% divorce = 75% (36/(36+12) staying together which is 25% divorce rate
- 54% Chrisitan married, ignoring cohab (IC), 21% divorced = 72% (52/(54+21) staying together which is 28% divorce rate

Regular attenders are about 28% of the current Christian population in 2021

Total married and divorced is 54 + 21 = 75% of total Christian population ignoring single and cohabitating. 28% are regular attenders.

- 75% x 28% = 21% of Christians are regular attenders vs 54% nominals
- If regular attenders divorce rate is 50% lower and 28% divorce rate is the average, that means approximately total 31% divorce rate for nominals vs total 19% divorce rate for regular attenders.
- 19% divorce rate for regular attenders is already lower than the atheist divorce rate of 25%

This leads to the following conclusions in nominal vs regular attenders:

- 54% total nominal Christian, IC, 37.5% married, 16.5% divorced (31% divorce rate)
- 21% total regular attenders, IC, 17% married, 4% divorced (19% divorce rate)
- 4:1 ratio (16.5/4) total population difference between nominals and regular attenders

Regardless, we also know that not all regular attenders are true Christians either — some are there for the social club, family, parents made them, etc — so the true Christian divorce rate is likely lower than the values estimated above.

I would not be surprised if the divorce rate is < 10-15% for true Christians. I was talking to one of the people who used to lead a Navigator's group, and he told me that they had surveyed marriages with a discipleship focus and the divorce rate was 5%.

Hence, the nature of FAST — faithful, available, saved, teachable — is important because FAST Christians are typically not only regular attenders but also true Christians and often have discipleship focus.

> We also need to consider that going to college has many negative influences on young women.
> - W0ke indoctrination.
> - Hookup / fraternity / sorority / party scene
> - Accruing student loan debt.
> - Interim "college boyfriends".
> - Postponing marriage.
> Also, going off to college takes a girl out from under her father's authority and subjects her to the most corruptive elements of society, while she is young, > foolish, and in a vulnerable state, and is at the pinnacles of both her SMV and her rutting season. AND, Women are typically very terrible pickers of men.

I agree with this, but this is already baked into the above statistics. For instance, we saw that of college educated women about 75% stay married for at least 20 years while 25% of those marries dissolve with 90% of them by women. It's estimated that 27% go to college with intention to party, so we already have a potential strong correlation there.

> Overall, a woman attending college is a risk factor that deserves a red flag. So I disagree with DS's statistical assessment.
> The big question is this. What are the chances that a young woman can make it all the way through 4 years of college unscathed by the experience, and then land in a Godly marriage? To the former question, what little data we have on this indicates less than 31.6% of college attending women do not have sex in college, and to answer the latter question, we know there is less than a 5% chance of marrying a virgin.
> I wonder how many of those virgin brides have a Bachelor's degree?
> Studies have shown that between 40-60% of incoming freshwomen are virgins and between 12.3-20% of them remain so upon graduation.

I disagree based on the stats above.

That's entirely the point of vetting past sexual history and filtering criteria like FAST. Avoiding the woman with the party girl past is one of those things or the supposed Christian 'born again virgin.'

There's no data on non-college women and virginity. I'm doubtful there is a significant difference between non-college women and their college counterparts in age of losing their virginity. They just hit bars and dating apps faster which are even more of a cesspool of attention than college.

Utilizing college statistics of virginity is fairly inconclusive if we don't know what percentage of those people losing it are Christians versus non-Christians. Then of the Christians we don't know of the ones that are regular attenders vs nominals.

General conclusion:

This was longer than I expected, but here's the main points.

- On average you will have a much less likelihood of divorce if you marry a college educated woman over a non-college educated woman. Currently 2:1 (18% vs 9%) but estimated to be upwards of 3:1 (26% vs 9%) over the next decade which corresponds with the increasing trends.
- But you still have to filter these college women in other ways to avoid the 9% of the total population that are going to divorce. Vet their background for past sexual history and other potential risk factors Jack mentioned in his original article, see if they're FAST (faithful, available, saved, teachable), etc. My large analysis on vetting and behaviors.

In other words, college educated by itself is a GREEN flag to look for, but there may be other RED flags occurring during college such as a promiscuous past, party behavior, and other risk factors. These signal that their college education is not the green flag it was once presumed.

A similar example would be for a GREEN flag like virginity that turns into a RED flag if you discover that they are idolizing their virginity, getting cues from purity culture that may make it difficult to have a fulfilling sexual marriage, or even have little to no sexual desire for men but want to be married. There are definitely a few horror stories out there like this.

editors note: Jack's system is proposed on > - Green Flag = Go!

> - Yellow Flag = Caution!
> - Red Flag = Stop until the cause is cleared!
> - Black Flag = Disqualified!

I'd say college education is a Yellow flag under this system. Caution as there are positives so it can be a big Green flag if resolved, but can switch to a big Red flag based on the criteria mentioned above like partying and promiscuity. The main argument I was having was not really with the GYRB system but just the blanket statement saying "Overall – Education — Less is more."

- Regular attending Christians are much less likely to divorce than nominal Christians and atheists.
- Indeed, not all regular attending Christians are true Christians either which means divorce rates are likely lower if you can find someone that is truly following Jesus (probably 10-15% or less) compared to 19% for regular attenders. Discipleship focus may have 5% divorce risk.

Always make sure a woman you are interested is truly following Jesus, developing the fruit of the Spirit and their spiritual disciplines, and of course is actually very interested in you and wants to follow your lead.

Churchianity's Red Pill Equivalents

September 11, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A commenter on suggests that the FAST — faithful, available, saved, teachable — acronym is not a good use of screening criteria in women.

> And the Red Pill teaches nothing like that. Because it's praxeology, not "define the unicorn and chase after it". It happened when evangelicals started to usurp terms like the RP. You can spot them a mile away by their most favorite letters "KJV".
> The RP teaches the truth about what's actually available on the market and figuring out how to deal with it. Real-life Christian women are not "FAST" and almost nothing posted on these fringe forums works in real-life with real women.

Naturally, this is false. My response:

Stop being purposefully obtuse.

RP turns from praxeology (study of human behavior) into practical application when interpreted by different sub-groups within the manosphere (Pickup artists, MRAs, Christians, etc.). The fact that you don't understand the difference while throwing around terms is comical.

FAST is an application of particular traits to look for in a woman that increase success over the opposites.

- ~ Faithful vs Unfaithful — A woman faithful to her word and action. You know, just like the Bible says.
- Available vs Unavailable — While a woman is not technically married when she has a boyfriend, women that are not available and are willing to branch swing to from relative commitment to another are much more willing to cheat.
- Saved vs Unsaved — Not a Christian. The Bible warns specifically against marrying unbelievers.
- Teachable vs Unteachable — Does not listen or follow your leadership or advice you give her. Typically means she will have a hard time obeying Biblical submission in a marriage.

Please enlighten me with your wisdom on why FAST is not a good to look for in a woman, and how "real life Christian women" cannot be fast. Or you could just say you're wrong, which you are.

> But my most favorite thing to do is to pick up one of my several printed bible translations, including my girlfriend's study bible featuring a word-by-word Hebrew / Greek cross-reference, and compare the legalistic advice by the Christian Reddit Pill scribes with Jesus' enlightened and practical approach written down in the gospels. And then I just stick with the latter.

Nice attempt at humble bragging, and totally misunderstanding the application value of FAST at the same time. Since you know your Bible so well, you should probably take a refresher on the definition of legalism too.

Please go ahead and tell us about this Jesus' enlightened and practical approach if you know so much. I'm sure Jack will allow you a blog post or several.

I'll be waiting.

Part 2

However, the commenter doubles down on this erroneous line of thinking:

> Here is a red pill: AWALT.
> Every woman is "teachable" as long as she is into you. She will listen and follow your leadership as long as she is attracted to you. She will completely submit into your religious frame and do whatever rituals you require her to do, as long a she has the tingles. She doesn't care which religion you follow BTW, she will just follow yours.
> And she will stop giving a fuck as soon as the attraction drops, when you lost your masculine frame and failed her shit tests.
> That's it. Making just another list of criteria for "the one" trying to separate "pious dream wife" from "sinful whore" is the church pill (aka Blue Pill). The Blue Pill doesn't work on real world women.

This is the same thing that the Churchians say. Your wife does not feel like submitting to you because…

- You're not godly enough
- You aren't loving her enough as Christ loved the Church
- You're a bad leader

The RP equivalent of this is what this commenter is insinuating:

- She's not following you because you aren't attractive enough.

We've discussed this many times over the years, and it's wrong because:

1. It ascribes women no moral agency when it's clear they do have at least some to full. While men have a greater influence being a leader, they are not the only moral agents as women are too.
2. Men in this scenario are still slaves to their woman or wives' feelings of happiness. It's just that instead of it being a slave to supposedly not being godly enough they're a slave to not being attractive enough which is making her unhappy and not willing to submit.

Likewise, there are many examples where this statement is not true:

- God in the OT has perfect leadership. We can see how well Israel, Judah, and the kings followed and obeyed God despite his warnings.
- Jesus with the disciples and Church is the perfect analogy of marriage in Ephesians 5, and they still get chastised by Jesus in Revelation 2 and 3 for falling away to other things. I guess Jesus doesn't have perfect attraction and leadership then.
- If this were also true you'd see little to no women divorcing your attractive celebrities like Brad Pitt and everyone else. Yet they still do even though these celebrities are still at the top of the world in terms of looks, money, status, and fame.

In other words, according to this commenter God and Jesus aren't leading good enough because Their followers — Israel, Jews, the disciples and Church — don't want to or don't perfectly submit and follow Their lead.

The true statement is attraction makes it easier for women and wives to follow and submit, but they still have to choose to do it and not rebel. There's tons of women out there now that will either never follow a man's lead or only temporarily do it until their feminist programming kicks back in despite how attractive he is.

Those who subscribe to the attractiveness is everything version of RP and try to justify it under AWALT are the same as Churchians. They're just trading the Churchian's lines to blame men for a lack of attractiveness to blame men.

Attraction and glorification

October 1, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack has a post on the Attraction of Glorification that mentioned me, so figured I'd post my general response as it's long enough for a post.

> The Red Pill lore has given us an obscenely vivid understanding of the biological, carnal, and evo-psyche aspects of attraction, but we do not yet have a conceptual framework for the moral, metaphysical, and spiritual components of how attraction works. As it currently stands, the Red Pill lore about attraction hasn't really established a compelling argument that attraction is anything other than the flesh. This post continues to investigate whether there is more to it than this.

Yeah we do?

A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage Part 3

I think part of our difficulty in this is that our education and belief system is based on Greek philosophy, so it's harder for us to understand that the Bible is generally talking holistically rather than referring to separate components like the Greeks did. Jesus on the loving God with all your heart, mind, soul and strength is supposed to be holistic and not breaking it down into individual parts.

For instance, we know that God created our sex drives and we know that we can use it to our advantage to marry and bring glory to God through that marriage. An example of this would be the Christ:Church analogy, children, headship-submission, love-respect, and so on. Same thing with understanding and acting on improving physical attractiveness or beauty or things like that.

How good of an example it be to the world if all Christian marriages would strive to practice excellence in everything especially bodily health and appearance as well as in the Biblical roles and responsibilities of marriage.

> This framework is crucially important in helping Christian men identify which women are likely to provide a Spirit-filled relationship "in the Lord" (c.f 1st Corinthians 7:39) as opposed to one centered around the fleshly appetites which are bound to fail

You can pretty much summarize things up with the Proverbs verses:

Proverbs 14:1 A wise woman builds her home, but a foolish woman tears it down with her own hands.

Proverbs 31:30 Charm is deceptive, and beauty is fleeting; but a woman who fears the Lord is to be praised.

I think a lot of Christians, though maybe not the men and women here, tend to think these verses are about putting down charm and beauty but they aren't. Just like 1 Peter 3 many Christians think about it saying don't wear jewelry or beautiful clothes. Not at all.

It's mainly saying look past the physical to the heart. Do they actually want to obey God. Are they following His commands? It helps take off the blinders and goggles.

We can be reasonably confident that Jesus had charisma and was charming. He had a lot of women followers as well as men, and interactions like the woman at the well seem to tell the same story. Paul had to make light of the fact that his stature and in-person speaking wasn't that great, and that he had to come across better in letters.

> 2 Corinthians 10:7 You are judging by appearances. If anyone is confident that they belong to Christ, they should consider again that we belong to Christ just as much as they do. 8 So even if I boast somewhat freely about the authority the Lord gave us for building you up rather than tearing you down, I will not be ashamed of it. 9 I do not want to seem to be trying to frighten you with my letters. 10 For some say, "His letters are weighty and forceful, but in person he is unimpressive and his speaking amounts to nothing." 11 Such people should realize that what we are in our letters when we are absent, we will be in our actions when we are present.

Thus, we can understand that it is helpful to have charm or beauty, but in the case of those with charm and beauty with a devoid and wicked heart those things can be deceptive or fleeting and lead to ruin if you follow them without wisdom.

We all know men who have fallen for charm and beauty to their detriment in relationships and marriages.

> In response to my post on this topic, Only Hunky Monks can find a Sanctified Marriage (2022/8/26), DS said I had mischaracterized his arguments. While I was reading some of his older posts and reflecting on the causes of the disjoint between DS and I, I had the idea that maybe DS is describing glorification as attractive. I don't think he has ever labeled it as such, but this interpretation would explain why he thinks enhancing one's attraction by developing PSALM traits is not fleshly in nature.

Several thoughts on this.

- Most of the secular proponents of "lifestyle" game or whatever it's called have got the concept right in the sense that most of the PSALM and masculine traits can be built by pursuing mission.

This is precisely what the Christians are saying about pursuing God's mission and being excellent in everything. Focus on the mission and everything comes together. This causes you to work hard in the Church and usually eventually lead various things, hard at your job, be in excellent shape, be responsible with all you have, and these things naturally build up PSALM and masculinity over time.

I believe ideally that this is the way all things should be done. This is a convergence and congruence of God’s mandate to man about dominion. The spiritual, emotional, mental, and physical aspects are cannot be separated into their individual constituents as they all lead to a greater whole.

- Secondly, no, I think a lot of what both male and female find attractive is supposed to be fleshly in nature. Marriage and attraction is supposed to satisfy all of the components above — spiritual, mental, emotional, physical, etc — because they are not supposed to be separated into individuals components.

That’s not a bad thing. See my above points about how God created attraction and marriage.

- Also, however, in regard to 2, these things can be warped if:

~ One focuses too fully on physical appearance or beauty that it becomes a facade or idol
~ One uses these things for nefarious purposes such as pornography
~ One’s heart is not right with God in the intent and purpose.We need to make sure we are discerning and wise with things that tend to trip our attraction triggers because of the fact that we tend to bias things in favor of attractiveness.

The same is true of James’ warning against favoritism over money, status, and material things.

Dating and Relationships: Assessing a woman's ability to be Helpers or Harmers

October 14, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been mulling this over for a while now since we discussing college and how for some women it can be helpful to build up the structure for her to be more of a helper whereas sexually promiscuous behavior and other similar behaviors become harmful to a relationship.

It has become apparent that one of the best probable ways to evaluate women in terms of how well they fit into your life if you are dating or in a relationship is if they are a helper or harmer.

> Genesis 2:18 The Lord God said, "It is not good for the man to be alone. I will make a helper suitable for him."
> Proverbs 31:10 A wife of noble character who can find? She is worth far more than rubies. 11 Her husband has full confidence in her and lacks nothing of value. 12 She brings him good, not harm, all the days of her life.
>
> Proverbs 14:1 The wise woman builds her house, but with her own hands the foolish one tears hers down.
> Proverbs 21:9 It is better to live in a corner of the housetop than in a house shared with a quarrelsome wife,
> Proverbs 21:19 It is better to live in a desert land than with a quarrelsome and fretful woman

In Paul's analogy of marriage, Christ:Church::husbands:wives. Jesus specifically Commissions the disciples and His Church to continue to follow His mission to preach the gospel to the whole world and make disciples (Matthew 28). Hence, husbands' role is love their wives for the purpose of sanctification to transform their wives be more like Christ just as Christ helped the disciples to be more like Him (Ephesians 5), and this continued transformation is supposed to bear fruit in preaching the gospel and discipleship.

First, though one must have a mission for a woman to help.

Then one can evaluate is a woman actively helping or harming the mission, marriage, and everything in between.

Second, it has often been stated on this blog that in the grand scheme of things we are to be excellent in all areas to be transformed. Love God with all your heart, mind, soul, and strength is determined be our whole being, so in essence we've generally considered that to mean in all areas such as spiritually, physically, emotionally, mentally, and others.

Now, instead of applying this schematic only to ourselves, we can use it to evaluate and judge whether a woman is being a helper or harmer in these specific areas. Not only to herself but also toward you.

- Is she a helper or harmer spiritually?
- Is she a helper or harmer physically?
- Is she a helper or harmer emotionally?
- Is she a helper or harmer mentally?

Is she contentious over your leadership in any of these particular areas? Is she actively helping or harming these areas in regard to you? Is she building up or is she tearing down?

I suspect that many Christian woman if they are actively following God that they generally know what they are supposed to be doing spiritually if they are not egalitarians. It's pretty clear that headship-submission, love-respect, and other Biblical commands are pretty obvious if they try to look. However, as always if they are egalitarian or adhering to otherwise non-Biblical views that is out the window.

However, physically, emotionally, and mentally this is where women have become immersed in the waters of culture, feminism, and other nonsensical ideologies that they do not have a correct oriented understanding of what they should be doing Biblically. Even with Christians this is clear.

It's very easy for women to be harmers of their man's emotional and mental state. Most men and women are harming themselves and their potential relationships with their physical state.

This is in general why I tend to think of the fruit of the Spirit as a good proxy for a woman's ability to help or harm her man. If they are truly trying to help, the fruit of the Spirit colors their actions to be kind, joyful, patient, and loving. If they are being of the world then it's easy for the reverse to set in — mean, disrespectful, impatient, contentious, and more.

The Harmful abilities a man should try to correct via the imperative of Christ:Church::husbands:wives, but if in a dating scenario or relationship scenario where a woman won't correct harmful behavior because she is too independent and don't need no man or she does not respect your boundaries then that is at the very least an extreme yellow if not red flag.

You can use all of these areas to go through and assess not just your own life, but her own life, and the relationship between you two to see if she's going to be a net Helper or net Harmer. Try to throw away the attraction blinders too.

Delusions of blue and purple and removing the haze

October 22, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Want to quick comment on Jacks' post on blue and purple structures.

> What is the Purple System?
> First of all, the classic definition of the Purple Pill is trying to apply Red Pill insights and praxeology to solve Blue Pill problems. It is still a Blue hierarchy, but one in which the man is Red Pill informed and usually very confused. In some cases, the Purple Pill is a transition stage, AKA Purple Haze, in which a man wakes up to Red Pill reality, but is still living in a Blue Pill structure / system. It takes some time to realize that Blue Pill problems can never be solved without completely abandoning the Blue Pill system. Men usually don't complete the transition unless there is suffering involved, and the more suffering there is, the faster the transition is. Purple Haze is rather rare anymore, since the Red Pill went mainstream.

Generally, the only way purple and blue structures can exist effectively without devolving into destructive structures (e.g. woman nagging, contentious, etc.) is if something is propping up the system.

One can be totally delusional about how attraction works and still be in a godly successful marriage. However, the only way this generally occurs for men is if they are naturally attractive and/or naturally good with women. These men can believe in "true love" because they have never really experienced the opposite and it's easy for them to get women.

In other words, their naturally attractiveness or charisma is propping up their delusion that women will love them unconditionally for who they are.

It is also notable that some to many pastors tend to fall into this category. The "godliness is sexy" mantra is repeated by pastors all the time, and they believe it's true because it "worked" for them. They were pursuing God's kingdom and women dropped into their lap, and they were generally able to marry a fairly to very attractive woman who wanted to be with him,

Of course, what they don't see is that their position was propping up their success with woman and not their godliness. The power and status of being a Church leader is what was attracting women to them. I'm not saying this is the only thing as there are also pastors who are very charismatic, excellent social skills, humor, and other things women find attractive. However, they are deluded into thinking that their success with women is because of their potential godliness.

The Janitor example I always bring up is the case in point. Women are attracted to the Church leader, pastor, worship leader, and not the janitor, greeters, or parking lot coordinators.

Circling back, the only way these men wake up to the delusion is if their bubble is popped either by their own experience or see other's experiences and learn from them. If they suddenly get sick and have to step down as a pastor and their wife leaves them. Or they see so many counseling cases from other men that that they can't keep living in the delusion that godliness is attractive when their advice fails time and time again.

Society had propped up men for the longest time — greater status, better jobs, masculine men accepted, etc. — through the 1970s to maybe 1980s. However, once the system to prop up men disintegrates then you have a thorough falling out where less and less men are caught in the delusions of blue and purple.

This is why the younger generations growing up now like GenZ and others easily call out SIMPing, White Knighting, and other behaviors that are net negatives on getting women or being successful in relationships and marriages. There's nothing anymore to prop up the delusions.

Difference between men and women with superheroes

November 8, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ironically, not related to Jack's recent post, but it stimulated a reminder about an interesting thought on social media the other day. To paraphrase:

- When boys or men learn about a superhero or character, they will research all about that character and then when they play they will try to play within the context of that character. For instance, their play would center around how that character would act in certain situations.
- When girls or women learn about a superhero or character, they typically try to play with that character in their likeness. This could explain why the Wonder Woman movie was so popular – women were imagining themselves fighting against the "Patriarchy" and tearing down the walls because they had the power that Wonder Woman did.

In other words, this explains why the vast majority of women created media seeks to strip down cartoons, comics, movies, and other characters and re-make them in the likeness of woman. You see this currently with many of the female-oriented superhero films, Disney remakes, female driven movies and comics, and others.

This seems to be potentially based on a few factors.

- Men tend to be better with compartmentalization and abstract thinking. In other words, they are able to conceptualize totally different characters and distinguish them better from their sense of self.
- Women tend to be more solipsistic in nature, believing that everything is typically related to them. Additionally, their feelings can generally not be isolated well from their sense of situation and self to where feelings often become a dominating factor in their own version of truth.

Indeed, this may also be why women tend to handle leadership positions less well than men in general. The focus of women is typically onto the self and the power and less about the responsibility. Not that there is any shortage of men doing that, but it tends to be more problematic with women especially with petty infighting and power struggles. It's more personal.

If we carry this back to the Bible, narcissism in men often culminates in the desire to want to be god, but in many cases of narcissism/feminism in women they want to be men or god. Rarely do men except in extremely small number of transgender cases do men want to be a woman or have feminine-like qualities. It's typically the female envy or covetousness for man, headship/leadership, or masculinity. Women want to re-make man or god into their own likeness.

Higher partner count for women leads to more cheating too

December 8, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It's a duh moment, but at least we have some data on it now. For the statistics in regard to sexual partners and divorce see Review of vetting, virgins and new info on virginity pledges

There's a review of GSS Norc's General Social Survey here.

Group Statistics

	Ever Cheated	N	Mean	Std. Deviation	Std. Error Mean
Total Male Sex Partners	No	6790	3.87	13.793	.167
	Yes	736	8.98	15.402	.568

Number of Male Sexual Partners	Ever Cheated on Husband	Odd Ratio
1 Partner	1.90%	1
2-4 Partners	11.50%	6.05
5-10 Partners	18.00%	9.47
11-20 Partners	26.70%	14.05
> 20 Partners	30.50%	16.05

Odds ratio is fairly clear cut in this case. A virgin woman (1 partner is the husband) vs one with 2-4 partners is 6x more likely to cheat. 5-10 partners compared to 1 is 9.5x more likely to cheat. Then 14x and 16x more likely cheat with 11-20 and > 20 partners respectively.

The clear caveats with surveys being that women tend to lie more about their sexual pasts, so in all likelihood the numbers could actually be worse than this.

In comparison, here are the divorce statistics from a chart from my previous post.

15% chance of divorce with zero pre-marital sexual partners which drastically increases much like going from 1 to 2-4 partners then slowly starts to level off. I suspect if you plot these both in terms of odds ratios they will return similar curves.

You should rarely read secular manosphere blogs if at all

December 11, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I was sorting through my e-mail the other day, and I stumbled across the mail of almost decade old blog posts from Christian and secular manosphere writers.

That brought back another memory which I wrote that You should rarely read women's blogs if at all.

> For men, obviously. This is similar to the line of banning female commenters.
> 1. As a man you should rarely read womens' blogs, if at all.
> 2. If you do read any, you should almost never comment.
> What I see tend to see is that men who need to grow in masculinity read womens' blogs is that they get very complacent with their own growth. In addition, what usually ends up happening is that any discourse usually devolves into the blame game or patting on the back which wastes valuable time that could be spent elsewhere.
> On the other hand, some men get set off track and end up holding said women as 'paragons of virtue' when they are simply women who have the nature of women and make mistakes too. Married men often become discontented in their own marriage at this, and it sets up unrealistic expectations for single men looking to be married.
> Proverbs 27:17 Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.
> Both Hebrew words used for man and friend refer to males. The analogy is thus like sharpens like. Iron sharpens iron. Men sharpen men.
> If you want to grow as a man, you need to learn from men. Womens' blogs can give insight into how they react to different things and their concerns, but that does not give an accurate solution. Men need to learn from men about how to lead women. That's why a quality of leadership in the Church is men who rule their households well.

Prior to discerning that which seems to be 2016 given that post, I came to the same conclusion on secular manosphere blogs which is why I stopped reading them sometime circa 2015. I realized that I had never made that into a post, so better late than never.

Having worked with various men in person, this blog, and the RP Christians reddit and discord, it's very easy for men to get sucked into secular philosophies and trying to blend them with Christianity or interpret Christianity through the lens of The Red Pill instead of everything through the lens of Scripture. I am also guilty of some that on some of the early posts on this blog.

The other issue commonly seen is that once men have the blinders taken off, it's easy to get sucked into either bitterness, despair, or other negative emotions instead of Christ and His purpose for our lives.

This is also why I've been anti-game from the beginning as the many of the game specific tactics only have potential success on the population that they were developed on which is lowering the inhibitions of already promiscuous women. Attempting similar tactics on serious Christian women would in all likelihood get her to reject you from dates just like trying to go dutch would. That being said, some behavior is universal to women in which certain frameworks provide useful ideas to understand the sin nature or rebelliousness of women whether secular or Christian.

The probable better approach from a Christian point of view is an anti-chivalry stance which helps to bust down many of the underlying feminist and even Red Pill assumptions that many men can take on from family, friends, society, and even the secular manosphere. One such example is the re-interpretation of the Ephesians passage by modern churchians versus what it actually means.

However, it is also true that there are limited amounts of actual good Christian dating and relationship advice out there given how much of the Church has fallen to churchianity such as the godliness is sexy mantra. I think it is sufficiently clear, however, that the Bible provides good indicators for what men and women tend to find sexually attractive.

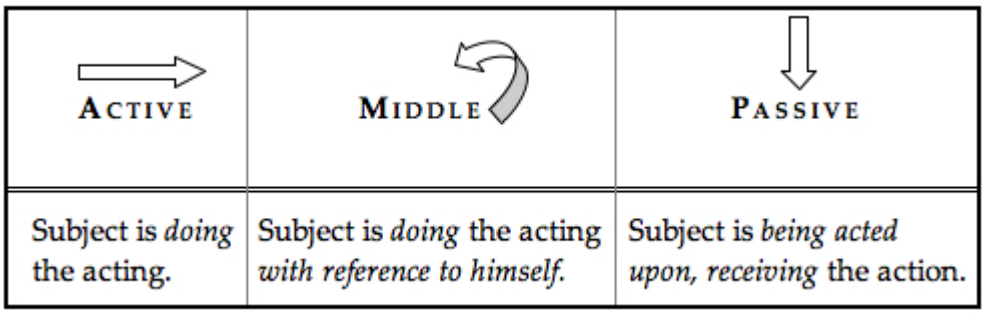
It also stands to reason then to understand the Biblical framework for everything and have solid Christian men around you to help sharpen the understanding on how to deal with relationships and marriage. This is an obvious point perhaps, but it is still easy to be led astray by the world.

Headship is still authority in marriage and wifely submission is obedience Part 2

December 16, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

And we're back from arguments on headship, authority, submission, and obedience from Jack's Invisible Magic Authority. Yay.

We've gone over this many times on this blog, though this is probably the most recent on Gentile vs Genuine authority. For those of you who have been around since the beginning circa 2014 or 2015, I did not initially believe that headship meant authority, but as I studied the Scriptures more I came to believe it did.



Derek makes an argument about grammar:

> There is never going to be any degree of understanding of the so-called "Peaceful Unity Model" without changes to the metaphysical assumptions of this audience. Perhaps one day the inherent contradictions in the view will make this clear to some, but perhaps not.
> Regardless, you didn't even both to address the points I made in the post you were replying to. You simply repeated that this was wrong…
>
> "Never in the Bible is a Christian wife told to submit to her husband or a Christian husband told to rule over his wife. No such imperatives exist. Deti's Patriarchy isn't found in the Greek Bible."
> I'm not sure which translation Derek is using, but it's quite clear.
>
> …without bringing anything new to the table. But I had already addressed these claims.
> * Uses the word "submit / submissive".
>  Uses the word "obey / obedient".
> Titus 2:5,9 says:
> "…to be self-controlled and pure, to be busy at home, to be kind, and to be subject [Middle Voice] to their husbands, so that no one will malign the word of God. [..] Teach slaves to be subject [Passive Voice] to their masters in everything, to try to please them, not to talk back to them…"
> Colossians 3:18,20 says:
>
> "Wives, submit yourselves [Passive Voice] to your husbands, as is fitting in the Lord. [..] Children, obey [Active Voice; Imperative Mood] your parents in everything, for this pleases the Lord."
> Ephesians 5 says:
> "…submitting [participle; Middle Voice] yourselves to each another out of respect for Christ; Wives [elided verb] to your husbands as to Christ… [..] Husbands love [Verb; Active Voice; Imperative Mood] your wives…"

> 1 Peter 3 uses the same formula.

In my previous link, there is a pretty clear explanation for this, but let's expand on that.

If one does not understand what voice means this explanation goes over it well.

ACTIVE	MIDDLE	PASSIVE
Subject is doing the acting.	Subject is doing the acting with reference to himself.	Subject is being acted upon, receiving the action.

In other words,

- Children are told to obey (active) because they are under the authority of their parents and generally have inadequate moral agency to understand why they obey.
- Slaves are in the passive because they are under the Gentile authority of their masters and they know right from wrong. The key being that Christians should go above and beyond to show Jesus in our lives even if they are under potential oppressive Gentile authority.
- Wives are in both middle and passive because while they are under the Genuine/Godly authority of their husbands, but they have moral agency and Holy Spirit to understand to know what is right and wrong and submit themselves to their husbands lead. This is mostly distinguished from slaves (mostly middle as opposed to passive) showing how those under Genuine Authority should act to show how the headship authority-submission is different from Gentile authority.

In the previous post I mentioned how authority was Created by God to be from the beginning. Genuine/Godly authority that Jesus has over the disciples who become the Church versus distinguishing this from the Gentile authority that the world uses. The most relevant passage to start with:

> However, what may clear up a potential disconnect is that Jesus makes it clear that authority is present, but it is not "Gentile" authority but "genuine" authority.
> Matthew 20:25-28 (ESV)
> 25 But Jesus called them to him and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great ones exercise authority over them. 26 It shall not be so among you. But whoever would be great among you must be your servant, 27 and whoever would be first among you must be your slave, 28 even as the Son of Man came not to be served but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many."
> and
> John 13:12-17 (ESV)

> 12 When he had finished washing their feet, he put on his clothes and returned to his place. “Do you understand what I have done for you?” he asked them. 13 “You call me ‘Teacher’ and ‘Lord,’ and rightly so, for that is what I am. 14 Now that I, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also should wash one another’s feet. 15 I have set you an example that you should do as I have done for you. 16 Very truly I tell you, no servant is greater than his master, nor is a messenger greater than the one who sent him. 17 Now that you know these things, you will be blessed if you do them.
> Jesus makes it clear that His authority is to be used to love and serve the disciples and by extension the Church, which makes this a clear analogy for husbands and wives with Christ : Church :: Husbands : Wives.
> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, submit yourselves to your own husbands as you do to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife as Christ is the head of the church, his body, of which he is the Savior. 24 Now as the church submits to Christ, so also wives should submit to their husbands in everything.

As we can see, there is a clear parallel not just in the Christ being head of the Church and husbands and wives. Most people see right away. However, if we look at a bit closer at the underlined bolded, we also see a reference to Jesus’ authority as Lord and Teacher over the disciples/Church.

To emphasize further, I’ve never seen the feminists/egalitarians/DR’s argument address the clear meaning of genuine authority and Gentile authority in regard to Christ and the Church as Jesus in John 13-15 because they don’t have an answer for it.

After that, Jesus exhorts the disciples/Church to use authority in the Genuine/Godly way as opposed to the Gentile way.

DR continues:

> DS: “Submit implies that the wife has moral agency to understand the right thing to do and to do it, which as you noted for Christian wives is to follow their husband’s lead and respect him as the Church does with Christ.”
> DS: “The overarching theme through the Bible is that God wants us as humans to use our free will to submit to him to bring Him Glory. So too through God and Jesus, Jesus and the Church, Husbands and wives, and others. They are all a reflection of His Glory. This means though the word submit is used, it all ends up in obedience if we choose to do the right thing.”
> DR: …in that submission is not active, but it is still interpreted within the English-speakers cultural and linguistic framework, because at the very end, he still concludes that it really functions practically as an implied imperative after all, which isn’t an explanation at all.

DR is wrong here because we have clear parallels to Jesus and the Church to understand what is meant by a wife's submission which is that to properly submit leads to obedience.

- John 13:34 I am giving you a new commandment (as an extension of Jesus' authority as Teacher and Lord), that you love one another; just as I have loved you, that you also love one another. 35 By this all people will know that you are My disciples: if you have love for one another."
- John 14:15 "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments… 21 The one who has My commandments and keeps them is the one who loves Me; and the one who loves Me will be loved by My Father, and I will love him and will reveal Myself to him.
- Jesus reiterates these points in John 15 on the Vine and the Branches and subsequent commands.

Thus, Jesus reaffirms His commands to us authoritatively as Teacher and Lord to submit and be obedient to Him. We have a choice to submit or not — If you love Me — to do what is right or wrong — obey His commandments or not. Hence, why the majority of the verses for wives containing middle voice are the subject acting on itself. God gains Glory from our voluntary submission which is results in obedience to Him.

You can think of this as salvation and works. We don't do good works because it earns us salvation, but because we are saved we are transformed by the Holy Spirit and want to do good works. Salvation is an imperative to do good works because they are prepared for us to do and they are excellent and profitable for everyone. But in the same measure, they also show that we have a genuine faith.

- Ephesians 2:8 For it is by grace you have been saved, through faith—and this is not from yourselves, it is the gift of God— 9 not by works, so that no one can boast. 10 For we are God's handiwork, created in Christ Jesus to do good works, which God prepared in advance for us to do.
- Titus 3:4 But when the kindness and love of God our Savior appeared, 5 he saved us, not because of righteous things we had done, but because of his mercy. He saved us through the washing of rebirth and renewal by the Holy Spirit, 6 whom he poured out on us generously through Jesus Christ our Savior, 7 so that, having been justified by his grace, we might become heirs having the hope of eternal life. 8 This is a trustworthy saying. And I want you to stress these things, so that those who have trusted in God may be careful to devote themselves to doing what is good. These things are excellent and profitable for everyone.
- Philippians 2:12 Therefore, my dear friends, as you have always obeyed—not only in my presence, but now much more in my absence—continue to work out your salvation with fear and trembling,
- James 2:18 But someone will say, "You have faith; I have deeds." Show me your faith without deeds, and I will show you my faith by my deeds. 19 You believe that there is one God. Good! Even the demons believe that—and shudder.

> 20 You foolish person, do you want evidence that faith without deeds is useless?

Many newer Christians may get the sense that we need faith with works for salvation from the last two passages, but they are not contradictory or opposed but synergistic. Faith leads to good works, and good works are proof of genuine faith. It's my choice to submit God or not, but there is still the moral obligation to obey because we know that submitting to Jesus is the right thing to do and places us rightly under the authority covering of God.

- As genuine faith leads to good works, so too submission leads to obedience
- Good works are proof of our salvation for those with genuine faith, just as our obedience to Jesus is proof that we love Him.

If that is not enough evidence, 1 Peter 3 would not also have this clear understanding of the fact that proper submission means obedience.

> 1 Peter 3:Wives, in the same way submit yourselves to your own husbands so that, if any of them do not believe the word, they may be won over without words by the behavior of their wives, 2 when they see the purity and reverence of your lives. 3 Your beauty should not come from outward adornment, such as elaborate hairstyles and the wearing of gold jewelry or fine clothes. 4 Rather, it should be that of your inner self, the unfading beauty of a gentle and quiet spirit, which is of great worth in God's sight. 5 For this is the way the holy women of the past who put their hope in God used to adorn themselves. They submitted themselves to their own husbands, 6 like Sarah, who obeyed Abraham and called him her lord. You are her daughters if you do what is right and do not give way to fear.

If verbs and tenses aren't your thing, this part of the passage explains it effectively. Wifely submission is an implied imperative to obey if you want to do what is right.

Yes, the same word — hypakuou — used for Sarah obeying Abraham is the same word used in Ephesians 6 and Colossians 3 for children obeying their parents!

We should also take notice of the parallels between Jesus in John 13-15, Ephesians 5, and this passage of 1 Peter 3.

- Jesus Himself affirms that He is Teacher and Lord to the disciples and Church as does 1 Peter 3 through establishing that righteous wives regard their husbands as their lord — even to an unbelieving husband much less a believer.
- Likewise, Jesus shows us that His Teaching the Church/disciples is to rightly use the authority that is given to those in the Church and families to rightly love and serve others. This is echoed in Ephesians 5 with the commands to the husbands to love and sanctify their wives.

- Finally, we have Jesus telling Christian that "if we love him" that "we will keep/obey His commands." In other words, we have a choice to submit — "if we love him" — but choosing to obey is loving him. Functionally, submission to Jesus' commands is obedience.

While this is sufficiently clear evidence, other evidence such as 1 Corinthians 11 where God is the head of Christ who is the head of man who is the head of woman makes a similar case. This also denotes a clear hierarchical structure, as Jesus spoke clearly all throughout the gospels that He was in submission and therefore obedience to the Father. Likewise, the Church and Christians to Jesus.

To conclude, contrary to DR's arguments:

- Headship is still Genuine/Godly authority in marriage, but that authority is distinguished from Gentile authority in that Genuine authority should be used to love, serve, and sanctify your wife and children.
- Functionally a wife's submission to her husband's authority is obedience. It is distinguished from children in that she has full moral agency to understand what she is doing is right (submission becomes obedience, respect, etc.) or wrong (rebellion, disrespect, etc.).
- Finally, overly delving into one specific verse and grammatical constructs irrespective of the rest of the Scripture not only undermines husbands but also Christ since that is the foundation of the analogy.
- Addendum of Part 2 analyzing 1 Corinthians 11 and 14, and 1 Timothy 2 establishing headship as authority, and women/wives underneath it within the Church and marriage. This passage via the authority of headship indirectly through head coverings also points to the fact that this is not something that is merely cultural. Because the argument is from Creation and nature when God created it perfectly, this is a universal hierarchy structure in Church and marriage. But it must be used rightly as Genuine/Godly authority rather than Gentile.

This illustrates the problematic nature of honing in on grammar while forgetting the full bigger picture of the model that Jesus is teaching about genuine/godly authority and Christ and the Church. Even when genuine Christians can mistakenly lost in the weeds of Ephesians "mutual submission" and grammar tenses, it should be clear they cannot refute the clear examples given to us by Jesus in John and 1 Peter 3.

Headship is still authority in marriage Part 2 addendum

December 18, 2023 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

It's been stated, not only by DR, but others from what I've seen that nowhere is headship equated with authority. As we have established in the on Headship is authority in marriage and wifely submission is obedience, both Jesus in John 13-15 and Peter in 1 Peter 3 show that there is a hierarchy within marriage through Paul's direct analogies.

However, we also have evidence that Paul regards head as authority via 1 Corinthians 11.

> 1 Corinthians 11:1 Be imitators of me, just as I also am of Christ.
> 2 Now I praise you because you remember me in everything and hold firmly to the traditions, just as I delivered them to you. 3 But I want you to understand that Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman, and God is the head of Christ.
> 4 Every man who has something on his head while praying or prophesying disgraces his head. 5 But every woman who has her head uncovered while praying or prophesying disgraces her head, for she is one and the same as the woman whose head is shaved. 6 For if a woman does not cover her head, let her also have her hair cut off; but if it is disgraceful for a woman to have her hair cut off or her head shaved, let her cover her head.
> 7 For a man ought not to have his head covered, since he is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of man. 8 For man does not originate from woman, but woman from man; 9 for indeed man was not created for the woman's sake, but woman for the man's sake.
> 10 Therefore the woman ought to have a symbol of authority on her head, because of the angels.
> 11 However, in the Lord, neither is woman independent of man, nor is man independent of woman. 12 For as the woman originates from the man, so also the man has his birth through the woman; and all things originate from God.
> 13 Judge for yourselves: is it proper for a woman to pray to God with her head uncovered? 14 Does not even nature itself teach you that if a man has long hair, it is a dishonor to him, 15 but if a woman has long hair, it is a glory to her? For her hair is given to her for a covering. 16 But if one is inclined to be contentious, we have no other practice, nor have the churches of God.

Paul makes several different arguments here which we will summarize in several points.

1. First, Paul declares that everything he is saying from here on out is being an imitator of himself and he is imitating Christ. This establishes what he is saying as direct teaching from God on the matter.

2. Second, he specifically declares headship as God > Christ > man > woman. We've already seen in the gospels where Jesus specifically says he only does what the Father does and submits to the Father's authority. Hence, we can understand by association that this headship here is authoritative in nature. Likewise, Jesus and Paul both indicate that Christ as the head of the Church is authoritative via Teacher and Lord.
3. Third, we have several different arguments presented after the headship statements.

- Argument from Creation v7-9 – man is in the image and glory of God but woman is the glory of man, starting from head coverings argument.
- Argument of authority v10 – woman ought to have a symbol of authority* on her head meaning that it is her duty to be under authority. The word for ought (opheileo) is also used in 1 Corinthians 7 for each spouse owing sex to the other or it being their duty to each other. "Because of the angels" is cryptic, but usually interpreted as the angels are witnesses. The early Church believed that angels were watching over the Churches (e.g. Jesus writes in Revelation 2-3 to the angels at the 7 Churches – "To the angel of the church in Ephesus write:") and the angels appearances to the apostles like Peter in prison, Paul, and many other believers. In other words, women ought to have an outward symbol of authority on her head as this representation of Created and inward truth of submission to authority, which is witnessed and confirmed by the angels.
- Symbiosis hierarchy of man and woman v11-12 – which is the Genuine/Godly hierarchy that Jesus talks about rather than the Gentile one. No independence of man and woman from each other.
- Argument from nature v13-16 – dishonor for long hair and glory of a woman's long hair

 – The Greek actually only says: "Therefore the woman ought to have authority (exousia) on her head, because of the angels." Most translations use symbol of authority because Paul is discussing head coverings before that, so it likely relates to the outward symbol of authority which is a head covering. However, this more readily emphasizes to the English reader the understanding that the head covering is an outward symbol of authority which is relating to a more fundamental truth of headship authority.

Therefore, we have Paul directly referring that being the head means there is authority (exousia) between men and women in the Church — Creation, (symbol of) authority, nature.

This is directly echoed and confirmed in 1 Corinthians 14 where women are to keep silent in Churches and ask their husbands at home to learn, and 1 Timothy 2 where women are not to teach or have authority over men.

This also dispels the notion that Jesus, Paul, Peter, and the other disciples were teaching them how to act within the confines of their particular culture, and that a hierarchy structure is not necessarily what we should do today. The argument for headship by way of head coverings is from Creation and nature pre-fall, which is when God would have created perfectly before any sin warped Genuine/Godly authority into Genuine authority. In other words, the structure itself is correct, but we need to make sure to use the authority from the structure in a godly manner.

In conclusion, we have ample confirmation that not only does Jesus and Peter say that there is authority in marriage directly, but Paul shows that there is authority within headship itself and the Church and by extension marriage both indirectly in this passage and directly in 1 Corinthians 14 where the husband is established as the teacher of the wife. The arguments are from Creation, which means they are universal as opposed to cultural.

Institutional authority and Influential authority and how they interact with Genuine/Godly and Gentile authority

January 15, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

These two concepts are distinctly different from Genuine/Godly and Gentile Authority. I've talked about them a little before, but I wanted to make a post specifically on how they work. I think this brings a lot of light to much of the problems that happen in relationships and marriage.

- Institutional authority is basically what it says. The Bible distinguishes several Institutional authorities in our lives. For instance, the earthly authorities we are to obey as Christians.

1 Peter 2:13 Submit yourselves for the Lord's sake to every human authority: whether to the emperor, as the supreme authority, 14 or to governors, who are sent by him to punish those who do wrong and to commend those who do right.

God also sets up the hierarchical structures in the Church (male led) and family (husband led).

- Influential authority is more of an implied authority based on certain circumstances.

For example, go to a doctor or hospital if we're sick because the doctors have been educated to help us treat the illnesses. We go to various teachers or tutors to help us with our school work if we need help. We can call an electrician, plumber, auto mechanic, and many others if we have problems that we don't know that can be solved. We follow the advice of subject matter experts (SMEs) all the time when we don't know the answers.

Therefore, Influential authority is generally based on a trust in the qualities such as education, expertise, competence, and respect for that person based on that particular area in what they're good in.

Sexual attractiveness is also to some degree an influential authority – we're more likely to trust someone who is physical attractive — male or female — than we are to trust someone less attraction. However, the respect gained from a potential source of influential authority can also improve attractiveness, as we often see with the teacher-student, doctor-nurse, lawyer-secretary type relationships.

In summary, Institutional authority is an overt structure while Influential authority is typically a covert structure. The latter can have visible signs, but it's unlikely to be discerned until the person who is following or deferring to that person over others happens.

Interactions of authority

Jesus is actually an example of both Institutional and Influential authority

- Institutional – Jesus comes from the Father and is representation of God with us. However, some people such as the disciples and other followers believed this while many of the religious leaders of the day such as the Pharisees and Sadducees did not.
- Influential – Jesus uses this method to call His disciples with the "Come follow me" phrase spread throughout the gospel. He did not claim to be God and tell them to follow Him, but instead was teaching others and invited them to come with Him on the journey.

Interestingly, this is actually a good pattern for relationships as Jesus:Church is the analogy for the husband:wife as we've discussed before.

Although the Bible preaches Institutional authority of the Church and family, this is generally not the way you would assert to lead the Church or family. The better way is to often build the influence you have with the particular groups through faithful service a la 1 Timothy 3 qualities in the Church or display of PSALM, masculinity, and leadership traits for men. Typically such men are promoted internally in the Church or women are more likely to want to follow a man with such qualities.

Genuine and Gentile authority can be used both ways within each of these.

- Gentile + Institutional authority where you often have dictator figures who oppress others and use the authority to benefit themselves
- Genuine + Institutional authority where you typically have more beloved secular leaders who are taking the needs of the people they lead as great concerns
- Gentile + Influential authority where you have your attractive bad boys that tend to break womens' hearts once the women figure out the man is not going to give them what they want such as marriage, or they eventually figure out that he's not good for them because they are treated poorly long enough
- Genuine + Influential authority where you have a solid godly relationship that both parties can appreciate.

You would think these are the only 4 options, but there are combinations of all 3 as well.

- Gentile + Institutional + Influential authority – This is where you have a dictator figure who is out to benefit himself, but he has solid influential authority through competence and charisma where he can spin it into also supposedly being good for the people too.
- Genuine + Institutional + Influential authority – This is the structure the Bible states that is for Christian families. The best marriages I know are built on this.

In my opinion, these structure also help to explain some of Jack's confusion on the topic between the headship + tingly-respect and peaceful unity models.

- Genuine + Institutional + Influential results is the combination of godly (genuine) + headship (institutional) + tingly respect (influential).
- Genuine + Influential authority results in the peaceful unity model – godly (genuine) + tingly respect (influential) – where there can be godliness and success absent the Institutional nature of overt headship. However, this model only works as long as there is typically both godliness and influential authority. A wife who eschews Christianity is more prone to leave as is a woman who starts to become contentious if the husband is not implicitly leading well though he not be the overt leader. In other words, it works until it doesn't.
- The additional layer of the Institutional nature of headship is not only godly, but it also ensures that husbands ideally have Christian and Church backup in case of wifely rebellion. Likewise, the confidence to use the authority in a godly manner if a wife is rebellious.

This should now make most things clear.

In conclusion

The ideal nature of Biblical marriage should result in a marriage based on Genuine (godly) + Institutional (headship) + Influential (tingly-respect) authority.

This distinguishes between why the 3 part authority is important. The 2 part ones can be potentially successful and godly in some manner, but they are missing the extra layer of sanctification and reaffirmation that tends to make the marriages much more stronger and resistant against temptation.

Additionally, although Godliness and Institutional natures are part of marriage, they are not the way Jesus initiates the relationship with His disciples and the Church. He does this through Influential authority as opposed to the others. Men would best focus on doing that if they want a woman to be in a relationship with them.

A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage: Dominion is baked into the cake. Part 4

March 4, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

For those of you who have been following this blog for a long time, I've consistently refined this article as my understanding of the nature of God's Creation of attraction Part 3 and the differences between sexual attraction and arousal has increased.

This may be the final major piece of the puzzle as I've been thinking about this for more and more years, but perhaps it can be refined more in the future. However, I've decided to leave it as Part 4 for now instead of the Final take as there might be some slight revisions in the future.

I've been thinking about and refining this over the past couple months and been busy which is why I haven't been posting as much. However, things are still going to be a bit slow until I can get more time in real life.

The lens of heaven — marriage is an earthly institution

Marriage is an earthly institution.

> Matthew 22:23 On that day some Sadducees (who say there is no resurrection) came to Jesus and questioned Him, 24 asking, "Teacher, Moses said, 'If a man dies having no children, his brother as next of kin shall marry his wife, and raise up children for his brother.' 25 Now there were seven brothers with us; and the first married and died, and having no children left his wife to his brother; 26 so also the second, and the third, down to the seventh. 27 Last of all, the woman > died. 28 In the resurrection, therefore, whose wife of the seven will she be? For they all had married her.”

> 29 But Jesus answered and said to them, “You are mistaken, not understanding the Scriptures nor the power of God. 30 For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels in heaven.

Jesus gives us some interesting insight into heaven. There’s no marriage there.

This means that marriage is a covenant institution between a husband, wife, and God, but it is also mainly an earthly institution. The earthly institution of marriage does not transcend to heaven nor do any of the beings in heaven marry.

In Revelation the marriage of the Lamb occurs before the new heaven and new earth is created when Jesus comes back again.

> Revelation 19:7 Let us rejoice and be glad and give the glory to Him, for the marriage of the Lamb has come and His bride has made herself ready.” … 9 Then he *said to me, “Write, ‘Blessed are those who are invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb.’” And he *said to me, “These are true words of God.” …
> Revelation 21:1 Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth passed away, and there is no longer any sea. 2 And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband. 3 And I heard a loud voice from the throne, saying, “Behold, the tabernacle of God is among men, and He will [a]dwell among them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself will be among them, 4 and He will wipe away every tear from their eyes; and there will no longer be any death; there will no longer be any mourning, or crying, or pain; the first things have passed away.”

Theologically, the marriage of Christ and His bride is literally uniting us and making us one with Him. The ordering of events is Jesus’ second coming back to earth to marry His bride, the judgment occurs in Revelation 20, and after that is the new heaven and earth in Revelation 21.

The marriage of Jesus and His bride occurs before the new heaven and new earth is created and the temporal things associated with the old earth and old heaven pass away. One of those temporal things that passes away is the earthly institution of marriage as is written about in Matthew.

In other words, Jesus must marry His bride before the institution of marriage is abolished when the new heaven and new earth are created. Since marriage is an earthly institution and not heavenly, Jesus marries His bride on the earth.

The lens of earth — the context surrounding the creation of marriage

Now that we understand marriage is primarily an earthly institution, we should understand that its function is to address earthly needs.

To understand marriage addressing earthly needs, we need to go back to the God's Creation as He had a purpose there. Let's examine the status of man in the garden in both Creation accounts. Genesis 1 is considered the first creation account, which gives an overview of all of the creation. Genesis 2 is considered the second creation account, which gives an overview into the creation of man specifically.

> Genesis 1:26 Then God said, "Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the [ak]sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth." 27 God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them. 28 God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth." 29 Then God said, "Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed that is on the surface of all the earth, and every tree which has fruit yielding seed; it shall be food for you; 30 and to every beast of the earth and to every bird of the sky and to every thing that moves on the earth which has life, I have given every green plant for food"; and it was so. 31 God saw all that He had made, and behold, it was very good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.

God's commands to man were two fold in the first creation account in Genesis 1:

- Rule and subdue the earth — 26 Then God said, "Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth." […] 28b and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth."
- Be fruitful and multiply — 28a God blessed them; and God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth,

We will come back to these two commands after the next point.

> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, "From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die."

God has two more commands:

- Cultivate and keep the garden (directed to Adam and not Eve)
- Don't eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil

> 18 Then the Lord God said, "It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make > him a helper suitable for him.” 19 Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the sky, and brought them to the man to see what he would call them; and whatever the man called a living creature, that was its name. 20 The man gave names to all the cattle, and to the birds of the sky, and to every beast of the field, but for Adam there was not found a helper suitable for him.

> 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man. 23 The man said,“This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; She shall be called Woman, Because she was taken out of Man.” 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

Genesis 2 gives us more details about the ordering of creation. Man was created first, but there was no helper suitable for him. Hence, God created a helper suitable for him.

- The first command — rule and subdue the earth — could be fulfilled by Adam himself such as taking dominion over the beasts as they came to him and gave them names (Genesis 2). However, Eve could help with that.
- The second command — be fruitful and multiply — was unable to be fulfilled without Eve.
- The third command — cultivate and keep the garden — was being tended to by Adam but Eve could help with.
- The fourth command — Obey God: do not eat of the tree — Eve could obey as well.

God knew before the animals were created and brought before Adam that he had no helper suitable for him. I believe God had this in mind before he did all of this simply because of the examples of sexual dimorphism — two sexes — within the animals he created as well. Indeed, to Adam’s male God wanted to create a female helper for him not only for the loneliness but to fulfill the rest of the command to be fruitful and multiply.

All of these lead into God putting Adam to sleep, taking out a rib, forming Eve (who was still unnamed), and giving her to Adam as an example of the first marriage.

As a side note, Adam was given work in the garden as a steward already, but it was multiplied in punishment. This relates to Genesis 3 and the punishments that God gave for sinning. However, it is important to realize that Adam is already the head of Eve in the way marriage was created.

The purpose of marriage as an earthly institution

To understand the purpose of marriage, we need to examine what tends to drive relationship and marriage formation. Sexual attraction appears to be one of the primary drivers. Thus, since God created man, woman, and marriage we should assume that there is some intent of the Creator behind the phenomena of sexual attraction.

What is sexually attractive to both sexes?

Generally speaking, attraction is different between both sexes.

- Men are primarily attracted to physical beauty and femininity. Examples of physical beauty are a woman's face and her figure like waist to hip ratio. Examples of femininity are long hair and female-only attire like dresses and skirts. These things are sexually attractive to men.
- Women are primarily attracted to PSALM traits and masculinity. PSALM is an acronym for power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Generally speaking, these are embodied in a man such as a confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leader. Masculinity also embodies many traits that correlate with this such as strong, confident, independent, driven, tough skinned, competitive, and so on.

Yes, there are exceptions. Yes, these are generalizations. We're not discussing them now.

These are the things that are primarily [sexually] attractive to both sexes. There is a reason for this.

Understanding how attraction plays into the roles and responsibilities of marriage

We, as humans, implicitly understand that attraction — by very definition of the word — is a driving force for marriage. Indeed, typically no one really gets married to someone that they don't find attractive. If you were a Creator, it would make sense that the commands given to man for marriage would directly apply to the things that attract men and women to marriage. After all, these things are to be a preparation for the roles and responsibilities of marriage.

Even in cultures with arranged marriages such as Judaism, the two getting married were required to see each other and they had some influence in terms of veto power over the person they would get married. The families of the two parties 'set them up' on 'arranged dates' that they had to go on to get to know each other. There had to be agreement from all sides, including the two getting married. Very few cultures, if any, have forced marriages.

Now, relating this back to the Scriptures in Genesis 1 and 2 we can logically see how attraction plays into the various roles and responsibilities given to men and women in marriage. The commands of God are directly related to what we find attractive in the opposite sex.

- Rule and subdue the earth
- Be fruitful and multiply
- Cultivate and keep the garden

- Obey God

and

- Men are primarily attracted to physical beauty and femininity. Examples of physical beauty are a woman's face and her figure like waist to hip ratio. Examples of femininity are long hair and female-only attire like dresses and skirts. These things are [sexually] attractive to men.
- Women are primarily attracted to PSALM traits and masculinity. PSALM is an acronym for power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Generally speaking, these are embodied in a man such as a confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leader. Masculinity also embodies many traits that correlate with this such as strong, confident, independent, driven, tough skinned, competitive, and so on.

Thus,

- Men were commanded to rule and subdue the earth: hence, confident, ambitious, successful leaders are likely to do that. It's no surprise that Scripture tells men that they are to be Protectors and Providers for their wives and families. A confident leader won't back down from Protecting his wife when necessary or sacrificing himself as Jesus did for us such as in Numbers 30 and Ephesians 5. An ambitious, successful husband can easily provide for his family such as in Exodus 21 and 1 Timothy 5:8.
- Woman was created as man's helper and so that he wouldn't be alone. Eve was created to be a primary help for multiplying and filling the earth, and secondary help for ruling and subduing the earth and cultivating and keeping the garden. Beauty is a general proxy for healthiness and fertility because it signals less genetic errors and ability to bear children. Waist to hip ratios or curves garners a lot of attention by men because they are attractive, but they are also related to a woman's health and her ability to bear healthy children.

As you can see, these are a good fit for the purpose of Creation and what we observe in real life.

New Testament Scriptures reinforce God's Old Testament design of Creation

It should be clear that Adam had headship prior to the fall. God creates Adam first and then Eve as Adam's helper. There's other textual information in the link to corroborate that statement. However, this is also backed up by the stated commands in the New Testament. The NT Scriptures delineate the roles and responsibilities of the husbands and wives as thus (e.g. Ephesians 5, 1 Corinthians 7 and 11, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peter 3, 1 Tim 2 and 5, etc.)

- Husband — Headship, love your wife for the purpose of sanctification, live with your wife in an understanding way, don't become embittered at your wife, provide for your family, etc.

- Wife — Submit to your husband, respect your husband, have affection for your husband, main focus should be on the home and childbirthing, etc

These directly align with not only the Creation commands and intent but also with what we observe. The husband's headship directly aligns with ruling, obeying God, provision and protection of his wife and family. The wife's submission directly aligns with being her husband's helper and being a mother aligns with being fruitful and multiplying.

This does not seem to be a mistake unlike the failed egalitarian argument. Since God created woman's attraction to operate on the principle of hypergamy, we can see how she would be attracted to and respect her the husband as he was appointed to lead, protect, and provide for his family. If you try to depose of headship or any of the other parts of the design, you are deposing of God's design intent which more likely leads to a failed marriage. A wife that doesn't follow her husband and disrespects him and is rebellious is only one signature away from divorce.

All in all, there appears to be a consistent affirmation of the the roles and responsibilities of men and women at creation, in the OT, and in the NT that also demonstrate what the sexes tend to find attractive in each other.

This should not be a surprise. God's design was planned from the beginning of creation and continues to persist through time.

Exploring the Scriptures on attraction and sex

Much of the modern Church has fallen ignorantly into the lie that godliness is attractive. This is the Christian ought fallacy which follows that 'because godliness is a good thing it should be what is attractive.' However, when we examine NT Scriptures, we find this to be false.

Paul tells the Corinthians in 2 Corinthians 6 to marry believers and not unbelievers. 'What fellowship does light have with darkness and darkness with light?' If godliness and good character were attractive, everyone would be attracted to Christians. That's clearly false. Rather, it's the case that any man exhibiting PSALM traits and masculinity will be attractive to women and they will not necessarily be believers or not. This is why Paul warns not to marry unbelievers because some were attractive but bad choices for marriage.

Similarly, Paul states in 1 Corinthians 7 the only reason given in the NT to marry: "it is better to marry than to burn." In fact, it is even ideal or at least preferable [to him] that all men remain single as he so full attention can be focused toward the Lord. What are the things that cause us to burn for marriage? It is what sexually attracts us. This is the sex drive and beauty for men. This is the sex drive and strong, confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leaders for women. These are the things we look for in a mate, aside from important qualifiers such as godlines and character.

Why should women not usurp authority over man [in the Church and family] and why is she saved through childbearing in 1 Timothy 2? Because she is fulfilling the initial commands of God to be fruitful and multiply, and her offspring like Jesus will take dominion over the earth. Jesus added from the initial command of God to take dominion over the earth to also win the people of the earth through the gospel. Make disciples of all nations.

Another problem, from what I've seen, is not solely that the modern Church parrots false narratives about what is attractive to both men and women. That is definitely harmful. However, there is the issue that makes it seem like godliness is mutually exclusive with the traits that attract the opposite sex. For example, beauty is somehow mutually exclusive with godliness, which 1 Pet 3 does not say at all. Another example is that a successful, ambitious man may be looked on as 'too worldly' because money is evil when it is the love of money that is evil in 1 Tim 6. This is a problem because these things are false. You can be beautiful and godly. You can be a confident, ambitious, and successful Christian leader.

Other Biblical pitfalls of downplaying attraction

Generally speaking, the modern Church loves to downplay the role of attraction in marriage. I believe that this is because it is based on a faulty understanding of why attraction is important.

For example, it's clear from the Scriptures that beauty is what is attractive to men. However, beauty without godliness and character has disastrous consequences result for men. They're carried away to worship idols (e.g. Solomon and harem). They get caught in adultery (e.g. David and Bathsheba). They get scared into lying (e.g. Abraham, Sarah, Abimelech, and Pharaoh). They get dragged down into the pit (e.g. the vast majority of Proverbs on beautiful but deceitful women). The beauty of women is never downplayed. In fact, in Song of Songs Solomon lauds the beauty of the Shulamite woman the entire book without mentioning her character once.

Those who claim beauty is shallow fall into the trap of false humility. God created beauty, and beauty is objective. Some examples are nature, facial symmetry, a woman's waist to hip ratio, and strong, muscular men. Without a God as an anchor, there can be no objective Truth such as beauty. Those who downplay beauty don't understand the role it plays within marriage.

Obviously cultivating beauty or cultivating strong, confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leaders should not be placed over godliness and character. However, they are not mutually exclusive. Beauty is only vanity when focused in the wrong direction. Beauty for attention, beauty for power, beauty for other men are not good. However, beauty for a husband in marriage is good. Similarly, the same is true of the sex drive.

Dominion is baked into the cake for men

All of the traits that women admire and respect in men which lead toward their sexual attraction for men are based in dominion in various aspects. Some have more universal appeal, and some have contextual appeal.

The PSALM traits generally have universal appeal.

- Power
- Status
- Athleticism
- Looks
- Money

You can think of all of the top men in the world in these categories, and they almost always have what many men would consider a beautiful woman by their side.

The traits of masculinity also have universal appeal to women, so much so that they often try to be like men (feminism).

- Independence
- Dominance
- Assertiveness
- Strength
- Aggression
- Leadership
- Competitiveness
- Accountability
- Courage
- Stoicism
- Charisma
- Competence

Universal sexually attractive traits are also based on a scale and one can compensate substantially if they have crazy amounts of the others. One may not have the best looks, but if they are the Football team QB or they are the richest person in the area they still can garner attractive women, though caution is needed in such cases. Men with mainly money might invite more women who are into a lifestyle and gold diggers rather than one who actually wants to be her husband’s follower and helper.

Contextualized appeal are generally localized phenomena whereby men can be more attractive than others based on comparative positions.

- A man may not be objective attractive in many PSALM traits, but if he’s the local leader or popular player of a D&D crew the women who participate in D&D may be more attracted to him than the other men.
- Even if a man is not that attractive in many different areas, he may be able to generate some attraction if he’s in a leadership, mentor, or other type of position of prestige. The typical doctor and nurse, lawyer and secretary, and many other positions like these can imbue pseudo-respect that turns into real sexual attraction.

Additionally, as we covered in the prior post Institutional authority and Influential authority and how they interact with Genuine/Godly and Gentile authority, the most successful form of sexual attraction develops from influential authority rather than institutional authority.

It can be summarized in all of these traits listed — both universal and contextual — that they are all fall under the category of dominion. Some are more directly related to dominion than others such as power, but they all represent some form of mastery over various aspects of life that signal a man has capacity to operate effectively as the head of the marriage in leadership, protection, and provision — PSALMs, masculinity, and contextual areas. However, these traits must also be tempered with the fruit of the Spirit lest such men become dark triads or bad boys.

In short, women are attracted to dominion and its various forms. Dominion also crosses over from sexual attraction to sexual arousal in the right context.

Finally, if this does not make sense to any Christian, I have another compelling analogy. To use the headship analogy, Christ's dominion over sin and death is what attracts the Church to Himself. Christ conquering sin and death and providing us a way to reconcile with God is the greatest feat of dominion of all time, and one that draws all men to Himself provided we have the humility to respect His willing sacrifice that while we were yet sinners He died for us.

Conclusion

Creation

In summary, the Scriptures describe that God directs commands to man and woman when He made them and married them. These are:

- Rule and subdue the earth
- Be fruitful and multiply
- Cultivate and keep the garden
- Obey God

If we look at them from an observational perspective, we see that these commands also fairly accurately describe what each sex finds attractive in the opposite sex.

and

- Men are primarily attracted to physical beauty and femininity. Examples of physical beauty are a woman's face and her figure like waist to hip ratio. Examples of femininity are long hair and female-only attire like dresses and skirts. These things are [sexually] attractive to men.

- Women are primarily attracted to PSALM traits and masculinity. PSALM is an acronym for power/personality, status, athleticism, looks, and money. Generally speaking, these are embodied in a man such as a confident, handsome, ambitious, successful leader. Masculinity also embodies many traits that correlate with this such as strong, confident, independent, driven, tough skinned, competitive, and so on.

Thus,

- Men were commanded to rule and subdue the earth: hence, confident, ambitious, successful leaders are likely to do that. It's no surprise that Scripture tells men that they are to be Protectors and Providers for their wives and families. A confident leader won't back down from Protecting his wife when necessary or sacrificing himself as Jesus did for us such as in Numbers 30 and Ephesians 5. An ambitious, successful husband can easily provide for his family such as in Exodus 21 and 1 Timothy 5:8.
- Woman was created as man's helper and so that he wouldn't be alone. Eve was created to be a primary help for multiplying and filling the earth, and secondary help for ruling and subduing the earth and cultivating and keeping the garden. Beauty is a general proxy for healthiness and fertility because it signals less genetic errors and ability to bear children. Waist to hip ratios or curves garners a lot of attention by men because they are attractive, but they are also related to a woman's health and her ability to bear healthy children.

There are multiple passages of Scripture both from the Old Testament and New Testament that affirm continually affirm these characteristics.

- Husband — Headship, love your wife for the purpose of sanctification, live with your wife in an understanding way, don't become embittered at your wife, provide for your family, etc.
- Wife — Submit to your husband, respect your husband, have affection for your husband, main focus should be on the home and childbirthing, etc

In other words for men: rule your family well, obey God, cultivate and keep your family, and so on. For women: help your husband rule well, obey God, and help him be fruitful and multiply.

To use the headship analogy, Christ's dominion over sin and death is what attracts the Church to Himself. Christ conquering sin and death and providing us a way to reconcile with God is the greatest feat of dominion of all time, and one that draws all men to Himself provided we have the humility to respect His willing sacrifice that while we were yet sinners He died for us.

These marital roles and responsibilities directly align with not only the Creation commands and intent but also with what we observe. The husband's headship directly aligns with ruling, obeying God, provision and protection of his wife and family. In short, women are attracted to dominion both in sexual attraction and sexual arousal. The wife's submission directly aligns with being her husband's helper and being a mother aligns with being fruitful and multiplying.

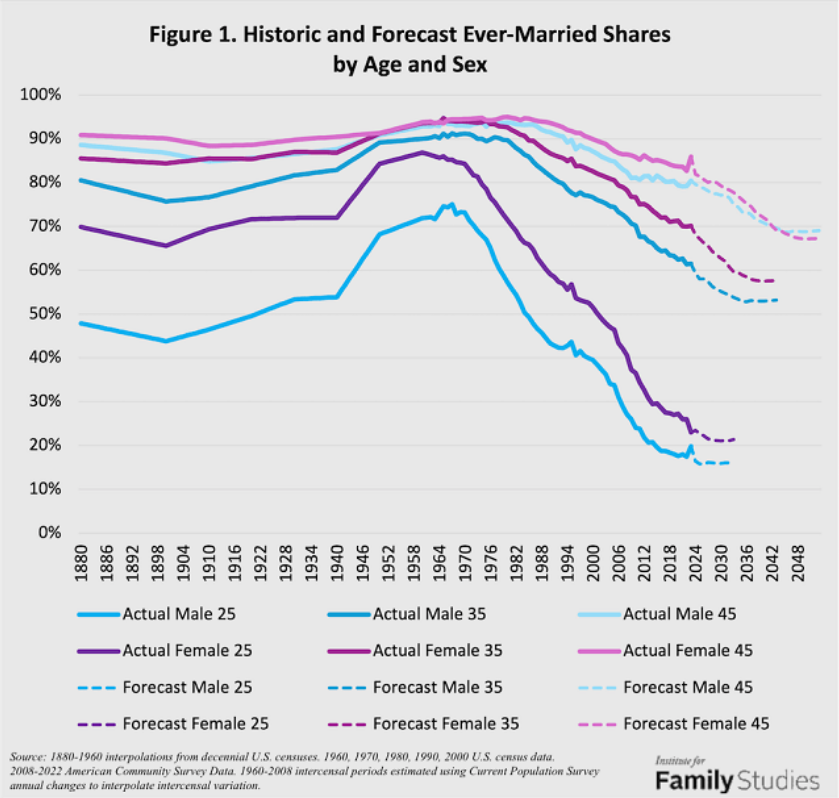
We do both singles and married a disservice by downplaying the role attraction plays in marriage. If we don't show them why, from the Scriptures, God created these traits to be important and attractive to the opposite sex we risk alienating them and/or giving them cognitive dissonance. Exceptions are exceptions. Hanging onto exceptions when you want to be married give you a low probability of success. Sure, some men marry obese women. Most men don't. Sure, some women marry men the stereotype of a man in his parent's basement playing video games all the time. Most women don't.

"Oh? You want a beautiful wife? That's shallow and superficial." However, we implicitly understand that beauty is objective, at least in part. That creates strong cognitive dissonance in Christian men: "Oh, I shouldn't want beauty? Then why do I desire a beautiful wife? Is beauty a bad thing? Why do I want a beautiful wife if beauty is superficial?" Sadly, this is too often the case.



That which God creates is beautiful. He created us, and we were very good. He created attraction and our sex drives. He created marriage. He command us to take dominion and be fruitful and multiply. The loving gaze of a husband on his beautiful bride. The respect of a wife toward her strong, confident husband. Our righteousness is our beautiful clothing to Jesus. The beauty of a large family.

All of these things come together to form a coherent whole that exemplifies the nature of the beauty of marriage and the plan that God created for us to accomplish.

Most power you can exert is by Yes and No.

New data: IFStudies predicts 1/3rd of women will not be married

March 13, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Source

I've gone over the spinsterhood and childlessness projections before,

> They estimate it's going to be about 25% in the long run, or approximately on the upper bounds of what I estimated. However, that's just singleness and doesn't necessarily include unwanted cohabitation. Therefore, the number of women that are unhappy is likely about 10% larger than that which would place that around 35%.

The new data jives closely with what I predicted which would be the unwanted spinsterhood and unwanted cohabitation would likely be around 35%. Theoretically, it could still keep getting worse but we'll see.

Since about 33% of women are freezing themselves out the market or unwanted cohabitation, I'd estimate there's going to be in the range of 15-20% indefinitely incel men. Some amount of these 33% women won't want to share some man, don't want to cohabitate, or other options but they will do it anyway.

Most men and most women will still get married and stay married, but you will want to be in the top 50% if not the top 20% to have attraction working for you in terms of being a strong, masculine leader and the rest of the attractive traits.

Defining the headship authority model from Genesis to Christ and His Church

April 17, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One thing that I think helps with understanding the Biblical models of headship-submission and love-respect is understanding how Christ and the Church emulates the model that God, Jesus, and the Holy Spirit lay out in Genesis.

A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage: Dominion is baked into the cake. Part 4

> - Rule and subdue the earth — 26 Then God said, “Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness; and let them rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth.” […] 28b and subdue it; and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth.”
> - Be fruitful and multiply — 28a God blessed them; and God said to them, “Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth,
> We will come back to these two commands after the next point.
> Genesis 2:15 Then the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to cultivate it and keep it. 16 The Lord God commanded the man, saying, “From any tree of the garden you may eat freely; 17 but from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat from it you will surely die.”
> God has two more commands:
>
> - Cultivate and keep the garden (directed to Adam and not Eve)
> - Don’t eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil
> 18 Then the Lord God said, “It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make him a helper suitable for him.” 19 Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every bird of the sky, and brought them to the man to see what he would call them; and whatever the man called a living creature, that was its name. 20 The man gave names to all the cattle, and to the birds of the sky, and to every beast of the field, but for Adam there was not found a helper suitable for him.
> 21 So the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man, and he slept; then He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh at that place. 22 The Lord God fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man. 23 The man said,“This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my > flesh; She shall be called Woman, Because she was taken out of Man.” 24 For this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother, and be joined to his wife; and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

> Genesis 2 gives us more details about the ordering of creation. Man was created first, but there was no helper suitable for him. Hence, God created a helper suitable for him.
> - The first command — rule and subdue the earth — could be fulfilled by Adam himself such as taking dominion over the beasts as they came to him and gave them names (Genesis 2). However, Eve could help with that.
> - The second command — be fruitful and multiply — was unable to be fulfilled without Eve.
> - The third command — cultivate and keep the garden — was being tended to by Adam but Eve could help with.
> - The fourth command — Obey God: do not eat of the tree — Eve could obey as well.

The 4 main commands that God lays out in Genesis for man and woman are these.

How does Jesus call Christians — His bride the Church — to emulate these 4 different commands?

> - The first command — rule and subdue the earth — could be fulfilled by Adam himself such as taking dominion over the beasts as they came to him and gave them names (Genesis 2). However, Eve could help with that.
> - The second command — be fruitful and multiply — was unable to be fulfilled without Eve.

The first of these is exemplified in the Great Commission.

> Matthew 28:8 And Jesus came up and spoke to them, saying, “All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to Me. 19 Go, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 20 teaching them to follow all that I commanded you; and behold, I am with you always, to the end of the age.”

Jesus delegates the authority to the disciples and Church to take dominion over all of the earth by making disciples of all nations.

The Christian act of being fruitful and multiplying is not purely a reproductive act by Christian husbands and wives but discipleship is a form of son-ship.

> 1 Timothy 1:18 Timothy, my son, I am giving you this command in keeping with the prophecies once made about you, so that by recalling them you may fight the battle well,
> 2 Timothy 1:2 To Timothy, my dear son: Grace, mercy and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord. Thanksgiving 3 I thank God, whom I serve, as my ancestors did, with a clear conscience, as night and day I constantly remember you in my prayers. 4 Recalling your tears, I long to see you, so that I may be filled with joy. 5 I am reminded of your sincere faith, which first lived in your grandmother Lois and in your mother Eunice and, I am persuaded, now lives in you also. Appeal for Loyalty to Paul and the Gospel 6 For this reason I remind you to fan into flame the gift of God, which is in you through the laying on of my hands. 7 For the Spirit God gave us does not make us timid, but gives us power, love and self-discipline.

Just as Jesus made us sons and daughters of God, the same thing happens when we are both physical fathers and mothers but also spiritual fathers and mothers to the new generation of Christians. This is building them up from being born again in the faith (John 3) to spiritual infants (1 Corinthians 3, 1 Peter 2, Hebrews 5-6) to maturity in Christ (1 Corinthians 13, Hebrews 5, Ephesians 4, Colossians 1, et al) and making disciples of their own (Matthew 28).

> 1 Corinthians 11:2 I praise you for remembering me in everything and for holding to the traditions just as I passed them on to you. 3 But I want you to realize that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is man, and the head of Christ is God.

It bears repeating for the dissenters that:

- God is the head of Christ — Jesus submitted to and obeyed the authority of God in His role here on earth even in the hard things that He did not want to do. His prayers in Gethsemane exemplify his struggle to obey God even through hardship
- Christ is the head of the Church — Jesus calls us to obey his Commandments, and they are the way that we show that we love Him.
- Men are the head of the Church, and husbands are the head of wives — It's obvious that the same analogies are being used for authority with headship-submission and love-respect.

No ambiguous parsing denies the overarching themes of the Scripture.

Rather, as dominion is baked into the cake, it is Jesus authority, dominion and victory over death that attracts and draws us to Him just as wives as drawn to the dominion of husbands exemplified in the various PSALM and masculine traits. Our own humility to come under His banner leads to joining the Church and eventual marriage to Christ and Oneness.

This distinctly parallels the validational sex equation originally posited by Jack.

> Validation = Domination + Sanctification (if holy)/Defilement(if unholy) –> Humility + Ego Affirmation –> Her Feeling Loved
> 1. Domination (before, during, and after sex)
> 2. Feeling of being possessed
> 3. Humility (he takes what is his) + Ego affirmation (he wants me) + sanctification/defilement (she is his, and no other*)
> 4. Her feeling loved
> Equation form: Validational sex = Domination (before, during, and after sex) –> Feeling of being possessed –> Humility (he takes what is his) + Ego affirmation (he wants me) + sanctification in marriage, defilement otherwise (she is his, and no other) –> Her feeling loved

The validational sex equation does not just apply to sexual attraction and sexual arousal but also to the relational and marital commitment. Indeed, we can see firsthand how women are happy and willing to change for the man they consider to be very attractive just as we as Christians are happy and willing to strive to be like Christ.

> - The third command — cultivate and keep the garden — was being tended to by Adam but Eve could help with.

The two main areas in the Church that Jesus tasks men to engage in headship to cultivate and to keep are Church (1 Corinthians 11) and of the family (Ephesians 5). This is why the headship authoritative positions are tasked to men in the Church (1 Corinthians 11-14, 1 Timothy 2) and husbands the marriage and family (1 Corinthians 11, Ephesians 5, Colossians 3, Titus 2, 1 Peer 3). The elders, overseers, and teaching roles in the Church are charged to men like it is in the the family with the husband being tasked the authoritative roles.

I'm not going to quote all of these Scriptures here, but you can explore them for yourself.

> - The fourth command — Obey God: do not eat of the tree — Eve could obey as well.

Jesus likewise gives the Church commands to obey God.

> John 13:34 "A new command I give you: Love one another. As I have loved you, so you must love one another. 35 By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you love one another."
> John 15:9 "As the Father has loved me, so have I loved you. Now remain in my love. 10 If you keep my commands, you will remain in my love, just as I have kept my Father's commands and remain in his love. 11 I have told you this so that my joy may be in you and that your joy may be complete. 12 My command is this: Love each other as I have loved you. 13 Greater love has no one than this:

> to lay down one's life for one's friends. 14 You are my friends if you do what I command. 15 I no longer call you servants, because a servant does not know his master's business. Instead, I have called you friends, for everything that I learned from my Father I have made known to you. 16 You did not choose me, but I chose you and appointed you so that you might go and bear fruit—fruit that will last—and so that whatever you ask in my name the Father will give you. 17 This is my command: Love each other.

Likewise, He gives husbands the commands to use their headship authority for the purpose of sanctification to lead their wives to be more like Christ.

> Ephesians 5:25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her 26 to make her holy, cleansing her by the washing with water through the word, 27 and to present her to himself as a radiant church, without stain or wrinkle or any other blemish, but holy and blameless. 28 In this same way, husbands ought to love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself. 29 After all, no one ever hated their own body, but they feed and care for their body, just as Christ does the church— 30 for we are members of his body. 31 "For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be united to his wife, and the two will become one flesh." 32 This is a profound mystery—but I am talking about Christ and the church. 33 However, each one of you also must love his wife as he loves himself, and the wife must respect her husband.

As we know, Jesus does not denigrate authority nor deny it, but calls those in authority to love and to serve.

John 13:12 When he had finished washing their feet, he put on his clothes and returned to his place. "Do you understand what I have done for you?" he asked them. 13 "You call me 'Teacher' and 'Lord,' and rightly so, for that is what I am. 14 Now that I, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also should wash one another's feet. 15 I have set you an example that you should do as I have done for you. 16 Very truly I tell you, no servant is greater than his master, nor is a messenger greater than the one who sent him. 17 Now that you know these things, you will be blessed if you do them.

Summary

We can see the numerous examples from the perfection of Creation in Genesis to the perfection of the Christ and Church model of headship that the (male) leaders of the Church and husbands leaders of the family are supposed to emulate.

There are many examples of this model all throughout Scripture, so it should not be a surprise that husbands and wives also closely follow this model. Attraction also follows our understanding of the dynamic.

Thus, if we want to include the additional example that parallels the headship model we now have 4 forms in which it applies.

- Headship authority-Submission
- Love-Respect
- Dominion-Humility
- Commitment-Conformity

These 4 going forward can help us further understand not only the Bible but also male and female relationships.

What makes husbands and wives feel loved

April 30, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Last post we went over Defining the headship authority model from Genesis to Christ and His Church which showed us the nature of Creation, man and woman, Christ and Church and how that relates to husbands and wives.

Since this has become a big topic of debate, it is worth considering what makes the opposite sex feel loved from a Biblical perspective. These are the 4 commands God gives to Adam and Eve and their marriage from the beginning.

> Genesis 2 gives us more details about the ordering of creation. Man was created first, but there was no helper suitable for him. Hence, God created a helper suitable for him.
> - The first command — rule and subdue the earth — could be fulfilled by Adam himself such as taking dominion over the beasts as they came to him and gave them names (Genesis 2). However, Eve could help with that.
> - The second command — be fruitful and multiply — was unable to be fulfilled without Eve.
> - The third command — cultivate and keep the garden — was being tended to by Adam but Eve could help with.
> - The fourth command — Obey God: do not eat of the tree — Eve could obey as well.

One may ask what do these commands represent to make each of the opposite sex feel loved? I think it's pretty clear once you think about it, but first you have to actually think about it.

Observably, what makes men feel loved is:

- Women who are enthusiastic about being with them
- Also enthusiastic sex
- Peace and not contentiousness – a woman who is a good follower and helper and not contentious

What do all of these traits that make men feel loved have to do with the commands? Well, we can see they are all there.

- Men take dominion over area(s) in life and cultivate and keep their sphere of influence and women who are good followers and helpers and not contentious about it
- Women who are enthusiastic about sex are being enthusiastic about being fruitful and multiplying
- All of these follow the model of Christ and the Church which is the analogy for husbands and wives where the Church follows Christ and conforms to Him.

Observably, what makes women feel loved is:

- Dominant men who want them to be theirs
- When dominant men take them which leads to high sexual arousal
- When dominant men have a vision and mission and she gets to play an integral role

To be a bit more clear on this, we can see this echoed in what Jesus does with the Church

- Jesus loves us so much that He died for the Church to make us children of God
- Jesus and His marriage to the Church
- Jesus delegating His mission to evangelize and disciple the whole world to His disciples and all Christians

For husbands and wives this is the same:

- Women want attractive dominant men to be interested in her and usually her only (the subject of billions of womens' porn)
- Wives are most sexually aroused when her dominant husband sexually takes her
- When wives know their place within her man's mission to help him and confirm to him. This is what we see with respectful and submissive wives and unfortunate alpha widows who would do anything for their man.

These also echo the 4 patterns that we saw previously:

> Thus, if we want to include the additional example that parallels the headship model we now have 4 forms in which it applies.
> - Headship authority-Submission
> - Love-Respect
> - Dominion-Humility
> - Commitment-Conformity
> These 4 going forward can help us further understand not only the Bible but also male and female relationships.

A wife's submission, respect, humility, and conformity to the husband make him feel loved while a husband's authority, love, dominion, and commitment make her feel loved.

Overall, the Bible describes what is sexually attractive to men and women at Creation in the garden, and it also should not surprise us that what makes the opposite sex feel loved is baked into those commands as well. We just have been too ignorant to closely examine the Scriptures to learn this knowledge.

A frigid wife is essentially a married friend zone

May 5, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I believe we've talked about this before, but maybe not have put it in these terms. This post is a review on the concepts and how a husband can get out of his wife's friend zone.

Understanding the friend zone and escaping it covered the various scenarios in which a man can get out of the friend zone. These are the main 4 different ways.

> - You were her friend, but she always liked you. She was waiting for you to ask her out.
> - You were her friend, and you underwent some change to become a man while you didn't see her for a while. When you meet her again you impress her.
> - You were her friend, but you are developing into a man. Then one day her friend or some other random act of God makes her reconsider you and her eyes are proverbially opened.
> - You were her friend, and she doesn't know a certain side of you. An inadvertent crisis or significant display of social dominance or leadership shows her a side of you that she never saw before. She reconsiders you now as more attractive because of this masculine display.

Unfortunately, you'll notice that some of these are ineffective or a bit harder to pull off when you are married to a wife who considers you unattractive or doesn't want to have sex with you.

- The first one pretty much does not apply. She may have considered you attractive and liked you before, but if she's married and does not want to have sex then she doesn't now. This one does not apply.
- The second concept is good but it's much harder because she will pretty much see you everyday. Hence, evident change is much harder to notice unless it is drastic.
- The third concept is typically only occurs if you can get the community on board to help change her mind and you actually are becoming attractive again.
- The fourth concept is good but like the second it is much harder to do because these scenarios don't necessarily happen often if she is around you and knows you very well.

We can consider that the main effective ones are some blend of 2-4. This is why both the Christian and married red pill has traditionally focused on mission and self improvement holistically. A wife that has essentially friend zoned her husband already does not find him attractive or respect him, so there is the tough task to become become objectively attractive again. The main ways a man would approach this have been covered prior but here's the common lists.

1. Christian men need to be on God's mission. This gives a sense of purpose and direction along with being God's will for our lives, and generally women tend to admire and respect men who are ambitious. It also takes so much focus off of her, so a man's neediness for sex or affection aren't continually turning her off. 1 Corinthians 7:29 What I mean, brothers and sisters, is that the time is short. From now on those who have wives should live as if they do not
2. Act as the head and leader of the family. Ephesians 5 and so on. Many times men become unattractive because they settle into the routine and may have started being lazier about doing these things. Be proactive about leading the family.
3. Aim to be excellent in all areas of life — spiritually, physically, mentally, emotionally. The Greek word for excellence in the Bible is arete and is traditionally associated with manliness. Obviously, the physical aspect of losing fat and gaining muscle is the most noticeable and effective, but the others pay dividends in spades as well transforming from a feminine mindset to a masculine mindset and regaining masculine traits.
4. Eliminating the turn offs. These are the habits and traits picked up which often lead to a husband following his wife's lead rather than her following his lead. For example, No More Mr Nice Guy covers many different ways men may start to approach relationships from covert contracts, expectations, and a more feminine mindset rather than a masculine one. A man who walks on eggshells around his wife has already become the follower. One needs to approach conflict directly and be able to hold the ground despite a woman's attitude if they are right especially spiritually.

It's ideal if you can get the 3rd concept behind you with your Church and friends group. Iron sharpening iron with the men building other men up, and hopefully getting any of the girlfriends and wives on board to help influence your wife. Eliminate the malcontents and single divorcee's if they are whisper evil in ears.

The best bet aside from the 3rd concept is the 2nd and 4th where over time the changes you made become habits and re-establish attractiveness, leadership, and traits that were there initially with or without other intervention from others and almost most definitely with God. Prayer for God to change hearts and minds is always a good idea.

If a wife is too far gone down the road of rebellion this may eventually lead to separation or divorce such as an unbeliever leaving. This is better to have that than be trapped with someone who does not want to be a wife and it gives more time to focus on God and those you love without having to worry about it.

Getting out the married friend zone is a difficult endeavor but it is possible to get out of it in many circumstances. This concludes the review.

The nuclear option: Jesus let many of his followers walk away

May 28, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As Jesus and the Church is the model for the husband and the wife, let us look at one of the main examples of where Jesus let much of His “Church” walk away.

> John 6:41 At this the Jews there began to grumble about him because he said, “I am the bread that came down from heaven.” 42 They said, “Is this not Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? How can he now say, ‘I came down from heaven’?”
> 43 “Stop grumbling among yourselves,” Jesus answered. 44 “No one can come to me unless the Father who sent me draws them, and I will raise them up at the last day. 45 It is written in the Prophets: ‘They will all be taught by God.’[d] Everyone who has heard the Father and learned from him comes to me. 46 No one has seen the Father except the one who is from God; only he has seen the Father. 47 Very truly I tell you, the one who believes has eternal life. 48 I am the bread of life. 49 Your ancestors ate the manna in the wilderness, yet they died. 50 But here is the bread that comes down from heaven, which anyone may eat and not die. 51 I am the living bread that came down from heaven. Whoever eats this bread will live forever. This bread is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.”
> 52 Then the Jews began to argue sharply among themselves, “How can this man give us his flesh to eat?”
> 53 Jesus said to them, “Very truly I tell you, unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, you have no life in you. 54 Whoever eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life, and I will raise them up at the last day. 55 For my flesh is real food and my blood is real drink. 56 Whoever eats my flesh and drinks my blood remains in me, and I in them. 57 Just as the living Father sent me and I live because of the Father, so the one who feeds on me will live because of me. 58 This is the bread that came down from heaven. Your ancestors ate manna and died, but whoever feeds on this bread will live forever.” 59 He said this while teaching in the synagogue in Capernaum.
> 60 On hearing it, many of his disciples said, “This is a hard teaching. Who can accept it?”
> 61 Aware that his disciples were grumbling about this, Jesus said to them, “Does this offend you? 62 Then what if you see the Son of Man ascend to where he was before! 63 The Spirit gives life; the flesh counts for nothing. The words I have spoken to you—they are full of the Spirit and life. 64 Yet there are some of you who do not believe.” For Jesus had known from the beginning which of them did not believe and who would betray him. 65 He went on to say, “This is why I told > you that no one can come to me unless the Father has enabled them.”

> 66 From this time many of his disciples turned back and no longer followed him.

Jesus claims that He is the bread of life earlier in the chapter, and then the Jews start arguing about what that means. Jesus then goes into a series of cryptic answers about eating his body and drinking his blood (referring to Eucharist/Communion) though not explaining it to his disciples at that time. Eventually this causes many of His followers to leave. Jesus still had the 12 disciples along with the 70 that He sends out to minister later as well.

What does this mean for married Christian husbands with a rebellious wife? Well, we know Paul discusses that.

> 1 Corinthians 7:10 To the married I give this command (not I, but the Lord): A wife must not separate from her husband. 11 But if she does, she must remain unmarried or else be reconciled to her husband. And a husband must not divorce his wife.
> 12 To the rest I say this (I, not the Lord): If any brother has a wife who is not a believer and she is willing to live with him, he must not divorce her. 13 And if a woman has a husband who is not a believer and he is willing to live with her, she must not divorce him. 14 For the unbelieving husband has been sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife has been sanctified through her believing husband. Otherwise your children would be unclean, but as it is, they are holy.
> 15 But if the unbeliever leaves, let it be so. The brother or the sister is not bound in such circumstances; God has called us to live in peace. 16 How do you know, wife, whether you will save your husband? Or, how do you know, husband, whether you will save your wife?

The key is to keep following God by leading the family and her in the ways of Christ. If she refuses she can leave as Jesus’ followers do. You should not compromise serving God to appease your wife as Adam did with Eve and disobeyed God. Keep leading the family, keep managing the finances, do whatever it takes to lead well and with the fruit of the Spirit.

Eventually, you will likely have to have a conversation that may go something like this.

> “Look, I’m trying to lead the family to obey God. If you want to keep being contentious (or unsubmissive, rebellious, etc.) then that’s on you. If you don’t want to be a Christian and follow God then you can leave.”

If she leaves, that’s OK just like many of Jesus’ followers did. You don’t need to continually fight for someone who has basically outed themselves as an unbeliever through their actions.

Christian wives to unbelieving husbands have their own specific passage in 1 Peter 3 exhorting them to be submissive and respective even to the unbeliever! But like 1 Corinthians 7 says if the unbelieving husbands leave then that's OK.

But as long as you are with them you do have to do your best to obey God and follow what He says about your roles and responsibilities of marriage in the Bible. Lead the marriage even if there is resistance. Continue to pray and aim to be godly in every interaction. Model the grace and mercy that God and Jesus did with us. However, draw the boundaries and be firm around doing what is best for the family.

Jesus even says His followers will encounter strife and division among their (biological) families on account of following Him.

> Luke 12:49 "I have come to bring fire on the earth, and how I wish it were already kindled! 50 But I have a baptism to undergo, and what constraint I am under until it is completed! 51 Do you think I came to bring peace on earth? No, I tell you, but division. 52 From now on there will be five in one family divided against each other, three against two and two against three. 53 They will be divided, father against son and son against father, mother against daughter and daughter against mother, mother-in-law against daughter-in-law and daughter-in-law against mother-in-law."

It is better to serve God than try to appease a wife or husband that is trying to drag you away from what God says to do. You can continue to serve God after too.

I would venture to say that most Christian denominations do not apply this Biblical instruction at all. Some are too divorce happy allowing unBiblical divorce. Some are too stringent forcing the marriage to stay together at all cost. Jesus in the gospels and Paul instructs us that it OK to allow the one not interested in following God to walk.

Where many denominations differ is if you can remarry after an unbeliever leaves. I hold more to the orthodox position of no remarriage as I've stated multiple times on this blog given it says stay single and reconcile, but one can go with their denomination or decide for themselves. It is a decision that they will be judged by God for eventually and not me.

Mark Driscoll is back – and with a new book ‘Act like a Man’

July 3, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Driscoll has a new book called Act like a Man on his website.

He says that he was waiting to write it after 30 years of ministry and had kids that were grown up with faithful Christian spouses before writing it. Additionally, he punches back against the “woke” critics.

If you’ve been around these parts for a long time Driscoll leapt to fame by delivering the “How dare you” tirade against men who weren’t stepping up in womens’ lives while dating them covered extensively by Dalrock.

Since then he was ousted from Mars Hill in 2014, and started Trinity Church in Arizona in 2016. The former has been covered in the Rise and Fall of Mars Hill series which I commented on. I think there is some legitimate criticism of his behavior, but it is clear also that the egalitarians took it and ran with it to bash the complementarian position (not to mention the patriarchal).

The Mars Hill came out calling him to resign from Trinity in 2021. PDF

> We sympathize with those who have been wounded by Mark and pray for their healing. We have engaged and heard from many former Mars Hill Church staff and members who were hurt by domineering leadership, harsh speech, and angry outbursts and are sobered by the devastation victims have suffered. We realize that Mark left deep pain in the lives of many by being unwilling to seek restoration and reconciliation with those he has sinned against. We grieve the harm that has come to The Trinity Church as well as the damage to the reputation of Jesus among unbelievers through Mark’s words and actions.

While qualifications for ministry may be in question, he at least appears to be right in James River debacle.

> James River Church organizes annual “Stronger Men’s Conferences”. At the 2024 event, one of the opening acts was Alex Magala, a former go-go dancer (where men and women dance erotically in little clothes for monetary tips in the form of bills suspended from their clothes by patrons) who says he is an Orthodox Christian, born into Christianity by birth ceremony, and who performed a sword swallowing act while climbing a pole. He has said the purpose of the act was to “inspire audiences to reach new heights of what’s possible in their lives”. Later, planned speaker Mark Driscoll denounced Magala from the stage, saying that a “Jezebel spirit opened our event” and compared the act to an ancient pagan ritual. John Lindell told Driscoll he was out of line and “You’re done” and Driscoll gathered his things and left the stage.[12]
> Driscoll has previously used the term “Jezebel spirit” many times, including > during a 2023 sermon series in which he applied the phrase to the Biden-Harris administration and claimed that passive men and domineering women were ruining society.[13]

Similarly, correct in his acknowledgement of the problematic elements such as feminism in society.

Aside from this, I went to his website to investigate his teachings over the past few years to see if it's something that men should be taking. Disclaimer: I have not read his book yet though I may in the future. I watched a large amount of videos on his teaching.

General summary:

1. Still puts more responsibility on the man than is due (e.g. female hypoagency), but better than federal headship. Acknowledges women can be wrong and sinful though and that they should be repentant unlike many complementarians who think women acting a certain way are a man's fault.
2. Still occasionally likes to make single men the butt of jokes, but better than before. Very much of a men are slacking without understanding the background of why that has happened and why incentives have driven such behavior including the educational system being rigged against men.
3. Still is like most complementarians in that they try to dance around the issue of headship-submission and prefer agreement of the husband and wife as the ideal over headship authority
4. Believes in tradcon husband working and SAHM over husband's ability to choose for wife to work or not. Won't hesitate to call out men for not being a provider, but is more hesitant to call out wives for not submitting
5. Sex – typical choreplay recommendations but does offer additional suggestions like medical, counseling, etc. However, nothing about attraction. They do however quote 1 Corinthians 7 on conjugal rights and expect the women (or low sex drive spouse) to make some sacrifice for the high sex drive one which is more than most complementarians do.
6. He also appears to be at least cursory aware of the manosphere and red pill considering some of the titles of the sermons such as "the other blue pill" and some of the topics he covers within the videos.

Overall, somewhat better than most tradcons and complementarians but still has significant flaws. Again, I have not read his new book, but I'd expect it to be like most much of the tradcon advice given the above sermons and series I listed to but perhaps a bit better. I'd assume he's read Tennant and Foster's book "It's good to be a man" at the very least. To give him some credit he does realized that many situations are very nuanced, but he has not completely understood 'the red pill' so to speak.

Headship is still authority in marriage Part 3

August 7, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Ironically, I don't think I've ever gone over in the Bible where head(ship) is mentioned. As I noted in Headship is authority, Wayne Grudem not only went over the Bible but all other Greek literature to see where head is defined as authority vs other options and it's overwhelmingly in favor of authority.

I covered significant examples in:

- Headship with Gentile and Genuine authority discernment
- Defining the headship authority model from Genesis to Christ and His Church
- Headship is still authority in marriage and wifely submission is obedience Part 2
- Headship is still authority in marriage Part 2 addendum

Therefore, it would also behoove us to look at the examples of where it's used in the Scriptures in the NT aside from an actual physical head. Here's all of the examples in Paul's letters.

> 1 Corinthians 11:3 But I want you to know that Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman,[b] and God is the head of Christ. 4 Any man who prays or prophesies with his head covered disgraces his head. 5 But any woman who prays or prophesies with her head uncovered disgraces her head, for it is one and the same thing as having a shaved head. 6 For if a woman will not cover her head, she should cut off her hair. But if it is disgraceful for a woman to have her hair cut off or her head shaved, she should cover her head. 7 For a man should not have his head covered, since he is the image and glory of God. But the woman is the glory of the man. 8 For man did not come from woman, but woman from man. 9 Neither was man created for the sake of woman, but woman for man. 10 For this reason a woman should have a symbol of authority[c] on her head, because of the angels.[d]

Though this passage is on prophesy, Paul goes back not only to Creation Order but also indicates that head coverings and hair symbolize being under authority.

> Ephesians 1:19 and what is the surpassing greatness of His power toward us who believe. These are in accordance with the working of the strength of His might 20 which He brought about in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead and seated Him at His right hand in the heavenly places, 21 far above all rule and authority and power and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age but also in the one to come. 22 And He put all things in subjection under His feet, and gave Him as head over all things to the church, 23 which is His body, the fullness of Him who fills all in all.

I included the prior verses for more context, but it is fairly clear here that Paul is talking about Jesus' dominion and authority over death which also extends to his authoritative headship over the Church.

> Ephesians 4:14 [g]As a result, we are no longer to be children, tossed here and there by waves and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, by craftiness [h]in deceitful scheming; 15 but [i]speaking the truth in love, [j]we are to grow up in all aspects into Him who is the head, even Christ, 16 from whom the whole body, being fitted and held together [k]by what every joint supplies, according to the [l]proper working of each individual part, causes the growth of the body for the building up of itself in love.

Paul refers to the head here in the context of fitting and holding together and directing the body. No direct references to authority though at the very least seems implied.

> Ephesians 5:22 Wives, be subject to your own husbands, as to the Lord. 23 For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, He Himself being the Savior of the body. 24 But as the church is subject to Christ, so also the wives ought to be to their husbands in everything.
> 25 Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ also loved the church and gave Himself up for her, 26 so that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, 27 that He might present to Himself the church [q]in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she would be holy and blameless. 28 So husbands ought also to love their own wives as their own bodies. He who loves his own wife loves himself; 29 for no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ also does the church, 30 because we are members of His body. 31 For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and shall be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. 32 This mystery is great; but I am speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 33 Nevertheless, each individual among you also is to love his own wife even as himself, and the wife must see to it that she [r]respects her husband.

It is clear that wives are to be subject to their husbands and husbands are referred to analogously as the head of the wife as Christ is head of the Church. That appears to be authoritatively in the passages we have looked at so far. Husbands are commanded like Christ in Ephesians 4 to work in a synergistic manner with their wives.

> Colossians 1:15 [w]He is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation. 16 For [x]by Him all things were created, both in the heavens and on earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones or dominions or rulers or authorities—all things have been created through Him and for Him. 17 He [y]is before all things, and in Him all things [z]hold together. 18 He is also head of the body, the church; and He is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead, so that He Himself will come to have first place in everything. 19

> For [aa]it was the Father’s good pleasure for all the [ab]fullness to dwell in Him, > 20 and through Him to reconcile all things to Himself, having made peace > through the blood of His cross; through Him, I say, whether things on earth or > things in [ac]heaven.

Again, Christ as the head of Church is denoted in the context of the passage to be authoritative.

> Colossians 2:8 See to it that no one takes you captive through philosophy and > empty deception, according to the tradition of men, according to the elementary > principles of the world, [h]rather than according to Christ. 9 For in Him all the > fullness of Deity dwells in bodily form, 10 and in Him you have been > made [i]complete, and He is the head [j]over all rule and authority;
>
> Colossians 2:16 Therefore no one is to [n]act as your judge in regard to food or > drink or in respect to a festival or a new moon or a Sabbath [o]day— 17 things > which are a mere shadow of what is to come; but the [p]substance [q]belongs to > Christ. 18 Let no one keep [r]defrauding you of your prize by delighting in [s]self> abasement and the worship of the angels, [t]taking his stand on visions he has > seen, [u]inflated without cause by his fleshly mind, 19 and not holding fast to > the head, from whom the entire body, being supplied and held together > by the joints and [v]ligaments, grows with a growth [w]which is from > God.

The first instance in Colossians 2 again refers head in the context of over all rule(rs) and authorities. The second is much like the Ephesians 4 passage where Christ is the head and supplying his strength to the body.

> Matthew 21:42 Jesus said to them, “Have you never read in the Scriptures: “‘The > stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone; the Lord has > done this, and it is marvelous in our eyes’[h]? 43 “Therefore I tell you that the > kingdom of God will be taken away from you and given to a people who will > produce its fruit. 44 Anyone who falls on this stone will be broken to pieces; > anyone on whom it falls will be crushed.”[i] 45 When the chief priests and the > Pharisees heard Jesus’ parables, they knew he was talking about them. 46 They > looked for a way to arrest him, but they were afraid of the crowd because the > people held that he was a prophet.
> 1 Peter 2:7 This precious value, then, is for you who believe; but for those who > disbelieve, “The stone which the builders rejected, This became the very > corner stone,” 8 and, “A stone of stumbling and a rock of offense”; for they > stumble because they are disobedient to the word, and to this doom they were > also appointed.

The word corner stone is termed kephale stone and is a quote from Psalm 118. This is Jesus referencing Himself to be the Messiah which is obviously authoritative to the Jews.

I believe I caught all of the variations referring to head(ship). All of the other references to head are an actual head.

Therefore, aside from arguments from Creation and Genesis, headship-submission in the marital passages, and others which are convincing on their own, it appears that any time NT authors refer to head(ship) in Christ it is a directly authoritative position. Obviously, this authoritative position needs to be used by the husband in marriage in a godly manner – Godly authority vs Gentile authority — but it also rules out mutual submission and other feminist arguments.

The so-called 5 types of marriages

Ran across an interesting classification of marriages

> - Devitalized couples. As the most dissatisfied group, these couples exhibit palpable discontent with the lowest marital satisfaction scores. Younger, less educated, often in lower-status occupations, they grapple with enduring dissatisfaction, contemplating divorce in the majority of cases. Their journey is marked by shorter marriages, a higher likelihood of religious heterogamy and a surprising frequency of previous divorces.
> - Conflicted couples. Despite communication challenges, these couples often share a consensus on egalitarian roles and religion. Demographically akin to devitalized couples, they bear the weight of less education, lower income and more religious heterogamy. Despite often contemplating divorce and grappling with dissatisfaction, they stand resilient, not diverging significantly in separation rates from the overall sample.
> - Traditional couples. Emerging as satisfied custodians of tradition, these couples find fulfillment in parenting and religious accord. Younger yet married longer, more educated and higher earning, they favor traditional roles. Less frequently separated and less considerate of divorce, their narrative is one of stability, contentment and commitment to the sanctity of their first marriages.
> - Harmonious couples. These couples held moderately high scores in marital interaction, yet diverged in their consensus on parenting issues. Older but earlier in marriage with fewer children, they exhibit higher education and job statuses. Despite men facing unexpected lower incomes and women often working full-time, divorce remains uncommon in this group. With 94% reporting overall satisfaction, they epitomize balance.
> - Vitalized couples. At the zenith of marital satisfaction, these couples maintained the highest scores across all domains, navigating conflict resolution with grace. Older, more educated and economically stable, they exude marital bliss and strong communication skills. 86% of these couples never once consider divorce, virtually all reporting satisfaction, and none facing the agony of separation. Theirs is a story of enduring love, effective communication and the triumph of a flourishing marital bond.

If you read between the lines, the demarcation between most of the 5 descriptions is mostly based on socioeconomic hierarchy. In other words, the “less education and lower status” married and usually less satisfied than the “higher education and job statuses.” Now, this isn’t too wrong. There is a growing divide between the so-called lower, middle, and upper classes all of the derivations of those such as upper-middle class. They also throw in religious heterogamy or in other words people who married each other from different religions which is obvious why the Bible warns us about that.

However, it would be probably more accurate to say that in the vast majority of devitalized and conflicted couples there is probably some if not a lot of dissatisfaction from either side. Women who believe they deserved a better man or men who believe they deserved a better woman. The settled woman who is discontent and the man that may have married too early to a woman who turns into a harpy most likely.

On the other hand, with the so-called harmonious and vitalized couples, you have women who probably married someone who had a very good job and status of the job. Their hypergamy is ticked off with several boxes of higher earner, higher education, good job status, likely can support the lifestyle that she wants to live, probably at least reasonably attractive, and so on. There’s less boxes for men to tick here, but as long as she’s relatively attractive and at least somewhat mentally stable whether she works or is a stay at home mom likely doesn’t matter too much for most men. Typically, these men will at least pair off with another college educated or further woman.

Finally, their recommendations on having a vitalized marriage.

> - Never imply a judgment on the other. When expressing yourself, be mindful not to criticize or condemn your partner, in the same way you would hope not to be scrutinized for airing grievances. Create an environment where both of you can communicate openly without feeling judged.
> - Emotions are neutral—neither good nor bad. Understand that your feelings, as well as your partner’s, aren’t inherently right or wrong. Embrace the idea that everyone experiences emotions differently, and that there’s no value judgment attached to how someone feels.
> - Feelings must be integrated with intellect and will. When making decisions or addressing issues in your relationship, combine your emotional responses with rational thinking and intentional actions. Find a balance between your heart and your mind, giving each equal importance.
> - Emotions must be reported. Share your feelings openly with your partner. By communicating your emotions, you allow them to understand your perspective better while honoring and respecting your own needs, desires and experiences.
> - Emotions must be reported when experienced. Timing is crucial in communication. Share your emotions promptly, as you experience them. This helps in addressing concerns in the moment, preventing misunderstandings and promoting a proactive approach to resolving issues in your relationship.

Clearly, I think this is a bunch of garbage.

Like the Christian leaders, they basically ignore what triggers sexual attraction in both of the sexes. It's very difficult to have a low-income and low-status married couple having a lasting marriage if they get bombarded all the time from the world, friends, family, and so on about how they should deserve more. A very discontented and rebellious wife who thinks her husband is beneath her and doesn't respect him is not going to even give her husband the benefit of the double nor want to discuss emotions with him anyway. She's for the most part already going to be checked out the marriage and looking for something better. Same with a man whose wife lets herself go and isn't interested in sex.

Now I'm not discounting emotional intelligence. I employ similar thinking in my own marriage about emotions and how we should treat them and build trust with my wife and in how I recommend other married couples do the same. However, it ignores the foundation underlying such marriages in the first place. This is like the icing on the top of the cake, but it is not the cake itself.

I think this article gives a surface level analysis for understanding successful marriages, but to truly have one you need the Bible and to understand the truth about sexual attraction and the path of temptation and be constantly on guard about it.

Professions and divorce

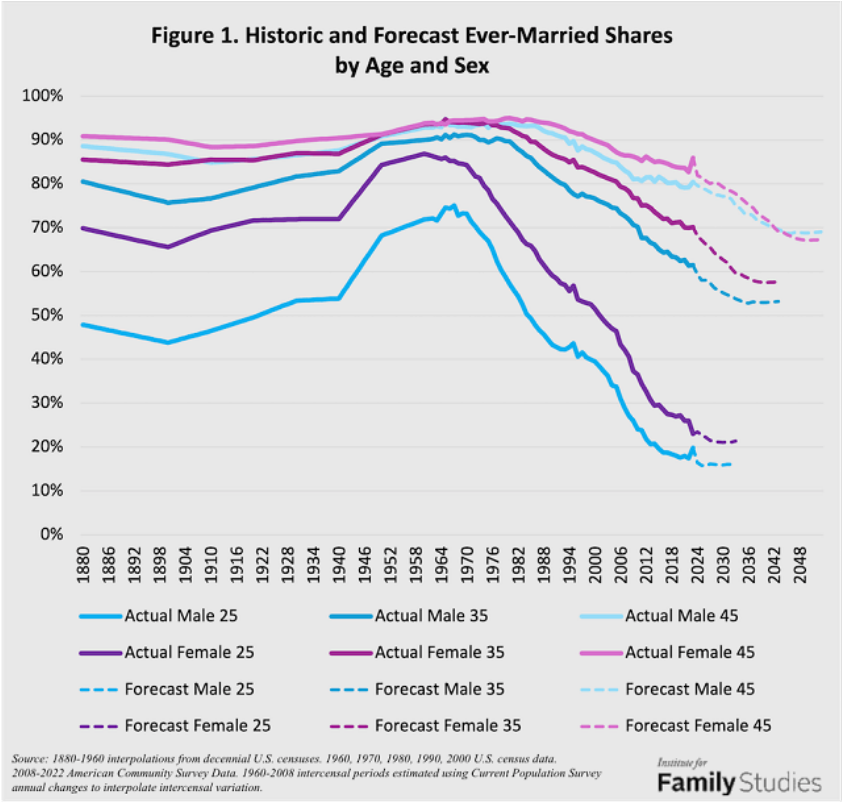
> • Small engine mechanics 46.2%

It appears that most of the hard sciences have the least divorce rates.

- This probably makes sense in that they tend to require at least a bachelors if not a master or PHD, graduate or professional degree.This requires a solid amount of self control and discipline to get through and at the very least some amount of intellect
- As we learned in my college analysis on divorce, though college educated women divorce men at a higher rate than regular women (90% vs 70%) but the overall amount of women is a lot lower because of the vastly lower college educated divorce rates vs regular divorce rates of associates degrees or HS degree only. This makes sense as anyone who can make it through college at least has a better self control, long term perspective, and likely less money worries.
- I'd also suspect that most of the hard sciences and professional degrees are people who think longer term and logically about things and are less prone to make feelings-based decisions
- Hypergamy-drive in women likely reduced by marrying higher status professionals

On the other hand, the vast majority of highest divorce rate professionals have a lot in common:

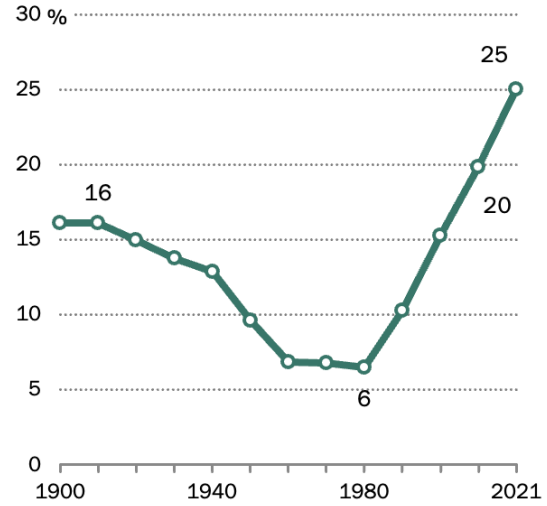


- Exposed to tons and tons of people so it's likely for them to compare and become more dissatisfied with their spouse
- Low or no education in most of the professions
- Very stressful jobs in a lot of cases. Makes people more prone to emotional and rash decisions if focus and willpower are used a ton at work

Didn't really mean to take this anywhere, but it's good data. If you can find women in the above fields they're much less likely to divorce. However, they are also much less likely to actually like you unless you're in the top X percentage of men. It can also give you a good idea of who to avoid, which should be obvious at least to most Christians for most of these such as bartenders, casino workers, and others like that.

More Never Married data from Pew Research

November 22, 2024 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

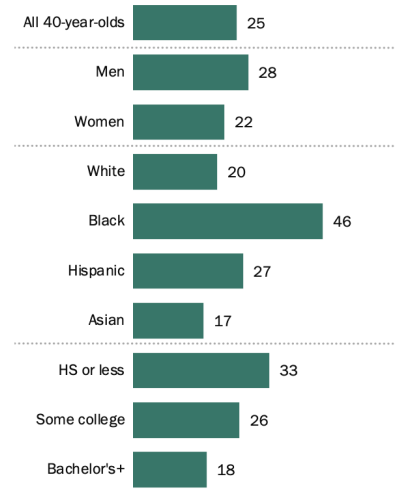


Earlier in the year I posted on the IFStudies analysis that suggests 1/3rd of women won't be married.

A recent though not very recent Pew Research article suggests similar trends but they have demographic separations on them.

One-quarter of U.S. 40-year-olds have never married, a record high

% of 40-year-olds who had never married



Note: Data labels shown for 1910, 1980, 2010 and 2021.

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

These were their points.

> - Gender: A higher share of men than women had never married.
> - Race and ethnicity: Black 40-year-olds were much more likely to have never married than Hispanic, White and Asian 40-year-olds.
> - Education level: 40-year-olds without a four-year college degree were more likely to have never married than those who had completed at least a bachelor's degree. One-third of those with a high school diploma or less had > never married, compared with 26% of those with some college education and 18% of those with a bachelor’s degree or more education.

Overall, the gender analysis is true. Less men marry than women by about 5-10% because many of the men who divorced or were divorced by women will remarry. Men have a much easier time remarrying than women because they are generally considered more attractive by the opposite sex into their late 20s, 30s and early 40s as opposed to women. Women who are older and divorce often find that most of the attractive and desirable men are snapped up already, and the ones they do like will only have sex with them but not commit.

Race and ethnicity is quite obvious given the destruction of the black family unit decades ago. Many of the other races and ethnicity are following suit.

To no one’s surprise generally college education is correlated to higher incomes as long as you don’t get a useless degree in liberal arts. That typically accounts of a large portion of the disparity in the education difference as from other articles I’ve covered show that marriage is much less likely under poor socioeconomic conditions. There’s a whopping 15 point gap between high school educated vs bachelors. I would not be surprised to see if it was analyzed further that there is a difference between bachelors and PHD or professional degrees as well.

The rise of men advocating for the passport bros is not without some basis.

Women advising women to cut off more hair

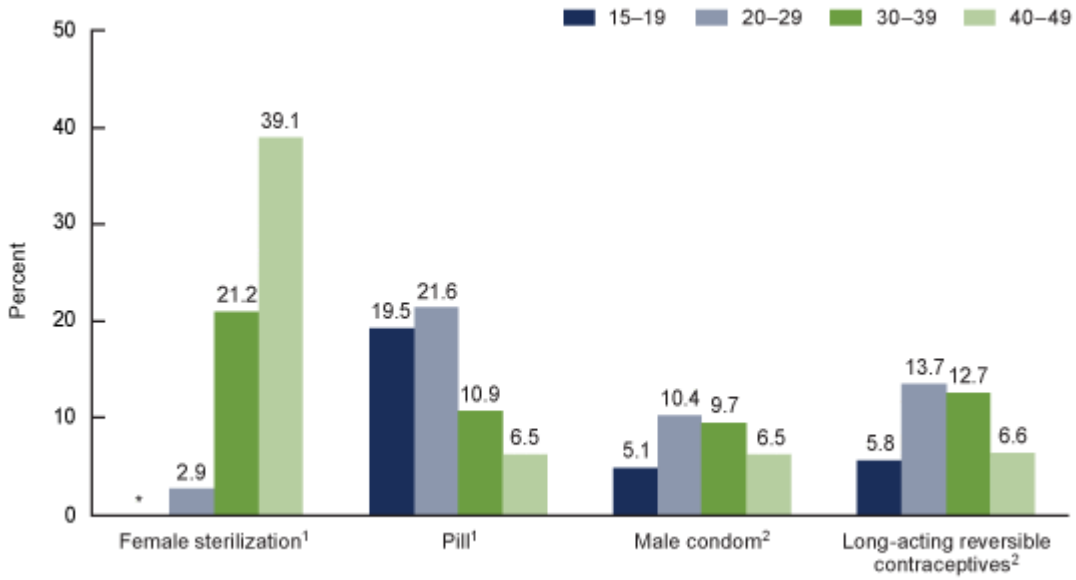
> - Women told clients of similar attractiveness as themselves to cut off the most hair.
> - Female intrasexual competition may be assortative with respect to mate quality.
> - Female intrasexual competition manifests without any contextual cues to mating.

Interesting study came out last year. Obviously, take with a grain of salt as it's just one study and the differences seem to be small although statistically significant. However, this would fall under the category of something that makes some deal of sense.

The vast majority of women look better with longer hair and hence women suggesting to cut more off or reinforcing the opinion to do shorter cuts could be seen as sabotage. Women in general tend to use more underhanded/subtle tactics like this than men.

The same is true of people trying to lose weight. At first everyone is happy for you, but then they start to make the snide remarks about losing too much weight or getting too thin.

Basically, both men and women need to be discerning about these things if they are trying to date or marry. It's can be the case especially with women that they can advise you to do the wrong thing like cut off too much hair, don't lose the weight, or any other types of body positivity that will decrease your attractiveness to men. Men are usually more straight forward on these, but you can still get conflicting advice here and there.



Prevalence of the carousel in young women in the US

June 6, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Still here and reading other blogs, but still haven't had much time for posting.

I was doing some digging and unfortunately I couldn't find anymore recent data on female contraception than 2017-2019 at least in an easily digestible format for the stats I wanted. I don't think much has changed in the carousel in that time frame though.

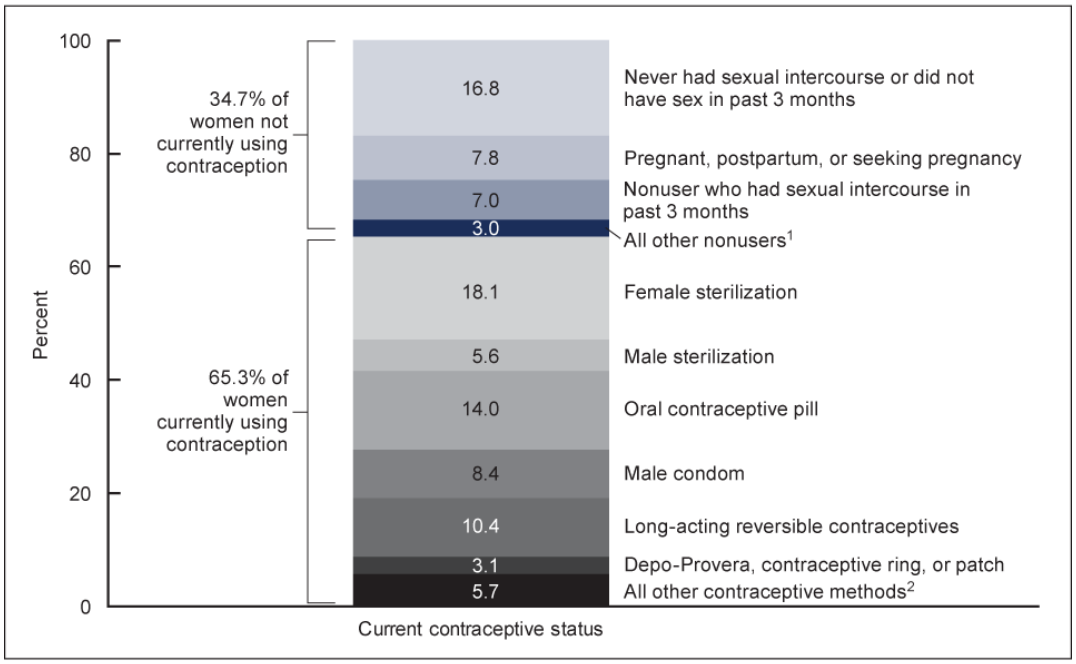
All source pictures from the CDC website

Essentially what we have here is the breakdown of contraception by age groups which is the hardest data to find which is probably why I couldn't find anything in the 2020-2025 range.

- Female sterilization – Usually tubal ligation
- Pill – Hormonal birth control
- Long act reversible (LARC) – intra-uterine devices, other implants, or shots like depo provera

For our purposes, the majority of women seem to wise up about the carousel around 30 years of age. Some still ride it of course, but the main target of women sleeping around tends to be the 15-19 and 20-29 age groups.

Several things are important to understand



- The women choosing to be child free in the 20-29 age group is virtually negligible at 2.9%, but likely includes a large portion of carousel riders.
- Almost 20% of women in the 15-19 and 20-29 are on the pill.
- LARC in the 20-29 vs the 15-19 age groups and male condoms seem to indicate there are more carousel riders in the 20-29 range. This makes good sense being that 15-17 are pretty much illegal for men over 18 and the fact that logistically sex is harder when you're living with your parents.

- "NOTES: Women currently using more than one method are classified according to the most effective method they are using."

Some portion of women use both condoms and the pill or LARC, but since pill and LARC are more effective than condoms they would not be counted for both but only the pill or LARC. This is important because we know that we can now add condoms on top of the data we have here.

Next chart from the CDC

[2]Other methods grouped in this category are shown in the accompanying data table.
NOTES: Percentages may not add to 100 due to rounding. Women currently using more than one method are classifed according to the most effective method they are using. Long-acting reversible contraceptives include contraceptive implants and intrauterine devices. Access data table for Figure 2 at: https://www.cdc.gov/nchs/data/databriefs/db388-tables-508.pdf#2.
SOURCE: National Center for Health Statistics, National Survey of Family Growth, 2017–2019.

- 16.8% of women are celibate
- 7.8% are pregnant, post partum, or seeking pregnancy
- 7% and 3% are women having sex with no protection. Likely the most of the women who end up being single mothers.
- I couldn't find whole US data, but I did find Washington state data which indicates that 21% of single mothers are 15-19 and 61% of single mothers are 20-29.

To scale, we can say that of the 10% not using protection, 2% would be 15-19 and 6% would be 20-29. It's not perfect but a reasonable inference.

Results of a the probable percentage of carousel riders in different age groups

Caveats – It's important to understand that approximately half of women are married by around age 28-29 now, so some portion of these women are married but don't want kids yet. However, it's MORE likely that the married people are not using birth control than single women after we factor in the women that are actively trying to get pregnant or are pregnant or just had a baby.

Thus, we can reasonably estimate that the number we get is probably the least amount of carousel riders. For instance, if 50% of women are married and 50% are non-married it's likely that some women will go off of the pill, forego condoms, or take out uterine devices sometime after they get married even if not right away given. In other words, a larger portion of them would be counted into the non-contraceptive use category. Of course, since around 35-40% of children are born out of wedlock it might not be as big a difference as we think, but all in all I would call this a wash in the form of likely more than the numbers we get.

Some women also get on hormonal birth control to control their periods as opposed to having sex, but that percentage is probably not that high.

IFStudies surveys from the 2010s to 2020s also confirm that men are more sexless than women.

> Between the 2013-15 NSFG wave and the 2022-23 wave, all measures of sexlessness rose for both young adult males and females. In terms of virginity, young adult males rose from 4% virgins in 2013-15 to 10% in 2022-23; for young adult females, reported virginity rose from 5% in 2013-15 to 7% in 2022-23.
> But a larger share of young adults have had sex at some point—just not in the last year. Sexlessness in the last year rose from 9% for males in 2013-15 to 24% in 2022-23. For females, it rose from 8% to 13 percent.

Approximate percentage of carousel riders

- 15-19 — 0 (sterile) + 19.5 (pill) + 5.1 (condom) + 5.8 (LARC) + 2 (none) = 32.4%
- 20-29 — 2.9 (sterile) + 21.6 (pill) + 10.4 (condom) + 13.7 (LARC) + 6 (none) = 54.6%

These numbers seem reasonable to me since the obesity epidemic has effectively reduced a decent number of the male and female populations in regard to attractiveness which reasonably excludes some bottom portions of the population.

Also, as stated before, the 15-19 age range has legal and logistical reasons why they would be opportunistically lower especially where high school and extra-curriculars are important for a good majority of women's educational aspirations.

It's likely this 50-60% of female riders in the 20-29 region are going after the top 5%, 10% and 20% of men which is why the backlogging occurs and where the cries of "where are all the good men at?" come from.

A deeper dive on Hypergamy

June 14, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack's post on the Ordinance of Fear has stimulated me a flesh out some thoughts I've had for some time on this topic. I've written substantially about attraction such A Christian understanding of attraction, and the role it plays in marriage: Part 4. It's one of the works I consider seminal to this blog and perhaps wider Christian ethos on tying natural attraction to the Bible whereas most Christian pastors have no clue about it at all. Digging deeper into our understanding of hypergamy, we need to example it from multiple angles. There's three main factors that we have observed in the real world about women and their own attraction triggers.

1. Women are not good at understanding what attracts them. When asked, very few are self aware of what they like. They usually respond in a way that bypasses attraction such as naming qualities (e.g. kindness, family man) they would like in a man they are already attracted to.
2. Women are not good at discerning between good and evil directional aspects of what attracts them
3. Like-attracts-Like principle where generally worldly women are more oriented to being attracted to the worldly versions of attraction and sexual desire. This also does not exclude Christian women being tempted toward worldly versions if they are surrounding by unattractive men.

Expressions of hypergamy Diving into some more of the details of hypergamy, I'm going to propose some examples that we've seen before and may have not either. I'm not particular tied to these examples, but I would like help to refine them into something that is usable. To define some terms first. Hypergamy is the overarching observation that women want to marry up. This means that women are sexually attracted men that are superior or have more dominion than themselves. Women are hardwired to want their man to be better at them in almost every aspect possible — even the most hardcore feminist — unless they are actively trying to LARP (live action role play) as the man in the relationship. Main categories are going to be mental, physical, and emotional. Though spiritual is often denoted as a separate component, in reality this should pervade the Christian walk which is all 3 of these categories so it's more a holistic application rather than a separate one. Plus, we are trying to orient what the natural attraction is from the worldly attraction and that makes the discernment easier. These are some but not all of the list of traits that fall under the umbrella of hypergamy and tend to be something women are sexually attracted to.

- Mental
    - Power/Authority
        - Leadership/headship – Genuine authority vs Gentile authority
        - Dominance – Dominion/dominate vs domineering

        - Authority subset – Respect vs Fear
    - Status – Reputation and fame vs ill repute and infamous
        - Publicity – Good reputation vs “no publicity is bad publicity”
- Physical
    - Height – Tall vs taller than her vs shorter than her vs short
    - Athleticism – Physical dominance vs violence/abuse
    - Looks – Handsome vs Narcissism
    - Physique – Muscular vs bear/bodybuilder vs normal vs thin/fat
- Emotional
    - Masculinity – Manly/the man vs machismo vs feminine
        - Women feel good around manly men but get the ick with feminine men
    - Money – Security/provision vs gold diggers
    - Charisma – Good Charm and Influence vs selfish (e.g. the Dark Triad)
    - Humor – Funny vs Offensive

There’s more than this, but just a start. If this is understandable or resonates with you, I’d like some help in filling out more of this so we can get a standardized understanding out there that would be useful to all men.

- Sexually – Women want to be dominated physically, mentally, and emotionally in the bedroom although the lines can be more blurred on how dominant they prefer. Most have some sort of dominated fantasy, but this stems from usually already being attracted from the above.

It is only Attractive Male Attention that is validating to a woman. Many of the attributes above trigger a woman enough to be attracted to a man, and that’s where he is afforded some influence on her and her feelings. If you don’t trigger these and give attention you are likely to be named a loser or creep as SNL put it. To go back to Jack’s post a bit, I don’t think fear is outside of hypergamy but more so fear has some interplay in many of the different aspects of triggers of hypergamy. There’s a dominion type fear both regularly and sexually where the lines are blurred between a dominate vs domineering man where she likes some of it but if gone too far she may hate it. There’s the power dynamic with respect/fear. There’s the fear of violence, fear of lack of provision or divorce, and many other things like that. Fear mostly plays into the mental and emotional side of relationships, although some women get themselves into physically abusive relationships. Perhaps mental and emotional are too close together to really distinguish as well. I could see some of the traits falling under emotional or mental. If anyone else has any ideas, be sure to comment on them.

Kingdom Rule – Putting it all together with hypergamy, dominance, respect, fear and womens' sexual attraction and arousal

June 28, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As I was reading Jack's analaysis of Fear is stronger than Hypergamy and making a comment, I think I figured out the missing links in our understanding here. Decided to bring it over here since it was getting longer and it showed some of the thought process which got me there.

> Hmmm. I can see where you're coming from with the fear dynamic, but I still don't think it's an overriding hypergamy. Your post did clarify a bit for me the dualistic nature of hypergamy in the sense of dominion though.
> The dualistic response to a man's dominion is to either submit or rebel. However, whether a man employs varying degrees of force whether physical, emotional, or other, can amplify different responses to submission or rebellion. The Fear Factor I think is more directly a result of a woman's internal and external locus of Control.
> The more neurotic a woman is, the more anxious, a damaged childhood, absence of a father, peer pressure, or various modifying factors seem to modify the Control factor. A woman with a loving but strong masculine leader as a father who is a good husband will make her feel Safe. Hence, her locus of Control is decreased and usually she is very feminine and more submissive. Whereas when women have to deal with many of the negative attributes listed in the first sentence this slowly raises her internal Control and tends to lead her to not only being less feminine and more masculine but desire to have higher Control over herself. Hence, in relationships she is more likely be rebellious.
> When a man's Dominance is greater than her internal Control, Fear is generated.
> From the sexual point of view, women generally prefer as a whole dominance over romance if we're defining the romance and soft and slow intimate sex whereas dominance tends to be the rough and hard with potential elements of faux violence like slapping, choking, rape fantasies, etc. This seems to be the case because it more strongly triggers the Over on her internal Control. Feminists, women with BPD, and other women with a strong locus of internal Control seem to go more wild for sex in these cases, perhaps because not many men can trigger this switch and when it is flipped they go from the rebellious attitude to overwhelmingly submissive sexually. This appears to be an overcorrection perhaps due to the lack of safeness or stability from the past negative experiences.
> As I was writing this, I may have had an epiphany here that might fit > better. Won't delete any of the above, but maybe this fits everything best. In other words,

> - Hypergamy seems to be the Sexual Attraction part of the equation which generates Respect – Women look up to the tall, muscular, successful, masculine leader but are not necessarily aroused by him.
> - Dominance triggering the Control switch is the Sexual Arousal part of the equation which triggers Fear. Dominance exposes her vulnerability through loss of control (Dominance > Control), but it is intensely validating when coming from an attractive man.
> - Fear and respect while related and often two sides of the same coin come together to maximize a woman's sexual response.
> This helps us understand better the differences between sexual attraction and sexual arousal.

When I wrote before on the differences between sexual attraction and sexual arousal, we really hadn't made this connection yet understanding the internal workings of sexual arousal. Jack's post helped me to understand here that it's not necessarily fear overcoming hypergamy but both working in concert to generate a woman's sexual response.

To summarize:

- Hypergamy traits – PSALM+ (power, status, athleticism, looks, money, height, masculinity, leadership, etc) – trigger a sense of Respect for a man in a woman if he is greater than her in these.
- Dominance triggers a woman's internal Control switch which generates Fear. When Dominance overrides the Control, this Fear is expressed as vulnerability and humility which if a man proceeds sexually leads validation.
- Kingdom Rule – To put this this in Biblical terms, God outlines this in Genesis 1-3. Taking dominion over the earth and animals leads to building a man's own Kingdom which generates the Respect component while ruling or dominance over his wife elicits elicits the necessary Fear component to bring about a complete and titillating sexual response.

I went with the term Kingdom Rule because I believe this accurately matches the Hebrew definitions.

> Genesis 1:28 God blessed them and said to them, "Be fruitful and increase in number; fill the earth and subdue (kabash) it. Rule (radah) over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky and over every living creature that moves on the ground."
> H3533 – kâbash – A primitive root; to tread down; hence negatively to disregard; > positively to conquer, subjugate, violate: – bring into bondage, force, keep under, subdue, bring into subjection.

> H7287 – râdâh – A primitive root; to tread down, that is, subjugate; specifically to crumble off: – (come to, make to) have dominion, prevail against, reign, (bear, make to) rule, (-r, over), take.
> Genesis 3:16 To the woman he said, “I will make your pains in childbearing very severe; with painful labor you will give birth to children. Your desire (teshuqah) will be for your husband, and he will rule (mashal) over you.”
> H8669 – teshûqâh – From H7783 in the original sense of stretching out after; a longing: – desire.
> H4910 – mâshal – A primitive root; to rule: – (have, make to have) dominion, governor, X indeed, reign, (bear, cause to, have) rule (-ing, -r), have power.

Genesis 1 seems to establish building a Kingdom through kabash and radah, and Genesis 3 shows the Rule or dominion of the husband over the wife. Hence, Kingdom Rule as a shortcut for explaining the dual nature sexual response. Women want to see a man with a Kingdom that is better than hers, and then she is attracted enough that she wants him to initiate Ruling over her.

As we have noted before, the desire and rule portion is shown to be double sided for women. This is a choice between the accurately named “Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil” that manifests continually within a marriage.

> Genesis 4:6 Then the Lord said to Cain, “Why are you angry? Why is your face downcast? 7 If you do what is right, will you not be accepted? But if you do not do what is right, sin is crouching at your door; it desires (teshuqah) to have you, but you must rule (mashal) over it.”
> Song of Songs 7:10 I belong to my beloved, and his desire (teshuqah) is for me.

In Genesis 4, Cain’s desire gives into sin and ends up rebellion just like Eve is given the same choice in Genesis 3, but we see in Song of Songs where a husband’s rule (she acknowledges that she belongs to him) and the husbands’ desire is toward the wife. This can seem unrelated at first because it’s talking about the husband’s desire, but we understand that the husband’s rule and dominance (his desire) towards possessing his wife generates his wife’s own sexual desire through the mechanism we have discussed. Dominance overcomes her Control which leads to Fear expressed as vulnerability and humility and then to (sexual) validation and submission.

This explains why vigorous dominant sex is typically highly preferred by women over slow so-called romantic sex. This is a feature not a bug. Many of the dominant acts like slapping, choking, BDSM, and other things like this will often elicit a stronger sexual response provided a woman is not triggered by previous negative experience such as a previous sexual assault. In fact, being possessed by a dominant man is often called very romantic by women which is clear in womens' porn and in practice in relationships and marriage. It seems many men were misinformed what romance actually is.

Finally, to draw things back around, Jack's current series, I'd conclude that it is mainly discussing the nature of Sexual Arousal and not necessarily Hypergamy or Sexual Attraction. They interact with each other but one does not usually express over the other. Rather, they work in concert with each other in generating. Usually there is not one without the other.

Agency and force with Deuteronomy 22 and Exodus 22

July 1, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

The sex = marriage arguments from Deuteronomy 22 and Exodus 22 don't work logically.

First here are the passages.

> Deuteronomy 22:23 If a man happens to meet in a town a virgin pledged to be married and he sleeps with her, 24 you shall take both of them to the gate of that town and stone them to death—the young woman because she was in a town and did not scream for help, and the man because he violated another man's wife. You must purge the evil from among you.
> 25 But if out in the country a man happens to meet a young woman pledged to be married and rapes (châzaq) her, only the man who has done this shall die. 26 Do nothing to the woman; she has committed no sin deserving death. This case is like that of someone who attacks and murders a neighbor, 27 for the man found the young woman out in the country, and though the betrothed woman screamed, there was no one to rescue her.
> 28 If a man happens to meet a virgin who is not pledged to be married and rapes (tâphaś) her and they are discovered, 29 he shall pay her father fifty shekels of silver. He must marry the young woman, for he has violated her. He can never divorce her as long as he lives.
> Exodus 22:16 "If a man seduces (pathah) a virgin who is not pledged to be married and sleeps with her, he must pay the bride-price, and she shall be his wife. 17 If her father absolutely refuses to give her to him, he must still pay the bride-price for virgins.

Here are the Strong's lexical definitions of the words.

> Chazaq – A primitive root; to fasten upon; hence to seize, be strong (figuratively courageous, causatively strengthen, cure, help, repair, fortify), obstinate; to bind, restrain, conquer: – aid, amend, X calker, catch, cleave, confirm, be constant, constrain, continue, be of good (take) courage (-ous, -ly), encourage (self), be established, fasten, force, fortify, make hard, harden, help, (lay) hold (fast), lean, maintain, play the man, mend, become (wax) mighty, prevail, be recovered, repair, retain, seize, be (wax) sore, strengten (self), be stout, be (make, shew, wax) strong (-er), be sure, take (hold), be urgent, behave self valiantly, withstand.
> The lexical uses of the word include Angels dragging Lot, his wife and daughters out of Sodom and Gomorrah, Pharaoh hardening his heart, applied strength of force like Samson, etc.

> Taphas – A primitive root; to manipulate, that is, seize; chiefly to capture, wield; specifically to overlay; figuratively to use unwarrantably: – catch, handle, (lay, take) hold (on, over), stop, X surely, surprise, take.
> The lexical uses of the word include Potiphar's wife grabbing Joseph by the cloak, Israel seizing villages, Saul's robe, a sinner 'taphas' by an adulterous woman, etc.
> Pathah – A primitive root; to open, that is, be (causatively make) roomy; usually figuratively (in a mental or moral sense) to be (causatively make) simple or (in a sinister way) delude: – allure, deceive, enlarge, entice, flatter, persuade, silly (one).
> The lexical uses of the word include God saying that the Israelites should not be deceived by other gods, the Philistines telling Delilah to entice/deceive Samson, and other uses in Job, Psalms and Proverbs about deceiving others into sin.

It is generally clear that there is some variance in semantic range for all of these different words. In the context of these particular passages, the most likely definitions of these words would be as follows.

- Chazaq = Rape. Man seizes betrothed in a field and no one can hear her scream
- Taphas = Force but Consent. Joseph if he consent to Potiphar's wife taphas or becoming a sinner with an adulterous woman's taphas.
- Pathah = Deceived such that Consent is Compromised.

Expounding on my arguments in the comment section of this post is here.

First is the argument against virgin agency

> Artisanal Toad addressed this situation in terms of agency, i.e. virgins have no agency, and she is under her father's authority.
> Also, if someone is not in a coherent state of mind to make decisions, then those decisions are made by others, i.e. her father. But in the case of seduction/rape, Chad pulls the shots. Either way, it indicates that she lacks agentic capacity.

This is a good case of why black and white thinking on womens' agency is very easily misinterpreted. Let's look at the passages briefly.

> Numbers 30:3 "When a young woman still living in her father's household makes a vow to the Lord or obligates herself by a pledge 4 and her father hears about her vow or pledge but says nothing to her, then all her vows and every pledge by which she obligated herself will stand. 5 But if her father forbids her when he hears about it, none of her vows or the pledges by which she obligated herself will stand; the Lord will release her because her father has forbidden her.
> 6 "If she marries after she makes a vow or after her lips utter a rash promise by which she obligates herself 7 and her husband hears about it but says nothing to her, then her vows or the pledges by which she obligated herself > will stand. 8 But if her husband forbids her when he hears about it, he nullifies the vow that obligates her or the rash promise by which she obligates herself, and the Lord will release her.

If wives and daughters had no agency, then the Bible would say that a wife or daughter cannot make vows or pledges in Numbers 30. Those who have no agency cannot make decisions for themselves. Rather, we see in Numbers 30 that wives and daughters can make vows and pledges (e.g. they have agency), just that the father has an overruling authority if thinks they're foolish.

The same is true with the seduced woman as the father thinks she was being deceived or foolish with the man who she had sex with so he can nullify what happened. The virgin woman in this case exercised some degree of agency in deciding to have sex with this man, but if the father decides that her judgment was impaired enough he can nullify it. Likewise, the Church is under the authority of Jesus, but that doesn't mean the Church has no agency.

This error about no agency is very similar to the one that the complementarians make with husbands and wives. If a wife does not want to have sex with her husband, they blame the husband for not being more loving because if supposedly he's more loving then she will submit and have sex with him. This is implying that the wife is a robot with no agency to choose to do the right thing.

Main point 1 – One being underneath authority does not preclude partial or full agency. Only that the one underneath the authority has some protection if they make an error in judgment.

Second the wording of the passages implies that there is a level of consent with taphas

> Deutertonomy 22:25 But if out in the country a man happens to meet a young woman pledged to be married and rapes (châzaq) her, only the man who has done this shall die. 26 Do nothing to the woman; she has committed no sin deserving death. This case is like that of someone who attacks and murders a neighbor, 27 for the man found the young woman out in the country, and though the betrothed woman screamed, there was no one to rescue her.
> 28 If a man happens to meet a virgin who is not pledged to be married and rapes (tâphaś) her and they are discovered, 29 he shall pay her father fifty shekels of silver. He must marry the young woman, for he has violated her. He can never divorce her as long as he lives.

If we look closely at the bolded parts of the passages we see a couple things emerge.

- The betrothed woman that was chazaq'ed in the country was not guilty because she screamed and there was no one to rescue her.
- The virgin woman that was taphas'ed anywhere did not scream but was discovered.

- The lexicon for discovered are translations such as when no helper was found for Adam in the garden, the dove Noah sent out found no dry ground, etc.

The former with the betrothed that was chazaq'ed clearly show that the rape is something that is unwanted contrasted to the betrothed in the city where if she didn't scream then it was wanted and she was guilty.

On the other hand, the virgin woman that was taphas'ed did not scream but they were discovered. This directly shows some level of both agency and consent. However, we can distinguish from Exodus 22 that she was not seduced.

Main point 2 – There is some level of consent with taphas as the virgin woman did not scream which makes it not rape (chazaq)

Third is the argument that the Law is advocating for sex = marriage

Punishments in the Law are not to be used to consider what is the marriage ideal. But don't listen to me, listen to Paul on how the Law helps us identify sin.

> Romans 7:7 What shall we say, then? Is the law sinful? Certainly not! Nevertheless, I would not have known what sin was had it not been for the law. For I would not have known what coveting really was if the law had not said, "You shall not covet." 8 But sin, seizing the opportunity afforded by the commandment, produced in me every kind of coveting. For apart from the law, sin was dead. 9 Once I was alive apart from the law; but when the commandment came, sin sprang to life and I died. 10 I found that the very commandment that was intended to bring life actually brought death. 11 For sin, seizing the opportunity afforded by the commandment, deceived me, and through the commandment put me to death. 12 So then, the law is holy, and the commandment is holy, righteous and good.

In general, for these specific cases aside from identifying sin, the Law is trying to confer some punishment for the offender but an equitable solution for the victim.

1. In the case of the woman seduced, the father can make a ruling because she was not in her right mind but the offender must still pay the bride price. The Equitable solution is that the father can nullify what happened and punishment that the offender must pay the bride price regardless and be forced to marry her if the father assents.
2. In the case of the taphas it seems likely that like Potiphar's wife grabbed hold (taphas) of Joseph but the woman was in her right mind to assent like if Joseph assented but the genders were flipped. God upholds the virgin woman's limited agency in this case much like we uphold shotgun marriages to prevent the shame of the woman (equitable solution), but the offender is punished by being forced to not only pay the bride price but never being able to divorce her.

Main point 3 – Pathah is seduction impaired consent while taphas has some level of consent with it based on the semantic range of the word usage

Fourth is understanding that the difference between chazaq and taphas and pathah matters

The sex = marriage contention involves the following assumptions. Let's follow the logic.

1. If you assume that sex = marriage then you must eliminate any potential consent from taphas because otherwise there has to be a passage included in Deuteronomy 22 that the father could nullify it like with pathah in Exodus 22. It's clear from the Deuteronomy virgin passage there is no such instance.
2. This then forces taphas to be the semantic equivalent of chazaq which we can logically conclude that both mean to rape. Chazaq clearly means to rape — the betrothed woman won't be punished in the country because no one could hear her scream.
3. Then by the same argument virgin woman is now automatically married her rapist because sex = marriage. In other words, this woman is getting raped and forced into a marriage at the same time.

This leads to the following word definitions.

- Chazaq = Taphas = Rape = Marriage
- Pathah = Consent but father can nullify. Doesn't matter if the consent is seduced or deceived or not.

You can see how this line of argument is logically fallacious as they're forcing the terms together. Fortunately, the Bible does provide evidence that chazaq is not taphas and the semantic ranges of these words differ.

- Chazaq = Rape. Man seizes betrothed in a field and no one can hear her scream only he is guilty
- Taphas = Force but Consent. Joseph if he consents to Potiphar's wife taphas in reverse or becoming a sinner with an adulterous woman's taphas. The virgin woman does not scream but they are discovered.
- Pathah = Deceived such that Consent is Compromised. Father can annul the situation.

A good interpretation of the passage must account for why the terms are different

Main point 4 – The difference between chazaq and taphas must mean there there is some choice along with the screaming versus discovery textual clues.

Based upon these logical arguments, it is clear to me that the Bible does distinguish between rape, some force but consent, and seducing or deceiving a woman into sex. The sex = marriage position tries to redefine the words so that chazaq = taphas = rape = marriage and ignores the direct contextual clues like screaming versus discovery. It also tries to throw away female agency under the guise of being under authority when that's not what the Bible shows.

Indeed, based on the past couple posts in regard to dominance triggering a woman's sexual arousal, you can how in real life some show of force + consent could result in a situation where God deems that a "shotgun marriage" should occur without the father's consent in terms of both the punishment to the man and equitable solution for the woman. If a woman is seduced or deceived, the father can annul the compromised consent. In both cases the women have some degree of agency albeit the Law proposes different solutions and punishments if there was compromised consent or non-compromised consent.

Only comments arguing the points are allowed. Any other miscellaneous nonsense is not tolerated.

Men where have you gone? Please come back please – Gone wrong

July 7, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Couldn't let this one go.

Men, Where Have You Gone? Please Come Back – So many men have retreated from intimacy, hiding behind firewalls, filters and curated personas, dabbling and scrolling. We miss you.

> It started to become clear the previous April, when a man who had been pursuing me canceled a dinner at the last minute. There was a scheduling mix-up with his son's game. I understood. I'm a hockey mom; I get it. Still, I went. I wore what I would have worn anyway. I took the table. I ordered well. And I watched the room.
> Only two tables nearby seemed to hold actual dates. The rest were groups of women, or women alone, each one occupying her space with quiet confidence. No shrinking. No waiting. No apologizing.
> That night marked something. Not a heartbreak, but an unveiling. A sense that what I'd been experiencing wasn't just personal misalignment. It was something broader. Cultural. A slow vanishing of presence.

The irony is that men are usually doing things together rather than sitting down for dinner as a bunch of guys, but the author spins it into a positive for women and negative for men that they're doing what they're doing despite men.

> I spent over a decade behind the curtain of digital desire. As the custodian of records for Playboy and its affiliated hardcore properties, including sites like Spice TV, I was responsible for some of the most infringed-upon adult content in the world. I worked closely with copyright attorneys and marketing teams to understand exactly what it took to get a man to pay for content he could easily find for free.
> We knew what worked. We knew how to frame a face, a gesture, a moment of implication — just enough to ignite fantasy and open a wallet. I came to understand, in exact terms, what cues tempt the average 18-to-36-year-old cis heterosexual man. What drew him in. What kept him coming back. It wasn't intimacy. It wasn't mutuality. It was access to stimulation — clean, fast and frictionless.
> In that world, there's no need for conversation. No effort. No curiosity. No reciprocity. No one's feelings to consider, no vulnerability to navigate. Just a closed loop of consumption.
> What struck me most wasn't the extremity of the content; it was the emotional > vacancy behind it. The drift. The way many men had quietly withdrawn from intimacy and vulnerability. Not with violence or resistance, but with indifference.

> They weren't sitting across from someone on a Saturday night, trying to connect. They were scrolling. Dabbling. Disappearing behind firewalls, filters and curated personas. And while they disappeared, women continued to gather. To tend. To notice who wasn't arriving — and to show up anyway.

Now we get the true story. She points out that it's easy for most men to do this, but what she doesn't point out is that most women have made it much harder to connect person to person. They're more entitled, more high maintenance, and more picky.

But that doesn't even look at the fact that women of these women aren't reciprocal as well – do they care about the conversations they're having with the men? Do they make an effort to know men? Are they curious about men? Are they considerate of men's feelings?

When all you get most of the time asking women out and in dating is rejections why keep doing it?

> I'm 54. I've been dating since the mid-80s, been married, been a mother, gotten divorced, had many relationships long and short. I remember when part of heterosexual male culture involved showing up with a woman to signal something — status, success, desirability. Women were once signifiers of value, even to other men. It wasn't always healthy, but it meant that men had to show up and put in some effort.
> That dynamic has quietly collapsed. We have moved into an era where many men no longer seek women to impress other men or to connect across difference. They perform elsewhere. Alone. They've filtered us out.
> I recently experienced a flicker of possibility. With James. We met on Raya, the dating app. There was something mutual from the start — wordplay, emotional precision, a tone that felt attuned. It was brief, but it caught light. I remember saying to him, "Even fleeting connections matter, when they're mutual and lit from the inside." I meant it.
> There was just enough spark to wonder what might unfold. Enough curiosity to imagine a doorway. But he didn't step through it. Not with a plan. Not with presence. He hovered — flirting, retreating, offering warmth but no direction.
> Sexual tension and a spark aren't reason enough to sit still and hope there's substance behind the shimmer. So I named what I felt. I texted him clearly, with care, not simply to declare attraction but to extend a real invitation to explore what was possible. I didn't chase. I invited, leaving the door open. If he ever wanted to cross the threshold — not just to take, but to meet — I was willing. I wanted. I still do.
> He never replied. He still follows my Instagram stories — one of those small gestures of passive engagement that so many of us now mistake for closeness. It > looks like interest. It feels like silence.

> There are thousands of Jameses. I have known dozens. The arc varies, but the undertow is familiar.
> What I won't entertain is directionless orbiting. That thing so many men now seem to mistake for connection: the perpetual maybe. The emoji check-ins. The casual "seeing where it goes" without ever going anywhere. We call it a situationship. But mostly, it's avoidance. An abdication of ownership — of feeling, of behavior, of sex that isn't a means to an end, but is communion.

And now we get the last of the trickle truth. Men at that age have a ton more women interested in them than women have interested men and they tend to be the more choosey ones. It was probably a longer phase for this woman to understand, but if he has other women wanting his attention then he's just going to let her drift off. Just like women do to men in their 20s and even 30s.

Funny how she even uses the term orbiters as that's exactly what happens when women are getting all of the attention when younger.

> Maybe we're between paradigms, mourning what's fallen, not yet fluent in what comes next. The infrastructures of intimacy — slowness, curiosity, accountability — have been eroded by haste, convenience and a kind of sanctioned emotional retreat.
> It's not about blaming men. It's about noticing the imbalance. About grieving what's not meeting us. And about refusing to dress it up as personal failure when it's actually a collective reality.
> So here's what I'll say: You are missed. Not just by me, but by the world you once helped shape.
>
> We remember you. The version of you that lingered at the table. That laughed from the chest. That asked questions and waited for the answers. That touched without taking. That listened — really listened — when a woman spoke.
> You are not gone, but your presence is thinning. In restaurants, in friendships, in the slow rituals of romantic emergence.
> You've retreated — not into malice, but into something softer and harder all at once: Avoidance. Exhaustion. Disrepair.
> Maybe no one taught you how to stay. Maybe you tried once, and it hurt. Maybe the world told you your role was to provide, to perform, to protect — and never to feel.
> But here's what's real: We never needed you to be perfect. We needed you to be with us. Not above. Not muted. Not masked. Just with.
> And you can still come back. Not by becoming someone else, but by remembering what connection feels like when it's honest and slow. When it's earned and messy and sacred.

> We’re still here, those of us who are willing to cocreate something true. We are not impossible to please. We’re not asking for performances.
> We are asking for presence. For courage. For breath and eye contact and the ability to say, “I’m here. I don’t know how to do this perfectly, but I want to try.”
> Come back. Not with flowers or fireworks, but with willingness. With your whole, beautiful, imperfect heart.
> We’re still here. And we haven’t stopped hoping.
> As for me, I’ll keep showing up. Not because I’m waiting. Because I know what it feels like when someone finally arrives.

Well, at least she’s reflective about it even if she gets it way wrong.

Perhaps she should be encouraging women to do start doing the same things first so men do feel more welcome and ready to date. But that would be tough getting a culture that is saying the opposite that women are great and there’s no need for women to change but we need the men to change.

Age of full moral accountability

August 2, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Was reading through Numbers the other day, and I stumbled on something I hadn't really noticed prior.

> Numbers 1:1 The Lord spoke to Moses in the tent of meeting in the Desert of Sinai on the first day of the second month of the second year after the Israelites came out of Egypt. He said: 2 "Take a census of the whole Israelite community by their clans and families, listing every man by name, one by one. 3 You and Aaron are to count according to their divisions all the men in Israel who are twenty years old or more and able to serve in the army.
> Numbers 14:26 The Lord said to Moses and Aaron: 27 "How long will this wicked community grumble against me? I have heard the complaints of these grumbling Israelites. 28 So tell them, 'As surely as I live, declares the Lord, I will do to you the very thing I heard you say: 29 In this wilderness your bodies will fall—every one of you twenty years old or more who was counted in the census and who has grumbled against me. 30 Not one of you will enter the land I swore with uplifted hand to make your home, except Caleb son of Jephunneh and Joshua son of Nun. 31 As for your children that you said would be taken as plunder, I will bring them in to enjoy the land you have rejected.

It appears the full age of moral accountability to God is 20 years old at least for men.

As we know, women seem to have at least a covering of authority that can save them from some amount of accountability as a father or husband can nullify rash vows.

> Numbers 30:3 "When a young woman still living in her father's household makes a vow to the Lord or obligates herself by a pledge 4 and her father hears about her vow or pledge but says nothing to her, then all her vows and every pledge by which she obligated herself will stand. 5 But if her father forbids her when he hears about it, none of her vows or the pledges by which she obligated herself will stand; the Lord will release her because her father has forbidden her.
> 6 "If she marries after she makes a vow or after her lips utter a rash promise by which she obligates herself 7 and her husband hears about it but says nothing to her, then her vows or the pledges by which she obligated herself will stand. 8 But if her husband forbids her when he hears about it, he nullifies the vow that obligates her or the rash promise by which she obligates herself, and the Lord will release her.

Indeed, this is repeated in the NT as Husbands are to improve the moral agency of their wives through sanctification.

Most cultures including the Jewish usually have some type of coming-of-age ceremony like barmitzvah or batmitzvah, I suppose this gives us a three phase process like this.

- Childhood – Understanding the world and basic right from wrong
- Adolescence or coming-of-age – Start of learning to be an adult and partial accountability
- Adulthood – Full moral accountability

The United States has laws that span this age with 18 being a adult but some other things like drinking are age 21. Many other countries are similar in this regard. Not too surprising.

Teach your children wisely.

Humor’s attraction

August 7, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I’ve always struggled with understanding why Humor is attractive, but concept of Kingdom Rule helped me figure it out.

A man’s kingdom generates attraction in women through PSALMs and other factors many of which are social. For instance, charisma, humor, intelligence or mastery are things that are generally attractive to women. Charisma, intelligence, and mastery are more obvious to understand as they directly trigger a woman’s hypergamy.

However, humor remained illusory to me for a while. Humor seems to have a few concepts underlying it and many different types per AI:

- Slapstick: Physical comedy relying on actions and appearances rather than dialogue.
- Satire: Using humor, irony, or exaggeration to criticize people’s flaws or vices.
- Self-deprecating: Making jokes at one’s own expense.
- Dark Humor: Addressing sensitive or taboo topics in a comedic way.
- Wordplay: Using linguistic twists and puns for humorous effect.
- Observational Humor: Drawing humor from everyday situations and human behavior.

In general, much of humor is a deflection of the topic to something either off topic or contrasted between something else.

Some aspects of humor are attractive and some are not. For instance, self deprecating humor is almost never attractive to women except if the man is very attractive already. Usually the self deprecating humor will negatively trigger hypergamy as the man is unconsciously putting himself below the woman which will generate feelings of disgust.

Most other aspects of humor seem to trigger hypergamy from the perspective from altering the balance of Internal Locus of Control (ILOC). For instance, if a woman is serious about something and a man can deflect the conservation to something funny, this brings her out of her own feelings and centered feelings of her ILOC and into the man’s world.

This is very similar to the fitness/shit test responses such as agree and amplify which turn the test of a man’s fitness on the head by defusing the situation with something silly: “Does this dress make me look fat?” being defused by something like “yes, that dress makes you look soooo big that your gravitational pull may pull me right to you.” You could even classify this into a form of satire.

The unconscious pulling her out of her own world into your world flips her ILOC to revolve around you instead of her being centered on herself. Or if we go to game dynamic references then it’s out of her frame and into yours.

Indeed, humor is simply just another form of social mastery. I’d also classify other forms of social mastery aside from the ones mentioned like charisma and intelligence in the same way. Effective public speaking and story telling are similar ones that draw in not just men but also women in the same way.

Around the web: promiscuity and testosterone, dating treatise and manhood, and more good men step up madness

September 3, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Haven't had the time to blog, but here are some topics that I've wanted to comment on for a few days or months back that were interesting.

Topic 1: One study looked at the attitudes of men and women in regard to promiscuity in female, neutral and male biased populations. 3:1 for the bias which would be 75% female and 25 male and vice versa. To no one's surprise males more than females had negative attitudes toward promiscuity, especially more in the 3:1 male bias. This made the authors conclude that the attitude is to ensure paternity certainty.

In another vein, Testosterone altered male behavior to be less pro-social and more self-reinforcing. While on the surface this appears negative because you'd think that you want men to care more about the group. this makes sense in terms of improving odds of going against herd behavior and also in building an effective dominion. I've seen some other studies suggest that marriage and children have a decreasing affect against testosterone meaning that one a man's dominion has been established his behavior can be altered to be more pro-social to his family.

Topic 2: Aaron Renn's link list a week or two ago mentioned a San Francisco woman's treatise into dating men's categories and the dysfunctional categories of men that develop. It's not very concise, but it's what many have echoed in the manosphere for a long time though the author hates the manosphere. Her categories for men she met were

- The man who is not – lost in the world and eventually has some midlife crisis
- Man with a plan – Plan is for worldly success but doesn't know anything about manhood which leads to varying successes and fails
- A man who provides – bases his whole person on providing for women which predictably leads to some success with relationships but often much failure
- A man who opts out – Can or usually has some success with jobs, but dating is a wreck either can't get dates or relationships fail in early stage. Gets tired of rejection. Basically, MGTOW but they didn't want to use that term.
- Man who becomes a beast – This is the author's term for men who take to the manosphere and become wildly attractive to women but has an underlying attitude of nastiness (e.g. men vs women, women are the biggest child in the room, etc)
- Man who is whole – According to the author has a good grasp of manhood in terms of how a job fits together with family. However, at least in my analysis the man who is whole has the underlying assumption that this man is a supporter of women and feminism.

The author then suggests these changes to help men.

1. Encourage positive male role models on how to become a man
2. Stigmatize sexist behavior toward men
3. Remind men of their worth
4. Encourage men to discuss issues they face and listen to them
5. Openly acknowledge male and female biological differences and embrace diversity

Like the male who is whole, however, much of these changes are references to somewhat of a female approved version of manhood.

Additionally, the commenters while mostly appreciative to the plight of men, many of them didn't really understand why manhood and femalehood needed distinguishing and why the focus shouldn't be on developing good people or personhood. The irony couldn't be more palpable.

Topic 2b: One commenter on the SF woman's topic attempted to come up with a path to manhood while being pro-feminism and probable non-religious.

1. Build character – Basically the fruit of the Spirit and virtues. His list – Integrity, Rationality, Temperancem, Compassion, Courage, Justice, Generosity, Perseverence, Humility, Equanimity
2. Carry weight – Someone must depend on you
3. Create something – writing, art, invention, discovery, etc.
4. Give back – 10% charity and 4 hours per week
5. Could add others

Again, the irony is clear that the best that non-religious men could come up with is something that the Bible says all Christians should be like. In fact, Western civilization being built on Judeo-Christian ethics makes this even more obvious.

They want the morality of Christianity without the Patriarchy, but it is the Patriarchy that made the Society stable with males and manhood and females and womanhood.

Or other they still want men to be men (provider, protector, leader) but they want to contradict it when they don't feel like it.

Topic 3: Apparently a new analysis of the Regnerus same sex study vindicates the original showing that there are negative differences in same sex marriages that raise children as opposed to heterosexual marriages.

Topic 4 and 5:

- Women are still looking for a protective man
- More Young Women will pursue family life if Good Men step up

These topics have become par for the course with IFStudies women authors putting the blame on men for the poor dating market. Same with the Christian tradcons like Brad Wilcox who publishes similar topics like the above.

They really don't get it. They continue to try to reframe the lack of women marrying onto the lack of men. The second article even blames men for their lack of leadership directly by saying they're right to decline becoming mothers without it.

> If men are leaders of families—which I think they have the responsibility to be—then men are going to have to lead here as well. Because women will continue to think it's in their best interest—and, frankly, I think they are right—to decline becoming mothers with the profound vulnerability and dependency that entails—with men in whom they cannot put their trust.

Or maybe it would be a good idea for these women to stop caving to feminism and trying to be independent boss babes and actually learn how to be feminine and submissive. But no, we can't have that.

More grifters are being exposed

September 5, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Some of the shadier aspects that have come out of the manosphere starting post-2012 are the emergence of grifters selling their conferences or courses to help you become a high value man to attract women especially at exorbitant prices. They often promise a lot and typically under deliver.

These can either be men or women and the women promising these types of things, but from looking through their content the women tend to be the bigger grifters from what I've seen. They don't have the experience of being a man, so any of their advice is generally second hand from what they've seen work from other sources. This is not to say that it's not effective, but as I've said before about not reading any womens' blogs anymore there are details that they don't understand. For instance, the very few women who have tried to emulate the male experience such as Norah Vincent and her book on it "The Self Made Man" and other women who have tried to help their friends on dating apps inevitably find themselves horrified at what your average man experiences.

The latest is Sadia Khan who is a supposed psychologist and helps men with 6000+ and 9000+ GBP. That's 8000 and 12000 USD respectively from the one on one and other courses from her site. She's appeared on a lot of different media, TV, and others.

Whelp, turns out there's a lot more to that story.

- from Instagram
- from Youtube expose

From the gathering of information it appears:

- She's not actually a psychologist and has a degree from a buy-a-degree school. She even photoshopped a legitimate psychology degree from the British psychologist institution.
- She has a husband but is a side piece to wealthy Arab man who has a fiancee/wife. There are explicit texts as well as her bragging via a recorded call with the fiancee that she could bang the Arab man on her wedding day and make him come running to her.
- Once stuff started coming out she threatened to sue and harassed many people online. Enough receipts came out that she had to take her Instagram private.
- Regularly used waist filters to make her waist appear smaller in videos

There's more but I expect there to be a lot more grifters exposed in the future. It's a ripe field for con men and women. Even some of the more famous women in the space like Pearl has had things come out as well.

In general, I would not trust women in the men's space at all. There's too high a chance they're trying to capitalize on male loneliness or attention by trying to get money out of it or become popular themselves. They can generally say the right things because most info on male and female behavior is at least exposed now, but they don't know a man's experience and how to teach them how to truly be a man. Worse yet they might have terrible character as well.

That is one thing where I have to applaud RooshV. He seemingly has had a legitimate conversion to Orthodoxy and shut down his sale of PUA books. Then in the past year or two he also shut down his site and forum which contained more PUA content. He basically put his money where his mouth is which is commendable and likens to a legitimate conversion to Christianity.

The absolute degeneracy of modern writing

September 9, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

A reader writes in with a video recommendation for the blog aptly named The Absolute Degeneracy of Modern Writing

I highly suggest watching it, but to summarize it for those time consumed she goes over several points.

- Literature porn has existed for hundreds of years so it's nothing new
- However in the past couple of decades the rise of this type of literature especially in the New York Times best seller list has become more prominent though not necessarily more popular
- There's less push back against this type of porn because it's easier to demonize male/men form of porn and especially the feminists do not push back against this sort of thing either

This means that much more women and especially middle school and high school aged girls (10-19) are being exposed and getting addicted to this variation of porn. It almost inevitably will negatively affect their expectations in a boyfriend or husband

- The Female Sexual Response is particularly pertinent here, and she notes that it's more narrative driven than the male sexual response. This is a good observation that we haven't necessarily grasped before in its entirety although PUAs have been calling versions of this both on dates and trying to get sex getting a woman immersed into the situation.
- Basically, the NARRATIVE is that the woman wants to imagine themselves in the situation which is from the beginning-to-end attraction and seduction. In other words, they want to experience both the Kingdom and then the Rule. The attractive, rich, successful, charismatic leader guides them and their emotions in seduction to the sexual climax.
- She doesn't talk about 50 Shades in particular but it's that sort of genre except more masked under the guise of an actual story. She discusses some of the patterned plot points that some of the most popular women authors use.
- Though the video maker doesn't mention it, this also explains why women are more likely to sext than men. Men tend to ask for pictures, but women like the descriptions of sexting better. It follows a story narrative that she can get immersed in.

It's a very good video if you have some time to watch. I think at least partially contributes to the "hoe-flation" of modern womens' expectations coupled with their sexual degeneracy.

The Matrix and Laurence Fishburne

September 17, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Several months ago, Neil DeGrasse Tyson and Laurence Fishburne had a chat on his podcast and they went deeper into The Matrix talking about Religion and Mythology. Since the Manosphere and Red Pill has largely used The Matrix mythology as an analogy to expose the gynocentrism that has stemmed from the rise of feminism. I thought it would be pertinent to talk about how they discussed the characters.

Tyson is a prominent atheist though born Catholic, so it was interesting to see his view on it from an outside perspective. They go back and forth revealing and walking through the movie. Fishburne claims to be Christian from what I can tell at least and was excited to work on the film because he saw the Christology in it when he initially read the script.

- Neo is an anagram of the One, which Fishburne says is Christ.
- Early in the movie, Neo who is a programmer gives someone a disc, and the person who is getting the info they need calls him “his savior”
- When Neo is brought out of The Matrix, he is on board the Nebuchadnezzar (ship), Cypher is scared when Neo comes up behind him and says “You scared the be-Jesus out of me”
- Cypher is Judas after he has the “beJesus” scared out of him
- After everyone is convinced Neo is the one, they talk about how everyone including Trinity is beginning to believe or have faith
- Near the end of the movie when the agents catch up to Neo and shoot him and continues shooting him after he was dead. Tyson makes the point that if you count the shots from the scene and then go back to the ship where his body continues to be shot there are 14 which to him potentially corresponds to the 14 stations of the Cross.
- Neo then dies and then is resurrected after the Cross just like Neo.
- Trinity meets Neo in basically a sex club which corresponds supposedly to how Mary Magdalene was saved from prostitution? Also, Trinity is an obvious allusion to the Godhead.
- Morpheus corresponds to John the Baptist because he knows that the One (or Jesus) is coming. Additionally, when John meets Jesus he says I’m supposed to be baptized by you, just like Morpheus wants to be reliant on Neo.
- Fishburne’s favorite scene is when he first meets Neo and says “Do you know why you’re here” and “This is what has brought you to us” and “What is the Matrix? It’s all around us, you can feel it when you go to Church, etc.” Very cryptic
- Cypher and the agents with the dinner when eating the steak. Eats it and says he knows it’s not real, but my mind is telling me it’s real and he doesn’t care. And the agents ask him if they have a deal.
- The Spoon scene gets scientific optics right. Eat with the concave part of the spoon, looking into a spoon on the convex side you are distorted but right side up, but on the concave side you are upside down. ““Do not try and bend the spoon. That’s impossible. Instead… only try to realize the truth.” “What truth?” “There is no spoon.”

- Neo riding in the car states that he used to eat noodles from a place. Then has the realization that it wasn’t real. Contrasted to Cypher who didn’t want to know and go back to the delusion.

Other tidbits from Greek and other mythology were brought in on the next movies. Morpheus is the lord of dreams, Persephone played by Monia Belluci, The Oracle, Niobe, Osirus, Gnosis and others. Zion as the last human city.

Tyson respects the storytelling and the story of the Christ has outlived civilizations.

Interesting real versus virtual world distinction. Are we in a simulated universe? Tyson thinks maybe the original or one that is already in a simulated one. 1 in 2 chance basically. Fishburne makes the distinction between our virtual or social media presence vs how we portray ourselves in the real world. Many of us live digital lives that are a different representation of ourselves.

They talk about the Singularity as well which is when technology and probably AI will be stronger than humans and cause unforeseen changes.

While some of their takes are interesting, it’s pretty clear you can see at least some of the story of Christ in the Matrix just as you can the reality of God’s Creation poking through the gynocentrism that arose from feminism. However, like most topics in today’s culture, there is some truth mixed with a lot of gnosticism and non-Christian mythology.

In favor of Prenups

September 30, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Worth a post since it came up fairly recently as a topic where I am.

Generally, I was against prenups for Christians given the whole trust issue, but now I think that all Christians should have them.

You basically get a prenup through the state which the terms are along the following.

- No fault divorce
- Husband gets punished financially in most cases
- Wife may get full custody or at least can be somewhat of an uphill battle. May be changing slowly to joint custody depending on where you live, but it can still be an issue.

In other words, there are only incentives for the wife to divorce a husband in most cases.

However, when investigating them further you can model prenups on Christian marriage. For instance, you can write in an infidelity clause that punishes the cheating and divorcing spouse financially. How much you can do this is debatable because judges can throw some out that are deemed unfairly harsh. Yet it is still a good idea to have morality clauses as an incentive against divorce.

I still do not subscribe to the idea of not getting a marriage certificate from the government and only have a Church ceremony. Any divorce lawyer and judge will laugh you out of court if you show up saying you aren't married but in practice you are — living together, saying you are husband and wife to family and friends, and so on. You'll probably even get punished harder for selectively trying to do this as well.

Thus, if you are getting married in this day and age even if you both are serious Christians I think it would be a good idea to get a prenup together to model it for Christian marriage. Otherwise, you have a default one that is pro-divorce from the government whether you like it or not.

Steph Curry's marriage is looking like it's in trouble

October 24, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Background if you don't follow sports. Steph Curry is considered one of the best 3 point shooters of all time in the NBA. He's won a few NBA championships and a couple MVPs and is one of the most popular basketball players on the planet. He's already considered to be one of the greatest NBA players in history given his legacy.

If you haven't heard maybe a month ago his wife, Ayesha Curry, went on a podcast and did some sort of tell all type of interview where she was talking about her life. The problem was she revealed a ton of info to paraphrase:

- She wasn't really attracted to Steph
- Didn't really want to get married
- Didn't really want kids

Unfortunately, it wasn't all just that. She reveals that obviously she knows that most women are throwing themselves at her husband, but also that she's insecure about it. Like most aging and starting to get overweight women she misses the male attention.

Then she went on another show and started talking about it with women who are clearly non-Christian feminists.

> View this post on Instagram
> A post shared by Henry and Victoria | Marriage & Family Speakers (@henryandvictoriadoss)

And unfortunately, it's not just that, she has Jada Smith, who basically cucked Will Smith into an open relationship, egging her on about many men still desire her and that her husband knows it. Will, Jada, the slap, and Jada's past Alpha ex have been already behaviorally analyzed by Jack and others.

Based on her past playing into her marriage in the present, her current insecurities, and the "friends" she keeps (with friends like that who needs enemies), I suspect Steph might be in for a rough time.

Steph Curry is an outspoken Christian, but his wife is currently showing signs of Christian-in-name-only behavior such as keeping with the wrong crowd and believing them. If I was him I'd try to get her on the straight and narrow otherwise he's in for a heap of trouble.

I assume he would have to know given the magnitude of the blowback of this incident which has been all over social media.

I didn't have the time to go through the full interview, but I'm sure there's more nuggets to be gleaned if you have time.

This video summarizes the disrespect over the years.

The history of the collapse of dating and marriage

November 3, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Commenter Info posted a link in one of Jack's most recent posts about a video that talked about the occult origins of modern dating which was Part 1 of the series. I actually went down the whole rabbit hole through the full 4 part series.

I would estimate it's about 95-98% accurate in terms of understanding how we got into this mess. The first part is about some origins, though I don't think dating itself is necessarily evil. Parts 2 goes through the Boomers and GenX to the rise of feminism and eventually he goes into the development of the red pill and manosphere in Part 3 and 4 and how many parts of it have gone mainstream.

If you have time, the thing is worth a watch, and it's something I would recommend to show men at Church who are interested in why the dating and marriage markets have collapsed.

There are some inaccuracies in terms of dates which likely means he wasn't intimately present with the rise of the early red pill, manosphere, and the Christian side of it. However, in terms of a deep history dive it's very well done.

He's said a lot of what we've said here in terms of the feminization of the Church and the lack of ability to criticize women and their sins, expectations, and inability of men to lead in marriage, and how most marriages whether egalitarian or complementarian have the underlying dynamic of the wife in power and the husband has only responsibility.

Men with more prestigious jobs are more likely to cheat versus general commentary on cheating and divorce

November 10, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Been meaning to write about this IFStudies post for a while since I think they overlooked some analysis. All credit for the images are from IFStudies link.

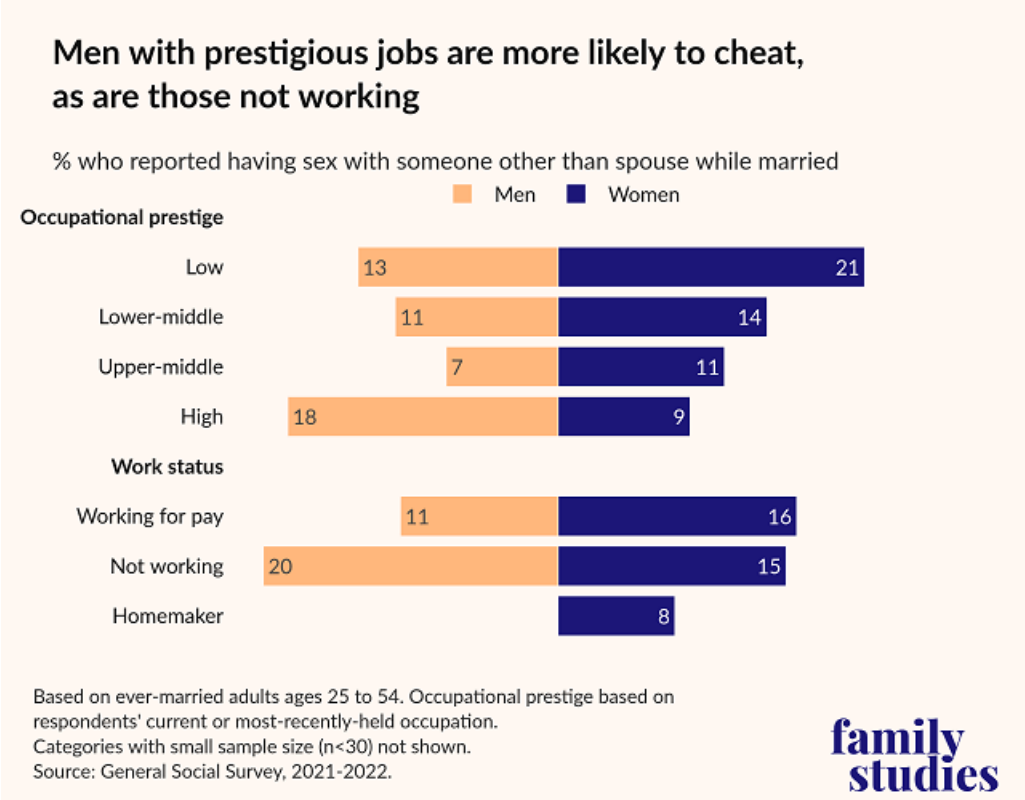

Table: Occupational Prestige by Four Categories

- Low Prestige 0–35 Less prestigious jobs (e.g., janitors, food service workers, cashiers)
- Lower-Middle Prestige 36-49 Routine or entry-level occupations (e.g., truck drivers, secretaries, retail sales)
- Upper-Middle Prestige 50–64 Skilled or semi-professional roles (e.g., police officers, K–12 teachers, technicians)
- High Prestige 65–80 High-status professions (e.g., physicians, lawyers, college professors, executives)

The title is interesting because it leaves out some context that is highly important.

The general trends among men cheating is that they had sex with the other woman but still love their wife. However, the general trend among wives cheating is that they had already decided she didn't love him and checked out the marriage already. This is clearly shown by wives asking her cheating husband "do you love her?" versus husbands asking their cheating wife “did you have sex with him?” Each sex wants to verify the reason differently because love vs sex.

The reason why this is important is because women in the upper-middle to highly prestigious jobs might not necessarily cheat but they will just divorce you if they’re unhappy because they can generally provide for themselves better. So you don’t necessarily get the cheating while in the relationship, but they divorce and instantly have a new man they were emotionally involved with during the marriage.

This makes men with prestigious jobs look worse than the woman, though I would suspect it would even out if they could account for women immediately ending up in a relationship post-divorce.

You’d expect women with low and lower-middle occupational prestige to cheat more just because they want to continue to rely on their man for economic support — the woman food service workers, cashiers, secretaries, retail sales. Indeed, this is true.

Additionally, you’d expect the men with high prestige to cheat more because they have the economic capability to arrange liaisons better and the increased power and status from their job which women are attracted to. This is true as well.

It appears to be now true that women are out cheating men overall (11% vs 14%)which isn’t that surprising to most of us here, and this does not take into account the fact that more women are divorcing to potentially be with their liaisons that are not counted in actual cheating. Most people you would ask in the wild would think men are always the ones cheating more though.

A lot of you hated the fact that I said that if you want someone who divorces the least you still want a college educated woman, and this also appears to be true if you don’t want a woman to cheat. The college educated women while they have a higher divorce percentage, this is misleading because the non-college educated women have more total amount of divorces are less overall so there is a lower total amount of divorces of college educated women.

This look at the data is also important because it clarifies what you would want through multiple lines of evidence. What is going to be the most successful chance to eliminate cheating?

- College educated woman who wants to be a homemaker (not just is a homemaker or doesn't work)
- Religious service attendance is an obvious qualifier as well, though not guaranteed that said woman is a Christian. If you have a true Christian it should be less.
- Is a virgin as you know from past posts

Basically, bring back the Mrs degree and a Christian virgin woman who is actively preparing to be a homemaker.

The ideal taking into account hypergamy would be mainly what we all have surmised from the get-go.

- Christian Husband with a high prestige job (e.g., physicians, lawyers, college professors, executives) or at the very least upper-middle job.
- Christian wife with a college degree job who wants to be a wife and mother and homemaker

The best you can glue a husband and wife together via attraction and then conform it to Biblical roles and responsibilities is going to have the most success.

Value blindness

November 12, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've been trying to figure out a term to use for this, but it's the common one for the headship-submission dynamic within marriage.

No one, not even the most ardent feminist, would say that a teacher has more value (or is less equal) than a student. It's assumed that the role of teacher is there to guide the student, just as Jesus did with his disciples. However, we still understand that there is a hierarchical dynamic between them where one is in authority over the other and responsible for their needs. They have the authority to make decisions.

The same is true of many other common positions society wide like bosses and employees, professions and secretaries, and others.

Yet, interestingly there is value blindness when talking about Biblical husband and wives. Even many of the so-called believers in headship and submission like the complementarians need to always pay lip service to the fact that husbands and wives are different but equal in value even though they do not necessarily do it practically.

Feminists have done a wonderful job brainwashing both men and women into believing power = value and maleness = value. Ironically, by doing this they have implicitly relegated femininity to a second class role.

> Luke 22:25 Jesus said to them, "The kings of the Gentiles lord it over them; and those who exercise authority over them call themselves Benefactors. 26 But you are not to be like that. Instead, the greatest among you should be like the youngest, and the one who rules like the one who serves. 27 For who is greater, the one who is at the table or the one who serves? Is it not the one who is at the table? But I am among you as one who serves.

To clarify the point, the feminists have convinced Christian men but especially Christian women that Gentile authority is the default over Godly authority even to Christians!

Their envious goal is to want to be in power or want to be like men rather than women. Hence, why women believe that they are worth less if they aren't striving to at the very least be equal or in power in any relationship or take on the male roles and traits though excluding much of the responsibility.

Thus, the dynamic is that anytime anyone needs to address the role of husband if they have to address the so-called elephant in the room of "equality" they are already falling prey to feminist intent.

This is the same as the submission dynamic of letting him lead:

- Rebellion or contentious to a husband
- Letting him lead — this still maintains that the wife is the arbiter of a husband's leading

- Following his lead

To wrap up, I think it’s important to keep digging to the root of the language and meaning because some of these things continue to slip through the cracks. We’ve identified much of Biblical attraction and arousal and how it conflicts with modern culture, but maybe we haven’t investigated the why as deeply and how it alters our perception even through just the simple way we address points and the language we use.

Landmines to avoid while dating

November 14, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I've seen so many different articles come across my plate over the past few weeks.

I'm no tennis fan, but apparently Danielle Collins, age 31, is a fairly successful woman's tennis player (over 10 Million in career earnings) is on the prowl to be a trad wife. Some people found her dating profile and it went viral > Currently a professional tennis player, but kind of aspiring to be a rad wife. Straight up. Already had my boss babe era. Just wanting to raise my chickens. do home projects, make freshly baked sourdough, be a stay at home dog mom, and hopefully pop out some babies soon. If you're going to lie about your height just leave me the fuck alone. This is a no short kings zone.

She then added in a different interview

> 'I'll tell you what … if anyone has the balls to slide into my DM like this just make sure to attach your most recent bank statement while you're at it,' she wrote.
> One man even sent her his bank account, showing it had millions in it.
> Collins then said on her Instagram: 'Modern love … okay I'm getting off the internet now.'

Apparently she is still in her boss babe era, and almost certainly won't be a good wife with that amount of entitlement. Buyers beware.

Spool of wire guy.

Had his spool of wire for 40 years and used it for a lot of different things. Wife is basically clueless as to why he's so emotional about it and man is visibly disappointed. And women are supposedly the more empathetic sex.

Turns out that's definitely not the case when men are more emotional, as we have covered many times on this blog.

Richard Reeves puts out advice on how to be a man women actually want (paywalled)

I saw this before Aaron Renn mentioned him a couple weeks ago, but he has stuff out about his new book and such.

> Answering these questions has become Richard Reeves's overarching task. Two years ago, the British-born scholar founded the American Institute for Boys and Men. He also wrote the book that crystallized America's growing anxiety about men. "Of Boys and Men," published in 2022, thrust the crisis of modern masculinity into the mainstream, forcing politicians to confront an uncomfortable reality: Men are falling behind women on everything from college enrollment to > employment rates to basic life satisfaction. They're also struggling to find love and get married, as I discussed in my last column.

> But Reeves isn't some men's rights advocate. He's not pining for a mythical golden age when men got what they wanted with minimal effort. Instead, he's asking harder questions about identity, purpose and what it means to build a life worth living.
> Women might not need men anymore, but they still want men. Men, he believes, are more than capable of rising to the occasion. "Find someone who will do and marry them," Reeves tells me bluntly. When I suggest this sounds like settling, he pushes back: "It's less about picking the perfect wife and more about being a good husband."

You can basically tell where this is going without reading the rest. To paraphrase,

"Women's progress is only good and there are no downsides. Men need to "man up" and adapt to this new world if they want to get married."

But there's obviously crickets when the modern man does this and the woman is still unhappy and divorces him.

Do not follow this nonsense social script. Follow Christ and only date Christian women who want to follow their man and submit to him.

Finally, making the rounds is Vogue's Is Having a boyfriend embarassing now?

You can read it for yourself, but the gist of it is that women are feeling embarrassed by posting boyfriends on social media for a variety of reasons such as they don't want to alienate their friends or followers who don't have any, they're embarrassed by the break ups in the end, discussing boyfriends are lame or boring, and other nonsensical stuff like this.

Basically, they're so focused on social media's perception of them that it is negatively affecting their own relationships and self perception. Anyone with a brain could see this one coming seeing as how social media is often more destructive for women than it is with men.

Be wary out there for the land mines. Only date women who will respect you as a man.

Say please

November 25, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack has a great post about exposing demanding and negotiative mentality in women.

> When a wife is saying, "[Husband] should do X, Y, Z", then she is being demanding. I've covered how to handle demands before. The standard way for a man to deal with demands from women is to be more demanding of her than she is of you.
> But when a wife is saying that "[Husband] should do X, Y, Z, … BECAUSE [Wife] does A, B, C", then she is being negotiative or transactional. She's also comparing her opinion of you to her view of herself.
> The standard way of handling demands by being more demanding may not work in this case. If she is a lazy or passive wife, then she might fold. But if she is the type of person who is always pushing for excellence and improvement (which a lot of women do, including good women), then it turns into brinkmanship and one-up-manship that puts ever more pressure on the man because it is essentially a competition of who can outdo the other. Although this dynamic might be beneficial for personal improvement, a man has to watch that it never crosses the line into a competition of 'Equals' as women would like to think that it is.
> There is a very easy way to put the brakes on the showmanship, if deemed necessary.

This is a good way to conceptualize the matter.

However, the most effective way I've found when helping men over the years is to defuse demands is with the the pressure flip.

- Wife: Demands you do X, Y, and Z
- Husband: (in a playful tone) "You forgot to say pleaseee…"

The one phrase instantly communicates several things to the wife which are:

- She's acting like a brat demanding things and trying to get her way
- Typically, the show of manners is demanded by parents to children or teachers to students which automatically flips the scenario from her demanding something of you (her in authoritative position) to you demanding something of her (you in the authoritative position).
- It's just good manners, so there's no way for her to come back on it without looking a jerk.
- The playful manner means it's not that serious, so it shouldn't escalate into a full blown argument unless she is too far gone into the rebellious and disrespectful zone where she is thinking about divorce. If the situation is that serious where the wife > continues to argue about it, typically the best way to defuse again is to use the same tactics that the women use against men: tone policing. Start policing her tone for being rude and disrespectful.

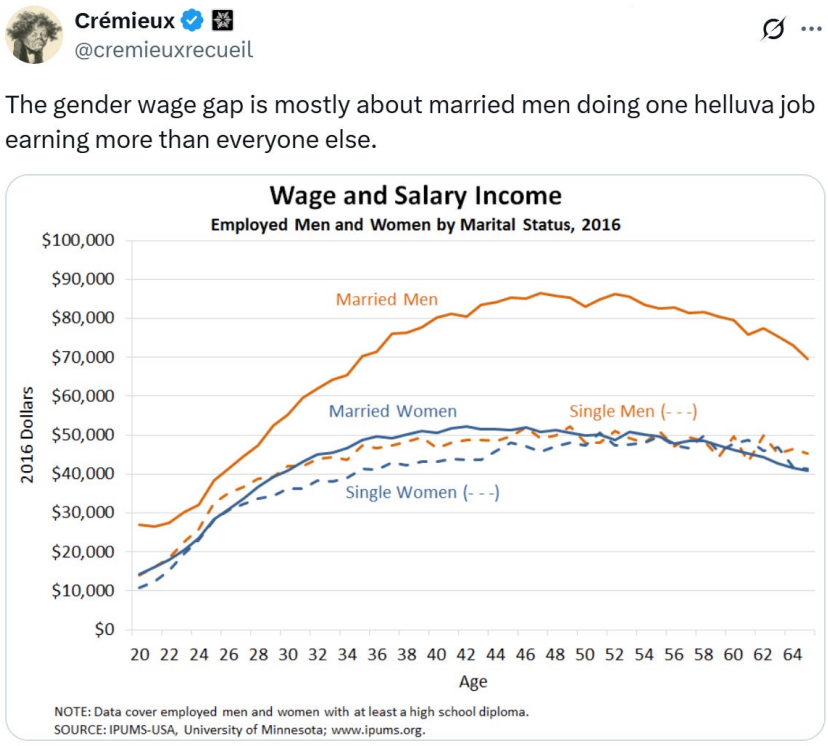
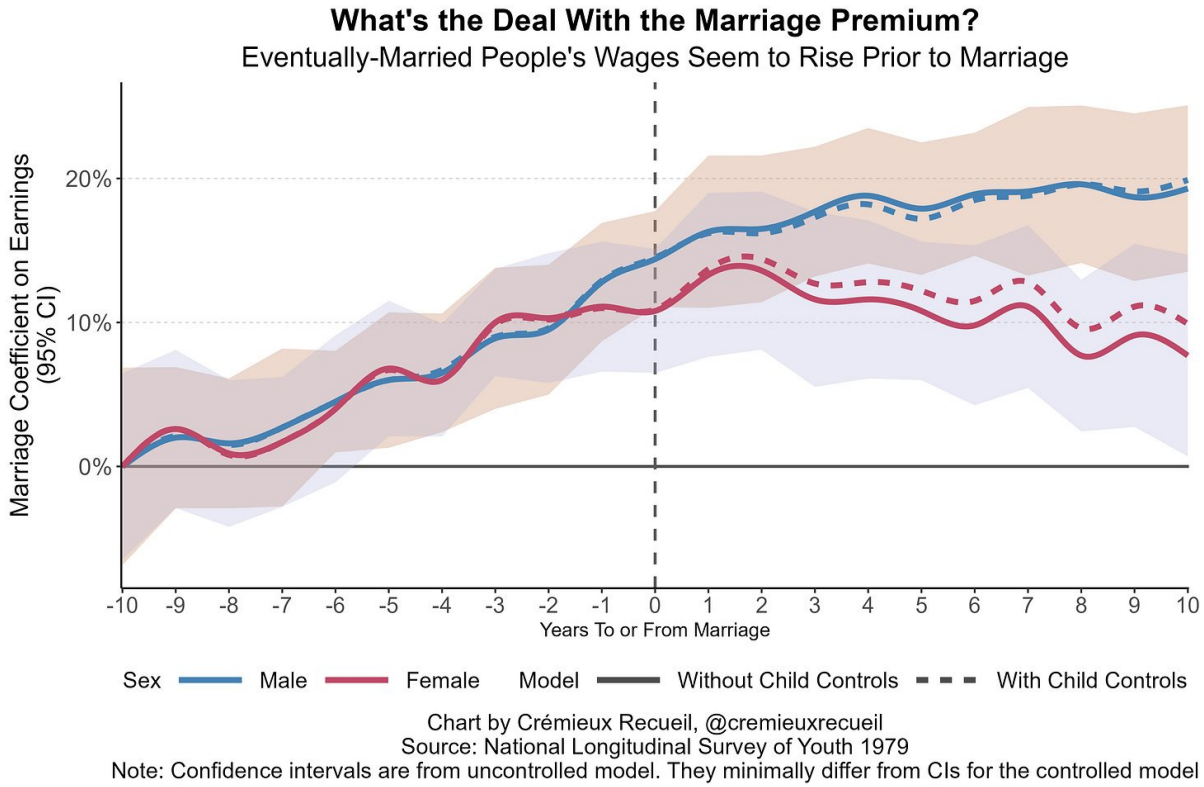
Side note – tone policing is one of the ways wives, feminists, and left uses to nullify any argument and make men and husbands look like the bad guy. It can be reversed on them and they typically look shocked or confused when it happens because it rarely does happen to them.



The problem beyond this though is if the relationship has slipped into such a position, so this is not the only things men should be doing to act as the leader. But this is usually a good way to defuse the situation and reverse it in the short term.

Are the good men are married – data on what men are most likely to get married

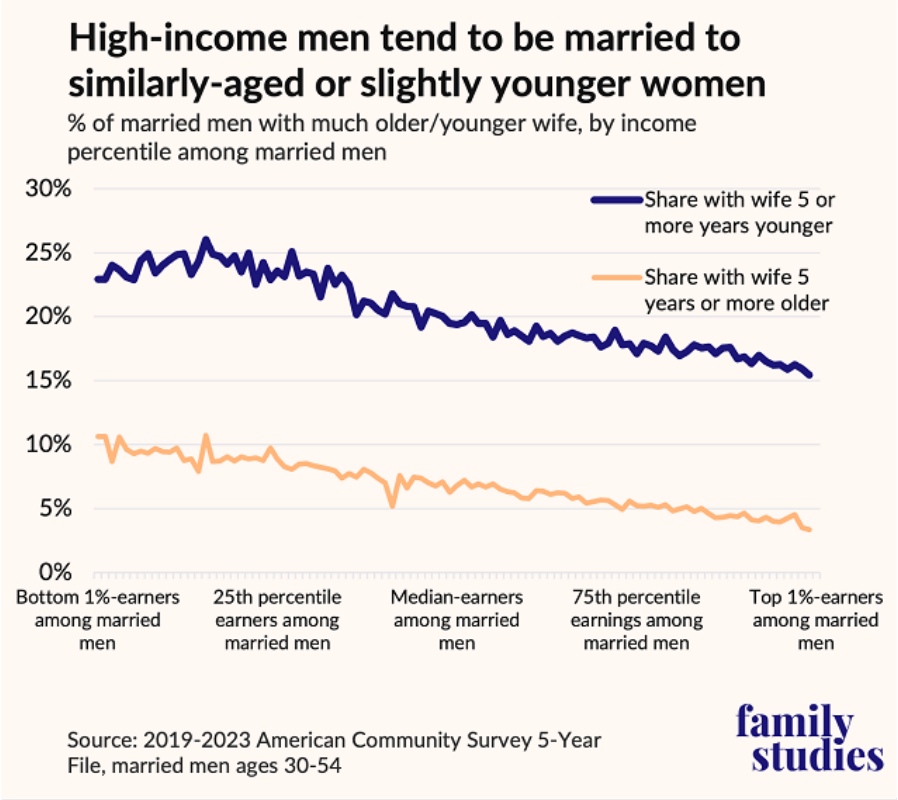


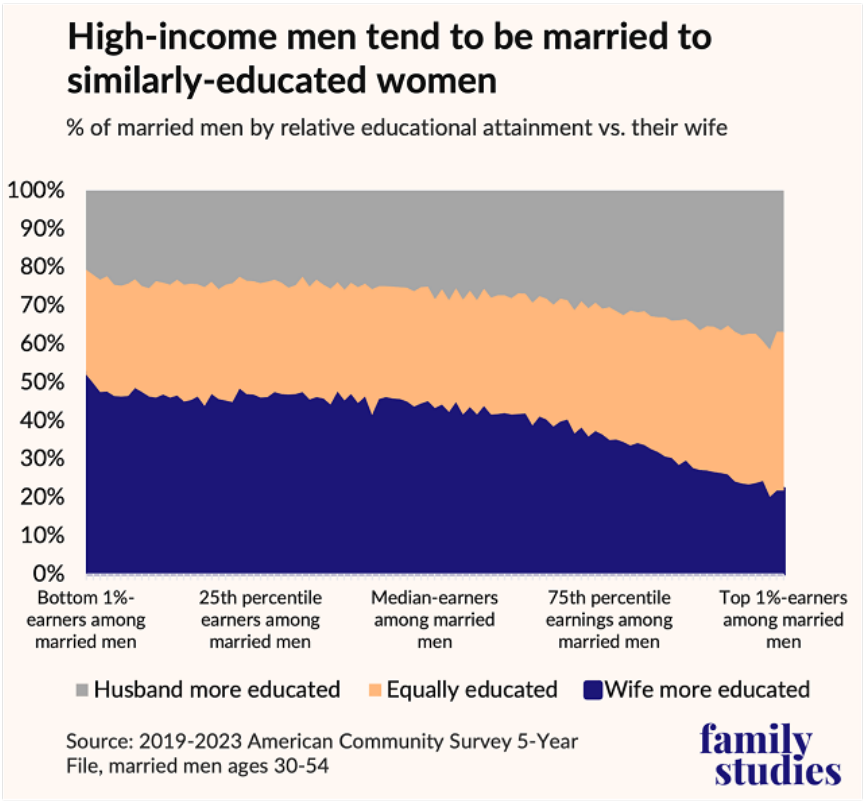
November 29, 2025 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Aaron Renn posted Crimieux's article looking at if the marriage premium is true. The marriage premium shows that generally married men earn much more than their single counterparts.

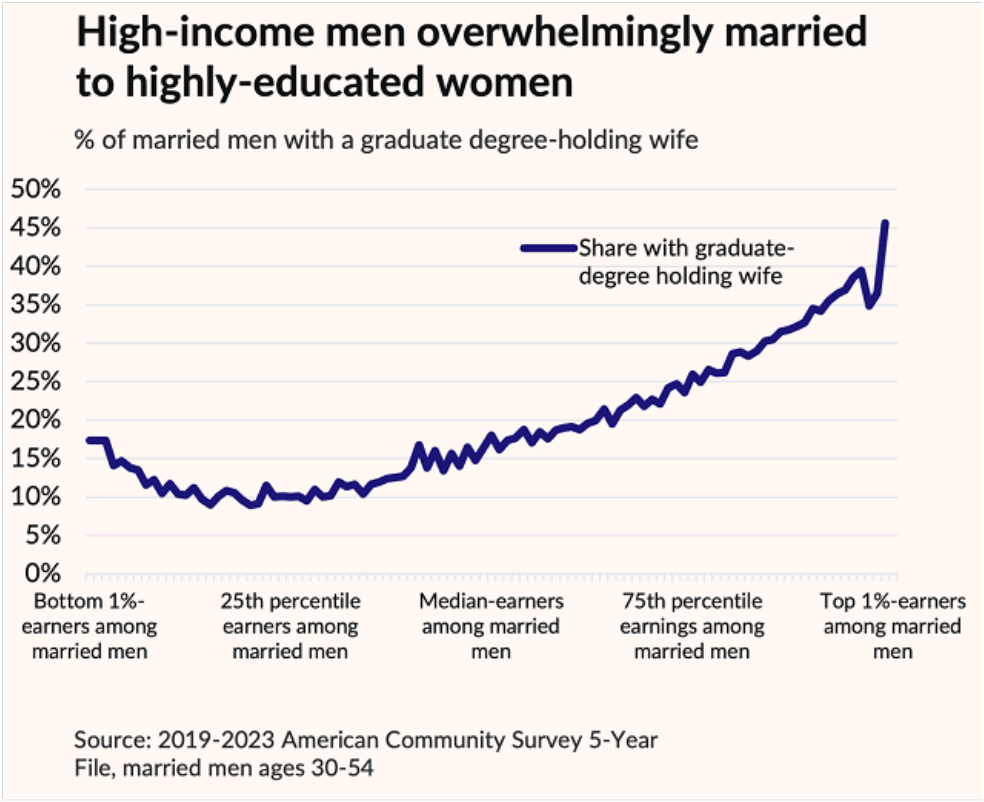
All charts attributed to his site.

There's more charts, but in general this one seems to encapsulate it the best.

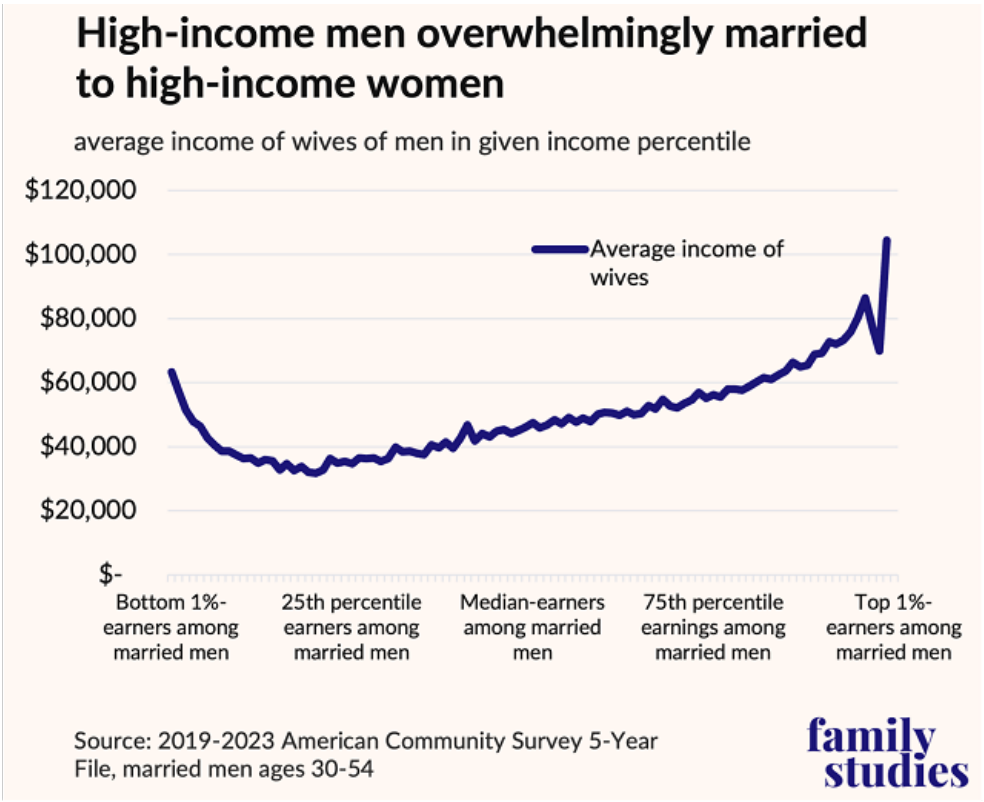




Basically, it's not that married men earn more because they are married, but men that are successful are getting married more often and that success continues several years pre-marriage into several years post-marriage. Unsurprisingly, reduction or loss of income is correlated with divorce as well.



Taking it a step further, it's likely the men developing the key attributes of manliness also are relate to job success — being assertive, confident, competent, and such that get the promoted and earning raises — are the key attributes that also make them successful with women as well. The money is more or less a side effect of the development into a confident and successful man, and obviously helps in the dating game and acquiring relevant marriage signalling attributes like a house as well.



I've been sitting on a few IFStudies articles related to this which is a good time to pull them out. One of those articles posits that High status (and earning) men are attracted to ambitious women contrary to the popular notion that men are turned off by ambitious women. All charts are credit to IFStudies link above.

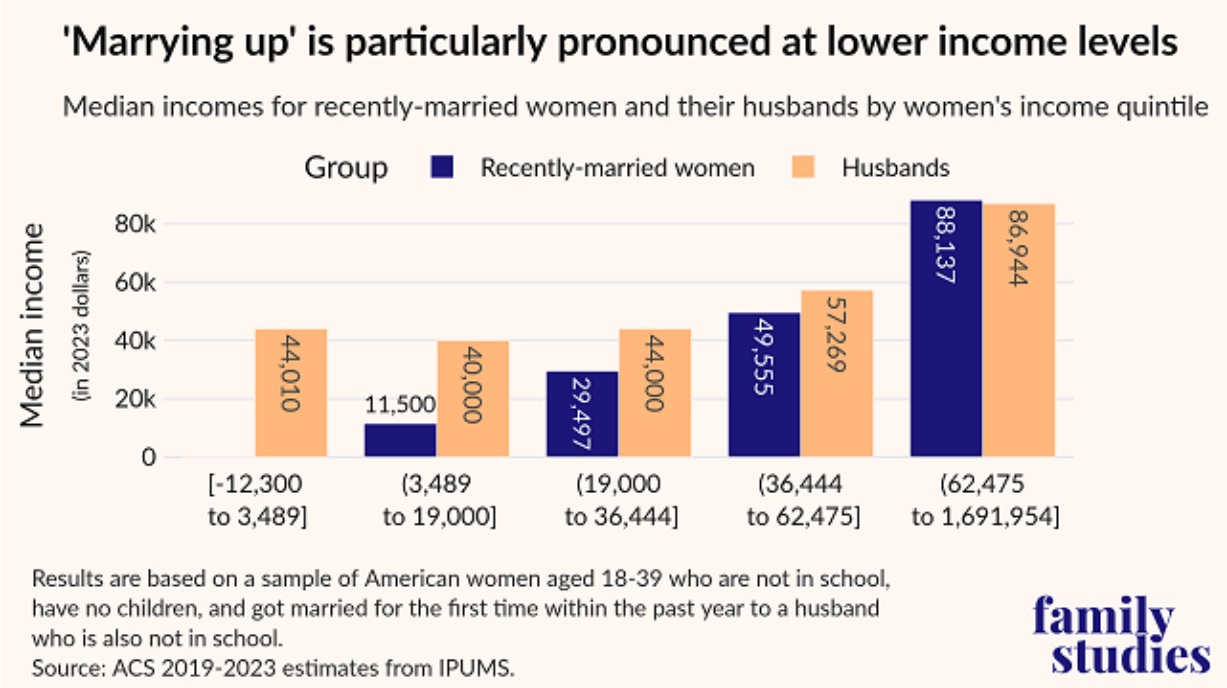
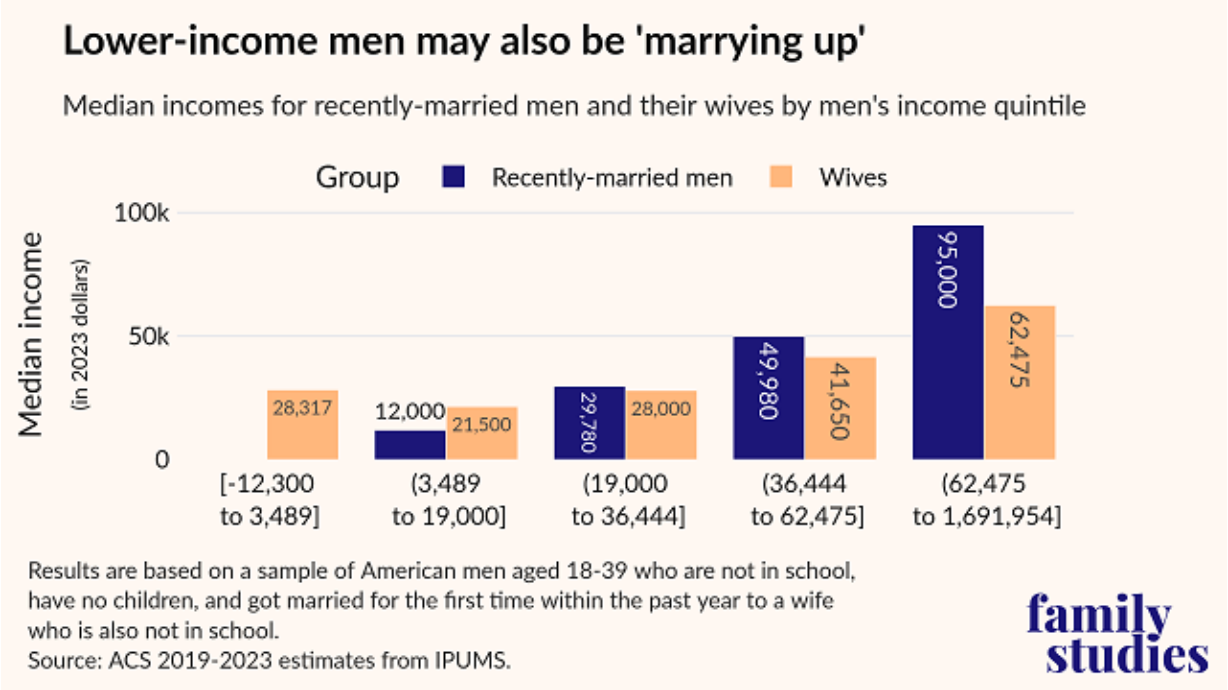
Unfortunately, this is a classic correlation is not causation fallacy when interpreting the data.

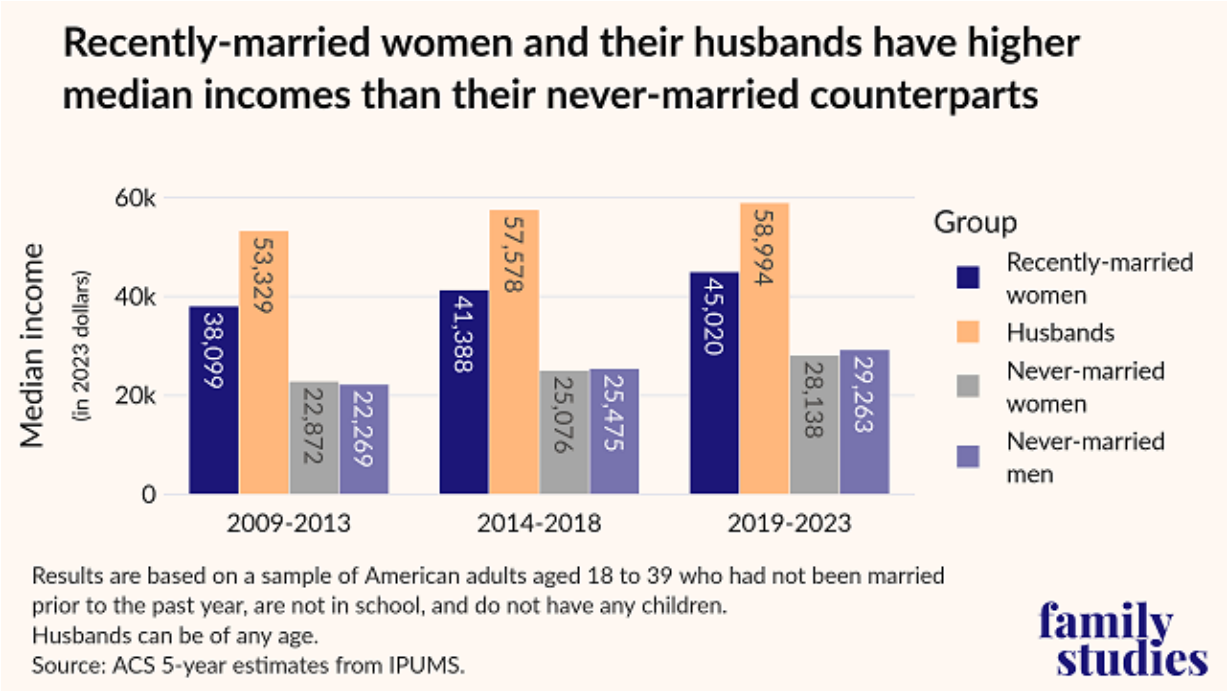
- The main thing that most men tend to communicate is that ambition in women is not attractive and not that it's a turn off.
- The main turn off is when high earning women are trying to take the role of the man in the relationship by being adversarial.



Aside from the growing “online” segment, the majority of people still meet their spouse from work, friends and family. This means that men who are at the lucrative jobs are more likely to meet other women with lucrative jobs based on the fact that they either work with them or near them, and their friend groups are likely to be in the same socioeconomic class which means if they meet through friends or family they will have similar higher earning jobs.



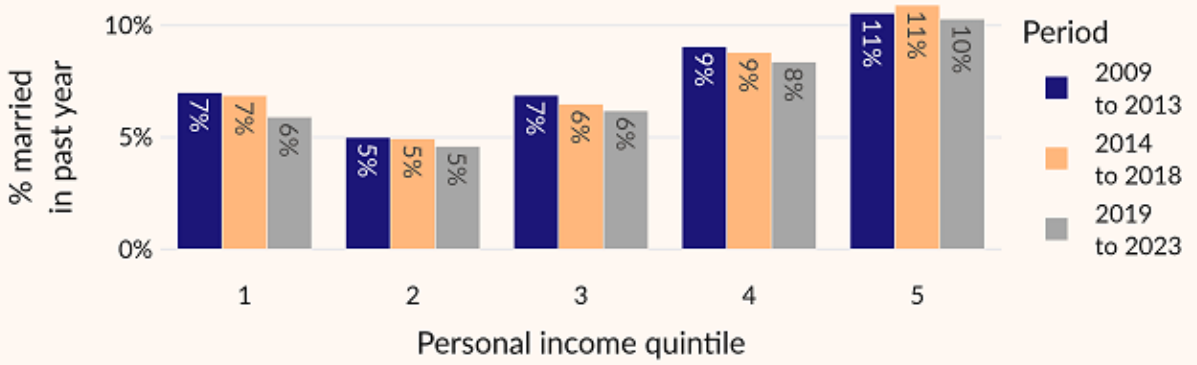
Likewise, many of my friends who did go to graduate school or professional schools either met their spouses in college, in the post-college schooling, or from friends and family or colleagues out of those schools once they started to work.



It’s unlikely that a high earning man is going to go to a dive bar in the poor part of town trying to meet women. Even if he does somehow meet a woman in a bar, it’s likely going to be an upscale bar because he has the resources to be there and it’s likely going to be more frequented by upscale women as well.

It’s only in the Disney stories and RomComs that you see the prince and the peasant or rich man marring the poor woman most of the time.

Another IFStudes blog looked at the fact that women are still marrying up.



This is not shocking given the past two articles we went over and confirms what I hypothesized on the fact that the higher income men tend to marry the women in proximity to them — work, same social and socioeconomic group, friends, and family.

If young women want to be married, the Mrs degree is coming back basically. It's also the high earners that are overwhelmingly married to stay-at-home moms because one income can support that unlike in many areas of the country now.

This is echoed in another IFStudies piece on high earning women are more likely to marry.

family studies

As we all knew as well women are more likely to be married younger, but men are more likely to be married older. Men married older is skewed by the male divorcees remarrying because they are more attractive to women than female divorcees.

In general, for both men and women the plan is pretty clear.

Men succeeding at work tends to likely develop the masculine traits and money needed to support a family at the same time. For women if they want to marry such a man they need to put themselves into proximity to these men. Or at the very least, have a high earning job even if it doesn't require college or graduate school or a professional degree (trades) and put yourself in proximity to good women.

Obviously, Christian is a must for both, but this is likely the way you want to go if you want to have the most successful model which I covered in the other article which is a higher earning man with a stay at home wife.

Round up: the amount of women reaching 40-50 without marriage, criticizing women in power or anti-male sentiment, why society offers men less sympathy, and others

---

4 million women have reached age 40-50 without being married.

- Never married – black > hispanic > white > asian
- Childless – white > black > asian > hispanic

These are not too much of a surprise. The cultures with women that tend to be more masculine are getting married less, though white people even though marrying more are having less kids.

- Probability Married – grad > bachelors > some college/associates > high school > less
- Childless – grad > bachelors > high school > some college/associates > less

Also not too much of a surprise here. More likely to get married with higher education which is correlated to higher incomes. However, the ones who don't get married are more likely to be childless probably from pricing themselves out of the market from their own hypergamy.

There seems to be a larger prevalence of actually criticizing women in power or anti-male sentiment coming out recently. Some of these were mentioned on various sites or newletters (e.g. Aaron Renn) but I've run across some others off social media and other places.

- Female elephant in the room – will we continue to pretend female power does not lead to civilizational disaster
- It's time to retire toxic masculinity
- The Bias we pretend doesn't hurt boys
- Male students show more tolerance for political enemies than females show for their own allies

Why society offers less sympathy when men fall behind

The interesting thing about the study associated with this article is that when men "fall behind" it's more seen as a lack of effort whereas when women fall behind it's usually interpreted into some other means such as "women still face wage gaps, underrepresentation in leadership, and cultural stereotypes that constrain opportunities."

Hence, people are less likely to help struggling men than struggling men.

Meet cute surveys on men and women

Men and women are still looking for it.

- For men being approached – bar/party > coffee shops > social clubs/run > networking > bookstore library > park/beach > grocery store
- 92% of men were open to being approached by someone they're into and 75& would feel flattered even if not mutual
- Women generally don't like being approached in gym/fitness > work > transit commute > nowhere is off limits
- Only 40% of men are now "somewhat likely" or "very likely" to approach women these days, whereas most women won't approach men even if they're interested.

Generally, though I'd suspect women are not really approaching men unless you're very tall or attractive. Example of someone women approach all the time. Men unfortunately just have to take the risk.

Women strongly rely on eye contact and a man smiling at them, so working on these and waiting for them to smile at you if they're interested or reading other non-verbal signs are still your best bet.

A war breaks out along the lines of mostly men vs mostly women after a man asks if he's overreacting when his girlfriend say "I've had my fun, it's time for me to settle down".

Predictably, men and women think about this topic very differently usually. Men negatively and women positively.

The Apex Fallacy – Rooting out job demographic myths and understanding degree and job hypergamy

January 20, 2026 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Jack briefly mentioned this in his latest post Church-wide, but I wanted to look at US demographics and generate a pyramid that would help identify what this actually looks like in real life for most men.

- CEOs – Women Business collective estimates 7.6-11% of fortune 500, fortune 1000, S&P500, Russell 3000, and Private companies have women CEOs. Russell 3000 composes 98% of all invest-able companies in the US while private companies using their data are about 3000 more which are big enough to count in their list. Let's average those and say around 8%
- Non-large company private CEOs – Zippia estimates approximately 42,356 CEOs with 31.5% of them being women. Women are more represented overall as CEOs, but just not in the top companies in the US. Another interesting tidbit is that they say 12% are LGBT which does play a role in the available men and women. SHRM (33%) and McKinsey (29%) confirm
- C-suite, VP, Senior management, and general management increases the percentage of women overall. The McKinsey data above suggest 32%, 35%, 39%, and 42-49% for all management positions. Pew suggests 46% of all managers. Due to the fact that the upper levels of management range from 32-39% and all women managers are in the 46% range, this suggests that low level management jobs need to balance this out at some rate above 46% likely closer to the 51% range according to the US bureau of labor statistics
- Women are 47% of all of the workforce according to the US chamber of commerce, which means that women being about 46% of the managers is about average.
- Total US workforce according to Statista is about 171 million.
- Blue collar jobs are about 27-30% of the workforce and are about 17-20% female. Blue collar is traditionally manual labor type jobs.
- White collar jobs are about 70 million and make up 44% of the work force. with 52% being female
- Not white or blue collar is estimated to be 18-20%, but it's hard to find data given that the blue collar plus white collar jobs above only add up to about 74% of the population. That means there's a missing 6-8% of jobs that fall somewhere. Supposedly the "other" categories are gray collar (skilled trades), pink collar (teaching, nursing, childcare, admin, social work), green collar (renewable energy), other (tech, data, etc.).
- 47% of the work force is female according toe US DOL.

Now that we have some data to work with, what does this look like for a so-called pyramid of jobs in terms of hypergamy for women.

- Top CEOs – 90-92% men at approximately 6000 positions
- Other CEOs – 68.5% men at approximately 42,000 positions
- C-suite, VP, and upper management – 68% men at approximately 310,000 positions
- Middle to lower management – 54% men at 20,000,000 positions approximately
- Regular white collar work – 45% men at approximately 50,000,000 positions

Disparities in total numbers are:

- Top CEOs – 48,00 more men than women
- Other CEOs – 15,540 more men than women
- C-suite etc – 116,000 more men than women
- Middle to lower – 1,600,000 more men than women
- Reg white collar – 4,531,940 more WOMEN than MEN
- Overall – 2,800,000 more women than men

Blue collar jobs are generally considered the lowest totem pole that women don't want to marry these men because it's "low class manual labor" type jobs. These are 80% men and approximately 30% of the work force or approximately:

- 51,000,000 blue collar jobs total of which about 40,800,000 men and 10,200,000 women.

Other collar work is tougher to decipher, but because we have enough data from the white collar and blue collar work we can deduce how many men and women are in these positions.

- 171 million workforce of which 47% is female is 80,370,000 women and 90,630,000 men.
- 70 million white collar jobs which are 48% male which is 33,600,000 men
- 51 million blue collar jobs which is 80% male which is 40,800,000 men
- 90.63 million – 33.6 – 40.8 is 16.23 million men in other collar work
- 171 workforce – 70 white – 51 million blue is about 50 million other collar work
- Men make up 32.5% of other collar work

What the pyramid actually looks like

In the past, blue collar men and blue collar women married at approximately 10% rate whereas it's only 3.5% today. This means most of the 40 million blue collar men are pretty much at the bottom of the totem poll.

- Dregs of the totem poll – About 7 million men 25-54 are not working
- Bottom of the totem poll – 40.8 million men blue collar men
- Middle of the totem poll – 16.23 million men other collar men

- Top of the totem poll – 22.56 million regular white collar men
- Top tier totem poll – 10.8 million middle/lower management men
- Apex of the totem poll – 245,000 CEO, C-Suite, VP men

In percentages this is:

- Dregs of the totem poll – 7.1% unemployed or not working
- Bottom of the totem poll – 41.78% blue collar
- Middle of the totem poll – 16.6% other collar
- Top of the totem poll – 23.1% white collar regular
- Top tier totem poll – 11.1% white collar regular management
- Apex of the totem poll – .25% CEO, C-Suite, VP, etc.

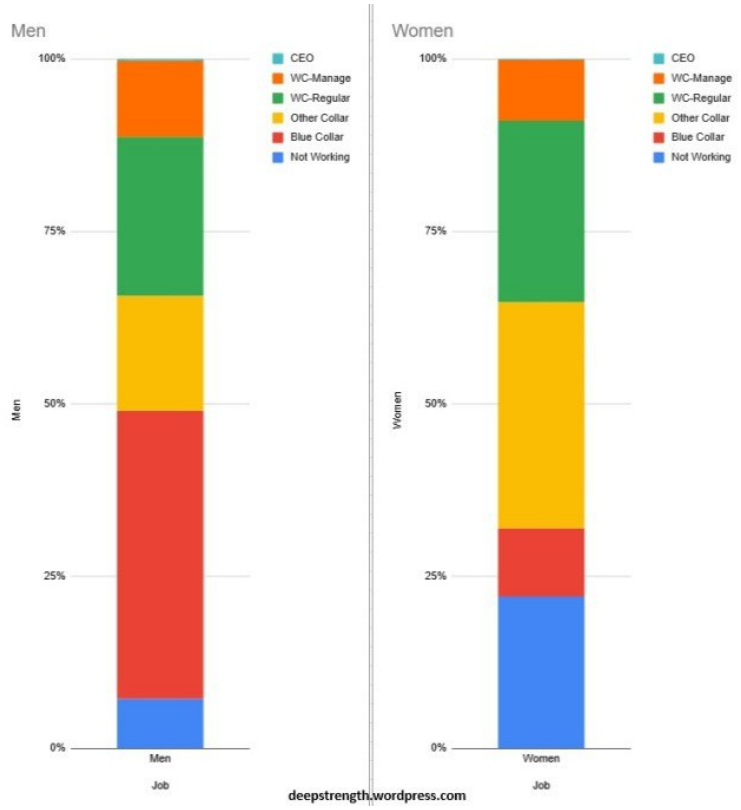
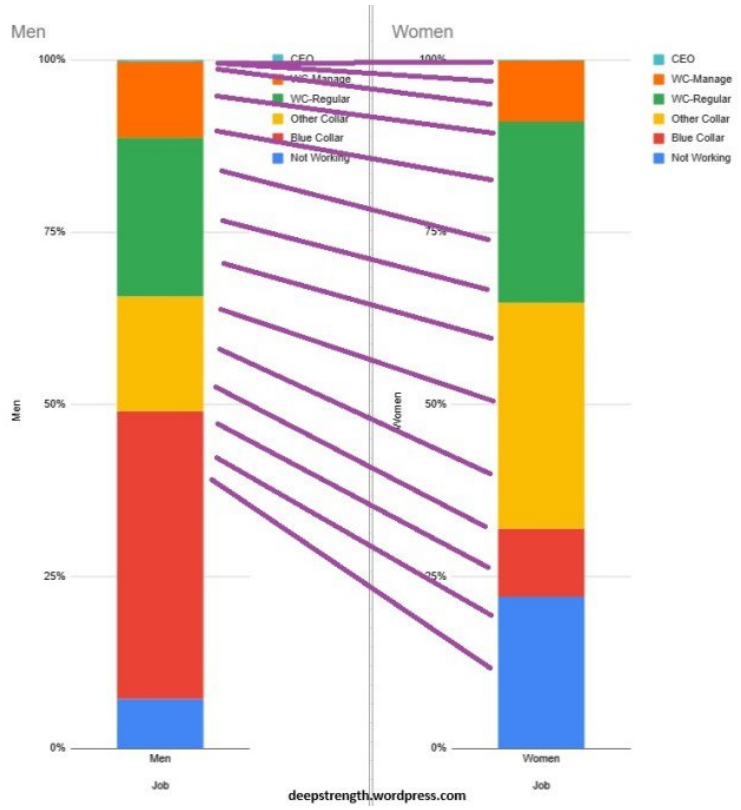
Men don't really care as much about womens' careers in terms of selecting them as a mate. However, as we covered there is likely correlation to men being in proximity of women that likely leads them to marrying in similar socioeconomic tiers.



- 22% of women are not in the work force or about 22 million. Best I could find about 69.8% of married women with children were in the workforce versus about 76.5% of unmarried mothers were in the work force. This likely means that 85-90% of women that were not married with no children were in the work force.
- 10.2 million are in blue collar jobs
- 33.75 million are in other collar jobs
- 27.1 million are in regular white collar jobs
- 9.2 million are in white collar regular management
- 113,030 are in CEO, C-Suite, VP, etc positions

About half of all women of working age are married now.



In percentages this is:

- 22% out of the workforce
- 9.9% in blue collar jobs
- 32.7 in other collar jobs
- 26.3% in regular white collar jobs
- 8.9% in white collar regular management
- .11% in CEO, C-Suite, VP, etc. positions

And I was able to figure out how to graph these.

And finally we have a look at how hypergamy would look at this job structure since women generally want to marry up similar or up in terms of education and careers. It's pretty ugly so if someone figures out how to do a better one then go for it.

One interesting thing about the visualization is you can see that men are slightly more top heavy in the CEO and White collar management (light blue and orange). However, once you start getting into the regular white collar and other collar workers there is a huge disparity (green and yellow).

- In fact, this disparity in the regular white collar and other collar jobs is about 59% of the total women and 39.7 percent of the men which is about a 60% women and 40% men ratio.
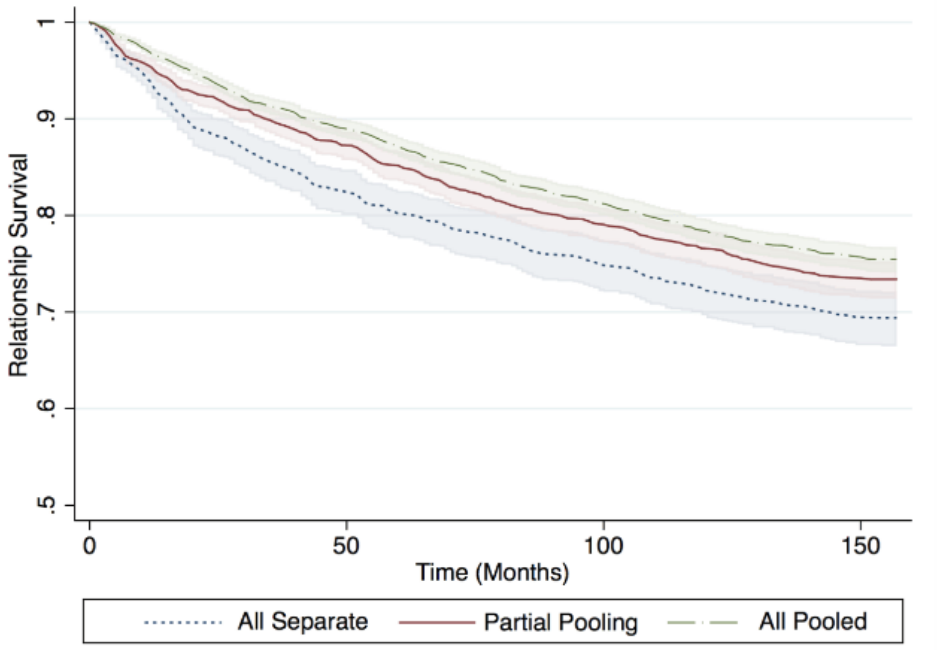
- This disparity is almost the same as the education statistics with 58% of all people going to college are women, and 60% of all graduate degree enrollment are women.

Given the the estimate that 33% of US women may not marry (not just my prediction data, but other sources now like IFStudies), this chart is particularly good at showing it. It's likely the top 50% of men and some portion of the blue collar men will marry. Probably at 50-60% range, and then those men who get divorced will be the ones remarrying the rest of the 7-17% of women to make up the full 67% of women married since men are more likely to marry after divorce than women.

Additionally, this chart goes with my previous assertion on the married men data a couple posts ago that if you want to be married you at the very least want to probably get a college degree or professional degree and get on a good salary track.



Do some blue collar work if you need to get by, but try not to get stuck there even if you have to go back to school or do a drastic career pivot. The trades are represented in other collar, so that can work as well. However, you will have a generally better selection pool of women if you have white collar and professional degrees and job as they tend to carry more prestige.

I would not be surprised to see some form of this analysis eventually going mainstream as well.

Does pooling finances vs separate finances lead to less divorce?

February 20, 2026 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

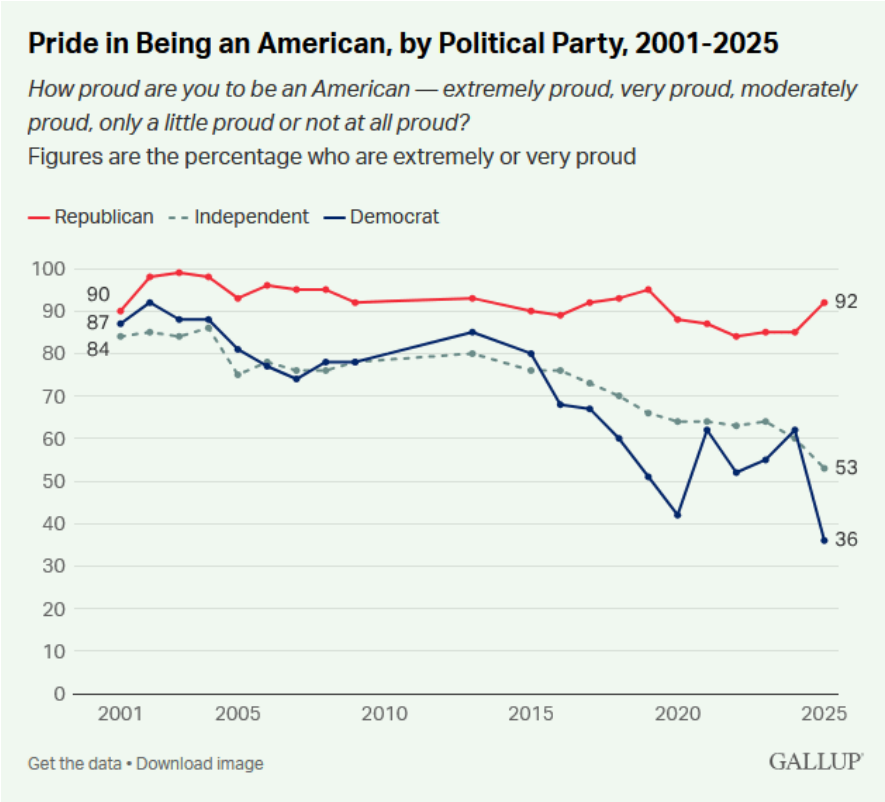
Figure 1. Kaplan-Meier Survival Curve Illustrating Relationship between Account Pooling and Relationship Dissolution

Note. Shaded areas represent 95% confidence intervals.

From the paper pooling finances and relationship satisfaction. Found this one browsing through married data and definitely worth posting for the divorce risk reduction.

It's not unsurprising to find that all pooling > partial pooling > not pooling in the aspects of divorce because of the improved aspect of trust and unity. There appears to be about a 5% reduction for each of them all things being equal where:

- Fully pooled – 75-78%
- Partially pooled – 71-75%
- Fully separate – 66-72%



God's plan of 'one flesh' marriage being one in all aspects is supported yet again by science.

Round up: American Pride divergence, Joshua Harris' return to Christianity, liberal Protestant Churches fall, and self identified dominant vs submissive in men and women

March 2, 2026 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

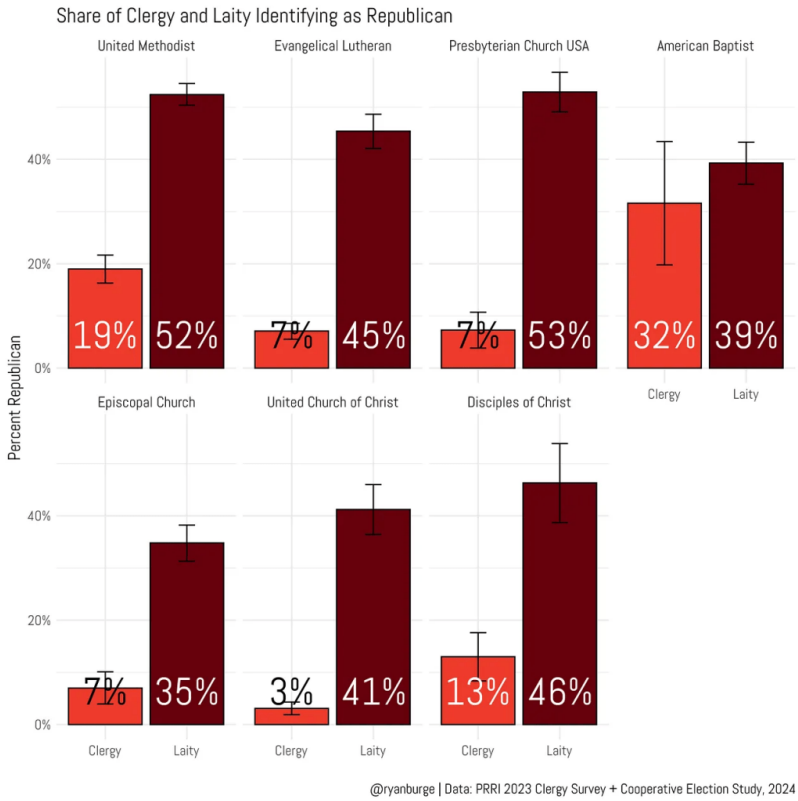
American Pride slips to new lows

Probably the most interesting chart from this article is this one. All credit goes to gallup for their chart.

My general assessment of this is as follows

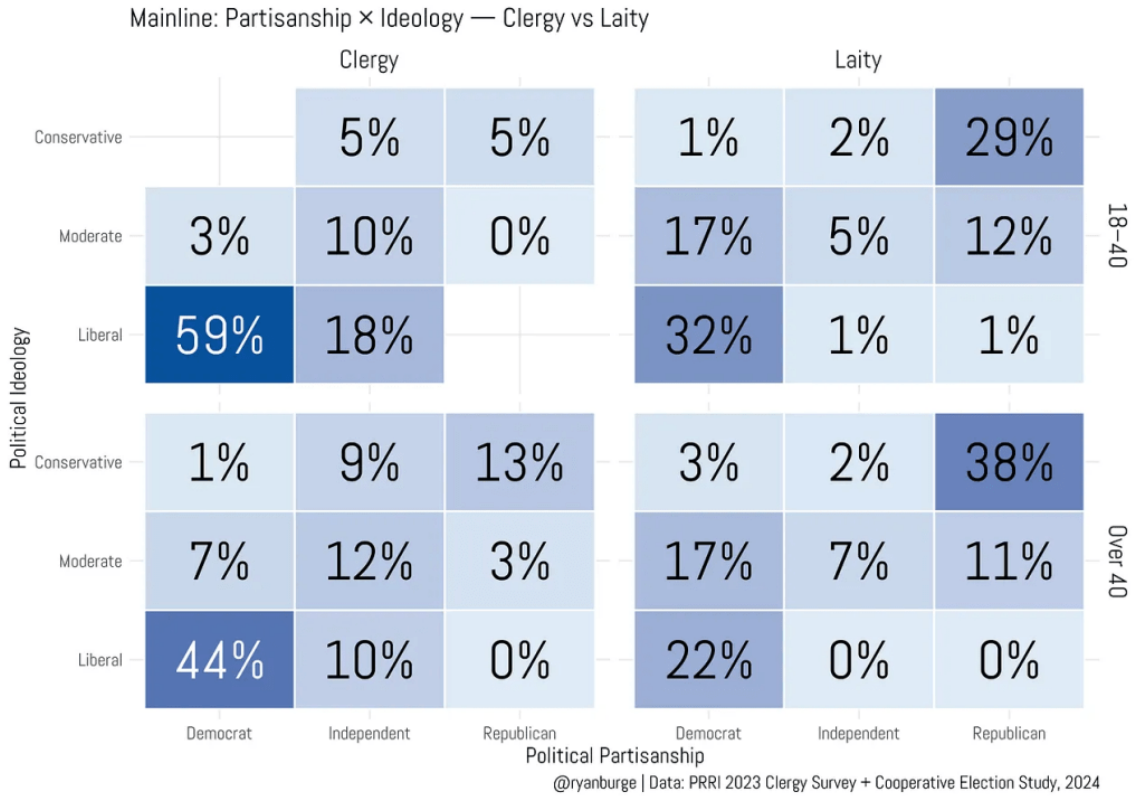
- Democrats appear to be viewing the US from the victim perspective and when you do that everyone is exploited. I expect this to go down to 0-20% levels over time probably because there's no end do that
- Independents after Trump's presidency ends I expect to hover around 50% maybe fluctuating up and down 10%. They can see that that the US is becoming a Corporatocrasy and that it kinda sucks out here for a lot of people.
- Republicans are like your Boomer Evangelicals thinking everything is fine and hard work solves all things.

Objectively, the US is still one of the best countries to do anything with your life. However, many are starting to not see it that way. Either way with the rise of AI things are going to be shifting a lot in the near future.



In other news, Joshua Harris of I Kissed Dating Goodbye fame, his divorce, and his deconversion went on one of the Christian podcasts and says he was perhaps too hasty to totally de-convert but was right to perhaps deconstruct from Evangelicalism. A brief summary, and here's a link to the podcast which the interview starts around minute 53-54.

- He admits he lacked wisdom when writing the book, and lamented that he didn't pay attention to one of the off handed comments by one of the old pastors in passing that the other pastor said he wouldn't write a book until he was at least 40.
- Trump's first term accelerated his disillusionment from Christianity, but overcorrected by bringing black and white thinking into the picture, and that it would have been better to just deconstruct from Evangelicalism rather than Christianity as a whole
- Wants to move away from immediate answers and fear driven stances and supposedly walk with Jesus slowly and rebuild whatever that faith is supposed to look like

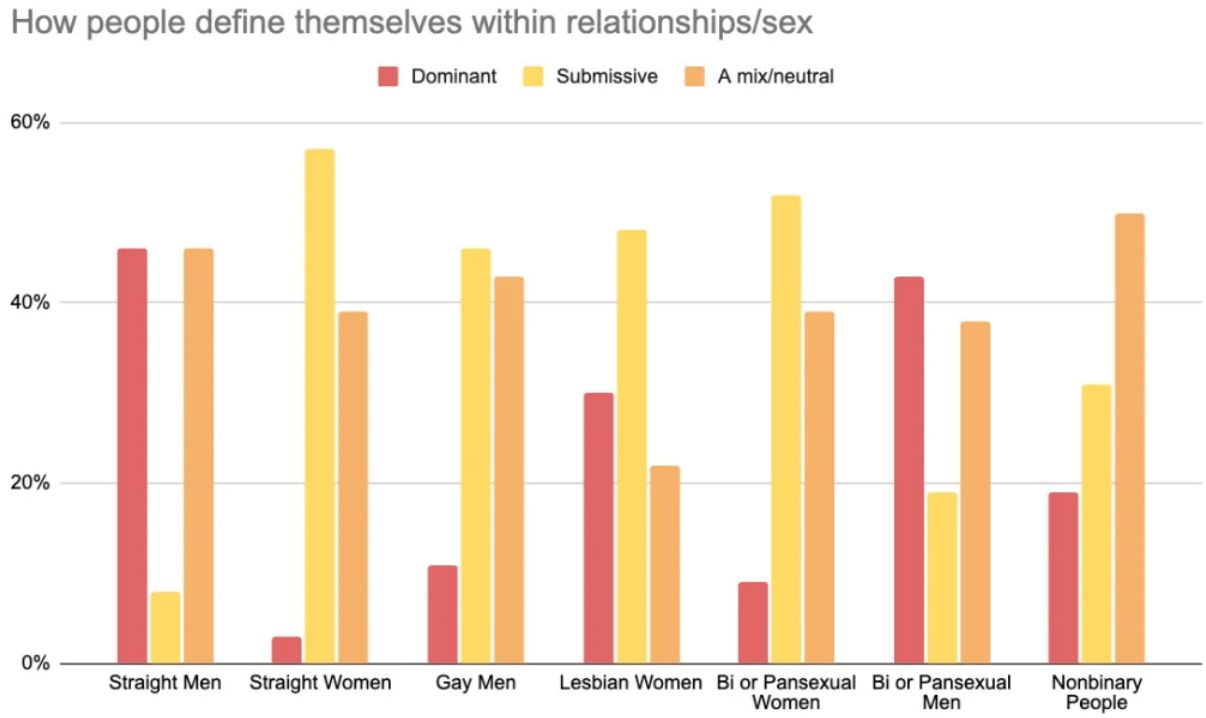


Having been through the beta-forming Evangelical-Boomer cog machine myself I can see where he is going, although he definitely could have handled it better. However, hopefully he is on the right track back to being a Christian but with eyes wide open to all of the secular and Boomer-led Churchianity.

Clergy and Laith in liberal mainline Protestant Churches

I believe either Aaron Renn or another Christian blogger mentioned this before, but this thoroughly explains why the mainline Protestant denominations have fallen to the culture. All charts are credit to this blog.

Not that being a Republican means being a true Christian, but we know for sure that most people who are Democrats almost certainly do not believe that marriage is one man and one woman. The erosion of marriage being between one man and one woman then leads to love being disambiguated into LGBT+ acceptance and further down the rabbit hole.



On the left side we can see that the Clergy is becoming more and more Liberal Democrat. Over 40 is 44% and younger than 40 is now 59%. Same with the number shifts for the Laity from 22% to 32%. As the leadership is there the congregation will go.

The mainline Protestants are a sinking ship because they have totally joined the secular culture and do not preach the real Jesus.

Finally, an interesting chart from Cartoonshateher on Men and Women and others, and if they prefer to identified as Dominate, Mix/Neutral, or Submissive. All credit to the blogger's site for the image.

This is not news to anyone who has read this blog for a long time, but the summary is that on average

- Men are pretty much only Dominant or Mix
- Women are pretty much only Mix to submissive
- Gay men tend to have more feminized brains and are much more like women in distribution
- Lesbian women tend to have more masculined brains and are much more like men in distribution
- Bi/pan and non binary tend to skew toward one or the other depending.

The author also makes several comments that are not too surprising to us either

- "For a while now, my theory has been that a great proportion of men who extoll the virtues of submissive women don't actually want a woman who is submissive in a way that requires them to show dominance or leadership, but rather a woman who submits to the idea of having sex with them, aka a "woman who likes them." Better yet if she makes this as easy as possible, with zero concern about rejection or looking stupid. TLDR: men want hot women to willingly sleep with them and dispel any fears of being rejected or accused of sex-pestistry. What else is new?"
- "the more common expectation isn't for women to be submissive, it's for men to be dominant."

- “And the biggest mismatch when it comes to straight men and women is the idea of pursuit and initiation. Nobody loves making the first move, but straight women hate it more than anyone.”

Whenever we would get comments from the Christian women they would always make excuses as to why Christian women could not do any sort of initiation. It’s always men must initiate, men must pursue, men must do this and that.

However, as we have seen from a vast array of anecdotal evidence and analysis of the Bible and such it’s the case that the most successful relationships form when the women have some to a lot of interest in the man, and they make some at least subtle moves like indicating interesting, hanging around him a lot, or even nudge him verbally or with actions in her direction to make her interest known so that he picks up on it and then initiates.

Women would do well to pick up on Honeycraft if they have men they are interested about in order to indicate her interest to him so he can officially initiate and act dominate toward her. Men need to get used to making the first move and looking for any indicators of interest if they want to go anywhere with relationships. But we all knew those things already. Just a confirmation.

The myth of the mental load

March 23, 2026 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

Mental load or emotional labor has recently been making a come back with more and more women complaining about it. Even academic institutions seem to want to get on the train including academic articles about it. Here's the abstract of the last link which does an alright job at explaining what it is.

> The mental load has received considerable public attention especially in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. In this article, we synthesize existing literature to argue that the mental load is a combination of cognitive and emotional labor and it is this combination that makes the mental work a load. We argue that the way the mental load operates within families and society has three characteristics: (1) it is invisible in that it is enacted internally yet results in a range of unpaid, physical labor; (2) it is boundaryless in that can be brought to work and into leisure and sleep time; and (3) enduring in that it is never complete because it is tied to caring for loved ones which is constant. We also offer some future directions for addressing the problems associated with the mental load. First, questions measuring the mental load should be standard in health and social surveys to better understand the problem. Second, employers should adopt better policies that allow for greater work-life reconciliation to lessen the mental load. Third, caregiving should be vital infrastructure developed and invested in by governments to reduce competing work and care demands that accelerate the deleterious consequences of the mental load.

The funny thing about this phenomena is that it's based in the feminist perception that women should want to have it all and do it all. Be the boss babe and head of the household and do everything.

Because male leadership is seen as bad to the feminist worldview, wives and mothers must take on all of this extra role of what was previously part of what male leadership of the family was. Hence, what is actually happening is that women are fooled into thinking that they should be taking on extra responsibilities at their own expense Then because they feel overwhelmed once they are taking on these extra responsibilities, they complain about it and cry that the men should be helping them.

If you treat men like they are someone that you have to mother and take care of, then most men will step back. They don't want to get into a fight about responsibilities especially if the wife is going to lash out to him about taking the leadership of the marriage and kids. It's basically the no-win situation for men. If you try to be the leader then you get yelled at because male-led marriages are bad, but if you step back and let the wife do it she's going to complain that she's the leader with all of these excessive responsibilities.

When you gasp have the man lead the family, the wife can literally just dump most of her worries about how things are run and just focus on her parts which are being a good wife and mother. She doesn't have to worry about all of these other things.

This is one of the fundamental flaws of feminism especially with the boss babes. They want the authority without the responsibility, and every time they have the responsibility they complain about it. Having it all means having the ability to manage everything, and women were not created for that. But I'm sure that many women will be chomping at the bit to disagree with that even as they complain about it behind closed doors.

Round up: I helped build the manosphere then it destroyed me, I lived the feminist dream and want my money back, marriage got better so why is it declining, and men aren't signing up to singles nights

I helped build the manosphere — then it destroyed me

Now this is an interesting article.

> The internet "loved the idea of this blonde Nazi chick", she told The Times in her first mainstream media interview since the release of her book This is Not Real Life. "I was basically the hardest drug you could get at that time. But it wasn't real."
> Southern was 19 in 2015 when she rose to notoriety as a telegenic YouTuber promoting hateful opinions on immigration, feminism and the "Islamisation of the West". At the time, Donald Trump was entering the political scene and these ideas were beginning to gain traction.
> She befriended the far-right extremist Tommy Robinson, known for stirring anti-Muslim feeling, and became a female face for the manosphere, producing the viral hit video "Why I Am Not a Feminist". In early 2018, Southern distributed flyers in Robinson's hometown of Luton calling Allah "gay", as part of what she said was a social experiment. That earned her a ban from the UK on the grounds that her presence in the country was not "conducive to the public good".
> Southern continued to fall into a dark online world, exploiting it before it eventually began exploiting her. She wrote her book last summer expressing regret for the role she had played, but only now feels ready to talk about it. "I had no understanding of the world or how it worked," Southern said over Zoom from her living room, still sporting the trademark red lipstick and dark mascara on which she built her brand. "There was no notion that I would ever become famous or even travel or anything like that."

Basically, Southern claims to have became one of the faces of the "manosphere," yet only encountered some version of the extremist alt-right portion.

She was allegedly raped by Andrew Tate in 2018, and then became a "Christian tradwife" in 2020.

> She posted "A New Chapter" on her website about her decision to take some time out and focus on her "soul". She had fallen in love and married an Australian man she had been dating, who she has never publicly identified. The > couple had a son in 2020.

> But her hiatus didn’t last long.
> The same year her son was born, she reinvented herself as a “trad wife”, which she suspects played into a Christian need for redemption. She posted photos of a curated life that showed her exercising and baking at the couple’s home in Australia. “I figured if I just follow the manual of ‘look pretty, quit my job, have babies, serve my husband’ then I would be able to have this happy family life that so many people crave,” she said.
> But Southern claimed her husband became controlling when she tried to assert any amount of independence. She alleges that he would lock her out of the house, calling her a “worthless dead weight”. Southern said her husband left her and their son after she went against his wishes by visiting her family in Canada. She filed a protective order and the couple would end up officially separating — a cardinal sin in the traditionalist movement. The backlash was swift. Commentators called her a “whore” and wished her damnation. Her estranged husband was unreachable for comment.

In any case, you can’t make this stuff up. Not surprising that if you grift too hard you can get exploited back.

But I think it’s sad she thought she was building up the manosphere at all when there are multiple divisions of it doing their own thing. Even most of the men who cling onto the women grifters hyping them up as women to look up to aren’t exactly the men you want to marry either. Guess she learned the hard way.

I Lived The Feminist Dream. I Want My Money Back.

To be honest, this one reeks of a man impersonating a woman in how articulate and self aware the writing is.

Either that or a woman found a bunch of manosphere-related articles and then had AI draft an essay for them and then added some cherries on top for engagement farming.

> The marketplace is made up only of your options. It’s a comparison, like grading on a curve. Just twenty years ago, your options (the market) was limited to those in your geographic vicinity, plus the occasional setup from a relative or camp friend. Now, the options have widened considerably due to dating apps and we’re competing across hundreds, even thousands of options. On top of that, Instagram has widened the option pool even further, even though none of the men around me could realistically date any of these women, they exist constantly in their field of view, and thus are part of the sample size. Now stack on top of that that we’re no longer competing within our age group; it has widened to include girls 10-20 years younger than us—and this is where feminism really screwed us.
> We were sold the lie to go after our careers, make money, and make our mark on the world first, and then go find a partner once we’ve accomplished A through C.

> We used to have a backstop against some of this—our biological clock ticking louder around our mid-thirties—but we did an end run around that too, with egg freezing. And the worst part of it is that we, women, did this to ourselves. Not a single man told us to do any of this. In fact, historically, they've been pretty petulant about the whole thing, but we pushed right through that sentiment by calling them all "toxic" and threatening them with cancellation if they didn't comply. We are our own worst enemy, and the architects of our own demise.
> While we were busy climbing the corporate ladder, raising unheard of amounts of money, and optimizing ourselves in every possible way, the men in our cohort weren't just waiting around for us to feel "ready" to settle down. They were dating, and as we aged up, still too busy self-actualizing for them, they continued to date twenty-year-olds (women in their fertile prime, because that's what men are biologically programmed to find attractive). So we freeze our eggs, maybe buying us some additional time. Ten years go by. Surely, the men left in their forties are still single because they're looking for something real, something mature; a woman of substance. Wrong. They're still dating twenty-year-olds, just now with a hair transplant and an eye-rolling age gap. And it's not really their fault; it's mostly biology. Men have about the same fertility as they age until well into their sixties. Up until that point, they will be pursuing women in their fertile prime, as their biological directive is telling them to procreate, and with a mate with the highest likelihood of success to carry on the gene pool.
> Feminism sold us the lie that being a well-rounded, articulate, and successful woman would up the value of our stock; the investment in ourselves was worth it. In reality, it does absolutely nothing to our market value and, actually in some cases, lowers it, as many men prefer to be more successful and smarter than their partners. Women date laterally and up, men date laterally (sometimes), but mostly down. Most men couldn't care less if you're successful or incredible intelligent, or have any amount of self-knowledge you might have gleaned on your therapy journey. Sure, those things are "nice-to-haves," but often they don't even come into their assessments until after you've already been dating for a while. They have the ability to make a marginal difference, at best. Men, even when they say they want someone they can 'talk to on their level,' are kind of kidding themselves—they look mostly for biological markers of fertility and high estrogen (waist-to-hip ratio, full lips, heart-shaped face), and as far as talking goes… they just want someone to listen. It's women who want someone to talk to on their level—another gross mis-assessment of feminism.

This is only part of the article, but it pretty much hits all of the obvious talking points that men have discussed for the past two decades. Women also distinctly don't use terms like marketplace and market value.

The article is actually pretty long and worth a read, but I don't think a woman actually wrote it or if they did they used a significant amount of AI to make it happen. Very few women have that type of self awareness and then will write it out, using the terms that the manosphere has coined.

Marriage Got Better—So Why Is It Disappearing?

This one actually does use logic and was written by a man to connect the dots.

> nitially, that might seem like a paradox. Individual marriages have become stronger, yet the institution of marriage as a whole has never been weaker. But there's a simple explanation: Largely as a result of our rising level of wealth and stability, marriage isn't dying, but it is stratifying. And a result, the people who could benefit most from marriage's social and economic benefits are the least likely to have examples of strong marriages in their lives. This reality should force us to prioritize rebuilding a scaffolding of culture and policy changes that can help today's young people grow into tomorrow's adults capable of committing to marriage.
> For many years, marriage provided an important economic function for women whose earning power was constrained by law and custom. Women's rights, economic opportunities, and educational pathways have expanded, and our society has grown wealthier. Women looking at a male as a potential mate today expect more than their sisters of yesteryear. Desirable skills in a partner have less to do with earnings and wages and more to do with social and interpersonal skills. And men, particularly those who are on the bottom half of the income spectrum or without a college degree, are unable to adjust to the fact that the bar over which a man becomes "marriageable" continues to rise.
> We might borrow a concept from economics to illustrate this a little more clearly. In labor markets, economists refer to a given worker's "reservation wage"—the amount below which a certain job just isn't worth it. If you have a degree in engineering and are looking for work, you might be able to get hired for a $12-an-hour gig making sandwiches, but you're more likely to hold out until a better offer comes along. As societies get wealthier, a given worker's reservation wage goes up—there's a reason back-breaking, low-paying jobs tend to be filled by immigrants rather than native workers.
> For most of American history, the bar for a "reservation boyfriend" was pretty low. The question was less whether to marry than who to marry, and the pool was, on the whole, fairly limited. Men and women met at church, or barn raisings, or high school. The plot of 1971's The Last Picture Show, set in a small town in Texas 20 years earlier, revolves around the pairings-off of teenagers whose eligible partners are essentially the same couple dozen young people they've gone to high school with, and the annoyed familiarity that results. You can't fully understand the "you can't live with 'em, you can't live without 'em" ethos from outside the context of early marriage and limited pathways to divorce.

> Technology progressed, values changed, society liberalized. Marriage used to offer a “bundle” of goods—companionship, sex, old-age security, the ability to have children, some measure of social standing. Overt societal pressure to get married before having sex, living together, buying a house, or having a child is a thing of the past. In the words of Johns Hopkins sociologist Andrew Cherlin, marriage is a “capstone” to a successful young adulthood, rather than the “cornerstone” on which young couples once built a life together. For women, the average age at first marriage has risen from 22 to 28.5 over the past four decades.

I suppose the irony is that the conclusion is more reductionistic to mostly economic shift of marriage away from men and women. However, this is painted as a masculine issue later in the article where women depended on men economically and men haven’t pivoted well out of it going into ‘using weed, acting out violent scripts from pornography, or gambling their weekly paychecks.’

Can’t help but throw men under the bus while ignoring womens’ inflated expectations.

Men aren’t signing up to singles nights – I launched my own and found out why

There’s several variations of this going around, and I just chose this one.

> The events have been full but I’ve still hit roadblocks with men dropping out at the last minute, despite having paid for tickets and made commitments to their female friends, leaving the women struggling to find replacements. This is small fry compared to what other singles nights organisers deal with. Very few companies sell tickets in pairs like me (though I’ve noticed a few introducing this since I started Red Lips), and so often this means it’s a case of selling tickets separately for single women and single men.
> In these instances, tickets for single women sell out almost instantly, whereas those for men linger in a limbo of perennial availability. Some event organisers have told me they’ve ended up with rooms full of single women vying for the attention of just a handful of men, while others have resorted to bribing male friends to attend, and some are literally just going out onto the street and approaching any men who walk past.
> Matters are worse overseas, it seems, with The New York Times recently sending one of its reporters to a wine mixer where tickets for women cost $100, while men could attend for free. “I think the truth is that there are a lot more women out there interested in showing up for these dating events, and it’s not as easy to get men to show up,” said Luke Vander Ploeg in an episode of The Daily, claiming there were 15 women in attendance and just five men. If even freebies aren’t enough to get men to these events, what is? After all, it’s not like they don’t want to meet women.
> “The most obvious explanation is time pressure,” says one single friend in his > 30s. “Any woman looking to start a family is facing constraints that men just don’t have. The result is they end up being more open-minded to alternative, unusual, and, let’s face it, less romantic ways of meeting people than men because they want to get there faster. It’s not that men are put off, it’s just that there is less of a push to meet someone, and because a singles night is a slightly forced interaction, it’s easy to persuade yourself it’s a bit lame and unnecessary.”

> It’s a brutal reality, but clearly one that resonates. “I think men just have less desire for singles nights,” posits another single male in his thirties who came along to one of my events. “We get all we need from dating apps, and those of us who don’t probably won’t have the confidence to go to a singles night where there are things like speed dating.” Gender norms could play a role, too, at least in terms of how men want to interact with women they’re attracted to. “I think more traditional men feel like it’s on them to be charming, funny, and cool in a limited time, while it’s on the women to just be hot. So the pressure is higher for the men. Like, a super boring hot girl would probably do better at a speed dating event than a super boring hot boy.”

The funny thing is they still don’t really understand why it’s happening.

As the man says in the last paragraph unwittingly, you can get enough dates from apps (if you’re attractive) and there’s no need to go to a singles night.

If you aren’t getting enough dates as a man, it’s because you’re deemed unattractive. Why would an unattractive men want to go to a singles night even for free to waste his time talking to a lot of women just to get rejected more? And not just rejected online but in person as well where the stakes are clearly higher.

If you want singles to meet and date you have to address the overinflated expectations of women, and also get them to realize they’re not going to make the attractive man who is dating dozens of them commit to anything. But I don’t think many women are ready for that type of thing.

Sex differences and 1 Timothy 2

May 11, 2026 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

One of the struggles that the complementarians have had issues with is the interpretation of 1 Timothy 2. Not in terms of allowing female pastors but rather having an adequate justification for it.

> 1 Timothy 2:11 A woman should learn in quietness and full submission. 12 I do not permit a woman to teach or to assume authority over a man; she must be quiet. 13 For Adam was formed first, then Eve. 14 And Adam was not the one deceived; it was the woman who was deceived and became a sinner. 15 But women will be saved through childbearing—if they continue in faith, love and holiness with propriety.

One of my main theories on this from a psychological perspective is that men are able to compartmentalize better than women, which is exceptionally useful in terms of separating work from family life. However, not only that it also may be at least one of the reasons for verse 14 where it says Eve was deceived whereas Adam sinned and wasn't deceived.

I've recently returned to some analysis on differences between men and women, and one of the most robust psychological differences between men and women in the scientific literature is that men tend to focus on things and women tend to focus on people. This is true even in science itself. It"s why western governments have wasted a lot of money forcing women into STEM fields when they don't really care about them that much, and often the women end up hating it even if they are.

Male headship both in terms of the family and of the Church becomes more clear in this line of thought. Though families and the Church are composed of people, organizing, leading and governing groups of people based around a theological framework is more of a focus on things rather than people. The case in point is that it is important that men lead both their families and the Church according to sound doctrine.

> 2 Timothy 4:3 For the time will come when people will not put up with sound doctrine. Instead, to suit their own desires, they will gather around them a great number of teachers to say what their itching ears want to hear. 4 They will turn their ears away from the truth and turn aside to myths. 5 But you, keep your head in all situations, endure hardship, do the work of an evangelist, discharge all the duties of your ministry.

As we can see in the progressive mainline "churches" that have fallen to culture, those that start agreeing more with the culture rather than God and the Bible regarding it's moral doctrinal stances not only compromise with the world but bleed out members. Their faith is false, so what's the point of God and the Bible at that point? It is not too surprising then that we see that aside from these "churches" falling in regard to LGBT and other social justice movements they also allow female leaders (priests, pastors, and more) among them.

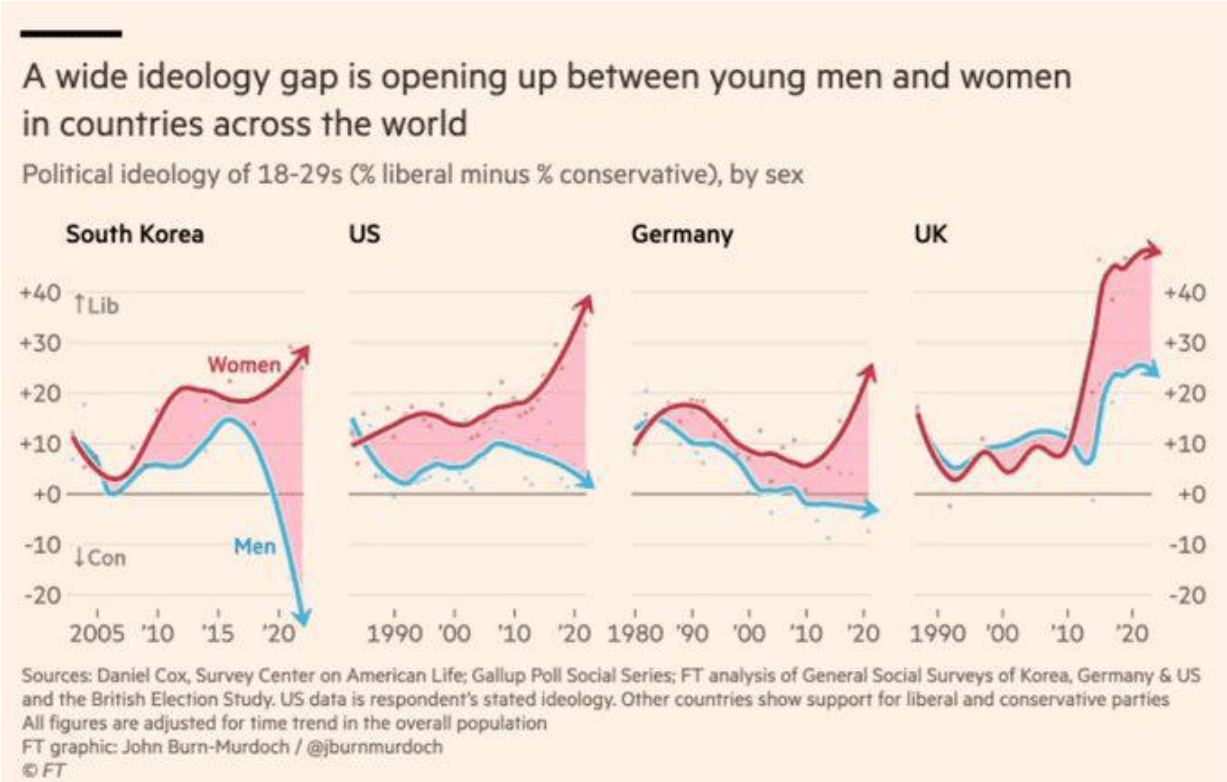
This is not to say that women cannot be things focused or that some women can’t compartmentalize as well as some men. However, given the preponderance of evidence suggesting there are significant sex differences that God created between man and woman there is something unique in why men are called to be both the heads of families and Churches.



The war on men and children continues by women

May 13, 2026 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

As I'm sure many of you have seen by now, the famous polling of positive vs negative view of the opposite sex. Younger women are being more and more radicalized by social media and scare mongering to be afraid of men.

This is generally also born out in the the fact that women have by far being going more liberal over time, and we know that party basically hates men.

For all of the sex war stuff, it has mainly been the women becoming more radicalized. I think it's quite obvious with the LBGT stuff, but this lends more credence with actual data.

Interestingly, there has also been some analysis several years ago about men's income vs women's income and how that relates to how many children they have.

> I found that for husbands, personal income was positively associated with their number of biological children, and for wives, personal income was negatively associated with their number of biological children, as previous research has shown. That is, husbands with higher income tended to have more children, while > wives with higher income tended to have fewer children.

> Additionally, the more a man's wife earned, the fewer children he was likely to have, and the more a woman's husband earned, the more children she was likely to have. This was true for the entire sample as well as for the subset of men and women aged 45-65, who likely have completed fertility but are unlikely to be retired. This was not because of childlessness among low-income men and high-income women, but also held true for all those with children. For almost all the analyses, these findings held true regardless of whether or not education was controlled, i.e., held constant.
> These results indicate that men earning high incomes with a spouse who has a low income have the most biological children in the United States, while women with low incomes with a spouse who earns a high income have the most biological children. These differences are not large—as very few people in the U.S. have large numbers of children—but they exist, nonetheless. For women, there is likely reverse causation as women who have children tend to work less outside of the home, which would mean lower income. Women with children may also experience wage discrimination. There may be reverse causation for men also, as men with children may try to earn more or may experience positive wage discrimination.
> Even so, these results suggest that for men in the U.S., fathering children is still related to being able to provide, as it has been historically. For women, husband's income remains important for childbearing. My study was based on data collected in 2014 when fertility rates in the United States were very low and falling. In 2021, the U.S. population grew at the slowest rate since the founding of the nation, in part due to historically low fertility rates.[7] The findings presented here suggest that the decline in the proportion of men employed full time[8] and the decline in male earnings relative to female earnings[9] likely have contributed to the decline in aggregate fertility rates. Given the positive relationship between education and earnings, lower rates of men attending college are likely to exacerbate these tendencies in the near future, with a continuing downward pull on fertility rates.

Generally, when men get income they tend to go right to thinking how can I have a family and kids. On the other hand, women get income and tend to skip all of that and just go for a house, car, vacations and comfort. Maybe some have a couple of kids here and there, but much less than a family where it is primarily the man making the money. This has also started to go mainstream with talking about it on more podcasts as well.

Overall,

1. The more women become so-called independent the more they hate men, hate children (abortion, don't have kids) and become more selfish. Of course, we haven't also brought up the statistics on the decline of female happiness, increased usage of anti-depressants, and all of the other negative effects.

2. The funny thing is, though, that even many Christian men and women will say it's a good thing that women are more independent, and they definitely don't want to roll any of it back.

To me this is enabling addictive negative behavior. Like feminism, womens' independence is a failed experiment.

Titus 2:3 Likewise, teach the older women to be reverent in the way they live, not to be slanderers or addicted to much wine, but to teach what is good. 4 Then they can urge the younger women to love their husbands and children, 5 to be self-controlled and pure, to be busy at home, to be kind, and to be subject to their husbands, so that no one will malign the word of God.

Not that we didn't know already, but the Bible dispenses the best and most accurate advice.

Tying together more of an understanding of reason and morality with the extension of faith

July 8, 2026 | by Deep Strength | Link | Original Link

I wanted to expand on Jack's From Christ to Churchianity — Part 6: The Law as an Expression of Morality a bit and it turned a bit too long for a comment.

> True Morality is a mimetic and yet true expression of honor and respect for the Person who embodies the Moral Law, Jesus Christ. Human laws are a logical reduction of morality that serve as a reference point for human reasoning and logical debate (such as in a courtroom), intended explicitly for the benefit and guidance of the morally undiscerning, but are also intended to point the undiscerning to an awareness of a moral recognizance of Christ. True morality cannot be expressed via Law, apart from this recognizance.
> The Moral Law, including human laws as much as possible, should serve as a frame of reference for people who lack the moral / spiritual maturity to connect directly to God and thereby know right from wrong. However, that connection, that inspiration to faith, was always the intention of the Law, to draw people into His personal presence, to get to know Him as Father and Lord. If human jurisprudence fails in this task, then it has failed in its purpose, and perhaps failed altogether.

It seems to me that the competence framework may be a solid analogy for faith and reason in these terms. It's not perfect but in this analogy, faith would be unconscious and reason would be conscious and incompetence would be lack of morality whereas competence would be being able to live morally.

> 1. Unconscious incompetence (Ignorance)
> 2. Conscious incompetence (Awareness)
> 3. Conscious competence (Learning)
> 4. Unconscious competence (Mastery)

Prior to believe in Jesus, we live in unconscious incompetence. Our Faith in this circumstance is that we live by feelings and justify them in hedonism, vain philosophies, and even nihilism. Without reason we unconsciously incompetent in understanding morality. This is why the Gospel in Romans places

> Romans 10:9 If you declare with your mouth, "Jesus is Lord," and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved. 10 For it is with your heart that you believe and are justified, and it is with your mouth that you profess your faith and are saved. 11 As Scripture says, "Anyone who believes in him will never be put to shame. 12 For there is no difference between Jew and Gentile—the same Lord is Lord of all and richly blesses all who call on him, 13 for,

> “Everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved.”
> 14 How, then, can they call on the one they have not believed in? And how can they believe in the one of whom they have not heard? And how can they hear without someone preaching to them? 15 And how can anyone preach unless they are sent? As it is written: “How beautiful are the feet of those who bring good news!”

There is a big element of understanding the gospel — that we are sinners in need of a Savior, Jesus Christ — and to repent and believe in Him. This understanding of reason is how we become a Christian.

However, once we gain faith we are conscious to our incompetence with morality. We can then use reason to improve our competence or morality.

> 2 Peter 1:5 For this very reason, make every effort to add to your faith goodness; and to goodness, knowledge; 6 and to knowledge, self-control; and to self-control, perseverance; and to perseverance, godliness; 7 and to godliness, mutual affection; and to mutual affection, love. 8 For if you possess these qualities in increasing measure, they will keep you from being ineffective and unproductive in your knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9 But whoever does not have them is nearsighted and blind, forgetting that they have been cleansed from their past sins.

We add on goodness, knowledge (of the Truth), self control, perseverance, and these grow into godliness, brotherly love, and love. This is how we become consciously competence in the faith. We understand the reason (conscious) and live it out (competence of morality).

However, to truly move to “faith that can move mountains” per Jesus we need to start to suspend reason and truly walk by faith in God which would be unconscious competence. Or perhaps better termed as “walking by the Spirit” in Galatians 5 with the fruit of the Spirit but in all things. I think many true Christians have had instances where they’ve felt the nudge to do things that defy reason and rely heavily on Faithful competence.

- You’re dealing with a tough time and God directs you to the right Scripture that resonates with you or the right person speaks into your life when you need it.
- God nudges you to talk to someone at the store or at Church and encourage them or even do things for them and it was just the thing they needed at that time or an answer to their prayer.
- I’ve had my own conversations since starting this blog with men where I was seemingly introduced to them at the right time to remove the wool from their eyes about the truthfulness about relationships and marriage between men and women and husbands and wives. I’ve helped them turn around their marital situations or their issues with their girlfriend.

These things are beyond our own reason, but we know by faith that God is orchestrating things in the background. But this step is usually mainly reached once we become more and more mature as believers (though it does happen to new Christians too) because we are grounded thoroughly in understanding that all we do is not grounded in the Law but the Moral Good of our neighbor.
