If you don't approach your relationship in that way you, her, or both of you will end up feeling unsatisfied in the relationship.

As a result, you'll start looking elsewhere for the love that you seek.

So, if you find yourself in a relationship with a woman that you love and want to be with, then be fearless with your love.

Don't be afraid to show your love to her and at the same time, make sure that she's not afraid in your relationship to show her love for you.

Let you and her experience the full level of happiness and love that you can experience together in a relationship.

When you approach it in that way, it's going to last because both you and her have found what you're looking for from a relationship.

Should You Ask Your Girlfriend if She is Still Attracted to You?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When you're in a relationship with a woman, should you ever ask her, "Are you still attracted to me?"

The answer is not only "No," it's "Heck no!"

The reason why is that when a guy asks a woman a question like, "Are you still attracted to me?" in that moment, he is displaying traits that are unattractive to a woman; those being insecurity and self doubt.

That is not attractive to a woman.

So if a man asks a woman, "Are you still attracted to me?" he will usually get answers like, "I don't know. Don't ask me those sorts of things. You're being annoying" or, "Maybe, maybe not, I'm not sure."

The reason why, is that women are attracted to confidence and turned off by insecurity and self doubt in a man.

[image: Are you still attracted to me?]

So in that moment, she's going to be unsure about her feelings of attraction for him and, as a result, will make comments like, "I don't know, I'm not sure, maybe," or she'll try to avoid hurting his feelings by answering the question in that moment and will instead ask him, "Why are you asking me this?"

The thing is understandably, some guys find themselves in a situation where they're in a relationship and they don't really know if their girlfriend or their wife loves them and feels attracted to them anymore.

It's understandable for a guy to think that or to consider it, but it's not something that you should go and ask a woman.

Instead, as a man, what you need to understand is that attraction is something that you CREATE based on how you interact with her.

She is looking at you and if she can see that you're being confident, emotionally masculine, you're not placing her above you in terms of dominance and you're able to make her feel the kind of respect for you that makes her feel motivated to treat you well, then she's going to feel attracted to you.

Additionally, if you're approaching the relationship correctly, then her love for you is going to deepen over time rather than fading away.

She's going to fall more and more in love with you because of the man that you are and how you make her feel.

So to avoid ever becoming insecure and doubting your attractiveness to your woman, what you need to do is understand how to make her feel attracted, understand how to approach a relationship in a way that builds on the love, respect and attraction that you and her feel for each other.

Then focus on what is most important to you in life, other than her, that being your purpose in life, your goals as a man, your dreams and so on.

[image: See her as the most important person in your life, but not the most important thing]

Make that your main focus in life, rather than her.

It's fine for her to be the most important person in your life, but not the most important thing.

If you make your woman the most important person and the most important thing, then you're naturally going to start to feel insecure.

You may begin to worry that your life is going to start falling apart if you see changes in her behavior, mood and the way that she is approaching the relationship with you.

After all, everything in your life is based on her and the relationship.

As a man, you should never put yourself in that situation.

It's completely fine to love, respect and appreciate your woman and see her as the most important person in your life, but don't make her the most important thing in your life.

Don't get the two confused.

The way to do is to love and appreciate her, but put the majority of your focus into what is most important to you in life, other than her.

When you approach your life in that way and you also know how to make her feel attracted and how to approach the relationship in a way that builds on the feelings between you and her, then you have nothing to worry about.

She's going to feel attracted to you because you know how to make her feel sparks of attraction as you interact with her.

You also know how to approach your relationship in a way that builds on the feelings of respect, attraction and love over time.

The thing is though, even though you know how to make her feel attracted, you know how to approach a relationship correctly and her feelings are building, you still shouldn't ever go and ask her, "Are you still attracted to me? Do you still love me?" because in that moment you'll be displaying traits that are unattractive to her and as a result, in that moment, she won't feel very attracted to you.

[image: Do you still love me?]

She will feel turned off by your insecurity and self doubt.

So you have to know what you're doing, believe that it's working and then get on with being the man that you want to be in life.

As a result, she will naturally look up to you, respect you, feel attracted to you and be in love with you.

Okay, if youÂ enjoyed that quick insight into attraction and self confidence and how they link together, then you will love my in depth relationship relationship program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn everything that you need to know to make a woman feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

The techniques and methods that you will learn in the program make your woman want to treat you well, be attentive, be affectionate, be loving and always look her best for you.

She wants to impress you.

She doesn't want to lose you.

She only wants to be with you.

You Have a Lot of Control Over How Much Attraction She Feels

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that it's important to understand and remember how much control you actually have over a woman's attraction for you.

It's essentially based on how you talk to her, how you interact with her, how you approach the relationship and how you approach your life in general.

She's looking at you and if she can see traits that make her feel attracted, then she's going to feel attracted.

For example: If she sees that you're confident and emotionally masculine, then she's going to feel some attraction for you as a result of that.

If you also know how to approach the relationship in a way that makes her feel loved and appreciated while also feeling motivated to make you feel loved and appreciated, then she's going to respect you and love you for that.

When a woman finds herself in a relationship like that, she feels lucky that she feels loved and appreciated, but also feels excited and lucky that she feels the motivation to make you feel loved and appreciated.

Women love to be in that type of situation where they feel motivated to treat you well, be attentive, loving and so on.

Yet, all of that stuff can begin to be ruined by simple insecure questions like, "Are you still attracted to me?" or, "Do you still love me?"

Don't go to her with questions like that.

Instead, make her feel attracted to you, make her love you and then get on with being the man that you want to be in life.

She will respect you for that, she'll feel attracted to you for it and she'll love you for it.

A Weird Thing That Women Do in Relationships

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Something weird that women do in relationships is what I call a Feminine Request.

This is where she wants to do something with you, or for you to potentially do something for her, but she doesn't want to tell you to do it, she doesn't want to order you around.

In a relationship, women will also make requests in a masculine way at times, of course.

However, when a woman makes a Feminine Request, it's an opportunity for you to make her feel more respect, attraction and love for you based on how you respond.

[image: She tries to not take on the masculine role, which can result in behavior that is confusing or even annoying for some guys]

So what's an example?

Well, imagine that you're sitting on the sofa with your woman and it's a cold Sunday afternoon.

If she were to make a Masculine Request about what she wants, she may say something like, "Honey, I'm cold. Go and turn the heating up."

She's telling you what she wants and she's telling you to do it.

If she makes a Feminine Request, she might say, "Honey, it's cold in here, I'm cold."

When she's making a Feminine Request like that, she's not telling you to turn the heating up.

Instead, she's leaving it up to you to do what you want with her request.

Some men will jump at the chance to do something for her and will go and turn the heating up.

Other men might playfully tell her to do it herself.

Other men might ignore what she is saying about being cold and just get on with watching TV.

[image: Feminine Request - optional reactions]

Every man can react and respond in whatever way he wants.

However, the way that you react and respond to a woman's Feminine Requests will shape the dynamic of the relationship and directly influence how much respect, sexual attraction and love she feels for you.

[image: Don't be an Order Boy or an MIA Man]

For example: Have a look at this scale here with exaggerated versions of guys on the left and right.

On the left is what I call an Order Boy.

An Order Boy does whatever a woman wants, whether she tells him to do it in a masculine way or she hints at it in a feminine way.

He's always trying to please her and is essentially under her control.

On the right is an MIA Man or Missing in Action Man.

He either doesn't hear her Feminine Requests and understand that she's communicating with him in an indirect feminine way, or he doesn't care enough about her or the relationship to want to act on her Feminine Requests.

In the middle, is what women refer to as a Real Man, which is essentially a good loving man who isn't under her control.

Since he is a good loving man, he will act on some of her Feminine Requests, but he will also exercise the freedom of choice to say no, to playfully tell her to do it herself or to ignore her requests at times.

He's not under her control like an Order Boy and he's not missing in action.

He's there in the relationship, he notices her, he appreciates her, but he's not under her control.

The thing is, while it might be interesting for certain types of women to be with a Missing in Action Man or an MIA man, eventually, they get sick and tired of it and break up with men like that for never really making them feel appreciated and valued.

Alternatively if she doesn't break up with him, what a guy may find is that his woman is always annoyed at him for seemingly no reason.

She's trying to communicate to him in her feminine way and he's not picking up on it.

That may be because he doesn't want to pay attention to it, or it may be because he sees her comments as just comments, not requests.

He doesn't understand that she's trying to communicate in an indirect feminine way to not take on a dominant role in the relationship.

In cases like that, it's not really his fault.

Instead, he's just unaware of the differences between how men and women typically communicate with each other when in a relationship.

In terms of an Order Boy, while it might be flattering for a woman to be with a guy who is willing to do absolutely anything to make her happy, eventually, she starts to lose respect for him because he is essentially under her control.

She may also begin to sense that he's doing it out of insecurity and neediness.

He doesn't really know how to make her happy, he doesn't feel like he's good enough for her and as a result, he tries to do whatever she tells him to do or hints at wanting to hopefully make her happy.

Finally, with what women refer to as a Real Man.

This is about a man being a good loving man, but also exercising the freedom to choose how he responds to her Feminine Requests.

For example: At times, he can playfully mess with her.

She's saying, "Honey, I'm cold, it's cold in here" and he can say something like this, "Ah, you're cold, are you? Hey, have you ever heard of this thing called a blanket? There's about seven of them in the cupboard over there, go get one."

Next example.

"Poor you come here." (and he then gives her a cuddle to make her warm).

Next example.

"Well, get over there and start doing some sit ups and push ups, you'll warm up pretty soon."

Next example.

"Oh, you poor little thing, I'll go and get a blanket for you." (Said playfully as though she is a helpless little girl).

Being the good loving man that he is, at times, he's going to go and get the blanket for her and they can then get on with enjoying the evening together.

However, at times, he will also tell her to go and get it herself and she will respect him and love him for that.

She will respect him and love him for the fact that he is not under her control, he's not her little Order Boy who does whatever she wants or hints at.

Additionally he's not a Missing in Action Man where he doesn't pay attention to what she's saying or what she may want and as a result, ends up making her feel like she's being taken for granted.

Instead, he uses a balanced approach where, at times, he will do what she wants to do with him or he will do what she's hinting at wanting or needing, but he will also exercise the freedom to tell her to do it herself or to playfully mess with her when she's asking him to do something.

[image: She feels like eating something sweet]

Okay, so another example for you is if you're walking down the beach with your girlfriend or your wife and she says something like, "I feel like eating something sweet."

She's most likely hinting at she wants to eat ice cream.

You don't have to know that, you don't have to ask her that, you don't have to act on that like an Order Boy, but you can just pay attention at times and understand that she's making a Feminine Request.

She doesn't want to behave in a masculine way all the time and say, "Alright, I feel like something sweet, let's go get some ice cream. Now, we're going to go to that store over there. Sit down here. I'm gonna go buy some, I'll bring out the ice cream for us."

She doesn't want to take on that role.

Instead, she wants to be in her feminine and allow you to be in your masculine because that is what will make both you and her feel the most amount of sexual attraction and love for each other.

So if you're walking down the beach with your woman and she says something like, "Oh, I feel like eating something sweet," you can say something like this, "Well, you're pretty sweet, I feel like eating something sweet as well. Come here."

Next example.

"You feel like eating something sweet? Me too. I tell you what – when we get home, bake a cake."

Next example.

"If you're hinting at wanting some ice cream, the answer is no, I'm not in the mood. Just kidding, alright, let's go get some ice cream."

What's important to understand is that a woman will make Feminine Requests in a relationship to avoid taking on the dominant role and leaving her feminine and entering into her masculine.

A woman can make Masculine Requests and she will do that even if she is a feminine woman, but when she is trying to maintain her feminine identity and maintain the ideal masculine-feminine dynamic in a relationship, she will lean towards making Feminine Requests.

She will want you to be the man so she can be your girl.

Learn More?

Okay, hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more about all of the important elements that you need to be aware of to keep a relationship together for life, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program you will learn how to make your woman feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

As a result, she will be more attentive, more affectionate, more loving and she will only want to be with you.

Don't End up Feeling Just Like Friends or Housemates. Keep the Spark Alive For Life

One final point that I want to make few in this video, is that most women make Feminine Requests instinctively.

It's part of their natural feminine instinct.

However, many women also consciously do it.

They purposely make Feminine Requests as an opportunity for you to be the man in the relationship.

She doesn't want to take on the role as being the dominant one and have to exit her feminine.

She wants to remain in her feminine way of being so you can remain in your masculine.

When you understand how to create, maintain and build on the masculine-feminine dynamic in a relationship, both you and your woman will always feel more and more attracted to each other over time.

So many couples out there start off feeling attracted to each other and in love and then they end up feeling more like friends, housemates or roommates.

A relationship doesn't have to go down that path.

You and your woman can literally feel more respect, attraction and love for each other over time.

When that is in place in a relationship, it feels amazing.

It's a great time for the both of you and neither have you ever feel like you want to leave the relationship.

You just want to be with each other.

How to Deal With Your Girlfriend on Her Period

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Some women are fine when they're on their period, whereas others can seem a little bit crazy.

[image: How to handle your girlfriend when she's on her period]

They become annoyed, short-tempered and irritated at the slightest thing.

As a man, it's very important that you understand how to deal with your woman when she's on her period, so she doesn't make her bad behavior out to be your fault.

So it doesn't become that time of the month where you need to tiptoe around her and be on your best behavior.

Instead, she becomes accountable for her behavior.

She knows that she has to do her best to manage your emotions and treat you with respect.

In this video, I'm going to give you 6 tips that will save you from a lot of stress, arguments and unnecessary frustration when your woman starts getting her period, or when she's on her period and her behavior and mood starts to change.

Let's begin with number 1...

1. Let her know that you're aware of how the changes in her hormones can temporarily affect her behavior and mood, leading up to and during the first few days of her period

[image: Let your girlfriend know that you are aware that she goes through hormonal changes every month and that it can affect her mood and behavior]

This is a very important fundamental conversation that you need to have with your woman.

She needs to know that you know what is going on.

It also needs to be out in the open so she doesn't end up blaming her behavior on you.

So, this is essentially what happens to most women.

[image: A woman's monthly period cycle]

Days before her period, her estrogen and progesterone levels begin to drop.

As a result, she may begin to feel a bit foggy mentally.

She may also tend to get irritable and annoyed for seemingly no reason.

There is a reason though and that is her changing hormones and how they are affecting her brain and mood.

[image: Menstrual cycle]

On the first day of her period, levels of estrogen, progesterone and even testosterone are low which can lead to her feeling moody, confused and irritated about how she is thinking, feeling or behaving.

She may also lose some self-esteem during this time of the month and feel unreasonably insecure about her body or appearance.

It's during the days leading up to her period and the first few days of that some women can become unusually aggressive, angry and argumentative about things.

Something that her boyfriend would normally be able to say to her, suddenly sets her off and she becomes angry at him.

She throws a tantrum and gets into an argument with him.

Due to the changes in her hormones, a woman can become extra sensitive towards things that she would normally be easygoing about, or would be able to laugh about.

Then all of a sudden, within the first few days of her period, estrogen levels begin to increase once again which, for most women, leads to them feeling happier, more energetic and in good spirits once again.

So, once you've made your woman aware that you are aware of the changes and it's out in the open, she is much more likely then to admit when she is behaving badly leading up to her period and during the first few days of her period.

For example: If she becomes irritated and annoyed at you for no reason, then she is much more likely to apologize to you after she comes to her senses and realizes that it was just her hormones messing with her mood.

However, it's very important that when she does apologize and blame her period for her behavior that you don't jump all over that and start making her feel really bad about it.

Just thank her for saying it and let her know that it's a good thing that she's aware of it.

Then, get on with having a good interaction with each other.

When you approach it in that way and she knows that she's not going to be attacked when she admits that she was behaving badly, then she is much more likely to continue to admit when she is acting up because of her period and she'll become more conscious of it.

She'll become more aware of it and she'll be able to control it more and more over time.

2. Don't let her period become an excuse to treat you badly

[image: Don't let her period become an excuse to treat you badly]

The thing is, leading up to her period and during the first few days of her period, she can experience all sorts of physical discomfort and pain.

For example: She may get headaches, aches and pains in her lower back and hips, an upset stomach, bloated stomach and cramping.

So, it's understandable that she might be a bit annoyed and irritated during that time.

However, it's not an excuse to treat you badly and disrespect you.

If a man lets his woman treat him badly during certain parts of her menstrual cycle, it can become a habit for her in the relationship.

She can develop a habit of behavior of being annoyed with him, being irritable, being short-tempered.

The more he allows that to occur, the less happy the relationship will be.

So, while it's a good thing to be a bit understanding and have some empathy for your woman as she's going through these hormonal changes throughout the month, it's not a license for her to treat you badly.

[image: Her period is not a free pass to treat you badly]

Her period is not a free pass to start screaming at you, yelling at you, being irritable, being short-tempered and just expect you to put up with it.

She has to be able to take responsibility for her emotions around you.

The way to tell your woman that isn't to sit her down and give her a stern talking-to, or demand that she control her emotions at all times.

Instead, it's best to be assertive about it, but be loving and easygoing at the same time.

"Hey, by the way, just because you go through hormonal changes every month, it's not a free pass for you to start being a pain in the butt, screaming at me, starting arguments for no reason and so on. You got to try your best to control your emotions during those times. You've got try."

Saying something like that to your woman, creates a relationship dynamic where she knows that you're being understanding and respectful towards her.

You're still being playful and loving when you tell her that she's got to control herself and be a good woman, but at the same time you're letting her know that she does need to keep herself in line.

The hormonal changes that go on in her body and the subsequent changes in mood and behavior are not a free pass for her to start being a pain in the butt.

She needs to respect you by doing her best to behave well and not be annoying during that time of the month.

3. Don't get moody in response to her moodiness

When a guy gets moody in response to his woman's moodiness around her period, she can end up saying that her bad mood and the arguments they're having are his fault, not hers.

As a man, you've got to be able to control your emotions so your woman can see the clear contrast between her behavior and yours, between her emotional control and yours.

When she sees that you don't lose control of your emotions and become moody when she is being a bit moody, then she can see that her bad mood is as a result of her, not you.

Since her hormones change all throughout the month, you can't expect a woman to be consistent all the time.

Instead, what you can expect is that she gets better and better at being respectful around you, trying her hardest to be on her best behavior and not become too annoyed or irritable leading up to her period and during the first few days of her period.

4. Don't be afraid to laugh at her in a loving way at times

When you're in a relationship with the woman, she has to know that her anger and tantrums do not intimidate you.

If she can see that her anger and tantrums intimidate you, what is she going to do?

She's going to do more of it.

What a woman will do, she will get angry, throw a tantrum and if a man can't stand up to her in a loving way, then she loses respect for him, she loses sexual attraction for him.

She feels like the more dominant one in the relationship.

As a result, it doesn't feel good to her to submit to him sexually.

With this point, I'm saying don't be afraid to laugh at her in a loving way at times.

I'm not saying always laugh at her when she is angry.

If you do that, then she will naturally become more and more angry because she will say that you're not taking her feelings seriously.

The difference here is that you need to have the freedom as a man to not take your woman's outbursts seriously, because she is not in the dominant position in the relationship; you are.

You need to be able to laugh at her as you would laugh at someone who you're not intimidated by when they're throwing a tantrum.

Yet, with your woman, you do it in a loving way.

You still love her, you still respect her, you still appreciate her, but you're just laughing at her little girly outburst.

That's the way you see it.

You're not intimidated by her feminine anger.

So, if your woman gets angry at you and is yelling and screaming for no real reason when she's on her period, here are some examples of how you can laugh at her in a loving way.

Say any of the following in a positive way with a smile, not in an attacking way with bad intentions. You are only joking when saying something like this.*

"Look at you getting all worked up. You love drama, don't you? You love it."

Next example.

"You are one crazy girl, you know that?"

Next example.

"You freaking nutcase."

Next example.

"Whatever, come on, get your butt in the car, let's go."

The thing is, if you went out and asked women how they would want a guy to respond when they're on their period, most woman will say be nice, be patient, don't joke around, stay out of her way, buy her flowers, do nice things for her and so on.

Yet, if a guy approaches his relationship in that way, then his woman isn't going to want to have sex with him very often, if at all.

She's going to feel like she is more dominant than him.

She's going to see that he is intimidated by her and that doesn't turn women on.

What does work is when you are loving and respectful towards your woman, but you also show her that she's not in the dominant position.

You're not intimidated by her.

That is what works.

You need to be able to have that freedom as a man.

Otherwise, you may put yourself in a situation where you're thinking, "Can I joke today? What day is it in her menstrual cycle? Is she leading up to her period? Is she starting to get moody and irritable? Is she on her period? Man, I can't joke today because she started her period."

No.

You shouldn't have to live like that and you don't have to live like that.

Instead, she needs to be able to laugh at herself when she is acting up.

She needs to be able to see that her man respects her, loves her, but doesn't take her outbursts seriously.

He also doesn't appreciate when she is out of line and starts treating him badly as a result of her period.

It's not a time of the month where she gets a free pass to be a pain in the butt.

Over time, she needs to learn to control herself and be on better behavior during that time of the month.

5. Don't use her period as an excuse to blame her for everything

Just because women tend to become more moody and irritable leading up to their period and during the first few days of their period, it's not a free pass for a man to say that everything is her fault during that time.

If a man starts blaming every argument and every bad mood on her period, then it can be very annoying for her especially if she senses that he's blaming everything on her as a way to avoid improving his approach to the relationship.

If she is upset about something and is trying to talk to him about that and he then blames it on her period, it can cause her to feel as though he doesn't think her feelings are valid or that he just doesn't care about her.

6. Be sure to also give her positive feedback on her good behavior to keep things balanced

A mistake that some guys make is that they only tend to comment on their woman's behavior when it's negative.

When she's being a pain in the butt, when she's being irritable or annoying, the guy will then get into an argument with her about that or give her some feedback about it and tell her that he doesn't appreciate it.

Yet, when she's on good behavior, he won't really say anything about that.

He will think, "Well, that's how she should be all the time. So, why should I say anything, it's just normal. A woman should be on her best behavior all the time."

Yet, to encourage a woman to be on her best behavior all the time or as much as possible, you also need to make sure that you make her aware that you're aware of her good behavior.

You don't need to say it all the time, every day, but you do need to make sure that you add it in.

"Hey, honey, thanks for making me a coffee. You're a good woman. Come here."

Next example.

“You’re really much more relaxed and easygoing these days. I like it.”

Next example.

“Now THATÂ I like. I like it when you’re like this. You’re much more kissable like that. You’re much more bangable. You’re copping it tonight.”

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you’d like to learn more about how to maintain a happy, loving, sexually attracted relationship with a woman, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

The approach that I teach to relationships in the program brings out the best in your woman.

It makes her feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

Bring Out Her Good Girl Side

One final point that I want to make for you in this video is that you or your woman can’t control the hormonal changes that she’s going through every month.

Yet, what youÂ CAN do as a man is create a relationship dynamic where your woman feels accountable for her behavior.

She takes responsibility for her part in the relationship.

She doesn’t take you for granted by treating you badly during certain periods of the month.

The thing, is relationships with women are easy when you set and maintain the right relationship dynamic.

A woman who is a pain in the butt to one type of guy, won’t be a pain in the butt to another type of guy.

It’s the same woman, but each guy will allow a certain relationship dynamic which will bring out a certain side of her.

For example: If a guy allows a relationship dynamic to be created and maintained where he has to be on his best behavior during her period, then that’s not going to be fun for him and it’s not going to be fun for her.

He’s going to have to tiptoe around her, be really nice, make sure that he doesn’t say anything to set her off and she’s not going to be having fun because she’s going to be with the man who is intimidated by her and can’t get her to be a good woman to him.

The reality is that women are at their happiest when they’re with a man who brings out their good girl side, who makes them want to treat him well.

That is when a woman is at her happiest; not when a guy is tiptoeing around her, walking on eggshells and trying hard to not say the wrong thing around her.

It’s not what women will go around saying in the media, but if you pay attention to the women who are the happiest in their relationships with a man, it’s going to be a man who makes her feel accountable for her behavior, who brings out her a good girl side and naturally makes her want to treat him well.

How to Get Your Girlfriend or Wife to Lose Weight

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, how can you get your girlfriend or wife to lose weight?

Over the course of being with you in a relationship, she's put on a fair few extra pounds or kilos.

[image: Get girlfriend to lose weight without hurting her feelings]

You want her to go back to the way that she used to be or something similar.

How can you make her feel motivated to lose the weight and to feel happy about doing it, rather than having to get into unnecessary arguments with her where you try to convince her to lose the weight and then, she ends up getting angry at you and it causes problems between you and her?

I'm going to explain all of that for you, as we go through this structured video with 8 tips that I've personally tested in my relationship and have caused my wife to always want to stay in shape and look good for me.

1. Tap into her natural motivation to look good for you

[image: Tap into her natural desire to look good for you]

What you need to understand is that her level of motivation to look good for you is directly linked to her level of attraction for you.

The more attracted she feels to you, the more motivated she will be to make you feel attracted to her so she doesn't lose you.

The best way to understand this is to imagine that you're in a relationship with a woman that you're not very attracted to and you don't care if you lose her or not.

She then starts asking you to put in loads of effort to improve your physical appearance for her.

She starts complaining about your body and saying that you're either too skinny or you're too fat, or you need to put on more muscle and she starts putting pressure on you to improve your body for her.

Now, how are you going to react?

Some guys might dump her on the spot.

Other guys might think, "Well, alright, I'll put in some more effort and see if that will shut her up."

Other guys might think, "Well, I'm not going to put in any effort for this woman. I'm not even attracted to her and I don't care if I lose her."

The guy might then tell her that he likes his body the way it is and he's not going to put on weight or lose weight for her regardless of what she says.

So the point here is that if you want your woman to lose weight, you first have to make sure that she feels enough attraction for you to actually care about maintaining your interest and to not want to lose you.

2. Let her know what you find attractive about her now while also saying that if she did lose some weight, that would look good too

Saying what you find attractive about her now, isn't about being politically correct, being a nice guy or anything like that.

It's got to do with the psychology behind sexual confidence.

For example: When she knows that you find very specific things about her to be sexy and attractive, it's much easier for her to feel confident when having sex with you.

The best way to understand it is to flip the example and think about a skinny guy in a relationship with a woman.

She sometimes grabs at his skinny arms and she says that she finds it unattractive.

She gives him weird looks when she sees him naked and she touches his bony ribs and says, "Gross" and things like that.

Now, some skinny guys aren't going to care.

They're just going to laugh at their woman and say, "You love it. Come here" and get on with being in an intimate relationship with her.

Yet, some skinny guys are going to start feeling insecure.

For example: When the skinny guy is on top of his girlfriend and he's giving it to her missionary style, he's probably going to be feeling a bit insecure about his body.

He may begin to look at her eyes and her facial expressions to try to understand what she may be thinking or feeling.

If she doesn't seem to be enjoying it, he may assume it's because she is turned off by his skinny body.

The same thing applies if a man is in a relationship with a woman and he looks at her weird when she's naked, or when he sees her in her underwear and bra.

Alternatively, if he grabs at her fat or pokes her in the stomach and has a bit of a laugh or makes a bit of a face that shows her that he doesn't like it and so on.

Yes, he wants her to lose the weight and yes, he doesn't find it attractive, but what's important to understand is that she doesn't have to lose the weight if she doesn't want to.

Just like a skinny guy doesn't have to start eating loads of food and going to the gym all the time to build up muscle for his girlfriend or wife.

So, the best way to approach it is in a loving way and with a long-term perspective, rather than in a hateful or spiteful way with a short term prospective.

Approaching it in a loving way with a long-term perspective means that you actually care about how she feels.

You actually care about the consequences of your behavior and actions in the relationship.

You are creating a loving relationship dynamic between you and her that is going to last for life.

In terms of having a long-term perspective rather than a short-term perspective, if you plan on staying with her for life then you don't need to rush her into losing the weight in the next couple of weeks or months.

It may take her six months to get back in the top of shape that you want her to be in.

So, a personal example with my wife...

When I first met her, she was 46 kilos, which is 101.4 pounds.

Yet, at one point in our relationship, she got up to 53 kilos, which is 116.8 pounds.

Now, the thing is, she wasn't really overweight that much, but for her petite frame, it was starting to build up around the stomach area and her cheeks were starting to fill out and so on.

When she has occasionally put on weight during certain parts of our relationship, she has asked me things like, "Do I look fat?" or, "Does this top make me look fat?" or, "Do these pants make me look fat?"

I gave her honest answers like, "You don't look fat. You don't look skinny. You look good."

In terms of the top she was wearing, "No, the top doesn't make you look fat. It looks fine."

The thing is, all the way throughout our relationship, I've always said to my wife that I think she's beautiful and I look at her as being sexy and she knows that.

So, she knows that if she's thinking that she's fat and is starting to feel insecure about that, it's not my fault.

It's not because I've said to her, "You're fat, you need to lose weight."

I've never said that to her.

She has always been the one asking, "Do I look fat? Do I need to lose weight? Does this top make me look fat?" and so on.

When she has asked me, "Do I need to lose weight?" I've given her an honest answer and that is, "You can lose weight if you want to. It's up to you."

That's the reality of relationships.

You're an individual and she's an individual.

You can do whatever you want, but if you want the relationship to work, you're going to do things that bring you closer together, that make the other person happy and make the other person want to stay with you.

So, in terms of number 2 here, let her know what you find attractive about her now, while also saying that if she did lose some weight, it would look good too.

Actually, before I move on to the third tip, I'll give you another example for number 2 to make sure that you really understand it.

Think about an example of where a guy is skinny or overweight in a relationship with a woman and she then told him what she found attractive about him before saying that if he were to put on weight, that would look good too.

So, she tells him that she finds him attractive and sexy because he is confident, charming, makes her laugh, he's charismatic, he's cool to hang around with, he's a good man and so on.

That way, he doesn't have to become insecure about his attractiveness to her.

No doubt, he may develop some insecurity about his skinny arms or his belly if she talks about how it would look good too if he were to lose that belly, or if he would have put on some muscle, but he's still going to feel as though his girlfriend or wife feels attracted to him because she has made that clear.

So, if you want your girlfriend or wife to lose weight and to feel happy about doing it, then make sure that you tell her what you find attractive about her and make it genuine.

Let her sense that you really do find her attractive and that if she were to lose weight, then that would look good too.

3. Don't try to motivate her to work out by talking about the importance of health or telling her how much you care about her health

If a man starts telling his woman how much he cares about her health and how he only wants her to be happy and healthy, she can easily say that she's already happy and healthy.

Additionally for every person out there who follows a strict diet and exercises all the time and is healthy as a result, there is another example of a person who doesn't follow a strict diet, doesn't even exercise and is healthy and doing fine.

When it comes to diet and exercise, a new study comes out all the time that contradicts the previous studies.

There are all these weird diets that people say will work where you don't even have to exercise and where you can eat junk food and you'll be totally fine.

So, if a guy starts pressuring his woman to eat perfectly and exercise all the time because he secretly wants her to lose weight, then she can easily say that she doesn't need to do that because other people don't do it and they're healthy, fine and they have no problems.

4. If you don't find overweight women as attractive as slim women or slender women, then don't pretend to

[image: If you don't find overweight women as attractive as slim or slender women, then don't pretend to]

Some guys find overweight women attractive, no problem.

Yet, most guys don't.

So, if you're one of the guys who doesn't find overweight women attractive and you prefer women who are slender and in shape, then make sure that your woman is aware of that.

For example: You may be watching TV with your woman and she will test you by asking you something like, "Oh, she looks good. What do you think?" about a slim woman and see how you react.

She may then ask you about a certain female celebrity who is overweight and see how you react to her as well.

By the way...

For the men watching this video, you're probably aware that men aren't allowed to talk about women being overweight in the media or on social media and if they do, they get a whole bunch of hate.

So, if you're enjoying this video so far, make sure that you show your support by clicking like, otherwise I'll probably get a whole bunch of dislikes from overweight women who are angry at me for talking about a woman needing to lose weight.

Okay, so back to the example...

Say for example you're sitting on the sofa with your girlfriend or wife and she points out a female celebrity that used to be slim, but has put on weight and is now overweight.

She asks you what you think of her and she says, "Oh, she looks good. What do you think?"

If you think she looks good as an overweight woman, then go ahead and say that, but if you think that she looked better when she was slender and she wasn't overweight, then say that.

"No, she looked way better when she was slim. She is a bit too overweight now. I don't like it."

Alternatively, "Oh, she still looks pretty cute, but I prefer her when she was slimmer."

Since I've had those type of conversations with my wife, she knows that I don't find overweight women as attractive as slender women, or slim women.

She knows that.

I've never had to say when my wife put on a few extra kilos, "Oh, you're looking fat. I don't like that."

I've never had to say that to her because she knows that I find women more attractive when they are in shape.

When you're in a relationship, it's important not to be politically correct with your woman by telling her that you think overweight women are just as attractive to you as slender women, if you don't actually think that.

You've got to be real so she knows the deal.

You're not saying that she's fat, you're not saying that overweight women can't be attractive to other men and you're not saying that you're going to dump her if she doesn't lose weight ASAP.

Instead, you're answering her questions about other women in an honest way, so she understands what you prefer.

5. Workout as something fun to do together, while understanding that it might take some time for her to develop a liking for it

[image: Make working out fun, without any pressure to succeed]

Make working out fun, easygoing and without any pressure to succeed.

Just do it for the fun of it, rather than being like a drill sergeant and trying to push her to do more and more.

Just let her have fun coming to the gym with you or going for a run with you, but understand that she may not be consistent initially.

Most people aren't.

If she doesn't like the idea of going to a gym, you should initially be open to going for bike rides together, going for a run at the local park, going for walks along walking trails on the weekend, trying a group exercise class or doing something like boxing.

Essentially, you want you and her to genuinely be able to have a fun time as you get into the habit of being active together.

As you may know, most people who get a gym membership or decide that they're going to start working out don't actually follow through on it for years and continue it on for life.

Many people will feel motivated initially and then they will stop, they will give up.

If you want your woman to remain motivated to continue to work out and stay in shape, it's best to link it to you and her having some fun together.

Don't make it about, "We have to go to the gym to lose weight or to stay in shape. We have to go for this bike ride because we ate pizza the night before."

Don't link it to something that feels like work.

Link it to you and her having fun together.

Now, it doesn't need to be a whole bunch of fun where you're jumping around the gym and saying, "Wow, I'm having so much fun," or you're going for a run together and high-fiving and laughing all the way.

Instead, just go and do something active and focus on having a good time together, focus on being in an easygoing relaxed mood and being able to not take things too seriously and just have a good time together.

When a guy doesn't approach it in that kind of way and instead approaches it in a way where he tries to make her feel guilty for not coming to the gym all the time, or make her feel like she's not doing good enough and she needs to work out harder, then she will naturally start to build up some feelings of resentment.

She will start to feel like it's too stressful and as though he's putting all this pressure on her because he wants her to lose weight and he's not being loving about it.

Once again, the best way to understand the example is to flip it around and think about a woman trying to force her guy to go to the gym and put on some muscle and she's putting loads of pressure on him at the gym.

She's looking at his skinny arms, she's grabbing onto them and saying, "Come on, you need to build up more muscle" and forcing him to go to the gym all the time.

He's not going to enjoy that and he may dump her as a result.

So, just link working out and being active to having fun together, being relaxed, being easygoing.

You don't have to go overboard and have loads of fun, but be in a good mood, be in an easy going mood, be relaxed about things, be lighthearted about things and don't put too much pressure on yourself or on her.

6. Don't be too serious about food initially

[image: Don't be too serious about food initially]

It's not reasonable to expect someone to go from eating fun comfort foods and having a fairly relaxed lifestyle where they're not very active, to then change and only eat the right foods at the right time, work out consistently and work out intensely from now on for the rest of their life.

That's not reasonable to expect.

So, don't try to get her to be perfect about her diet right now.

Instead, allow her the time to feel motivated to want to cut out some sugar from her diet, to stop eating so much before she goes to bed, or to make sure that she isn't snacking a lot during the day.

Don't expect her to do it right away.

Instead, allow her to naturally start to want to do it because when she sees some results of working out and starts to enjoy working out with you or going by herself, then she will most likely become more interested in improving her diet.

For example: If a couple eats out often and the woman is in the habit of ordering a sugary soda drink like a Coke or something like that, then it's going to be best for her to drink a glass of water instead.

She's going to cut out a lot of sugar and she will naturally start to lose weight as a result of that.

Yet, she may not want to do that all the time right away.

So, her man shouldn't be looking at her with disappointment, picking on her and talking down to her if she decides to order a Coke every now and again.

He should allow her to eat and drink whatever she wants, while also giving her the chance to naturally start to decrease the amount of food that she's eating and decrease the amount of times that she orders a sugary drink that is going to add more weight to her body.

By the way...

In terms of not being too serious about food initially, if a guy is in shape and he has muscles, but he also tends to eat burgers and pizzas and that's fine for him, then he doesn't need to stop eating that around her.

He doesn't need to be that serious, where he is trying to make sure that he's not being a bad influence around her.

She needs to take care of herself.

She needs to be responsible for what she's eating.

So, if a guy happens to eat a burger every now and again or a pizza, or he enjoys some sort of comfort food and he's able to stay in shape because he lifts heavy weights and does high-intensity workouts, then he can continue doing that.

Yet, he needs to give her the chance to naturally start to decrease the amount that she eats when she's around him when he's eating a burger, a pizza or some other type of comfort food.

7. Understand that sometimes things can get in the way of the progress that she has been making

For example: You and her go on a holiday and end up eating and drinking lots, or you attend a bunch of parties or birthdays, you go to yearly traditional days with family that involve a lot of eating, you have a few too many drinks together, she gets sick with the flu or she gets injured in some way or another.

All of that can temporarily add weight to her body.

Additionally, sometimes she probably won't be in the mood to go and work out and you need to be okay about that.

So, you need to let her get into the habit of working out, enjoying it and being more consistent, but you also need to be lenient and not be so serious about her sticking to a rigid workout plan and having to go all the time.

For example: If you ask her, "Hey, honey, I'm going to go work out tonight. Are you coming?" and she says "No," you need to be okay about that.

You have to give her the chance to feel a bit guilty for not going.

If she feels motivated to make you feel attracted, then she will feel the pressure to go the next time or the next.

Just don't make the mistake of getting angry at her, or getting into an argument with her about her not being consistent.

That will backfire her.

Instead, allow her to naturally feel the pressure of needing to look good for you.

If you have the right dynamic in your relationship where she respects you, feels attracted to you and she looks up to you, then she will naturally want to impress you.

She will naturally feel that pressure to look good and maintain your interest in her.

8. Get her to have realistic expectations so she doesn't lose motivation

For example: She goes to the gym, works her butt off for an hour or so, comes home, looks at herself in the mirror and nothing has changed.

She goes the next time, works out on the treadmill for an hour and a half, comes home, looks at herself in the mirror and nothing has changed.

The reality is that a person usually needs to work out for weeks or months, before they start noticing real changes in the shape of their body.

So, get her to understand in advance that it may take a couple of weeks or months to see real noticeable changes that she's going to be very happy about.

In the meantime, just make sure that you make working out be something that is fun, enjoyable, relaxing and easygoing for the both of you.

If you do that, then you and her are going to enjoy being active together, getting out and doing things together.

Before you know it, you and her will be in the habit of working out together and because she's doing it so regularly and because she feels motivated to look good for you, she will almost certainly begin to lose those kilos, lose those pounds and get back into the type of shape that you like seeing her in the most.

Okay, I hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn my best relationship techniques for making a woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you, be totally in love with you and want to impress you and maintain your interest, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

Being Forced to vs. Wanting to [image: You get to choose what body shape you want]

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that you don't have to improve your physical appearance in response to the demands of your woman when in a relationship.

You are an individual and if you want to be slim, you want to have an average body type or you want to have muscles or you want to be overweight, then you can do that.

She can't force you to be a certain body shape physically.

Likewise, you shouldn't be trying to force your woman to be a certain body shape for you.

Instead you create the type of relationship dynamic that naturally makes her want to look her best for you.

She wants to impress you.

She doesn't want to lose you.

5 Common Relationship Mistakes That Lead to Break Ups

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Have you ever been in a relationship with a woman that you were really attracted to and really in love with?

You wanted the relationship to work, but it didn't.

It fell apart.

No matter what you tried to do to fix the relationship and make it work, you couldn't make it work.

You and her ended in a breakup.

If that has ever happened to you, or if you're going through that at the moment with a woman, then it's probably because of one of the following common relationship mistakes that lead to breakups.

1. Taking each other for granted

[image: Taking each other for granted]

The relationships that you have seen, where a couple is still attracted to each other, in love and happy 30, 40, even 50 years into the relationship are the ones where they don't take each other for granted.

They continue to love the other person, respect them and appreciate their presence in their life.

Unfortunately, what happens for a lot of guys is that they end up allowing their woman to take them for granted, or they make the mistake of taking her for granted.

So, to talk about the woman taking them for granted, this often happens when a guy is putting in more effort into the relationship than the woman is.

He's trying hard to impress her and live up to her standards and she doesn't feel the same motivation because she doesn't feel attracted to him in the same kind of way.

A guy like that will find that no matter what he does for his woman, it's never enough.

It never pleases her in the way that he wants it to please her.

In other words, she doesn't look at him with the attraction, respect and love in her eyes.

She just sees him as a bit of a burden, a bit of a nuisance and she has to put up with him.

Now, sometimes that's because the woman is a horrible woman who doesn't deserve to be in a relationship with him.

If that's the case, then he should dump her.

However, it can also happen when the woman is a good woman and would treat her man well, but the man is creating a relationship dynamic that makes her feel like she is way more valuable than him, even though she isn't.

They are equals, or he might even be a more valuable person than her and she should be feeling lucky to be with him.

Yet, based on his approach to the relationship where he is trying to win her love and hopefully, be good enough, it gives her a false sense of superiority over him and she ends up taking him for granted.

In other relationships, a guy doesn't allow his woman to take him for granted, but he ends up taking her for granted.

He may have started out being a good guy, treating her well and making her feel loved and appreciated.

Yet, over time, he stops being the good guy that he was at the start and he begins to change.

He thinks, "She's so in love with me, the sex is great, she's lucky to have me. I can treat her however I want to. She just has to put up with it."

In yet another example: A guy will start out being a good guy, continue being a good guy, but he will take his woman for granted in another way.

He will expect her to put up with the fact that he is becoming increasingly insecure, jealous and needy.

He's still being good to her, but he's becoming increasingly jealous, needy and insecure.

He expects her to put up with that and just understand that the reason why he's being so insecure, jealous and needy is that he loves her so much.

She has to understand that.

She's just got to deal with it.

Finally, in another example, a guy starts out being a good guy, continues being a good guy, doesn't become insecure, jealous, or needy, but he doesn't want to work on the relationship problems between them.

For example: There's no spark between them anymore and he expects her to just put up with that.

From his perspective, he believes that relationships have a honeymoon period and that there's no way for a couple to be attracted to each other and in love with each other 5, 10, 15, 20 years into a relationship.

Yet, the fact is, that it is possible and easy for a man and a woman to keep the spark alive and be in love for life.

Millions of couples all over the world are able to do it and many men and women know that.

They know that it's possible.

They know that they can be happy and in love for life.

So, in today's world and in the future, if a man or a woman finds themselves in a relationship where they're being taken for granted, they can decide to leave the relationship, unlike in the past.

In the past, a couple had to get married and stay together for life, even if they were unhappy or miserable in the relationship.

They had to stay, even if they were being treated badly or being taken for granted.

They essentially had no choice because it was absolutely shameful to get divorced.

However, these days, relationships are a choice.

If a relationship works and the couple is happy and in love, they will gladly choose to remain together for life.

On the other hand, if a couple can't figure out how to get their relationship to work, it will usually end in a breakup or a divorce regardless of how good things were in the beginning.

So, the solution is to create a relationship dynamic where neither of you take each other for granted. Both of you continue to love each other, respect each other and appreciate each other's presence in your life.

When both of you feel loved and appreciated, then it's all good.

The relationship feels like a benefit to both of you rather than a burden.

Neither of you want to lose the other person.

You're both in love with each other, you both feel appreciated and it's all good.

Yet, when a relationship gets to a point where the man is taking the woman for granted, or the woman is taking the man for granted, or both of them are taking each other for granted, then the relationship is doomed to fail.

2. Ineffective communication

[image: Ineffective communication]

You may have heard that great communication is very important in a relationship.

That's even a bit of an understatement.

It's absolutely essential.

The way that you approach communication in your relationship can cause you and her to feel in love with each other and happy, or it can cause you and her to feel disconnected from each other, resentful, angry, annoyed and frustrated.

Ineffective communication can ruin a perfectly good relationship.

The couple was a great match, the relationship was working, but then they got into misunderstanding after misunderstanding and it led to arguments, disconnection and feelings of unhappiness in the relationship.

Some examples of ineffective communication are:

1. Not addressing issues before they turn into a bigger problem. When issues aren't addressed and they're swept under the carpet and avoided, it can end up causing you and her to feel resentful towards each other and eventually blame each other for the problems in the relationship. As a result, you can end up getting into heated emotional arguments that didn't need to happen.
2. Bringing up issues at the wrong time. When you and her are arguing and you are feeling angry or irritated, it's not the time to bring up lots of random things that she is doing wrong, that you don't like about her, or that you would like her to improve on. It's better to bring those things up in a lighthearted, easy-going way and even have a laugh about it with her when both of you are in a good mood, rather than unloading personal attacks on her when you happen to be feeling angry. If you tell her what she's doing wrong, or what you'd like to improve when you and her are in a good mood and you do it in a lighthearted, easy-going way, then she is more likely to be open to improving yourself and even be able to have a laugh about herself and where she has been going wrong in the relationship.
3. Not using a lighthearted, easy-going approach to communication. If one of you or both of you is way too serious about what the other person says, then it can end up feeling like you're walking on eggshells around each other. Say one word wrong and an argument breaks out. It's a stressful, unhappy experience. Yet, when both of you know that it's perfectly fine not to take everything so seriously and you start getting used to being like that, you can quickly begin to build a relationship that is relaxing, loving and forgiving rather than stressful, hateful and unforgiving.

Okay, the next common relationship mistake that can lead to a breakup is...

3. Giving her too much power

[image: Giving her too much power in the relationship]

This can often happen when a guy believes that if he lets his girlfriend or wife get her way more often than he gets his way, then she's going to be happier.

This particular area of a relationship can be confusing for a lot of guys because many women will demand more power.

They will act as if they are unsatisfied with the amount of power they have in the relationship.

They'll complain about things and expect a guy to do a lot for them, but it won't actually be about wanting the power.

In most cases, it's just going to be a test of the guy's confidence and ability to be the dominant one in the relationship.

She wants to see whether or not he is going to submit to her will and start doing whatever she wants him to do in order to stay with her, or if he has the masculinity and the confidence to laugh at her when she's out of line, to not take her seriously and to not crumble under her pressure.

The relationships that you see where the man is clearly still the man in the relationship and the woman is clearly still the woman, are the ones where the man remembers that the woman doesn't need to be the more dominant one.

A relationship can exist where the woman is more dominant than the man, but it's not going to be the most happy relationship on the planet.

Additionally, sex is going to be on her terms and he's going to have to try to get her to want sex.

She's going to be in the dominant position in the relationship, so she's not going to feel good about submitting to him.

On the flip side, when the man maintains his dominance (or if he's lost his dominance, he reclaims his dominance in the relationship), then a woman naturally feels good about submitting to him.

She naturally feels good when she touches him, when she hugs him, when she is close with him.

Unfortunately, what happens for some guys is that they get with a woman that they really love and they really feel attracted to, so they see her as being so special.

The guy wants to do everything for her and give everything to her because she's so special to him.

Yet, in the process of behaving in that way, where he's essentially doing whatever she wants and trying hard to make her happy, he ends up giving her too much power, which causes her to lose respect for his lack of dominance and masculinity in the relationship.

In cases like that, the woman usually ends up breaking up with the guy and saying that it's not his fault, it's her, not him, or that she loves him as a friend, but isn't in love with him.

Alternatively, she says that wants some time to find herself and so on.

Essentially, what she's saying is that she can't look up to him and respect him as her man and as a result, she doesn't feel that sexual romantic attraction for him.

By the way...

One thing to point out here, is that the solution here is not to take away all of a woman's power and give her no power in the relationship and be completely dominant (i.e. tell her to sit, rollover, play dead, shake hands, good dog).

That approach doesn't work either, unless, of course, the woman has some real issues and she likes to be treated in that way.

What works, is where the man and woman respect each other, they love each other and they appreciate each other, but the man is in the one up position in terms of dominance.

They are not equal.

The woman is not way down there.

The woman is not way up there.

The man is here, the woman is there in terms of dominance. (Watch video at the top of this page for a visual demonstration of this).

When the dominance levels are equal, they are going to feel more like friends so the sex is going to dry up.

When the woman is all the way down, sure, she's going to feel some sexual attraction for a while, but she's going to get sick of being treated in that way and she's eventually going to leave.

When the woman is all the way up there in terms of dominance, she's not going to feel good about submitting to a guy who isn't more dominant than her.

When the man is in the one-up position in terms of dominance and the woman is here, then she's going to feel loved, respected and appreciated.

She's also going to feel really good about submitting to the dominant man that she is in love with, is attracted to, respects and appreciates.

4. Forgetting what is attractive to a woman

[image: Forgetting what is attractive to a woman]

When in a relationship, a woman feels most attracted to you when she sees evidence of your confidence and emotional masculinity.

You can display this to her based on the way that you talk to her, touch her and how you generally behave and act around her.

Unfortunately, some guys tend to forget what is truly attractive to women and when they're spending a lot of time with their girlfriend or wife, they end up adopting some of her behaviors, some of her mannerisms and some of her feminine ways of thinking and feeling.

Here's a bit of an obvious example here to illustrate the point where a guy starts crying a lot like a woman, or when he's watching TV with this woman, he's scared and reacting to what he's seeing on the TV and essentially behaving like a woman.

Now, not every guy goes to that extreme, of course.

Instead, what many guys do is they forget what is attractive to a woman, what actually sets off feelings of sexual attraction inside of her.

For example: He might forget that just because they're in a relationship, it doesn't mean that her attraction to confidence goes away.

So, if he becomes insecure and stops being the confident guy that she initially fell for, then she's naturally going to start losing attraction for him.

Now, some guys might ask, "Well, what about women? Sometimes women put on weight in a relationship and they stop making themselves look physically attractive for their men. They forget what is attractive to a man."

Well, if you want your woman to feel motivated to make yourself look attractive to you, then you've got to make sure that she is actually feeling attracted to you, so she feels like she's got something to lose.

She's got to be able to see that you're the sort of guy (i.e. confident, able to flirt, able to make her feel attraction as you're talking to her, not a pushover) who could easily attract another woman because you know what is attractive to a woman.

She knows that if you and her were to break up, you would easily be able to attract another woman and she would end up feeling hurt and left behind as a result.

She then feels the motivation to make herself look attractive to you, so she doesn't lose you.

As a result, what happens is that both of you are being attractive to each other, so both of you feel attracted and both of you feel good about the relationship.

5. Trying to suppress the other person's emotional development

[image: Trying to suppress the other's emotional development]

This can often happen when a guy gets into a relationship with a woman who was shy and a bit unsure of herself at the start, but over time, she becomes more and more confident.

She starts to believe in herself.

She gets to the point where she has the confidence to say, "No" to him and the confidence to feel good about herself without needing him to make her feel good about herself.

She starts becoming independently confident.

She's no longer fully reliant on his words and actions to make herself feel worthy and confident as a woman.

As a result, her behavior will start to change.

She will stop being as needy as she was at the start.

Now, some guys are able to develop along with that and not worry that she's no longer being as needy as she was at the start.

The guy still believes in his attractiveness to her.

He maintains his confidence and he loves the fact that she is growing up and becoming more confident as his woman.

Yet, for some guys, they don't like it when a woman starts becoming more emotionally independent and independently confident.

The guy complains that she no longer makes him feel loved in the way that she used to.

She has changed and she seems selfish now to him.

If the man can't deal with her developments as an individual and tries to hold her back emotionally, then they will get into continuous arguments.

Eventually, she will start to feel like a break up is necessary.

On the other hand, when a man is able to continue developing emotionally and ideally, is able to surpass his woman and become more confident and emotionally secure than her, then she feels a deep respect, attraction and love for him.

[image: Growing together as a couple]

He becomes the man that she looks up to and respects, which causes her to treat him better, trust in him, be more loving and affectionate and want to impress him so she doesn't lose him.

As a result, both the man and the woman enjoy a better relationship experience and neither of them wanted to end.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more about how to increase your woman's feelings of respect, attraction and love over time, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn communication and attraction techniques that I don't teach on YouTube.

These techniques bring you and her closer and closer together.

Your feelings of respect, sexual attraction and love increase over time.

Both you and her fall more in love and you enjoy the relationship more and more over time.

Building a Relationship That Works, Lasts and Makes Both of You Happy

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that your relationship with a woman can either be one of the things that causes you to feel so happy and fulfilled by life, or it can be one of the things that causes you to feel a lot of frustration, stress and unhappiness in life.

It really depends on how you approach it.

Now, the thing is there are some women out there who are horrible women and don't deserve to be in a relationship with you.

If you get into a relationship with a woman like that or you're in a relationship with a woman like that, dump her and find a new one.

However, if you're in a relationship with a good woman that you love and feel attracted to, then you can make the relationship last for life.

You can create a relationship dynamic where both you and her feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with each other over time.

When you create a relationship dynamic where both you and the woman are in love with each other, respect each other and feel attracted to each other, then you and her can go on to experience an amazing life together.

Both of you feel confident in the relationship and you know that it's going to work.

You and her are going to last, so you have the security of knowing that you can build a future together and a life of happy memories that you're going to cherish.

Alternatively, you can get into a relationship with a woman that you feel attracted to and you love and you can potentially make one of the many common relationship mistakes that end up leading to a breakup.

It really depends on how you approach it.

As I said, some women out there are horrible women and you shouldn't try to make a relationship work with them, but if you find yourself in a relationship with a good woman that you love and feel attracted to, then you can create a relationship dynamic that makes both you and her feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with each other over time.

As a result, there's no need for a breakup.

Instead, you go on and enjoy your life together.

How to Fix a Relationship That is Falling Apart

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

How can you fix a relationship that is falling apart?

Your girlfriend is on the brink of breaking up with you, or your wife wants to separate or file for divorce.

How do you actually fix that?

How do you make her want to be in a relationship with you and for the relationship problems to come to an end, for you and her to have a new beginning where the relationship feels better and better every day from now on?

[image: Stop relationship from falling apart]

Well, what you need to do, since you can still interact with her and contact her and you possibly still live with her, is to stop the negative chain reactions while you still can.

Essentially, everything that you say or do in the relationship sets off a positive or negative chain reaction effect.

Here's an example of a negative chain reaction:

Getting into regular arguments usually leads to anger, blaming and maybe even personal attacks of the other person's character that result in more and more distance between you and her.

As a result, both of you feel less and less happy with the relationship.

Eventually it's one of the things that adds up to her wanting to break up with you.

A positive chain reaction effect is regular laughter.

Regular laughter makes both of you feel more relaxed and happy in the relationship.

It makes you feel closer and enjoy each other's company more.

It's one of the things that keeps a relationship together.

Another example of a negative chain reaction effect is where a man is jealous and insecure.

As a result, she loses respect for him, she stops feeling attracted to him and begins to fall out of love with him.

As the man notices that she is losing interest, he becomes more insecure and possibly even more jealous.

She then loses more respect for him. He then becomes more jealous and more insecure.

It then leads to a breakup.

On the flip side, a positive chain reaction effect is where a man is trusting and confident.

She respects his emotional strength, feels attracted to it and loves him for it.

He notices that she wants him more and more and is committed to him.

It then becomes easier and easier for him to fully trust her and be confident that she wants to be with him.

As a result, it's one of the things that keeps the relationship together.

So, if you want to fix a relationship that is falling apart, you need to focus on creating positive chain reaction effects, so both of you can breathe a sigh of relief and feel some hope that you can work things out and that the relationship is going to get better and better over time.

What's an example?

Well, imagine that a couple has been together for five years and the woman has gotten into the habit of asking her man, "Have you put the trash out yet? Have you put the garbage out yet?"

He tends to forget, or he doesn't like doing it and it tends to create an argument between the both of them, before he then reluctantly puts the garbage out.

Alternatively, if he's the type of guy who keeps forgetting, then he may make the mistake of coming up excuses, where he says, "Oh, I was watching this on TV and I forgot," or "I was busy doing this or that. I'll do it now" and he then rushes to do it because he doesn't want to get into 'trouble' with her.

He doesn't want to see her get angry at him.

Now, in this example, the woman cooks and cleans for them, but the man has some responsibilities such as taking out the garbage and mowing the lawn, for example.

Yet, he tends to not want to do that, or he tends to forget about it and that sets off negative chain reaction effects in the relationship.

She gets frustrated at him for forgetting his responsibilities because she tends to take care of her responsibilities on a consistent basis.

Alternatively, if he doesn't like doing it and tends to be in a bit of a mood if she asks him, "Have you taken that garbage out yet?" then it will set off a negative chain reaction between them.

She will see that a simple task like taking out the garbage, is such a big deal to him when she's taking care of other tasks around the house.

So, what should the guy do?

How can he set off a positive chain reaction effect around the subject of taking out the garbage or taking out the trash every week?

What could he do?

Well, obviously he can just start taking the garbage out and not make a big deal out of it.

However, that's not really going to set off a very enjoyable positive chain reaction.

Instead of just taking on that responsibility and doing it from now on, which is fine, he can instead turn it into something that brings them closer together.

For example: He can start creating a more lighthearted attitude in the relationship, where they can laugh about things rather than taking everything so seriously and getting into battles with each other.

For them, it's usually a case of, "I do this and you've got to do that!" and it becomes a tit for tat war between them and becomes an ongoing battle, which isn't fun for either of them.

So, the man can start to break that pattern by injecting some humor and making light of the situation.

Here are some examples of what he could say if his woman came home and she asked him, "Have you put the garbage out yet?"

"No, no I was waiting for you to come home."

She then asks, "Why?"

"So I can put you in the garbage as well. Come here."

[image: What to do when your relationship is falling apart]

He then goes over and tickles her and hugs her and has a bit of a laugh about it and says, "Yes, I'll put the garbage out. Now, what are you cooking for dinner?"

Another example, "No, no, I haven't put it out. It was too heavy for me. I need you to lift it because you're such a strong woman. You have bigger muscles than me, so come on, go put the garbage out."

He is saying that in a joking manner and if he's smiling and having a bit of a laugh, she's going to be able to see that he's joking.

They can have a laugh about that together and he can tell her that yes, he put the garbage out and now, "Get your butt in the kitchen make some food."

Another example response to her asking, "Have you put the garbage out yet?" is "No. Why would I do that? That's a woman's job. Go put the garbage out. Make yourself useful."

He can then have a laugh to let her see that he's joking and he can tell her that yes, he put the garbage out and then tell her to get her butt in the kitchen and make some food.

Finally, another example is before she asks the question, "Have you put the garbage out?" he can say something like this, "Before you ask me if I put the garbage out, the answer is no."

She then seems a bit stressed and annoyed and asks, "Why?"

He then says, "Just kidding, look at you getting all stressed out. You little stress head...give me a hug."

He then gives her a hug, tells her that he put the garbage out and now it's time for her to get her butt in the kitchen and make herself useful.

[image: Create a happier, more easygoing vibe to bring you closer together]

By approaching it in that way, he starts to set off more positive chain reaction effects in the relationship.

She starts to feel happy again.

She starts to be able to laugh and be more lighthearted about things, rather than having to get into a war with him, a battle and end up feeling frustrated and as though she doesn't want to be in the relationship anymore.

By the way...

That's not the only thing you can do to fix a relationship that is falling apart.

I can teach you so many techniques that you can start using right away.

There are so many techniques you can use now and there are techniques that you can use over the coming months and even years and decades in your relationship.

If you'd like to learn the secret of keeping a relationship happy, attracted and in love over time, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn communication techniques that I don't share on YouTube that will bring you and her closer and closer together.

You and her will be able to breathe that sigh of relief and start to feel relaxed and happy in the relationship again.

She will start looking at you with the kind of love in her eyes that she had in the beginning.
She will begin to want to treat you better, respect you more, be affectionate, be attentive and be loving.

Change Your Approach to Change How She Feels

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is something that really simplifies how relationships work.

When you change your approach, she changes how she feels.

When her feelings start to change and become more positive, her behavior changes.

She may feel frustrated with you at the moment and she may be tired of working on the relationship, but you can get rid of those negative feelings inside of her.

You can change your approach to her and her feelings will literally begin to change.

She will start to fall back in love with you and the relationship will start to feel happy, easygoing and enjoyable once again.

When Your Girlfriend Loves You, But Isn't Happy

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, what should a man do if his girlfriend loves him, but is telling him that she is not happy?

Well, one drastic solution to the problem that can work for some guys, is to dump her before she dumps him.

Teach her a lesson by making her realize that she has a great man and should be grateful and happy about that.

However, what else can a guy do?

What can a guy do to make his girlfriend feel happy with him, without having to go through a breakup and without having to put loads more effort into the relationship?

That's what I will talk about in this video.

Firstly, one thing I want to point out is that it's not your responsibility as a woman's boyfriend to make her feel happy about herself and her life.

[image: When she loves you, but isn't happy]

Yet, your approach to the relationship will influence how happy she is.

You're not responsible for her happiness, but the approach that you take does have an effect on how happy she is with you, the relationship and her life.

So, let's have a look at why a woman will love her boyfriend, but won't be feeling happy with him and the relationship.

Here are some of the reasons why...

The relationship feels more like a friendship to her. She loves him as a friend, but isn't in love with him in a romantic way.

He has given her too much power over him, to the point where she feels like the more dominant one in the relationship.

Alternatively, he has taken away her freedom by being way too controlling, jealous or wanting to always spend every spare moment with her.

Another possible reason why a girlfriend will love her boyfriend, but won't be happy is that she is tired of arguing with him all the time and just wants a more easy-going, relaxed, relationship.

Another reason, she notices that they are stuck in a rut and aren't really making much progress in life, or are just doing the same old things all the time.

Alternatively, she has been making a lot of progress in her career and getting promoted over the years, but he is still basically stuck at the same level that he was at when she first met him.

Another reason why is that the sexual spark has faded away and the guy just doesn't know how to get it back.

Finally, another reason why is that she thought she wanted to be in a committed relationship for life, but now feels like she wants to be on her own, or to enjoy single life like her girlfriends.

What's important to understand is that many women marry their high school sweetheart and stay together for life.

They are happy in a relationship together for life.

Additionally, many women settle down in their 20s and stay together with their husband (or with their boyfriend if they don't get married), for life.

My wife is an example of this.

I met her when she was 20 and I was 35 and we immediately got into a relationship.

We eventually got engaged, we got married, settled down and now we have twin girls.

Even though my wife has girlfriends who are still single and living that lifestyle, she isn't interested in that.

She is happy in a relationship with me.

That's not because I'm Mr. Perfect.

Instead, it's because of the relationship dynamic that I have created.

She feels like my girl.

I'm the man, she is the woman.

She looks up to me and respects me.

The thing is though, I wouldn't have had a happy relationship with her, a happy engagement period and now an amazing marriage if I used a different approach to the relationship.

Still the same person, still the same body, but a different approach to the relationship.

For example: If I didn't make her feel like my girl, if I didn't take on the role in the relationship as being the dominant man, then we would have a different relationship dynamic.

If I created a relationship dynamic where I was chasing her affection, trying to live up to her standards and putting up with bad behavior, then we would have a completely different relationship dynamic.

So, what I want you to understand is the most important thing in a relationship is the dynamic that you create.

[image: Making your girlfriend happy to be with you]

You can create a relationship dynamic that makes your woman look up to you and respect you, feel happy to be with you, feel lucky that she has a man like you.

Alternatively, you can create a relationship dynamic that makes your woman look down on you, feel like she has probably made a mistake in being with you, that she might be happier with someone else and so on.

It's still you, still the same person, but the dynamic is different.

It all comes down to the way that you approach interactions with her, how you behave around her and how you get her to behave around you.

An example of this, is where a guy is hesitant and a bit nervous and unsure of himself when initiating physical contact with his girlfriend or wife, when initiating some affection and trying to get something going between them in a sexual way.

If the guy is being hesitant and she can see that he is worried about her potential reaction to how he's going to touch her, or how he's touching her, then she's going to feel turned off by that.

She's going to feel like the more dominant one in the relationship.

She's going to feel like he is trying to live up to her expectations.

He's trying to be on his best behavior around her and he's hoping that she lets him initiate affection and be physical with her.

On the flip side, is a guy who believes in himself and he confidently, lovingly initiates touch with his woman.

She senses his confidence, she senses the fact that he isn't afraid.

As a result, his confident loving touch feels completely different than if he were to be hesitant, insecure and unsure of himself as he was doing it.

It feels completely different to her.

It's the same guy, the same body, but he's using a different approach with her.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more about how to attract your girlfriend and make her fall more and more in love with you over time, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you use the techniques from the program, she will feel the happiest she has ever felt in life.

One of the reasons why is that you will bring out her good girl side.

She will gain pleasure and happiness out of being a good woman to you.

She will want to treat you well, be attentive, be affectionate, be loving and so on.

When you use that approach in a relationship, it's so much easier for you and it's so much more enjoyable for the both of you.

She Can Be Truly Happy With You

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is to point out the fact that it's not as if you are incapable of making her happy in a relationship with you.

You are.

However, you have to be willing to try different things in the relationship to get the result that you want.

It doesn't mean that everything you are doing at the moment is wrong.

It just means that some of the things that you're saying and doing around her are causing her to feel turned off, to fall out of love with you and so on.

You are capable of making her feel happy in the relationship and you are also capable of bringing out her good girl side, so she gains pleasure and happiness out of being a good woman to you.

How to Make Your Girlfriend Feel More Attracted to You

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

How can you attract your girlfriend?

What's the secret?

Do you have to put in loads more effort into the relationship?

Do you have to be even nicer than you are to her already?

No.

The secret and the one main thing that you need to do is to give her the kind of attraction experience that you really want, but is most likely not telling you about.

Here are a couple of examples to help you understand the attraction experience.

So, with regards to a woman's boyfriend...

What she really wants: Him to be more dominant, so she can feel like his girl.

What she actually gets: Him being neutral like a friend and sometimes being passive around her, which makes her feel like a friend to him and at times, makes her feel like the more dominant one in the relationship.

Another example...

What she really wants: Him to be more confident, so she can respect him and trust in him as the emotionally strong one in the relationship.

This allows her to feel like his girl because she feels protected by a strong man.

What she actually gets: Him being insecure at times, or being insecure very often.

As a result, she can't trust in him to always be stronger than her emotionally.

This can make her feel like she needs to man up for the both of them, so she can get that feeling of safety and protection that women look for when in a relationship with a man.

Another example that isn't related to a guy's issues is based on a guy's thoughts about how a relationship should take place between a man and a woman.

For example: A guy will be getting along well with his girlfriend and they'll be able to talk about anything, they'll have a great connection, but the one thing that will be missing is her feeling butterflies in her stomach around him.

Her feeling that sexual attraction for him.

Her feeling like she is his girl.

Yet, from his perspective, he feels like everything is fine.

He gets along with her well, they're able to go out and watch movies together and have a great night together and come home and have some sex occasionally and things go pretty well.

The relationship isn't that unhappy.

That type of relationship can last for a while, but usually only as long as the initial lust of a new relationship.

Yet, sometimes a boyfriend and girlfriend will stay together for a year, or two, or maybe even a bit more, even though they kind of feel more like friends than anything else.

She doesn't feel like his girl.

The dominance between them is basically even.

Alternatively, she feels like the more powerful one in the relationship.

If the attraction experience that she really wants is to feel like his girl because he is a confident, dominant man, then she's going to start to feel unsatisfied if she just feels like his friend.

At some point, a woman may complain about that and say that she's not happy in the relationship, or something is missing, or she doesn't feel butterflies in her stomach around him, or she's starting to feel like maybe she wants to be on her own for a while and so on.

Alternatively, just like some men do when they're not happy with a woman, she might go and cheat on him and then break up with him.

Or, she might just go straight for a break-up by saying that she's not happy and has realized that even though she has tried to keep the relationship together and has tried to work on things, the spark just isn't there.

She doesn't feel like she's in love with him.

So, if you want to attract your girlfriend and you want to make her be in love with you romantically, then it's essential that you understand the type of attraction experience she really wants and then allow her to experience that.

However, you shouldn't ask her for instructions on what you need to do to make her feel attracted to you.

Why is that?

Well, if a woman has to explain to her boyfriend how to be more manly around her and he then starts doing those things that she said, she may see his attempts at being more manly as just being an act.

He's just doing whatever she wants him to do.

This can make her feel like a mother figure in his life or like his big sister, which immediately ruins her feelings of sexual attraction for him.

The thing is, a woman doesn't want to be a man's guide in life on how to be a man.

She doesn't want to have to continually teach him how to be a man.

She wants him to figure it out for himself and then just start doing it.

She doesn't need him to discuss it with her and start saying, "Oh, I'm going to be more manly now" or, "Look at me, I'm being more manly."

She just wants him to get on with doing it, if that's the thing that he's lacking in the relationship, of course.

For example: If a boyfriend is already fairly manly around his girlfriend and she feels that and she likes it, but the area that he is lacking is emotional openness, then that's an area that he needs to work on.

Some guys tend to get confused about being manly and think that it means they can't tell their woman that they love her.

They can't enjoy an intimate moment with her and give her compliments and express how they feel emotionally because that would make them look less manly.

Yet, it doesn't.

If a manly type of man tells a woman that he loves her and that she's special to him, then she's going to appreciate that and she's going to be really excited about it.

However, if emotionally sensitive needy man is telling a woman that he loves her on a regular basis and saying how special she is because he hopes that that will make her love him more, then she's not going to enjoy that.

She's not going to fall more in love with him because he needs her so much.

Women fall more in love with you when they feel that romantic sexual attraction for you and if you want to make your girlfriend feel that, you have to give her the type of attraction experience that she really wants, but probably hasn't been telling you about.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more about how to attract your girlfriend and make her fall more and more in love with you over time, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

In the program, you will learn my best ever techniques and methods for making a woman feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

The approach that you will learn to relationships brings out the best in her.

It makes her want to treat you well, be affectionate, be attentive, be loving and only want to be with you.

She Will Change When She Feels Like She's Got Something to Lose

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that when you make her feel more attracted to you by giving her more of the attraction experience she really wants, she will then start to feel like she has got something to lose.

She will realize how much she feels for you and will feel motivated to want to treat you better.

However, sometimes a woman will test the waters.

She'll test to see if she does have to put in more effort or not.

She'll test to see whether or not you're going to continue to let her get away with not treating you as well as you want to be treated.

Even though she feels more attracted to you and knows that she would be heartbroken and would want to get you back if you did break up with her, she may try to continue to be a bit lazy in the relationship (i.e. not be as attentive, loving, affectionate).

This is why it's absolutely essential for you to understand what really attracts women, so you can always be confident knowing that you are making her feel attracted without needing her reassurance of that.

You don't need her to be telling you that she feels attracted and making it obvious, because not every woman will.

Every woman is different.

Some women are a bit more feisty, some are a bit more difficult, some have more difficult tests that they put their guys through and so on.

You need to understand how a woman's attraction really works, so you know for sure that what you're doing is making her feel attracted.

It's sort of like how we men are attracted to a woman's tits, or to her cleavage when she's showing it. Men can pretend that they're not finding her attractive and can look away and pretend that they haven't even noticed her cleavage, but the reality is that they will be feeling attracted to it on some level.

There are things about attraction that are fundamental and always work apart from a few exceptions. They're always going to be a small percentage of men who don't find tits attractive and good for them, but for the most part, most men are going to find tits attractive.

Likewise, most women find confidence and dominance attractive in a man.

A man doesn't have to be overly confident just like a woman doesn't have to have huge tits, but a man does need to have confidence and depending on the girlfriend that you've got, you need to have a certain level of confidence that is going to be different compared to if you were with another woman.

Some women require a man to have a very high level of confidence, whereas other women are happy with their man having a fairly good level of confidence.

You need to understand what type of attraction experience your girlfriend wants and then give that to her.

When you do that, she is definitely going to feel attracted to you and as a result, you won't have anything to worry about.

You will know for sure that your girlfriend is attracted to you.

You can then get on with enjoying your life together as a happy couple, who are mutually in love and want the relationship to stay together.

How Often Should You Tell Your Girlfriend That You Love Her?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, how often should you tell your girlfriend that you love her?

Well, while there is no set amount of times that you should tell her per day, per week, or per month, there is an effective time to say it and that is when you genuinely feel it and when you have a relationship dynamic where she is in love with you.

For example: If a boyfriend is in love with his girlfriend and he's continually telling her that he loves her and it's genuine, but she doesn't love him and she's not in love with him, then him saying that is going to cause problems in the relationship.

She's going to start to realize that he loves her way more than she loves him.

She's going to realize that she's not feeling like she's in love with him.

She doesn't feel those butterflies in her stomach around him.

As a result, she may begin to feel that she's going to have to break up with him and try to find a new guy that she can actually be in love with.

The ideal situation that a woman wants to find herself in, is when she is in love with you so much that she wants to tell you that she loves you and make you feel loved.

When she's making you feel loved, she feels happy in the relationship.

[image: How often to say, "I love you" to girlfriend]

She feels like the dynamic between you and her is right.

It's what she wants.

She wants to be in love with a man.

She wants to be good to him.

She wants to feel that motivation, that desire to make him feel loved.

[image: She gets butterflies in her stomach when around him]

She gets butterflies in her stomach around him.

He means more to her than pretty much anything else, or anyone else in her life.

So, that's the ideal situation that a woman wants to find herself in.

However, sometimes a woman isn't comfortable saying the words, "I love you."

Sometimes she's a bit insecure about that.

Sometimes she has some issues from her childhood.

Sometimes she's had her heart broken from a previous relationship, where she really put herself out there and put her heart on the line and she got her heart broken.

Other times, she's worried that if she says "I love you" too often, it may make her boyfriend start to feel a bit arrogant and take her for granted.

The boyfriend may feel like he's gotten her to fall in love with him and he doesn't really need to do anything anymore.

He's got her wrapped around his little finger.

So, all sorts of problems can arise from your side, or her side simply based on saying "I love you" or not saying it.

To avoid all the problems, the best approach to take is to cause your woman to feel so attracted and in love with you that she really wants to tell you that she loves you and she wants to make you feel loved.

When you have that type of relationship dynamic and you occasionally tell her that you love her, when you genuinely feel like saying it, then she feels excited.

She feels lucky to be hearing that from you.

She feels lucky to be the girl that you're in love with.

So, there doesn't need to be any counting of how many times you've said "I love you" and there doesn't need to be a focus on who should say it next and who said it last.

Instead, create a relationship dynamic where a woman feels lucky to be hearing those words from you.

When that type of relationship dynamic is in place, you can say "I love you" whenever the heck you feel like it.

Of course, don't go overboard with it though.

Saying it every day can be overkill and can turn it into something that a woman takes for granted.

She hears you say "I love you" every day and it becomes, "I love you" and then she responds, "Yeah, I love you too."

It's basically just a routine thing that doesn't have much emotion or excitement attached to it.

It's important to understand that because even though it might seem like a woman wants to hear it every day, women thrive on the feeling of anticipation in a relationship.

Anticipation (noun): A feeling of excitement about something that is going to happen in the near future. Expectation or hope.

Women love to be thinking about their guy and wondering what he's feeling, what he's thinking.

A woman wants to be in a position where she feels motivated to be good to you.

She feels motivated to be on her best behavior, to make you like her and love her more and more over time.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more about how to increase your woman's feelings of respect, attraction and love over time, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn the ultimate relationship dynamic that causes your woman to feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

Her feelings do not fade away.

Instead they become stronger and stronger over time.

A Truly Loving Relationship

[image: A truly loving relationship]

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that when you create a relationship dynamic where both you and your woman are totally in love with each other and you then say that you love her and she says that she loves you, or she says it first and you say it second, it's an amazing feeling.

It's an amazing experience to be part of a mutually loving, respectful and attracted relationship where both of you really want to be with each other.

However, what's important to understand as a man is that the ideal type of relationship dynamic for a woman is where she feels like she is more in love with you than you are with her.

She then has to try harder to make you love her more.

She has to put in more effort into the relationship.

She has to be on her best behavior.

She has to present herself well physically.

She has to make you love her more and more over time.

[image: Making your girlfriend love you]

As long as she knows that you do love her, but she can see that there is even more of your love for her to find and discover, then it becomes a lifelong quest for her to find that, discover it, capture it and experience it.

Love is an unlimited thing so you're not going to run out of it.

Just don't give her the impression that what you're giving her now, the love that you feel for her now is at 100%.

Don't let her sense that your love has reached its limit.

Based on your behavior and the way that you interact with her, give her the sense that there is still more of your love for her to discover.

If she wants to discover that, then she has to impress you.

She has to win you over more and more over time.

What Should You Expect From Your Wife?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, what should you expect from your wife?

Well, you can expect a lot of things from her, but whether or not she does them depends on the following 2 things.

1. The relationship dynamic you create.
2. The amount of respect attraction and love you make her feel.

[image: What to expect from wife]

When you make a woman fall madly in love with you and you create the type of relationship dynamic that causes her to want to be good to you and impress you, then she's going to feel motivated to live up to your expectations.

Of course, not every man out there is experiencing that in his relationship or marriage with a woman.

It really comes down to the 2 things I mentioned:

1. The relationship dynamic you create.
2. The amount of respect attraction and love you make her feel.

So, what can you expect from your wife?

What type of treatment can you get from her?

What type of behavior can you get from her?

Let's have a look at what a man can expect and what many men, including myself, get from their wife.

For her to be:

- Loving and kind.
- Affectionate and warm.
- Enjoyable to be around.
- Willing and happy to cook and clean.
- Supportive of your dreams.
- Loyal and reliable.
- Sexy and desirable.

The list goes on and you really can expect those type of things from your woman.

Yet, a woman is only going to feel motivated to live up to those expectations if the relationship dynamic is right and if you are making her feel an increasing amount of respect, attraction and love for you over time.

To help you understand what I mean by the relationship dynamic and how important that is to your woman's behavior and attraction and respect and love for you, here are some comparisons.

A man wants his woman to be loving and kind, affectionate and warm, enjoyable to be around, willing and happy to cook and clean, supportive of his dreams, loyal and reliable and sexy and desirable.

Yet, he gives her too much power over him, so, she doesn't respect him.

Since she can't look up to him and respect him, she doesn't feel motivated to do all of those things for him.

She doesn't feel like there is a need for her to impress him and treat him well.

A contrast example to that is where a man is in a relationship with a woman and he doesn't allow himself to get walked all over.

He still allows her to have a voice and he respects her opinion.

Yet, he is the more dominant one in the relationship.

She looks up to him and respects him.

She respects his opinion, she respects his decisions and it feels right for her to do that.

This is a very subtle, but important area of your relationship with a woman.

Some guys allow themselves to get walked all over and they hand over all of their power to the woman, which results in the woman not respecting them.

Some guys don't allow their woman to have any power and they become too controlling.

Other guys are too neutral and it becomes 50/50 between themselves and their woman.

He isn't the more dominant one.

Instead he is neutral around her.

It's basically 50/50.

They're housemates, they're partners in life and there is no real difference in the relationship in terms of who is more dominant.

In those neutral relationships, a man and a woman end up feeling more like friends.

They're basically working towards goals together, they live together, they pay bills together and there isn't that sexual spark that occurs when the man is more dominant than the woman.

Alternatively, a man doesn't create a neutral relationship dynamic and instead makes the mistake of creating a relationship dynamic where he is chasing his woman's affection.

He is chasing her love.

He is pursuing it and when he doesn't get it, he may then sulk, he may complain, get angry and she's not going to be able to respect him based on that.

She's going to see that he is losing control of his emotions, he doesn't know how to deal with the situation and he's becoming emotional and moody as a result.

Alternatively, some men don't get moody about it.

Instead, they think, "Alright, well, if she doesn't want to be affectionate towards me, I'm just going to treat her like a friend. I'm not going to chase her affection, I'm not going to look needy or desperate, I'm just going to get on with living my life and if she shows me some affection, then great. If not, then I'm not going to chase it. I'm just going to be talking to her and acting like a friend around her and that's it."

Yet, by approaching it in that way, the man creates a relationship dynamic that is neutral and is based on being friends.

It's based on them getting along in a friendly way, being housemates, working towards goals together and he doesn't end up getting what he wants.

As a result, he may grow to resent his woman.

He may eventually get really angry at her if he initiates some affection and she doesn't reciprocate, or she doesn't seem interested.

So, a better relationship dynamic happens when a man stops being so neutral around his woman and starts being more masculine around her.

This change happens in the way that he talks to her, in the way that he touches her, in the way that he looks at her, in the way that he initiates some affection.

He doesn't do it in a hesitant way.

He doesn't do it as though they are friends.

He does it as though he is a confident, masculine man.

She then feels the kind of sparks for him that she felt in the beginning and as a result, it's a much better relationship dynamic for the both of them.

Then, if the man understands how to make his woman feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with him over time in the relationship, he can expect more and more from her and she will want to do it.

She will feel motivated to live up to his expectations because she will know that she has a man that is very difficult to find.

She will know that it would be pretty much impossible for her to get out there and find another man like him.

The way that she feels in the relationship makes her girlfriends jealous.

They talk about their boyfriend or husband being boring, the spark has died, but she's able to say, "No, we're in love, the spark is there. It's getting better and better all the time."

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more about how to get your wife to feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

In the program, you will learn the relationship dynamic that I use with my wife, to get her to be loving and kind, affectionate and warm, enjoyable to be around, willing and happy to cook and clean, supportive of my dreams, loyal and reliable and sexy and desirable.

I've taught this relationship dynamic to many phone coaching clients from all over the world and they've used it in a boyfriend-girlfriend relationship, or in a husband-wife relationship.

Men contact me all the time to say how amazed they are at the changes in their girlfriend or wife.

She stops being distant and unloving and starts being loving, affectionate, attentive and enjoyable to be around.

If you want that to continue and to get better and better over time, you just have to implement the techniques that you will learn in Make Her Love You For Life and it will happen.

Your relationship literally gets better and better over time.

Getting Her to Treat You the Way You Want to Be Treated

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that while it's fine to expect a lot from your wife, it's not something that you need to demand of her by getting into an argument with her or pointing out her flaws.

The best way to get your wife to treat you with the respect, love and affection that you deserve is by creating a relationship dynamic that naturally produces that type of behavior from her.

You don't ever have to force your wife to be a certain way.

Instead, you simply bring out the best in her by creating the right type of relationship dynamic and making her feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

A man can do that at the start of a relationship, heÂ can do it a few years into a relationship and he can do it decades into a relationship.

You can always change the relationship dynamic and start making your woman feel more respect, attraction and love for you.

When you do that, her behavior will change.

She will start wanting to live up to your expectations.

She will feel motivated to do it.

How to Be a Challenge in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

How can you be a challenge in a relationship with a woman, where it becomes a lifelong quest for her to win your affection, to win you over, to impress you?

How can you put yourself in that position, rather than being in the position that a lot of guys find themselves where they're trying to get their girlfriend or wife to love them more and more and nothing that they do seems to work?

The dynamic never seems to change.

She doesn't look at him with love in her eyes, want to win his affection or be good to him in the ways that matter to him.

He doesn't ever get to experience that with her.

He may have experienced it at the start, but the relationship has changed.

She no longer looks at him in that way.

There are so many examples that I can give you of how to be a challenge in a relationship with a woman, so she is trying to win your affection win you over and impress you.

In this video, I'm going to give you four examples.

Let's begin with number 1...

1. Don't worry about what she is thinking or feeling from moment to moment

[image: Don't worry what she's thinking from moment to moment]

Women feel more attracted to a man who stops thinking about them moments after a conversation has ended.

They don't feel attracted to a guy who is talking to them and then worries about what he has just said and how that may have affected how she feels.

For example: A guy who asks questions like, "What are you thinking?" or, "What does that look mean?" from a place of insecurity where he's trying to figure out what she's thinking.

Does she love him?

Does she feel attracted to him?

Is she into him in that moment?

What is she thinking?

What's she feeling?

The thing is, it's fine for a man to ask questions like that if he's asking it from a place of confidence; if he's doing it from a place of confidence.

For example: If he's sitting next to his girlfriend or wife, has just been flirting with her and she gives him a bit of a look, he can then say something like this.

“Hey, what’s that look all about? Someone’s feeling a bit horny, aren’t they?”

Or something like this.

“What was that look for, huh? What are you trying to say? You want to jump on me right now? Come here.” (Watch the video at the top of this page to hear the tonality used and see the body language expressions that go along with the words).

That type of interaction between a boyfriend and a girlfriend, or a husband and a wife is totally fine.

That’s going to create a spark of attraction.

That’s going to be fun for them and so on.

Yet, if a man is asking questions about what a woman is thinking, or why she looked at him in a certain way from a place of insecurity, then it’s not going to be fun for either of them.

The man is essentially placing too much importance on the random fluctuations in a woman’s mood.

The random subtle changes in her body language are throwing him off.

He is unsure about his position in her life.

Does she feel attracted to him?

Is she losing attraction for him in that moment?

What’s going on?

What is she thinking?

Why is she behaving like that all of a sudden?

He’s concerned, he’s worried, he’s insecure.

So, when a woman is in a relationship with a man who is constantly trying to win her affection, attention and win her over and is worried about the fluctuations in her mood and body language, then it’s not a challenge for her.

She can see that her man is coming at her 100% of the time with full interest and trying to work out what she is thinking from moment to moment.

In other words, she is a challenge for him.

He is in the position where he is chasing, he is pursuing.

The thing is, if a man wants to have that type of relationship with a woman, he can do that.

A man can do whatever he wants to do.

Yet, if a man wants to be in a relationship with a woman who is pursuing him, being affectionate towards him, being loving towards him and trying to win him over, then he needs to allow her to be in that position, rather than taking the position of the chaser and pursuer by worrying what she is thinking, trying to understand her, trying to figure out what she’s thinking from moment to moment.

When a guy takes the approach where he’s trying to figure out his woman’s thoughts and feelings from moment to moment, day to day, week to week, month to month and so on, he can end up thinking that his woman is crazy or bipolar.

One day she’s like this and the next day she’s like that.

One moment she’s smiling and happy, the next moment she’s pushing me away and she’s sitting on the other side of the couch.

What’s going on?

Why is she like this?

As a man, what you need to understand is that you don't need to follow a woman's change in mood from moment to moment, minute to minute, hour to hour, day to day and so on.

If a man follows a woman's changing moods, is constantly thinking about it and concerned about how she's behaving, then the woman is going to get frustrated.

She's going to see that her man is looking at her as the leader between the dynamic between him and her.

She doesn't want to be the leader where the man is following her moods.

A woman wants to be in a situation where a guy can be unreactive and reactive, depending on what he wants to do, rather than always being reactive to her changing moods and behavior.

So, part of being a challenge is you reacting if you want to react and not reacting when you don't want to react.

It's about you being in control of your emotional state, rather than her being in control of your emotional state and you constantly following her changing moods, trying hard to make her happy, keep the peace between you and her and so on.

Okay, the next one, number 2...

2. Make her feel motivated to improve and to impress you

[image: Make her feel motivated to improve and impress you]

A mistake that some guys make is to not expect their woman to improve or to impress them.

A guy doesn't want to put that type of pressure on his woman.

He doesn't want to make her annoyed.

He doesn't want to make her feel pressured and potentially then leave him, or get angry at him.

He's seen her when she's throwing a tantrum.

She also may have threatened to break up with him at one point, so he doesn't want to push it.

He doesn't expect her to improve anything, or to try to impress him because he feels like she is the more valuable one in the relationship, so he needs to be careful, otherwise he's going to get dumped.

Alternatively, some guys go to the other extreme where they demand that their woman improve.

The guy demands that she is more affectionate.

The guy demands that she is nice and sweet all the time, rather than being a little bit difficult at times to test his confidence.

He doesn't want any part of that.

She has to be sweet, docile and do what he says at all times, otherwise, he's going to get angry at her.

Both of those approaches don't work.

With the first approach, the woman doesn't feel like there is any challenge and she takes the guy for granted.

She's bored of him and it usually results in a breakup or cheating.

With the second example, they get into fights all the time.

The woman doesn't feel respected.

She feels like her man is insecure, he's too emotional and it becomes very difficult to sustain a relationship.

If the guy goes too far and becomes too angry at her, too controlling and too aggressive, she may get to the point where she breaks up with him and just wants to get away from him.

So, what is the solution?

Well, what you need to do is give her the feeling that she has got something to lose.

If she doesn't try to improve herself and impress you, she could lose you.

You don't need to make her feel that way by threatening to break up with her.

Instead, you do it in a loving way where you make her feel increasingly attracted to you as the relationship continues.

She feels so much respect, attraction and love for you that she realizes it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to find another guy like you out there.

She knows that she has found a guy who makes her feel amazing and she has got something to lose now.

She needs to improve herself and impress you, otherwise you may lose interest in her.

3. Don't let her control you with ridiculous rules

[image: Don't let her control you with ridiculous rules]

If a man puts himself in the position where he's trying to win over his girlfriend or his wife, he's trying to win her affection, he's trying to live up to her expectations and standards, then she is going to come up with what I call ridiculous rules.

For example: She may say to her boyfriend, "You can pat me on the butt, but you can't squeeze me on the butt" or, "We can sit next to each other on the couch, but you have to sit over there" or, "We can text, but only text me from 10:00 PM to 11:00 PM" and so on.

Ridiculous rules.

If a guy listens to her ridiculous rules and starts to abide by them, he becomes less and less of a challenge for her.

She can essentially control him because he is trying to win her affection.

He is trying to win her love.

He is trying to live up to her expectations and standards.

He's worried about potentially losing her.

Now, that doesn't mean that every request that a woman comes up with in a relationship is ridiculous.

It's just the ones that are ridiculous such as, "You can pat me on the butt, but you can't squeeze me on the butt" or, "We can go to the movies, but I'm never going to watch an action movie with you. I'm only going to watch a romantic comedy or a cartoon."

If a woman comes up with ridiculous rules like that, a man needs to be able to laugh at her.

He needs to be able to not take her ridiculous rule seriously.

He doesn't need to be taking her seriously and thinking, "Wow, I need to abide by her rules now, otherwise I'm going to lose her."

So, how can a man respond?

Well, some guys might think that a man just needs to put his woman back in her place and say, "Hey, we're going to watch whatever movie I decide on. I'm the man. You come along with me, end of story!"

Yet, that's not done out of love and it's not going to work in a long-term relationship or marriage.

Instead, what a man can do is say something like this.

"Yeah, whatever. Look, we'll watch a romantic comedy or a cartoon tonight, but next time, we're going to watch an action movie. Next time we go to the movies, it's action."

Now, if the woman says no to his idea of watching an action movie the next time, he simply needs to say, "Okay, no movie tonight. Let's just stay at home."

He doesn't need to abide by her ridiculous rule.

He doesn't need to take it seriously.

He also doesn't need to become angry at her, get into an argument and try to convince her to please let him watch an action movie the next time.

Instead, he has said to her "Cool, we'll watch a romantic movie tonight or a cartoon or whatever, but next time we're going to watch an action movie."

He's being mature about it.

He's being a loving, respectful man, but he's also letting her see that he's not following her ridiculous rule of, "Hey, we're only ever going to watch romantic movies or cartoons at the cinema."

By the way, with the ridiculous rule where a woman says to her boyfriend or husband he can pat her on the butt, but not squeeze her on the butt, he can say something like this to her, "Whatever. No squeezing of the butt, but patting of the butt. I'll tell you what, from now on, all you're getting is butt squeezes from me, come here."

They can then have a laugh about that together and in most cases, a woman is going to respect her man for not taking her ridiculous rule seriously.

However, some women are a little bit more feisty and some are a little bit more stubborn, so in that moment a woman might say that she's serious and that she only wants butt pats, but no butt squeezes.

Additionally, in a worst-case scenario, a woman might even say to her boyfriend or husband that if he continues to squeeze her butt, then she's going to break up with him.

In that case, he can then jokingly, lovingly say something like this to her.

"Oh, poor you! You got your butt squeezed. Imagine this, we break up and you go and talk to your girlfriends about how we've broken up and they ask you what happened and you say...he squeezed my butt. He squeezed my butt! I told him to pat it, but he squeezed it."

Absolutely ridiculous.

Yet, sometimes a woman will come up with ridiculous rules in the relationship because she's testing how much her man will actually put up with, how much of her BS he will take seriously, how much power she has over him.

Will he stop taking her BS seriously?

Will he be a bit of a challenge for her, or will he always be trying to live up to her standards and expectations and follow her increasingly ridiculous rules on how he needs to behave around her?

The next example of how to be a challenge in a relationship with a woman is to...

4. Let her win you over about certain things

[image: Let her win you over about certain things]

For example: A girlfriend says to her boyfriend or a wife says to her husband, "Let's go out and eat Italian food tonight."

The guy doesn't immediately have to say yes.

He can say yes if he wants to, if he's in the mood for eating Italian food, but if he's not in the mood for eating Italian food that night, he can say something like this, "Well, I've actually been in the mood to eat Indian tonight, but I'm open to your suggestion about Italian. What have they got on the menu that you think I'd like?"

She then has to win you over in that moment and tell you about the garlic bread that they have, or the bolognese pasta that they have and how you like carbonara or whatever.

She has to make you want to go out and eat that, rather than you always being agreeable with her and going along with what she wants to do.

Learn More?

Okay, so those are a few of the many ways that I can teach you to make your woman want to impress you, want to win you over, want to be good to you.

If you'd like to learn more about how to get your woman to respect you, feel sexually attracted to you, be in love with you and always try to be winning you over, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn the ultimate relationship dynamic that causes your woman to feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

The spark doesn't die out.

It doesn't fade away.

It just gets stronger.

Make Her Feel Motivated to Be an Even Better Woman For You

[image: Make her feel motivated to be an even better woman for you]

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that there's nothing wrong with a man impressing his woman or trying to improve himself to be a better boyfriend or husband for his woman.

There's nothing wrong with that.

However, if you want to have a relationship dynamic where your woman is being affectionate and loving towards you and treats you the way she treated you at the start, then it's important for you to be a challenge for her to win over.

It's important to make her feel like she has something to lose if she doesn't try to impress you, if she doesn't improve herself and continually become a better woman for you.

It's great to have a relationship where the man and the woman are improving and they're becoming a better and better couple over time, but the best type of relationship dynamic is where the woman feels more need to impress you and improve herself to win you over, to win your affection, to make you love her more and more.

That type of relationship dynamic results in your woman cuddling into your arm as you walk along somewhere, cuddling into you on the couch or the sofa, initiating affection and sex when you're in the bedroom.

It makes her want to be close to you.

It makes her want to experience moments with you.

It makes her want to find more and more of your love that you have for her.

By creating that type of relationship dynamic, you always feel respected and wanted.

You feel loved and appreciated and as a result, it's so much easier for you to love and appreciate her.

It's the ideal type of relationship dynamic that makes both you and her the happiest and most in love with each other.

Relationship Advice For Men

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The way that you approach your relationship with the woman can end up causing it to be a very stressful and frustrating experience for you, or an easy and enjoyable experience for you.

So, in this video, I will talk about some of the mistakes guys make that cause a relationship to become stressful and frustrating for them and what you should do instead to make it easy and enjoyable.

Let's begin with number 1...

1. Creating a relationship dynamic based on the fear of getting dumped, usually leads to it happening

[image: Creating a relationship dynamic based on the fear of getting dumped or cheated on, usually leads to it happening]

For example: A guy gives his woman too much power in the relationship and allows himself to be walked all over by her because he fears getting dumped if he doesn't let her get her way.

On the flip side, another guy doesn't allow his woman to have any power or say because he fears getting cheated on or dumped if he doesn't control her.

In both cases, the guy is acting out of fear and that's not the way to have an easy, enjoyable relationship with a woman.

That's going to cause a relationship to be stressful and frustrating.

In the first example, where a guy is letting a woman walk all over him and doing whatever she wants to do and giving her all the power, that's going to be very frustrating for him because no matter what he does for her, it's never going to be enough.

She's never going to truly respect him, feel attracted to him and be in love with him.

Instead, she will see him as a bit of an annoyance, a burden and as someone that she's with, but isn't quite sure about.

She is turned off by him, she is frustrated around him and she may or may not know why.

In cases like that, a guy's biggest fear is getting dumped or cheated on and that's what usually ends up happening to him because his woman just doesn't feel like she's in love with him.

She can't respect him and she doesn't feel enough attraction for him, so it usually ends with her cheating on him or dumping him.

With the other example, some guys go to the other extreme, where they don't give their woman any power and they walk all over her.

The guy doesn't allow her to have any say, he tries to control her, he is very jealous and protective because he's worried that she might cheat on him or leave him if he lets her out of his sight.

In cases like that, the woman feels smothered by his neediness and turned off by his insecurity.

She doesn't respect him.

She doesn't feel attracted to him and she can't remain in love with him.

So, if you want to make a relationship with a woman easy and enjoyable, you have to let go of your fear.

You have to let go of the fear of potentially being left or cheated on, because if you focus on being left or cheated on, it will change your behavior in a negative way.

You will start worrying about things that you don't need to worry about.

You will stop behaving in ways that are uncharacteristic of you (e.g. cool, laid back, easygoing, relaxed), or you may become jealous, controlling, needy and so on.

Behaving in those ways isn't attractive to women and only pushes them away.

If you want to attract a woman to you and keep her with you, then you have to let go of your fear.

You have to know that you are good enough for her and know that you and her are becoming an increasingly better couple over time, so there is no reason for her to leave you.

Yet, how can you become an increasingly better couple over time?

How can you make her feel increasingly attracted to you?

How can you make her feel like she doesn't want to leave you?

Well, it's definitely not about doing more and more for her.

It's definitely not about putting loads of work to the relationship.

That is a frustrating, stressful way to approach relationships.

You do not have to do that.

On that note, let's discuss number 2...

2. Putting way more effort into the relationship than a woman does, isn't the way to get her to fall more and more in love with you

When a relationship first starts out and a couple is falling in love, having sex and enjoying each other's company, a guy will usually feel confident about his position in the woman's life.

He will look at her and say that she wants to be with him.

He will feel confident about that and as a result, he'll be enjoying the relationship.

Yet, somewhere along the line, the woman may begin to test him by pulling back some interest and seeing how he reacts.

Does he become insecure?

Does he start sucking up to her and try to get her to show love to him the way she used to by doing more and more for her?

Does he fall into that trap, or does he understand that the way to get a woman to fall more and more in love with him isn't about doing more and more for her?

Instead, it's about bringing out her good girl side, making her want to be good to him, making her respect him, treat him well, be affectionate, be attentive and more importantly, for her to enjoy doing that.

[image: Get her to enjoy being a good girl for you]

That is what really works with a woman.

That is what makes her fall more and more in love with you because pretty much every other guy that a woman has met cannot make her behave in that way for very long.

It's very easy to have a woman behave that way at the start of the relationship, but getting her to behave in that way 2, 3, 10 years, 20 years into a relationship; that is what makes a woman fall more and more in love with a guy.

When he makes her feel motivated to treat him well, to be attentive, to be good to him and she actually enjoys it.

That is what works.

3. Relationships are not hard work

A common phrase that some people say when referring to their relationship and how they've managed to make it work and keep it together is "Hard work...a lot of hard work. Relationships are hard work. You have to put in loads of hard work."

For them, that is true because they're using an ineffective approach.

For example: A guy takes his woman's tantrums too seriously.

He takes her tests too seriously.

She starts testing his confidence by being a little bit difficult at times and he takes it too seriously.

He takes it personally.

He gets annoyed with her.

He gets into arguments with her.

[image: Avoid creating an unnecessarily stressful relationship experience]

That's an ineffective approach and it leads to a frustrating, stressful relationship.

An effective approach that leads to an easy enjoyable relationship is to not take a woman's tests seriously.

Now, that's not to say that a man shouldn't take anything that his woman says seriously.

Instead, what I'm saying is that when a woman is acting up and being a bit of a pain in the butt, teasing him, trying to put him down and make him feel insecure, a man doesn't have to take that seriously.

He doesn't have to take it personally.

He doesn't have to get involved in the drama.

He can laugh at her.

He can turn it into a joke.

He doesn't have to take it seriously.

Men who are in control in their relationship with a woman don't take her BS seriously.

I say BS because when many women are asked what type of guy they really want to be with and they list off qualities, they say things like, “A man who doesn’t take my BS seriously” or, “A man who doesn’t put up with my BS.”

Now, that’s not to say that a man should treat his woman badly, put her down, get angry at her or anything like that.

Instead, what I’m saying is that a man doesn’t always have to take a woman’s drama seriously.

He doesn’t have to get dragged into drama.

He can laugh at her for being a bit of a drama queen, or just for fun, he can briefly get involved in the drama and turn it into something for them to laugh about.

He doesn’t have to take it as a personal attack.

He doesn’t have to start getting emotional with his woman.

He doesn’t have to put in loads of hard work and tiptoe around to her to hopefully not set her off, to hopefully not make her feel annoyed.

He doesn’t have to take that approach to the relationship.

He can take a much more relaxed approach and not take her BS seriously.

For example: A bit of BS behavior from a woman where she doesn’t want her man to take it seriously, is if they’re deciding where to go and eat that night or what type of food to eat.

He might suggest eating Chinese, or Indian, or something like that and then she might say something like, “You always come up with stupid ideas. I don’t want to eat that. I hate Indian food. I hate Chinese food. Your ideas are stupid.”

At that point, a man can get angry at his woman, get frustrated and get into a pointless argument with her and he will have a stressful, frustrating relationship.

Alternatively, he can decide not to take her fake BS seriously.

So, if he didn’t take it seriously, he get say jokingly something like this, “Okay then Miss Smarty pants, what ideas have you got then?” or, “My ideas are stupid. No, no, no. You don’t like Chinese food because you’re not cool. Only losers don’t eat Chinese food. You’re a little loser” or, “Alright, so you don’t want to eat Chinese, you don’t want to eat Indian, my ideas are stupid, okay. Well, how about this? Get your little butt in the kitchen and make some food. Make yourself useful.”

Of course, when a guys says that to a woman, he’s only joking.

He’s not saying it seriously and saying something like this.

“Alright, well, get your butt in the kitchen then, make yourself useful!!!”

He’s not being angry about it.

He’s not getting into a pointless argument with a woman.

You don’t need to get dragged into the fake drama that a woman is creating. You don’t have to take it seriously.

Now, I just want to point out again here that I’m not saying that a man shouldn’t take a woman seriously in a relationship.

There are times when a woman is being serious.

There are times when a man has said or done something wrong that he should be taking seriously, he should apologize for, he should change and adjust, etc.

That's fine.

Yet, when a woman creates unnecessary drama in the relationship and a man gets involved in that and then starts to worry about experiencing that type of drama again, his relationship can become a lot of hard work.

He can get in to the habit of trying to not set her off, by tiptoeing around her and making sure that he's saying all the right things, behaving in all the right ways to hopefully ensure that she doesn't start creating any drama.

He's afraid of that in a way.

He doesn't want to have to experience that because it could result in her not want to have sex with him.

It could result in her saying that she's not going to cook anymore, or that she's not going to clean and so on.

He doesn't want to annoy or like that.

Therefore, his relationship becomes a lot of hard work because he's taking her drama and her tests too seriously.

He's slowly letting her walk all over him and he's losing his balls in the process.

4. Turning sex into something that you're getting from her, gradually makes her stop wanting it

An example of this, is if a couple are sitting on the couch together and the woman initiates affection. The guy then behaves as though he's shocked and giddy that getting something from her. He shows her that he's feeling lucky that he is being touched by her in that way.

That turns her off.

What's going to turn her on is reacting in a masculine way (see video at the top of this page for example), or in a way that's going to make her feel more attracted in that moment and may potentially lead to kissing and sex right then and there.

What often happens for a lot of guys, is that their woman is initially interested in sex when the relationship begins and maybe for the first couple of years, but after that, she gradually starts to lose interest in sex and essentially doesn't want it anymore.

Either that or she just doesn't initiate.

She seems like she could take it or leave it.

Who cares?

It's just sex.

That happens when the guy creates a dynamic where it seems like sex is about him getting something from her.

He wants to have sex with her because he wants to feel good, he wants to be close with her, he wants to experience that.

It's all about what he wants from her.

Now, if you think about that in a pick-up scenario when a guy trying to pick-up woman; he's trying to hopefully pick the woman up.

He's trying to get her to like him to hopefully get somewhere.

How does that work out for guys when they're using that approach with a woman?

The woman feels like she is the more valuable one and if she gives this guy a chance, she's essentially going to be doing him a favor.

She doesn't feel like he is the more valuable one and she would be lucky to get with him.

The same fundamental principle applies in a relationship.

The best approach to take, is to create a dynamic where sex is something that she is exciting to get from you.

It's something that she wants and she needs to feel good about herself and feel connected with you.

Yet, if a guy creates a dynamic where everything related to sex is about him getting that from her, then she will close up.

Her interest in sex will gradually to dwindle away.

5. Being emotionally fearless in a relationship will give you far greater rewards than being emotionally guarded

An example of this, is where a guy has been heartbroken by a previous relationship breaking down.

When he gets into a new relationship, he keeps an emotional distance from his woman.

He doesn't want to get too close with her.

He doesn't want to put himself out there too much in case he gets hurt.

Yet, as a result of using that approach, there isn't a deep, enjoyable, emotional connection between him and his woman and the relationship become stale.

In some cases, it will then lead to the woman breaking up with the guy and if he really did want to be with her and was just being emotionally guarded because he didn't want to get hurt, he's going to regret it.

He's going to regret that he wasn't more emotionally fearless.

He was trying to protect himself so much that he ended up creating a relationship dynamic that didn't have an enjoyable emotional connection.

So, what's the solution?

The solution isn't for a guy to go on and on about his emotions like a girl.

It isn't about becoming very emotional and talking about feelings all the time and so on.

Instead, it's about being emotionally fearless, not being afraid of the consequences of saying "I love you" to a woman, not being afraid to fall more and more in love with a woman and enjoy the next levels to a relationship.

Additionally, being emotionally fearless isn't about a guy telling a woman how much he loves her all the time.

It's not about a guy becoming obsessed with a woman and saying, "I love you. You're the best. You're the best woman I've ever had. I would be lost without you. You're amazing. All I want is you" and so on.

That's not what I'm talking about.

It's about being emotionally fearless in the relationship, not worrying about the consequences of loving a woman, not trying to protect yourself from potentially getting hurt if you put yourself out there.

The thing is, if you look at breakup and divorce statistics and you see 50% breakups or 60%, 30%, 40%, whatever it is depending on the country, it may make you feel like that could happen to you too. It could.

Yet, what I recommend, is that you focus on the OTHER side of that statistic.

If it's a 50% break or divorce rate in your country, then realize 50% of those relationships stay together for life and understand that you can be one of the couples who happily stay together for life.

Additionally, understand that there are ways that you can go about your relationship that makes it easy and enjoyable and makes you and your woman fall more and more in love over time.

Okay, on that note, I hope you enjoy this video and if you do want to learn more about how to keep a relationship together for life, how to make your woman respect you, feel attracted to you and be totally in love with you, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program Make Her Love You For Life.

Make Her Love You For Life is the ideal relationship dynamic that causes a woman to feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you over time.

It brings out her good girl side where she wants to be good to you, where she actually feels good and gains happiness by being a good woman to you.

Bringing Out Her Good Girl Side

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that the dynamic in a relationship can be changed.

If a man has created a relationship dynamic where his woman isn't respectful of him, doesn't initiate affection, doesn't treat him as well as she used to, it doesn't mean that he can't change the dynamic of the relationship and get her to respect him, be affectionate and treat them well.

Pretty much every woman out there has it inside of her to be a good woman in a relationship; to treat her man well.

She has that inside of her and one of the really interesting things about it is that when a guy brings that side of a woman out in a relationship, she respects him, feels attracted to him and loves him so much more.

The fact that he can bring that side of her out and keep it out makes her happy to be who she is.

It makes her happy to be alive.

It makes her enjoy the relationship.

It makes her enjoy her life.

Of course, more importantly, it's much more enjoyable for the man as well.

A Man's Role in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

What is a man's main role in a romantic sexual relationship with a woman?

What is the one, fundamental thing that applies all over the world, regardless of culture?

[image: A man's role in a sexual, romantic relationship with a woman, is to provide a feeling of protection]

It's to provide a feeling of protection.

When a man is able to provide a woman with a feeling of being protected by a man, it allows her to feel safe in the relationship and as a result, she will respect him, feel attracted to him and love him for that.

On the flip side, a woman's main role in a relationship with a man, apart from cooking and cleaning, of course, is to challenge him and make him stronger emotionally.

[image: A woman's role is to challenge her man and make him emotionally stronger, so she feels safer]

A woman challenging her man emotionally is known as a test.

She is testing his confidence.

She's testing to see whether he can remain emotionally strong under pressure and so on.

Her instincts drive her to occasionally test her man to see if he has any chinks in his emotional armor, if he is weak in some areas, if he needs to toughen up in some areas.

[image: Her instincts drive her to test her back, so she can feel safe in knowing that he is emotionally strong and will be respected by other men as a result]

The reason why she does it is instinctive.

She has an instinctive need to want to feel protected by a man in a relationship.

If he's not emotionally strong to the point where he can't handle the fake pressure that she puts on him at times, then she's not going to feel safe with him.

She's going to feel like she's with a man who is emotionally sensitive and needs to be patted on the back and supported at all times.

She doesn't want to be in that situation, because it doesn't make her feel safe.

So, occasionally, she will test his emotional strength to see how he will react.

For example: He might get himself a new shirt, put it on and show it to her.

In that moment, she could be encouraging and say, "Oh, you look very handsome, that looks great on you," but she can also test him and challenge him to see:

- Is he going to lose confidence in himself and start becoming emotional if she doesn't support him in that moment?
- Does he always need her constant support and pat on the back in order to feel confident about himself?

The thing is she might actually like the shirt and think that there's nothing wrong with it, but instinctively, she will say something like, "That doesn't look good on you" or, "You look dorky in that. You look like a nerd" or, "What are you wearing that for?" and so on, to see how a man is going to react.

[image: Don't take her tests personally]

If the shirt is really dorky and he knows that, then he can accept it and can say, "Yeah, well, it's a pretty dorky shirt," but if it's a normal shirt, say, for example, just a plain black shirt and she's saying, "That doesn't look good on you, that looks nerdy," or whatever, he can laugh at her and not take it seriously.

He can also turn the joke on her if he wants to.

"Whatever. You're just jealous. You know I look good. You're just too shy to admit it. That's alright" or something like this, "Well, the fact is that I am the sort of guy that makes a black shirt look good. It's just the way it is. Say what you want. I know I look good" or something like this. "Yeah, it's true. I look like a total dork. I mean, who wears a black shirt? What a dork. I mean, what was I thinking to wear this? What an idiot? Black shirt. Where did I get my fashion sense from? You, huh?" or something like this, "Whatever, you're just jealous because I look handsome today and you don't look very good."

He can then have a laugh with her about that and she can see that he doesn't crumble under her fake pressure about his shirt.

He doesn't say something like, "Well, what did you say that for? I got this new shirt. I like it. What's wrong with it?!"

He doesn't say something like that.

He doesn't sulk and get into a bit of a mood.

He doesn't get angry.

He doesn't crumble under her pressure because he is an emotionally strong man.

Now, the thing is some guys don't like that.

They don't like it when a woman isn't 100% supportive and encouraging all the time.

Some guys will say, "Well, if a woman said that to me, I'd dump her. You know, there's no need to keep a woman like that if she's out of line. Put her back in line by telling her to stop it and if she doesn't stop it, dump her."

Well, if a guy tries to use that approach with women, he will never have a happy successful relationship that lasts for life.

Women are never going to stop testing because they're instinctively looking for that feeling of protection and safety that comes from being with an emotionally strong man.

They're looking for that feeling of protection and safety that comes from being with a man who believes in himself and doesn't suddenly start doubting himself because someone said, "Your shirt doesn't look good."

It's just a bunch of words.

"Your shirt doesn't look good. What have you done to your hair? That doesn't look good."

Whatever.

If a man knows that his shirt looks good, then he doesn't need to start questioning himself, getting upset, feeling insecure, sulking, getting into a mood and so on.

He doesn't need to get into an argument with his woman.

He can simply laugh at her and not take it seriously.

[image: Being a good girl in response to her man's strength]

So, what is it about a man being able to pass a woman's occasional tests in a relationship that makes her feel safe?

Well, instinctively, a woman knows that if a man doesn't crumble under her pressure and he's able to remain in control of his emotions, then other men are going to respect him.

That makes her feel safe.

She feels safe that he isn't the sort of guy who is going to become nervous and unsure of himself around other men.

He is the sort of man that other men are going to respect and treat well and therefore she is in less danger.

Of course, we live in a modern civilized society, but you have to understand that attraction is something that is instinctive and primal.

It's something that's deep within the human wiring.

It's not something that changes when we suddenly live in a civilized society that, for the most part, is safe and isn't breaking out into riots and there aren't hurricanes or tornadoes every day and causing people to go back to basic survival.

Just because we live in a modern civilized society, it doesn't mean that a woman's instinctive need to feel safe and protected by a man who won't crumble under pressure goes away.

It always remains inside of her.

A good example of this is the former UFC fighter, Ronda Rousey.

She is a tough woman.

She could easily beat a lot of guys in a fight.

Yet, she still has her feminine side.

She still has her feminine instincts and she ended up marrying another former UFC fighter, Travis Browne.

When he was asked whether or not they were dating, because it was still a bit of a rumor at that point, he didn't use a politically correct term like and say, "Yes, she's my partner."

Instead, he unapologetically said, "She's my woman and I'm her man."

He didn't refer to her as his partner.

He referred to her as his woman.

Some feminist women end up watching my videos and they comment sometimes and they say that I shouldn't be referring to women as a man's woman.

I should say partner and all these other politically correct terms, but no, I'm not going to say that.

My woman is my woman.

[image: Dan Bacon with wife at home]

She's my girl and she gets to feel like a feminine woman, a feminine girl around me because I look at her in that way.

I don't look at her as my equal in terms of dominance.

She is my equal in terms of importance.

She is just as important as me in the relationship.

I respect her and I treat her well, but she is not more dominant than me.

The thing is, a lot of guys run into problems when they buy into the politically correct version of relationships and they end up in a situation where they are in a neutral relationship with a woman.

The guy ends up looking at her as his equal in terms of dominance and it becomes a 50-50 relationship.

Relationships like that can last for quite a while, but the sexual spark isn't going to be there.

For most women out there, apart from a small percentage of exceptions, they want to be in a relationship dynamic where the man is stronger than them emotionally, where they get to feel girly around him because he's so strong emotionally.

He doesn't crumble under pressure.

That gives a woman a feeling of being protected and safe.

As a result, she easily feels respect, sexual attraction and love for him.

One thing I want to point out here is that over the years, some guys have contacted me and said that it's not fair how a man needs to be confident and emotionally strong in a relationship.

Some guys have said, "Why can't a woman provide me with emotional support and help me feel better about myself when I'm feeling vulnerable and insecure?"

[image: She wants to take care of him because he doesn't need her support. She wants to feel important in his life and be a good girl to him]

The thing is, a woman will do that when she is with a man who is emotionally strong and doesn't need her emotional support.

She will see that he's under a bit of pressure with something that's going on in his life and she will want to provide some support.

She knows that he doesn't need it because he's an emotionally strong man, but she's going to be more loving and supportive as he goes through a stressful or difficult time in life.

Yet, when a man is emotionally weak or sensitive and always needs his woman to be patting him on the back and trying to make him feel better, then she doesn't want to do it because he isn't providing her with that instinctive primal need to feel safe and protected in a relationship.

So, an important thing to understand is that even if you and a woman are happy and in love, her instincts are still going to drive her to occasionally test you.

She's going to challenge you and look for chinks in your armor.

She's going to try to find out where you need toughening up.

Can you handle a negative comment about something that you feel a bit insecure about, or do you crumble under that kind of pressure?

Do you take her words too seriously?

Do you give her too much power and control over how you feel, or can you control your emotions and be the sort of man that she can naturally feel safe and protected by?

If you'd like to learn more about how to maintain and build on a woman's respect, attraction and love for you in a relationship, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program Make Her Love You For Life.

The approach to relationships that I teach in this program brings out the best in a woman.

It makes her treat you with respect and give you the affection and love that you deserve.

She looks up to you, she respects you and she only wants to be with you.

There's No Escape From Challenges With Women or in Life

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that there is no escaping the challenges and tests of a woman in a relationship, just like there is no escaping the challenges and tests of life.

The thing is, every challenge in your life presents you with an opportunity to become stronger as a man and to reach your potential.

You can either walk away from challenges that will get you to where you want to get to, or walk away from a woman who is testing you and trying to make you stronger.

Alternatively, you can stand up and say, "Hey, I'm going to level up. I'm going to become emotionally stronger and stronger over time."

If you take that approach where you become emotionally stronger over time, you will see that all other areas of your life improve at the same time.

You will get promoted at work so much more easily, or if you're in business, you'll be so much more effective.

With your friends, with your family, they'll respect you so much more.

You will feel like more of your real self around people because you won't be afraid to be judged.

You'll have that emotional strength where you can be your real self and not worry about being judged by people.

That makes you feel happier and more fulfilled as a man.

When you're in a relationship with a woman, it makes her feel so much more attracted to you and love you for who you are, but who you are is a confident man that she can look up to and respect and that she feels safe and protected by.

How to Stop Feeling Insecure Around Your Girlfriend

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

How can you stop feeling insecure around your girlfriend?

Those moments where you worry if she loves you or not, if she's attracted to you or not, if she might like someone else, if she's going to cheat on you, or if she might be chatting with someone else on her phone and so on.

How can you avoid being insecure like that?

Well, first, let's begin with the dictionary definition of insecurity, so you understand what you need to address and fix.

Insecurity (noun): Uncertainty or anxiety about oneself; lack of confidence.

So, what causes that insecurity?

What causes one guy to feel insecure with a woman, whereas if another guy was with her, he wouldn't feel insecure?

One of the main things that causes a man to feel insecure around his girlfriend, is when he feels unworthy of her sexual and romantic love.

[image: Stop feeling insecure around your girlfriend?]

From his perspective, she is more valuable than him and he needs to try to impress her, to live up to her expectations.

Otherwise, she might eventually realize that she is more than valuable than him and then cheat on him, or dump him and leave him.

The thing is, you get to decide whether or not you are worthy of her sexual and romantic love.

It has to be something that you decide.

Confidence is having belief in your abilities, in your skills and so on.

When it comes to being in a relationship with a woman and not feeling insecure around her, it's about believing in yourself in terms of your value to her, believing that you are worthy of her love, worthy of her feeling attracted to you.

Not just worthy, more than good enough.

You are more than good enough for her.

You have to believe that about yourself because if you don't, all sorts of problems begin to emerge in the relationship.

[image: Girlfriend feeling turned off by her boyfriend's insecurity]

For example: When a man feels unworthy of his woman's sexual love, he may react in one of the following ways, which then makes the situation worse.

- Be emotionally distant, so he doesn't become too attached to her, but then she starts feeling unsatisfied, because there isn't a real emotional connection between them.
- Try hard to be perfect around her and live up to her expectations, which just keep getting added to. When a woman sees that a guy is trying hard to live up to her expectations, she will test him by asking him to do more and more for her. The more he does for her out of desperation, the less respect and attraction she feels.

- Try to ruin her confidence by pointing out her flaws or making her feel like an unlovable woman, so she then feels like she needs him. That can work temporarily on a woman who isn't very confident or isn't experienced with relationships, but once she understands what's going on, she will begin to resent her man and she will lose respect and attraction for him as a result.
- Threaten to break up with his woman to hopefully gain some power over her. That can work in some cases to get a woman's attention and make her realize that she doesn't want to lose a guy, but if she senses that he's just doing it to hopefully gain some power over her, she might decide to call his bluff. The first time he threatens to break up with her, she might try to improve her behavior to make him feel more confident and reassured with her, yet, the next time around, she might decide to say, "Okay, fine, let's break up then," to see how he's going to react. If he really doesn't want to break up with her, then he's probably going to say that at that point, or he might accept it and then try to get her back after that.
- Stay out of her way as much as possible to avoid annoying her.
- Do whatever she wants to do in the relationship to hopefully make her feel happy to be with him.

This is why a lot of people out there mistakenly say that relationships are hard work.

They go about it in a way that causes the relationship to become hard work.

You don't have to go down the path of making your relationship difficult.

You can make it easy.

A relationship can literally get better and better over time.

So, how can a guy avoid creating all those problems in the relationship by feeling unworthy of his woman's love?

How can he get to the point where he feels worthy of her love?

How can he get to the point where he feels confident about his value and attractiveness to her and as a result, he doesn't feel insecure?

The only way to do it for real, is to be able to make her feel more attracted to you than you feel to her.

If you've been in relationships before, think about a time when you are in a relationship with a woman who was more attracted to you, than you were to her.

You didn't feel insecure, because you knew how much she wanted to be with you.

You've got to create a similar dynamic with your current girlfriend.

When you do, you'll no longer feel insecure.

This doesn't mean that you shouldn't feel attracted to her, or that you shouldn't show your attraction to her.

Instead, you have to be able to make her feel more attracted to you than you feel to her.

This starts with feeling worthy of her sexual and romantic love.

Yet, you can't expect her to help you feel worthy of her love, so you can then feel confident and secure about yourself.

Your girlfriend wants you to decide that you're worthy and then to begin acting on that belief around her.

Since women are attracted to confidence in a man, they want to see that he has real confidence and isn't only feeling confident because she's helping him feel that way.

This comes from her instinctive need to feel safe and protected by a man.

It's important to understand this and recognize that attraction works differently for men and women.

For example: Most men don't look at a woman and say, "Wow, I'm so attracted to her because she's so strong, confident and powerful looking. She looks like she could protect me. I'd be safe with a tough girl like her. I want a girl who makes me feel safe and protected from the world out there."

The thing is, there are some men who are into that and that's fine.

However, for the majority of men, their attraction to a woman isn't based on how powerful she is, how strong she is and how she could protect them.

In fact, some men actually prefer a woman who is shy or self-conscious because it makes them feel more confident around her.

[image: Stop being insecure with your girlfriend]

Not all men want that, but most men do prefer a woman who makes them feel like the man, where she is less dominant and looks up to him and respects him.

When she is like that, it creates a natural, ongoing sexual attraction between the man and the woman based on the masculine-feminine dynamic.

However, to achieve that dynamic, where the man is more powerful emotionally and the woman looks up to him and feels sexually attracted to him because she feels protected and safe, the man has to be more emotionally strong than the woman and it has to be genuine.

This is why a woman will often say or do things in a relationship to try and make her man feel insecure around her.

She wants to know whether or not his confidence is genuine, or if he can only feel that way if she's saying or doing nice things to boost up his confidence.

If she can consistently see that her man doesn't become insecure by what she says or does, then she naturally starts being more complimentary towards him.

She starts saying and doing things that make him feel even more confident, like telling him that he looks good, that he's great in bed, that he's better than other men, or that she's lucky to have a man like him.

However, it's important to understand that she will also continue doing what is natural in the male-female sexual dynamic, which is to occasionally say things to test his confidence.

If she occasionally tests his confidence and continues to see that he doesn't become insecure because he's no longer rattled by her mere words, then her respect, attraction and love for him increases.

She sees that no matter what she says or does around him, he remains confident.

So, his confidence is genuine and isn't based on her making things easy for him.

This satisfies her instinctive need to feel safe with a man and as a result, she feels a deep respect, attraction and love for him.

When a woman is with a man who doesn't become insecure by what she says or does to occasionally test his confidence, her level of respect, attraction and love gets to a point where it surpasses what she has felt for other men in the past, if she has been in relationships before.

She begins to realize how lucky she is to have a man like you.

That's when your relationship becomes so much more fulfilling for the both of you.

She is deeply attracted to you and is giving you the respect, love and affection that you deserve.

As a result, you naturally find it easier to love her and treat her well.

As her feelings of respect, attraction and love for you deepen even more, she also begins to see you as being the more valuable one in the relationship because she knows that it's next to impossible to find a man like you.

As a result, you don't feel insecure with her anymore.

You know that she loves you.

So, if you want to stop feeling insecure around your girlfriend, start feeling worthy of her sexual and romantic love.

Know that you are good enough.

Decide that about yourself.

Believe in yourself in that way and then back it up by making her feel more attracted to you, than you feel to her.

One of the ways that you can make her start feeling more attracted to you is to be more confident in yourself around her.

If you have taken an approach to the relationship where you look at her as being more valuable than you and as a result, you behave in an insecure way, then her attraction for you is going to be pretty low at the moment.

Yet, when you start believing in yourself and seeing yourself as worthy of her sexual and romantic love, then you're going to start feeling more confident around her.

She's going to be able to look at you and see that you believe in yourself.

You know that you're good enough for her.

As a result, you behave in confident ways around her even when she's not helping you feel more confident.

When she tests you and tries to make you feel insecure, it doesn't work the way it used to.

You're becoming more and more confident every day.

As a result, her attraction for you is growing stronger and stronger by the day.

If you'd like to learn more about how to be confident in your relationship with your woman, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program Make Her Love You for Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn the ultimate approach to a relationship with a woman that increases her respect, sexual attraction and love for you over time.

You will also learn what to say and do, to always feel confident in the relationship and be in the position of power.

Making Her Feel the Way She Used to About You

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that if your woman has fallen out of love with you and the spark isn't there anymore, it can be brought back to life.

As a smaller example: Think back to a time in the relationship where things were going well between you and her.

There would have been times where you said or did something that she didn't like and made her feel turned off.

Then, you made an adjustment, you did it differently and she was happy with you.

Her attraction increased.

Her respect increased.

Essentially, what happens is that the way you approach interactions with your woman either increases her feelings of attraction or decreases her feelings of attraction.

It's basically within your control.

The way that you approach your interactions with her determines everything.

So, when you start being more confident around her, you honestly believe in yourself and you start attracting her in ways that she hasn't been expecting, she's going to be able to look at you as the man that she was always hoping you would be.

You're going to be able to see that she sincerely feels attracted to you and she really wants to be with you.

As a result, you feel confident in yourself and increasingly, you see that there's no reason to feel insecure anymore.

How to Maintain a Woman's Attraction in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

How can you maintain a woman's attraction in a relationship and achieve what I call Never-Ending Attraction?

One of the ways to do it, is to not let her take away your masculinity.

To be clear here, the dictionary definition of masculinity is:

Masculinity (noun): Possession of the qualities traditionally associated with men.

In a relationship or a marriage, a woman will test her man's ability to hold onto his masculinity by pretending to get angry about certain ways that he behaves, or certain things that he says to her.

She will essentially tell him to behave more like her or to behave like a woman.

She will pick on his behavior when he is being masculine and say that it's wrong, that she doesn't like it and so on.

If the man takes what she is saying seriously and starts being softer, more docile, more hesitant and obedient around her, then she is going to lose respect for him.

As a result, she will stop feeling sexually attracted to him because she will see that he can't even withstand the fake pressure that she is putting on him.

Her instinct to want to submit to him sexually starts to diminish, because she can see that he isn't a more powerful force than her emotionally.

She feels like he can't handle a woman like her because he so easily buckles under her pressure in moments like that.

[image: Don't suppress your masculinity in response to her fake anger]

The thing is, though, women are very good at making a man feel like he's really done the wrong thing.

In a relationship, a man might say something to his woman in a certain way, he might behave in a certain way and then she will verbally attack him for that.

She will pretend to be really angry about it.

In the moment, the guy can feel like he has really stuffed up and he's out of line and he should be behaving more like her, he should be behaving like a woman.

Yet, if he falls into the trap of suppressing his masculinity around her, then she's going to lose respect for him and she's going to struggle to feel sexual attraction for him.

So, what's an example of how it works?

Well, imagine that a couple is in the car together and the man is driving.

While he's driving, he ends up making a little bit of a mistake on the road by going into the wrong lane, turning at the wrong time or whatever.

[image: Pretending that she's letting him drive the car]

His woman then says, "You're a horrible driver. I'm a way better driver than you. I don't even know why I let you drive when I'm in the car. The next time we go somewhere, I'm driving."

Now, some guys may have noticed a particular word in the example that stands out and suggests she thinks she's in the dominant position, or she is testing to see if he will accept her being in the dominant position in the relationship.

That word is "let."

She said, "I don't even know why I let you drive when I'm in the car."

So, how can a guy deal with that type of interaction with his woman in a way where he doesn't suppress his masculinity and look at her as being in the dominant position?

When faced with a situation like that, each guy will react differently.

Some guys will react in a way that deepens the woman's respect for them, makes her feel attracted and gets rid of the negative tension between them.

On the other hand, some guys will get angry at their woman and get into a pointless argument with her about it.

Another guy will think that he's really stuffed up and he will try to drive better for the remainder of the trip to hopefully impress her and so on.

So, what's the type of approach that a guy can take that will end up making her feel more respect for him, feel attracted and ease the tension between them?

Well, first of all, he shouldn't take what she is saying so seriously.

That's one of the things about interacting with a woman in a sexual, romantic relationship.

When you're interacting with a woman in the workplace, it's important to take her seriously.

You have to be able to take your coworker seriously and your manager or your boss, if she's a female, you have to be able to take her seriously.

That's a different environment.

However, when you're in a sexual, romantic relationship with a woman and you want her to feel respect, sexual attraction and love for you, then you can't take what she is saying seriously all the time.

If she has an emotional outburst, don't take it personally.

It's her having an emotional outburst, not you.

You don't have to get emotional with her.

It's fine for a masculine man to feel emotion and it's fine to sometimes get frustrated with your woman.

Yet, if you want to make your relationship as easy as possible and you want to make her feel the most amount of respect, sexual attraction and love for you, it's best that you maintain control of your emotions when she is getting emotional.

You don't have to do that 100% of the time and be an unemotional robot.

Instead, you're allowed to feel emotions, but the more you can control your emotions when she's being emotional, the more she will respect you.

The more she respects you, the more she will feel sexually attracted to you.

So, what can a man say in a moment like that when his woman is accusing him of being a horrible driver and saying that she is letting him drive and that she doesn't know why she lets him drive?

Rather than getting angry and getting into a pointless argument with an emotional woman, a man can chuckle, not take her seriously and say something like this,

“Yeah, it’s true. You got me there. I’m a horrible driver, probably the worst. Dan Bacon, World’s Worst Driver. It’s got a good ring to it. I like that.”

Alternatively, he might say something like this, “What did you say? The next time we go somewhere, you’re driving? Sweet. I can relax. Thank you.”

[image: Put her back in her place with some humor]

Alternatively, he might jokingly say something like this, “Yeah, I don’t know why you let me drive either. It’s so dangerous when I’m driving. An accident can happen at any moment. Watch out, keep your seatbelt on. Get ready.”

Something to point out here is that when you’re in a relationship or a marriage with a woman, it’s still very important and essential that you treat her well and that you’re a good man.

That’s fine.

However, in moments where she is attacking you and saying that you’re the worst at something or you’re this or you’re that, it’s fine not to take her so seriously and lovingly put her back in her place.

For example: She’s saying that she’s letting you drive and then you’re thanking her for letting you drive, but making a joke out of it and letting her see that you don’t actually feel like she’s letting you drive.

You are driving because you want to drive and you don’t need to get permission from her.

Where some guys go wrong with this particular area of a relationship is that they end up taking what the woman is saying too seriously.

They end up giving her too much power and dominance in moments like that, or they end up getting into a pointless argument with an emotional woman where she ends up blaming him for the argument in the end.

Women are very good at pushing a man to get more annoyed and angry to the point where he ends up saying or doing something that causes her to say, “Well, now you’ve crossed the line. Now you’re being very angry. Now I’m scared, or now you’re behaving in this way or that way. You’re crazy. You’re this, you’re that.”

It can so easily end up being the man’s fault if he gets dragged into the drama that a woman is trying to create.

This is why you need to be able to control your emotions around her.

It’s fine to get frustrated at your woman at times, no problem, but if you want her to respect you, feel sexually attracted to you and be in love with you, it’s very important that you’re able to maintain control of your emotions and not allow her to push your buttons so easily.

The thing is, these little battles will happen in your relationship with a woman regardless of how nice or good of a woman she is.

Every woman is going to test her man’s confidence and masculinity.

It’s just the way that the nature of attraction works between a man and a woman and it’s actually one of the biggest benefits of being in a relationship.

Your woman constantly makes you stronger by instinctively testing your confidence at what seems like the wrong moment.

That's when women really tend to do it, in a moment where it's like, "How could she say something like that? Why is she saying that now? You know, I'm feeling stressed out about something, I'm feeling vulnerable about something, I'm feeling frustrated about something, I'm feeling unsure about something and then she goes and says this or that. That really annoys me. Why does she have to say something like that when I'm feeling this way or that way?"

Well, it's part of a woman's instinct to make her man stronger.

It's a primal instinct where a woman wants to feel safe and protected by her man.

She wants to be with a man who doesn't crumble under pressure, who is able to maintain control of his emotions, like a masculine man.

This is her instinct.

Some women know it consciously, but most women just act on their instincts.

Her instincts know that if a man doesn't crumble under pressure and doesn't become emotional, then other men are going to respect him.

As a result, she feels safer and more protected when she's with him.

Another example of this is that many men struggle to deal with is when their woman says something like, "You're stupid."

That sort of comment really digs deep for a lot of guys because they see themselves as being intelligent and they want to be respected for being an intelligent man.

So, when their woman says something like, "You're stupid or you're dumb, you're an idiot," it can really dig deep and make a man feel annoyed and lose control of his emotions.

However, if you can show her that it doesn't negatively affect you and that you're able to remain being a good, loving man, she will feel like she is the one who is in the wrong and she will eventually apologize for saying that about you.

If she doesn't apologize because she's so used to being negative, you can help her transition from communicating in a negative way to complimenting you, thanking you for being such a great man and acknowledging how lucky she is to have you.

Many women will do that on their own, but sometimes, you do need to encourage a woman by giving her some compliments yourself and then saying something like, "It's okay for you to give me a compliment like that every now and then if you want to."

Yet, if you take her comment of, "You're stupid, you're dumb, you're an idiot" or whatever too seriously and end up verbally attacking her, then she's almost certainly going to end up making it seem like your fault.

You got angry, you're acting emotional, you're saying all these things to her and she then makes it out to be your fault.

Additionally, she feels turned off that she can negatively affect you in that way by saying a simple thing like, "You're stupid or you're dumb."

So, essentially, what you need to do is take your woman seriously when she is saying something serious or sincere, but don't take her seriously when she is being emotional and saying things about you that aren't true.

The thing is, sometimes there are going to be situations where you say or do something that isn't effective in the relationship or isn't loving and is causing problems between you and her.

In moments like that where she gives you feedback and tells you to stop doing that or to change or adjust, that's fine.

However, when a woman is essentially trying to get you to behave like her or like a docile man, don't take that seriously.

If you take that seriously and you start behaving more docile, hesitant and soft around her, then she's not going to feel attraction for you, it's just not going to be there.

What women naturally feel attracted to is a man's confidence and masculinity, so you must maintain that when you're in a relationship with her.

An important thing to point out here is that masculinity isn't all about how you look.

Some guys get confused and think, "Okay. I have to go to the gym and I have to build up big muscles and then she's going to feel attracted to my masculinity."

The thing is, having big muscles and being physically strong is a sign of masculinity, that's fine.

If a guy wants to do that, no problem.

However, the fact is that a man does not have to build up big muscles in order to make his woman feel attracted to his masculinity.

[image: Maintain your masculine position and she will naturally feel attracted, even if she doesn't admit it]

The most important type of masculinity comes from within.

It's about how you think.

How you think determines how you behave, how you move, how you take action, how you speak, how you touch her and so on.

If a man thinks that it's wrong to be masculine around his woman and he thinks that it's right to be soft and docile, then his behavior is going to reflect that.

He's going to be hesitant when he touches his woman.

He's going to worry how she might react if he says or does something.

However, when a man embraces his masculinity in a relationship, it comes through in the way that he talks to his woman, the way that he touches her, the way that he behaves and the way that he takes action.

As a result, he's able to naturally maintain her attraction in the relationship.

It doesn't fade away.

Her Tests About Something Will Stop When...

One final point that I want to make for you in this video is that when your woman can see that you are honestly not bothered by a particular test of your confidence or masculinity, then she will stop doing it.

If she's not 100% sure, then her instincts will urge her to test you one, two or three more times, but if she can see that it doesn't bother you anymore, then there's no more point for her to do that.

However, her tests in other areas just won't stop.

Now, some guys might think that that's a bad thing.

Yet, it really is a good thing.

What happens is that when you don't take your woman's tests seriously and you're able to withstand that, it makes you stronger and stronger over time.

It makes you become such an emotionally strong man and as a result, other men respect you.

It has a flow on effect to your work or your business where you get promoted, or you get things done better because you just don't get rattled.

People respect you, they can trust in you and they can see that you are an emotionally strong man that doesn't crumble under pressure.

The thing is, so many guys out there go through life thinking that relationships are hard work because they take their woman's tests or outbursts too seriously.

It's fine to take a woman seriously if she really has a point and you're behaving in a way that isn't loving or isn't effective, that's fine.

However, when she's being ridiculous, or she's being overly emotional or saying something that isn't true, you shouldn't take that seriously.

Additionally, if she's trying to get you to behave like her and be more feminine in a way, don't take that seriously.

You can't let go of your masculinity.

If you want to maintain a woman's attraction in a relationship and you want the sex to happen easily and regularly, you have to maintain your masculinity.

Be man enough to withstand her fake pressure for you to stop being manly.

If you can do that, it will be one of the things that easily and naturally makes her respect, attraction and love for you increase over time.

How to Get Your Relationship Back to the Way it Was

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

How can you get a relationship back to how it was at the start, when you and her were falling in love and you really wanted to be with each other?

You couldn't keep your hands off each other, you loved spending time with each other and you looked at each other in a positive light.

You had good thoughts about each other.

You behaved well around each other.

You wanted to treat each other well and as a result, you and her had a really good time together.

Well, one school of thought is that a couple should go back and do what they used to do when they were falling in love, whether that be going to the movies, having dinner, going to a certain park, going to the beach, hanging out with friends and so on.

[image: Getting a relationship back to the way it was?]

Does that work?

Can it work?

It depends.

For example: Many couples end up doing the same thing over and over again for years and even decades, so they're already doing what they did at the start of their relationship.

As a result, that's not going to make things go back to the way they were at the start because they're already doing it.

Their relationship isn't fun anymore, they're not feeling like they're in love and they are going and doing the things that they used to do together.

On the other hand, if a couple has fallen into a boring routine and they don't really do any fun things together anymore like they used to, then going and doing those fun things together may bring back the spark.

I say "may" because sometimes a couple will start doing the things that they used to do at the start, but then will realize that it doesn't feel the way it used to.

When they used to go to a dinner and a movie, it felt great.

They were in love.

They looked at each other in a positive light.

They got along.

They flirted.

They laughed.

They had a good time together.

Now, they're just going through the motions...

Let's go and get the car parked.

Now, let's go and get a ticket.

Let's eat some food.

We'll go to the movies now and we'll get some popcorn and some Coke or whatever.

We'll sit down and we'll watch the movie and after the movie, talk about the movie a little bit, go home, go to sleep, no sex, good night.

[image: No sex after date night for unhappy couple]

So, if a couple is trying to get their relationship back to the way it used to be and they go and watch a movie and have some dinner, it isn't necessarily going to make things go back to the way they used to be.

Going somewhere and doing something with your woman isn't the point.

What you need to do is bring out the side of her that existed when you first met and bring out the side of yourself that existed when you and her first met.

This is where a lot of guys go wrong.

A guy tries to get things back to the way that they used to be by being a bit more flirtatious, touching her more, hugging her, trying to give her a kiss, trying to be a bit more playful and she doesn't immediately get on board with that.

She's in the habit of being moody and disrespectful towards him so she keeps doing that.

At that point, some men will just give up and think that the spark is dead, she doesn't think of him in that way anymore and there's nothing that he can do about it.

Whereas another man might get angry at her for behaving like that.

He might feel resentful and say that he's trying to make the relationship work and she's not even willing to make an effort.

She is just being moody and disrespectful and he's very annoyed by that.

Another guy might see his woman's reluctance to be affectionate and loving as meaning that he has to try harder so he will try harder and harder to impress her.

He will buy her things, he will try to suck up to her and he will hope that she will eventually see how good of a man he is and how much he deserves her to treat him better.

Yet, those approaches don't work.

Instead, what you need to understand is that sometimes it takes a little bit of time for a person to change.

For example: When your woman wants you to change something, even though you want to do it, sometimes you'll make a mistake.

Sometimes you'll slip into your old patterns of behavior and do the thing that she doesn't want you to do anymore.

It doesn't mean that you're a bad man, or that you're not listening to her.

Instead, it just takes a bit of time to change a habit or behavior.

If she's in the habit of being disrespectful and moody and she isn't in the habit of being affectionate and loving, sometimes it can take a little bit of time for her to warm up to that, get used to it and feel comfortable with that type of behavior again.

Now, that doesn't mean that you should wait months or years for her to eventually change.

Instead, you can make her feel motivated to change very quickly and be more loving and affectionate towards you and really enjoy that side of herself.

For example: If a couple went back to a particular park or a beach that they used to like going to and the man is in the habit of not initiating affection with this woman because he is afraid of getting rejected by her, or he is annoyed at how she keeps rejecting him, then he needs to break that pattern of behavior.

He needs to have the confidence, the courage and the masculinity to be the stronger one in that moment, to let her see that he's not afraid to initiate affection with her.

Let her see that he doesn't back down and become insecure, annoyed or even angry when she doesn't immediately warm up to him.

What happens then, is that a woman naturally feels respect and attraction for her man's confidence, courage and masculinity in that moment.

It literally triggers her feelings of sexual attraction and respect for him.

When that happens, she starts to reconnect with the love that she used to feel for him and in that moment, the relationship begins to go back to the way it was at the start.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you've enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn my most powerful techniques for making a woman feel increasingly respectful, attracted and in love with you in a relationship or a marriage, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

What you'll learn in this program will completely transform your relationship with her.

You will see a totally new side of her where she is so much more affectionate, loving, caring and enjoyable to be around.

An important thing to point out here is that Make Her Love You For Life is for a relationship or a marriage that is still together, but is no longer happy.

The respect, attraction and love isn't there anymore and the couple is experiencing problems as a result.

If you're in a situation where your girlfriend has broken up with you, or you and your wife have separated or divorced, then the program for you is Get Your Ex Back Super System.

This is my tested, proven to work method for getting a woman back after a break-up, separation or divorce.

I thoroughly tested this step-by-step method by helping over 100 phone-coaching clients to get their ex girlfriend or ex wife back and then I recorded the program.

So, when you watch the program, you will find that it resonates with you.

You will realize that you've been making a lot of the mistakes that I point out in the program and you will learn the right way to do things from now on, so she feels a renewed sense of respect, attraction and love for you and wants to get back with you.

So, if you've already broken-up, separated or divorced, the program for you is Get Your Ex Back

Super System.

If you're still in the relationship or a marriage, but you're having problems with her, the program for you is Make Her Love You For Life.

The Changing Relationship

One final point that I want to make for you in this video is that a relationship will always change over time, but a truly happy relationship is where the love, respect and attraction deepens over time rather than fading away.

Every relationship changes based on the obstacles that you and her face, the experiences that you have together and the goals and dreams that you have about the future together.

Yet, regardless of what you and her have faced in the past and what you may encounter in the future, it doesn't mean that you and her have to fall out of love.

You've seen those couples who fall more and more in love with each other as the years and decades go on.

That is what's possible.

You really can experience that with your woman, even if you and her have gotten to a point where the spark has died, the fun isn't there anymore and you just don't feel like you are in love with each other anymore.

You can literally turn things around and create a new relationship dynamic that gets better and better over time.

How to Turn On a Woman's Good Girl Switch in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

How can you flick on a woman's good girl switch in a relationship, where she gains pleasure and happiness out of being a good woman for you?

There are so many different examples I can give you on how to flick on that good girl switch and in this video, I'm going to give you 2 examples to give you an introduction to how it works.

Let's begin with number 1...

1. Lovingly expect more of her

Some guys approach their relationship with the woman by going to one extreme or the other.

One extreme is where a guy is doing way too much for his woman.

He essentially wants to do everything for her and make her life as easy as possible.

He fears that if he puts any pressure on her to be a good woman for him, then she's going to be unhappy and she's going to leave him.

She's going to start threatening to break up with him.

She's going to start kicking up a fuss and he's not going to know how to handle that.

So, he just gives and gives and gives and he doesn't ever really get back what he wants from her.

He doesn't get the affection, the love, the respect that he deserves and that he wants.

On the other end of the spectrum, some guys demand that their woman be good to them and they get angry about that.

They get frustrated about it.

They get into arguments with their woman and try to force her into being a better woman by belittling her, pointing out her flaws, getting angry, kicking up a fuss and so on.

That approach doesn't work either.

That approach doesn't flick on a woman's good girl switch.

The way to do it, is to lovingly expect more of her.

So, what's an example of how it works?

Well, imagine that a couple are sitting on the couch and the guy wants a coffee.

He can go and make the coffee himself and there's no problem with that, but he can also get her to make the coffee and make her feel happy about doing it.

He can actually make her feel happy about doing those sort of things for him and gain pleasure by doing it.

It makes her feel happy to be that attentive and caring towards him.

Now, every woman is different.

Not every woman is going to react in the same way, if her boyfriend or husband asks to make him a coffee for the first time if he's never done that before (i.e. if he's never been sitting next to her on a couch and just asked her to do something for him like that).

So, if a man is in the habit of making a coffee for himself and then he asks his woman to do it for him, sometimes a woman will be like, "Cool, okay, I'll go and make it for you."

Sometimes a woman will say, "Why?"

Sometimes a woman will say, "No."

Sometimes a woman will say, "Make it yourself" or, "I'm busy" or, "I'm checking something on my phone, you go and do it."

There're going to be all different types of responses and reactions.

I'll skip over the easy reaction, which is you just ask her and she does it and I'll deal with the more difficult one where she says "No."

So, a man is sitting next to his woman on the couch.

He then asks her to make him a coffee.

"Hey, honey, can you go make me a coffee? Thanks."

She then says, "No" and he says (in a relaxed, easy-going, non-sulking tone of voice), "Come on, go make me a coffee. I'd do it for you if you asked me. Come on, go make me a coffee."

She then says, "No" again.

What is he going to do at that point?

Well, what he needs to do is let her see that she is missing out on making him a coffee and getting to feel good emotions as a result.

How can he do that?

Well, that happens a little bit later.

For now, he should go and make the coffee and not make a fuss about it.

He should say, "Okay, cool, I'll make it myself" and go and make a coffee.

He should then come back, sit down, enjoy the coffee and not make a big deal out of it.

In some cases, a woman will apologize and say that she will do it next time, but in other cases she won't say anything and she'll just get on with the evening.

Then, the next night, if they're sitting on the couch watching TV together again, he can ask her once again.

"Okay, honey, can you make me a coffee tonight? Go make me a coffee."

She then says, "No" and he says (in a relaxed, playful tone of voice), "Well, thanks for nothing then. Alright, I'll make it myself."

He then makes the coffee himself.

Now, the thing is, if he has been making her feel respect and attraction for him in the relationship, then she is going to start to feel a little bit bad about not doing that for him.

She's going to start to think, "Well, he's not reacting in a negative way, he's not sulking, he's not getting angry, he's not complaining and kicking up a fuss when I refused to do something for him. He's being loving about it."

He's expecting more from her, but he's being loving about it.

He's not being an asshole about it, he's not being controlling and so on.

She's going to start to feel like she is in the wrong and most women are going to want to start to do that for their man, if he asks her to do it.

So, the next time he asks her to make a coffee, she's most likely going to do it and at that point, he can then make her feel good about doing something for him.

For example: If she says, "Okay, fine, I'll make the coffee" and she gets up to make him a coffee.

He can then say (in a confident, easy-going tone of voice) something like this, "Nice, now we're talking. I knew the loving you was in there somewhere. Now, get in there and make me a coffee" and then playfully smack her on the butt.

When she comes back with the coffee and puts it down, the guy can stand up and grab her, give her a bit of a kiss and maybe a spank on the butt as well and say, "Thank you."

As a result of approaching it in that way, she is almost certainly going to laugh, smile, feel respect for him and more importantly, feel sexual attraction for him.

She's going to feel sexually attracted to the fact that he can get her to do something for him and make her feel good about it.

Why is that attractive to a woman?

Well, that type of behavior from a man transfers over into the bedroom.

It makes a woman feel excitement and anticipation about what may happen in the bedroom between them.

The guy might be able to have the confidence to tell her to do something for him and make her feel good about it doing it.

He has that type of confidence which is magnetically attractive to women.

She gets to imagine what might happen and be mentally ready to go along with what he wants to do in the bedroom and enjoy it.

It's exciting for a woman to be in that position.

By the way...

Something important to point out here, is that every man out there doesn't have to tell his woman to make him a coffee.

That's not the point.

The point is to lovingly expect more from your woman.

You can lovingly expect more from her in so many ways.

It's not just about sitting on the couch and saying, "Get your butt off the couch, make me a coffee. Go make me some food and come back and give me a foot massage."

It's not about ordering her around like that.

However, it is about understanding that when you approach your relationship with the woman in a way where you expect her to be good to you, it actually makes her want to be good you.

Of course, as long as you do it in a loving way.

It's not about demanding things of her and saying, "Hey, I do all these things for you, you should do this for me."

It's not about that, it's not about tit for tat.

Instead, it's about lovingly expecting more of your woman.

For example: You can lovingly expect her and get her to...

- Show more affection.
- Be more caring and attentive.
- Be more patient with you about certain things.
- Take more care of her physical appearance around you.
- Appreciate the nice things you do for her.
- Make more of an effort in the relationship in ways that you would appreciate.
- Treat you with the respect that you deserve and show you love in the way that you enjoy the most.

Another thing to point out here is that when your woman does something for you that is out of character, where she is being extra nice to you, extra attentive, caring and so on, you don't always have to stand up, give her a hug, give her a kiss and give her a spank on the butt.

You don't have to make a big deal out of it.

Instead, what really excites a woman and makes her want to do it more and more is where you vary your reactions and responses.

For example: Where a woman makes a coffee for her man, he doesn't always have to stand up and give her a hug.

Instead, sometimes he'll just say, "Thanks," take the coffee and get on with what he was doing.

Sometimes he'll take the coffee and then say a joke to her like, "Alright, go make some food now, make yourself useful."

Other times, he might jokingly complain about the temperature of the coffee saying that it's too hot or too cold and so on.

He'll create a moment between himself and his woman where she can feel some attraction for him.

So, when she does something good for him, there is always the potential that she's going to feel a burst of sexual attraction for him, a rush of sexual attraction for him.

That builds up the sexual tension between him and her, which naturally leads to her being affectionate and them having sex on a more regular basis.

Now, compare that to a guy who doesn't want to expect anything of his woman.

He doesn't want to push her in any way to do anything.

Instead, he just wants to give and give and give or he wants to have a 50/50 relationship where they're just more like partners, or friends, roommates, housemates and so on.

With those type of relationship dynamics, it does not bring out a woman's good girl side.

It does not make her feel motivated to be affectionate, attentive, loving and so on.

So, while every man out there doesn't have to tell his woman to make him a coffee, what he does need to understand is that it makes women feel attracted, excited and in love when a man can make her feel like she wants to be good to him.

She wants to do good things for him.

When she does, she ends up getting a rush of sexual attraction out of it.

She ends up feeling attracted to his confidence.

In some cases, they end up laughing together.

In some cases, they end up hugging and kissing and so on.

What happens then is that her good behavior becomes linked to affection, to sex and to deeper and more exciting feelings of love between her and her man.

2. Address her bad behavior in a loving, supportive way

Everyone makes mistakes in a relationship and everyone has an opportunity to become a better person than they already are.

The same applies to her.

Sometimes she will say or do something that may really annoy you.

You may think, “How dare she say that? How dare she behave in that way?”

It may cause you to lose control of your emotions in one way or another.

Yet, if you want to flick on her good girl switch and make her treat you better and better and better over time, the best approach is to directly address her bad behavior, but do it in a loving, supportive way.

For example: Imagine that your girlfriend or wife says or does something that annoys you.

Rather than getting angry at her and getting into an argument that becomes a huge bit of drama between you and her, the best approach to take is to maintain control of your emotions and directly address her bad behavior in a loving, supportive way.

You don't have to do that all the time.

Sometimes it's totally fine to get a bit frustrated at your woman and let her know about that.

However, if you want your relationship to get better and better over time, it's important for you as the man to get better and better at maintaining control of your emotions, so, she doesn't have that ability to push you over the edge emotionally.

She can't just say something and make you angry because you are stronger than that.

You can maintain control of your emotions because you're not intimidated by her and you're not triggered by her words or behavior.

You maintain control of your emotions in a way that only a real man can.

As a result, she feels a deep respect and attraction for you.

So, if she says or does something that would normally annoy you or frustrate you, say something like this instead. “Hey, that wasn't cool. You're usually a great woman, but that, no. I don't like that. That wasn't cool” or something like this, “Well, I'm disappointed with you based on that. I know that you can be a much better girl than you're being right now. That isn't cool.”

Now, compare that to addressing her behavior in a way that isn't loving and is going to cause more problems.

“What did you say that for?! Why are you talking to me like that?! You need to stop this!”

Talking to her in that way isn't going to flick on a woman's good girl switch.

What you want to do is be loving and supportive when you give her some feedback on her behavior that you're not liking or appreciating.

When she can see that you are maintaining control of your emotions and are giving her the benefit of the doubt (i.e. that she's usually a good woman), but you don't like that she's saying this or that, then she can see that you're not just looking at the negatives.

You're looking at her as a woman that you love and appreciate and you can see that she isn't normally like that.

As a result, she then feels like the one who has stuffed up in that moment.

Of course, depending on the woman, in a moment like that, she may or may not admit that she is in the wrong.

If she doesn't admit that she is in the wrong and doesn't accept that she has been behaving badly, or said something that was out of line, she will realize that later when she has a chance to think about it. She will replay the scene over in her mind again and she'll realize that she was out of line and that you didn't react badly.

You gave her the benefit of the doubt.

You maintained control of your emotions and gave her the feedback on her bad behavior in a loving, supportive way.

Then, as soon as you see that she has improved her behavior or is talking better to you, thank her for that.

Give her feedback on that as well.

Let her know that you have noticed that she is treating you better, that she is talking to you in a more respectful, loving way.

For example: If you're sitting next to her on the couch and she shows you the improved behavior or talks to you in the improved way, you can then thank her for that.

"Thanks, honey. I appreciate that you're not reacting in the same way you used to. That's much better. Thank you."

If you want to spice up the moment right there and then and not make it too soapy and romantic, you can add in a bit of a joke, which is kind of serious at the same time.

"Alright, well, anyway make yourself useful and go make me a coffee. Get in there."

You can then have a laugh with her about that.

It doesn't really matter if she goes and makes the coffee for you, but you can turn it into more of a playful moment between you and her by jumping on top of her and tickling her on the couch and so on.

You and her end up laughing and having a great moment together.

This way, when she becomes a better woman for you, it's a good feeling for her, rather than a woman doing something better for her man and him then ruining the moment by saying something like,

"Well, finally you've changed. Well, that wasn't hard, was it?"

Instead, you make her changing and becoming a better woman for you to feel good for her.

She then wants to become a better and better and better woman for you over time.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you've enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more about how to flick on a woman's good girl switch in a relationship, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program Make Her Love You for Life.

Everything that you learn in this 9-hour video or audio program flicks on a woman's good girl switch.

Everything that I teach in the program makes a woman become a better and better woman for you over time.

It also makes a woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you and be totally in love with you for life.

Bring Out the Best in Her

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that there are different approaches that you can take with your relationship, which will bring out a different side of your woman.

For example: If a guy takes the approach of doing too much for his woman, he might create a relationship dynamic where no matter what he does for her, it's never enough.

She wants more and more and more and she gives less and less over time.

Additionally, the position that she's in in the relationship, where he's always trying to do things for her and live up to her expectations, makes her lose respect for him.

As a result, she stops feeling sexually attracted to him.

Then, she starts to withhold sex and not want sex and the relationship isn't fun for either of them.

On the other hand, a guy might take an approach to the relationship where he is being neutral towards his woman.

He treats her more like a housemate or roommate and there isn't that dynamic between them, where she is his girl and he is the man.

He doesn't want to create that type of relationship dynamic.

It makes him feel uncomfortable to do any of those sort of things.

So, he just wants to be neutral with her.

As a result, the sexual spark just isn't there between them and they feel more like friends than anything else.

A relationship like that can continue on for quite a while, but it's not going to be truly enjoyable for either of them.

The man won't get to experience a woman who is very affectionate and sexual towards him and she won't get to experience being that type of girl for him.

Instead, they'll just end up feeling more like friends and that can become very boring over time and lead to a breakup or a divorce.

The best approach to take in a relationship turns out to be the easiest approach to use.

It's practically effortless on your part when you bring out a woman's good girl side.

When you approach it in that way, the relationship is so much easier.

She gets what she wants, which is to be happy and in love and being a good woman for her man and you get what you want, which is a loving, affectionate, attentive woman.

As a result, both you and her don't feel any need to ever break up because your relationship is getting better and better over time.

It's becoming more and more enjoyable and you're both falling more and more in love over time.

How to Stop Getting Angry at Your Girlfriend or Wife

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you tend to get angry at your girlfriend or wife fairly often, one of the main reasons why will be that you're expecting her to be more like you.

In other words, be consistent, be logical, makes sense, don't create any drama, be straightforward and so on.

Yet, that's just not going to happen because she's a woman and she's going to want to behave like a woman.

There's nothing wrong with a man behaving like a man and there's nothing wrong with a woman behaving like a woman.

In fact, when a man behaves like a man and lets his woman behave like a woman, they will naturally feel sexually attracted to each other.

It's when a man expects his woman to be more like a man that the sexual attraction between them begins to fade away.

So, if you want to enjoy a happy, attracted and in love relationship with your woman, you have to allow her to be a woman and at times, that's going to mean she behaves in ways that you wouldn't behave and that you might think silly, or are childish and so on.

So, what's an example?

Well, imagine that a man is sitting on the sofa with his woman on a Saturday evening.

They're just kicking back and relaxing and he then says, "Hey, honey, let's go and watch a movie," and she says, "No, I don't want to go and watch a movie, movies are boring."

At that point, some guys will get angry at their woman and say, "Why are you being like this? You know, we have fun when we go and watch a movie. I want to go and relax. I've been working hard all weekend, I want to go and just kick back and watch a movie and unwind. Why are you being like this?"

Yet, that's not an effective approach to use in a relationship with a woman.

You don't need to drag yourself into unnecessary drama with a woman.

You just don't need to create that type of stress for yourself.

There are better ways to handle it.

So, for example: If he said, "Hey, honey, let's go and watch a movie," and she said, "No, I don't want to go and watch a movie, movies are boring," he can then say something like, "Yeah, cool. Well, let's just kick back and relax then and watch some TV."

Then, because he didn't react in an angry way and was able to maintain control of his emotions, she is then going to feel like the one who has messed up.

She's going to feel like she was being a bit of a pain in the butt in that situation.

So, then 15 minutes, 30 minutes or maybe even an hour later, she might say something like, "Well, what movies are on?"

He can then continue to maintain control of his emotions, check what movies are on and talk about it and they can go watch a movie and enjoy themselves that night.

[image: Avoid the argument so you can get on with enjoying each other's company and being in love]

As a result of using that approach, he didn't need to waste loads of energy and stress out getting into arguments with her and create divisions between him and her.

For example: If a woman said, "Hey, so what movies are on?" after an hour, some guys will get angry at that and say, "Well, now you want to watch a movie? I said I wanted to watch a movie an hour ago, now you want to watch it? Well, it's too late now" and then get into an argument with her about it.

That is not an effective approach to use in a relationship with a woman.

You don't need to drag yourself into unnecessary drama with a woman.

One of the other reasons, in addition to not wasting your energy on that sort of stuff is that, if you create drama with a woman based on those sort of things, she will almost certainly end up making it out to be your fault because you will end up becoming angry.

She will end up saying that you're being ridiculous, you're scaring her or whatever and it will end up being your fault.

So, don't play the angry game and the drama game with a woman.

The best approach is to maintain control of your emotions and interact with her in ways that make her respect you, make her treat you better, make her behave better.

The thing is, sometimes when a man says to his woman, "Hey, let's go and watch a movie," she will say, "Yeah, cool, let's go honey" or sometimes she'll come over and snuggle into him, give him a kiss and say, "Want to watch a movie, honey?" and she'll be really sweet about it, but sometimes she'll be in a bit of a mood.

As a man, you need to be prepared for that.

You need to be prepared for the fact that she's not going to be consistent and straightforward like a man.

You're not wrong for behaving like a man and she's not wrong for behaving like a woman.

If you allow her to behave like a woman and have those little moments where she isn't being consistent and you don't get angry, then she's going to feel so much more respect, attraction and love for you.

As a result, she'll naturally feel the motivation to be a good girl for you.

She'll want to be on her best behavior or be on better behavior and get better and better for you over time.

She won't want to continue being a pain in the butt when you interact with her in ways that let her realize that it's her fault, rather than you getting angry, getting into a huge argument and her making it out to be your fault.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you've enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love

You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn techniques that take the stress out of being in a relationship with a woman.

You will learn how to bring out the best in her, how to make her treat you with more respect, be more attracted to you, be more loving and be a good girl for you.

As a result, you and her can get on with enjoying your relationship together and not having to waste time and energy getting into stressful arguments that don't need to happen in the first place.

Women Don't Always Mean What They Say

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is to point out the fact that sometimes a woman will say something that she doesn't mean just to test how you'll react.

For example: A woman will say that she doesn't like movies and they're boring, even though she likes going to movies and she enjoys eating some popcorn and kicking back with her boyfriend or husband.

One of the reasons why a woman will do that is based on her instinctive need to feel safe with a man. She wants to be able to see that you can handle yourself emotionally, you don't lose control of your emotions and get rattled by things based on what other people are saying and doing.

You are an emotionally independent man and you can handle yourself in social situations.

You're the sort of man that other men naturally respect because you have your stuff together.

When you're in a situation socially, people can see that you don't get rattled by what they're saying or doing.

You are in control of your emotions.

As a result, people respect you more and as a result of that, your woman feels safer with you.

So, one of the most important roles that a woman plays in a man's life when in a relationship is to make him emotionally stronger.

If her man is unable to handle her challenges and tests and loses control of his emotions all the time and gets angry or sulks and whines and complains, then she will know that he isn't yet strong enough for a woman like her.

He doesn't have the emotional strength that she wants in a man to feel safe.

Yet, when a man can handle his woman's tests and doesn't lose control of his emotions and get angry or whine and complain and sulk, then she can look up to him and respect him.

She naturally feels a deep respect, attraction and love for him.

As a result, she feels motivated to be a good woman for him.

Her tests start to decrease because she knows that he is man enough for her and her good behavior begins to increase.

Over time, she becomes a better and better woman for him and as a result both him and her are happier together.

So, if you've been getting angry with your girlfriend or wife, then just understand that there are other ways to approach the situation.

You don't have to waste energy and time getting into pointless arguments with a woman who will end up making it out to be your fault anyway.

There are better ways to approach it.

The best approach to take is to maintain control of your emotions and interact with her in a way that brings out the best in her.

Get her to be a better woman for you.

Does a Man Have to Make All of the Decisions When in a Relationship With a Woman?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, does a man need to make all of the decisions when in a relationship with a woman?

Heck no.

A common misconception out there is that to be the man in a relationship, you have to make all the decisions, do all the work and the woman just comes along for the ride.

That's not how it works.

To help you understand how it works, think about a leader or a boss in a work environment.

A leader or a boss in a work environment will have people that work for him.

They will make decisions for him on his behalf and they'll do things for him.

They will also try to impress him and get his approval.

What the leader or boss does is provide general leadership.

He doesn't have to decide on everything and do all of the work.

The same fundamental principle applies to a relationship with a woman.

Now, of course, if some feminists ever see this video, they'll probably get angry at me for comparing a woman to an employee, but I don't care what they think.

This is an example to help men succeed in their relationships with women and it doesn't actually mean that a woman is an employee).

It's an example to put it into context.

So, to expand on the example, imagine that you want to go out and eat at a restaurant with your woman.

Do you need to always make the decision on where you're going to eat?

Do you need to force her to go along with your decision?

No.

The way that it works is that a man can make the decision on where to go and eat, but if his woman doesn't agree, he doesn't have to be inflexible about that.

He can come up with some other options or get her involved in the decision-making process and they can decide together where they going to eat that night.

So, for example: A man might say to his woman, "Hey, I'm in the mood for Indian food tonight."

She might then say yes and then they go out and eat Indian food together and have a great night.

However, what happens if she disagrees and says that she's not in the mood for Indian food that night?

He has a number of options.

He might say to her, "Hey, come on, I want to eat Indian food tonight, come along, you'll enjoy it."

She might then go along with him.

Alternatively, he might say to her, "Alright, well, if you're not in the mood for Indian food tonight, how about Mexican?"

She might then agree or disagree.

That's okay.

He doesn't need to force her to go along with one of the options that he has come up with.

For example: If she disagrees, he might then say to her, "Alright, cool, what are you in the mood for eating tonight?"

She might then come up with a couple of options and he might like one of those options and give approval for one of those options (like a boss or a leader in a work environment).

For example: She says that she wants to eat Japanese food, or Chinese food that night and he might say, "Yeah, cool, I'm in the mood for Chinese, let's go and eat that."

Yet, what about if he doesn't like the options that she has come up with?

What does he do then?

Well, what you have to remember is that as the man, all you need to do is provide the general leadership for the relationship.

You don't have to decide on everything and you don't have to force a woman to go along with your decisions.

So, for example: If she said that she wanted to eat Japanese food or Chinese food, the man might then say, "Well, I'm not in the mood for that tonight, what else can you think of?"

She might then think of another option.

However, if she's really set on eating Japanese or Chinese food that night, he can make an exception.

He can say, "Yeah, cool, well look, you sound like you really want to eat that tonight. You haven't had it for a while, so let's go and eat that."

As you might be able to notice though, when the man says that and goes along with her idea, it doesn't mean that she is the leader.

He is still providing general leadership for the relationship, he is still giving approval for the direction that they are going on that particular night.

Now, as I said earlier, a man doesn't always have to make the decisions.

Sometimes he might say to a woman, "Hey, what do you in the mood for eating tonight? I don't really care, whatever you want to eat, I'm going to eat that tonight. I just don't really care about what we eat tonight."

She might come up with an option and he will go along with that.

No problem at all.

Where guys run into trouble is when they say that to their woman every night, or about pretty much everything in the relationship, where they say, "I don't really care, I'll do whatever you want to do, you decide, I'll go along with it and so on."

Most women don't like to be in that position with a guy because they end up feeling like a mother figure to him, where they have to decide on everything, take care of him, bring him along to what they're doing and essentially carry him throughout life.

The best and easiest approach to a relationship with a woman is where you provide the general leadership and you give approval for things, but you get her to make decisions as well, you get her to do some of the work as well.

So, when it comes to a relationship with a woman, don't ever stress out and think that you're not manly enough because you're not making all of the decisions.

All you have to do, like a leader or a boss in a work environment, is provide general leadership for the relationship.

You don't have to make all the decisions for her and you don't have to do all the work.

Instead you provide the general leadership for the relationship and you get her to make some decisions and get her to do some of the work as well.

Learn More?

Okay, I hope you've enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn exactly how to make your woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you and be totally in love with you for life.

Making Decisions in a Relationship

[image: Couple decision making - the man provides general leadership]

One final point that I want to make for you in this video, is that you can decide on things if you want to, but you can also hand over responsibility to her.

If you want to decide where to go and eat or where to go on a holiday and so on and then plan that, you can go ahead and do it, but you can also hand over responsibility for certain things in the relationship to her.

She can take on responsibility for some things in the relationship.

You can help her with it and provide some guidance and give approval for things if she needs it, but you don't have to make all the decisions and do all the work.

The same applies when you're a leader or a boss in a work environment.

You don't have to make all the decisions and do all the work.

So, I hope this video has helped you to understand that as a man, you don't have to make all the decisions and do all the work.

Instead, when in a relationship with a woman, all you need to do is provide general leadership for you and her.

Should I Trust My Wife When She is Asking For Time Apart?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

It depends.

5 things to consider:

1. Has she cheated on you before?

Naturally, if your wife has cheated on you before, trusting her when she is asking for time apart might be too much to handle.

You may begin to worry and think, “She’s only asking for time apart so she can do it again,” or “What if she meets someone else while we’re separated? I don’t think she’ll be able to resist cheating on me again.”

On the other hand, if your wife has always been a loyal, trustworthy woman, you might think something like, “What if she gets tempted to cheat on me when we’re apart? I know it hasn’t happened before, but if she meets someone while we’re not together, she might not be able to resist. Maybe this is going to be the end of our marriage. Maybe she already has someone else in mind.”

Although in both instances, you will probably feel justified in feeling as though you can’t trust her, the truth is that in a relationship, you have to be able to trust each other fully and completely, or else it simply won’t last because the distrust will cause one or both of you to resent the other and want to be in a relationship where you are trusted, loved and appreciated for who you are.

So, if you do decide to give your wife the time apart she’s asking for, make sure that you do it with the intention of trusting her.

In that way, she can feel respect for you based on you for being an emotionally strong man during such a difficult time.

When she feels more respect for you, it will be easier for her to feel attracted to you and when that happens, she will feel unsure about wanting to have time apart.

If you do end up having time apart, her feelings of respect and attraction for you will help reduce her need or desire to start dating or sleeping with another man.

Another thing to consider is

2. Has she lost respect and attraction for you and no longer feels like she is in love with you?

For a marriage to last for life and be happy, a woman needs to be able to continue feeling respect, attraction and romantic love for her man over time.

If her man doesn’t know how to maintain those feelings inside of her (e.g. because he assumes that she will always love, respect and feel attracted to him because she felt that way at the start of their relationship), her feelings will naturally start to fade away.

When the love seems to have died and the spark hasn’t been there for quite some time, she might begin to look for ways to get out of the relationship (e.g. spending more and more time away from him and with her friends, family or coworkers, taking up hobbies or sports that allow her to meet new people, asking for time apart to work on herself or find herself).

In most cases, by the time a wife is asking her husband for some time apart, itâ€™s usually not that big of a surprise to him (e.g. because theyâ€™ve been arguing and fighting for a while, theyâ€™re no longer as close as they were at the beginning of the marriage, the intimacy between them has dried up, she has been distant for quite a while).

So, even though he might not want to admit it to himself, a guy will likely know that his wifeâ€™s feelings of respect, attraction and love for him have started to fade, which is why he will then wonder whether or not he can trust her when she asks him for time apart.

He may think something like, â€œIâ€™m afraid that her asking for time apart is just an excuse to end our marriage in a way thatâ€™s easy for her. I just donâ€™t feel like she still feels enough for me to stay faithful if another guy comes along and lays the charm on her. She may just focus on all the bad times weâ€™ve been having together lately and allow herself to get swept away in the heat of the moment. Iâ€™m so scared that this might be the end for us. I donâ€™t want to lose her. What can I do to stop this from happening?â€

To ensure her faithfulness while you and her have time apart, you need to use every interaction that you have with her from now on to re-spark her feelings of respect and attraction.

The more honest, sincere respect she feels for you as her man, the more attracted she will become.

With those two feelings building back up inside of her, it becomes easier for her to reconnect with her original feelings of love that made her want to be yours for life in the first place.

She will then be much more likely to be faithful to you while she sorts things out in her mind when having time apart.

Another thing to consider isâ€

3. Do you think spending time apart will make her miss you?

Sometimes, a week of space is just what a woman needs to make her realize that sheâ€™s still in love with her husband and that regardless of how difficult things might have been lately, life with him is still better than the alternative (i.e. separating or going through with a divorce).

So, if you believe that giving your wife a few days of space will make her realize that your marriage is worth saving, then yes, you should trust her.

Just back off for a few days (7 at the most) and give her a chance to begin missing you.

Then, interact with her over the phone or in person and re-spark some of her feelings of respect, sexual attraction and love for you, so she remembers why she married you in the first place (e.g. because you make her feel like a feminine woman, youâ€™re emotionally strong and she can always depend on you to be the man in the relationship, you and her have the same dreams and plans for the future that youâ€™re working towards).

Another thing to consider isâ€

4. Are there men in her life (e.g. at work) who are interested in her?

Unfortunately, there are some men out there (usually men who struggle to attract women and get a girlfriend) who prey on lonely, unhappy married women.

Guys like that try to grow on her over time and hope that they will eventually be able to get a chance to have sex with her, or even a relationship.

So, if you and your wife at a point where you're no longer having sex or being intimate with each other in any way, or if she's been feeling neglected and taken for granted, then having another man available to her who is willing to flirt with her and make her feel desirable can be a threat to your marriage.

Of course, not all women will cheat on their husband during time apart, but it is a risk, especially if her real reasons for wanting time apart are that she no longer loves you in a romantic way and has a crush on a guy at work.

It all depends on how much trouble you feel your marriage is in and on how vulnerable your wife is at the present moment.

Either way, if your wife is currently not getting the attraction experience she wants from you in the marriage, she may be open to getting it from another guy and that can happen whether she's still in a relationship with you, or taking some time apart.

The main thing to remember is that if you don't want her to stray, you need to use every chance you get to restore her sexual and romantic feelings for you.

Another thing to consider is!

5. Is she going to be going out for girl's nights with her friends?

Going out with the girls doesn't guarantee that your wife will be unfaithful to you, but going out with single girlfriends when she's feeling vulnerable in her marriage can definitely lead to trouble.

The fact is that nightclubs, bars and parties are designed for drinking, partying, dancing and finding someone to hook up with sexually or romantically.

If your wife is going to bars, clubs and partying with her single girlfriends, she is going to be bumping into a lot of guys who will want to hook up with her.

Add few drinks and she may become more open to the idea of having a one night stand than she would be if she was sober (alcohol temporarily raises a woman's level of testosterone, thereby increasing libido and reducing inhibitions).

So, unless your wife is the type of woman who doesn't drink alcohol, if she is going partying with her single girlfriends, she will usually be having a drink or two and becoming more open to flirting with other men, especially if she hasn't been feeling very desirable in her marriage of late.

Where Some Husbands Go Wrong When a Wife Asks For Time Apart

Whether you should trust your wife when she is asking for time apart is entirely up to you.

However, if you want to stay married, there are definitely some things you should avoid doing from this moment onwards:

For example: Here are where other men go wrong when in your situation!

1. Not reactivating her feelings of respect, attraction and love before she has time apart from him

If your wife is determined to take some time apart, trying to stop her can be a mistake.

Unfortunately, she is your wife, but she's not your property and she can go if she wants to.

Saying things like, â€œI won't let you leave,â€ or â€œI don't want time apart and if you love me, you will stay and try to fix things between us,â€ will only make her more determined to get some space away from you.

So, what can you do instead?

You need to use whatever time you have left with her to restore some of her positive feelings for you (e.g. respect, sexual attraction, love).

You need to make her feel so good again that she starts to wonder, â€œWhy am I even thinking about taking time apart? Why would I want to leave my husband when it feels so wonderful to be around him again?â€

Then, not only will she likely change her mind about taking time apart (i.e. because you're making her feel the way she wants to feel when she's with you), if she does decide to go, she will probably spend most of her time thinking about you and missing you.

Alternatively, if you just let her go without doing anything to restore some of her feelings for you, then she will be much more tempted to stray if another guy is able to attract her and turn her on as he talks to her.

The next mistake that other men make in your situation is

2. Putting so many restrictions on the time apart that she feels compelled to cheat out of spite

A guy might say to his wife, â€œOkay, I will agree to time apart, but only if you promise me that you won't go out partying with your friends, you won't work late or go out with your colleagues (especially with the men in your office that are probably interested in you) and that you'll text me and call me every day to tell me what you're doing and who you're with.â€

As you would understand, acting like your wife's jailer and treating her like a little girl that needs to be kept under strict supervision, is the quickest way to make her want to do naughty, bold things just to spite you.

3. Trying to make her feel sorry for him because he doesn't want the time apart

In some cases, a guy might try to put his wife through a guilt trip to hopefully stop her from taking time apart.

For example: He might say things like, â€œI love you and I took our marriage vows to you seriously. I said that I would commit to you for life and you said the same thing to me. We promised each other that we'd stick by each other through good times and bad. So, why can't you just put in the effort to work things out? Why do you have to get away from the marriage for that to happen? Can't you see that I don't want to be apart from you for even one day? When I said â€œI doâ€ to you, I meant it. Being married includes putting in the effort to fix things when everything isn't going well, not running away just because you don't like something. All I care about is you and what we have together. If you leave me, I will be destroyed. I will lose the will to live. What's worth living for if I don't have you? Don't do this to me, to us. Please.

Essentially, he's hoping that if she feels sorry for him, she will change her mind about taking time apart.

Yet, attempting to make a woman feel guilt for how she's feeling and what she wants (i.e. to take time apart) only turns her off even more.

Why?

When a man does that, it comes across as selfish and possibly even a little bit immature and childish.

The man is going on about his feelings, what he wants and is trying to manipulate her into staying with him so he can feel good about himself.

Yet, he's not considering her feelings and what she wants.

Here's the thing!

A woman doesn't like to feel like she's doing a man a favor by being with him.

She wants to be with a man that she is in love with, respects and naturally feels attracted to because he is a good man that she can look up to and rely on.

Even if a woman is really soft-hearted and agrees to stay and try to work on their marriage, if the man is unable to restore and build on her romantic feelings for him, she will want to have time apart so she can start to move on.

So, if you don't want to drive your wife further away from you and the marriage, make sure not to play the pity card with her.

Instead, focus on restoring her feelings of respect, sexual attraction and love for you.

Make her want to stay with you, rather than making her feel as though she is being made to feel sorry for you and has to give you another chance out of pity.

Another mistake that other men make when in your situation is!

4. Not being able to trust his gut instinct to sense her true intention

Sometimes when a man is asking, Should I trust my wife when she's asking for time apart? it's usually because deep down, his gut instinct is telling him that the answer is No.

He can sense that she's just asking for time apart as an excuse to start creating a life without him, so she can then divorce him with less hassle.

Here's the thing!

You probably already know whether or not you can trust your wife.

So, what you might want to ask yourself instead is, If my wife's true intention is to get out of our marriage, what am I going to do about it? Am I going to sit back and let her go, or am I going to actively focus on re-sparking her feelings for me so that she wants to stay?

How to Become Closer as a Couple

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Relationships usually start out pretty well.

The couple feels attracted to each other and they go on nice dates and they fall in love.

They feel like they're close because they start kissing and having sex and they feel so good around each other.

They're around each other all the time, talking to each other and getting to know each other.

It's fascinating and interesting to get to know each other.

Yet, somewhere along the line, she changes.

[image: She starts to become distant]

She doesn't feel the same way anymore.

She starts to become distant.

She changes into a completely different person than she used to be.

She used to be so nice and sweet but now she's distant and doesn't really care much about the relationship or him.

So, how can a man fix that?

How can he make sure that she starts being close with him again, she starts being affectionate, she starts being loving and warm and attentive?

How can he make sure that she doesn't become distant again in the future? Here are three examples of how to do it.

1. Overcome problems together

As you go through life, you will encounter challenges and obstacles that you need to overcome.

Some guys see that as bad luck.

They see it as their life not working out well.

They look at other people experiencing success and achieving the things that they want but they don't have it in their life.

So, the guys starts thinking, "I've just got bad luck. Things never work out for me. Life is too difficult, it's so unfair. Why is this happening to me?" and so on.

A woman doesn't want her man to react to life in that way.

If he is always getting upset or playing the victim or feeling like life is too difficult, then she has to take on more of a mother or big sister role in his life.

She doesn't want to feel like she is the stronger one or the more mature one.

She wants to see that her man can handle life no matter what comes his way, he's able to remain strong and overcome problems and challenges and obstacles.

If it's a problem, obstacle or challenge that both you and her are facing together, she will be happy to participate and help out but she will want you to be the stronger one.

She will want to see that you don't crumble when faced with challenges, obstacles or problems in life.

What a real man does is that as he encounters challenges and obstacles in life, he steps up to the plate to meet the challenge and overcome it.

The thing is some guys are very good at doing that when it comes to video games.

They play video games and are happy to go through the levels.

The levels get increasingly challenging as they go along but the guy doesn't complain and say, "Oh, this is unfair. Life is unfair. It's all too difficult. I can't do it. Things don't work out for me."

What he does is he keeps playing and he gets past that level and he goes on to the next level. His skills improve and he can access new levels.

The same applies with life and relationships with women.

As you're going through life with your woman, you will encounter challenges and obstacles and as you and your woman overcome those challenges and obstacles and reach a new level, you become closer as a couple.

What she wants to see is that you don't lose confidence and start complaining and getting depressed when you encounter challenges or obstacles.

You step up to the plate and you meet that challenge, you overcome it and you step up to the next level.

When you and her overcome challenges and obstacles together as a couple, you then begin to develop good history together where you can look back and say, "Hey, remember when we overcame that and then we were able to do this? Remember when this happened and we did that and it brought us to this level and now we're at this place and it's so much better?"

If she can see that you have been her rock all along and she can always rely on you, she will be close with you.

She will hold onto your arm. She will look at you with respect. She will look at you with loving eyes. She will want to be close to you because you are her man. You are the man that she looks up to and respects.

2. Discuss rather than argue

[image: Discuss rather than argue]

In a relationship with a woman, it's impossible to never disagree on something.

You're going to come across things that you disagree on. That's completely natural and normal.

Yet, rather than getting into arguments with her and verbally attacking her and insulting her, you need to discuss things.

As the man, you need to maintain control of your emotions. So, you discuss things with your woman rather than arguing with her.

Women hate it when a man can't control his emotions and reacts to her tantrums and insults and moody behavior.

She doesn't want a man who reacts to her and starts losing control of his emotions. She wants a man who maintains control.

If you get into the habit of arguing with your woman and reacting negatively to her tantrums, then she's not going to want to be close with.

She's going to start to become distant. Women feel turned off by men who can't control their emotions around a woman.

The third example of how to be closer as a couple is...

3. Don't put her in the position of power

[image: Don't put her in the position of power]

What a woman really wants is to be in relationship with a man that she can look up to and respect.

She wants a man to create the relationship dynamic where she actually feels happy about doing good things for him.

She feels happy to follow his lead, to listen to what he says. She wants to be a good girl for him.

Yet, what some guys do is they give their power over to the woman because she starts becoming demanding and throwing tantrums and he thinks, "Screw this. I don't want to have to deal with all that. Just let her have whatever she wants."

What happens then is she starts to become distant.

She is with a man who is following her lead. She's with a man who is reacting to her.

He's not in control.

He can't handle a woman like her.

So, she's not going to feel the want and need to be close to him.

She's going to feel like she wants to get away from him because she's not being her true self around him.

She's changed. She has become a woman that she doesn't want to be. She wants to be a good woman for her man.

She wants to be a woman who is happy to do good things for her man, to treat him well, to be affectionate, to be attentive, to look out for him. She wants to be like that.

Summary

Okay, so the three examples of how to become closer as a couple are:

1. Overcome problems together.
2. Discuss rather than argue.
3. Don't put her in the position of power.

So, with the first one, she wants to see that you are a strong man that she can rely on.

When you do that, she will naturally want to be close to you.

She will respect you and feel attracted to you and remain in love with you.

You will be her strong man that she can always rely on. However, if you aren't able to overcome problems and challenges and you crumble when faced with obstacles in life, she will start to distance herself from you.

A woman doesn't want to be stuck with a weak man.

Some women put up with it but most women just don't want to be stuck with a man that they need to carry throughout life.

The next example, discuss rather than argue.

If you're always arguing with your woman, then you're obviously not going to be close as a couple.

It's going to make you and her disconnect from each other. However, if you can be the stronger one and discuss things rather than arguing, she will naturally respect you, feel attracted to you and feel love for you.

Finally, don't put her in the position of power.

If a woman is in a position of power and you're always sucking up to her or doing whatever she wants, then she's going to lose respect for you.

When a woman loses respect for you, she stops feeling proper sexual attraction for you.

It's difficult for her to feel sexually attracted and want to submit to a man that she doesn't even look up to and respect.

If that goes on for long enough, she starts to fall out of love with her guy.

She begins to become distant and he may then become insecure or angry at her for changing like that, yet she doesn't actually want that to be happening.

She wants to be in love, she wants to respect her man, she wants to feel attracted to him and she wants to be close to him.

Okay, so those were three examples of how to become closer as a couple.

If you've enjoyed what you've learned so far and you like to learn more, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You for Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn exactly what to say and do to make your woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you and be totally in love with you for life.

When you use the techniques in the program, you and her will become increasingly close as a couple.

You'll be one of those couples that other people look at and think, "How do they do it? Why are they so happy? Why are they so close? How do they get along so well? Why are they still affectionate years or decades into their relationship or marriage? Why is she such a good woman to him?"

She Wants to Be in Love and Be Close With You

What you need to understand about a relationship with a woman is that she actually does want to be in love.

She does want to be close with you.

She does want to be able to respect you and feel sexually attracted to you and be totally in love with you.

The way that women work in a relationship with a man, is that they are reactive (i.e. they react to your approach).

If you change your approach, she changes how she feels.

For example: If a guy is being insecure in a relationship, it's going to make his woman feel turned off and she's going to become distant.

Yet, when he starts being confident in his interactions with her and in the relationship in general, her feelings start to change.

She starts to feel attracted to him again. She starts to feel respect for him again.

That's the way that women work. They react to the man's lead.

If you are saying and doing things that make her feel respect, attraction and love for you, she's going to go along with that.

She's going to feel respect, attraction and love for you.

Yet, if you are saying and doing things that cause her to lose respect for you, feel turned off by you and fall out of love with you, she'll go along with that, too.

What she really wants is to be close with you.

She wants to be in love with you.

She wants to respect you.

She wants to feel attracted to you.

Stopping Negative Chain Reactions in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Everything that you say or do in a relationship with a woman has a positive or negative chain reaction effect.

For example: A negative chain reaction effect is where a man is in a relationship with a woman and he becomes insecure about his attractiveness to her.

He starts to doubt whether he is good enough for her and begins to feel as though she is more attractive than him and she could probably find herself a better man.

As a result, he begins to change his behavior.

He becomes insecure. He might become a bit clingy and needy and he just won't be that confident guy that she met at the start.

[image: Woman reacting to her man's insecurity]

She then notices the change in his confidence and self-esteem and it turns her off because women are turned off by emotional weakness in men.

She then stops being as affectionate as she used to be and she starts to become a bit distant. He then notices that she's not being as affectionate and is being distant, which makes him feel even more insecure about his attractiveness to her.

As a result, the relationship starts to fall apart and soon enough she says that she doesn't feel the same way anymore and wants some space or she cheats on him or breaks up with him.

So, it all started from that initial mistake of becoming insecure and letting it snowball into something that became bigger and bigger and causes more damage in the relationship.

Now, let's look at a positive chain reaction effect...

A guy is in a relationship with a woman and he maintains his confidence in his attractiveness to her. She notices his maintained confidence and it maintains and builds on her respect and attraction for him.

She knows that pretty much every other guy that she has met has become insecure at some point.

Yet, the guy that she's with now is able to maintain his confidence. He hasn't become insecure.

As a result, the respect, attraction and love that she feels for him deepens over time rather than fading away.

Lessons About Love

[image: Lessons about love]

The thing is, when we're growing up, we don't get taught how to have a successful relationship with a woman when we're at school or at university.

You have to figure it out on your own, learn from people who know what they're doing, or if you're lucky, you have a role model in your life like a father or an uncle or a big brother who understands women and teaches you all about it.

At the end of the day though, a guy needs to know what he's doing with women otherwise, he'll be creating negative chain reaction effects that will destroy his relationships.

It doesn't matter if the relationship starts out well and he and the woman go on nice dates and they have great sex and they go on holidays or vacations.

That doesn't mean anything if later on he is setting off negative chain reaction effects that ruin her respect, attraction and love for him.

For example: Rather than becoming insecure and becoming clingy, some guys become careless with their woman.

They start taking her for granted and treating her badly and just expect her to put up with it.

Some women do put up with being taken for granted and treated badly if they're really attracted to their guy, but eventually, it will just be too much for her.

She'll get to the point where she will realize that she's not really being respected and she could find herself another guy and be loved and respected so she breaks up with the guy who's taking her for granted.

2 Examples of Positive Vs. Negative Chain Reaction Effects

Okay, so to make things really clear, here are two examples of positive and negative chain reaction effects.

The first example is a positive chain reaction effect...

A guy remains confident in his relationship with a woman. As a result, the woman's respect, attraction and love deepens over time.

The negative chain reaction effect is where a guy becomes insecure in his relationship with a woman. As a result, the woman's respect, attraction and love for him fades away over time.

The next example...

Positive chain reaction effect: A guy remains in control of his emotions when his woman throws a tantrum. He uses humor to change her mood and stop her from creating drama. Her respect, attraction and love for him deepens over time.

Negative chain reaction effect: a guy loses control of his emotions when his woman throws a tantrum. He gets into a battle with her and her mood worsens. When that happens often enough, the woman's respect, attraction and love fades away over time.

You Don't Have to Be Perfect

[image: Using positive chain reactions to cement your relationship together for life]

What you need to understand is that you don't have to be perfect, but you do need to make sure that you are in control of the chain reaction effects in your relationship.

For example: When a man is in a relationship with a woman, he will sometimes say or do something that he thinks is fine, but really upsets her. He won't know why it has upset her, but it really has upset her.

She may then stop being affectionate and she might become distant and she might start changing her behavior and treating him badly.

He might then think, “What is wrong with this woman? Why is she being like this?”

Yet, what she is waiting for is for him to understand what has caused the problem and to begin to change that.

That annoys some men because they think, “Why are women so complicated? Why don’t women just say what they mean and tell us men what to do in a relationship?”

The thing is though, a woman doesn’t want to be the leader, the boss, or the guide in a relationship. She wants a man who understands how to be the man in a relationship.

She doesn’t want to have to say, “Hey, when I’m being bitchy towards you, don’t put up with it. Say this and do this and put me back in my place. But do it in a loving way, too. Don’t be a prick about it but put me back in my place.”

She doesn’t want to have to say that.

She wants a man who understands how to be a man and if he doesn’t understand how to do it, she wants him to go and figure it out and then start doing it.

Most women are reactive in a relationship (i.e. they react to what the man does, they follow his lead, go along with the relationship dynamic he creates even it turns her off).

If the man creates a relationship dynamic where the love is flowing and she’s respecting him and she feels attracted to him and she’s a good woman to him, a woman goes along with that.

However, if a man creates a relationship dynamic based on insecurity and lack of trust, then she goes along with that as well.

She reacts to his lead.

He’s setting off those negative chain reaction effects of mistrust and insecurity and she allows it to exist.

She doesn’t say, “Hey, hang on, hang on, hang on. Sit down. Let’s have a conversation here. All right, I noticed that you’re becoming insecure. What I need from you is to be a man who’s emotionally strong and confident. If you become insecure then I’m going to start to lose respect and attraction towards you and the relationship is going to begin to fall apart. So I need you to remain strong. Be a strong man for me. Be someone that I can look up to and respect.”

She doesn’t want to take on that role because it makes her feel like his mother, or big sister, or teacher in life about how to be a man.

She just wants a man who understands how to be a man in a relationship or a man who will go and figure it out and then start doing that.

When a guy figures out how to be the man in a relationship and starts doing it, he sets off positive chain reaction effects and the woman reacts to that by being a better woman for him.

She respects him. She feels sexually attracted to him. She’s in love with him and she treats him well.

You Change, She Changes

[image: Her respect, attraction and love deepens over time]

When a man makes some small changes and tweaks to what he's saying and doing around his woman, she changes.

For example: If a woman is being distant and isn't being affectionate, she will then change and start being more loving and affectionate towards him.

The reason why is that most women are reactive.

They follow the man's lead.

If a man creates the relationship dynamic that results in her wanting to be affectionate and loving, she will go along with that.

However, if a man creates the relationship dynamic that causes her to be distant and not want to be affectionate, she will do that.

She is simply reacting to what he is saying and doing in the relationship.

What a woman wants is for a man to create the type of relationship dynamic that results in her feeling respect, attraction and love for him.

If that isn't there, a woman will wait and hope that the man creates that.

When he does, she will change.

She'll start being a better woman for him.

She'll be more affectionate.

She'll be more loving and she'll treat him with respect.

However, if he doesn't fix the problem and continues to set off negative chain reaction effects, the woman will become increasingly unhappy and she will break up with him.

Okay, so I hope you've enjoyed this video and learned something from it.

If you'd like to learn more, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You for Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn exactly what to say and do to make your woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you and be totally in love with you for life.

You will learn how to effortlessly set off positive chain reaction effects in your relationship.

When you do that, your relationship literally gets better and better every day, every week, every month and every year that you're together.

Your woman becomes more respectful, more attracted and more in love with you all the time.

When you are setting off positive chain reaction effects in a relationship with a woman, her respect, attraction and love deepens over time.

It doesn't fade away.

She becomes an increasingly better woman for you.

She is always trying to impress you and maintain your interest and be a good woman for you.

She feels so much love, so much attraction and so much respect for you, that it actually makes her happy and gives her pleasure to be a good woman for you.

That's what happens when you are in control of the chain reaction effects in your relationship.

You set off positive chain reaction effects and you and her become one of those couples that other people look at and think, "How do they do it? Why are they so happy? Why don't I have what they have?"

The Fear of Losing Your Woman

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Have you ever found yourself in a relationship with a woman where you were secretly worried about her cheating on you or finding another guy attractive and then deciding to break up with you and be with him?

Some guys feel that fear at the start, but for most guys, it usually happens when the woman starts testing him during the first few months of the relationship.

At the start of the relationship, the woman may have made him feel very safe by showing how in love with him that she was.

She was so affectionate, so loving and would look at him as being the one and always want to be around him.

She may have also talked about how she wanted to settle down with him and start a family with him maybe and be with him forever.

So, he felt safe at the start.

Yet, somewhere along the way, something she has said or done has made him feel insecure.

He doesn't feel safe about her attraction and commitment to him and starts to feel as though he's losing her.

He might then start unnecessary arguments based on suspicions he has that she might want to cheat or she might like another guy.

He might start to become controlling (e.g. demand that she returns home at a specific time, look through her phone, not allow her to talk to certain friends and so on).

He might also become needy (e.g. needing her reassurance that she loves him and would never leave him).

He might also display insecurity about his attractiveness to her (e.g. asking her if she still finds him attractive or being overly sensitive about any comment she makes about his appearance or attractiveness that don't make him feel good).

[image: Woman losing respect and attraction for her man in a relationship]

She then begins to lose respect for him and she stops feeling attracted to him.

When that happens, she begins to fall out of love with him and she actually starts thinking of maybe wanting another man.

He then notices the change in her and becomes even more insecure, which turns her off even more.

She then begins to feel attracted to confident guys or even just normal guys who seem a bit more confident and balanced than her current guy.

Eventually, she cheats on him or dumps him.

A lot of guys go through that cycle of insecurity in their relationships with women.

For some guys, the insecurity starts immediately.

For other guys it takes a few months to start feeling that insecure and for other guys, it may take years.

Yet, the result is always the same.

When a man becomes insecure in a relationship and develops the fear of losing his woman to another man, it turns her off at a deep level and begins to make the relationship fall apart.

As I said, when he becomes insecure, she then starts feeling turned off by him. She then shows less affection and interest which makes him feel even more insecure and the problem gets worse.

So how do you avoid that happening?

How can you escape the fear of losing her to another man?

How can you stop yourself from ruining a relationship due to insecurity?

What you need to do is be in control of the amount of respect, attraction and love that you're making your woman feel.

For example: If a man is in a relationship with a woman and he's being insecure, then he is contributing to her loss of respect, attraction and love for him.

Women aren't attracted to the emotional weakness in men. They're attracted to the emotional strength, so a man needs to be confident with his woman.

He needs to be emotionally strong.

When he does that, she naturally feels respect, attraction and love for him.

Another example is where a man is in a relationship with a woman and she treats him badly. She disrespects him.

He gets that gut instinct reaction that she has crossed the line yet he doesn't know how to get her to start treating him better again.

He doesn't know how to get her to stop disrespecting him.

So, what some guys will do is they'll think, "Oh well, this is just the way that women are. They are a pain in the butt. You can't really get them to be nice to you. You've just got to put up with it and you know, she's going to be a bitch. That's just the way it goes."

Yet, when he doesn't put her back in her place and get her to say sorry and respect him, she notices that.

She feels his inability to be the more dominant one in the relationship.

When I talk about being the more dominant one and putting her in a place, I'm not talking about being aggressive and angry and shouting at her or anything like that.

It's simply about being the man in a loving but assertive way, letting her know that you're not going to put up with bad behavior and bad treatment of you.

The thing is, women actually respect that and actually feel attraction and love for men who don't let themselves be pushed around.

You might have heard some women say that they don't like pushover type of guys, but you might have also heard women say that they like nice guys and good guys.

So, what's going on there? What do women really mean and what do they really want?

What a woman really means and what she really wants is a good man who doesn't let himself get pushed around by a woman.

When you're able to get your woman to respect you and be a good woman to you, she feels respect, attraction and love for you on a level that she has most likely never felt for another man.

She knows that other men simply can't handle a woman like her, but you can.

She looks up to you and respects you. She always feels sexually attracted to you and she's totally in love with you.

When that is the case in a relationship, she doesn't want to hook up with another guy and she doesn't want to leave you, because she knows that other guys don't even come close to you.

Other guys are unable to manage and control the attraction in the relationship. They lose control.

Most guys become insecure. They give the woman too much power or they get angry and try to control the woman.

[image: Man losing control of his relationship with a woman]

That's not what she wants.

What a woman wants is a good man who doesn't let himself get pushed around by a woman.

A man who lets her know her place and her place is not above him in terms of dominance.

Of course, that's not a politically correct thing to say.

A lot of women these days think that women rule the world, that women are the new men and men need to bow down at women's feet.

Yet, the reality is a woman is at her happiest and she's the most in love, she's the most attracted and she's the most respectful of her man when he is above her in terms of dominance.

It doesn't mean that she's beneath him in terms of importance, or value, or intelligence.

It just means that she's beneath him in terms of dominance.

That's what women really want.

They're not going to go around necessarily saying that because they don't want other guys to get the wrong idea.

For example: If a woman goes around saying that she wants to be beneath a man in terms of dominance, a lot of people are going to look down on her.

They're going to start saying, "Hey, be stronger, girl. Be the dominant one. Women power. Girl power. Women rule the world." She's going to get reactions like that.

Alternatively, some guys might be confused about what she wants and think, "Oh, she wants a dominant guy. She likes that, does she? Well, I'll show her. I'll be really dominant. I'll be super-dominant and aggressive and then she's going to really like me."

Yet, that's not what she's asking for.

She's not asking to be pushed around or disrespected.

She just wants a good man who doesn't let himself get pushed around by a woman.

So, when a man is able to do that in a relationship, his woman's feelings of respect, attraction and love deepen over time.

She doesn't want to leave him or be with any other guy, so he doesn't have to live in fear that she's going to leave him, or cheat on him, or dump him one day.

He knows that she wants to be with him and that her feelings of respect, attraction and love are growing stronger by the day.

She respects him, she feels sexually attracted to him and she's totally in love with him.

To summarize, two things that you can do to escape the fear of losing your woman to another man are:

1. Be in control of the amount of respect, attraction and love that you're making your woman feel.
2. Don't put up with her bad treatment of you.

What you've got to remember is that women don't actually want to treat you badly.

Women test men by treating them badly and seeing how much they can get away with.

They don't want a man to react by getting angry and aggressive and controlling.

A woman wants a man to put her back in her place in a dominant but loving way.

It's not about being bad to her.

It's not about being aggressive.

It's simply about being a good man who puts her back in her place in a dominant, but loving way.

Although you won't see many women going around admitting that they want a man to treat them in that way, it's actually what women want.

A woman is at her happiest when she fully respects her man, she feels sexually attracted to him and she's totally in love with him.

Yet, if he lets her get away with treating him badly and disrespecting him and he doesn't know how to put her back in her place in a dominant but loving way, she will lose respect for him.

When a woman loses respect for a guy, she stops feeling proper attraction for him.

Then if that goes on for long enough, she begins to fall out of love with him.

When she no longer feels a lot of respect for him and doesn't really feel attracted and has fallen out of love with him, then she's going to start thinking of cheating on him, or breaking up with him so she can find herself a new man.

With the first example, what a lot of guys don't realize is that they can be in control of the amount of respect, attraction and love their woman feels for them.

The reason why you can be in control is that a woman's feelings for a man are mostly based on how he thinks, talks, behaves and acts around her and in life.

For example: In the relationship, has he become insecure or has he maintained his confidence? Does he make her feel like a feminine woman or does he make her feel like more of a friend or worse, make her feel like she's more powerful and dominant than him?

Likewise, has he continued to make his woman feel happy to be with him or has he slipped into a habit of becoming annoying and irritating to her?

The thing is when you are in control over the amount of attraction that you're making your woman feel, you don't have to live in fear that she's going to leave you.

You know that she wants you.

You know that she respects you.

You know that she feels attracted to you and you know that she's totally in love with you.

With the second example, you must ensure that you don't put up with her bad treatment of you.

The reason why is that if you put up with a woman's bad treatment of you, she will lose respect for you and when that happens, she will stop feeling proper attraction for you.

If that goes on for long enough, she'll fall out of love with you.

When that happens, she will then want to be with another man or leave the relationship.

You Can Be in Control of How Much She Feels For You

What I want you to know is that you can be in control over the amount of respect, attraction and love that you woman feels for you.

You can also be in the position of power.

You can be the man that she looks up to and respects and treats with respect. She treats you well and she is a good woman to you.

When you create that type of relationship dynamic, a woman is so happy and she does not want to leave you.

Okay, so those are two examples of how to escape the fear of losing your woman to another man.

If you've enjoyed what you've learned so far and you'd like to learn more, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program Make Her Love You for Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will discover powerful techniques that make a woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you and be totally in love with you for life.

When you have this type of knowledge, you don't live in fear that your woman is going to leave you one day.

You know that most guys out there simply don't compare to you.

It's only a very small percentage of men out there who are able to give women the type of relationship experience that I'm talking about here.

Most guys are able to make a woman feel attracted and respectful and in love at the start of a relationship, but most of those guys do not know how to maintain that and build on it over time.

You see, in a relationship a woman tests a man.

She throws out all sorts of tests to see if she can make him feel insecure, to see if she can gain power over him.

If she is able to make him feel insecure and gain power over him, she starts to lose respect and attraction for him.

If it happens too often and for too long where she's able to make him feel insecure and take power away from him in the relationship, she will start to think about wanting to be with another guy.

She will naturally start to find other guys more attractive than her man because she doesn't respect him.

She doesn't feel much attraction for him anymore and she's falling out of love with him because of her lack of respect and attraction for him.

Yet, here is the really cool thing...

When you're in a relationship with a woman, in most cases she's just waiting and hoping that you get her respect and attraction back so she doesn't have to go through a breakup.

Most women don't want to have to go through break up after break up their entire lives.

They don't want to be that woman who's unlucky in love while their girlfriends and family members get into happy, loving relationships that last for life.

She doesn't want to be that woman.

She wants to be lucky in love.

She wants to stay with one man and be happy with him for life.

So, if you want to escape and avoid that fear of losing your woman to another man, you need to understand how to maintain and build on a woman's attraction in a relationship.

It's actually a very easy thing to do once you know what you're doing.

Yet, when a guy doesn't know what he's doing, women seem so complicated and they just don't make much sense to him at all.

For example: A man will be in a relationship with a woman and he'll say something or do something that really upsets her and he doesn't understand why.

He just doesn't get why that upset her, why she's being so distant now and why she's not being affectionate.

It just doesn't make sense to him.

Yet, for a guy who understands how to maintain and build on a woman's attraction in a relationship, it's a snack. It's easy.

Women's behavior is so predictable and easy to understand.

For example: A lot of the times when women treat you badly and disrespect you, it's simply a test to see if you'll put up with that type of behavior.

They're looking to see how you're going to react.

Are you going to just put up with it by being silent?

Are you going to try to suck up to her and hopefully get her to be nicer to you?

Are you going to get angry and lose control of your emotions or are you going to put her back in her place in a dominant, but loving way?

What you need to understand with women when it comes to relationships is that they essentially wait to see where you take the relationship.

If you allow the relationship to go down a path where she disrespects you and treats you badly and gets away with it, a woman will go down that path.

Yet, if you guide the relationship down the path of her respecting you and being good to you, being loving and being a good woman, she will go down that path as well.

What a lot of guys don't realize is that most women are at their happiest when they're in a relationship with a man who flicks on what I call the good girl switch in her mind.

This is where you create the type of relationship dynamic where she wants to be good to you and it actually makes her happy and gives her pleasure to be a good woman for you.

When you create that type of relationship dynamic, your woman feels so much respect, attraction and love for you that she's not interested in other guys.

Other guys simply don't compare.

You're making her feel like a real woman in a relationship because she has a man that she can look up to and respect, feel attracted to and be totally in love with.

The best thing about this though is that when you create that type of relationship dynamic, it's easier for you.

You don't have to constantly be trying to suck up to your woman.

You don't have to put up with her bad behavior and you don't have to waste time and energy getting into pointless arguments with her all the time.

She's on her best behavior.

She's being a good woman to you and it makes her happy to be good to you.

So, at the end of the day, by putting in less effort than other guys do, you get a happier, more loyal woman who loves you and looks up to you and always feel sexually attracted to you.

When you create that type of relationship dynamic and you maintain it, you don't have to live in fear that she's going to go and find another man attractive.

You know that she wants to be with you and she knows it and there's nothing to worry about.

The Good Girl Switch

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

What a woman really wants to do when she's in a relationship with a man is to be a good girl for him. Some women start off being that good girl for a man when the man and woman first begin dating (e.g. she's nice, sweet and affectionate and attentive towards him).

Yet, somewhere along the line, the good girl switch flicks off and she turns into a bit of a bitch, or she starts becoming very moody and withdraws her affection. She loses interest in having sex. She throws tantrums and seems to want to get everything her way.

[image: When a guy is unable to flick her good girl switch on and keep it on]

The thing is though, she doesn't actually want that to happen.

What she wants is to be a good girl for her man.

She wants to be able to cuddle into his arm and look at him with loving eyes and be sweet and affectionate towards him.

She wants to have the relationship dynamic where she enjoys getting down on her knees and sucking him off.

She enjoys asking something like, "Honey, do you want a coffee?" and she goes and makes a coffee for him and brings it back like a good girl.

He then gives her a spank on the butt and she sits next to him on the couch and cuddles into him.

She wants to be a good girl for him.

Yet, you won't often get women going around admitting that in public.

These days, a lot of women are embarrassed about wanting to be girly and feminine.

There are so many so-called strong women being role models in the media and saying that you've got to be strong, be like a man and essentially telling her not to be girly and feminine.

Yet, when you look at women who are the happiest in their relationship with a man, what's their behavior like?

She cuddles into his arms, she looks at him with loving eyes and she's a good girl to him.

She treats him well, she enjoys being affectionate with him and she enjoys doing nice things for him.

That's what a woman really wants.

A woman is at her happiest in a relationship when she's with a man who flicks that good girl switch on and keeps it on.

Some guys are able to get a woman to flick that good girl switch on when they begin dating, but somewhere along the way, the guy loses his way and the good girl switch flicks off.

For example: He becomes insecure, gives her too much power, can't handle her tests of his confidence or he just doesn't know how to maintain her respect and attraction for him, so the good girl switch goes off.

She turns into what he might refer to as a bitch, a pain in the butt, a moody woman, an annoying woman, a woman who is treating him badly.

Yet, what he doesn't realize is that she doesn't actually want to be doing that.

She wants him to bring out that good girl side of her and she's waiting for him to do that.

If he doesn't do it, she's disappointed.

She's in a relationship with a man who she's treating badly and she doesn't really respect and feel attracted to anymore.

She doesn't have that feeling where she wants to be good to him.

She wants to get down on her knees and suck him off. She wants to cook him food. She wants to be attentive and affectionate towards him.

Yet, that feeling is gone.

She doesn't want it to be gone, but it's gone because that good girl switch has been flicked off.

If a woman is in a relationship with a man who is not bringing her good side out, she will eventually start to want to leave the relationship.

She might cheat on him and then dump him, or just break up with him and try to find a new guy.

Yet, what often happens for women is that they find a new guy and he's able to bring that good girl side of her out at the start, but then he loses his way.

He basically makes the same mistakes as the other guy!

This is one of the reasons why rebound relationships fail so often.

What happens is that a woman breaks up with a guy who isn't bringing that good girl side of her out and she gets into a new relationship and the guy brings that side of her out, but then he starts becoming insecure.

He gives her too much power and doesn't know how to handle her changes in mood. When she starts becoming moody and testing his confidence, he just doesn't know how to handle it.

She then starts to change and she becomes a little bit bitchy or moody or selfish or demanding.

If the guy doesn't know how to flick her good girl switch back on, she just gets worse and the relationship gets worse, then they break up.

The thing is, women don't actually want that to happen.

A woman doesn't want to have to go through break up after break up and have to tell her family and friends, "Yeah. I'm single again," and be one of those women who can't get a relationship to work.

She doesn't want to be one of those women who are unlucky in love.

She wants a man who makes her feel like she wants to be a good woman for him.

He flicks that switch on in her mind and she actually gets pleasure and happiness out of being a good woman for him. It actually makes her happy to be good to him.

That is what most women really want.

I say most women, not all. Most women want to be a good woman for their man.

It actually makes them happy when the man is able to flick that good girl switch in her mind and she gets pleasure out of being a good woman for him.

When you see couples where the woman is cuddling into the man's arm and she's looking at him, she loves him and is attentive towards him and affectionate, you'll realize that the guy is doing it right.

He has flicked that switch in his woman's mind and he's kept it on.

Yet, when you see a guy in a relationship with a woman and she's being bitchy and selfish towards him, she's not affectionate, she expects so much from him and gives so little, you'll see that good girl switch has been flicked off and she's unhappy.

[image: Women don't want to treat you badly]

She doesn't actually want to be like that and if he doesn't flick that good girl switch back on, he's headed for getting cheated on, broken up with, or divorced.

Then she goes and tries to find herself another guy.

Often, she's unlucky. She finds another guy who's able to make her feel like that at the start, but then he screws it up and she turns into the woman who isn't affectionate anymore, who's being a pain in the butt, who's being moody all the time and essentially wants everything her way otherwise, she throws a tantrum or threatens to break up with him.

When you use the techniques from Make Her Love You for Life, a woman is affectionate, she's nice to you and it makes her happy to do good things for you.

You flick that good girl switch on in her mind and she only wants to be with you.

Nothing makes her happier than being in love with you, being good to you and enjoying her life with you.

What you need to understand is that women actually want it that way!

A woman wants a man to bring that good girl side of her out.

That makes her happy and it makes you happy.

The 5 Stages of a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

There are five stages of a relationship between a man and a woman.

1. Lust and romance.
2. Power struggle.
3. Working.
4. Commitment.
5. Blissful love.

Unfortunately, most couples only get to stage two and then break up.

Some couples get to stage three and four, but they're not really happy.

They feel more like friends, there's no sexual spark, or the woman or the man is thinking of maybe leaving and trying to find someone else.

The real prize of a relationship between a man and a woman is to get to the fifth stage, the Blissful Love stage.

When you reach the Blissful Love stage of a relationship, the love, respect, and attraction that you and your woman feel for each other deepens over time.

You feel sexually attracted to each other for life.

You're in love with each other for life.

You respect each other for life.

You have an amazing relationship and you're one of those couples that people look at and think, "How do they do it? Why are they so happy? Why don't I have what they have?"

The Stages, How Each One Works and Where Couples Go Wrong

So, let's have a look at each of the stages of a relationship.

I'll explain how it works, where couples go wrong and what you need to do to get to stage five where you experience Blissful Love and want to stay together for life.

1. Lust and Romance

[image: Lust and romance stage]

This is where you feel very sexually attracted to each other at the start and you fall in love, which is different to true committed love at the Blissful Love stage of a relationship.

In stage one, you don't really care about each other's faults.

You just want to be together, have sex and enjoy each other's company.

According to scientists, at this stage of a relationship, natural chemicals are released in the brain to make a couple want to be together, have sex and stay together long enough for offspring to be created.

[image: Love and lust chemicals released into the brain]

So, in the lust and romance stage of a relationship, which is otherwise known as the dating phase, the man and woman will experience a dump of natural chemicals in their brain.

Chemicals like dopamine, oxytocin, phenylethylamine and norepinephrine.

Unfortunately, most Hollywood movies show this stage of a relationship as being the peak of a relationship, so many people expect a relationship to just be like that for life, without having to go through any other stages of development.

The couple walks off into the sunset to live happily ever after.

So, for a lot of real life couples these days, when the first stage of a relationship starts to calm down, they begin to wonder, “Hang on, is this the right person for me? I’m not feeling the way I used to feel about her and she’s not behaving the way that she used to behave. She’s not looking at me in the same way as when we were dating. Does that mean that we’re not a match?”

As a result of the confusion, a lot of couples break up shortly after the Lust and Romance stage starts to calm down.

They simply don’t know that there are different stages to a relationship and that they can eventually get to Blissful Love if they stick together and ride the bumps all the way to victory.

The next stage of a relationship is the power struggle...

2. Power Struggle

[image: Power struggle stage of a relationship]

This is also where a lot of couples break up because their behavior changes and depending on how each person reacts, it will either bring them together or drive them apart.

For example: Sometimes a man will be shocked to realize that his woman isn’t behaving in the same way that she used to.

She was so nice and sweet to him at the start, but now she’s arguing with him, throwing tantrum and trying to get her way all the time.

When a guy is faced with that situation, he will sometimes make the mistake of gradually giving his woman too much power.

[image: Relationship falling apart at the power struggle stage]

The more power he gives her and the more he tries to suck up to her and do whatever she wants, the less respect and attraction she feels for him.

Some couples can stay together for a long time if the man hands over his power to the woman, but neither of them will ever truly be happy and reach Blissful Love.

When a man hands over his power to a woman because he doesn’t know how else to please her, she loses respect for him and gradually stops feeling attracted to him.

Eventually, she falls out of love with him.

She might stay with him (e.g. to pay off the mortgage, raise the children, avoid the embarrassment of breaking up or getting divorced), but she won’t be blissfully in love with him.

He handed over his power to her and she no longer feels like a real woman (i.e. feminine, girly, free to be emotional, totally in love with her man) anymore.

So, the relationship begins to feel strained, forced and could break up at any moment if a serious fight or argument makes one of them feel like enough is enough.

To get past the Power Struggle stage, you need to make sure that you are in the position of power as the man.

What a woman really wants is for a man to be in the position of power (even though she will rarely, if ever, admit that in public because she doesn't want men to get the wrong idea and start bossing her around because they hope it will make her want sex or a relationship).

Even though a woman does want a good man who treats her well, she doesn't want a pushover type of guy who does whatever she wants because he's either afraid of losing her, or lacks the emotional masculinity to stand up and be a man.

She wants a man that she can look up to and respect, not a guy that she has to carry throughout life. Being a man in the relationship isn't about bossing her around, being rude, being aggressive or anything old school like that.

It's simply about being the more emotionally strong one in the relationship, leading the way and allowing her to feel like a real woman in the relationship.

When you do that, she will naturally and happily support you, love you and be there for you in any way she can.

In other words, she will be devoted to you and be a loving, caring, supportive woman.

However, if you hand over power to her, she will feel stressed and resent you for not having the balls to be the man.

If she gets bored of the relationship and happens to meet a man who can take on the position of power, she will naturally feel attracted to him and may open herself up to cheating, or to breaking up with you to then be with him instead.

The third stage of a relationship is the Working stage of a relationship...

3. Working

This is where the relationship is working.

So, let's assume that a man was able to get past the Power Struggle stage with his woman and he is clearly in the position of power.

They're in love with each other and the relationship is working.

A lot of couples do get to this point, but this is also where a lot of couples break up.

[image: Relationship losing its spark at the working stage]

What happens is that over time, they start to become more like friends.

They don't put in the effort anymore to make each other feel attracted and they start to take each other's love, attraction and commitment for granted.

The relationship then goes from Working, to boring and then to falling apart.

Either the man or the woman will start thinking about cheating or leaving because they just don't feel like they're in love anymore.

The man doesn't feel much attraction for her.

She doesn't feel much attraction for him.

They feel more like friends, roommates or housemates and it's quite boring.

That's not a fun type of relationship.

It's not the Blissful Love type of relationship that you experience at stage five.

By the way...

Some men will ruin the relationship when it has been working by becoming too domineering or controlling.

A man will assume that if she liked him taking on the position of power, then she will really like him taking away all of her power and essentially controlling her life, her decisions, her feelings and her actions.

Obviously that isn't what a woman wants.

A woman wants a man who has the confidence and emotional masculinity (i.e. balls) to take on the position of power, but she also wants him to be respectful, loving and kind to her.

Being the man isn't about being a domineering asshole who rules over a woman's life.

It's about being the emotionally strong man (i.e. you're always emotionally strong no matter what you and her face or encounter in life) that she can look up to, respect and love.

If you do that, a woman will be so damn good to you for life.

She will know that it would be next to impossible for her to find another man like you and as a result, she won't want to ever cheat on you or leave you.

The fourth stage of a relationship is commitment...

4. Commitment

So, let's assume that the man was able to get past the Power Struggle stage, he then got the relationship to the Working stage and they remained in love.

As a result, the love, respect and attraction between him and her started to deepen over time.

The love wasn't fading away. The spark wasn't dying out. The spark was still there.

They were still in love and it was starting to deepen.

At that point in a relationship, it makes total sense to the man and the woman to commit to each other.

Most couples then either commit to having a relationship and staying together for life, but not getting married, or they get engaged and married.

If they haven't already moved in together, they do that at stage four.

If they've already moved in together, they start thinking about planning a family and begin working towards long-term mutually rewarding goals.

Unfortunately, though, many couples also break up after the Commitment stage of a relationship.

[image: Relationship falling apart after commitment]

When they first moved in together, got engaged or married, it all felt great.

However, over time, the relationship started to fall apart.

For example: The man started to cause his woman to lose respect for him by getting into arguments with her all the time and creating stress in their relationship.

Alternatively, he may have become clingy, needy or controlling and caused her to lose respect and attraction for him as a result of that.

What happens in a lot of relationships is that once a man has gotten his woman to move in with him, or get engaged or married, he slowly changes how he treats his woman.

In the first stage of the relationship (Lust and Romance), he may have taken her on lots of sweet, romantic or loving dates and seduced her into having a relationship with him.

When the relationship was Working and he got her to commit to him, he was most likely still on his best behavior, treating her well and keeping the relationship together.

Yet, after she committed to him and moved in with him, he gradually started to take her for granted (e.g. he became irritable around her, got into pointless arguments with her, insulted her often, complained about unimportant things all the time, stopped caring about how she felt and only cared about how he felt, expected her to respect him at all times, but he didn't offer her the same in return).

[image: Relationship falling apart after commitment]

Unlike in the past where a woman would stay with a man for life because it was shameful to break up or get divorced, in today's world, women are free to break up with or get divorced from a man.

So, to keep a relationship together for life, you've got to make sure that you get it to the fifth stage, Blissful love.

5. Blissful love

[image: Blissful love]

This is the ultimate prize of a relationship between a man and a woman.

It's the ultimate reward.

This is the best part of a relationship that you can ever experience, where you finally reach what people refer to as true love.

From that point onwards, you then experience lifelong happiness together as a couple where you enjoy spending time together, cuddling, kissing, having sex and achieving long-term mutually rewarding goals together.

[image: Blissful love]

Getting to the blissful love stage of a relationship also prevents both you and her from wanting to cheat.

The idea of cheating or leaving each other for someone else seems like the dumbest idea in the world because you're so in love.

You enjoy each other's company so much.

You're sexually attracted to each other, even though you've been together for years or decades.

You feel so good around each other and are achieving mutually rewarding long-term goals together, so there's no reason to leave each other.

By the way...

I know this from personal experience because I'm happily married and my wife and I have been at the Blissful Love stage of our relationship for a long, long time.

It literally gets better and better over time.

That's how it supposed to be.

When you get to Blissful Love and keep it there, you and her only want to be with each other.

There is no desire to cheat or leave because you already have exactly what you want and it feels amazing.

So, when you get your relationship to Blissful Love and keep it there, your woman will also never want to leave you.

Women know (from personal experience and from seeing what other women they know have gone through) that it's very difficult to find a man who can get a relationship to Blissful Love and keep it there.

So, when she finds a man who has that ability, there is no reason to leave him or cheat on him.

She already has her perfect man.

There's nothing that she needs from other men because she's already getting it with you.

The type of love that you experience at the Blissful Love stage of a relationship is different and arguably, it's way better than what you experience at the start (Lust and Romance).

What you experience at the start of a relationship is enjoyable.

It's fun.

You get that brain dump of chemicals and you want to be around each other all the time, but the same thing applies at the Blissful Love stage of a relationship.

Yet, it's a little bit different.

What happens is that both you and her experience what I call love attraction.

Love attraction is where both you and her feel completely attracted to each other even though you've been together for years or decades.

Even though you may have gotten some wrinkles over time, put on some weight, lost some weight, no longer have the muscles that you used to or she doesn't have the shapes that she used to, you are still both completely attracted to each other.

None of the changes to your physical appearance really matter because you are experiencing love attraction for each other, which is deeper and lasts for life.

You might have seen love attraction in action when you've observed older couples who are still madly in love even though they've been together for decades.

They still hold hands, they cuddle, they kiss and they look at each other with loving eyes.

That is what happens when you get to the Blissful Love stage of a relationship and keep it there.

When a Woman Loves You, But Isn't "in Love" With You

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a woman loves you but isn't in love with you, it means that you have lost her respect and attraction somewhere along the line.

When a man gets into a relationship with a woman at the start, he is usually able to make her feel respect and attraction for him and make her fall in love with him, but somewhere along the line he loses his way.

For example: He becomes insecure, jealous, controlling, argumentative, or he gives her too much power and starts sucking up to her. She then feels like she can't look up to him and respect him anymore.

[image: When she just doesn't feel the same way anymore]

When a woman can't look up to and respect her man, she doesn't feel good about having sex with him anymore.

It just doesn't feel right to her to submit to a man that she doesn't look up to and respect.

She loses that urge to want to lay down and spread her legs and receive the man because she just doesn't look up to him and respect him so it feels it feels kind of awkward for her.

She feels like she's stronger than him, so why should she be submitting to him?

[image: She loves you, but isn't in love with you]

It just doesn't feel right to her.

So, when a man is in a relationship with a woman who loves him as a person, but isn't in love with him, what she's waiting for is for him to regain her respect and flick her attraction switch back on.

The thing is, when a woman is in a relationship with a guy, she doesn't actually want to fall out of love with him.

She wants to be in love with him and she wants to look up to him and respect him and feel attracted to him, but she can't make that happen on her own.

It comes down to how you interact with her, what you say, how you behave, how you react to her.

In other words, when you're interacting with your woman, are you making her feel respect and attraction for you or are you turning her off?

For example: If a guy is interacting with his woman and he's being insecure, jealous, or controlling, that isn't going to make her feel respect and attraction, obviously.

However, if a man is interacting with his woman and he's being confident and emotionally strong, then she's going to feel respect and attraction for him.

Regain Her Respect First and Everything Else Will Flow on Naturally After That

So, what you need to understand is that if you want to make a woman love you again in a relationship, you've got to regain her respect (which is very easy to do) and then her attraction automatically starts to come back.

When that happens, the love starts to flow again.

She starts looking at you the way that she used to. She has those loving eyes. She wants to be affectionate towards you.

She wants to be close to you. It feels good to hug you and have sex with you and kiss you and be close to you. That makes her happy again.

Whereas, if a woman doesn't respect her man and she doesn't feel attracted to him, then it doesn't make her happy to be close with him.

It doesn't make her happy when he's trying to have sex with her and she's just not in the mood because she just doesn't feel it.

She doesn't respect him, doesn't feel much attraction for him and therefore she's not in love with him.

Yet, she's waiting.

She's waiting for him to flick that back on.

[image: Get the love flowing again]

She's waiting for him to regain her respect and allow her attraction to flick back on and the love to begin to flow once again.

By the way...

If you'd like to learn exactly how to get your woman to fall back in love with you again, I recommend that you watch or listen to my program, Make Her Love You for Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you'll learn exactly what to say and do to make your woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you and be totally in love with you for life.

Love Doesn't Die

Another thing that you need to understand about love is that it doesn't die.

When a woman loves you in a relationship and then falls out of love with you, the love doesn't die and completely disappear.

What happens is it that just goes into the background. It's there in the background and it's waiting to be activated again.

You can reactivate your woman's feelings for you.

They don't have to be turned off forever.

Feelings are not set in stone.

They can be turned back on and the process is that you get her respect back then her attraction starts to come back and the love starts to flow again.

It's a completely natural process and it's very easy to do.

How to Be One of Those Happy Couples Who Never Fight

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, how can you be one of those happy couples that never fight?

You might have seen those couples that always get along and they always support each other.

They're always so happy together.

No matter what they face, they always keep a positive attitude and work through the situation together and come out stronger as a result.

The thing is, it's not possible to never ever disagree on something with your woman.

You're going to have disagreements and sometimes you're going to misunderstand each other, but when you have the right foundation in place in your relationship, it won't turn into a big problem.

For example: If your woman respects you, feels attracted to you, is in love with you and you have great communication together, she's going to have a much higher tolerance to work through a problem with you rather than just getting angry, throwing her hands up and saying, "Screw this. This relationship is too stressful. I don't want to do this. I'm out."

However, if you're in a relationship where your woman doesn't respect you, she doesn't feel attracted to you anymore, she's not really in love with you and the communication between you and her doesn't flow very well, then when you and her experience problems together, she's going to have a much lower tolerance to put up with it.

If a woman is really happy, she's going to be willing to put up with a few bumps along the road, a few obstacles to overcome, a few hard times, but if a woman isn't happy in the relationship then her tolerance is going to be low.

[image: Woman with low tolerance for additional problems with the relationship]

She's not going to be willing to put up with a lot before she decides to either cheat on her guy and then leave him or just dump him and start anew.

Here's the thing...

Most relationships start off pretty well.

The man and woman are attracted to each other, they're interested in each other and they start kissing and potentially having sex very early on.

They go to dinner dates, go watch movies together and maybe go on holidays and vacations. They meet each other's friends and family and it's all great.

There are so many good feelings going on at the start.

Yet, all of that stuff doesn't count for much at all, if later on in the relationship, the guy starts to change.

If the guy starts becoming argumentative when he's talking to his woman and starts demeaning her or can't handle it when she tests his confidence by saying something mean to him, then the whole relationship dynamic starts to change.

Yet, when you think about the couples who are always happy together and they don't get into arguments, the guy will be very easy-going.

He's not going to react and get angry and emotional when his woman says or does something.

He's going to be easy-going.

He's going to maintain control of his emotions and he's not going to turn it into a big deal.

On the other hand, when couples get into fights all the time and can't really seem to get along after maybe two or three years together, it really comes down to the fact that the guy doesn't know how to react and respond correctly when his woman tests him, throws a tantrum, changes her mind all the time and essentially tries to stir the pot.

By throwing a tantrum, she's trying to make something happen. She's testing to see how he's going to react and if he reacts by getting angry or sulking or getting into a huge argument with her, then she starts to become distant.

She withdraws some of her affection and she doesn't look at him the way that she used to.

When a guy is faced with that type of situation in a relationship, he may become insecure and start to be jealous and controlling and needy, or he might start to become angry and really tell her off for changing and not behaving the way that she used to.

"Why are you being like this? I love you so much. I care about you. I'm such a good man to you, and why are you behaving like this?"

Yet, none of those approaches don't work.

So, what does work?

What does work is being able to be that confident, easygoing guy that doesn't react in a huge burst of emotion when his woman says or does something.

You maintain control of your emotions.

That is something that I provide many techniques and examples for in my program, Make Her Love You For Life

If you watch or listen to the program, you'll learn exactly how to keep a relationship happy, in love and passionate for life.

It's actually very easy to do, but most guys don't get this education when they're growing up.

It really depends on what role models they have around them.

Some guys are lucky to have a father or a grandfather or uncle or maybe an older brother who can teach them about women, who can teach them exactly how to react and respond to women, how to deepen a woman's respect, attraction and love overtime.

Yet, a lot of guys don't get that education.

As a result, a lot of guys get into relationships with women and at the start it seems all fine, but then the spark dies out.

She stops respecting him, she's no longer really in love with him and they might end up feeling more like friends or they might even feel like enemies in their own relationship.

What I can tell you from my personal experience being in a happy marriage that gets better and better all the time is that it's actually easy.

Once you know what you're doing, it's actually very easy to make a woman love you and be totally committed to you for life, but if you don't understand how to react and respond to women, relationships are difficult to maintain.

For example: If a woman throws a tantrum and the guy doesn't know how to respond to that and he gets angry or soaks or he turns it into a bigger thing than it is, then that's a huge waste of time and energy for him.

It also turns her off.

She doesn't want to get that sort of reaction from him.

However, if he's able to maintain control of his emotions and turn it into something that makes them love each other more and feel attracted and feel more respect for each other, then that's a good time.

The relationship gets better and better over time.

This is just one example, being one of those couples that never get into arguments.

There is much more to relationships than just that.

It's also about maintaining and building on a woman's sexual attraction for you.

A lot of guys find that their relationship with a woman is great at the start, but then the spark dies. They end up feeling more like friends.

That's not a good time, because there is no sex happening. There's no affection.

The guy might then end up looking at a lot of porn and the woman might end up thinking about having an affair.

For example: One study found that 39% of married women cheat on their husband and another study found that 68% of women admitted to cheating on their boyfriend during university years.

For the guy being cheated on in those situations, that's not a good time.

That's not fun.

Yet, have a think about that 39% statistic there.

39% of married women cheat on their husband. That means 61% don't.

You CAN have a relationship where your woman doesn't cheat.

You can have a relationship where the respect, attraction and love deepens over time.

You can also be one of those couples who are happy and never fight with each other.

You'll have things that you disagree on, and there will be misunderstandings, but it won't be a fight.

It'll just be a misunderstanding and then it turns into something to laugh about and feel good about and you fall more in love.

You feel more respect for each other, you feel more attracted to each other and your relationship gets better and better over time.

What to Do When the Feelings Aren't Mutual in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So what should you do if you find yourself in a relationship with a woman where the feelings aren't mutual?

You love her, you feel attracted to her, and you're willing to work on the relationship but she isn't. She seems to have checked out and she doesn't really care anymore.

She's lost interest and she doesn't want to try anymore.

Well, what a guy needs to realize is that if his approach hasn't been working, then he needs to change his approach.

For example: Some guys slip into the habit of complaining to their woman that she's not treating him the same way as he's treating her, she's not being affectionate, she's expecting so much of him and isn't giving much back to him.

She seems to have changed and become a completely different person and he wants to talk to her about that, complain about it and discuss it with her and he hopes that it will make her change.

Yet, that is not what makes a woman change.

On the other hand, some guys make the mistake of thinking, "Alright, she doesn't really feel the same way about me anymore. I know what I'm going to do, I'm going to be the best boyfriend or husband that I can be. I'm going to be really nice to her, I'm going to do the housework, I'm going to do sweet things for her, I'm going to be romantic, have date nights, buy her things, take her places, and hopefully, that's going to make her happy and feel the way that she used to feel about me."

Yet, it doesn't work because that is not what she's really looking for.

She doesn't want you focusing on how she's feeling and how she's behaving and then you reacting to that. It makes her feel like she's the leader. It makes her feel like you're following her.

That's not how women like their relationships and interactions to go with men.

If you think about the example of a woman dancing with a man, she likes a man who takes the lead with the dance.

She goes along and he turns her this way and that way and twirls her around, and that is when she's at her happiest.

She bends over backwards for him, she does whatever he wants and she's actually happy about that.

That dance analogy is a perfect way of explaining the simplicity of relationships between men and women.

You see, some men make it too complicated by sucking up to their woman and doing lots of things to hopefully please her, or by trying to discuss things with her and essentially get her to think and behave like a man.

For example: He'll say, "After all we've been through, now you're behaving like this. What has gotten into you? I'm a good man, I do all these things for you. We used to be so happy and now you've changed. Why can't you just go back to how you were before?"

She's not going to do that, though, because she wants to be able to react to her man's lead.

When dancing, reacting to a man's lead is pretty obvious.

She just turns where he wants her to turn, she twirls around when he wants her to twirl around, and she bends over backwards when he wants her to do that. That's pretty obvious.

Yet, how does it apply to a relationship? What sort of lead is she waiting to react to?

Well, it's actually very simple.

She's just waiting to react to how he talks to her, how he interacts with her, how he behaves around her, how he acts around her, what actions he takes.

She's waiting to react to that.

She's not expecting him to buy her lots of things, do all the housework, suck up to her, or sit her down and try to explain to her that she needs to think more like a man and really understand that, "Hey, we've been through a lot and you need to make sure that you're not changing."

She just wants to be a girl and react to how the man is making her feel.

The way that works with dancing is that the woman just wants to be the girl.

She wants the man to lead the way around the dance floor.

She follows his lead.

She reacts to his strength.

He turns her this way or that way and she just goes along with it.

He twirls her around, and she feels like a girl. She feels like the man is in control.

That's what women love.

That's what they want.

They don't want the man focusing on how she's feeling and what she's saying and what she's doing and then following her lead.

She wants to just let go and have the man lead her. What that means is that she just wants to react to how the man is talking to her and how he's behaving around her.

For example: If a woman is being distant with her man in a relationship and he makes her laugh by joking around and being a bit playful with her, then she's going to come alive.

She's going to be more present in the moment.

That doesn't mean that he needs to tell jokes 24/7 to make her not be distant.

It's just one of the things that he can do to get her to stop being so distant, to bring her back into the relationship where she is reacting to him, because that's what she really wants.

She doesn't want him looking at her behavior and her mood swings and either losing confidence in himself or getting angry at her.

What she wants is for him to start being the man that she can react to in a positive way.

What Women Say They Want and What They Really Want Are Usually Completely Different Things

Women often go around saying that men should do whatever women say.

Be nice to her if she's in a bad mood and do everything that she demands.

Yet, that's not what actually makes a woman happy when in a relationship with a man.

A woman is at her happiest when she is reacting to the dynamic and mood that the man is creating.

For example: He creates a relationship dynamic where they laugh and feel good around each other, are affectionate and support each other.

he then happily goes along with that and is one of those rare women who remain madly in love with their man for life and always want to impress him and treat him well.

Yet, if a man follows the woman's mood swings and tries to jump through endless hoops to impress her all the time, she becomes frustrated and annoyed that he is following her lead.

A woman will rarely explain that to a man, though, because she doesn't want to teach him how to be the man that she needs.

She doesn't want to feel like his big sister or mother and have to teach him all the time about how to be a man in a relationship with a woman.

She just wants a man who understands how to do it or is willing to figure it out and then start doing it.

What she wants is a man who doesn't get caught up in reacting to his woman's changing mood.

She wants you to know that you don't even need to worry about most of the things that she says or does.

Just take charge and lead the way, rather than getting caught up in reacting to her mood swings and things that she says.

She wants you to take charge and create the kind of relationship dynamic where it makes her happy to be a good woman to you, where she does what you want without making a big fuss about it.

She's a good woman to you and it makes her feel happy to do that.

When you take that approach in a relationship, it means that you get a better, more loving, and affectionate woman by putting in less effort.

You simply create feelings of respect, attraction, and love based on what you say and do around her, and she reacts to that by being the best woman that she can be for you.

She is loving, attentive, supportive, affectionate, sexual, and proud to be your woman. She is happy that she is in the role of reacting to you, rather than you getting caught up reacting to her.

Don't React to Her Mood Swings. Remain Confident and in Control

When you see women who are unhappy in a relationship with a man, you will notice that he is reacting to her mood swings and looking to her as being the leader of the relationship.

She doesn't want that.

She doesn't want a man who is always worried about her feelings and what she's thinking and what she's doing.

She just wants a man who makes her have strong feelings for him, based on what he says and does around her.

For example: If a guy is saying insecure things and being insecure around his woman, she isn't going to feel respect and attraction for him.

She's going to feel turned off by his emotional weakness.

She will then begin to become less affectionate and interested in him.

If he reacts to that by becoming even more insecure, he just makes the problem worse.

In cases like that, the woman will be waiting and hoping that he just starts being a confident man that she can look up to and respect.

If he doesn't, she will begin to give him warning signs that she's thinking about breaking up with him to hopefully get him to be motivated enough to fix his insecurity and become a more confident man.

If he doesn't change, she will eventually get to the point where she has to break up with him and hope that he finally puts in some effort to fix his problem of being insecure in a relationship.

If he doesn't fix the problem, she will force herself to get over him and try to move on.

She Would Rather Keep a Relationship Together and Be Happy

An important thing to understand about women in relationships is that they have a tendency not to want to break up.

Unless the woman is absolutely crazy or she is one of those rare, small percentage of women who are nuts and they'll just break up with a guy for nothing, most women do not aim to break up with a guy as their first reaction.

When a woman gets into a sexual relationship with a man, her aim is to make sure that it works.

The reason why is that if she were to get pregnant and then the relationship broke up, she would have to raise that child on her own.

Alternatively, she would have to try to attract a new man who would put up with the fact that she's already got a child.

Even if a woman doesn't want to have children, or is completely focused on her career, or is studying, or hates children, her instincts are going to kick in.

When she's in a sexual relationship with a man, her instinct is to make it work.

She doesn't want to have a sexual relationship with a guy and fall in love with him and then just leave him.

So, most women will stick around in a relationship that they're not happy with and hope that it changes.

The woman will hope that the guy changes his approach, so she can change how she feels.

A woman's natural tendency is to want a relationship to work.

She wants to be with one man who she's in love with, and she respects, and she feels attracted to and they can build a future together.

They can stay together, she can be safe with him, things can unfold in their relationship and it can get better and better over time.

Most women don't want to be that woman who is unlucky in love (e.g. she gets into a relationship and it's good at the start and then it breaks up).

Alternatively, she gets into a relationship and the guy was nice at the start and he was sweet and romantic, and then he turns out to be a bit of an asshole.

He treats her badly and takes her for granted and then she's in a relationship that she regrets getting into in the first place. She doesn't want to feel like she's wasted her time being with the guy.

Her natural tendency is to wait and hope that the guy changes how she feels.

So when you're in a relationship and a woman has fallen out of love with you or doesn't feel attracted to you anymore and is becoming distant and you feel like you're growing apart, what she really wants is for you to be able to get that spark back.

She doesn't want to have to go through a breakup or a divorce and then have to go and find another guy and let him start having sex with her and potentially get her pregnant and leave her and then she's back out into the dating scene again.

In most cases, a woman doesn't want to also have to face up to her family and friends and say that yet another relationship of hers has failed.

She wants to be that woman who has a man that she's proud of, that she's in love with, that she respects, that she feels attracted to, and that she's happy to be with.

She wants to have that so she can get on with enjoying a great life with him.

Make Her Never Want to Leave You

By the way...

If you're in a relationship with a woman where the feelings aren't mutual and you want her to feel the way that she felt about you at the start, then I recommend that you watch or listen to my program Make Her Love You For Life.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn exactly what to say and do to make your woman respect you, feel sexually attracted to you, and be totally in love with you for life.

When you use the techniques from the program, you won't find yourself in a situation where the feelings aren't mutual in a relationship.

Your woman will always feel respect, sexual attraction, and love for you.

She will always be in love with you.

She will always be affectionate towards you and she will always be happy to be with you.

She is Waiting

[image: She is waiting for you to change how she feels]

To close up here, I just want to remind you of something.

That is, if you're in a relationship with a woman that is falling apart or where the feelings aren't mutual, what you need to understand is that she will be waiting and hoping that you change your approach, so she can change how she feels.

The way that women work is that they react to men.

I gave the example earlier of a dance.

The woman reacts to the man's lead and she loves it.

Women love it when a man can take the lead, so they can react to him. That's when a woman is at her happiest.

She doesn't want a man focusing on what she's saying and doing and trying to follow her lead in that way.

She wants him to take the lead and guide him and her to feelings of mutual respect, attraction, and love.

She wants him to flick on what I call "The Good Girl Switch" in her mind.

This makes a woman want to be a good woman to you.

It gives her pleasure and happiness to be a good woman for you.

That's what women really want, and if a guy doesn't provide that in a relationship, a woman will wait and hope that he does.

If it goes on for long enough, she'll start to become distant, she'll start to become annoyed and irritated that she's stuck with a man who isn't able to make her feel the way that she wants to feel.

She doesn't want to have to go through a breakup or divorce and be one of those women who are unlucky in love.

She also doesn't want to experience the pain of a breakup and have to go through all that.

She just wants a man that she can be proud of.

She wants a man that she can respect, and feel attracted to, and look up to.

She wants a man that she can be in love with.

The way that it works is that if a woman doesn't feel that way about you in a relationship, she literally waits and hopes that you change your approach, so she can change how she feels.

Do You Have a Fear of Relationships?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

These days, many guys are afraid to get into a relationship with a woman because they see the high divorce rates out there.

They see the high levels of cheating and they see the potential for getting hurt.

Yet, no matter how much a guy tries to avoid having a relationship with a woman, it will always be what he needs to have a balanced, happy life.

He could have a successful career, a nice car and friends, but if he doesn't have a loving, supportive relationship with a woman, his life is always going to feel a bit empty.

People may start to ask him, "Why don't you have a girlfriend?" and assume that there is something wrong with him, or that he maybe doesn't even like women at all.

Despite his fear of relationships, he still feels sexual desire for women, but since he doesn't have one of his own, he ends up looking at porn every week and blowing into a tissue, so to speak.

He hides from his fear of relationships and hopes that somehow he'll be able to get through life being single.

Yet, it's depressing.

His friends are enjoying loving relationships, settling down and making progress to new levels in life while he's looking on from the sidelines.

What I found is that the main reason why guys fear having relationships with women is that they don't believe that they can keep a relationship together for life.

What I want you to know is that you can be one of those couples that you've seen, who are happy and madly in love 10, 20, 30, 40, even 50 years into their relationship.

That is possible and it's easy.

If you try to avoid relationships with women and you try to keep that buried, it will just make you sick from the inside out.

You become bitter and angry and frustrated and you don't really enjoy the world that other people do. Of course, you will experience some joy in life, but it will be limited.

A famous quote by Mark Twain, the American author is, "To get the full value of joy, you must have someone to divide it with."

For example: If you're watching TV alone and you see something funny, you might laugh to yourself and that's it. The joke is passed. The funny moment is passed.

You might smile a bit and feel a bit happy and then it just goes away.

However, if you're joking around with some friends and someone says something funny and everyone begins to laugh, it multiplies.

Suddenly, people are crouching over laughing and they're laughing so much that they can't even breathe.

Some of them have got tears coming out of their eyes because they're laughing so much. That is joy multiplied, because other people are involved.

The joy that you get when you're in a happy, loving relationship with a woman cannot be obtained in any other area of life.

You can obtain joy in other things, but the joy that you get from a loving, happy, passionate relationship with a woman is something that you can only have with her.

Another example of this is from the old movie called, "Into the Wild" starring Emile Hirsch.

He plays a character called Christopher who thinks that being part of a society is a scam and that he'd rather be by himself to explore life and be with his own thoughts.

He hates how people treat each other so badly in society and just wants to be on his own and feel good by himself.

As the movie unfolds, you begin to see that he's alone and lonely.

Near the end of the movie (I won't spoil it for you by saying what happens, but) he has a massive realization and writes down the following words: "Happiness, only real when shared," which is pretty much what Mark Twain was talking about when he said, "To get the full value of joy, you must have someone to divide it with."

So, saying something like happiness is only real when shared is essentially the same knowledge.

Happiness is better and is more real and is more valuable when it's shared with other people.

There is nothing wrong with someone who wants to spend some time alone and think about things and maybe philosophize and think about how they want their life to play out and what their goals are and so forth.

However, at the end of the day, hiding from people and hiding from women isn't going to make your life amazing.

You're never going to be able to fill the emptiness inside of you with distractions. That yearning you have for love and companionship and sex and affection and closeness with a woman isn't going to go away.

What I want you to know is that relationships aren't a scary thing if you know what you're doing.

If a guy doesn't know what he's doing and he doesn't know how to maintain a woman's respect, attraction and love over time and he ends up destroying it, then relationships are a bad thing for him.

It's going to be a horrible experience for him.

If he doesn't fix the problem, it's just going to keep happening again and again and again.

He may find a girl who is really nice to him at the start and gives him lots of chances, but eventually when the spark dies out and she's had enough of it, she's just going to dump him or cheat on him and then dump him like every other girl has.

Some guys who find themselves in that situation end up thinking, "Well, I need to accept a really unattractive woman and just put up with it."

No.

You don't have to do that.

You can have your beautiful woman.

You can have your amazing relationship.

You can keep a relationship together for life.

It's actually easy.

Just think about those couples that you see that 10, 20, 30, 40, 50 years into relationship, they're still madly in love. They still hold hands. They're still affectionate.

That is how it's supposed to be.

So, if you want to learn the easy way to keep the love and spark alive in a relationship for life, I recommend that you watch my program, Make Her Love You For Life

Make Her Love You For Life is also available on audio. Both the programs are exactly the same, except one is video and one is audio.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn exactly what to say and do to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for you over time.

You'll learn how to make sure that she appreciates you and she supports you.

You and her communicate well with each other and make progress together as a couple over time.

You'll learn how to make sure that no matter what you and her face together, it only makes you stronger and makes you love each other more and more.

Don't be afraid of relationships.

Relationships are scary if you don't know what you're doing.

If you don't know how to deepen a woman's respect, attraction and love for you over time, then yeah, it's scary because you're going to love her, you're going to want to be with her and then she's going to cheat on you or dump you one day.

That's not fun.

That's not a good time.

Yet, when you know what you're doing and you're able to deepen a woman's respect, attraction and love for you over time, it's the best thing in the world.

I know that from personal experience.

I lived the bachelor lifestyle for a long time and had sex with lots of women and really enjoyed my time being the single guy who had many women in his life at once.

I also had some relationship with women along the way, but I was never ready to settle down.

Then I met my wife. My wife and I met back when she was 20 and I was 35.

I'll be turning 40 this year and our relationship literally gets better and better every year that we're together.

So, don't sit on the side lines, thinking that you're never going to be able to keep a woman in love with you for life, or that you're never going to be able to keep a relationship together.

You can do it.

It's actually very easy.

About Make Her Love You For Life

Make Her Love You for Life is a 9 hour video program that is also available on audio.

When you watch or listen to the program, you will learn how to make a woman respect you, love you and feel sexually attracted to you for life when in a relationship.

Unfortunately, for most men out there, they get into a relationship with a woman and it's good at the start, but then she eventually changes.

For example:

- She loses interest in having sex or withholds sex.
- She stops being affectionate.
- She no longer respects him like she used to.
- She falls out of love with him.
- She stops being willing to work on the relationship and just gives up even though he's treating her well and trying to make things work.
- She starts becoming interested in other men, which then makes him become insecure, angry, jealous, or controlling.
- She doesn't put in any effort to keep the spark alive.
- She expects him to do whatever she wants and if he doesn't, she gives him the silent treatment, throws a tantrum, or stops being affectionate.
- She expects romantic gestures from him, but doesn't do much or anything for him in return.
- She creates unnecessary stress and problems in the relationship by being negative, moody, or stubborn.
- She shows more respect and love for her friends, coworkers and family than she does for him.
- She starts spending more and more time away from him (e.g. with her girlfriends, with her family, focusing on her career or other interests) and gets annoyed or angry if he brings it up.

- She goes from seeing him as the one to treating him as a housemate, a friend or someone that she's only with until something better comes along.
- She gradually becomes a different person and stops treating him as well as she used to.
- She doesn't listen to what he tells her to do and often seems to do the opposite just to annoy him or spite him.
- She expects him to change a lot of things about himself, but doesn't think that she needs to change much or anything about herself.
- She doesn't really appreciate all the nice things he does for her.
- She doesn't try to make him feel loved and doesn't care if he complains about it.

Now, that's a horrible way to live life as a man.

When you're in a relationship with a woman who you really love, care about and want the relationship to work, you don't want to be getting that sort of response from her.

You want her to be loving you and feeling sexually attracted to you and putting in her share of effort. You want her to be contributing to the relationship and being a good woman for you rather than being a pain in the butt and creating drama, creating problems and not giving you the love, respect and affection that you deserve.

How do you fix the problem?

Well, as it turns out, women don't actually want to treat you in that way.

When you're in a relationship with a woman and she treats you in some of the ways mentioned above, she doesn't actually want to be doing it.

She wants to be treating you better. Yet, she's waiting for you to change the dynamic.

It really just comes down to what you say to her and what you do around her.

You might have seen other guys when they are in relationships with women and the woman is really attentive towards him, affectionate, loving, she respects him, they have a great sex life and she's such a good woman for him.

That's how a woman wants to treat you in a relationship, but the way that it works is that if you allow her to create the sort of dynamic in the relationship where she doesn't treat you well, then the whole thing starts to fall apart.

Problems begin to emerge (i.e. she stops being affectionate, she stops respecting you, she stops listening to what you've got to say and she starts becoming a pain in the butt, basically).

What you need to realize is that you have a lot of direct control over how you make her feel and behave around you.

She reacts in response to how you're talking, how you're thinking, how you're feeling and how you're behaving.

She will treat you better if you just start to talk to her in a different way and behave in a different way and react to her in a different way.

The reason why is that women (even though they don't admit it), are very passive and they go along with whatever the man does.

For example: If you allow a relationship dynamic to develop where she's not affectionate toward you, she doesn't respect you and she doesn't show love and she doesn't care about you much, then a woman will go down that path with you.

However, if you create a relationship dynamic where she does show love and affection towards you, she initiates sex, she respects you, she listens to you, she treats you well, then she'll go down that path with you as well.

You're in control of it.

You can make her be one way or the other.

Even if she's a very independent woman and she likes to think her way and do her own thing, it doesn't matter.

At the end of the day, you are the man and she's going to follow your lead.

The truth is that you can make her be a better woman for you and the best thing of all is that she actually wants to do that.

A woman wants to be a great woman for you because it makes her feel good when she's like that.

When a woman is so in love with her man, so respectful towards him and so attracted to him that she treats him well, initiates sex, she gets down and sucks him off, she cooks for him, she cleans, she does nice things for you, that actually makes her happy.

You won't get many women admitting that in public though, but if you have a look at the women who are the happiest with their man, that's how they behave.

A woman wants to be a woman in a relationship with a man. She wants you to make her be a good woman for you, which is better for her and better for you. You get a better woman and she is happier.

By the way, that's what I can teach you in my program, Make Her Love You for Life.

I'll teach you exactly what to say and do to make her be the best woman that she can be for you.

When you use the Make Her Love You For Life approach to relationships, it makes her happy to be a good woman for you and do things that please you.

That is better for you and better for her because it's actually what women really want (not what they go around admitting though).

By the way...

I didn't always know this and as a result, I got cheated on and then dumped.

What happened to me is that I was hopeless with women in the past.

I couldn't get myself a girlfriend and I managed to get lucky one night at a party where I was a bit drunk and the girl was a bit drunk and we somehow managed to start kissing in the backyard of a house party and then we got into a relationship.

However, what happened is that I didn't know how to maintain her attraction, so she lost interest in me.

She then started showing interest in other guys and I became jealous and controlling.

She then cheated on me, dumped me and I was destroyed.

It really killed my confidence and it was back in the time where there was no one online helping other guys out with women.

I was on my own and I didn't know how to get her back.

I had lost so much confidence in myself that other women didn't like me as well.

Eventually, when I started to realize that I need to get a new woman, I tried talking to other women and they just weren't interested even though I was a good guy.

I thought of myself as being fairly intelligent, I had a good job, I was wearing nice clothes and I would treat the woman well.

Yet, women just weren't interested.

All that changed instantly for me when I worked out how to attract a woman during a conversation by displaying personality traits and behaviors that are naturally attractive to women.

After I discovered that, I began to enjoy my choice of women and I had a great time for over 10 years where I just lived that lifestyle of having many women in my life at once.

At times, I got into a relationship for six months to a year or so and what happened is that every time I got into a relationship, the woman wanted to either get married to me or start a family, but I just wasn't ready for that.

Essentially, because of the approach that I was using in the relationship (which I now use with my wife), the woman would fall madly in love and just want to be the best woman that she could for me to maintain my interest, please me and make me happy.

...and it's exactly what my wife does as well.

When I met my wife, she was 20 and I was 35 and we got into a relationship.

It wasn't until the 2 year point in the relationship where I eventually said, "Yes" and accepted her marriage proposal.

I tell you what though, it was one of the best things I've ever done in my life because even though the relationship was amazing at the start, it just gets better and better all the time.

My wife and I have been together for nearly 5 years now and just the other night, for example, we were at it for an hour before going to bed.

That's not what you normally hear people say when they talk about marriage.

What I used to hear all the time is you get married and then the sex stops, or you put a ring on her finger and then she stops putting out, or once you move in together, the spark dies out and the sex life dries up.

Well, that's not what happens for me.

The reason why is that you can literally flick a switch in a woman's mind where you make her want to be the best woman for you.

She wants to please you and she feels happy being good to you.

She feels happy going down on you before you go to bed at night, or in the morning, or she feels happy initiating sex. She feels happy cooking for you. She feels happy being a good woman for you.

That actually makes her happy.

As I said, women don't necessarily go around admitting that in public though.

It's embarrassing for most women to admit that they want that kind of relationship dynamic and that it makes them happy, but when you see a woman who is truly happy in a relationship, she's with a man who makes her be like that.

She treats him in that way and she's happy doing it.

The really cool thing is that it's so much easier for you than if you were to do it how so many other guys do out there.

So many men out there make the mistake of essentially sucking up to their woman and trying to get their woman to love them by buying her jewelry, doing household chores, being as nice as they can to her, listening, caring, all that sort of stuff.

What do they get in return?

They get nothing.

They get a bitchy woman who is moody, doesn't listen to them, doesn't put out and essentially wants everything her way or else she throws a tantrum and gets angry and doesn't talk to him for two weeks or whatever.

That's not a fun way to live life as a man and the thing is a woman doesn't even want it that way.

A woman is at her happiest when she is with a man that she can look up to and respect and she feels sexually attracted to and she's so in love with and she's being good to him.

That actually makes her so happy.

She doesn't want to be a pain in the butt to you.

She doesn't want to have to reject sex because she's not feeling attracted.

She doesn't want to create problems between you and her and treat you badly, but the thing is a woman will go along with whatever relationship dynamic you create and maintain.

If you take her down the path of treating you badly and you put up with that and you allow her to be like that, then that's what you're going to get.

Yet, if you create the sort of dynamic where she wants to please you, she wants to make you happy, she wants to get down on her knees and suck you off, she wants to cook for you and things like that, then she's going to do that and she's going to be so happy.

If you'd like to learn how to flip that switch in a woman's mind where she wants to be the best woman for you at all times, I recommend that you watch or listen to Make Her Love You for Life right now.

When you use the techniques from the program, a woman is like this...

- She looks up to you, respects you and listens to what you say.
- She feels sexually attracted to you, initiates sex often and wants to please you.
- She's not interested in other men and just wants to be with you.
- She continually tries to maintain your interest, attraction and love by being on her best behavior and treating you well.
- She lets you do what you want with your free time (e.g. catch up with friends or work on your hobbies or interests).
- She doesn't want to start fights with you or create drama over little issues because she wants to make you happy and be good to you.
- She takes responsibility for things that a man wants from his woman (e.g. pleasing you sexually, cooking, cleaning, being supportive, staying out of your way if you want some time for yourself, being affectionate, complimenting you and appreciating you).
- She takes care of her appearance and always wants to look good for you.
- She shows respect for you in front of other people rather than taking their side or putting you down in front of them.

- She is sensible and logical when you need her to be (e.g. about finances or making decisions together as a couple) and she's sexy and naughty when you need her to be (e.g. in the bedroom).
- She has such a strong attraction for you that simply hugging her or looking at her in a certain way turns her on and makes her want to have sex. She also loves to give you oral sex because it turns her on. She just loves the idea of pleasing you. It makes her happy.
- She happily does what you tell her to do without making a big fuss about it (e.g. if you tell her to make you a coffee, stop complaining or creating drama about something, to be sensible or to listen to you).
- She makes you happy by being a good woman rather than being moody and wasting your time with pointless arguments.
- She is affectionate towards you and enjoys being a loving, caring woman for you because it makes her happy to do it.
- She loves you, wants you and only wants to be with you.

Unfortunately, most guys don't experience that because they either give their woman too much power in the relationship or they just don't know how to make her feel attracted and turned on and respectful and in love anymore.

A guy is usually able to do that well at the start and he's confident at the start of the relationship, but somewhere along the way, he loses his way.

He forgets how to be that confident guy that he used to be, or he loses touch with his ability to make her feel attracted and other women feel attracted in general.

As a result, some guys start to become insecure in their relationship and they think, "Well, I don't even know how to make her feel attracted and she's losing interest. Damn, I better be really nice to her. I better be on my best behavior. I better do whatever she wants. Otherwise, I'm going to get dumped or cheated on."

No.

That is a huge waste of time and energy and it's not what she wants.

What she really wants is to be a good woman for you.

She really wants to be able to respect you and look up to you and feel attracted to you and be in love with you.

She really wants to enjoy pleasing you sexually.

She really wants to be like that and you can make her be like that.

It comes down to what you say and what you do, how you behave, how you react to her.

That is what counts.

If you'd like to learn exactly how to do that, just watch or listen to Make Her Love You for Life and you will instantly have all the answers of how to have an amazing relationship with a woman.

A Woman Waits and Hopes That You Create This Type of Relationship Dynamic

One final thing to point out is that when a woman is in a relationship with a man who doesn't create this type of relationship dynamic where she's so in love with him, so respectful of him and so attracted to him that she wants to be good to him, then she feels disappointed.

A woman waits for that to happen and if it doesn't happen, she doesn't do it.

Most women do it at the start when they're trying to be nice and get the guy into a relationship and they're on their best behavior.

Yet, if the relationship dynamic isn't there later on, the woman stops doing it and she feels disappointed that the relationship is going that way.

She doesn't actually want to be treating her man badly.

She's waiting for him to take the lead and bring the spark back, get her to respect him again, make her feel attracted, get that love back, make her want to be a good woman for him.

That's what she's waiting for and if he doesn't do it, she's disappointed.

Then, if it goes on for long enough, she either cheats on him or breaks up with him.

It just happens so often out there where a relationship starts out well and then it begins to fall apart over time.

You don't have to go through that.

I'm here to tell you that a relationship becomes increasingly happy and enjoyable over time.

Your woman does not lose interest in having sex with you. She does not become a bitch and start disrespecting you. She does not fall out of love with you.

That happens when the wrong relationship dynamic is in place, but if it is, a guy can easily change that.

He has just got to start talking to her in a different way, behaving in a different way and reacting to her in a different way and she instantly changes.

She becomes a better woman.

She stops being a pain in the butt.

She stops rejecting sex and starts initiating it.

She stops creating problems and starts being a good woman for him.

That's what you can have.

So, if you want to learn my secrets for having an amazing, happy, sexual relationship with a woman that lasts for life, I recommend that you watch or listen to Make Her Love You for Life.

How to Get My Wife to Reconsider Divorce

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your wife has been saying, “It’s over. I just want a divorce,” it’s only natural that you may be worried about losing her forever.

However, the good news is that you can get your wife to reconsider divorce.

Here’s how:

1. Start giving her the attraction experience she wants.

[image: Give her the attraction experience that she wants]

Just because a man and a woman say, “I do,” and agree to be married for life, it’s not a guarantee that everything will remain perfect in their marriage from that moment onwards.

To make a marriage last, they both have to make an effort to make the love, respect and attraction grow over time.

What often happens is that a man might initially spend a lot of time making his wife feel loved, appreciated, taken care of and attracted because the marriage is new and exciting.

Yet, over time, other things, like having and raising children, getting a house and paying it off, ensuring that the children get a good education and managing day to day life, might take priority over the relationship between him and his wife.

There are a lot of other things to focus on and having fun with his wife or maintaining a happy, harmonious relationship at all times might not be at the top of the list.

Eventually, the wife may start to feel that something is missing in her life.

She might begin to wonder, “Is this why I got married? Are the kids and the bills the only things that matter in our marriage anymore? Am I going to spend the rest of my life just taking care of everyone and being a mother, housekeeper and taxi driver? Do I not get to experience being in love anymore? Where has that gone?”

Over time, her feelings of unhappiness can intensify, to the point where she starts thinking, “I don’t want to do this anymore! I want to feel sexy and like a real woman when I’m with my man. I don’t want to feel like I’m his roommate, friend or big sister. I’m sick of all the arguments and emotional distance between us. I could be so much happier with someone else. I know it. He just doesn’t know how to make me love him again. He just doesn’t get it. I want a divorce.”

When she hits him with the news, a man will usually be left thinking, “What happened? I thought we were happy together. How could she just give up on us like that? We vowed to be together for life on our wedding day.”

Here’s the thing:

A wife seldom gives up on her marriage, unless it’s absolutely unavoidable (e.g. her husband is physically or mentally abusive, he’s dishonest, he cheats on her, he turns her off with his mean, selfish or unattractive behavior and attitude).

You may be a good man, but there have been things about your behavior, attitude and approach to the marriage that have really turned her off.

You know what those things are.

Don't worry; you're not a bad man for making those mistakes. Everyone makes mistakes in relationships.

What matters now is how quickly you fix those mistakes and transform yourself into a man that she can feel emotionally attracted to again.

For example: If a woman wants a divorce from her husband because he has become too insecure and has turned her off for years as a result, he needs to connect with a newfound confidence and let her experience that during every interaction with him from now on.

You can show her that you've changed.

Don't try to tell her that you've changed; show her. Let her feel differently around you and she will change her mind about the divorce on her own.

Up until now, she just hasn't been getting the attraction experience she wants when around you (e.g. she feels bored, feels like she's your big sister or mother, is stuck in a rut of being the good wife and not getting much benefit in return) so she wants to get away from that to make herself feel better.

To get your wife to reconsider divorce, the main thing you need to focus on is changing the way you interact with her and communicate with her from now on, so that she naturally changes how she feels about you and being with you.

You need to say and do the types of things that will reactivate her feelings of attraction, respect and love for you again.

Some of the ways you can do that is by:

- Showing her (by the way you talk, behave, act and respond to her), that you've understood and fixed some of the issues that have been turning her off (e.g. you're more confident and emotionally strong now, rather than insecure and needy, you're more goal oriented and driven, rather than wasting more time in your comfort zone that has been getting you nowhere for years).
- Focusing on making her smile, laugh and feel happy to be around you, rather than making her feel like your roommate or friend.
- Confidently leading the way in the relationship, thereby allowing her to relax into feeling totally feminine and girly around you.

When you start giving her the attraction experience that she really wants in the marriage, a woman naturally begins to feel more respect and attraction for you.

She then begins to ask herself, "Can I really give up on our marriage when I still love him and it's obvious that he's changed for the better? I think we can make this work after all."

So, just because your wife is currently saying, "I want a divorce," it doesn't mean that she won't change her mind when you start making her feel the way she wants to feel in the marriage with you (e.g. loved, appreciated, attractive).

Feelings change all the time.

You can change her feelings and get your wife to reconsider divorce, simply by giving her the attraction experience she wants from you.

The next step is toâ€¦!

2. Turn arguments or cold conversations into laughter, smiling and feel good emotions by not allowing you or her to take things so seriously.

[image: Laugh and smile more]

When a marriage reaches the point where the wife is asking for a divorce, a couple might find themselves getting into arguments, fighting over seemingly insignificant things, or treating each other in a cold, distant and unfriendly way.

However, if a man and his wife continue to communicate with each other in a negative way (e.g. arguing, being cold and closed off towards each other), the chances of resolving their problems and making her reconsider divorce become slim.

Instead, they both continue to feel hurt, betrayed and misunderstood. The marriage just doesn't feel good anymore.

[image: Constant arguing]

Out of frustration, he might say to her, â€œWhy are you acting like this? Why are you doing this to us? Why are you being such a cold-hearted bitch? Don't you remember that we promised to be together for life on our wedding day?â€ causing her to become even more defensive and closed off from him.

She might then say, â€œAs usual, you think the problem in this relationship is me. You still haven't taken any responsibility for what has happened between us. Nothing has changed. You can't accept that our marriage just isn't working. I'm sorry, but divorce is the only option here. There's nothing you can say to change my mind.â€

Don't worry; she will change her tune if you change how she feels.

How can you do that?

Rather than getting into endless, pointless arguments with your wife, just focus on making her laugh and feeling good to be around you again.

For example: If your wife gets angry with you about something, rather than react in the usual way (e.g. by defending yourself, accusing her of being unreasonable) turn it instead into something you can both laugh about.

Note: It doesn't mean you have constantly crack jokes or not take anything seriously.

It simply means you're looking for something positive to laugh about together in stressful moments, rather than getting sucked into the negative feelings and arguing and feeling disconnected from each other as a result.

If you can make her smile, laugh and drop her guard around you, it will make it more difficult for her to stay stuck on the idea of getting a divorce.

Instead, she will start thinking, â€œWell, things aren't so bad now. At least we can still have a laugh together. Maybe getting divorce isn't the answer after all. Maybe it's not too late to actually work things out between us.

She will then begin feeling good around you again and the negatives of your marriage will feel less serious to her.

Don't waste a lot of time trying to convince your wife to reconsider divorce by trying to reason with her.

Instead, make her change her mind by reactivating her feelings of respect and attraction for you, and building on that until she's saying, Okay, I'm sorry for thinking that divorce was the answer. I love you and I was just being selfish. Our marriage is now working and we don't need to end it.

3. Start getting rid of your insecurities, so you can be the emotionally strong man that she needs.

[image: Get rid of your insecurities and be the strong man that she needs]

As painful as it might be to admit, your wife probably wouldn't be asking you for a divorce if she didn't believe she had some very good reasons to do so.

So, if you seriously want to get your wife to reconsider divorce, the first thing you need to do is get rid of any insecurities that might be coming between you and her.

For example: A guy might feel as though he got lucky when he met his wife.

He knows that a woman of her quality could have easily picked a man who was better looking, richer, taller or whatever.

As a result, he may become insecure over the years and begin to think things like, What if she realizes that she can do better than me? What if she meets another man, feels more attracted to him and then leaves me?

Insecure thinking automatically changes a man's behavior and actions, and he can't stop himself from gradually becoming more clingy or needy (e.g. giving up his interests and hobbies to spend more time with her, regularly asking her, Do you still love me?).

He may also become increasingly jealous and controlling (e.g. he secretly reads her text messages or e-mails, forbids her to talk to other guys).

Although his heart might be in the right place, this type of behavior makes a woman pull away even more. Why?

Insecurity, clinginess, neediness or jealousy are not qualities that women find attractive in men.

Rather than make a wife think, I'm so lucky that my husband loves me so much that he goes crazy when he thinks about losing me, she will usually just think, I thought he was emotionally stronger than that when I married him. What happened? Why has he suddenly changed into this insecure, needy guy who is always trying to control me? Yes, it's nice to have a husband who loves and adores me, but he's going overboard. He's stopped being the type of man I can look up to and respect and he's become an emotional child that constantly needs me to support and reassure him that everything will be okay. I just can't live like this. Maybe he wasn't so confident in the beginning after all. Maybe that was an act. Maybe he has tricked me all this time. What have I done? Why did I marry him? I've got to get out of this marriage and find myself a real man, and she will then ask for a divorce.

Another example of insecurity is when a guy remains stuck in a dead end job because he's too afraid of taking a risk in his life and stepping up to a higher level of responsibility.

His wife might initially try to motivate him to overcome his fears by saying things like, Why don't you apply for that promotion? You can do it, or If you don't feel like you're getting what you deserve at work, why don't you take that night class to help you get a better qualification so that you can get a better job?

Yet, if he just keeps making excuses and remains stuck in a rut in his life out of fear, his wife will eventually start losing respect for him as a man.

She may think, Is this how it's going to be for the rest of our life? Is he going to hide from becoming a bigger and better man? Has he given up out of fear, or because he is taking my love and commitment to him for granted? I can't respect a guy who doesn't even have the balls to change the things in his life that are making him unhappy. I want a real man, not a wimp.

Over time, if he doesn't pick up on her hints (e.g. tantrums, lack of affection, verbal attacks of his strength as a man, emotional distance) and make the effort to be the man she needs him to be, she will get fed up with trying to make him be the man she wants him to be and will decide to leave.

So, if you have been insecure in some way in your marriage with your wife, to get her to reconsider divorce, you need to show her that you've changed and that you're now the emotionally strong man she needs you to be.

For example: If you were needy, insecure and jealous in your marriage because you felt that got lucky with your wife, you need to show her that you are more confident and self-assured now.

You believe in yourself and in your value to her.

Alternatively, if you lacked the courage to rise through the levels of life and be the kind of man she can look up to and rely on, you need to show her that you are now more focused and driven.

You're taking action.

You have decided on your big goals and ambitions for life, and you have started to make progress towards them.

You're no longer hiding from your true potential as a man. You are taking action and making things happen.

When your wife sees that you're working on completely getting rid of your insecurities, she will naturally start to feel respect for you again.

When she feels respect she'll start to reconnect with her feelings of attraction and it will then be difficult for her to hold on to her negative feelings about you, because you are no longer the man that she wanted to leave.

So, if you're at a point now where you're asking, How can I get my wife to reconsider divorce? start by getting her to respect you again by eliminating and overcoming your insecurities.

4. Flirt with her to create sparks of attraction.

When a husband is wondering, “What is the secret of how to get my wife to reconsider divorce?” flirting with her probably seems like the last thing he should do.

He may think, “Things are so tense between us right now. I just don’t feel like it’s my place to flirt with her anymore and try to make her feel attracted. If I try something like that, won’t she just become angrier with me and make her want the divorce even more?”
No.

There’s absolutely nothing wrong with a husband flirting with his wife and making her feel attracted to him.

As her husband, it’s your place.

You’re allowed to do that.

You are not doing anything wrong by being a loving, confident man who can still make her feel some attraction in a moment when there is tension between you and her.

In fact, when you can create sparks of attraction between you and your wife at a time when she’s saying, “I want a divorce,” it will automatically bring her guard down.

When you confidently flirt with her, she is going to feel good around you and will begin to think, “Hmmm! I haven’t felt like this in such a long time. It feels good to interact in this way with him again. I like this feeling and I don’t want to lose it. Maybe we can make things work after all.”

When that happens, it’s up to you as the man to take the lead and continue saying and doing the types of things that will show her that your marriage is worth fighting for.

However, if you just act neutral by not flirting, she’s just going to be thinking, “It’s over. I need to get out of here. There’s no spark between us anymore” and she’s just going to continue on with the divorce.

You Can Make Her Reconsider the Divorce By Reactivating Her Feelings

[image: An example of how to reactivate some of her feelings for you]

Sometimes, a guy will hold on to the belief that just because him and his wife pledged to be together for ever on their wedding day, it means she won’t ever go against it or that she shouldn’t.

Of course, it would be really nice if life worked that way, but it doesn’t

A marriage or relationship will stay together if both people remain relevant to each other and the love, respect and attraction deepens over time.

If the love, respect and attraction is destroyed by the man, the woman doesn’t actually have to stay with him, regardless of what she promised on the wedding day.

I know, her act could be considered a sin, but sinners are forgiven. Don’t forget that.

If you want the love to last for life, you need to create the type of relationship dynamic where that happens.

You can't expect her to stick with you for life just because she said, "I do" on a happy wedding day. You've got to make her feel happy with you now.

You can do that by reactivating her feelings of respect, attraction and love and then building on it.

So, rather than trying to convince your wife to reconsider divorce by saying things like, â€œDidn't our wedding vows mean anything to you?â€ or â€œWhat happened to all the promises we made each other to stay together forever? Are you just going to quit so easily?â€ or, â€œWhat about the kids? How could you do that do them?â€ you have to get her to reconnect with her old feelings of love, by making her feel respect and attraction for the new and improved version of you.

When you do that, her feelings about the divorce automatically begin to change.

She starts to feel respect and attraction for you again and her guard comes down.

The idea of a divorce seems too harsh and unnecessary.

[image: Making her fall in love with you all over again]

After all, she respects you now. She feels some attraction again and is falling back in love with you.

Don't worry about how angry or distant she feels about you today.

You can change that.

Why Am I Insecure in My Relationship?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're asking, Why am I insecure in my relationship? here are 5 possible reasons why you could be feeling that way:

1. You lack purpose outside of your relationship with her

[image: You lack purpose outside of your relationship with her]

When a man lacks purpose in his life (e.g. doesn't have big dreams and goals that he is working towards), he will often choose to make his girlfriend (fiancée or wife) his main purpose in life.

Being in a relationship with her becomes the main part of his identity as a man and of his place in this world.

Without her, he would feel lost, alone and confused about what he should be doing with his life.

[image: You lack purpose outside of your relationship with her]

When a man approaches a relationship with his woman in that way, it's only natural that he would begin to feel insecure and worried about losing her.

If he is hiding from his purpose in life behind the safety of being in a relationship with her, he might try to convince himself that he is doing the right thing.

For example, he might think, "She is my soul mate. Without her, I am nothing. We are meant to be together. This is what my life is all about. I just want to devote all my time, energy and love to her. I don't care about anything else in life but her. She is what matters to me."

To show her just how much she means to him, he will begin to:

- Give up all his friends and other interests to spend every spare minute with her.
- Shower her with gifts and other tokens of his love and affection.
- Make himself available to her 24/7.
- Help her out with everything (e.g. housework, errands, homework).
- Tell her repeatedly how much he loves her and how lost he would be without her.
- Do whatever she wants him to do.

In his own mind, he is simply being a good boyfriend (fiancé or husband).

However, even though you might agree with him and think that a man should be like that with his woman, it's actually a recipe for disaster.

Although it is true that a woman wants a man who will love her, take care of her and make her feel special, most women also want to know that their man has more going on in his life than just her.

[image: You are my everything. Don't you see that?]

Most women understand that a real man is someone who will love her, while also working hard at achieving his own dreams and goals in life that are independent of his relationship with her.

Of course, there are some women (e.g. insecure, unattractive) who like it when a guy has no life purpose and makes everything about her, because she can then feel safe that he won't leave her.

However, if a woman is attractive and wants a real man, she isn't going to be able to continue feeling respect, attraction and love for a guy who is afraid of reaching for his true potential as a man.

She will know that she deserves better than to waste her life with a man who is afraid of failure and is hiding behind her and the relationship.

On the other hand, if you are a man of purpose who can also deepen her feelings of respect, attraction and love over time, you don't have anything to be insecure about.

Women know how difficult it is to find a real man and once then get one, they hold on tight and never let go.

2. You don't believe that you could easily attract another quality woman if she dumped you

[image: You don't think that you could easily get another quality woman if she dumped you]

If you feel that you got lucky when you hooked up with your girlfriend (fiancée or wife), and found it difficult to attract other quality women before you met her, then it's only natural that you will feel insecure in your relationship with her.

You may have thought something like, "If I lose her, I will have to go out there and talk to attractive women and hope to get one of them to like me. I know that it wasn't easy before, so it will probably be even harder now that my game is a little rusty."

You might know that you could easily attract average or unattractive women, but you know that hot girls require a certain level of confidence and social skills to pick up.

Here's the thing!

When a guy is insecure in his relationship with a woman, it's not something he can keep hidden from her completely.

Eventually, the insecurity takes on other forms (e.g. clinginess, jealousy, over-protectiveness) and starts to impact how he interacts with her.

For example: If his woman decides she likes to have a girls night out with her girlfriends once a week, rather than use this time to catch up with his friends as well, an insecure guy might react by being:

- Clingy: Saying things like, "Are you going to cheat on me? Are you going to flirt with other guys? What will you do if a guy starts hitting on you? Are you going to be faithful to me?" or "Wouldn't it be better if we just stayed home together? Please don't go! Please!!!"
- Over-protective: Asking her to tell him exactly where she is going, what she plans to do with her friends, who is going and exactly what time she'll be back, "Just to make sure you're safe." He might also decide to text her once every two hours to make sure that she is okay.
- Jealous: Getting angry about her wanting to do things without him, and accusing her of flirting or cheating with other guys when she's out by herself.

Initially, a woman might think this type of behavior is sweet because it shows how much her man loves her and wants to be with her.

However, over time if the behavior continues and he doesn't ever get to a point where he gives her his full trust, she will begin to feel turned off by his emotional weakness (e.g. his insecurity, self-doubt).

[image: Clingy boyfriend pleading with girlfriend]

Eventually, she will find herself feeling less and less respect for him as a man and she will actually start wanting to flirt with and maybe even hook up with another guy.

When a woman loses respect for her man, her sexual attraction for him also fades, and eventually all the love she feels for him gets pushed into the background and gets replaced by negative feelings and emotions (e.g. irritation, anger, resentment, disgust).

When her insecure man notices that she's pulling away from him, his insecurity grows strong and he becomes even more clingy, needy and jealous.

Unfortunately, this only causes her to shut herself off from him, creating a negative cycle that usually leads to a break up.

3. You lack confidence in your attractiveness and value to her

If you are the type of guy who is afraid that, every time your woman looks at, or talks to another guy, you might lose her to him, then it's probably because you're not very confident about your attractiveness and value to her.

For example: If a guy sees his girlfriend (fiancée or wife) talking to a guy who is better looking, richer or more successful than him, he will begin to feel insecure about his relationship with her.

He is creating the insecurity by assuming that the other guys must be more attractive to her than he is because they look better, are richer or more successful.

What he doesn't know is that while a woman might feel some fleeting attraction to a random guy (like he feels fleeting attraction for random girls he sees), it doesn't mean that she is going to leave her current man to pursue the random guy.

However, if you continue to doubt your value to her and are worried about her feeling more attracted to other guys, eventually your insecurity will turn her off and she will begin to wonder whether you are right.

4. You're afraid of being alone again

Guys who have grown up feeling unloved (e.g. parents got divorced, parents were emotionally closed off, parents who preferred certain children more than others in the family), who don't have many friends or who haven't had many relationships in their life, will often cling to a woman out of fear of ending up alone again.

This fear of loneliness may cause a guy to close himself off from expressing emotions in his relationship (e.g. by being open and loving), because he fears getting hurt or being rejected.

Instead, what he will do is take as much of her love as he can and store it all up to hopefully not feel so bad if she decides to leave him.

For example: He will take her love by getting her to regularly reassure him of her love for him or getting her to tell him how much he means to her.

Essentially, he needs her to show him a lot of love so he can feel good about himself, because he is hurt on the inside.

The mature way to have a relationship is to share love.

You both make each other feel loved, wanted, appreciated and accepted, rather than trying to take more love than you give in case the other person wants to leave you.

Some guys who take love from women will close himself off and only give a woman half or even less of his heart.

What he doesn't realize is the more closed off he is from his woman, the more he is pushing her away.

Women are emotional beings and like to feel the flow love in their relationship.

A woman wants to be with a guy who wants her, loves her and respects her, but if she feels that she's giving so much of of herself, without ever getting enough love back in return, she will begin to feel like he isn't the guy for her.

5. You have trust issues

When in a relationship, you have to accept the risk that your woman might break your trust and hurt you in some way (e.g. cheat, lie) one day, just like she has to accept that you might break her trust too.

If you want your relationship with your woman to be successful, you have to give her your full trust and let her take care of it.

Regardless of what has happened to you in the past (e.g. you've been hurt, cheated on by an ex, treated badly by your parents), if you want your current relationship to last, you have to trust her to be good to you now and in the long run.

If you can't give her your trust all the time, you will end up destroying the attraction, respect and love she has for you as a man because she will feel turned off by your insecurity and lack of deep heart connection with her.

Remember: She's With You For a Reason

Being insecure will never, ever make your relationship better with a woman.

It's just not something that women ever want from a man.

You've got to get rid of your insecurity and be an emotionally strong man for her, otherwise she will get turned off and the relationship will begin to fall apart.

How can you start to get rid of your insecurity?

Firstly, you need to start focusing on the good things about your relationship and how much potential it has.

You attracted her to you in the first place, so you have the potential to become an even better man now and in the near future, which will make her feel even more attracted to you.

Why Do Women Expect Men to Do Everything?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

A woman will act as though she expects you to do everything for her as a way of testing how emotionally masculine you are.

If you follow all of her orders, obey her and do whatever she wants, she will lose respect for you and won't feel sexually attracted to you.

Why? It's a woman's natural instinct to find a man who doesn't put up with being treated badly or unfairly in this world.

[image: Unable to handle her tests]

She wants a man with a strong backbone who won't allow himself to be pushed around by anyone, especially her.

This goes back to early times where a woman was completely dependent on a man for her protection and survival.

Even though women can survive and prosper without a man in today's civilized world, she still has a natural instinct to reject or dump a wimpy guy to find herself a more masculine minded man who won't put up with anyone's crap.

So, if you're asking, Why do women expect men to do everything? you've probably been failing one of the most basic confidence and masculinity tests that women put men through.

She Doesn't Want to Be Able to Boss You Around

[image: She doesn't want to be able to boss you around]

When a man feels less dominant than a woman, a woman will notice and begin to boss him around, treat him badly and see how far she can push him.

This applies all the way from first meeting a woman, going on a date with her, being in bed with her and being in a relationship with her.

Most women will reject a wimpy guy upfront, but some women (usually the unattractive ones) will accept a wimp and use his desperate interest in her as a way to boost her self-esteem, so she can feel more attractive around confident men.

A woman like that might date a guy for a few weeks, get into a committed relationship with him or even marry him for a while, but it will almost always end up with her cheating on him or dumping him.

That's not because she's a bad bitch who can't be trusted, but that she doesn't want to be stuck with a wimp for life.

It's just the nature of women's attraction for men.

When a Guy Expects Women to Approach Him

[image: Why don't women approach me?]

Most guys fear approaching women that they find attractive, so rather than overcoming that inner fear, the majority of guys try to improve their external appearance (e.g. build muscle at the gym, wear expensive clothing) and succeed in their career in the hopes that it will make women approach them or accept them if they happen to accidentally start talking (e.g. at a cafe, at an event, through friends).

When women don't approach after all the work he's put in to look good and become successful, a guy might feel frustrated and wonder, "Why don't women approach men? Why do women expect men to do everything?"

[image: Why don't women start conversations with me?]

Yet, in a woman's mind, if she approaches a guy first and gives him a chance to meet her, she has no way of knowing if he would have had the confidence to approach her on his own, or if he's only feeling confident because she approached him first.

When a Guy Thinks That He Has to Be Extra Nice to Make a Woman Like Him

Sometimes, a guy might convince himself that if he's a really nice guy to a woman (e.g. he pays for her drinks, gives her lots of compliments, does everything she asks him to do) she will then give him a chance to be with her.

Guys like that usually lack confidence in themselves around women because they have no idea how to actively make a woman feel sexually attracted and turned on.

So, not knowing what else to do, he tries to be the perfect gentleman to a woman in the hopes that she overlooks the fact that he has no idea how to turn her on during a conversation.

When she interacts with him, she will be able to sense his self-doubt and insecurity and it will turn her off, because women are attracted to emotional strength in men (e.g. confidence, high self-esteem) and turned off by emotional weakness (e.g. self-doubt, insecurity).

He will notice that she is losing interest and he will then try to impress her even more by talking about how much money he makes at his job or how much he plans to make in future.

Yet, she seems to lose even more interest.

He then tries to buy her more drinks, give her more compliments and suck up to her as much as he can/

Yet, her interests keeps fading away.

In his mind, he might start to wonder, "What else can I do to make her like me? I've been doing my best and it still hasn't been enough for her. Why do women expect men to do everything? Why are they so picky and up themselves? Why does this have to be so difficult?"

However, instead on focusing on the real reason he was rejected (i.e. he failed to make her feel sexually attracted to him via his behavior, actions and thinking), he puts the blame on women by accusing them of expecting him to do everything.

He tries his best to please women by being really nice, but they just don't care. Why?

Being nice is only appreciated by a woman after you make her feel sexually attracted and turned on by you.

The same rules apply in a relationshipâ€¦!

Masculine Vs. Feminine

When a guy gives up his dominance in a relationship (e.g. by letting the woman make all the decisions, by doing all the housework, looking after the children, cleaning up after her), itâ€™s only natural that she will then fall into a habit of expecting him to do everything for her.

[image: Men doing the ironing]

Yet, rather than pleasing her, making her love him more and making her want to have lots of sex with him, when a guy does everything in a relationship, the complete opposite happens.

She loses respect for him and then begins to find it difficult to feel attracted to him.

After a while, she begins to disconnect with her original feelings of love for him too.

Why? He's being her bitch, that's why.

According to a study conducted by the National Survey of Families and Households, sociologists have discovered that married men who do the cooking, vacuuming, laundry and shopping in the home, report having sex 1.5 times less per month than husbands who don't do their share of the housework.

You will hear women complaining about men not doing enough housework, but if you listen to women and follow their orders, you don't get laid as often.

That's not to say that you should never help out or be kind to your woman, but just don't be her little bitch.

Be a good, loving man, but don't be pushed into being a pussy-whipped guy who doesn't get laid or loved.

You've got to stand up for yourself and your manhood. Don't listen to the politically correct things that dumb celebrities say on TV talk shows.

Just because a man stars in movies or TV shows, it doesn't make him an attraction or relationship expert, so don't just listen to the politically correct things he says to be nice when he's on TV.

We all know how often celebrity relationships end in divorce, so if you hear a male celebrity saying that the key to happy relationship or marriage is to do whatever the woman says, take note and you will see that relationship break up sooner or later.

If the relationship does stay together, statistically speaking, he won't be getting any sex and his woman will be secretly fantasizing about finding a masculine man to replace him.

Not Doing Everything She Wants Makes Her Love You More

Logically speaking, you would think that if a man does what ever a woman wants, it should make her happier and want to have more sex with him.

So, why doesn't it?

Women are genetically programmed to respond positively to dominant male traits (e.g. confidence, masculinity, drive, determination), and to be turned off by submissive male traits (e.g. insecurity, self-doubt, being a push-over).

[image: Turned off by his lack of emotional masculinity]

The more a man gives in to a woman, lets her be in control and keeps looking for her approval by trying to please her, the less he appears as a man in her eyes, and the less respect and attraction she feels for him over time.

If he becomes her bitch and does whatever she wants, she simply can't look up to him and respect him.

She might care about him as a person, but he simply stops being a man that she wants to submit to or open up her legs for.

She just won't enjoy the feeling of being penetrated by a pussy guy who can't even stand up to her. It just doesn't feel right.

What Women Expect From Men

Just because women don't expect men to do everything for them, it doesn't mean they have no expectations at all.

Here are some of the things that most women expect from men; when they meet for the first time, on a date and in a relationship.

These are the things that you should do if you want to be successful with women!

1. When she meets him for the first time.

- To approach her and make the first move.

Even when a woman really likes a guy and is secretly hoping that he will approach her and talk to her, she will usually avoid making the first move, or even showing too much interest.

If she makes the first move, she will feel as though she's taking on the role of the man, and if she is like most women, she will want him to take on that role, so that she can relax and feel like a feminine, girly woman in comparison to his masculinity.

Essentially, a woman expects a man to make the first move, and lead her from a conversation, to kissing, sex and a relationship.

If a guy can't do that, then she assumes that he doesn't have the kind of balls that she needs in a man to feel safe with him in this world.

- To trigger her feelings of sexual attraction.

Some guys make the mistake of trying to get a woman to like them as a person by being really nice to her, chatting in a friendly way and trying to "get to know her."

He will talk to her for as long as possible and try to show her that he's a sweet, innocent nice guy who has good intentions with her.

Yet, hereâs the thingâ!

She wants to feel sexually turned on and attracted, not just experience friendly feelings.

If a guy is only being nice and friendly to her, a woman isn't going to think, *âAwww, how sweet. Heâs such a nice guy and heâs doing everything for me. I think I want to have sex with him now and be his girlfriend!*â

Why? A woman liking a guy and thinking that he is a nice person, is not the same as her feeling sexual attracted and turned on by him.

If you want to get a woman into a sexual, romantic relationship, you have to focus on triggering her feelings of sexual attraction first, by displaying some of the personality traits and behaviors that are naturally attractive to women (e.g. confidence, masculinity, charisma, sense of humor).

Then, when you do nice things for her, she will consider herself lucky to have met you because you are everything that a woman looks for (i.e. a good guy who also makes her feel sexually attracted and turned on).

- To impress her with who he is as a man on the inside, rather than trying to impress her with looks or money.

Most women donât expect men to be male super models with millions in the bank, before they will be interested in them.

Of course, some women do expect men to be at their beck and call and will only date men who are very good looking or rich.

However, the majority of women are most attracted to how a guyâs personality and behavior makes them feel, which is why you will see average, or even unattractive guys dating, or married to beautiful women.

The mistake that many guys make is in thinking that they have to put on a fake persona to impress a woman (e.g. by dressing in a way they think women like, pretending to be richer or more successful than they really are, by paying for everything and buying her expensive gifts).

Yet, the truth is, what an attractive woman wants to experience is a guy who can spark her feelings of sexual attraction by who he is a man, rather than try to impress her with a fake persona.

2. When in a relationship with him.

- To take the lead and be the dominant one in the relationship.

Even though most women now have a job or career and can take care of themselves financially, when she is with her man, she still wants to know that he is the man and is the one directing them through their every-day life towards a better future.

If a woman cannot relax and be the woman in her relationship (i.e. feminine, girly, emotional, changing her mind like the weather, being silly), she will eventually begin to lose respect and attraction for her man, and the relationship will either end, or they will end up living as roommates rather than lovers.

To allow her to feel feminine around you, it's important that you always strive to think, talk, feel, behave and take action in a masculine way.

Don't copy her feminine behavior. Be a man for her and she then will be your girl.

- To deepen her feelings of respect, attraction and love over time.

In a relationship, it is the man's responsibility to maintain and deepen the feelings of respect, attraction and love between him and his woman.

To do this, he has to be an emotionally strong, honest man that she can look up to and respect, rather than an emotionally weak man (e.g. insecure, self-doubting) that she looks down on.

A woman might enjoy bossing her guy around at the beginning of a relationship, but when she begins to notice that she can push him around and make him do everything for her, she will rapidly begin to lose interest in being with him.

No matter how hard he tries to please her, she just won't be able to feel much or any attraction for him anymore because she doesn't respect him and look up to him.

A woman instinctively knows that her place in life isn't to dominant a wimpy man.

She knows that she feels happier when she is with a man who can lovingly, but assertively put her back in her place when she steps out of line.

- To have dreams, goals and a life purpose that he's working towards.

A woman expects a man to be rising through the levels of life and reaching for his true potential, rather than hiding behind her and the relationship out of a fear of failure.

A guy who doesn't have any plans for his life, and is using her, and their relationship as an excuse to hide behind, isn't attractive to a woman.

Women know that life can be challenging at times and that it often requires mental and emotional strength to continue on and succeed in many areas of life (e.g. career, business, fitness, relationships, finances).

A woman wants to feel that if things do get tough, her guy will be able to take care of them and their children if they have any.

She doesn't want a guy who will crumble under the pressure of life and want to cuddle into her and cry, or go inward and become a grumpy, depressed alcoholic who tries to dampen his emotional pain by intoxicating himself.

She wants a guy who can handle the challenges of life and turn them into things that make his life and her life even better than it was before.

For example: If a guy loses his job, he does what is required to get an even better job next time.

If his business is failing, he learns from business experts, applies the knowledge and doesn't give up until he succeeds.

If they are having problems in their relationship, he learns, applies the knowledge and makes the relationship even better than it was before.

That's what she wants.

Yet, some guys think that is unfair and ask, Why do women expect men to do everything? Isn't it enough that I love her and take care of her?

What he doesn't realize is that, if a guy is hiding from his true potential behind his woman and their relationship, she will not be able to look up to him and respect him as her man, and without respect, her attraction and love will also fade.

In this life, you're either going to be a man that a woman can look up to and respect or you're not.

[image: Divorce or break up]

If you're not, you will experience rejection, break ups and divorces until you change and become a man that a woman can look up to and respect.

She Doesn't Want You to Do Everything

Hopefully by now you realize that women don't expect men to do everything.

In fact, the more that a guy runs around trying to please a woman and meet her every need, the less respect and attraction she feels for him.

That's not to say that you shouldn't put in any effort to please her or meet her needs, but just don't be her little bitch.

Be a good man, but don't let her push you around.

If she is being too demanding, just laugh at her in a loving way and say, "Hey, what am I, your slave?" or jokingly say, "Do it yourself you lazy bitch! :)" and have a laugh with her about it.

If you can't jokingly talk that way to your woman because you are worried that she will get angry, then you are her little bitch.

In my marriage, my wife always tests me by complaining about things, but I don't fall for it and will jokingly say things like, "Shut your mouth. You're much prettier when you don't speak" or I will let her speak for 30 seconds and then say, "Huh? I wasn't listening to anything you said. Say it all again" and then laugh at her in a loving way.

Of course I am joking and she knows that.

I treat her very well and she is loved, appreciated (I thank her all the time for the things she does for me) and is taken care of in the bedroom.

We have a no BS approach to our relationship, where she can jokingly speak like that to me too.

We just don't take things so seriously and that all came from me leading the way to create that dynamic.

If I had no backbone and let her push me around, she would have me scrubbing floors, massaging her feet, washing the dishes and making her food while also running The Modern Man.

Of course, if I had done that, her and I would not be married now.

So, whatever you do, don't fall for the tests that women put you through.

Women don't want you to cower and follow their orders like a good, little boy.

They simply want you to respect them, love them and care about them, while also not putting up with their crap.

Why Do Women Dump Men?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The main reason why a woman will dump a man is if he has failed to deepen her feelings of respect, attraction and love for him over time.

In a relationship, it is the man's responsibility to guide himself and his woman into deeper feelings of love and attraction.

A woman can help and even get really involved in the process, but it's still the man's responsibility to make sure that, regardless of any challenges they face as a couple, their love, respect and attraction for each other deepens over time.

3 Of the Most Common Reasons Why Women Dump Men

There are many reasons why a woman will decide to dump a guy, but 3 of the most common ones are:

1. He stopped caring about making her feel the way that she wants to feel in a relationship

[image: He stopped caring]

The start of a relationship is usually the easy part because everything is new, exciting and fun.

You and her are getting laid, kissing, hugging, laughing and joking around together and will find doing simple things like going to a movie or eating at a restaurant fun and exciting because you are together.

Based on how much you feel for her, you might try hard to make her feel happy, loved, appreciated, noticed and all that other sweet and lovely stuff.

However, over time, some guys start to become a little comfortable in the relationship and slip into the habit of taking their woman for granted.

For example: While at the beginning of the relationship a guy might make the effort to go out with his woman (e.g. take her to a nice restaurant for dinner, go bowling together, go to the beach and watch the sunset, go to the movies), once things get comfortable between them, he might fall into the habit of staying home, watching TV and expecting her to cook all the meals.

After all, she is his girlfriend and they've already been out to restaurants plenty of times, so she should just be happy with that initial experience and get on with being a housewife/housegirlfriend.

Initially, being a kind of housewife for him might feel good to her because staying home means they can spend more time together in private, but if you know women, you will know that their excitement about something doesn't last forever.

If you want to keep a woman happy for life, you've got to mix up the experience to keep things interested, otherwise she will start to get bored and want to find stimulation elsewhere.

The excitement of being with you and doing the same things over and over again might last for months or even years, but eventually she's going to be a woman and say, "I'm bored" and if you don't care to change things up, she will eventually cheat on you or break up with you.

Here's the thing!

100 years ago, most men didn't have to worry about doing that because it was shameful for a woman to get divorced.

In today's world though, women are free to get in and out of relationships until they find the right guy and the right relationship dynamic for them.

If a modern man fails to deepen his woman's feelings, she will gradually disconnect with her original feelings of love for him and then cheat on him or dump him.

Yes, it isn't a nice part of modern life, but it's the reality and you can either be sad about it or use it to your advantage.

You can use it to your advantage by being the type of guy that no woman would want to break up with, which is actually pretty easy to do.

All you really need to do is:

- Be confident and emotionally strong.
- Reach for your true potential as a man by following your big dream, goal or ambition in life.
- Share love with her, rather than trying to take it all from her to keep for yourself.
- Be a man of your word.
- Don't remain at the same level of life together until it gets boring and stale. Grow together as a couple, try new things or proceed through the traditional levels of a relationship (i.e. engagement, marriage, children, grandchildren).
- Create and maintain a relationship dynamic that naturally inspires mutual respect, attraction and love.

As long as you do that, you are better than 99% of guys out there and a woman will know it and not want to leave you.

She won't want to risk losing an awesome man like you and having to date lots of new guys to hopefully find another guy who even comes close to you.

Let's have a look at the next common reason why a woman will dump a manâ€¦!

2. He became needy, insecure and jealous

[image: He became needy, insecure or jealous]

Women are instinctively attracted to the emotional strength in men (e.g. confidence, masculinity, drive and determination) and they are repelled by emotional weakness (e.g. self-doubt, insecurity, nervousness).

So, when a woman decides to date a guy and become his girlfriend, itâ€¦s usually because she has seen some of the attractive emotionally strong qualities in him.

For example: He might have confidently approached her, confidently asked her out on a date and confidently moved on for a kiss.

However, if he gradually begins to behave in a needy, jealous or overly possessive way, his emotional weakness will become a turn off to her.

She will then lose respect for him and then her attraction for him will also begin to fade away.

In a relationship, a woman wants to be able to relax into her feminine self, knowing that her man is the man all the time.

She doesn't want to be with a guy who needs her to be the strong one, so he can be weak and cuddle into her when he is feeling emotionally weak and vulnerable.

She wants a man who is emotionally strong with or without her reassurance and assistance.

If a guy falls into a habit of needing her to reassure him of her love all the time, uses their relationship to hide from his true potential in life and generally behaves like a lost, confused guy around her, she will feel deeply turned off by him.

When she notices that the other men around her (e.g. at university, work, her favorite hangout spot) are behaving in emotionally stronger ways than her man (e.g. are more confident, have purpose and direction), she will begin to lose respect for her boyfriend, fianc  or husband and start to question why she is sticking with him.

If he gets worse, she will either cheat on him or dump him for a more emotionally strong man.

3. He stopped living up to his full potential as a man

[image: He stopped trying to live up to his potential]

Most women see themselves as the little girl that they used to be growing up, who would cuddle into daddy when she felt scared or unsure of herself.

As an adult woman, she will still have that desire to be protected by an emotionally strong, masculine man even if she is confident, successful and independent.

Of course, she won't go around admitting that, but her fantasy guy is a man who can make her feel as safe as her dad made her feel when she was a little girl.

That doesn't mean she has "daddy issues," but that she simply wants to be able to feel like a feminine woman when she is with her man.

She doesn't want to have to feel like she is a guy's mother or big sister figure in his life. Instead, she wants to look up to him and feel proud to be his girl.

Based on this inner desire, women love the idea of a man who is confidently rising through the levels of life by reaching for his true potential as a man.

A man who doesn't need her to pat him on the head and say, "Good boy" or "Go on, you can do it. Just give it a try. Believe in yourself."

A man who believes in himself no matter what she or anyone else says about his ability to succeed.

Men who have that confidence instantly make a woman feel like he could provide for her and their children if they ever ended up having any together.

Of course, don't let that become a reason for you to make up excuses and say that you're not ready to have a woman because you're not successful enough at what you do.

A guy does not have to be successful at what he is aiming to achieve before he will be attractive to women.

As long as a woman can see that he has the drive, confidence and determination to become more successful in the future, she will feel attracted to his emotional strength and potential.

However, if a woman starts a relationship with a man and realizes that he has no intention of following through with his goals or pursuing the dreams he told her about when they began dating, she will naturally lose respect and attraction for him and want to dump him.

Why Women Give Vague Reasons For Dumping Guys

When a woman dumps a guy, she will rarely tell him the subtle, secret reasons she is doing it. Why? Here are 3 of the main reasons!

1. Fear of being physically hurt

For most of human history (and even to the present day) women have been hurt and even killed by their man when they attempted to break up with him.

So, a woman has the natural instinct to let her guy down as gently as possible so that he won't react badly (e.g. become angry, shout, make a scene in public, become violent).

She will do that by saying vague things like, "I just need some space," or "I just don't feel the same way anymore; it's not you, it's me," or "I just need some time apart to figure things out" hoping that it will be enough of an excuse for her to break up with a guy without him making a scene.

She can then use the time apart to find a replacement guy to protect her, move to another city or make friends with a new crowd of people who will protect her and stand up for her.

2. She doesn't want to waste time working on the relationship anymore

If a guy failed to notice and fix the things that were making her feel unhappy in the relationship, then she will feel that it doesn't matter if he doesn't know what those things are now that it's already too late.

She will be thinking, "If he wasn't paying attention to all the hints and messages I was giving him in the past, why should I bother spelling it out for him now that it's over between us?"

She would have thrown tantrums, warned him, gotten into arguments and requested that he change many times before, but he either took her for granted by expecting her to just put up with it, or he was clueless about how to change so he just kept doing the same thing.

3. Not wanting to teach him how to be the man she needs

One of the most important reasons why a woman won't tell a guy why she is dumping him is because she doesn't want to have to hold his hand and show him how to behave like a man in the relationship.

If she has to teach her guy how to be a man for her, she will end up feeling like his mother or big sister, and her respect and attraction for him as a man will then fade away.

Preventing a Break Up

If you are currently making any of the following relationship mistakes, you need to begin to change now, before it's too late:

- Being clingy.
- Taking her for granted.
- Getting into constant arguments.
- Breaking her trust.
- Not following through on your word.

- Not being the man in the relationship.
- Lacking purpose and direction.
- Being unable to control your jealousy.
- Not making her feel feminine in comparison to how masculine you think, talk, feel, behave and take action in life.

You can stop a break up before it happens.

Why Am I a Hopeless Romantic?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a guy identifies himself as a hopeless romantic, it's usually because he has fallen into a pattern of thinking that in order to get a woman to like him, want to have sex and be in a relationship with him, he has to behave like the guys in romantic movies.

The knight in shining armor, the nice guy who saves a woman from all the bad guys, the helpful friend guy who lifts a woman out of poverty or serious life problems and the nervous, nerdy guy who somehow saves the world from destruction and then gets the girl by the end of the movie.

It's all just so sweet and wonderful, isn't it?

No, it's not.

It's a movie.

In real life, you don't get to save the planet from invading aliens and women don't reward super nice guys with sex, love and devotion for doing favors for them.

When meeting a woman for the first time (e.g. at a bar, party, social event), you have to make her feel sexually attracted and turned on by you when you meet her, or else she will reject you or put you in the friend zone.

When in a relationship, you have to make her look up to you and respect you as a man, not act like a guy from a romantic movie who devotes his every waking moment to thinking about her, loving her and following her around like a lost puppy.

If you find that keeping your relationship together has required you to put in a lot of effort and hard work to make her happy, then you've been doing it wrong! ð□□□

Watch this...

A relationship with a woman is easy when you use the approach outlined in the video above.

Say Thanks to Your Mother (She Had Good Intentions)

Many of the guys who are hopeless romantics were raised by well-meaning mothers who told them things like, â□□To get a nice girl, you have to be a gentleman and do nice things for her,â□□ or â□□The reason I fell in love with your father is because he was so romantic. He always bought me flowers for no reason and took me on romantic picnics on the beach.â□□

Over time, this seemingly innocent (and good intentioned) advice from mother is reinforced by women's magazines, TV sitcoms, romantic movies, and of course the internet.

A guy only has to browse through Pinterest to be bombarded by quotes written by women telling him how to behave to impress them (e.g. â□□Don't put up with anything less than a gentleman,â□□ or â□□It's never out of style to pull out her chair, open her door, or lay your coat on the ground for herâ□□ or "Real men buy women flowers" or "Real men wait until marriage to have sex") and other nonsense.

Yet, here's the thingâ□|

A guy who behaves in the ways that women request ends up getting rejected by most women. Why?

Women don't select guys based on how nice and well behaved they are.

Women select guys based on how turned on he makes her feel during an interaction.

When she feels attracted and turned on by him, she will then LOVE the fact that he is also being romantic.

However, if she only experience friendly or neutral feelings for a guy and he is being very romantic, it will actually turn her off to the point where she will feel a bit sick in the stomach.

She might not be able to explain why she is feeling that way, but something just won't add up.

She will sense that something is wrong or not quite right.

The thing that is wrong or not quite right is that he is sexually attracted to her, but she isn't sexually attracted to him.

Think of it this way!

When a woman isn't fully attracted to a guy, she will perceive him as being either a friend (at best) or just some random guy (at worst).

Even if she's agreed to go on a date with him, it doesn't mean that she wants to get into a relationship with him.

A date is just a woman's way of testing whether she actually feels attracted to him enough to want to take things further.

On a date, it's a man's responsibility to create more sexual attraction between him and her so that she will feel excited about starting a relationship with him.

So, if he focuses all of his attention on trying to impress her by being romantic and going overboard with flowers, candlelit dinners, romantic songs, etc., she will feel like he's coming on too strong and may even feel creeped out by him.

When the guy gets rejected, he will often blame the woman for not recognizing how good of a guy he is.

Yet, what he doesn't realize is that sexual attraction needs to come first and only then will a woman appreciate the romance.

Accepting Reality

If you've always been a nice guy around women and treated them like the perfect romantic gentleman, and have been continually rejected and hurt, it's only natural that right now you might be saying, "Why am I such a hopeless romantic when all I get is pain? Women just don't appreciate romantic guys any more!"

Here's the thing!

There is absolutely nothing wrong with being a nice guy to women, being a gentleman and being romantic.

I treat my wife well and do romantic things with her, but it's only a small part of our amazing relationship.

Most women love a guy who can be romantic, but if he can't trigger her feelings of sexual attraction for him when they interact, being romantic isn't going to convince her to want to have sex, become his girlfriend or stay married to him as his wife.

Sure, some women will accept it initially, but they will quickly get bored when they realize that the guy mistakenly thinks that being sweet and romantic is the secret to keeping her happy.

She might appreciate that he's a romantic guy and feel flattered by all the effort he puts in, but in the end, if she's not feeling sexual desire for him, she's going to lose interest in being with him.

Part of being the kind of man that your woman respects and feels attracted to, is being in the position of power.

Watch this...

It might make you feel good to be a gentleman and give her all the power, but it's not what she really wants.

Where Romance Came From

In the past, most marriages were arranged by a woman's father or guardian, and it was more of a business deal than a romance.

A woman had to be a virgin on her wedding night and she couldn't go out and earn her own money, or make her own decisions regarding marriage, sex or life in general.

So, during medieval times, as a backlash to arranged marriages, the importance of love in a relationship began to flourish, and young men began to romance the women they desired as a way to gain their love.

This is where the concept of serenading a woman, writing flowery poetry and sending her a posy of flowers to woo her, first started.

In today's world, most relationships start with kissing and sex, not long, drawn out courtships filled with long love letters, bouquets of flowers or other romantic gestures.

In fact, according to a recent study, it turns out that 55% of couples had sex on their first date.

Most of the couples who didn't have sex on the first date would have done it on the second date, rather than getting involved in a long courtship before they eventually got it on.

In other words, being a hopeless romantic and trying to impress a woman with romantic gestures is no longer necessary to get her to want to have sex with you.

In fact, if you approach modern women in that way, they will almost certainly reject you because they now know that a real relationship starts after sex.

Most modern women aren't interested in wasting time dating a guy for weeks or months before he eventually sticks his wiener inside of her.

She wants to get it on early, so the relationship can begin and they can start progressing through the stages of a relationship all the way to true love and potentially marriage and family.

How do you get a woman to want you sexually?

When you make a woman feel sexually attracted to who you are as a person (e.g. confident, charismatic, reaching for your true potential as a man, interesting to talk to, charming), she will instinctively want to kiss, have sex and be in a relationship with you.

Then, when you are also romantic, she will consider herself lucky and she will feel even more attracted to you and will want to become your girlfriend.

Being Romantic in Ways That Women Like

Rather than wasting time and energy being romantic in ways that women aren't going to appreciate, here is how to be romantic and get the girl!'

1. Turn her on and then treat her with romantic conversation.

As long as you have turned her on first and know that she is sexually attracted to you, she will then love it when she hears that you think she is pretty and smart.

So, during a conversation, you can jokingly ask her something like, *â" Okay, so youâ"re smart, beautiful and sexy. So, whatâ"s the catch Cinderella? Do you turn into a pumpkin after midnight?*â"

This is a great way to create attraction because:

- Most women are insecure about their attractiveness to men, so you are making it clear to her right away that you think sheâ"s sexy.
- She will feel attracted to you for being confident enough to tease her like that, and she will also feel attracted to how you can make her laugh and feel good when sheâ"s with you.

Then, if you also happen to do something romantic (e.g. pull out a chair for her, open a door for her, pour a drink for her before you pour one for yourself), she will see it as being sweet and exciting, and she will be happy to be with a guy who not only triggers her feelings of sexual attraction and respect for him, but is also a romantic, good guy.

2. Donâ"t be predictable.

The key to romance is to use it unpredictably.

If you fall into a pattern of being a predictable romantic (e.g. you buy her flowers before you meet her for every date, you take her to the same restaurant for a romantic dinner once a week, you always pull out a chair for her or open doors for her), she will eventually begin to expect these things and then they will stop being romantic to her.

Instead, she will start to look at you as being too serious and proper and will want you to relax and ease up on the chivalrous behavior.

To be unpredictable, you donâ"t have to come up with bigger and better romantic ideas every time; you simply have to vary when and how you romance her.

For example: Rather than buy a woman a big bunch of flowers before a date, you can pick a wildflower from a bush during a walk and put it in her hair.

Alternatively, rather than take her to a restaurant every time you go out together, you can invite her to your place for dinner, and then instead of having something prepared, you can get her to help you cook.

Continue to build up her feelings of sexual attraction while you cook together by teasing her about her chopping skills, smudging her cheek with tomato sauce, or joking about her panda eyes caused by her runny mascara from chopping onions.

Essentially, itâ"s not what you do, but rather the feelings and emotions you evoke inside of her when you do it that counts.

When a woman is attracted to who you are as a man, she will regard most of the nice things that you do as being romantic.

As long as you remain spontaneous and attractive (e.g. be confident, masculine in the way you talk, behave, feel and think), anything that you do will be romantic to her and she will feel lucky to have found a great man like you who also happens to be a hopeless romantic (but in a good way).

Then you will never have to ask, â€œWhy am I a hopeless romantic?â€œ like itâ€™s a bad thing, because you will have discovered that thereâ€™s a lot more to you as a man than just romance.

Why Do My Relationships Never Last?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

In today's world, if you want your relationship to last, you have to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time, rather than taking her commitment for you for granted.

In the past, a woman had to stay with a man for life even if he made her feel unhappy or treated her badly, but in today's world, a woman has the freedom to get in and out of relationships until she finds a man who gives her the relationship experience that she feels she deserves.

To ensure that your relationship stays together, you need to be setting off more positive chain reactions than negatives.

Watch this video for more info...

If you're constantly setting off negative chain reactions (e.g. because you're being insecure, emotionally sensitive, are unable to handle her tests of your confidence, giving her too much power), she will lose interest.

Once you understand what women REALLY want (which is different to what they say), you will realize that relationships with women are SO EASY.

So, if you're wondering, Why do my relationships never last? here are 5 of the most common reasons why women lose respect for, and break up with, a guy.

1. He Makes Her the Center of His World

Many guys make the mistake of focusing all of their attention on their woman, thinking that it will make her feel so special, loved and appreciated that she won't ever want to leave him.

For example: A guy like might stop hanging out with his friends, give up his interests and hobbies, and he may even stop pursuing his dreams so that he can focus all his attention on his girlfriend.

He might spend all his free time with her, do whatever she wants, and shower her with attention and gifts, and constantly tells her things like, You mean the world to me. I don't know what I would do without you, or You are so special to me. I would do anything for you or "My life would have no meaning without you in it."

He sounds like every woman's dream guy, right?

No.

Life isn't a romantic Hollywood movie.

It's just not how things work in real life.

Even though a woman may enjoy his undivided attention at the start of a relationship and feel flattered, over time that approach to a relationship begins to feel smothering.

A woman's instincts kick in and she starts to wonder why he only cares about her and is essentially turning his back on other important things in life that other men usually care about (i.e. following through on and achieving their big goal, dream or ambition in life).

If his only ambition is to have her and keep her, she will begin to wonder whether she is with a man who is afraid of rising up through the levels of life to reach for his true potential.

She then might begin to feel as though she's too good for him and consider leaving him to find a more courageous man who doesn't hide from life behind her and a relationship.

Of course, there are many unattractive women out there who are happy to date insecure guys who make her their life's mission, but the majority of attractive women prefer a guy who is confident in himself and has more going on in his life than just her.

So, a key thing to remember when in a relationship with a woman is that to continue building on her love, respect and attraction for you, you need to be able to balance your love and attention for her, while at the same time striving to reach your true potential as a man.

She will then look up to you and respect you. She will feel proud to be your woman, rather than feeling like she's stuck with yet another fearful guy who is hiding from being the man he should be in this life.

2. He Becomes Clingy, Needy and Insecure

[image: He becomes clingy, needy and insecure]

There's nothing wrong with loving and wanting your woman 100%, but when you need her for your emotional security and stability as a man, that's when problems begin to arise in the relationship.

For example: An insecure, clingy, needy type of guy might insist that his girlfriend give up her friends just to spend time with him.

He might also begin to prevent her from hanging out with her colleagues after work in case she develops a crush with one of them, stop her from pursuing her interests, or call her many times a day to check up on her.

He might also get angry or upset if she takes too long to answer a text message from him or return his call.

If a woman resists this type of behavior, he might say things like, “If you loved me as much as I love you, you wouldn't do this to me,” or “You would do this for me if you really loved me,” or even accuse her of cheating or wanting to cheat, “Do you like a guy at your work? Is that why you've been acting distant recently? Do you think he is better looking than me? Do you fantasize about having sex with him? What is going on? Tell me!”

If you want to make sure that your relationship last, one of the most important things to remember is that clingy, needy and insecure behavior is a big turn off for most women.

Most women love the idea of being with a guy who loves them, but who is also confident enough in himself and in his value to her, not to need to control her every move.

The more confident you are as a man, the more attractive you become and the more a woman's respect and love for you will grow.

To avoid being clingy, insecure and jealous, you need to give your woman your full trust and let her take care of it.

Yes, she could ruin your trust one day, but that will be her fault, not yours.

However, if you try to control her and smother her due to insecurity, she will lose respect for you, then attraction and then fall out of love and that will be your fault.

Giving your woman your full trust is something that takes a little getting used to, but once you do it, you will see that the love, respect and attraction deepens in your relationship rather than fading away like it did in previous relationships.

Essentially, giving your woman your full trust is the mature, grown up way to approach a relationship and make it last.

3. He Takes Her for Granted

[image: He takes her for granted]

This is one of the main reasons why relationships don't last these days, because women just don't put up with it as much as they used to.

In the beginning of the relationship, a guy is usually very loving, attentive and kind towards his woman.

Yet over time, either he becomes complacent in the relationship and thinks that she will stick around even though he's not paying her much attention, or other things become more important than keeping the attraction, respect and love alive between him and his woman (e.g. he puts all of his attention on work and gives none to her, he uses his spare time to play video games or drink with friends, he spends too much time at the gym).

If you want your relationship to last, you've got to love her all the way, instead of getting her to love you and then expecting her to stick around now that you've hooked her in.

For example: At the beginning of the relationship, a guy might take notice of his woman's appearance and will compliment her for looking good.

He might take her out to restaurants and spoil her with a surprise weekend away once in a while, or give her an occasional surprise gift or bunch of flowers.

Yet, once he feels comfortable in the relationship, he stops noticing his woman's efforts to look good, and he settles into a routine of doing the same thing week in week out.

That is fine for a while, but if it's on repeat for more than a year without much variation, a woman will begin to feel as though he's taking her commitment to him and the relationship for granted.

Gradually, she will get tired of seeming unimportant to him and she will either threaten to break up with him, cheat on him and then break up with him or just break up with him and try to find a new guy to replace him.

So, when you are in a relationship, it is very important that you continue to make your woman feel loved and appreciated no matter how busy or comfortable you get.

Personally speaking, I am extremely busy as I build the gigantic movement that is The Modern Man.

Yet, I always make sure to balance my time to give my woman plenty of love, attention, laughter and enjoyment of being with me.

I would love to devote more time to work (I work about 50 hours a week), but I have to maintain a balance.

Life is all about balance.

You've got to eat well, exercise, love well, bang your woman well and sleep well.

Keep everything balance and life is great. Tip things out of balance and eventually, problems begin to arise.

So, even if you are really busy with work or with studies, taking the time to give your woman a compliment on her appearance, or to arrange a night out together, will go a long way towards making her feel loved, and will help to deepen the respect, attraction and love that she already feels for you.

By the wayâ€¦!

If you've gotten dumped for taking a woman for granted, here's how to recover from itâ€¦!

As you will discover from the video above, taking a woman for granted isn't a good thing to do, but it's also not the worst, most unforgivable thing in the world.

Most guys make the mistake of taking their woman for granted, but if you have done that and then become a better man, there's no need to keep beating yourself up about it.

Instead, be a great man by learning from the experience and becoming a better man as a result.

4. He Allows Her to Wear the Pants in the Relationship

To avoid fights or confrontations, some guys choose to step back and allow their woman to take the lead.

A guy like that believes that letting her make all the decisions will make her happy because she gets what she wants.

Yet, thatâ€¦s not how a woman's happiness with a man works.

While a woman does want to be heard, listened to, respected and loved, she doesn't want to have a pushover for a man who lets her walk all over him.

Only unattractive women like men like that. If an attractive woman accepts a man like that, she will eventually cheat on him, break up with him or divorce him.

A woman wants to be with a man who takes the lead in a relationship and makes her look up to him and respect him, while also listening to her and respecting her.

If a woman finds that she is bossing her man around and getting away with whatever she wants, she may enjoy it for a little while, but eventually she will lose so much respect for him, that she won't care how much power she has because she's not feeling respect, attraction and love for him.

Itâ€¦s a fundamental fact of nature that women are attracted to the emotional strength in men (e.g. confidence, masculinity, determination, the ability to stand up for himself) and turned off by the emotional weakness (e.g. insecurity, nervousness, letting her push him around).

So, even though a guy might get lucky and find himself in a relationship with a woman who overlooks his insecurities and self-doubt in the beginning, if he fails to man-up and become the man that she needs him to be (i.e. lead in the relationship), she will eventually break up with him.

I know this because I've personally helped 100s of guys to get their ex back in situations like this, where the woman has lost respect for him because he just wasn't enough of a man for her.

It doesn't matter how rich, good looking or tall the man is, a woman is still going to break up with him if he doesn't make her feel the fundamentally important emotions of respect, attraction and love.

This is why you will see men who aren't financially successful, who aren't good looking and aren't tall and muscular with a beautiful girlfriend or wife for life.

Women place much more importance on how a guy's personality, behavior, thinking and actions make her feel than on superficial things like looks, money and height.

Of course, there are women out there who enjoy being the boss in the relationship, but these types of relationships are more about convenience than true love.

The woman (usually unattractive) simply accepts an insecure man so she can stop her parents or girlfriends from hassling her about still being single or not having children.

Yet, the relationship will almost certainly end in a break up or divorce.

So, to avoid being dumped for giving a woman too much power, you simply need to accept the fact that women remain attracted to emotionally strong men who have the balls and heart (i.e. you care about how she feels) to take the lead in the relationship.

When you embrace your role as the man and take the lead, a woman can then relax into your masculine direction and be a loving, feminine woman for you.

Of course, a woman can and will take the lead at times (e.g. doing the cooking, keeping your home neat and tidy, keeping your books and finances in order), but generally speaking, she will want you to take on the role of leader and director in the relationship.

If you don't, she will instinctively begin to feel unsatisfied, her love will fade into the background and you will find yourself wondering, "Why do my relationships never last?"

5. He Tells Her He Loves Her Too Soon

[image: He tells her that he loves her too soon]

Some examples of when a guy should not express his feelings of love too soon in a relationship include the following:

1. When a woman isn't yet fully attracted to him.

Attraction is always the first step that a guy needs to go through with any woman he wants to have sex with and be in a relationship with.

If a woman isn't fully sexually attracted to him, she might like him as a person and enjoy hanging out and doing things together, but she won't feel excited about exploring a committed sexual, romantic relationship with him if she's not completely attracted to him first.

2. When a woman is not as serious about the relationship as he is.

In today's world, women are free to have casual sexual relationships with guys without the need to become serious.

Some women enjoy one-night stands, while others enjoy having a sexual relationship with a guy (or multiple guys) without wanting the seriousness and commitment that comes with a long-term relationship.

However, some guys make the mistake of thinking that if he tells a woman who doesn't want to be in a committed relationship with him how much he loves her, she will change her mind and will fall in love with him too.

Yet, thatâs not how it works.

If a woman is trying to avoid a serious relationship, she will have had loads of guys saying, “I love you” and hoping to get her into a relationship.

What she wants is a guy who is more of a challenge to win overâ!

She wants to feel so much respect, attraction and love for him that she can’t stop herself from saying, “I love you” during or after sex.

Most guys can’t give her that experience though because they think they’re being original and romantic by expressing their feelings of love when things seem to be going well.

3. When a woman feels more valuable than the guy.

A woman doesnât want to feel like sheâs doing a guy a favor by being with him.

She wants to feel know that her guy could have his pick of other women if he wanted to, but he has chosen her.

That is what makes her feel special, even though she would rarely admit that if asked in person.

Almost all women say that they hate it when a guy thinks that most women like him, but he is actually the kind of guy that they lust after and hope to get.

It’s not about bragging about having other women interested, but simply being able to attract women during interactions without desperately trying to pick them up.

When women feel attracted and turned on by you and then notice that you’re not desperate to pick them up, they will know that you could easily get other women.

A woman will then feel special and lucky to be chosen by you.

So, when you are in a dating a new woman, rather than wear your heart on your sleeve and immediately telling her that you love her, simply focus on making her feel so attracted to you that she can’t stop herself from saying it first.

She will love you so much more for giving her that priceless gift that she can then brag about to her girlfriends for life.

Why Do Women Act Crazy During Their Period?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The main reason why some women act crazy during their period is because of the changes that occur to their hormone levels at this time.

Basically, when a woman's progesterone levels drop too quickly before menstruation, she experiences something called Pre Menstrual Syndrome (PMS), which then impacts her mood during.

This may cause her to behave in ways that are uncharacteristic to her normal behavior (e.g. she becomes overly emotional and cries for no apparent reason, is irritable, gets really annoyed over seemingly insignificant things, experiences mood swings, feels depressed, anxious).

According to the National Association for Pre-Menstrual Syndrome, 90% of women suffer from PMS, with up to 10% seriously affected, so chances are that, as long as you're in a relationship with a woman, once a month she will probably act a little bit crazier than usual.

The best way to handle her mood change is to love her and laugh at her.

Love Her and Laugh at Her

[image: Love her and laugh at her]

When your woman gets really emotionally and acts weird during her period, just love her and accept that she is experiencing hormonal changes.

Don't get angry at her or take it personally. She can't turn her hormonal changes off, so you are either going to love her for who she is, or get annoyed when she changes once a month and have unnecessary fights and arguments.

The other part of Love Her and Laugh at her is to laugh at her.

So, rather than taking everything that she says or does so seriously, just laugh at her and the situation.

If she is getting angry for no good reason, laugh and say something like, "You look funny when you get angry."

If she is threatening to hurt you or hit you, just laugh and say, "Oooh, you're a little tough girl now. Oooh, how scary. Let me feel your muscles. Wow, you're tough" and laugh at her and the situation.

If she is going crazy and throwing a tantrum, start laugh and take out your phone and say, "I'm going to record this and post it on Youtube. I'll call it Crazy Girlfriend Throws a Funny Tantrum."

The whole point of laughing is to take away the seriousness of the crazy, angry behavior and bring the interaction back to love.

If you want your relationship to last a lifetime, you as the man need to be the more emotional strong one who has the ability to bring interactions back to love.

Most guys can't do that, so when you are the guy who can, a woman loves and appreciates you in a way that makes her want to stick with you no matter what.

Period or Not, Women Are Emotional Beings

The more feminine and girly a woman is, the more likely it is that she gets emotional while on her period or not.

For example: A woman might be the boss at her work where she is always serious and in control of her emotions.

Yet, when she comes home at night, she might break down and cry because she had a stressful day at work, or she might blow up at her boyfriend (or husband) for something completely irrelevant; simply because she's feeling moody and emotional.

For many guys, this type of behavior comes across as being crazy, because that's not how men behave.

Unlike a woman who will pick a fight with her man for no apparent reason, a loving, masculine man won't take out his bad mood on his woman.

A feminine or insecure man will, but a loving, masculine man won't.

A loving, masculine man will generally keep his emotions in check, and if he had a bad day at work, he will get over it immediately because unlike a feminine-minded man who wants to whine, bitch and moan, a masculine man doesn't feel the need to.

If he can't get over it on his own, he might go to the gym, go for a run, wash his car, or do something else that will help him to work off some steam and relax.

That way, when he interacts with his woman, he can have a positive, loving, fulfilling interaction with her, rather than taking out his negative emotions on her and ruining her respect for him in the process.

A masculine man knows that men and women are different and he doesn't expect a woman to think, talk, feel and act rationally like a man.

He knows that his sexual attraction for her exists because she is a woman and if she were to think, talk, feel, behave and act like a man, they would both begin to lose interest in having sex with each other.

So, if you find yourself getting frustrated every time your girlfriend (fiancée or wife) gets emotional and starts to act crazy (especially during her period), it could be because you're making the mistake of wanting her to behave more like a man (e.g. be in control of her emotions, be logical and serious like you are).

Let Her Be a Woman and She Will Love You For it

The majority of women are feminine beings and getting emotional is not only natural to them, it's also a way for them to test how much of a man their guy really is.

For example: Sometimes, when a woman throws a tantrum, is moody, or bursts into tears over nothing around her man, a guy can easily get caught up in her drama and become angry at her, shout and get upset, storm off in a bad mood, or even cry and beg her to forgive him for whatever it is that she is blaming him for.

[image: She will always be different to you. Let her be a woman]

When he reacts in this way, rather than actually make her stop her bad behavior, she actually becomes even more moody and she may even stop wanting to have sex with him. Why?

If he loses his cool and becomes emotional (like a woman), she can no longer relax into her feminine self around him because he's clearly not a masculine man, and as a result, she begins to lose respect for him.

The more respect a woman loses for her man, the less sexual attraction she feels for him and all that leads to her losing interest in sex and intimacy.

This is the main reason why, no matter how crazy a woman acts during her period, or at any other time, you have to remain calm and simply accept that she won't always behave in a rational way like you do and that's okay.

She's a woman and you're a man.

Accept it and love her for who she is, rather than trying to get her to be more manly like you, where she remains in control of her emotions and acts sensibly all the time.

Could Her Tantrums and Tears During Her Period Be Caused By a Deeper Problem in Your Relationship?

Although a woman experiences hormonal changes before her period that she has no control over, the truth is that she won't go completely crazy if her relationship is going well.

For example: A woman might get annoyed if her man forgets to put the cap back on the toothpaste, and she might even say, "Why do you always do that? It drives me crazy!"

Yet, small things like that aren't going to make her want to break up with him.

It's only when there are deeper problems in the relationship (e.g. she feels taken for granted, her guy is clingy or insecure, he doesn't have any goals or ambitions) that make most women want to leave.

If there are deeper problems in your relationship, you will find that when she is pre-menstrual, she focuses on the negatives and begins to treat you badly as a result.

When the problems don't go away, she will then begin to question whether she wants to be stuck in a relationship with a guy who takes her for granted, is going nowhere in his life, or who is constantly insecure and self-doubting.

Using the example of the toothpaste above, that small irritation can turn into an opportunity for her to attack a deeper character flaw in her man.

Instead of her just getting annoyed and forgetting about it, she might react by saying things like, "You're so unreliable. You never do anything right," or "You always expect me to pick up after you. I'm not your damn maid you know!"

In reality, what she could be saying is, "You never follow through on anything. You are not a man of your word," or "I feel like you are taking me for granted in this relationship."

While she might be able to forgive her guy when she's not feeling hormonal, during her period, she will experience the problems in the relationship full force.

So, if your woman acts crazy during her period, it is possible that there are certain issues that are not being dealt with in your relationship.

Ask yourself:

- Have her and I been dealing with issues in the relationship as they crop up, or have we been sweeping our problems under the carpet?
- Have I been a man of my word, or have I been making promises to her that I haven't kept?
- Have I made her feel loved and appreciated in the relationship, or have I been taking her for granted?
- Do we have similar goals and dreams that we are working towards as a couple, or are we aiming for different things in life in the long run?
- Do I have interests and friends outside of the relationship, or have I made my woman the main focus in my life?
- Am I the man in the relationship, or is she wearing the pants?

By answering these questions, you will be able to determine whether your woman acting crazy during her period is hormonal, or if there are deeper, more serious issues you need to face.

There's Nothing That Cannot Be Fixed

If there are deeper problems in your relationship that will lead her to break up with you soon, you can fix them now.

Don't panic.

Instead, just become a better man and make her feel the way that all women want to feel in a relationship (i.e. feminine and girly in comparison to you, safe about the future, loved and accepted, respectful of you).

Make sure that the problems that are turning her off begin to go away in the next few weeks to a month and you will notice a big difference in her behavior during her period.

For example: During her period, a woman might get angry with her boyfriend and say things like, â€œYou are so needy! You are smothering me! Iâ€™m your girlfriend, not your child! I can make my own decisions!â€

A guy might then realize that he is generally behaving in a clingy, needy, insecure and possibly controlling way.

He can fix this byâ€¦

1. Making progress on his biggest dreams, goals and ambitions in life, rather than focusing all of his attention on her.
2. Finding a hobby to pursue separately from her (e.g. playing a musical instrument, running, restoring old cars).
3. Reconnecting with old friends that he might have lost touch with when he started dating her, or making new friends.

In this way, he will be fixing the root of the problem, and the next time she has her period, he will more than likely notice that she's not acting as crazy as before.

Of course, she will probably still get irritable or tearful, but rather than direct her tantrums and tears towards him, she might just cry over a sad movie, or call up her best friend to have a good whine with her instead.

Don't Crumble Under Her Pressure

[image: Don't try to change her into a man]

When your woman acts crazy, you have to remain strong and not become overly emotional with her. When you remain in control of your emotions (i.e. you remain calm, positive, confident, easy-going, respectful towards her, respectful of yourself) you are showing her that you are the man, while at the same time allowing her to feel totally feminine in contrast to you.

The truth is that your woman will always experience life differently to you, so don't focus your energy on trying to tame her and make her think, feel, act and behave more like you.

If you do that, she will lose touch with her femininity and your relationship with her will seem more like a neutral friendship, which will kill the sexual attraction between you.

So, the next time your woman acts crazy during her period, simply show her that you love her (e.g. by giving her a backrub to relieve the pain, prepare a hot water bottle to help with her cramps), and accept the fact that she will likely be more temperamental, moody and irrational during this time â€œ and thatâ€œs okay.

To get rid of the seriousness of the situation, be the one who laughs and brings it all back to smiling, laughter, love and happiness together.

Of course, she might snap and get angry an hour later, but hey â€œ she's a hormonal woman on her period.

Just laugh and say, "Oh, here we go again. Crazy girlfriend is back. Got to get a video of this and post it on Youtube" and have a laugh with her.

Of course, you don't actually post the video online.

It's just something to get her to become conscious of her behavior, get distracted from the tantrum and have something to laugh about with you as you bring the interaction back to love.

Alternatively, you can say things like, "Huh? What did you say?" after she rants and raves for a minute about something and add in, "Sorry, I wasn't listening the entire time" and have a laugh with her about that.

Essentially, don't take her tantrums so seriously.

Love her and laugh at her.

Why Do Women Act Distant in a Relationship?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you believe that you're doing everything right in your relationship, it only makes sense that you'd be wondering why she is being distant.

After all, if you're a good guy, you love her and you're doing your best, then what is her problem?

So, why do women act distant, when to a guy, everything seems to be going perfectly on track?

Here are 4 common reasons why!

1. She's testing your confidence

[image: She is testing your confidence]

Women always test a guy's confidence because they have an instinctive need to ensure that they are coupled up with a confident guy who will remain emotionally strong with or without her reassurance.

If she becomes distant to test how you will react and you then become emotionally sensitive and insecure, she will instinctively lose respect and attraction for you.

Even though she might not be able to explain it herself, instinctively she will know that something just isn't right.

A woman will happily stick with a man if he is able to remain confident in his attractiveness and value to her no matter how she tests him.

However, if he can't handle her confidence tests, she will instinctively begin to lose interest in being with him.

Each woman uses confidence tests in a different way and with different timing.

For example: Some women are easy to pick up and get into a relationship, but about 2-3 months in, she will completely change and play hard to get.

Likewise, some women test a guy's confidence a lot when they first meet him by playing hard to get, but once they are in a relationship, they soften up and fall madly in love.

Each woman is slightly different, so to be successful at picking up women and keeping a relationship together, you've got to be emotionally strong enough to handle the confidence tests of women.

2. Her feelings for you aren't strong enough yet

Another reason why your woman might be acting distant is that she's just not fully in love with you yet.

The beginning of a relationship is always the easy part because of the excitement of being with someone new, kissing, having sex and enjoying the feelings of lust and new love.

However, after a while (how long depends on the woman), it's not unusual for a woman to ask herself:

- Is this the guy that I see myself being with in the long term?

- Is he really the best that I can do?
- Can he deepen my respect, attraction and love for him over time, or is this as good as itâ€™s going to get?
- Can I love him, faults and all, or is he only good enough for now, until someone better comes along?

Naturally, while all of this is going on in her head, she will act distant and pull away from her man, causing him to feel shut out, and possibly even worried about losing her.

He might then begin to think, behave, talk and act in insecure ways, which will turn her off and start making her think about breaking up with him.

What a guy needs to do is to simply relax, maintain his belief in his attractiveness to her and let the relationship unfold naturally.

As long as he is able to deepen her feelings of respect, attraction and love over time, she won't want to break up with him.

However, one of the reasons why some women won't fall madly in love quickly is that she doesn't want to go through the process of giving her complete love and trust to a guy, only to find out a short while later that he has no idea how to guide her into deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love in the long term.

For example: Some guys think that once they get a girlfriend to fall in love with them initially, she's going to stick around and put up with him for a long time or for life.

A guy like this might then relax and assume that hanging out together, watching TV, going out to eat once in a while and kissing and having sex is enough for her to want to stay with him for life.

Yet, thatâ€™s not how it works.

If you want your relationship with your woman to grow and flourish over time, you have to be the one leading both her, and yourself, to deeper levels of respect, attraction and love.

If you can't do that, then why should she stay interested?

Look at it this way: When you plant a seed, you have to then continue watering and nurturing it for the rest of your life, if you want it to grow into a big, strong healthy plant.

The same applies to a relationship.

The initial feelings of attraction are not enough to last for a lifetime, unless you can nurture them into something bigger and more meaningful.

The more attraction, love and respect you can make her feel for you, the quicker she will decide that youâ€™re a catch worth keeping, and then she will draw closer to you and open up, because she won't want to lose you.

3. She's feeling turned off by your excessive need for her

[image: She is turned off by your neediness]

There's nothing wrong with really wanting your woman and enjoying spending time with her, but when it gets to the point where you need her for your emotional security and stability, that's when problems begin to occur.

Itâ€™s a womanâ€™s natural instinct to be attracted to the emotional strength in men (e.g. confidence, masculinity, drive and determination, high self esteem) and be turned off by the emotional weakness (e.g. insecurity, self-doubt, clinginess, neediness).

If a woman is a little preoccupied and distracted in her relationship (e.g. sheâ€™s having a hard time at work, sheâ€™s in the middle of big exams) and her guy reacts by becoming clingy and needy towards her, she will instinctively pull away and start acting distant.

If he then keeps asking, â€˜Why are you being so distant? Whatâ€™s wrong? Whatâ€™s changed between us; donâ€™t you love me anymore?â€™ or â€˜You know that you are everything to me. Youâ€™re the only thing that I care about? Canâ€™t you see that when you act distant and keep me shut out I feel like Iâ€™m dying inside? What do I need to do make things go back to the way they were at the beginning? Just tell me and Iâ€™ll do anything for you. Anything!â€™ she will feel turned off by what she perceives as his emotional weakness.

She might then start thinking, â€˜Why is he so insecure in our relationship? What is he hiding from? Have I hooked up with a guy that other women wouldnâ€™t want? Is he needy for me because he knows how difficult it would be to find another woman? What kind of man do I have here? Is he needy for me because he lacks purpose in life? Is he afraid of spending time rising through the levels of life to reach for his true potential as a man? Do I have a failure of a man here? Am I going to be safe staying with him in the long run?â€™

If she senses that he is using her and the relationship as an excuse to hide from his true potential as a man in life, she will naturally distance herself from him even more.

A woman definitely wants a man who loves and respects her and is there for her, but she doesnâ€™t want get stuck with a guy who hides from the challenges of life behind a relationship with her.

When a guy is needy, clingy and insecure in his relationship, it makes a woman feel as though she has to mother him and take care of him emotionally, which is a huge turn off for her.

4. Sheâ€™s trying to tell you that something is wrong

Every couple goes through some ups and downs in a relationship. Itâ€™s completely normal, expected and natural.

However, if a woman suddenly realizes that her instinctive desire to distant herself isnâ€™t because of little things (e.g. he doesnâ€™t take out the garbage when she asks him to, he forgets to call her when he said he would), but because of major issues, she will begin to distance herself from her guy.

For example: A woman might realize that, even though at the beginning of their relationship, her guy attracted her with certain personality traits and behaviors (e.g. confidence, masculinity, charisma, charm), it was all an act to get her into a relationship.

Now, after she has fallen for him a little, his true colors are coming through (e.g. heâ€™s insecure, jealous, doesnâ€™t have much purpose or direction in life, prefers to watch TV rather than face his problems head on, canâ€™t handle her confidence tests, argues with her over unimportant things, needs her emotional support to feel strong).

She might then start dropping hints to let him know whatâ€™s bothering her (e.g. she might say, â€˜Why are you always watching TV? Why donâ€™t you do something with your life?â€™ or â€˜Youâ€™re smothering me. I need some space.â€™)

If he doesn't get the message, she will begin pulling away and distancing herself emotionally until she is ready to break up with him.

Unfortunately, most guys don't notice what's going on until it's almost too late.

They often ask, But, why doesn't she just tell me what's bothering her? How am I supposed to guess what's going on?

Yet, here's something that you need to understand and accept about women!

Most women won't come out and tell a guy what's bothering them and give him a nice list of things to fix. A woman will hint and then she'll distance herself and wait for her man to figure things out by himself.

Why?

She doesn't want to have to mother him or teach him how to be the kind of man she can look up to, respect and feel attracted to.

If she has to take on the role, she will feel more dominant than him and that will kill her feelings of sexual attraction.

So, if your woman is acting distant, it may be her way of trying to get your attention focused on the fact that there is a deep problem with how you are approaching the relationship dynamic (e.g. you're giving her too much power, your insecurity is ruining her attraction for you).

The sooner you understand what is causing her to pull away from you, the sooner you can fix any issues and re-spark her feelings of respect and attraction.

Making Your Relationship Better Than it Was Before

[image: Making your relationship better than it was before]

Right now, if you're asking, Why do women act distant in a relationship? it's quite obvious that your relationship is not the way you want it to be.

The good news is that this can change and you can actually make your relationship even better than it was before.

Start by figuring out the real reason your woman is acting distant.

Ask yourself!

- Have I been turning her off by acting jealous, needy or insecure?
- Have I been making her feel the way she wants to feel when she's with a man (i.e. making her feel feminine and girly in comparison to how masculine I think, talk, feel, behave and act)?
- Am I rising through the levels of life like a man, or am I using her and the relationship as an excuse to hide from my fears of failure?
- Have I been deepening her feelings of respect, attraction and love, or have I been sitting back hoping that it will happen all by itself?

Regardless of what your answers are, when you start fixing your issues and show your woman that she's been heard, she will naturally start to feel respect for you again.

Then, you simply need to continue deepening her feelings of attraction for you and her love for you will become stronger every day.

She will open up to you and feel lucky to have found a man that is so emotionally strong and mature compared to other guys.

Instinctively, she will know that her best chance at a happy, fulfilling life is to hold on to you and never let you go, rather than risking being a guy who isn't able to make her feel what you do.

What to Say to Your Girlfriend After a Fight

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

People don't always see things the same way all the time, which is why it is perfectly normal for a couple to fight once in a while.

However, if you want your relationship to stay together for life, you must always try to bring everything back to laughter, smiling and love, rather than trying to outwit her, make her look stupid or intimidate her with aggression.

Fighting is fine, but bring it back to love.

[image: Bring it back to love]

How you handle arguments and disagreements is very important because what you say and do during those moments will either bring you and your woman closer together, or cause you to grow apart.

So, if you're wondering what to say to your girlfriend after a fight, here are some quick do's and don'ts to keep in mind:

1. Don't Beg For Her Forgiveness

[image: Please I'm begging you]

Apologizing and saying I'm sorry after a fight is perfectly okay; especially if you're responsible for what caused the fight in the first place (e.g. you broke a promise, said something hurtful to her).

However, no matter how badly you messed up, pleading and begging her to forgive you is the worst thing you can do at this time. Why?

Right now, your girlfriend is feeling angry, hurt and maybe even a little turned off by you.

By breaking down and behaving in a way that makes you appear emotionally weak, she will begin to lose respect for you because you are showing her that you lack the emotional strength and maturity of a real man.

In most relationship break ups, the main reason why a woman decides to end the relationship is that she loses respect for her guy and no longer sees him as being man enough for her.

With that in mind, you will then understand that what you say to your girlfriend after a fight is very important because it will either make her respect, attraction and love for you grow, or it will make her feelings for you shrink.

So, when you apologize to your girlfriend, do it in a way that is loving and sincere, but also emotionally strong.

For example: Rather than say, I'm so sorry!! Please forgive me!! I'll do anything you want me to do and I promise never to do that again!! which will make her see you as emotionally weak and will make her lose respect for you as her man, you can say, I apologize for what happened. I've had a chance to think about it and I can now see that what I did was wrong and why you feel that way about it. I'm going to use a different approach next time so we don't have to end up feeling like this again.

Not only does this make her feel understood, it also shows that you're man enough to accept responsibility for your actions and then take action in improving yourself; and her respect, attraction and love for you will grow.

2. Don't Give in Just to Please Her

A big mistake that guys make in relationships with women, is letting her have her way just to keep the peace.

When a guy lacks experience with relationships or still doesn't understand what women really want, he will often believe that keeping a woman happy is about doing whatever she wants.

Essentially, she wears the pants, calls the shots and leads the dynamic.

Yes, relationships work like that in the movies, but in real life, women get sick and tired of that very quickly.

Doing whatever a woman wants only leads to more fights because most women need to know that their man is man enough to stand up for what he really believes in; even if it's standing up to her.

When a guy can stand up for what he believes in, a woman believes that he will probably be strong enough to handle what life throws at him, so he will be better equipped to guide both of them to a better future together.

On the other hand, if he always gives in to her, what else is he giving in to?

Will he be able to stand up for himself in a difficult situation (e.g. at work, in a social setting), or will he just keep quiet and take it?

Will she have to stick up for him at family get-togethers or around friends?

Will he be able to speak up confidently when they are faced with a challenging or awkward situation as a couple, or will he expect her to be the stronger one?

Again, it all boils down to her being able to respect him as her man.

So, if you've had a fight with your girlfriend and you feel strongly about the issue, don't just say what she wants to hear just to make peace.

You can still make up with her without having to compromise what you believe in.

For example: A guy might be taking extra classes to improve his qualifications so that he can get a better job, which will benefit both him and his girlfriend in the long-run by giving them a better financial future.

Right now, the extra classes might be taking up a lot of his spare time and his girlfriend may be feeling unloved and neglected, which is causing a lot of fights.

Rather than him saying, "Okay, I'll cut down on my classes so that we can spend more time together if that's what you want," if he really believes in what he's doing he needs to stand up for himself, while still being a loving and caring boyfriend.

He can say something like, "I see why my working so hard is making you feel like this. I can't stop going to classes, because it's important to me that I finish this so that I can secure a better future for both of us. However, I really care for you and it's also important for me that you feel happy, so I will make sure that we spend as much of my free time together. It would mean a lot to me if you supported me with this because I am doing it for both of us. â□□

By standing up for what you believe in, you are establishing the correct relationship dynamic with your girlfriend, where you, as the man, are in charge.

She can see that even if she throws a tantrum to test your will and determination, you don't bow down and kiss her ass to please her.

Instead, you stay focused on creating a better future for yourself and for her, while also giving her some more of your free time.

Standing strong in that way makes her respect, attraction and love for you grow, because she knows that sheâ□□s with a real man and that if she loses you she probably wonâ□□t be able to find someone as strong as you.

What you may not know is that it is very difficult for women to find a man like that.

Women are always saying, "Where are all the real men?" and complaining that guys are too weak when it comes to relationships.

When you can be the real man that pretty much all women want to be with, your girlfriend will know that other women will quickly try to hook up with you if you became single.

That alone is often more than enough motivation for a woman to want to be a good girlfriend and please her boyfriend for life.

Of course, you must ensure that you continue to treat her well also.

Part of being a real man is treating your woman well, while also making sure that she treats you well and respects you.

3. Do Look at the Situation from Her Point of View

For example: A guy and his girlfriend might get into an argument over a seemingly minor thing (e.g. he forgot to call her when he said he would, or he didnâ□□t take out the garbage).

In his opinion, sheâ□□s being petty and is fighting with him over something ridiculously trivial.

However, if he puts himself in her shoes and digs a little deeper, he will discover that sheâ□□s not mad at him about the garbage or a phone call, but rather because she is feeling as though he has been taking her for granted lately.

So, the urge to fight is just a result of her feeling unloved and unappreciated and not knowing how else to express it.

As a man, it's important for you to take a moment to understand why you and her had a fight, without actually coming out and saying, *â□□I donâ□□t get it. Why are you so mad at me over such a small thing?*â□□ because she wonâ□□t want to explain it to you.

A girlfriend doesnâ□□t want to have to hold your hand and mother you through the relationship, explaining how women think and how you can be a more mature, appealing man in her eyes.

She wants to see that you are paying enough attention to her to understand why she is reactively negatively to you.

If you don't know why, she wants you to figure that out by yourself by talking to a masculine man that you know in your life or by reading an article like mine like you're doing right now.

When you do understand where she is coming from (e.g. about not calling her or taking out the garbage), a good way to make her feel understood is to say something like this, “Hey babe. I can see where you’re coming from and I understand how my behavior might have come across as uncaring and inconsiderate. I want you to know that I love and appreciate what you do for me and I’ll do my best to follow through with things from now on.”

When a woman feels that you’re taking her feelings into consideration and not just brushing her off, she will feel happy to let go of her anger and resentment over whatever it was that she was feeling upset about.

Also, by putting yourself in her shoes and showing her that her feelings matter to you, she will feel loved and appreciated in the relationship, and this will naturally build her feelings of respect, love and attraction for you.

4. Do Reconnect With Her and Move On to a Better Relationship Together

[image: Reconnect with her]

Fights are a natural part of any relationship.

As long as you and your girlfriend treat each other with respect, and don’t say or do anything that is hurtful or damaging (e.g. call each other demeaning names, get violent, break furniture), there is no reason why bad feelings should continue long after the fight is over.

Holding grudges is simply a sign that you and your girlfriend have not fully worked through the issues that caused the fight in the first place.

Clear the air between you and her and allow the love between you to flow freely once again.

Always bring everything back to smiling, laughter and love. When you get into the habit of doing that, both of you will feel so much more in love with each other.

However, don’t expect her to do that though. As the man, you are responsible for leading the dynamic of the relationship.

If you lead the relationship towards negativity and fighting, a woman will almost always follow until the relationship falls apart.

On the other hand, when you lead the way to smiling, laughter and love, a woman will almost always follow and slowly begin to copy your positive behavior and attitude.

[image: Bring it back to love]

So, if you fight about something, understand why the fight is happening and try to steer the dynamic towards a solution or towards mutual understanding.

Then, just start joking around, smiling, laughing and feeling good, so the anger goes away for both of you.

For example: If the fight was due to something that you did (e.g. not listening to her), take responsibility and make it clear to her that you’ve heard her concerns and you are going to pay more attention to her from now on.

On the other hand, if the fault was hers (e.g. she didn’t follow through on something that she promised), forgive her and let her know that you love her no matter what, but that you would appreciate it if she works on fixing that about herself.

If she loves and respects you, she will be happy to work on fixing herself and getting your approval the next time.

A Fight Can Sometimes Be the Best Thing For a Relationship

Most people would say that having a fight with your girlfriend is a bad thing, but rather than see it that way, you can see it as an opportunity to deepen the love, respect and attraction between you both.

To maintain a successful relationship, both you and your girlfriend need to be trying to make each other happy no matter what; not trying to get one up on the other person and make each other feel bad.

So, rather than worry about what to say to your girlfriend after a fight from now on, just show her that youâ€¢re the kind of man she can depend on and rely on to be the man all the time.

When she can see that youâ€¢re leading the way by being a loving, complete man while still respecting her feelings and opinions, the respect, love and attraction between you and her will grow stronger over time.

Your fights will turn into a moment of love, connection and sexual tension, rather than a time of anger and hurt feelings.

You will be able to laugh, smile and feel good very quickly after having a fight because you know that there's nothing to worry about.

Both of you are always become better for each other and a fight about something is simply another opportunity to learn, improve and become even better for each other.

What to Say When Your Girlfriend is Mad at You

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

It's normal for a couple to have an argument once in a while because it's often a way to bring attention to problems in the relationship and then come up with a solution.

However, no matter what the argument is about or how mad your girlfriend is feeling at you, there are some things that you should avoid saying to her!

1. "Why are you so mad at me? What did I do?"

[image: Why are you so mad at me?]

When a woman is mad at her boyfriend, the last thing that she wants to do is calm down, relax and explain why she is feeling that way.

She doesn't want to have to be the more emotionally mature and masculine one and be responsible for guiding interactions back to calmness, love, respect and rationality.

She's mad and she just wants you start being the kind of man that she will naturally respect and look up to.

For example: A guy might be in the habit of always putting his girlfriend second and not giving her enough time and attention.

He might often cancel plans with her at the last minute, or hang out doing nothing with his friends rather than spending a bit of time with her.

So, if she is getting tired of being neglected and he once again calls her up to cancel their plans together because he has to work late, she's probably going to get mad.

In his eyes, he doesn't see anything wrong with cancelling plans due to work commitments, but she does because he's always taking her commitment to him for granted and making everything else more important than her.

When he tells her that he has to cancel, she gets angry and hangs up on him, or refuses to talk to him when he gets home or calls her the next day.

When a woman reacts in this way, it's only natural for a guy to be asking her why. "Why are you so mad at me? What did I do? I had to work late. What do you expect me to do? Leave work so I can be with you?"

From his perspective, a guy might feel that she's just being unreasonable and making a big deal out of nothing.

After all, he has to work and he can't just tell his boss that he is leaving to go see his girlfriend.

His boss will likely tell him that he can see her anytime, but he is needed at work now.

Yet, from her perspective, she's beginning to feel neglected and unloved because he keeps putting her second all the time.

However, most women won't come out and say, "You're always putting your job above me and I'm feeling like you're taking me for granted in the relationship," because she needs him to be able to figure this out for himself, and then make some adjustments to his behavior to make her feel loved and appreciated.

She doesn't want to have to spell it out for him and teach him how to be the man in the relationship that she needs him to be.

So, when your girlfriend is mad at you, don't make the mistake of asking her to explain why.

Most women don't want to take on the role of being a guy's mother or teacher in life or in a relationship.

A woman doesn't want to take on that role because it doesn't make her feel the way she wants to feel in the relationship (i.e. like your girl).

Your girlfriend wants to feel like you're the kind of man that she can look up to and respect, lean on and rely on; rather than have to be the one guiding you and showing you how to be the man that she needs you to be.

2. "I'm so sorry! Please forgive me. It's all my fault! just tell me what you want me to do to make things right and I will do it. I will do anything!"

[image: I will do anything. Please don't me mad at me]

When a guy is faced with an angry girlfriend that he truly loves, it's only natural that he will want to apologize to her and make things right.

Yet, a mistake that a lot of guys make is assuming that a groveling apology will fix the real reasons why she is mad.

A guy like that assumes that if he takes the blame for what happened between them, gives her a sincere enough apology, and lets her have her way from now, she will stop being mad at him and everything will go back to the way it was at the beginning of their relationship.

Yet, that's not what happens.

By taking the blame and being willing to say and do anything to please her, he is simply handing all his power as a man over to her, and putting himself into a weakened position in her eyes.

What most guys don't realize is that rather than make a woman happy, hanging over all of his power makes her lose respect and attraction for him as a man because:

1. He's taking the blame without even knowing what he did wrong in the first place (i.e. the real reason why she is mad that she won't tell him).
2. He's letting her take the lead in the relationship and become the dominant one.

So, rather than just blindly apologizing and hoping that she falls for that trick, you need to be a man about it and figure out what is really going on.

Yet, she's not going to tell you.

Women don't want to be your teacher on how to understand women or them.

A woman wants a ready-made man who understands what women are attracted to about men.

She also wants you to know how to keep her happy in a relationship, without trying too hard.

Watch this video for more info!

Your girlfriend will lose respect, attraction and love for you if you just blindly apologize whenever she gets mad or throws a tantrum.

Why? In most cases, her getting mad or throwing a tantrum is simply a way to test if you are going to crumble under the pressure.

If you panic, get angry, fear losing her, suck up to her, blindly apologize or throw a tantrum yourself, she will know that you still haven't figured out how to be a man for a woman when in a relationship.

A woman doesn't want to see that she can control you with tantrums or by getting mad.

She wants to see that you can lead her out of a tantrum or bad mood by getting her laughing and smiling, making light of the situation or being assertive in a loving way.

She doesn't want you to cower and crumble under the weak pressure of a woman's tantrum.

She wants you to laugh at it (in a loving way, not in a disrespectful way) and then guide her back into feelings of love, happiness and connection with you.

Always remember: She is the woman, and you are the man.

You are the leader in the relationship and in order to maintain your girlfriend's respect and attraction you need to be the dominant one.

This doesn't mean that you don't listen to your girlfriend, take her concerns into consideration, or accept responsibility for your actions, but it does mean that you maintain your power as the man in the relationship; even when she is mad at you or throwing a tantrum.

3. Why are you not answering any of my calls and text messages?

[image: My girlfriend is mad at me]

Regardless of the reason why your girlfriend is mad at you, it's only natural that she might want to spend some time by herself to sort out her emotions or calm down.

Where many guys go wrong is that, instead of giving their girlfriend some space after a fight, they begin to overwhelm her with endless text messages, phone calls, or instant messages on social network sites like Facebook, Instagram, etc., trying to convince her to stop being so angry with them.

Yet, that's not what she wants.

Consider this!

When your girlfriend is mad at you, how do you think she's going to perceive any messages or calls from you?

Is she going to be thinking, Oh, my boyfriend is so sweet. He's apologizing and begging me to forgive him. What a great guy! or might she think something like, Does he really think saying he's sorry in a text message is going to make everything okay between us again? What an asshole. He doesn't understand me.

If you smother your girlfriend with too much attention, she will feel repelled by what she perceives to be your weak state of mind.

Even though you might not be desperate or needy, she will see your constant texts and messages as being just that.

So, if she needs a few days of space, feel free to give her that and then contact her to say hi, get her smiling and laughing on the phone and then arrange to meet up with her.

She will appreciate your approach because it will show her that you respect her as an individual and that you also have the ability to guide her back into having feelings for you again.

4. â€œLetâ€s forget about what happened and go to that expensive French restaurant youâ€™ve always wanted to go to. Iâ€™ll even buy you the dress that youâ€™ve had your eye on.â€œ

[image: Will my girlfriend be happy if I treat her like a princess and buy her lots of expensive things?]

Another common mistake that guys make is try to brush over what happened, and try trick their girlfriend into forgetting why sheâ€™s mad at him, by distracting her with gifts, promises and other surprises.

What guys donâ€™t realize is that most women can see this for what it is: A ploy to distract her, so that she wonâ€™t notice that heâ€™s avoiding addressing the deeper issues between them.

If you want your girlfriend to stop being mad at you, donâ€™t make the mistake of trying to buy her love. She will see right through it and she will likely become even angrier at you for trying to brush over her feelings with distractions.

Use Her Tantrums to Deepen Her Feelings For You

Although it might seem like a really bad thing when your girlfriend is mad at you, rather than feel frustrated or stressed about it, you can use it as an opportunity to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

How? Show her that you can remain in control no matter what kind of tantrum she throws at you.

For example: Rather than getting angry when she is mad, you can laugh at her, laugh at the situation or laugh at yourself for what you did to make her angry.

You can also stand up for yourself and say to her in a loving, but assertive manner, “Oh, stop being such a drama queen” (say it with a smile and a bit of laugh to your voice) and then tell her what you think.

Of course, she’s almost certainly going to keep throwing a tantrum after that because she wants to see if she can make you crumble under her pressure.

What most guys donâ€™t realize is that a woman is always testing her man to see how he will respond and how much power she really has over him.

[image: My girlfriend keeps getting mad for no reason]

For example: Will he stand up for what he believes is right, or will he back down because heâ€™s afraid of losing her?

Will he remain strong and confident, or will he crumble and hand his power over to her?

Will he bring the interaction back to love, laughter and connection, or will he get angry and try to intimidate her physically?

The weaker his responses to her tantrums and bad behavior are (e.g. if he breaks down and begs her to forgive him or give him another chance, he gets angry), the more her respect and attraction for him will fade.

Over time, she will lose interest in having sex with him altogether and eventually she will fall out of love with him.

On the other hand, if he remains strong and always seems to guide the interaction back to love, laughter and connection, her feelings for him will deepen over time.

15 Examples of What Women Need From Men in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

There are many different things that women need from men in a relationship, but some of the most important things are:

1. To be able to look up to him and respect him as her man.
2. To feel loved and appreciated.
3. To feel accepted for who she is deep down inside.
4. To feel supported.
5. To feel like she's beautiful in his eyes.
6. To feel that the love between her and her man is growing stronger and deeper over time.
7. To feel safe knowing that her man is guiding them both to a better future.
8. To grow together as a couple, rather than one person improving and getting better while the other one stays the same.
9. To be going in the same direction (e.g. having the same dreams, goals, plans for the future).
10. To be able to trust him (and him to trust her).
11. To be able to relax into her feminine self knowing that he's the man and he is the one wearing the pants in the relationship.
12. To have open communication without needing to hide things from each other.
13. To be able to laugh and have fun together.
14. To be made to feel special once on a while (e.g. by being treated to a special dinner, going away on a vacation together)
15. To feel heard and valued.

As you can see from the list above, what she really needs is for you to be someone that she can rely on, look up to and remain happy to be in love with.

The main thing to remember is that, as long as you are guiding both you and her into deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love over time, everything else on the list above will happen naturally.

[image: What women really need from men in a relationship]

Essentially, what women need from men in a relationship is to feel that she can respect him and look up to him. When a woman feels respect for her man, attraction will follow and will then grow into love.

The more he maintains and grows her respect and attraction for him over time, the more intense the love she will feel, and the stronger and more long-lasting their relationship will be.

Are You Giving Your Woman What She Needs in Your Relationship?

There is no greater feeling in the world than the thrill that you experience at the beginning of a relationship.

Everything feels exciting and new, and in your eyes your woman can do no wrong, and she thinks you're perfect.

However, once the dust has settled, it's up to you as the man to take the relationship from the fantasy, everything-is-so-perfect stage, and lead both of you to a deeper, more enduring love and attraction.

To do that you need to make sure that you're not making any of these mistakes!

1. Not making her feel important enough to you

Life happens, and one of the first things to suffer when the pressure of work, bills, family, etc., gets too much, is a couple's relationship.

For example: If paying the bills is a financial strain in a relationship, it's only normal for a guy to want to work harder to provide for his woman.

This might involve him taking on extra work, working longer hours, or even bringing work home.

In his eyes he is making sure that he is taking care of his woman and family, so that they will have a better future together.

However, from the woman's point of view, she feels that he's putting work before her, and she begins to feel neglected, unloved and like everything else is more important to him than she is.

It's perfectly okay to want to provide for your woman so that you will have a better future together, but if you fail to notice that she is feeling unhappy, there will be no future together.

No matter how busy you get, or how important other things are in your life, if you want to have a long and happy relationship, you have to make sure that you put your woman's needs first in your life.

That doesn't mean you sacrifice yourself to please her. It simply means that you take her feelings into consideration and do what is necessary to make her feel the way she wants to feel in the relationship with you (i.e. loved, appreciated, heard).

2. Losing your identity in the relationship

Being happy in a relationship is mostly about balance.

For example: While being together and doing things together is of paramount importance and can make the relationship stronger, living in each other's pockets will have the opposite effect.

Quite often, when a guy who has little experience with women and relationships gets himself a girlfriend, he feels so lucky to have her that he's prepared to do anything to keep her happy. This is when he makes the mistake of thinking, "If a little is good, then more must be better."

For example: A guy like this will start thinking, if spending a little time together is so great, then spending all their time together will be even better.

However, that's not the case at all.

Although women love it when you give them genuine affection, attention and love, most women (not all), don't like it when their guy makes her his sole focus in life to the point where she feels smothered rather than happy.

A guy who makes this mistake may stop hanging out with his friends, or may give up his hobbies, so that he can spend a lot more time with her.

He may also run all her errands for her, help her out with work or homework assignments, spoil her with gifts and expensive dinners, and will often tell her things like, “I love you so much.

You are the most important person in my life. Without you my life would be meaningless,” or, “You make me so happy. I just can’t get enough of you. I want to be with you night and day.”

Sounds romantic, right? Not really.

Naturally, there are some women in the world who love the idea of being with a man who puts her on a pedestal and spends his life catering to her every whim, but that’s not the kind of relationship dynamic that will make for a lasting relationship.

Eventually, either she will get tired of being with a guy whom she can dominate, or, he will realize that he’s always giving but she’s never giving back and the resentment between them will begin to grow.

Most women know this and they want to be in a relationship with a man who loves her as much as she loves him. She wants to know that although he gives her the love, time and emotional support that she needs, he also:

- Has more going on in his life than just her.
- Is someone she can look up to, respect and trust to be the man all the time.
- Is striving to reach his true potential as a man.
- Has his own purpose, direction and goals in life.
- Is someone she can depend on to help guide them both to a better life together.
- Loves, respects, values and supports both her and her goals and ambitions in life.

So, contrary to what you might have heard growing up, or seen on TV and at the movies, real women don’t want a man to give everything up for her.

Quite the opposite in fact. When a woman truly loves her man, she wants him to strive through the levels of life and reach for his true potential.

3. Not making her feel attracted in your presence

Before your woman even met you, she spent a lot of time making herself look attractive (e.g. by dressing in sexy, revealing clothes, wearing makeup, doing her hair) to attract the type of man who would not only appreciate her efforts, but would also take the time to make her feel even more attractive and sexy in his eyes.

That man is you.

Essentially, even though a woman might be very beautiful, deep down, most women feel insecure about their attractiveness to men.

So, it’s up to the man, to continue making her feel as though she’s as sexy as the day he first met her (even if she’s put on a bit of weight, is dressing in frumpy clothes, is getting wrinkles).

If he, as her man, cannot see her as being beautiful and sexy, and stops doing all the things that made her feel attracted at the beginning of their relationship (e.g. flirting with her, having sex often, showing her affection by touching and kissing her in passing), she will begin to feel unattractive and unloved.

When this happens, she will naturally begin to pull away from him and the relationship, and eventually they will be living in a sad, unhappy, sexless relationship; or she will break up with him. However, when you really love your woman and she loves you, no matter how you both change over time physically (e.g. get older, get grey hair, put on weight), the deep love and attraction you feel for each other will only grow stronger with the passing of time.

For example: When you look at your woman's grey hair, instead of seeing a woman who is getting older, you can choose to see the woman who has been with you through the good times and the bad times.

The more you can do this, the more loved and attractive she will feel and she will do whatever it takes to please you.

As long as you continue to guide both you and her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction over time, the more she will feel that her needs are being met, and the better your relationship will be.

She Needs You to Lead

No, that doesn't mean that what women need from men in a relationship is for a man to boss them around.

It also doesn't mean that you have to do all the work.

It simply means that a woman wants to know that she can relax into her feminine self, knowing that her man has things handled and is leading the way for them both to a better future.

Leading the way includes getting her to do a lot of things for you too.

For example: In my case, my wife has quit her job and stays home to cook and clean for me. She also takes care of all the bills and runs errands for me.

She does a lot of work, even though I am leading.

So, don't confuse "being the leader" with, "Damn...now I have work harder, do everything, boss her around" and so on.

If your woman respects you and looks up to you as her man, she will be happy to be a good woman for you. Often, that includes doing a lot of things for you.

Of course, I treat my wife well too. It's not just one-sided.

As long as you keep maintaining the respect, love and attraction you and your woman feel for each other, you will both feel fulfilled, and you will experience that deep, enduring love that you hear about from couples who have been married for 50 years or more.

What's the Difference Between Lust and Love?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The main difference between lust and love is thisâ€¦|

Lust is the initial surge of sexual desire you feel for a woman (and her for you), and love is the emotional desire to stay with her over the long-term.

Lust is what attracts you, and love is what keeps you there.

According to the dictionary, lust and love are defined as follows:

Lust (verb): To have intense sexual desire; desire, be consumed with desire for, find sexually attractive, find sexy, crave, covet, want, wish for, long for, yearn for, hunger for, thirst for, ache for, burn for, pant for.

Love (verb): To have love or affection for; to have a profoundly tender, passionate affection for (another person), to have a strong liking for; take great pleasure in.

However, both lust and love are more complex than that.

To fully explain the difference between lust and love, you first have to understand how each one works.

Before I do that, you might be interested in watching my video about the 5 stages of a relationship (Unfortunately, most couples don't get to stage 5)...

What is Lust?

Imagine that youâ€¦re in a bar...

You notice a beautiful woman across the room.

Suddenly you are completely focused on her, you feel aroused and you know that you have to have her.

Everything about her is attractive to you, and the only goal on your mind is to get her into your bed as quickly as possible.

It doesnâ€¦t matter to you whether she is interesting to talk to, has a sense of humor, or is confident or shy. The only thing that matters is that you feel sexually attracted to her (i.e. you feel lust), and you want to kiss her and have sex with her.

Thatâ€¦s how lust works for men.

On the other hand, she might notice you too and feel attracted to you in some way, but as yet, sheâ€¦s not feeling the same intense lust that you are. Why?

Women are not attracted to men for the same reasons that men are attracted to women.

In other words, although a man will feel attracted to a woman based simply on her appearance, most women need to experience a manâ€¦s personality as well, before she will feel fully attracted to him.

For example: A guy might be very good looking and from a distance a woman might feel sexually attracted to him.

However, if he approaches her and behaves in a nervous, insecure way, or if he puts on a fake persona and pretends to be nicer than he really is, the woman's initial attraction for him will fade, because he is turning her off with his behavior.

On the other hand, a woman might notice a guy and not feel much attraction for him (e.g. she might think he's too short for her, has a big nose), yet, when he approaches her and behaves in ways that are naturally attractive to women, (e.g. confident, masculine, charismatic), he will be triggering her feelings of lust for him.

The Science of Lust

On a scientific level, lust is simply explained as a bunch of hormones surging in the body and ensuring that the fittest of the species, i.e. the most beautiful woman and the strongest (not physically but emotionally) male, will hook up and have babies together, therefore ensuring the optimal survival of the human race.

Basically, that initial feeling of lust that you feel when you first interact with a beautiful woman is when the sex hormones testosterone and oestrogen kick in.

Then, your stress response is activated and adrenalin and cortisol are pumped into the body making your palms sweat, your heart race and your mouth go dry; and it doesn't stop there.

As the connection between you and her grows (by interacting, kissing and possibly even having sex), the hormone dopamine, which stimulates desire and reward, is released by triggering an intense rush of excitement and pleasure.

The final hormone associated with lust is serotonin, which scientists say makes a person behave like they are temporarily insane.

This helps explain why when a couple in the beginning stages of lust (anywhere from 2 months to 2 years), they behave like they are star struck, where everything about the other person is perfect, and they both can barely keep their hands off each other.

What is Love?

So, let's go back to the woman you first felt lust for in the bar.

After the initial stages of lust and passion, between you and her, something strange starts to happen.

The more you get to know each other on an emotional level, the more you begin to like each other as people.

You realize that not only do you both feel physically attracted to each other, you also begin to care about the happiness and life experience of the other person.

The Science of Love

Again, it seems that hormones are responsible for those loving feelings.

Apparently, love begins to blossom when the hormone oxytocin (which is also the hormone that bonds a mother and her new born baby) is released in the brain by both men and women during orgasm.

Oxytocin is believed to promote bonding and closeness between couples when they are intimate. So, basically, the more sex you and your woman have, the more in love with each other you begin to feel.

Finally, vasopressin (a hormone that is related to the kidneys, but research has found that it also plays a big role in pair bonding in long-term relationships) is released, and a couple will find themselves wanting to commit to being with each other in the long-term.

However, something that science does not take into account, is that when the respect and attraction between you and your woman becomes deeper over time, and your relationship simply gets better and better â thatâs truly what love is.

Are You in Lust or in Love?

If youâre in a relationship right now, you might be feeling a bit confused about whether youâre in lust or in love.

So, hereâs how you can determine in which category youâre in at the moment.

9 Signs that youâre in lust:

- Youâre totally focused on your womanâs appearance and body.
- Your relationship revolves around having lots of wild sex any chance you get.
- Your dreams and long term plans for the futureâ aren't really the same.
- You never talk about being together in the long-term.
- You havenât introduced her to your friends and family.
- You donât talk things through with her if thereâs something bothering you in your day-to-day life.
- You donât feel bad if she cancels a date with you.
- You donât ask her for her opinion when you have to make an important decision in your life.
- Youâre both free to hang out and have sex with other people if you want to.

9 Signs that youâre in love:

- You love her looks and appearance but you also enjoy her intelligence, sense of humor, personality, etc.
- You enjoy hanging out with each other even if youâre not having sex.
- You talk about the future together.
- You have common long term goals, dreams and interests.
- Youâre excited about introducing her to your family and friends.
- You bring out the best in each other and you motivate each other to reach for your true potential in life.
- Youâre not dependent on each other but itâs better when youâre together.
- You trust her views and opinions.
- Youâre dating each other exclusively.

Turning Lust into Love

It's not difficult for lust to turn into love.

Once a couple moves past the initial thrill of the fantasy stage of the relationship, love can take root and blossom.

Rather than just feel the thrill of passionate sex, a friendship and deeper love begins to develop based on mutual respect and attraction.

At this stage of the relationship it is the man's responsibility to maintain and grow the respect, attraction and love that him and his woman feel for each other over time.

So, if you're still wondering, What's the difference between lust and love? as you can see, they are both an important part of a relationship.

Sometimes lust is just an intense sexual desire for a woman, and sometimes that lust can lead to a long-lasting, loving and happy relationship that stands the test of time.

Whether you're in lust or in love right now; just relax and enjoy each stage and allow things to evolve naturally.

What to Do if Your Wife Doesn't Love You

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your wife doesn't love you, the main thing that you need to do is re-spark her feelings of respect and attraction for you again.

Once she experiences a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you and notices that she is continuing to feel that way each day, she will naturally begin to fall back in love with you again.

Even if your wife is currently saying things like, "Leave me alone. I just don't love you anymore," or "My love for you is gone and nothing you say or do is going to change that," it still doesn't mean that her love for you is dead.

Love doesn't just die and if her love for you was real to begin with, then it has simply been smothered and pushed into the background by all the negative things happening in your relationship at the moment (e.g. arguments, lack of intimacy, lack of interest in each other, insecurity).

When you begin to change the way you treat her and start making her feel like a real woman again, her feelings of respect and attraction for you will start to creep back into her mind and body, and eventually her heart will open up to the love that has always been there in the background.

3 Things to Do if Your Wife Has Stopped Loving You

If you are going to get your wife to experience a renewed and lasting sense of respect and attraction for you, it's important that you also do these 3 things!

1. Understand What Has Caused Her to Lose Respect, Attraction and Love For You

[image: Why has your wife lost attraction for you?]

A woman doesn't just stop loving her husband for no reason at all.

If her feelings were real when she married him, then somewhere along the line something happened that caused her to lose respect for him as a man and lead to her switching off her feelings of love.

For example: He might have become too insecure, controlling, have taken her for granted, given up on his goals in life, etc.

If you want to properly re-spark your wife's feelings of respect, attraction and love, you must begin by understanding exactly what caused those feelings to fade in the first place.

Here's a video that will help you understand how to stop a separation or divorce from happening...

Thankfully, you're not yet at the stage where your wife wants a separation or divorce, but I caution you not to get too comfortable.

It's better to fix the problems between you and her now than to let it drag on and lead to a separation or affair or to just lead to a lifetime of unhappiness and emotional distance between you.

So, do you know why your wife has stopped loving you?

Here's the thing!

A woman will rarely come out and clearly say what is bothering her about her man.

[image: Why has your wife lost respect for you?]

She might fight with him about what sometimes seems like petty things (e.g. the dishes, the toilet seat, some of his habits), but underneath the pettiness, there is a deeper, more serious issue she's trying to get through to him.

For example: A woman might get into an argument with her husband about him watching a lot of TV. In his mind, he feels as though she is simply being petty and unreasonable because she won't let him relax and unwind after a hard day's work.

Yet, if he digs deeper, he might discover that the issue is not really about him watching TV, but rather about her feeling taken for granted and neglected.

Instead of her saying, "I want you to focus more on me and spend some quality time with me when you get home," she nags him about watching TV.

Why doesn't she just come out and say what she really means?

Most women feel that if a man doesn't understand what he needs to do by himself, then she doesn't want to have to be the one who is responsible for teaching him.

A woman doesn't want to take on the role of being her man's teacher when it comes to a relationship, because it will cause her to feel like more of a mother figure or big sister in his life, which will destroy the sexual dynamic between them.

Of course, taking a woman for granted is only one of many reasons why a woman will lose respect, attraction and love for her husband, so it may not apply to your marriage.

To get to the bottom of why your wife doesn't love you anymore, ask yourself some of these questions:

- Have I been a confident, self-assured man that my wife can look up to and respect in our relationship, or have I been insecure and self-doubting?
- Have I been making her feel feminine and girly in my presence, or do I make her feel like more of a friend or as though she is more dominant than me?
- Have I been rising through the levels of life and striving for my true potential, or have I been using my marriage as an excuse to hide from my biggest goals and ambitions in life?
- Have I been the man in the relationship, or have I allowed her to wear the pants?
- Have I been making her feel loved, appreciated and taken care of, or have I been neglecting and giving more attention to less important things (e.g. TV shows)?
- Have we been growing together as a couple, or have one of us grown and left the other person behind?
- Have I got friends and interests outside of my relationship with my wife, or have I made her my only purpose for living and have become clingy and needy as a result?

If you answered those questions in your mind as you read through them, you will have most-likely begun to realize some of the ways that you've been ruining her respect, attraction and love for you.

2. Eliminate the Issues From Your Relationship One by One

To get your wife to love you again, you need to begin regaining her respect for you by fixing your issues and improving yourself.

Once she sees that you really are changing, she will allow herself to feel attracted to you again and when she does that, she will naturally begin to reconnect with her romantic love for you.

For example: If your wife is saying, “I don’t love you anymore, you’re not the man I thought I married. You used to be so ambitious but now you just sit around doing nothing with your life,” rather than get upset or defensive about it, understand what she’s really saying and what she wants you to change about yourself.

[image: You are not the man I married]

When you think about what she is really saying by that comment, you will realize that she is feeling unsafe about the future, because she doesn’t see you reaching for your true potential as a man.

Rather than feel hurt by her words, realize that she is giving you a big piece of the puzzle to recapture her love, respect and attraction for you.

Start by setting some big, ambitious goals and then begin working towards them.

When she sees that you are continuing to follow through on your goals and are making progress, she will feel increasingly respectful of you, attracted to you and in love with you again.

She will be proud to have a husband who can listen to feedback and then use that to become a bigger and better man as a result.

3. Make a New Beginning Together

At the beginning of your marriage with your wife things were probably as close to perfect as it gets.

You may have showed a lot of interest in each other, listened and respected each other’s opinions, went on dates, had fun and laughed a lot and generally felt like you were both going in the same direction in your life together.

Yet, somewhere along the line, all that changed and you stopped having fun because you and her may have achieved all the initial goals that you set out.

For example: You had a goal to get engaged, then married, then have kids, get a house and now what?

If you have achieved most or all of those things and life is feeling a bit stale, you need to create a new vision for your future together that is going to be exciting, challenging and fulfilling for both of you (not just one of you).

Even if, right now, your wife is saying, “I don’t love you anymore,” or “I don’t know if I want to be married to you anymore,” you’ve got to know that if she fell in love with you before, she can do it again.

For both of you to get back in touch with the love that you once experienced together, you need to be the man and lead the way.

You need to lead the way by making changes to your behavior and how you treat her, so she will experience a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you.

From there, she will then become open to discussions about creating future mutual goals together that are exciting, challenging and fulfilling for the both of you.

Understanding How Love Really Works

One of the most important things to understand about love is that it doesn't die.

Love is something eternal that we human beings can connect to in various ways throughout life. In the case of a marriage, the love between a man and a woman is a very special thing that can color your life with so much happiness, joy and fulfillment.

Yet, if you don't take care to build on your wife's respect and attraction for you over time, she will naturally begin to disconnect herself from the love.

You and her might feel like the marriage is over, but in reality, it's just a simple case of you not knowing how to lead her back into feelings of love.

You can fix this.

If you are serious about getting your wife to love you again, make sure that you put in some effort to improve your ability to make her feel the kind of respect and attraction that will automatically cause her to feel love for you again.

You can't expect her to love you just because you are a good man and have her best interests at heart. Without respect and attraction, it's nearly impossible for a woman to remain connected to feelings of romantic love for a man.

How to Stop My Girlfriend From Breaking Up With Me: 6 Steps

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

To stop your girlfriend from breaking up with you, the first thing that you need to do is change the way that she feels when she interacts with you.

If you don't change, she won't change how she feels about ending the relationship.

From now on, you need to start making her feel more respect and attraction for you when you talk to her on the phone or in person, rather than continuing to turn her off by making the same old mistakes that you've been making with her.

Here are the 6 steps that you need to follow to get her to change her mind about breaking up with you...

1. Understand her real reasons for wanting to get out of the relationship

[image: Understanding her real reasons for wanting to break up with you]

Almost all women give a boyfriend many chances before they finally decide to break up with him.

So, if your girlfriend is at the point now where she wants out, it means that (in her eyes) you've said or done a lot of things that have caused her to lose too much respect and attraction for you.

She is now beginning to think that her life might be better off without you in it, so she is either threatening to break up with you or she is pulling back her interest by no longer saying, "I love you" or showing a lot of affection anymore.

To get her to stop thinking about breaking up with you, it's absolutely essential that you understand her real reasons for losing respect and attraction for you, so that you can then begin to make the correct changes to your thinking, behavior, attitude and actions from now on.

For example:

- Being insecure.
- Being clingy, needy, jealous or controlling.
- Treating her badly.
- Taking her for granted.
- Being annoying just to get a reaction out of her.
- Giving her too much power in the relationship.
- Not letting her have any power.

Have you made any of the mistakes that are above?

If you have made any of those mistakes, don't worry â◻◻ you're not the only guy in this world who has made those kinds of mistakes with a girlfriend.

Pretty much every guy makes those kinds of mistakes and your girlfriend has either experienced those with a previous boyfriend, or she will experience them again with another guy if she decides to leave you.

So, don't feel as though you're the worst boyfriend in the world because you made those mistakes. Instead, look at yourself as a great guy who is learning faster than other guys in life and you're becoming a bigger and better man over time.

As long as you learn from your mistakes at each stage of life, rather than continuing to make them over and over again, you will become a bigger and better man over time.

When are able to make your girlfriend feel the kind of respect, attraction and love experience that she cannot get with any other guy, she will not want to leave you.

2. Start being a new and improved man right away

[image: Start being a new and improved version of yourself]

Once you understand why your girlfriend has lost interest in you and now wants to break up with you, it's very important that you start making changes right away.

You need to be able to show her (by the way you now think, talk, feel, behave and take action) that you are changing; otherwise you won't be able to get past step 3 in the process of stopping your girlfriend from breaking up with you.

For example: If you have been insecure in the relationship, you need to change by becoming more emotionally secure, emotionally mature and confident.

If you lack purpose in life and have been basing too much of your happiness and identity on your girlfriend, you need to take a more balanced approach to life where you are going after your biggest dreams and ambitions while also giving time and attention to your girlfriend.

If you have been giving your girlfriend too much power (e.g. doing whatever she says, putting up with her unreasonable demands, letting her boss you around), you need to start taking back some of that power and being the sort of boyfriend that she can look up to and respect.

3. Tell that it is possible for a guy to change and become a better man

[image: Start being a new and improved version of yourself]

As long as your girlfriend can see that you are changing (e.g. the way that you now think, feel, communicate, behave and take action around her or in life), she will then have to accept the fact that you really have begun to change.

What you need to tell her is that it is possible for a guy to learn from an experience and then change to become a better man.

Tell her that everybody (both men and women) learns and grows throughout life and just because you were recently making some mistakes in the relationship, it doesn't mean that it's impossible for you to learn from that and become a better man as a result.

Let her know that lately, you've realized a lot about what it means to be a man and are changing in a good way.

Then tell her about the things that you have changed and have also begun to change about yourself, because you want to become a better man rather than making the same old mistakes over again.

4. Regain your power in the relationship

Although some women will initially accept a guy who hands over his power in a relationship, most women won't put up with it for life.

When a woman feels like she's got too much power over her boyfriend (e.g. he does whatever she wants, he puts up with her bad behavior), it causes her to lose respect for him and when that happens, her sexual desire for him begins to fade away.

Regaining power in the relationship with your girlfriend is not about treating her badly, being mean to her, becoming a controlling boyfriend, talking down to her or bossing her around.

Instead, you simply need to be a strong, loving man that she can look up to and respect. How?

From now on, just assume that you are in the more dominant position in the relationship.

If you've been giving her too much power, she will test your newfound confidence by acting like she doesn't care what you think or by telling you that if you don't do what she says, she will break up with you.

You simply need to smile and laugh at her in a loving way for being silly, while also making absolutely sure that you feel 100% confident in her attraction to you.

Your confidence in her attraction for you is something that you have to take and own.

It's not something that your girlfriend will give to you, because she doesn't want to have to be emotionally gentle with you, especially now that she is considering breaking up with you.

To get her to feel the kind of respect for you that will allow her to accept that you are the more dominant, powerful one in the relationship, you will need to have 100% confidence in yourself and her attraction to you.

If you don't believe in your attractiveness to her (with or without her reassurance), then she is not going to be able to look up to you and respect you as her man.

Likewise, if you aren't strong enough to take the lead in your relationship with her and be the man that she can look up to and respect, then you're not giving her what she really wants in a relationship.

Here's what you always need to rememberâ€¦!

By being the kind of man that she can look up to and respect, you're actually being a mature, loving man who is giving her the ultimate gift.

In a relationship, a woman wants to feel as though she can respect her man, so if her boyfriend can't be bothered to put in any effort to give her that experience (e.g. he just wants her to like him for who he is now), then he is being selfish rather than loving.

When you take on the role of being in the power position in your relationship, you're actually doing a loving, positive thing for you and her.

5. Make her feel like your girl again

[image: Make her feel like your girlfriend again]

Regardless of how confident, independent, successful or intelligent your girlfriend is, she will always have a deep desire to feel like she is a man's woman.

In other words, she will want to feel feminine and girly in comparison to his masculine way of thinking, talking, feeling, behaving and taking action.

A woman will become unsatisfied in a relationship with a man if she feels as though he is more of a friend to her or that she is actually more dominant and masculine (in the way she approaches life) compared to him.

When a guy first begins thinking, "I want to know how to stop my girlfriend from breaking up with me," he usually won't think, "Ahah! I need to make her feel more girly and feminine, so she feels more respect and sexual attraction for me."

Instead, many guys make the mistake of starting to buy their girlfriend presents, do favors for her, be even nicer than they already are and essentially try to suck up to her.

Yet, that isn't the way to go about it because it's not what women want.

Women do like compliments and they do like an occasional present, but both of those things mean nothing if they are coming from a guy whom she doesn't respect (i.e. she looks down on him) and doesn't feel very attracted to anymore.

So, rather than trying to make your girlfriend feel special by buying her gifts or kissing her ass in other ways, you need to make her feel feminine in comparison to how masculine you are.

When you do that, she will automatically (even if she hates you right now) feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you.

So, from now on, focus on being more masculine in the way that you think, feel, talk and behave when you interact with her on the phone and in person.

A mistake that a lot of guys make is to treat their girlfriend like a neutral friend, which means that they suppress their masculinity and essentially lose touch with the main element of attraction that draws women to men.

Some guys even go as far as taking on some of their girlfriend's femininity (e.g. giggling like her, being emotionally sensitive, changing the tone of his voice to be more like her), which gradually reduces her attraction and respect for him.

If you're wondering, "How do I stop my girlfriend from breaking up with me?" then you absolutely must realize the importance of displaying masculinity when you talk to her on the phone and in person.

From now on, you must be more masculine in the way that you think, talk, feel, behave and take action around her and in life.

If you do that, she will naturally slip back into the position of being excited to be your girl.

6. Deepen her feelings from then on

One of the most important things that a man needs to do in a relationship with a woman is to deepen her feelings of respect, attraction and love for him over time.

These days, you can't just get a girl into a relationship and expect that she will stick around for life because things felt really good between you at the start, or that she once said that you were "the one" or a "soul mate" or that she wanted to be with you forever.

When a relationship begins, it's very easy to make a woman feel that way because of all the lust, sex, kissing and exciting new feelings.

However, if you want to keep a relationship together for life, you need to deepen a woman's feelings for you over time.

To be capable of deepening a woman's feelings over time, you need to understand what really attracts women to men.

For example: If you talk to your girlfriend on the phone and you're being insecure, needy or wimpy, then she's naturally going to feel turned off by you.

However, if you're interacting with your girlfriend on the phone and you are being confident, making her laugh, making her feel girly in comparison to your masculinity and making her feel excited to be in love with you, then she's naturally going to feel attracted to you.

What to Do When Your Girlfriend Talks to Other Guys

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Here is what to do when your girlfriend talks to other guys:

- Relax, and trust that her love and attraction for you is real. Understand that if you feel insecure over about, you will most likely say or do something that you will regret later on.
- Accept that she is yours and that it's normal for her to talk to other guys, just like it's normal for you to talk to other women, but not actually hook up with those women, or leave your girlfriend because of it.
- Focus on making her feel even more respect and attraction for you as a man.
- Understand that you cannot control her and be a policeman in her life. If you try to control her or hide her away from the world because of your insecurity, she will lose respect for you and actually begin to find other guys more attractive than you.
- Realize that she could be testing you to see how confident you really are. If she notices that you remain confident in her attraction for you no matter what, she will feel more attracted to you than the other guys because you will have displayed a rare type of alpha male confidence that women find irresistibly attractive.
- Make sure that you have balance in your life (i.e. you have other important things to focus on), rather than making your girlfriend the main focus of your life.
- Accept that when you're in a relationship with a woman, you have to give her 100% of your trust, even if that trust might be broken. Giving 100% trust is an essential part of allowing the love, respect and attraction to deepen over time.
- Know that you will never be able to maintain and deepen her respect, attraction and love for you by being jealous and insecure.
- Believe in yourself and your attractiveness to her to ensure that you never feel insecure, jealous or clingy ever again.
- Understand that if you become clingy, insecure and jealous about it you will only make other guys look more attractive in her eyes, because women are turned off by emotional weakness.

Why Does it Bother You When Your Girlfriend Talks to Other Guys?

[image: What to do when your girlfriend talks to other guys more than you]

Just because you and your girlfriend are together, it doesn't mean that you own each other for life or that you will never temporarily find other people attractive.

Look at it this way:

You most likely talk to other women all the time, either at work, university or in social situations.

You might also have female friends that you enjoy hanging out with. You probably also feel attracted to some of them and have imagined what it would be like to have sex with them.

However, that temporary attraction or interest you have in those women or other women hasn't yet caused you to dump your girlfriend or cheat on her, right?

In the same way, just because your girlfriend is talking to other guys and may even feel attracted to some of them, it doesn't mean she views them as being better than you or thinks that she has to leave you and hook up with those guys instead.

As long as you are deepening your girlfriend's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time, there is no reason for her to want to leave you.

Watch this video to understand how a woman's attraction for a man works and how you can use it to make sure that your girlfriend is more attracted to you than other guys!

In the video above, you will learn that you actually have a lot of direct control over how much or little attraction your girlfriend feels for you.

So, if you are being attractive in her eyes and her respect and love for you is deepening over time, there's no reason for her to leave an awesome guy like you.

What is Your Gut Instinct Telling You?

Do you feel as though your girlfriend is cheating on you or wants to cheat on you?

Do you think that your gut instinct is correct in assuming that she wants to cheat or has already cheated, or do you think it's possible that you're just being insecure and imagining that she wants to cheat?

For example: If your girlfriend is a decent, trustworthy woman who has never given your cause to doubt her love, attraction and loyalty to you, then why should it matter when she talks to other guys?

Talking to another guy does not equal cheating.

It's normal for a woman to interact with different people and even have friendships (some of them with guys) outside of her relationship with her boyfriend (fiancé or husband).

When a man makes his girlfriend feel intense attraction and respect for him, even if she feels attracted to other guys, in her mind she'll be thinking, "This guy is cute, but he just can't compare to my boyfriend. He doesn't make me feel the way that my boyfriend does."

She will know that it would be a mistake for her to cheat on her boyfriend because she would end up with another guy who isn't able to make her feel the kind of respect, attraction and love that her boyfriend does.

Are You Feeling Insecure About Your Attractiveness to Her?

An important question to ask yourself is, "Why does it bother me so much when my girlfriend talks to other guys?"

For example, could your insecurity about her talking to other guys be due to one of the following things?

- You feel insecure about your attractiveness to her (i.e. you are worried that she finds other guys much more attractive than you).
- You believe she is too good for you and that she can do better and you're worried that she is beginning to realize that.
- You don't have anything else going on in your life besides your relationship with her...so you have become clingy and controlling because you're worried about losing the most important thing in your life.

- You have trust issues that stem from your childhood or past relationships.
- She is an untrustworthy woman who has cheated on you in the past.

Depending on how you answer these questions, you will realize that the problem is either you or her.

If it's you, then you need to focus on becoming more emotionally strong and emotionally mature.

If it's her (i.e. she is untrustworthy), then you need to realize that your relationship with her probably isn't going to last a lifetime unless you can make her feel so addicted to being with you that other guys seem unappealing.

Being Confident About Your Attractiveness to Her

If you don't believe that you deserve your girlfriend (i.e. you "got lucky" when you scored her), then it's only natural you would be worried if you see her enjoying herself when talking to other guys.

You might then react by having a jealous tantrum, becoming clingy and needy around her or constantly needing her to confirm her love for you.

Here's the thing though!

If a guy doesn't believe in his ability to attract his girlfriend, nothing she says (e.g. "Don't worry, I love you. I wouldn't ever want to cheat on you or hurt you") will ever calm his fears because he knows that other guys make her feel more attracted than he is.

If you are insecure about your attractiveness to your girlfriend, then you absolutely must improve your ability to trigger her feelings of attraction for you.

On the other hand, if your girlfriend has given you cause to doubt her trustworthiness, (e.g. she has cheated on you before), the question you should be asking is not, "What should I do when my girlfriend talks to other guys?" but rather, "Why am I putting up with this bad behavior? Why haven't I dumped her already and found myself a better, more beautiful and more trustworthy woman?"

Sometimes a guy will find himself stuck in a toxic relationship and he will be afraid to leave because he fears that it will be difficult to get another, even better girlfriend than the one he's got.

Yet, when he feels like this, not only does he go through his life fearing that she will find another guy and dump him, he also ends up giving her too much power over him.

When an untrustworthy woman realizes that she can do anything to her man and he will never put her back in her place, address her bad behavior or dump her if she is out of line, she will usually do bad things to him just to show him who is boss.

However, this is not the basis for a healthy and lasting relationship.

When a woman controls her man, the relationship dynamic is out of balance because deep down she simply doesn't respect him as a man.

Without respect, a woman will not be able to feel proper attraction for her boyfriend, so she will begin to wonder why she is staying committed to him.

If she talks to other guys and meets a guy who triggers exciting feelings of attraction, respect and love, she will naturally begin to lose interest in being with her boyfriend.

Good News: She's Most Likely Just Testing You

Even when a woman is in an established, loving relationship, she will regular test her boyfriend to make sure that he is still the confident man she hooked up with.

She will also test him to ensure that his confidence is growing stronger over time, so he becomes a more capable man in this life and is then a better provider and protector.

When a woman tests your confidence and sees that you remain emotionally strong and unfazed, it allows her to further relax into being your woman and for her feelings of respect and attraction for you deepen further.

So, rather than get upset when your girlfriend talks to other guys, use it as an opportunity to deepen her feeling of respect and attraction for you by not losing confidence in yourself and your attractiveness to her.

When you have that mindset, it will come through in your behavior, actions and your conversation style and no matter how many guys she talks to, she will always prefer the deep attraction she feels for you compared to the superficial, temporary attraction that she feels for other guys.

My Girlfriend Doesn't Trust Me: 4 Ways to Fix it

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend doesn't trust you, don't worry â you can fix it.

In fact, helping her overcome her trust issues will deepen her respect, attraction and love for you and make the relationship better than it ever has been before.

Most people will tell you to dump your girlfriend and move on because it's impossible for her to change, but they are only saying that because they don't know how to fix the problem.

So, if you've found yourself saying, "My girlfriend doesn't trust me" and are wondering what you should do about it, here are 4 ways to fix the problem and get your relationship back on track â

1. Explain the consequences of a lack of trust in a relationship

[image: Explain the consequences of a lack of trust in a relationship]

The most important part of getting your girlfriend to trust you again, is about getting her to have certain realizations about relationships.

The first realization is to get her to understand the negative consequences of not trusting the person that you're in a relationship with.

To get her to have the realization, here's what you need to say (in a relaxed, easy-going manner, rather than an angry, defensive or argumentative manner):

"Listen â I understand that you don't trust me and you will have your reasons for that, but I want to ask you this question: Do you understand how a lack of trust affects a relationship?"

Get her to explain herself and give you her understanding of the situation.

For example, she might say, "Yeah, of course I know â you're going to feel bad, I'm going to feel bad â we're always going to be fighting and so on."

From there, you need to say something like:

"Yes, what you've just mentioned are definitely some of the negative consequences of a lack of trust in a relationship, but lately I've realized that there are more.

For example: For a couple to stay together for life and to actually be happy and never want to leave each other, their love needs to mature and grow over time.

Love can only mature and grow when there is a strong foundation of trust.

If one person or both the man and woman have trust issues, the love is always going to be constrained and both of them aren't going to fully open their heart to experience what real love feels like. It's just going to be insecure love.

The same goes for us. Based on how bad each of us is feeling about this trust issue, we're going to build up unnecessary feelings of resentment towards each other.

We're not going to feel happy and secure in the relationship because there will always be an underlying mistrust and resentment for not allowing each other to experience what true love and commitment feels like."

Once you have explained that to her, you will have gotten her attention in terms of how important it is for her to stop being so mistrusting of you.

After getting her attention, you then need to move on to the next step of the process.

2. Ask her what it would take for her trust you again

[image: Ask her what it would take for her trust you]

It's one thing to get your girlfriend to understand the negative consequences of not trusting you, but she then has to take the next step to realize what is required to help her overcome her trust issues.

Trust issues don't go away on their own; something has to be done about them, otherwise they always hang around in the background of a person's mind and cause problems.

Ask her something like this:

"What I want to know now is this: What is it going to take for you to fully trust me in this relationship? I want to know what it will take for you to fully give me your trust and let me take care of it. I will also give you my trust and put it in your hands to take care of."

If both of us can be mature enough to make this relationship great, we will fully give each other 100% trust and just let go of any mistrust, which will then allow our relationship can get better and better over time.

So, I want to know what will it take for you to fully trust me in this relationship and to give me that full trust from this moment onwards?"

In most cases, if a woman has trust issues, she will make some unreasonable requests of her boyfriend at this point.

For example: She might tell her boyfriend to close his Facebook account, unfriend his female friends, stop talking to female coworkers or let her check his phone every day.

If she makes unreasonable demands like that, it means that she still doesn't trust you and is just being the same old, insecure girlfriend. So, whatever she asks you to do, make sure that it's not coming from a place of insecurity.

If she is unable to come up with a reasonable solution about what will make her fully trust you, here is what you can say:

"Couples who have a happy relationship that lasts for a lifetime are able to trust each other and not worry about ever being cheated on."

Of course, in a relationship, a person can never be 100% sure that the other person won't ever cheat on them or leave them.

Yet, for the love to grow and mature and for the relationship to become even more amazing and enjoyable, both the man and woman need to give each other their 100% trust.

It's a risk, but the trust has to be given. If you don't give me your trust, we're never going to get to experience how amazing this relationship could be.

We won't be able to get to the point where both of us would laugh at the idea of ever cheating or leaving each other, because we will be stuck in an unhappy, untrusting relationship that doesn't even seem like it will last."

Neither of us want the stress and unhappiness of being in a relationship like that, so we need to be mature enough to take the risk of giving each other our 100% trust.

If we do that, our love and relationship will get better and better over time and we'll never want to leave each other because our relationship will make us feel so happy.

So, what I can promise you is that I'm not going to cheat on you, I'm not interested in leaving you for another woman and I'm not going to want to dump you in future if our relationship continues to get better over time.

However, if you continue not to trust me and keep accusing me of wanting to cheat on you or leave you, then I'm going to be happy, you're not going to be happy and it will lead to a break up at some point.

So, if you do want this relationship to last, both of us have to take the risk of giving each other our full trust and just letting the other person take care of it and respect it.

I know that I can do that and I trust that you can do the same, so from today onwards I recommend that we need to be more mature about the way we are approaching our relationship. "

3. Get her to forgive you and start from a clean slate

[image: Get her to forgive you]

When a girlfriend doesn't trust her boyfriend, it's not always because he has done something to break her trust.

In fact, in many of these cases, the boyfriend is a good, trustworthy man who works hard and is sincerely committed to his girlfriend. He has no intention of ever cheating on her or leaving her, but she can't bring herself to believe that because she's been hurt in the past by someone else.

Sometimes though, the boyfriend isn't so innocent and will have done some bad things (e.g. lying, cheating, not following through on promises) to cause his girlfriend to lose trust in him.

Regardless of whether you are a good, trustworthy man or whether you have been dishonest with your girlfriend in a way that caused her to lose trust in you, it's important that you still ask her to forgive you for anything that you have done to cause her to mistrust you.

Here's what you can say to her:

"I don't know if it's my fault or if it has something to do with what's happened in your past, but something has caused you to not be able to fully trust me in this relationship."

If it is all my fault, then I accept that and don't hold anything against you for it. Regardless of who's fault it is, you are only going to start feeling happier and less stressed if you can forgive what has happened in the past.

Unless a person forgives the thing that is causing them pain, they can never fully let go of it and grow as a person.

They will always keep getting pulled back by that pain and it will become an insecurity for them.

So, what I'm asking you to do is to forgive me or forgive whoever or whatever it was that caused you to have your trust issues.

Are you willing to do that? Are you willing to take the next step as a woman and actually become more emotionally secure, so you don't have experience all the stress that occurs when you can't trust in a relationship?"

Once she has forgiven you, it will then make her feel more relaxed about life, love and her relationship with you.

It may also make her feel a bit silly when she looks back at how she had been thinking, acting and behaving.

4. Stop apologizing for her insecurity

[image: Stop apologizing for her insecurity]

From that moment onwards, your girlfriend should begin to trust you and let go of her insecurities.

However, if she continues to be untrusting of you, it's important that you don't waste time going around in circles and apologizing or reassuring her that she can trust you.

What should you do instead?

Laugh at her, in a loving way.

[image: Laugh at her in a loving way]

Rather than getting angry at her or trying to reassure her that she can trust you, just laugh at her (in a loving way) for being so silly.

Laughter lets the love flow, but it's up to you as a man to make the laughter happen. You can't rely on her (an insecure woman with trust issues) to have the emotional strength and maturity to laugh and smile when she is worried about whether or not she can trust you.

So, if she is being insecure by not trusting you again, simply turn it into something laugh and smile about. She will then realize that she's being silly and that it feels so much better to just trust you and enjoy the relationship.

For example: If you happen to check your Facebook and she sees that you're responding to a private message, she might ask, "Who is that? Who are you talking to? Is it a girl?"

What you need to do at that point is smile and laugh at her in a loving way and then say something like this (while smiling and being easy-going and loving):

"We've already talked about this. You're much more mature now and you're not worrying about your old trust issues.

You and I trust each other.

You can have a look at this message if you want, but next time I'm not going to let you look at my message and I'm just going to laugh at you for being silly."

Then, let her look at your message and tell her, "Next time, just relax and simply trust me. You can do that."

If she ever does the same thing again, simply laugh at her and say, "No, I'm not playing these silly games anymore. You can either believe me or leave me. The choice is yours."

If she is still having trouble trusting you, simply go back through steps 1-3 and get her to realize it all again. Let her know that the only way to get over her trust issues, is to take a risk and let her take care of her trust in you.

Tell her to put her trust in your hands and just let go of it, rather than putting it in a steel box with a lock and feeling like she has to guard it 24/7.

Tell her that if you break her trust, it is your fault, not hers and that you have no intention of ever doing that.

Likewise, if she breaks your trust, it is her fault, not yours and you trust that she has no intention of ever doing that.

What Not to Say to Your Wife: 5 Examples

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The ideal type of relationship dynamic is where you and your wife can say whatever you like to each other without taking it so seriously, getting offended or getting into an argument.

To have that type of relationship dynamic, you need to:

- Lead the way by not getting offended or angry by things that your wife says to you.
- Always try to smile, laugh and approach situations with a more light-hearted attitude, rather than stressing about it.
- Be a man that she can look up to and respect, so she feels proud to be with you and will be more willing to overlook any little mistakes you make.
- Make her feel attracted to you in different ways, so she continues to feel excited about being in love with you.

If you are being that type of man, your wife is going to be more easy-going and willing to forgive you if you happen to say something “wrong” to her.

5 Things to Avoid Saying to Your Wife

[image: Things to avoid saying to your wife]

You don't have to be Mr. Perfect and never say the wrong thing to your wife.

Instead, you simply have to be mindful of what turns a woman on and what turns her off when in a relationship with a man.

As long as you are mostly doing things that deepen her respect, attraction and love for you, any little mistake you make won't be such a big deal to her.

Just make sure that you learn from your mistakes and that you always try to become an even better man for her as the days, weeks, months and years pass by.

If you're doing that, your wife will naturally feel more respect, attraction and love for you over time. She will then become a more loving, caring, attentive and affectionate wife over time.

However, you can't expect her to do that unless you hold up your end of the bargain.

In a marriage, it is the man's responsibility to grow the respect, attraction and love that his wife feels for him over time.

If he fails to do that, she will begin to lose respect for him and when that happens, she will also lose attraction for him, which means the sex will dry up.

Eventually, she will fall out of love with him and possibly even ask for a separation, cheat on him or ask for a divorce.

So if you want to prevent the worst from happening to you, here are 5 things not to say to your wife:

1. Anything That Puts Her Down and Makes Her Feel Stupid

[image: Husband belittling wife]

It should go without saying, but criticizing or belittling anyone, even if it's for their own good, is not only not a nice thing to do, but it's also the quickest way for a woman to lose respect for her man. There is absolutely nothing wrong with teasing and being playful with your wife about certain things, especially if it's done in a fun, light-hearted way.

However, if you constantly criticize her or belittle your wife, she will close herself off from you emotionally and eventually, she will begin fall out of love with you as well.

For a marriage to thrive, a woman needs to feel that her husband respects her, and in turn she needs to respect him.

When a man belittles and criticizes his wife, she doesn't feel respected and this makes her feelings of respect and attraction towards him die as well.

If there is an issue in your marriage that you want to address with your wife, it is always best to do it in a kind, loving and respectful way.

For example: A woman might have added on some weight over the years that she has been unable to lose.

A negative way to address the issue of her weight would be to say, "You have gotten so fat. Look at you! you don't look good anymore. Why don't you do something about it?" or when she is eating, "How can you eat so much? Can't you see how overweight you are? Stop eating!"

In his eyes, he might feel that he is trying to motivate her and get her back to being the sexy, thin woman he married.

Yet, from her point of view, he is simply being critical, unkind and hurtful.

If a husband wants to get his wife to lose weight (or do something that he feels she should be doing), a better way to do that would be to say something like, "I know you've been trying really hard to lose weight and I appreciate your efforts. I'd love to help out, so if you want, I will come along to the gym with you to make it more fun. I think it will be fun working out together and I'm going to enjoy watching you become sexier every day."

In this way, rather than feel like a failure in his eyes, his wife feels loved and supported, which motivates her to try even harder to lose the weight and be the woman he wants her to be.

So, if there is something you want your wife to address, change or improve, the best way to go about it is by being open, kind and respectful towards her, rather than criticizing or belittling her.

Another way of approaching the weight issue is to ask her.

For example, a husband can say, "I know that you've been trying really hard to lose weight and I appreciate your efforts. I wanted to ask you though what kind of approach would you prefer from me? Do you want me to help you stay motivated by going to the gym with you and making it a time for us to be able to laugh and have a good time? Do you want me to ask you how you're going once every two weeks? Do you want me to never mention it again and just let you handle everything on your own? Everyone likes to approach weight loss, health and fitness in different ways, so how do you want to approach it and what role, if any, do you want me to play?"

Approaching it in that way allows a wife to feel supported, but also to feel as though she's not being rushed into losing weight.

After all, you and her are married and have your entire lives to spend together, so there usually isn't going to be an urgent rush to lose the weight.

Try to get a clear answer from her on how she wants you to approach the subject with her and then follow through on it.

2. Anything That Makes Her Feel Taken For Granted

[image: Wife tired of being taken for granted]

The start of a relationship is always the easy part for most couples.

Everything is new and exciting and in the beginning it's easy to put your wife first above everyone else because the thrill of being in love overshadows everything else.

I'm married now, so I know how great the wedding day feels. My wife was crying tears of joy and admittedly, I got a bit teary eyed as well, which is highly unusual for me. It's a pretty amazing thing when you find the right woman for you.

I'm proud to call her my wife, but what I'm most proud of is the fact that our marriage has only gotten better and better since the wedding day. I have no fear of divorce because to her and I, the idea of parting ways seems like the worst decision either of us could make.

Both of us feel loved, appreciated and respected and although we have had an occasional argument from time to time, I make sure that I always turn it into a learning experience for us so we can feel united as a couple and so she can relax as I lead the way to a better future for our relationship.

Yet, how about you and your wife?

Have you deepened her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time?

Were you able to do that in the beginning, but then lost your way with it? Have you been taking her love, respect and attraction for you for granted?

Don't worry, a lot of men make that mistake in a relationship or marriage.

It's not that a husband goes out of his way to take his wife for granted, but other, more pressing things, (e.g. work, paying the bills, taking care of the kids) start to come between him and his wife.

Yet, regardless of how crazy, busy or stressful life gets, a woman still wants to feel that her husband loves, values and appreciates her.

For example: A man might feel as though he is doing a great job or taking care of his family's needs by working very hard to provide for them.

In his mind, he is doing it for his family so he focuses entirely on being the provider and fails to notice that he is taking his wife's romantic commitment to him for granted.

She might feel happy that he works so hard to provide, but at the end of the day, she is still a human being and instinctively, she knows that there's more to life than just work, work, work.

She wants to see that her husband still has the presence of mind to make her laugh, smile and feel good when he's around, rather than having to tip-toe around him because he is so stressed, irritable and worn out because of work.

Here's another example: A guy might have a very demanding job, which means that he can't always be home with her and the children (if they have any).

Yet, even though his wife works full time too, she has to come home and cook, clean, take care of the children and manage any problems that might arise in the home.

Most women will put up with that for a long time, as long as the husband takes the pressure of his from time to time and makes her feel appreciated.

However, if he simply expects her to do that because she is his wife or the mother of their children, she will gradually become to resent him for taking her for granted.

If he regularly calls her up to say, â€œSorry honey, but Iâ€™m going to have to work late again,â€ or â€œI know you're busy and don't want to be driving with the kids in the car, but just pop over to the dry cleaner and pick up my suitâ€ or, â€œIâ€™m bringing a client home for dinner, can you whip up something special?â€ she will naturally begin to feel like he is putting her needs second to everything else in his life.

If it isn't a regular thing, a wife will happily accommodate that. However, if her husband always does that to her and expects her to just put up with it, she will eventually start feeling unloved and unappreciated.

She might tell him that she isn't happy with how he is treating her and all he needs to do then is fix that by making some changes.

However, if he doesn't make any changes and expects her to just put up with it, she will eventually begin to feel unhappy and out of place in the marriage.

3. Anything That Makes Her Feel Unattractive in Your Eyes

Most women are insecure about their physical appearance, (up to 96% of women according to a global study conducted by Dove cosmetics) and this is even more true when it comes to married women.

Most married women change over time, (e.g. she might have a baby, which will then cause her to put on some weight and get stretch marks).

No matter how well a woman takes care of herself, she will grow older and wrinkles will inevitably begin to line her face and that is something that her husband needs to accept and love about her in advance.

When a woman's appearance changes from being youthful to aging, it can be a huge whack to her confidence if the man in her life begins to lose touch with his feelings of attraction for her.

In many cases, she will then begin to flirt with men at work or other places she goes, as a way of feeling sexy and attractive again.

Her fairly innocent flirting can then easily turn into an affair if she happens to meet a confident man who knows how to make a woman feel attracted and turned on by the idea of having sex with him.

So, to avoid any of that happening, make sure that you understand and accept that it's a husband's responsibility to make sure that his wife feels sexy and beautiful in his eyes no matter what.

To make her feel sexy in your eyes, let her see that you react by feeling attracted and turned on when she puts in any effort to look good.

For example, you might say, “Wow, look at you. My sexy wife” and then spank her on the butt, pull her in for a kiss or pick her up and carry her around the house for a few seconds.

On the other hand, an example of what not to say to your wife would be: â€œWow! Look at her. She looks good. Look how toned her body is. I wish you stillâ€ looked like thatâ€ or â€œSheâ€™s so sexy. You used to look like that before the kids came along.â€

If a woman doesn't feel sexy and desirable in her husband's eyes, she will end up avoiding being affectionate or having sex.

So, always aim to make your woman feel like she is the sexiest woman in the world to you.

Naturally, there's nothing wrong with saying that other women are beautiful or sexy, but never say that they are more beautiful or sexier than She is.

Additionally, never make her feel as though you are more attracted to other women than her.

4. Anything That Makes Her Feel Like the Man in the Relationship

These days, many women are involved in building their own careers and pursuing their own dreams. Yet, regardless of how dominant a woman is outside of her marriage, when she is with her husband, she wants to know that he is the man and that she can rely on him to take care of them both now and in the future.

This then allows her to fully relax into being a real woman (i.e. feminine, emotional, free to girly and giggly, focused on love) around him.

A mistake that some husbands make is to assume that because women are now working as leaders in the business environment, they also want to take the lead at home.

It doesn't matter how successful a woman is in her career, she still wants to be able to feel like a woman around her man.

She doesn't want to have to act like a man all day at work and then come home and have to take care of her confused husband, who thinks that she wants to be the boss at home too.

For example: When a woman is strong willed and capable of leading, she will often try to impose her will and get her husband to follow her orders.

For some husbands, the idea of getting into an argument every time a decision has to be made becomes a nuisance, so rather than argue, he might say, I don't care. You decide, or It's up to you. Whatever makes you happy.

Although this might seem like it's what his wife wants (i.e. total control), it isn't.

A woman doesn't want to feel like she is the one wearing the pants in the relationship, because it ruins her respect for the man, which then begins to diminish her feelings of sexual attraction for him.

Of course, some women like to be the dominant ones in the relationship (e.g. a dominatrix type woman, a butch lesbian who gets married to a man to hide the fact that she's gay from her family, an unattractive woman who wants to control a weak man so he won't leave, etc), but most women want to know that when she's at home with her man, he is the boss and she can relax and simply be his woman.

Wearing the pants or being the boss is not about putting her down, treating her badly, being domineering or behaving in any other unloving ways.

Instead, it's simply about being the man and being confident enough to lead both you and your wife towards a better life together.

You can let her make decisions, but you should be the one who is responsible for the direction of the life that you and your wife are sharing together.

The more of that responsibility you take off her shoulders, the more womanly she will feel around you and the more attracted and in love she will be with you as a result.

5. Anything That Makes You Seem Needy, Clingy, Jealous or Insecure

[image: Wife unhappy with insecure husband]

If a guy who lacks purpose in his life, (e.g. he doesn't have any big goals or ambitions in life, or he has goals, but is using the responsibilities of marriage as an excuse for why he can't pursue them), he will usually become too focused on controlling and protecting his wife from other men.

She will become his purpose in life, which will then cause him to feel insecure whenever she stops being affectionate, doesn't answer his calls when she's out or happens to even look at another man.

Unless a man has a very good reason not to trust his wife, in which case he should just address the issue directly, what he should not do is try to control her as a way to calm his insecurities.

For example: Most women don't like to feel smothered in their relationship, so if a husband is constantly asking his wife, Who was that on the phone? Where are you going? Who are you hanging out with? only makes her feel trapped.

Most women don't want to be a man's purpose for living.

Of course, some insecure women do want that, but most women like to know that their man has a plan and a purpose for his life outside of his relationship with her.

For example:

- He is working hard to get promoted at work, so he can then afford to open the gardening business he has always dreamed about.
- He is studying the rules of football and the art of coaching, because he wants to coach the local team one day.
- He is studying after work because he is training to become a doctor, which will then allow him to leave the job that he hates and fulfill his dream.
- He is training hard at the gym because he wants to win a triathlon race and then become a coach for other athletes.
- He has an idea that will change the world and he is working hard to attract investors, so he can then make the idea real.
- He is working his way up at his government job because he wants to become the town major and make a difference.
- He is improving his ability to make music because he wants to eventually write songs for big artists, movies or TV.
- He is volunteering at a local charity and doing his best to make a difference in the lives of people who are less fortunate.
- He is studying property investment because he wants to eventually leave his job and become a property developer, which will then allow him to give his family a better standard of living and go on enjoyable holidays together.

Whatever it is, a husband essentially needs something BIG to work on, so he doesn't base his emotional security and happiness on his wife.

There's nothing wrong with her being one of the things that makes him happy or gives him a sense of identity and purpose in this life, but she should not be his main purpose.

If a man makes a woman his purpose, he will almost always become insecure when she tests his confidence by being less affectionate, attentive and loving.

If he fails the test and becomes insecure, clingy or needy, his wife will lose respect for him, which will then begin to eat away at her feelings of attraction for him.

When that happens, she may also begin to fall out of love with him and eventually either leave, ask for a separation, have an affair or ask for a divorce.

Building on Your Wife's Love, Respect and Attraction For You

If you are ever in doubt about what not to say to your wife, ask yourself, Will what I'm about to say increase or decrease her feelings of respect, attraction and love for me?

In most cases, your gut instinct will let you know if what you're about to say is loving and caring, or hurtful, needy or weak.

If you trust your gut instinct and it turns out to be wrong, then you probably need to spend a bit more time understanding what really makes a woman tick, rather than going through life assuming that you've got it all worked out already.

After all, we all learn and grow in this life and you are no exception to that rule.

You may be a great man today, but you know that you can be even better.

What to Do When Your Girlfriend Stops Loving You

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Right now you might be feeling helpless and maybe even a little bit hopeless about the possibility of making your girlfriend fall in love with you again, especially if she's been saying things like, "I don't feel the same anymore" or "I don't know if I want to be with you anymore."

The good news is that you can change how she feels and get her to fall in love with you again even harder this time.

As you will discover from the video above, just because your girlfriend has stopped loving you, it doesn't mean she is going to be stuck in that state of mind forever.

When you make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, she will naturally reconnect with her feelings of love for you.

Note: If she is now your ex girlfriend and you're trying to get her back, then watch this:

So, if you're wondering what to do when your girlfriend stops loving you, then keep reading and I'll explain how to fix the problem!

Avoid Making These Mistakes

[image: What to do when your girlfriend falls out of love with you]

When a guy begins to worry about losing his girlfriend, he will often begin making mistakes that will turn her off even more and push her further away.

So, if you're concerned about your girlfriend not loving you the same way anymore, here are some things that you should avoid doing if you want to change how she feels right and make her love you again.

- Asking her why.

[image: Why don't you love me anymore? What is your problem?]

It's normal for a guy to want to know what he has done to cause his girlfriend to stop loving him, and it probably seems quite obvious that the best person to ask would be her.

Yet, asking a woman, "Why don't you love me anymore? Just tell me what I have to do to get you to love me again," will only make it clear to her that he hasn't been paying attention to the warning signs she has been sending him for some time.

A woman doesn't just fall out of love with her man; it is usually a gradual process that happens over weeks, months or even years.

Along the way she will argue, fight and say things that she hopes will get through to him to let him know how unhappy she is feeling.

She won't sit him down and teach him how to be the man she needs because that is not a role that a girlfriend wants to be burdened with for life.

[image: Why won't you tell me what is wrong?]

She wants a ready-made man who already knows how to make a woman fall more deeply in love with him over time.

If her man doesn't know how to do that, she wants him to figure it out on his own, rather than expecting her to take on a role as a teacher, big sister or mother figure in his life.

Asking his girlfriend why she doesn't love him anymore, is like saying to her, "I never noticed what was happening between us and I really have no idea what I did wrong. Can you please spell it out for me? I don't know how to be the man you need. I need you to teach me and help me become a real man. Please guide me and be my mentor."

At this stage of the relationship, his girlfriend is already feeling little or no respect for him as a man, so by him asking her to explain what he did wrong only makes her think, "If he doesn't understand what he needs to do, then I don't want to have to be the one teaching him. I don't want to mother him and teach him how to be a man in a relationship."

She needs him to figure things out by himself, without her having to hold his hand and guide him.

If she has to teach him how to grow up and be at her level of maturity, she won't be able to respect him and without respect, she won't be able to properly feel attracted to him or feel excited to be in love with him.

- Whining, begging, pleading or crying.

It's normal for a guy to feel sad, hurt and emotional when he discovers that his girlfriend doesn't love him anymore.

However, the worst reaction he can have is to whine, cry or beg her to change her mind.

Why?

When a woman stops loving a man, it's because at some point during their relationship she stopped feeling respect for him, and this then led her to lose attraction for him and finally fall out of love with him.

If he then confronts her with tears and whining (like a boy would do to gain the pity of his mother), she will lose even more respect for him.

A woman wants to know that her man is emotionally strong enough to handle any situation, no matter how challenging.

If a guy breaks down, cries or begs for a second chance with her, rather than think, "Ah, poor guy, he really looks so miserable. Maybe I should give him another chance; after all he seems so lost and sad," she thinks, "I never realized he was so weak. I think it would be better for me to break up with him and find myself a guy who is emotionally strong and can handle his problems like a real man. I don't want to be stuck with a guy like this. What if I get pregnant to him? I will be stuck with him for life now. I've got to get away from him while I still can."

So, whatever you do, just don't make the mistake of seeking her pity by showing her how emotionally sensitive, insecure or hurt you are.

That is not going to make her love you again and will only cause her to fall further out of love with you.

If you want to get your girlfriend to fall in love with you again, you have to make her feel respect for you as a man by being a man that she can look up to, not a guy that she has to look down on.

If you've already made the mistake of getting emotional and even crying or begging her to change her mind; it's okay. You can still turn it around and make her see you with fresh eyes. From this point forward you just have to focus on regaining her respect and attraction for you by being a man that she can look up to and respect, and her feelings of love will naturally follow.

- Trying to convince her to change her mind.

[image: She needs you to change first]

Many guys make the mistake of assuming that when a woman says, "I don't love you anymore," she will change how she feels if he just promises to change.

Yet, he will most-likely have made promises about changing before, which he wasn't able to follow through on.

When she gave him another chance, he slowly reverted back to being his old self and making the same mistakes, hoping that she would just put up with it this time and not complain any further.

Here's the thing!

When a woman stops loving her man, she doesn't want to hear empty promises.

She wants to be able to see, feel and experience him in a different way (via his behavior, actions and communication style), before she will believe that he's really changed and thus open herself up to the idea of loving him again.

If a guy makes promises and doesn't keep them, it only adds another reason why she can't respect him.

In the past, a woman had to remain a virgin until marriage and then stick with her man even if she was unhappy, because it was shameful to get a divorce.

However, in today's world, women are free to get in and out of relationships until they find the right man for them.

If you currently aren't the right man for your girlfriend, you need to start fixing your issues (e.g. insecurity) and improve your ability to make her feel respect, attraction and love for you.

If you don't do that, you might have to face the dreaded talk with your girlfriend where she starts off by saying, "We need to talk" and then proceeds to say, "I don't want to be with you anymore. I am leaving you."

You can stop it before it gets to that point, but you have to be willing to fix your issues and improve your ability to make her feel the way she really wants to feel.

Identify the Real Reasons Why She Stopped Loving You and Fix Those Things

To get your girlfriend to respect you again, you have to show her that you now fully understand what caused her to stop loving you in the first place (e.g. insecurity, taking her for granted, being too clingy, having commitment issues, not being enough of a man for her).

If you're unsure about what caused your girlfriend to lose respect, attraction and love for you, here are some questions that will help you gain clarity:

- Have you been making her feel loved and appreciated in the relationship, or have you been making her feel taken for granted (e.g. expecting her to do certain things without helping out, not noticing when she did something nice for you, placing more importance on being with your friends than her)?
- Do you have a clear purpose and direction in life that you are following through on with determination, or have you been using her and the relationship as an excuse to hide from your true potential as a man?
- Have you been kind, loving and supportive towards her, or have you been criticizing or belittling her too much?
- Are you a strong, confident man she can rely on, or have you insecure, clingy and needy?
- Did you make her feel girly and feminine in contrast to your masculinity, or does she feel like more of a friend to you, or worse — does she feel like more of the man (more dominant, more emotionally strong) in the relationship?

These are just a few reasons why your girlfriend might have stopped loving you.

When you can identify the real reasons, you can then take proper action to fix those things.

You will then begin to offer her what she really wants, rather than what you think she might want.

For example: If one of the reasons why a woman stopped loving her man was because he wasn't living up to his true potential as a man, she's not going to care if he's promising her more time together, or more romantic dinners.

She is going to want to see him starting to live up to his true potential, so she can trust him to guide him and her to a better future.

If he takes action towards improving himself, (e.g. by applying for a better job, trying to get promoted, going to university to improve his qualifications, working towards achieving certain goals) she will see that not only has he really understood what was bothering her, he is also man enough to do something positive about it and this will attract her and make her feel respect for him like never before.

She will then begin to reconnect with her old feelings of love for him, but this time it will be stronger because it will be based on deeper feelings of respect and attraction for him.

Her Love for You Isn't Really Dead

Right now, your girlfriend might be saying, "Leave me alone! I just don't love you anymore," but it doesn't mean that her love for you is dead.

Instead, it simply means she doesn't feel like she can love you right now.

Her love is somewhere in the background but, right now, she's not willing to let herself feel that love for you because she's focusing all her feelings on the negative things about you and your relationship.

When you change those negative things about yourself and start offering her what she really wants, she won't be able to keep that love buried inside her for long.

When she sees that you are now the kind of man she can respect and look up to, her guard will naturally go down and she will start feeling attraction for you again.

She will then begin to reconnect with the love she felt for you, but this time it will be even stronger because she will believe in you as a man and feel a deeper respect and attraction for you as a result. So, when you woke up this morning wondering about what to do when your girlfriend stops loving you, and feeling like you might not be able to change how she feels, as you can now see, itâ€™s not impossible or even difficult.

You can do this.

What Do Happy Couples Do?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The key to a happy relationship is when a man can guide both himself and his woman into deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love for each other over time.

Just because things felt good at the start, it doesn't that either you will want to stick around later on.

To keep a relationship strong, you've got to deepen feelings of love, respect and attraction for the both of you.

When those three things deepen over time, it not only makes a couple happy to be together, but it also helps to ensure that their relationship has the best chance of lasting a lifetime.

So, if you want to know what happy couples do, here are some of the most important things to keep in mind.

Happy couples:

1. Feel attraction and respect for each other.
2. Love each other despite their differences.
3. Touch, hug, kiss and have sex often.
4. Don't take each other for granted.
5. Have mutual goals and ambitions that span out years or decades ahead.
6. Have interests, hobbies and friends apart from each other.
7. Grow together as a couple, rather than only one person growing and leaving the other behind.
8. Love and accept each other for who they are deep down.
9. Help and support each other to reach for their true potential in life.
10. Have a relationship dynamic where she feels feminine in response to his masculinity, rather than her "wearing the pants" and being the more dominant one in the relationship.
11. Communicate openly with each other.
12. Trust each other.
13. Can depend on each other for support during difficult times.
14. Have shared interests and enjoy spending time together.
15. Keep the romance alive in their relationship, (e.g. by going out to a special dinner once in a while, taking a weekend away, watching a sunset together somewhere quiet).
16. Laugh together.
17. Support each other even when they don't always agree with the other person's decisions.
18. Bring out the best in each other and make the other person feel good about herself or himself.
19. Have fun together.
20. Don't put other people or things above each other (e.g. he doesn't make the mistake of disregarding her opinion and only listening to his family or friends, or she doesn't place a greater importance on going out with her friends rather than being present in the relationship with him).

The truth is, that although the list can go on, the most important thing to remember is that for a couple to be happy, it all boils down to being able to guide both yourself and her into deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love for each other over time.

A woman will remain happy to be with you if you continue to build on her feelings of attraction, respect and love for you over time.

For example: If a relationship starts off well, but a guy then becomes insecure, controlling and clingy, the woman's feelings for him won't be able to deepen much at all.

If that kind of behavior continues from him, she will eventually lose respect for him, stop feeling attracted to him and then begin to fall out of love with him.

How You Make Each Other Feel is What Matters the Most

[image: Happy couples]

If you were to base your happiness as a couple on what the media recommends, you would be having romantic candlelit dinners every day, going off for romantic weekends every other weekend, and buying her flowers and gifts on a regular basis.

Although these things are nice and definitely help spice things up in a relationship when they happen from time to time, it's not what makes a couple happy.

For example: A guy might buy his wife flowers and take her out to a romantic dinner every week, but if he criticizes her or belittles her the rest of the time, she's not going to think, Wow!

I'm just so happy! I know he treats me badly most of the time but that's okay because he buys me flowers and takes me to nice restaurants.

In the same way, a woman might buy her man gifts often, but if the rest of the time she's a nag who disrespects him in front of others, he's not going to think I'm happy because she buys me nice gifts, he's going to think, This woman makes me feel miserable.

This is why the most important thing that happy couples do, is make each other feel loved, respected, cared for and appreciated over the long-term.

Essentially, it's not the superficial things that make a couple happy.

If you want to be happy in your relationship then you have to actively deepen the love, respect and attraction that your woman feels for you by being a man that she can look up to and respect.

As a man, you have to know how to create that type of dynamic and then you need to maintain it throughout life.

4 Relationship Hacks That Will Keep You Both Happy

Here are 4 simple ways in which you can keep growing the respect, attraction and love your woman feels for you.

1. Always remember that laughter is the best medicine

[image: Laughter is the best medicine]

Laughter is the best medicine, so always try to smile and laugh at the things that you would normally get angry or upset about.

Some situations can be very stressful and you might feel the urge to argue or get angry, but with a smile or a laugh, a difficult situation can be made a little lighter.

If you're in the habit of getting stressed, angry, frustrated or being irritable around her, you have to force yourself to develop a new habit of being more light-hearted, cheerful and happy.

You might make a mistake and get frustrated 5 times out of 10 for the first week, but if you stay focused for a couple of more weeks, that will eventually come down to 2 in 10 and then 1 in 10. Eventually, you and her will be laugh, smile and be happier almost all the time.

As a man, it's up to you to lead the way to more smiling and laughter. You can't expect a woman to be the emotionally stronger one and lead the way like that. You also can't expect her to develop the habit first, or to lead you to develop the habit.

You have to lead the way and guide both you and her to more happiness, because a woman will usually just react and respond to the lead and direction of her man and if he tends to get stressed, argue and get angry, she will usually just follow along and do the same.

When you create a happier, more cheerful dynamic in your relationship, it will definitely bring you closer together as a couple over time, which will make both of you happier.

If you don't take on the responsibility for doing that, the spark may die out and you may end up feeling more like enemies than lovers.

The start of a relationship is usually the easy part because you're both feeling a lot of lust and excitement about being in love.

However, the test of a good relationship is not what happens at the beginning of the relationship, but rather what happens over time when the excitement wears off and you are faced with real life and real problems.

Every couple has to face some kind of difficulty in their relationship, (e.g. financial trouble, a difficult pregnancy, work stress, family problems) and it's easy to take life's problems out on each other.

To stay happy as a couple, you have to make sure that no matter how angry or stressed out you get, you never stop making each other feel loved and appreciated.

You have to be on each other's side and work towards a better life together, rather than letting problems come between you and tear you apart.

There's no doubt that you will encounter challenges and obstacles individually and as a couple, but if you can help promote a more lighter, cheerful approach to life, both of you will be so much happier together throughout it all.

2. Lead the relationship, but don't be controlling

You are the man and it's your responsibility to lead.

That's not to say that your woman's needs and wants don't count, or that she doesn't have a say, but it's still your responsibility to take charge so that she can relax into being a real woman around you (i.e. feminine, free to be emotional, focused on being in love with you, giggly and girly around you).

No matter how confident, independent and successful your woman is, she still wants you to be her man.

It's up to you to take on the role of being the one who is mostly responsible for guiding you and her towards a better life together.

She can help and she can contribute, but you need to lead the way. If she wants to lead on certain things, you should allow her to do that.

Leading a woman doesn't mean taking away her power and controlling everything.

You can still have a balanced power dynamic in a relationship, where she accepts you as the leader and you respect her as your woman.

She needs to still have a say and be able to tell you if you're making a mistake, but it's ultimately up to you as the man to lead the way to a better life and better relationship.

3. Respect, respect, respect

Respect must be mutual.

You have to respect your woman and make sure that you support and encourage her to accomplish her own goals, but at the same time make sure that you are the sort of man that she can look up to and respect by being confident, honest, driven and someone she can rely on and trust no matter what.

Maintaining mutual respect is very important in a relationship because without respect attraction fades and then the love will die too.

However, being respectful towards her doesn't mean that you should allow her to treat you badly.

If she steps out of line, it's up to you to let her know that you don't appreciate it and expect better from her next time.

If she's a good woman who loves you, she will listen and give you the respect you deserve.

4. Be aware that if her respect and attraction for you dies, she will begin to fall out of love with you Without mutual attraction a relationship will become a friendship at best, or break up at worst.

While being the kind of man who is rising through the levels of life and reaching for your true potential is definitely attractive to a woman, she also wants to feel that she is special in your eyes.

Women often feel a lack of confidence about their attractiveness when in a relationship, so it's up to you as the man to make your woman feel like she is the sexiest and most beautiful woman on Earth to you.

When you make her feel the way she wants to feel, not only will she feel attracted and happy, she will know that she cannot find a better man than you and she will do everything she can to please you too.

Staying Happy Together For Life

When you know how to deepen a woman's respect, attraction and love for you over time, a relationship naturally feels good for both of you.

She is happy that she has a real man and you are happy that you have a beautiful woman who loves you and never wants to leave you.

You then become one of those couples that other people look at and ask, â€œI wonder what those two are doing in their relationship to be so happy? I wish I could have a relationship like that.â€œ

How Do I Know if My Girlfriend Loves Me? 10 Signs That Signal Danger

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Every woman expresses her love for a man in slightly different ways.

However, there are similarities that almost all loving relationships have in common.

For example: A woman who loves her boyfriend (fianc  or husband) will show affection, care and support for her man, she will get excited talking about their future together, she will feel a little bit protective of him and won't want other women having a chance to take him away from her and she will miss when they spend time apart.

So, if your girlfriend is showing any of the following 10 signs, then you may be in danger of getting broken up with or being cheated on soon or in the near future.

Some worrying signs to look out for are...

1. She takes without giving

[image: She takes without giving]

If your girlfriend is the kind of woman who always expects you to do things for her, listen to her and care about you, but she doesn't do the same in return for you, then it's a sign that she's not interested in giving you the type of love that you want or need.

This may be as a result of her having a troubled childhood (e.g. she was abandoned, treated badly), giving her love to ex's in the past and been taken for granted or it could be that she simply doesn't feel enough respect and attraction for you to truly love you.

If you feel as though she doesn't feel enough respect and attraction for you, it's possible that you may have been giving her more power than she actually wants to have over you.

Watch this video for more info...

If your girlfriend tends to take without giving back to you in return, you need to make sure that you change that dynamic.

How? You've got to become the type of man that she will look up to and respect and you then need to tell her to start loving and attentive towards you, otherwise you will break up with her.

To be the kind of man that she will look up to and respect, you need to:

- Be emotionally stronger than her (i.e. don't cry, don't be so sensitive about things, remain strong during challenging times or moments, etc).
- Have purpose in life that is based on you achieving your biggest goals and ambitions in life.
- Continually make real progress towards achieving your biggest goals and ambitions.
- Love and accept her for who she is, but gently encourage her to be even better from time to time.
- Be a man of your word.
- Don't expect her or yourself to be perfect right now, but always make progress to becoming a better man.

When a woman is truly in love with her man, she will feel happy about doing things for you that make you happy, make you feel loved and help you become the man that you are aiming to be.

Yet, not all women are the same.

Some women have had a troubled childhood, are still carrying baggage from a previous relationship or simply haven't yet worked out how to properly love a man.

So, if you are asking the question, "How do I know if my girlfriend loves me?" you need to have a more open mind about what the real problem could be with her.

She may have had a troubled past, or it may also be that she simply doesn't feel enough respect and attraction for you to really care enough about her relationship with you.

If a woman is with a man who makes her feel deep attraction, respect and love she will naturally want to please him by being more caring, loving and attentive.

If she doesn't love him in that way, the man will simply threaten to break up with her and she will then change, or he will break up with her and make her come back to him begging for another chance.

If you want to have that kind of power over your girlfriend, you must ensure that you are making her feel the type of love, respect and attraction that she really wants to experience when in a relationship.

2. She prioritizes everyone else over you

[image: She prioritizes everyone else over you]

If your girlfriend tends to put you last in terms of priority (e.g. she regularly cancels plans with you to catch up with people who contact her at the last minute, she ends a phone call with you to reply to unimportant text messages, she is more interested in being around other people than you, etc) then it's a sign that she isn't truly in love with you.

When a woman is truly in love with a man, she will want to be around him as much as possible.

There's nothing wrong with her wanting to hang around other people, do things by herself or be independent in some ways, but a woman who is truly in love with her boyfriend (fiancé or husband) will spend most of her time around him because it feels better to be around him than to be apart from him.

When you're in a love, being around the other person makes you feel so much better and makes life less stressful.

If your girlfriend gets more happiness and enjoyment from being around other people, then it's a sign that she's not excited about being in love with you and is using other people to fill up the emotional gap that exists in your relationship.

3. She still talks about missing her ex's

[image: Girlfriend missing her ex]

If your girlfriend says that she loves you, but then also says that she misses an ex-boyfriend or a number of her ex's, then it can mean that her love for you isn't as strong as it was for her ex.

If you want your girlfriend to love you more than her ex, you need to be a man that she can look up to and respect, so her love, respect and attraction can deepen for you over time rather than fading away after the initial, easy part of a relationship.

When a relationship begins, it's very easy to feel love because you are both feeling a lot of lust and excitement about being with someone new.

However, relationships go through stages and after that initial stage, a man must have the ability to deepen the woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for him, otherwise her love will begin to fade away.

When the love begins to fade, she will naturally begin to miss an ex who made her feel a stronger love, or she will open herself up to being seduced by other men who seem more capable of giving her the love and relationship experience she seeks.

4. She hides you from her family and friends

[image: She hides you from her family and friends]

If your girlfriend doesn't want you to meet her friends or family, it could mean that she isn't proud of having you as her boyfriend or simply wants to have a brief, casual relationship with you.

When a woman is in love and sincerely wants to stay with a man for life, she will introduce her man to her family and friends and if they don't like him, it's their bad luck because she is in love, is happy and is going to have a future with him whether they like it or not.

5. She talks about her future, but it doesn't include you

If your girlfriend gets excited talking about her future plans and goals in life (e.g. I want to have this, I want to do that, my dream is to have this), but rarely or never includes you in those plans, it could be a sign that she doesn't truly love you or see a future with you.

Of course, all women are different, so in some cases when a woman is only talking about herself when imagining the future, it could be that she is shy about using the word "we" or talking about you and her together in the future.

A woman might do that because she doesn't want to appear too keen at the start of a relationship or is trying to gain some more power in the relationship by making you feel as though she could be happy without you.

So, it's not always a sign that she doesn't love you because it also means that she is simply a bit immature when it comes to love.

She hasn't yet realized that in order for love to be true, powerful and last a lifetime, it needs to be fearless.

When a man and a woman love each other fearlessly and don't hold anything back, it creates a type of love that will last a lifetime.

With that type of love, both the man and woman feel excited, happy, hopeful and safe when they talk about their future together.

Although they may have individual goals and dreams, it will always link up and benefit their mutual goals together and that will make them feel as though they are working towards a mutually beneficial future and are better off together than apart.

6. She says that she won't get angry if you want to see other women

A huge red in a relationship is when a woman says that she doesn't mind if you want to see other women and have a more open relationship.

When that happens, there is a 99% chance that she already likes another guy, has cheated on you, is planning on cheating on you soon or is trying to give you a signal that she doesn't want to be in a committed relationship with you anymore.

Saying that she won't be angry if you sleep with other women, is usually just an attempt to create a new dynamic in your relationship that will make her feel less guilty when she eventually says, "Don't get angry, but I have to tell you somethingâ€¦I've met someone else."

So, if your girlfriend has said that she would be okay if you wanted to see other women, then it means that she might love you in a casual way, but doesn't see herself being committed to you for life.

7. She seems to have a wandering eye when other guys are around

There's nothing wrong with your girlfriend briefly looking at other guys, because it's perfectly natural and normal for humans to feel physical attraction for someone and then forget about a few seconds later.

If your girlfriend looks at a guy and then gets back to talking to you and doesn't keep staring at him or glancing at him, then there's nothing to worry about.

She is simply reacting to her normal human instincts, just like you will look at other women, feel attracted and then get back to enjoying your time and relationship with your girlfriend.

You looking at other women doesn't mean that you are going to have sex with those women and then dump her.

You're simply looking at them, feeling some attraction and it then fades away and is replaced by the love and attraction that you have for your girlfriend.

However, if your girlfriend is the type who seems to keep looking at guys repeatedly, staring at them and actively trying to make eye contact with them, then it's pretty clear that she is open to other guys trying to seduce her into having sex and leaving you.

If you're not around, your girlfriend will most-likely do that twice as much and it will take for you to lose your girlfriend, is for a confident guy to approach her, make her feel attracted and then get her phone number or hook up with her that night if she happens to be out partying.

8. She doesn't miss you when you spend time apart

[image: She doesn't miss you when you spend time apart]

There's nothing wrong with a girlfriend not contacting you after a few days apart if she is busy with her career, studies or is an independent woman who enjoys spending time on her own.

However, if you and her are apart for more than a week or are in a long distance relationship because of work or university and she doesn't seem to miss you when you are apart, then it could mean that she isn't truly in love with you.

Of course, all women are different and her being so emotionally distant could be her way of coping with the distance of your relationship.

It could also be her way of trying to protect herself from falling in love with you too much, so she will then have an easier time getting over you if the relationship ends.

If you are in a relationship where your girlfriend really seems to need you or miss you, it's critical that you change that dynamic before she meets another guy who makes her want to be more devoted.

I know this because I help guys to get women back after a break up, so over the years, I've heard all the stories and all the different reasons why a woman will break up with a guy.

For example: Sometimes, a couple will gradually become so emotionally detached from each other that they will begin to grow apart and then one of them will break up the relationship, or cheat and then break up the relationship.

In other cases, the woman will become emotionally detached, but the man will remain fully invested and he will then become insecure and needy, which then turns her off and makes her feel attracted to more confident, emotionally mature guys.

9. She expects you to adapt to her, but won't make any changes for you

One of the easiest ways to tell if your girlfriend really loves you is to think about how much she has adapted to you, compared to how much you've adapted to her.

For a relationship to last a lifetime, both the man and the woman need to adapt to each other and make small changes in how they communicate, feel and behave so that the relationship can be more harmonious and mutually enjoyable.

For example: If a woman wants a committed relationship where she can spend 3-4 nights per week with her boyfriend, but can only spare one night for her because he works long hours and then goes to the gym 5 nights per week, it is going to make her feel as though he isn't ready to be a truly loving man.

She might accept it for a while at the start of a relationship because she is so attracted to him and the sex is great, but she will eventually come to resent him and feel as though she needs to fill up that emotional gap in her life somehow.

She might try to distract herself with hobbies, TV, social media and other things to put up with the one night per week that she gets to see him, but she will eventually feel as though he just isn't giving enough to the relationship for her to justify committing herself to him.

She will then either break up with him, ask for time apart or open herself up to being seduced by other guys into having sex and leaving him.

If her boyfriend wants to avoid that kind of thing happening, he needs to be willing to give up a couple of nights per week at the gym (or whatever hobby he is addicted to) and allocate that time to her.

However, for the relationship to be successful, it can't just be him who is adapting. She has to adapt to his needs and wants to.

For example: He might want a girlfriend who enjoys cooking for him, but she might not want to do that because she thinks that it's old school for a woman to cook for a man.

If she wants him to become more available to her, she needs to be willing to do something for him to (e.g. cook for him one night per week and he will free up two extra nights per week for her).

For a relationship to be successful, both the man and woman need to be willing to adapt to each other, rather than it being one-sided.

So, if your girlfriend expects you to adapt to her and isn't willing to change anything for you, it shows that she not only doesn't truly love you, but she doesn't respect you enough to feel as though she should do that.

10. She doesn't really seem to care about you or what is happening in your life

If your girlfriend doesn't ask you much about what is going on in your life, doesn't listen when you talk about what is happening in your life and only seems to care about herself and her friends and family, then it's a sign that she isn't proud to have you as her boyfriend and isn't excited to be in love with you.

When a woman is in love with you, she will be happy to listen to you talking about things that she doesn't even care about (e.g. fixing cars, football, etc), she will support your goals and ambitions and she will be interested to hear about what you and your friends have been up to lately.

Essentially, she will be happy to listen to you talk about anything because she is getting to spend time with you and have some of your precious attention.

Making Your Girlfriend Love You

One of the most important parts of making your girlfriend love you is making her feel sexually attracted to you and respectful towards you as a man.

Being able to trigger a woman's feelings of attraction for you is extremely important when you first meet a woman, are on a date with her and in a relationship with her.

If you can only make your girlfriend experience light feelings of attraction, respect and love, then she's not going to want to stick around for long.

When a relationship begins, it can often feel as though it will last forever because both the man and woman feel excited to be in love due to the lust they are experiencing for each other.

As they begin to have sex, a man and woman will then begin to say, “I love you” and “I want to be with you forever” and all sorts of sweet things like that.

However, none of those things will mean anything to a woman if the guy isn’t able to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction after the relationship passes the initial stage.

The love that happens at the start of a relationship is nowhere near as deep, meaningful and enjoyable as the love that a couple feels when they are years into a relationship that has gotten better and better over time.

If you feel as though your girlfriend is falling out of love with you or doesn’t love you enough to want to stick with you for life, then you need to actively change the dynamic of your relationship.

Unlike women in the past who would stay with a man for life because it was shameful to break up, today’s women are free to get in and out of relationships until they find a man who is capable of giving her the love experience she truly seeks.

My Girlfriend is Ignoring Me: How to Fix it

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you have found yourself in the unfortunate position where you are saying, “My girlfriend is ignoring me” and you’re not sure why, this post will explain how to fix the problem.

Here are 5 honest questions to ask yourself that will give you the exact answer you need to get her to stop ignoring you!❏

1. Have you been turning her off lately?

[image: Have you been turning her off lately?]

When you first get into a relationship with a woman, she will usually put up with a lot of the mistakes you might make (e.g. being insecure, jealous, too protective, etc) because she is feeling a lot of lust and excitement about being with someone new.

When you begin having sex, it will be usually be more than enough pleasure and enjoyment to make both of you want to see each other on a regular basis, so there will be no reason for her to ignore you.

However, once you pass that initial phase of the relationship, if you’re still making the same old mistakes and possibly gotten worse (e.g. become more insecure, being clingy, not being enough of a man for her, not having much purpose in life and focusing too much of your time and energy on her as a result, etc), then she will start to feel as though she is making a mistake by being with you.

At this point, you should honestly ask yourself the question, “Have I been turning her off lately?” and if your answer is “Yes,” then you need to get clear on how you can actually start turning her on and making her feel attracted and drawn to you from now on.

For example: If you interact with her and display traits such as confidence, charisma, humor, a masculine vibe and high self-esteem, she will naturally feel attracted to you and will begin to feel proud to be with you.

She will then to feel drawn to you and will stop ignoring you.

When a woman feels a lot of attraction for her boyfriend, she doesn’t want to ignore him because interacting with him makes her feel so good and she also doesn’t want another girl to come along and take him from her.

2. Does she truly want to be committed to you for life?

[image: Is she committed to you for life?]

Just because you’re in a relationship with a woman, it doesn’t mean that she is thinking, “I’m only ever going to be with him for life. I will never do anything else other than be in a relationship with him.”

These days, many women get in and out of relationships throughout their late teens, 20s, 30s and even 40s and they continue to do that until they find the right man for them.

A woman can be 20 years old and decide that she wants to settle down and get married, but if that same women didn't find the right guy for her until she was 35, she might wait until then.

If she didn't wait and got married to a guy who she didn't truly love, respect and feel attraction for, she will potentially divorce him later on if he doesn't improve and become the man she really wants him to be.

So, the question you really need to ask yourself is this, "Is my girlfriend committed to me for life? Does she truly see me as the man that she wants to spend the rest of her life with?"

You might be answering "Yes" to that because a lot of women do say things to their boyfriend like, "I love you so much" and "I want to be with you forever" during the initial parts of a relationship, because she is feeling so much lust, love and excitement.

Yet, that doesn't mean that she can't change her mind later on if her boyfriend is unable to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction.

If her feelings fade (e.g. because her boyfriend has been too insecure, too clingy, controlling, lacking purpose, etc), then her thinking will change from, "I want to be with you forever" to "I don't feel the same way about you anymore."

These days, the only way to keep a woman in a relationship for life is to actually have the ability to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

As a man in the modern world, you now need to know how to deepen a woman's feelings over time, because women no longer have to stick with one man for life if they are unhappy.

In the past, a woman had to stick with one man for life because it was shameful to get divorced.

There was no sex before marriage, so a woman would get married and lose her virginity on the wedding night.

She would then have to stick with her man for life no matter what.

[image: No sex before marriage vs. have sex whenever you want]

However, today's women are free to do whatever they want. If a modern woman is unhappy in a relationship, she can get out of it and simply find a new guy if she wants to and society will not look down on her.

In fact, many people will "pat her on the back" and say that she is strong and courageous for breaking up with a guy who doesn't have the ability to make her feel the kind of love, respect and attraction that she wants in a relationship.

Here is a video that I made for guys who have already been dumped by their girlfriend (fiancée or wife).

Watch this now and it should help you prevent a break up from happening!|

If she does end up breaking up with you because you don't take action to fix the problem, watch this video to learn what you need to do to get her back.

If your relationship does stay together, you need to ensure that you begin deepening her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you from now on.

When you do that, she won't want to ignore you anymore because she will feel better when she spends time with you or at least remains in contact with you via phone, text and social media.

Essentially, it all comes down to how you make her feel. If you are making her feel a lot of love, respect and attraction for you, then she will have absolutely no reason to ignore you.

If you approach your relationship in that way, you and her will be able to be together for life.

3. Have you given her too much power in the relationship?

[image: Have you given her too much power in the relationship?]

A girlfriend will always test her boyfriend to see how much she can get away with and see how much power she can gain over him.

For example: She might throw tantrums, treat him badly, be less affectionate, ignore him, tease him, demand that he do things for her, etc.

If her boyfriend puts up with the bad treatment because he is afraid of losing her, the power will gradually shift to her and she will lose respect for him.

It may then get to a point where she calls the shots on pretty much everything (e.g. she says when they can hold hands, kiss, have sex, go out and how often they see each other) and if he complains about it, she will threaten to break up with him.

That is not the position that you ever want to be in with a woman. The position that you want to be in and that women actually want you to be in, is where you love and respect her, but you remain in the position of power.

To achieve that, you need to maintain belief in yourself and know that she is attracted to you, respectful of the emotionally strong man that you are and she is also in love with you.

If she gets out of line, you need to let her know that you are disappointed in her and expect better from her from now on.

You need to be light-hearted and easy-going when you tell her that, but you also need to be assertive at the same time.

If she continues to make the same types of mistakes, it should be you that is ignoring her or saying that she doesn't get to hold your hand or kiss you.

That is actually what women want a man to do. A woman hates it when her boyfriend puts up with her bad behavior because he is afraid of losing her.

Women want to be with a guy who has a backbone and is willing to stand up for himself in a loving, but assertive way.

Women don't want to be stuck in a relationship with a wimp who allows himself to get pushed around by a woman, because that suggests to her that he will also allow himself to get pushed around at work or will be overlooked for promotions because he simply isn't emotionally tough enough.

4. Has she become your main purpose in life?

[image: Has she become your main purpose in life?]

A classic mistake that guys make in relationships, is to feel as though once they've gotten themselves a girlfriend, the rest of the world can go get stuffed.

A guy will often want to spend all of his time with his girlfriend (e.g. hanging out with her on the couch, in bed, going places with her, etc), but a woman instinctively knows that he shouldn't be spending most of his time just hanging out with her.

Instinctively, she knows that (if he is a real man), he should be rising up through the levels of his true potential as a man by striving to achieve his biggest goals and ambitions in life, rather than just sitting around wasting time with her.

If you make a woman your main purpose in life, she will begin to say things like, “I need time to find myself” or “I need to clear my head” or “I need to figure out what I want to do with my life” because she is reacting to the lack of purpose and direction that you have been unable to provide.

There’s nothing wrong with spending a lot of time with your girlfriend, loving her and wanting to be around her, but your main focus in life needs to be your purpose as a man.

If you approach life in that way, your girlfriend will feel more respect, attraction and love for you over time, as long as you also treat her well and respect her and love her.

5. Are you going to fix the problem, dump her or wait to be dumped by her?

If you’re in a position now where you are saying, “My girlfriend is ignoring me” then you have a choice to make.

You’re either going to:

1. Fix the problem (i.e. identify where you’ve been messing up and then begin to change that) and then deepen her feelings for you.
2. Dump her because you feel as though she’s going to dump you soon, so you might as well do it first.
3. Not do anything and simply hope that she doesn’t dump you.

So, what you are going to do? Are you going to:

1. Fix the problem?
2. Get rid of the problem by dumping her?
3. Hope that the problem goes away on its own?

Keeping a Woman Interested in You: 4 Stages

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Keeping a woman interested in you is very easy to do when you use the right approach to attraction, dating and relationships.

Here is correct, fundamental approach to use at each step of the way with a woman, to ensure that she remains interested in you and never wants to leave you...

1. When you first meet her

[image: Keeping a woman interested in you when you first meet her]

The main thing that you need to do when you first meet a woman, is trigger her feelings of sexual attraction for you.

For example: If a guy walks up and begins talking to a woman and displays signs of nervousness and self-doubt, while also putting on an act of being an ever nicer guy than he really is, then the woman's feelings of sexual attraction are not going to be triggered.

She will feel turned off by his emotional weakness and lack of authenticity as a man.

On the other hand, if a guy approaches a woman and displays signs of confidence (e.g. relaxed, easy-going body language, confident tone of voice, believes in himself and allows his natural charisma to come through), the woman's feelings of sexual attraction will be triggered.

Yet, even if a woman is attracted to you, she won't always respond or behave in the exact same way as other women you meet.

For example: Sometimes you will meet a woman and sparks will fly immediately and she will then make it very easy for you to touch her, move in for a kiss, get her phone number or take her home for sex.

Other times, it might take you 30 minutes to 2 hours of hanging out with a woman before she feels ready to kiss, give you her phone number or go home and have sex with you.

There are also women who will play really hard to get, even if they really like you.

For example: If a woman only wants a very confident guy, she will test him by acting uninterested, teasing him (e.g. "I hate your hairstyle" or "That's a lame shirt you are wearing") and even saying that she doesn't like him.

She tests a guy like that because she wants to see if he has the balls to remain confident and believe in himself, no matter how challenging she gets.

The most important part of keeping a woman interested in you in cases like that, is to make sure that you don't buckle under her pressure.

You need to remain calm, confident and continue to display the personality traits, behaviors and inner qualities that are naturally attractive to women (e.g. confidence, charisma, the ability to make her feel girly in comparison to your masculinity, getting her to laugh and relax around you â◻◻ especially if she is testing you by acting cold, etc).

2. When you're on a date with her

[image: Keeping a woman interested in you on a first date]

One of the biggest mistakes that guys make when trying to keep a woman interested on a date, is to try too hard to impress her and end up coming across as nervous, self-doubting and awkward as a result.

There's nothing wrong with showing a woman that you do like her, care about her and are interested in her, but she doesn't want you to try so hard that she ends up feeling like she's probably too good for you.

She wants you to believe in yourself, relax and let your personality naturally make her feel attracted to you. She then wants you to seduce her into kissing you, having sex with you and falling in love with you.

If you can't do that, she will lose interest in having a second date and may even tell you, "We'd be better off as a friends" or "This was nice, but I just want to make it clear that I'm not looking for a relationship" as a way of trying to end the dating process.

There's nothing wrong with impressing a woman on a date by taking her somewhere nice, dressing well and treating her well.

However, the point is that you need to make sure that you believe in yourself and know that you are good enough for her no matter where you take her for a date, or what clothes you happen to wear that day.

Watch this video to understand some of the classic mistakes that guys make when trying to get a woman interested and keep her interestedâ!

As you will discover from the video above, guys who try too hard to keep women interested are usually the guys who have no idea how to make women feel attracted to them.

Without that skill, they over-compensate by being really nice, buying her things, over-complimenting her and essentially being willing to do whatever she wants as long as she doesn't lose interest.

There's nothing wrong with being nice to a woman, buying her something, giving her a compliment or even being willing to do what she wants every now and then.

However, women hate it when a guy goes overboard with those things because he doesn't even know how to attract her and turn her on with his natural personality.

When on a date, the main thing that you need to do is make her feel relaxed by being confident and relaxed yourself, while also building on her feelings of sexual attraction for you by displaying some of the personality traits, behaviors and inner qualities that naturally attract women.

The video above explains how a woman's attraction for a man really works.

After you watch it, you will know things about attraction that most guys on this planet are clueless about and probably won't ever find out.

3. When you're in a new relationship with her

[image: Keeping a woman interested in you when in a relationship]

The secret of keeping a woman interested in you when in a relationship, is to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

The start of a relationship is the easy part, because both of you will be feeling a lot of lust and excitement about being with someone new.

If you begin having sex, that will usually be more than enough enjoyment and pleasure to make both of you want to see each other on a regular basis.

Yet, once you get past that initial stage of the relationship, you need to start to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

For example:

- Being a man of your word.
- Being emotionally strong.
- Being a man that she can look up to and respect.
- Having purpose in life.
- Rising through the levels of your true potential as a man, by striving to achieve your biggest goals and ambitions in life.
- Making her feel girly and feminine in comparison to your masculinity (i.e. how you think, feel, behave, move, take action compared to her).

There are many different ways that you can deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you, which I teach in my programs here at The Modern Man.

4. When you have been together for many years

[image: Keeping a woman interested when in a long term relationship]

If you have been deepening a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time, then she's not going to want to leave you even if she has been with you for 20, 30 or even 40 years.

She will know that it would be a mistake to leave an amazing man like you and risk never being able to find another guy who could deepen her feelings the way you have.

The fact is, most guys don't really know what is involved in deepening a woman's feelings and they simply take their girlfriend, fianc   or wife for granted, until one day she turns around and says, "I don't feel the same way anymore. I think we should break up."

Statistically speaking, approximately 50% of relationships and marriages end in a break up or divorce, while at least 25% of couples still together even though they are unhappy.

So, that is 75% of people who either break up or stick around in unhappy, unfulfilling relationships.

That leaves us without 25% of people who are happy and have the ability to deepen each other's feelings when in a relationship, so they can stay together for life.

Most guys (up to 75%) tend to make classic mistakes with their woman (e.g. being insecure, taking her for granted, creating unhappiness, ruining the sexual attraction, etc).

If you want to keep a woman interested in you for life, all you need to do is be one of the 25% of guys who actually know how to love a woman and deepen her feelings over time.

When you are that type of guy, no woman is going to want to leave you.

You can see evidence of this being true when you see couples who are still madly in love and excited to be together after 20-50 years of being together.

The woman has found herself a man who is much better than anything she could find if were leave him.

Leaving a man like that is just way too much of a risk for a woman because she will almost always know (from past relationship experience) how difficult it is to find a real man.

Rather than wasting time and energy jumping from relationship to relationship, she is able to fall more deeply in love with her man over time, which is much more fulfilling and rewarding for the both of them.

Keeping a Woman Interested in You For Life

[image: Keeping a woman interested for life]

Keeping a woman interested in you for life, essentially comes down to you being a consistent man.

You need to understand that you have the capacity to learn, grow and become a bigger and better man over time.

Don't ever think that you're finished and that you can't become any better of a man than you are right now, or achieve even bigger things over time.

You can.

You have unlimited potential.

To ensure that your woman is able to maintain and deepen her feelings of respect for you over time, you need to always strive to rise up to the next level of your potential as a man.

As long as you love her, care about her, respect her and treat her well while you live the life of a man who has purpose, your woman will always remain interested in you.

My Girlfriend Kissed Another Guy: What Should I Do Now?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend has kissed another guy, she will usually then break up with you because was already planning to, or she will wait to break up with you based on the way you react to the news.

For example: If you get angry, become insecure, cry, call her names or threaten to hurt her or the other guy, she can then use that as a reason to break up with you (e.g. she might say, “I am scared of you now” or “The way you are reacting is a huge turn off. I’m glad I kissed him now because it has allowed me to see this side of you”).

So, what you say and do at this point is very important if you want to keep your relationship together or if you want to break up with her without getting even more hurt than you already are right now.

What Should You Do About it?

[image: What should you do about it?]

If you’ve found yourself in the unfortunate position of saying, “My girlfriend kissed another guy” the way you respond and react needs to be based on the kind of relationship you have with her (e.g. truly committed, kind of like each other, long distance, co-worker relationship, high school sweethearts, etc) and why she kissed him.

Here are 6 different scenarios of a girlfriend kissing another guy, when she is already in a relationship and what her boyfriend should do about itâ□|

1. If she kissed another guy because she was very drunk and now deeply regrets it.

[image: She got drunk and kissed another guy]

If your girlfriend kissed another guy because she was extremely drunk and sincerely didn’t even know what was happening (e.g. sitting on a couch at a house party and the guy sitting next to her started kissing her, a guy took advantage of her in the back of a taxi, if she was almost at the point of passing out, etc), then it is possible to forgive her for that and continue on in a committed, trusting relationship.

However, if she was just having a few drinks and she actively kissed a guy for more than 10 seconds while out partying, then it is something that you should be very concerned about.

If she didn’t want to do kiss the guy, she would have reacted within 5 seconds and stopped him from kissing her any further. She would have then begun to deeply regret the mistake she made, to the point where she felt sick with guilt about it and apologized to you.

If that’s what your girlfriend did, then it’s fine to forgive her if you have the emotional strength to do so and you know that she wouldn’t ever want to do that again.

You can simply see it as a once in a lifetime mistake she made due to getting a bit too drunk and then laugh it off as nothing to worry about.

However, if your gut instinct is telling you that she willingly kissed him and would probably do it again, then the best approach is to break up with her, but only temporarily.

Essentially, what you need to do is make her feel the pain of losing an awesome guy like you, so she then realizes that she has made a mistake and comes back to apologize and ask for another chance.

If you decide to trust her and continue on with the relationship, you need to make sure that you don't keep bringing up the kissing mistake with her and turning it into an issue that destroys the relationship.

You have to forgive her, forget about it and then continue on, knowing that it was a silly mistake and she won't ever want to go through a break up with you like that again.

If she wants to be in a relationship with you that lasts a lifetime, she is going to change and will no longer want to go out partying and getting drunk if you aren't there.

She will want you to come along too because you are the man that she is proud to be with and you are the man that she wants to be kissing, hugging and hooking up with at the end of the night.

If she does go out without you there (e.g. at a bachelorette night, hen's night, bridal shower, baby shower, etc), she should be sensible and make sure that she doesn't get wasted and allow a similar situation to happen again.

If she is truly committed to you, she will definitely become more sensible, but if she isn't really sure about her commitment to you, the same mistake will almost certainly happen again in future.

So, if you do take her back, you need to let her know that if you do see her putting herself in that type of situation again, you are simply going to break up with her and the relationship will be over with no chance of ever getting back together again.

2. If she kissed another guy because she no longer has strong feelings for you.

[image: She no longer has strong feelings for you]

A woman will often kiss another guy as a way of quickly getting out of a relationship.

Women know that it's very painful for a guy to find out that his girlfriend has kissed another guy behind his back.

Hearing news like that is enough for most guys to instantly dump a woman and never want to talk to her ever again.

Yet, for guys who are difficult for a woman to break up with (e.g. a clingy, needy guy who would never want to lose her), kissing another guy is also an opportunity for her to speed up the process of breaking up with him.

How? He will almost certainly react to the news by becoming more clingy, insecure, needy, angry and maybe even violent or abusive towards her, which will give her more than enough reason to explain her reason to break up with him.

She will say that the way that he has responded is very unattractive, it's a turn off, it's scaring her and she now wants to get out of the relationship.

[image: She no longer has strong feelings]

So, what should a boyfriend do in this situation?

What he needs to do is stop saying and doing the sorts of things that are causing his girlfriend to lose touch with her feelings of love, respect and attraction for him.

For example: If you are insecure, then you need to become emotionally strong.

If you don't have much purpose in life outside of the relationship and are clinging to her as a result, you need to approach life in a more balanced way. Rather than only being focused on her, you need to develop a strong sense of purpose as a man by starting to make progress towards your biggest dreams and ambitions in life, while also giving time and attention to her.

If you tend to get angry and get into arguments with your girlfriend too often, you need to start being more light-hearted about things and force yourself to laugh and smile about the kind of things that would normally make you angry or annoy you.

If you and her feel more like friends these days and there's no sexual spark anymore, you need to start being more masculine in the way that you think, feel, behave and take action so she can feel feminine in comparison to you.

When she feels feminine in comparison to your masculinity, the sexual spark will naturally reignite between you.

3. If she kissed another guy because she is untrustworthy.

[image: She can't be trusted]

Not all women are 100% trustworthy, which is a simple fact of life that you need to accept and deal with.

- According to the Journal of Marital and Family Therapy (USA), 57% of men and 54% of women admit to having cheated at some point in their lives when in a relationship.
- 74% of the men surveyed said they would have an affair if they knew they would never get caught and 68% of the women surveyed said the same.

As you can see, it's not only women who cannot be trusted. Many men are also willing to cheat on a woman too.

There are some women out there who will be 100% faithful to you for life and never cheat on you, but there are also some women out there who will cheat on you and not really care about it at all.

A cheating woman is the type who will often say, "I love you" to your face and say things like, "I want to be with you forever," and "I would never cheat on you," but when she's not around you, she will flirt with other guys, kiss them and even have sex with them without worrying about breaking her promise to you.

So, if you've found yourself saying, "My girlfriend kissed another guy" and you believe that she is an untrustworthy, cheating type of woman, then you're not going to have much success keeping a relationship together for life with her.

Your best bet in a situation like that is to dump her and start hooking up with other women to move on, rather than forgiving her and getting more involved with her (e.g. moving in together, having children, getting married, etc) only to find out that she's done it again.

Of course, if you've just found out that your girlfriend kissed another guy, you are probably feeling hurt, betrayed and may not feel like approaching and talking to other women because you're worried about the same thing happening to you with another woman.

However, you need to be stronger than that.

You can't let an untrustworthy woman destroy you and turn you into an insecure guy who hides from women because he is afraid of being hurt.

You need to improve your ability to attract other women, so you can then choose a trustworthy woman, rather than simply accepting whatever you can get and ending up with the wrong woman again.

Watch this video to understand how a woman's attraction for a man works and how you can use it to enjoy your choice of women and help keep her faithful for life!

Most guys don't realize how easy it is to attract women by displaying the personality traits, behaviors and inner qualities that naturally attract women (e.g. confidence, charisma, masculine vibe, humor, etc).

When you are one of the guys who can actively attract women during interactions, you will see that it's extremely easy to attract and pick up women.

With that power, you can then choose the right woman for you, rather than accepting whatever you can get and potentially accepting yet another untrustworthy woman who will simply cheat on you, dump you or divorce you later on.

4. If she kissed another guy because she doesn't really want to settle down at this point in her life.

[image: She doesn't want to settle down yet]

Not all women want to settle down for life with the first great boyfriend they find.

You and her might have been having great sex, had fun on holidays together, lived together and even talked about having kids, but that doesn't mean she can't change her mind about wanting to be settled down for life.

Her capacity to be faithful to you for life really depends on her upbringing, beliefs and what stage of life she is at right now.

If your girlfriend is the type of woman who doesn't yet feel the need to settle down into a truly committed, lifetime relationship, then she's going to change her mind unless she realizes that you are the man for her.

The best way to make her realize that is to make sure that you're not making the classic mistakes that turn a girlfriend off (e.g. being insecure, clingy, not having much purpose in life, not being masculine enough in how you think, feel and behave, etc) and you then need to dump her, so she can feel the pain of losing an awesome guy like you.

When she feels that pain, she will then begin to realize that she does want to be with you and you can then accept her back under certain conditions.

You can tell her that you are looking for a serious, committed and if she wants that, you are willing to give it to her, but if you notice that she doesn't want that, you and her are simply going to break up and go your separate ways.

If she isn't truly committed and you don't dump her, she will drag you deeper into the relationship and make you feel like you need her and she will then dump you, so you can feel the pain of losing her.

So, rather than getting emotionally bruised by a woman who is not ready for a committed relationship, just break up with her and move on by getting yourself a new girl.

5. If she kissed another guy because you are in a long distance relationship.

It is possible to keep a woman faithful to you when in a long distance relationship, but if she doesn't really feel a lot of respect, attraction and love for you, then the chances of her remaining are greatly reduced.

If you haven't established a truly committed relationship with her where you and her know for sure that you want to spend the rest of your lives together, then it's only natural that she will begin to stray if you spend too much time apart.

She will feel as though she is wasting time just waiting around for you because she doesn't even know if you are the one for her.

Of course, on the phone, Skype, Facebook, via text and other forms of communication, she might say that she loves you, misses you and feels like you are the one for her, but that doesn't guarantee that she won't think differently when she's around other guys who are making her feel attracted.

If your girlfriend has been actively hanging out with her single girlfriends to go out and party and get drunk, then it's only natural that she will eventually cheat on you if you don't have a deeply committed relationship where both of you know for sure that you want to be together for life.

So, what should you do?

If you want to keep her, you've got to continually be the sort of guy that she wants to remain faithful, rather than expecting her to remain faithful because things used to be good between you and her at the start of the relationship.

Women can remain faithful in a long distance relationship and a perfect example of that is when men are deployed overseas for their work with the armed services (e.g. army, navy, air force, etc).

These men are often away for more than 12 months at a time and they come back to women who have been waiting for them, excited to see them and have been completely faithful the entire time.

It is possible to make a woman remain that madly in love with you and be excited to see you, but you have to be the sort of man that she feels proud to be with.

If your girlfriend doesn't feel proud to be with you and doesn't really have much respect for you (e.g. because you've been insecure, don't have much purpose in life outside of the relationship, etc), then she will more likely to cheat while you are apart.

6. If she kissed a guy that she spends a lot of time with.

[image: She kissed a friend or a co-worker]

If your girlfriend spends a lot of time alone with a guy who is a co-worker, a fellow student at university or a mutual friend in her group of friends, then she's most-likely going to continue to spend time with him even though she has now kissed him.

If you want to keep the relationship together, you can't demand that she no longer spends any time with that guy because that is a choice that she needs to make.

Think about it this way□!

Before getting into a relationship with you, your girlfriend was an individual. While in a relationship with you, she is an individual and if she gets out of a relationship with you, she will still be an individual.

The same goes for you as well.

Regardless of how close you and her felt, you have always been individual to her. She doesn't own you and you don't own her.

However, what makes a relationship a relationship is when two individuals make a decision to be together and be committed to each other.

Being in a relationship is a decision that both of you need to make on your own.

You can't force your girlfriend to make a decision to only spend time with you, because she is an individual and can ultimately choose to do whatever she wants.

If she is going to stop spending any time with him, it has to be something that she decides on her own.

So, if you begin to demand that she stops talking to certain people (e.g. co-workers, friends, etc) and cut people who are close to her out of her life completely, then it's not going to make her feel as though she is an individual who has the freedom to decide things on her own.

Regardless of how good your intentions are and how great of a guy you really are, demanding that of her will make her feel like she is trapped in a relationship with an insecure guy, which will actually make her feel more attracted to the guy she recently kissed.

As long as the guy that she kissed is being more confident and emotionally secure than you are, he will be more attractive to her.

Why? Women are naturally attracted to the strength in men (e.g. confidence, high self-esteem) and turned off by the weakness (e.g. insecurity, low self-esteem).

What Are You Going to Do About it?

[image: What are you going to do now?]

Right now, you're probably feeling hurt and betrayed by your girlfriend and maybe even a bit angry about the whole situation.

Regardless of how bad you feel right now, the best thing for you is to remain emotionally strong and clear headed so you can make the best decision for your unique situation.

So, are you going to dump her and find a new woman, or are you going to forgive her, forget about it and continue on with the relationship?

My Wife Doesn't Respect Me: 5 Possible Reasons Why

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you've gotten to a point in your marriage where you have realized that your wife no longer respects you, the good news is that you can turn it around and regain her respect.

Here are 5 common reasons why a wife will lose respect for her husband and how you can turn it around:

1. Insecurity

[image: Wife losing respect for insecure husband]

Regardless of how confident or successful a man is in his working life, a woman still needs to be able to rely on him to be an emotionally strong man around her to be able to maintain her respect for him.

For example: If a woman's husband is insecure about his looks (e.g. he is balding, has put on some weight, no longer has the athletic physique that he once did, is getting wrinkles, etc) she isn't going to find that cute and endearing.

Instead, she will lose respect for him for thinking like a woman (i.e. thinking that the most attractive thing about him is his looks) when in reality, what actually maintains and builds a woman's attraction for a man over time is how he thinks, talks, feels and behaves around her and in life.

For example: Has he remained emotionally strong, or has he become too emotionally sensitive over the years?

If a man is able to remain emotionally strong and secure in all areas of life, his wife will not only respect him, but she will also maintain her sexual feelings for him.

However, if a wife is unable to respect her husband, her feelings of attraction will begin to dwindle away and she will gradually fall out of love with him.

2. Lack of dominance

[image: Lack of dominance]

One of most common mistakes that men make in a marriage is to believe that the way to a happy marriage is to let his wife "take charge" and effectively "rule the roost."

The reason why so many modern men go down that route is largely due to the way that "happy marriages" are portrayed on TV and in the movies.

More often than not, a married couple is shown to consist of a domineering wife and a meek, mild, "hen-pecked" husband who just goes along with whatever the wife wants because it keeps her happy and he can then enjoy a quiet life.

Many men see that version of "marriage" so often that they become conditioned to believe it is true.

It's not.

Well, itâ€™s not true if you actually want to be in a happy marriage in the real world.

So, let's clear things upâ€™|

If your wife doesn't respect you because you've fallen into the trap of letting her run the show, get her way all the time and essentially boss you around when it comes to sex, then you need to put a stop to it.

Being a dominant husband is not about becoming a domineering, selfish asshole who approaches the marriage with a "my way or the highway attitude."

Instead, it's simply about starting to laugh at her attempts to boss you around and lovingly guide her in the direction that you want, while also taking her opinion and ideas into account.

Of course, if your wife is used to having you under her control, she's almost certainly going to test your newfound dominance by saying that you're being mean, selfish, rude or anything else she can think of.

Simply smile, laugh at her in a loving way and tell her to relax and stop being a little Miss Bossy about everything.

Then, draw her in for a hug and let her feel your masculine dominance. Make her feel feminine and girly in comparison to your masculinity and she will not only gain a newfound respect for you, but she will also begin to have stronger sexual feelings for you as well.

Don't get me wrong hereâ€™|

I know how marriages work because I am married and I also help men via my phone coaching service every day to fix their marriages with unloving, dejected women, so I know that your wife will probably try to push you away when you try to hug her and make her feel lovingly dominated by your masculinity.

She will probably also tell you to stop interfering and let her run the show, if you try to take on a more dominant position in the marriage.

Just smile, laugh at her in a loving way and let her feel feminine and girly again by continuing to be a strong, masculine, dominant man when you interact with her.

Let her see, feel and experience your masculinity in the way you talk, move, think, behave and touch her. As long as you do it from a place of love, you are certain to get positive results from that type of approach.

I know that because I've taught it to many men and I also do it to my wife everyday. She knows who the man is around my houseâ€™|and she loves it.

3. Lack of purpose in life

[image: Lack of purpose in life]

One of the best ways to maintain and build on your wife's respect for you over time, is to have a strong sense of purpose in life.

In other words, you have big ambitions and dreams that you're aiming towards as a man and that you're continually making progress towards.

A mistake that many husbands make after marrying their wife, is to slowly slip into a mindset of accepting a mediocre life by coming up with excuses as to why they can no longer strive to do anything (e.g. busy with the kids, have to pay the bills, need to watch TV, etc).

For example: A man might be working in a job that he really doesn't like, but he sticks with it to pay the bills and then comes home and complains about how crappy his job is and how hard it is to pay the bills.

[image: Wife unhappy that husband has given up on trying to achieve anything big in life]

Yet, he doesn't really do anything to change it. He has big dreams and ambitions, but he has a list of excuses that he uses to explain why he can't work on those goals.

Another man might be working in a job that he likes, but he doesn't try hard enough to learn and develop into the kind of man who could land a promotion that would allow him to earn more money and become a more accomplished man that his wife could be proud of.

Outside of work, he might have some hobbies (e.g. riding bikes, fixing cars, flying model airplanes, working out in a gym, etc), but unless he has huge ambitions and dreams in the area of his hobby and he is continually making progress towards realizing the massive dream, then he is essentially just wasting his time like a boy or young man would who doesn't yet know what his purpose is in life.

What makes a wife look up to and respect her husband is when she can see that he is rising through the levels of his true potential as a man, by reaching for his biggest ambitions and goals in life.

To have purpose in life is about big dreams and ambitions that span out 30, 40 and even 50 years into the future.

You don't have to know exactly how you are going to get there, but you need to have a big dream and something that you're aiming for that will lead you to becoming a bigger and better man that your wife can feel increasingly proud of over time.

If your dreams and ambitions are truly big ones, then you will definitely encounter challenges and obstacles along the way and it will be how you handle those moments that help to deepen your wife's respect and admiration for you.

For example: If a husband is trying to fulfill his lifelong dream of owning a restaurant and then gives up a month after opening the restaurant, because he doesn't know how to manage the staff properly, it will destroy his wife's respect for him.

If she is a loving, caring, dedicated woman, she might feel sorry for him, but she will lose a tremendous amount of respect for him not being able to handle a simple challenge like that.

Rather than giving up, he should do what any other successful restaurateur or business owner does when they face new challenges: Learn.

The path to greatness in any area of life requires a man to be willing to learn what he doesn't know, so he can then experience the next level of success in that area.

If he refuses to learn and develop as a man, it's only natural that his wife will lose respect for him over time because he will increasingly feel like a burden to her rather than a benefit.

4. A Lack of ability to make her smile, laugh and enjoy life with you

[image: Unable to relax and allow his wife to smile, laugh and enjoy life with him]

We all face challenges and obstacles throughout life and it is how you handle those moments that will either deepen your wife's respect for you or be another thing that eats away at it.

It's very easy to fall into the habit of getting irritated and annoyed around your wife, but one of the most important lessons that you will ever learn about life is that you don't need to take most things seriously.

You can if you want, but it's only going to lead to stress, frustration and an unhappy marriage.

Of course, there are some serious things in life that need serious attention, but for the most part, there is always an opportunity to laugh, smile and be more light-hearted about anything.

For example: If a wife is doing the dishes and she drops a plate that then breaks into many pieces on the kitchen floor, a man who is easily irritated or annoyed might snap at her for wasting a good plate or ruining his favorite plate.

He might feel like snapping at her is the right to do if she has a habit of dropping things once in a while, because he wants her to take more care and never make that mistake again.

Although it is an added expense to their budget to have to buy another plate or have to continue on with a set of crockery that is missing a plate, it's not the end of the world.

Instead, it's actually an opportunity for a husband to make his wife love and respect him even more. How?

He can laugh at her in a loving way and call her a klutz or a clumsy housewife and then spank her on the ass in a playful way.

She will most-likely tell him to help her clean up the mess and he can then laugh at her and say something like, "Clean up your own mess, you hopeless housewife."

If he wants to, he can help her clean it up or he can walk away laughing about it.

If they are in the habit of laughing, smiling and being light-hearted about things, she will simply laugh and then clean it up herself.

She won't take the comment of "hopeless housewife" seriously because she knows that her husband loves her, respects her, appreciates everything she does and more importantly, he always tends to joke around about things, so she knows that he's not putting her down or being mean; he's just joking around and helping both of them to feel happy in times when they could easily explode into a pointless argument that drives them further apart.

This is the type of easy-going, light-hearted, loving relationship that I have with my wife where we are able to say things to each other and not take it so seriously.

For example: She will sometimes poke fun at me for having a bit of belly, losing my hair and having wrinkles and I will poke fun at her for silly things she says or does.

Of course, if you are in the habit of getting irritated and annoyed at your wife, then you will need to develop a new habit, which will not happen overnight.

Human beings typically take 21 days of consistent, conscious effort to change a habit, but that doesn't mean you need to get it done in 21 days.

If you are going to be developing a habit of being more light-hearted and easy-going about things and you won't have the time to put in a consistent, conscious effort, then it may take you 2-3 months to develop the habit.

This is something that you should talk to your wife about and be easy on yourself about as well. After all, you don't need to be too serious about things.

It doesn't matter if it takes you 3 months to develop the habit of being more light-hearted, easy-going and willing to laugh about things when other people were able to get it done in 21 days.

If it takes you 3 months, simply turn that into something else that you can laugh about together.

5. Doing most or all of the housework

A common mistake that modern men make in marriages is to copy the fictional relationships they see on TV drama shows or sitcoms, follow the advice of politically correct TV talk show hosts and believe the advice from random articles online that are not written by male relationship experts who are actually in a successful, happy relationship with a woman.

For example: A common piece of advice hear or a storyline that you will see on TV is where the husband takes on a lot or all of the housework to impress his wife and hopefully gain her respect and get laid.

Yet, that is not it works in real life.

I say that it doesn't work based on my expert opinion and on the basis of studies that have proven it to be inaccurate advice for men:

- A Norwegian study found that divorce rates were 50% higher amongst couples who share the housework, compared to marriages where the woman takes on the lion's share on the work.
- An American study found that the frequency of sex decreased the more that a man took on the traditional role of a woman in the household.

I was recently coaching a man (via my phone coaching service) who had been married to his wife for 14 years.

His wife had lost respect for him and was no longer interested in sex. So, what did he do?

He did what pretty much everyone does these days when they need some help: He Googled it.

What did he find?

Rubbish articles written by politically correct women or wimpy men who suggested that he clean up the rouse, run her a bath, massage her feet and she would then be interested in sex.

Well, he clean up the house and made it absolutely spotless. He then offered to run her a bath and she didn't want one. He offered to massage her feet and she accepted, but then wasn't in the mood for sex.

So, does this mean that a man should never clean up, run his wife a bath or give her a foot massage.

Of course not.

There is nothing wrong with helping a wife to clean up the house every now and then, doing something romantic for her like running her a hot bath and tell her to call you into join her or giving her a foot massage.

Yet, that isn't the path to a woman feeling the most amount of respect, attraction and love for her husband.

The truth is, a woman will only respect her husband more, feel more attracted to him and fall more in love with him if she already feels a lot of respect, attraction and love for him and he then does those things every now and then.

Why shouldn't he treat her like that all the time?

Well, if he was what women refer to as a real man, he wouldn't have time for that. He'd be rising through the levels of his true potential as a man to achieve his biggest goals and ambitions in life.

Of course, there is nothing wrong with helping around the house if your wife is extremely busy with her career, the kids and the cooking, but if she is that successful and you are also making progress with what you do, then you should work out some way to fit in a housekeeper or maid into your budget, even if they only come over once a week for an hour.

Rather than constantly cleaning up the house, your free time should be spent on relaxing and enjoying life and your wife, spending time with your kids if you have any and fitting in a bit of learning to help you grow and be more capable of achieving what you're aiming to achieve in life.

If you can't afford a cleaner to visit the house once a week, then you should look at things you can cut from your budget (e.g. some alcohol, some snack foods, some memberships, etc) to clear up some funds to hire a cleaner that will give take the pressure of the both of you.

If you still can't afford that, you should help her out with the kids or do some cooking, rather than cleaning up and letting her sit on the couch watching TV or looking after the kids.

Essentially, the main thing you need to remember is this: Your wife will lose more and more respect for you if you attempt to suck up to her by taking on the role of a traditional housewife in the hope that it makes her happy.

Even though she might not be willing to admit it or may not have ever realized it, she will feel much more respect for you if you are rising through the levels of your true potential as a man, rather than spending most of your time helping her around the house.

Deepening Your Wife's Love, Respect and Attraction Over Time

In the past, a woman would stay with a man for life even if she didn't feel much respect, attraction or love for him because it was shameful to get divorced.

In today's world, a woman is free to divorce a man that she is not happy with, so if you continue to destroy your wife's respect for you as a man, you cannot expect her to stick around for life just because she said, "I do" on the wedding day.

These days, a woman will get up and leave if she feels as though her man doesn't have what it takes to develop and become a bigger and better man over time that she can look up to and respect.

Maintaining a Long-Distance Relationship: 4 Things You Must Do

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Here are 4 essential things that you must do when maintaining a long distance relationship with a woman:

1. Be the sort of man that she feels proud to be in a relationship with

When your relationship began and you starting having sex and getting to know each other in an intimate way, it might have seemed as though you and her would last forever no matter how vast of a physical distance was between you.

However, for a relationship to last a lifetime or even just for many years, the initial lust that a couple feels when they meet, kiss and begin having sex has to be transitioned to deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love for each other.

This is very important from a woman's perspective because a woman makes decisions about long term relationships based on the long term consequences or benefits of being with a guy.

Why? Unlike men who can continue to impregnate women up to the age of 50, 60 and even 70 in certain cases, most women rapidly begin to become less fertile after the age of 35 years of age.

Naturally, a woman wants to ensure that she is with a man who will be beneficial to her in the long run, rather than only in the short term.

She might like a guy because he is fun to be around or physically good looking, but if she feels as though he's not a good match for a long term or lifetime relationship, she will begin to look elsewhere.

So, how can you be the sort of man that she feels proud to be in a relationship with?

This includes doing things like:

- Going after your biggest dreams and ambitions in life, rather than just sitting around waiting for her or working in a job that will get you nowhere in life.
- Being confident and emotionally secure with or without her reassurance.
- Rising up to reach your true potential as a man, rather than accepting a mediocre life and expecting her to continually feel impressed by you.
- Having good friendships with people to maintain a balanced lifestyle, rather than only focusing on your relationship with her.
- Being the sort of man that other people in your life can look up to, respect and rely on to be a pillar of strength.

When a woman is in a relationship with a man like that, she's not going to want to leave him if they happen to go long distance for a while.

Of course, there's absolutely no guarantee that a woman will not cheat on you, because all women are different.

Some women are of excellent character and would never cheat on their man, whereas other women have cheated on ex-boyfriends or are the type who will cheat if they get drunk and are feeling horny. To ensure that you have the highest chance of maintaining a faithful long distance relationship with a woman, you must be the sort of man that she feels proud to be in a relationship with.

Being that man isn't only for her. It's also for your protection.

If you are being the sort of man that she feels proud to be in a relationship with, then you're going to find it extremely easy to get a replacement woman if you and her decide to split.

Most women dream of finding a good man who also has the traits that I've listed above, so if your woman makes a mistake and cheats on you or if you decide that you want to call it quits, you will be ready and able to effortlessly attract another women right away.

If your woman knows that you could easily replace her with another quality woman, it will actually be one of the main things that will keep her faithful to you.

2. Give her space, but don't ignore her or stop caring

Part of maintaining a long distance relationship is about giving the woman space to feel independent and do what she wants to do, rather than always breathing down her neck or harassing her with phone calls about where she has been and with who.

The last thing that you want to do in a long distance relationship, is to become the insecure, needy boyfriend who is being unreasonable about what she can and cannot do while you are apart.

However, you also shouldn't get to the point where you stop caring and just ignore her.

So, what should you do instead?

You and her need to come to an agreement on how often you feel it will be necessary or enjoyable for you and her to talk.

Then, agree that both of you will basically stick to that and trust the other person.

Of course, it's fine if you or her text or call one extra time every now and then, but you should try to stick to what you agree on.

For example: Some guys who are very busy working on their career, degree or business don't really have the time to be sitting around talking to a woman on the phone every night.

Likewise, a woman might be in that situation herself where she is very career focused and has a lot of other things to do (e.g. go to the gym, cook food, clean her apartment, etc), so she won't always have time to be sitting around texting or talking.

So, you need to come to an agreement on what works for both of you and then try to stick to that.

3. Maintain countdowns to planned meet ups

[image: Maintaining a long distance relationship with your girlfriend]

A big part of maintaining a long distance relationship is having planned meet ups as often as is possible for the both of you.

This may be once every two weeks, month, two months or even 6 months, but it's important to lock in some dates that you can both look forward to.

For example: If you're planning to meet up 6 months from now, make sure that both of you know the date so you can drop it into conversation sometimes when you talk or text.

You might say, “Only 4 months to go” or ask her, “Do you know how many weeks there are left before we meet up?” and have it as something that you’re both counting down to and looking forward to.

You can also add in some sexual flirting and say something like, “Only 4 more weeks until I can see your beautiful smile and give you a spank on the ass.”

This helps to maintain a feeling of being together in an intimate relationship that is still alive, rather than feeling as though you used to be together as a couple and are now just hanging onto a relationship that without any definite plans to see each other on specific dates.

Both of you need to feel as though, despite being apart for short or long periods of time, you do still get to be together at times and in future, you will be together in the same house and living the life of a close, loving, committed couple.

4. Set rules about what you will and won’t accept while apart

[image: Maintaining a long distance relationship]

This is a tricky one to accomplish with a woman because no woman wants to feel as though she is being controlled by an insecure man.

Yet, at the same time, to properly maintain a faithful, committed long distance relationship, you do need to set some ground rules about what is and isn’t acceptable while you are apart.

For example: She’s most-likely going to make some new friends while away (e.g. at work, university, while travelling, etc) and they may want her to sometimes join them for a drink or party at a bar or club.

Some women will say that they’re not interested in doing that while away from their boyfriend, fianc   or husband and won’t ever go out partying without him.

However, most women will want to at least attend some of the events so they aren’t being anti-social and are giving themselves the best opportunity to build friendships or fit in with co-workers.

In that case, it’s important to let her know that if she does attend a few outings, she should only attend the things that she absolutely has to as a show of respect and commitment to you.

Tell her that if she wants to go out and party a lot, then it’s going to best for you and her to simply break up because you’re not going to want to sit around wondering if she’s going to get drunk and make a mistake.

Let her know that if a man and a woman are committed to each other and they want to be with each other for life, they’re not going to be going out and getting tipsy or drunk with people on a regular basis.

How she responds to that will tell you what type of woman she really is and how committed to you is. If she is serious about you and does want to stay with you for life, she will be happy to agree to that, but if she is the sort of woman who will potentially cheat if she gets drunk, then she’s going to be a bit annoyed by it.

Regardless of how she reacts, you need to put those ground rules in place and let her know what you will and won’t accept.

From then on, you need to give her your full trust and believe her when she tells you that she is sticking to your agreement.

If you are constantly asking her about it, you're going to come across as insecure and needy, which is going to turn her off and make her want to find a new guy that she can actually feel proper respect and attraction for.

So, it's a fine line that you need to walk when maintaining a long distance relationship.

Essentially though, it's about being the sort of man that she wants to stick with and then continuing to push forward in your life while she is away.

In most cases, that will ensure she wants to stay faithful to you and that she will feel excited to see you at the planned meet ups that you have agreed on with her ahead of time.

How to Keep Your Relationship Strong

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

To keep your relationship strong, you need to:

1. Deepen the love, respect and attraction that you both feel for each other over time.

[image: Deepen the love, respect and attraction]

Feeling love, respect and attraction for each other at the start of a relationship is easy because both of you are feeling a lot of lust and it is exciting to be with someone new.

Both men and women tend to be on their best behavior at the start of a relationship because they want to impress the other person and keep the excitement and good feelings going.

However, that initial stage of being really excited to be with someone new eventually starts to calm down and needs to be replaced with deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for other reasons.

For example: A woman will feel deeper respect, attraction and love for a man if he has purpose in life and is going after his biggest ambitions and dreams, while also continuing to treat her well, make her feel loved and appreciated.

On the other hand, a woman will lose feelings of respect, attraction and love for a guy if he chooses to hide from his true potential as a man behind her and the relationship and gives her way too much of his time and attention, to the point where she begins to feel suffocated by the relationship.

2. Continue to work towards mutually exciting and rewarding goals.

[image: Mutually enjoyable goals]

When I help phone coaching clients with relationship issues, a common problem that I come across is how a couple will achieve certain goals together (e.g. getting married, buying a house, having children) and then start to feel lost and confused about the remainder of their life story.

This is often referred to as a mid life crisis, but it's also something that can happen later in life or even a few years into a young relationship.

Essentially, the couple begins to feel as though they are drifting apart and are no longer fully relevant or necessary to each other, because there isn't much left to do together other than wait around to get old and then die.

One person may begin to develop goals and ambitions that are completely different to the other (e.g. the woman wants to travel the world, while the man wants to stay at home and rest), so they might start to feel as though staying together as a couple no longer suits them.

So, a big part of how to keep your relationship strong is to ensure that you have mutually exciting and rewarding goals that you're working towards in the future.

Initially, a couple's mutually exciting and rewarding goals might be something like moving in together, getting engaged and married, buying a house together, having children and going on holidays with their new family.

Some couples will then be happy to just relax and enjoy their later years of life, staying focused on their children and helping them to achieve things and enjoy a good life.

Yet, in today's world where we have so many options of things to do, many couples tend to feel bored about the idea of just waiting around to die after they have achieved their initial goals together.

So, if you and your woman are feeling bored about where your life is heading together as a couple, you need to sit down and talk about what your dream future scenario together would be.

You and her may decide that you want to be in business together, or you want to leave the city life to go and live on a farm and grow your own food.

You might decide that you want to travel the world and party without ever having children, or travel around your home country with your children.

Once you decide on what you both feel are exciting and rewarding long term goals, you need to start working towards those goals together.

It can't be something that you are only excited about or that she is only interested in; it has to be exciting and rewarding for the both of you.

There are so many different things that you can do in life and aim towards as a couple, so there is always going to be something that both of you will enjoy working towards together as a couple.

3. Stay faithful to each other, rather than screwing up your relationship because of FOMO

FOMO (noun): Fear of missing out. A feeling of regret that participating in one activity prevents you from participating in another activity, which might be more enjoyable or rewarding.

FOMO is a slang acronym that stands for Fear of Missing Out, which a lot of modern people suffer from.

For example: A guy might get into a relationship with a beautiful woman and after a few years, he may start to feel bored of having sex with her and want to hook up with other women.

He might find himself looking at a lot of porn and feel as though he's not getting the same kind of excitement from his sex life as he experiences with what he sees in porn.

If he begins to FOMO, he might begin to want to cheat on his woman or leave her and start a new relationship with another woman, so he can feel the excitement of having sex with someone new again.

Likewise, a woman might watch a lot of TV drama shows and romantic Hollywood movies and feel as though her relationship and love isn't as complicated and passionate as what she is seeing on the screen.

She might also listen to a lot of female pop songs and hear lyrics about how the woman broke up with a guy and is now enjoying her single life or has a new man who is much better than her ex.

She might then begin to FOMO and consider cheating on her man or leaving him so she can experience the drama of breaking up and the excitement of getting with someone new.

When people are bombarded with the mixed messages from the media, they can often begin to suffer from FOMO and begin to wonder whether it is a wise decision to remain faithful to just one person for life.

So, part of how to keep your relationship strong is for both of you to realize that there are millions of couples out there who remain happy and excited to be in love for just one person for life.

It is possible to do that, but you must have the right mindset and not get sucked into modern feelings of FOMO based on what you see other experiencing in relationships.

What Stage is Your Relationship at Today?

Making your relationship stronger also involves being able to go from one stage to the next, rather than getting stuck at earlier stages or losing interest each other after the first few months or years of being together.

Which stage is your relationship at now?

1. The head-over-heels stage

[image: Head over heels stage]

In this stage of a relationship, you can't get enough of each other and even just thinking about the other person releases a potent mixture of feel-good hormones and brain chemicals.

If your relationship is in this stage, your girlfriend may seem perfect for you in every way. If you notice any flaws in her, you will see them as unimportant and something that you are willing to put up with because you feel so good when you are with her.

If everything is going well, you will feel as though you could last forever.

She may even say things to you like, "I want us to grow old together" or "I want to be with your forever," but that is simply the result of her brain chemicals and activated hormones.

That initial feeling will not last if you don't deepen her love, respect and attraction for you over time.

I have lost count of the amount of phone coaching clients I've helped to get an ex back, where the guy has explained to me that she used to say how in love she was with him and that she wanted to be with him forever.

Remember: What you feel in the first few months is a nice gift from nature to get you and her to have sex and hopefully make some babies. It doesn't mean that you and her will be in love forever.

What keeps a relationship strong is what I outlined earlier in the article and that I go into more detail on in my program, Make Her Love You For Life

2. The power struggle stage

The head-over-heels stage can last anywhere from a couple of months to a couple of years, but statistics show that the majority of first marriages break down as a couple move from the head-over-heels stage (otherwise known as the honeymoon stage) into a power struggle stage.

The struggle for power happens when one or both parties begins trying to change the other, so they can get the person they really want or the relationship they really want.

The couples who last are those who are willing to adapt and change together over time, while couples who are unwilling to change or are asking for too much change eventually begin to fight and fall apart.

Personally speaking, both my wife and I have made a lot of changes to how we approach the relationship. We didn't do that overnight, but over the course of the last 3 years.

That is how it should be done, rather than expecting that everything changes dramatically overnight. Knowing that the other person is patiently loving you and sticking by you (rather than threatening to break up with you if you don't change immediately) allows you to have the time to change at your own pace.

Of course, if you take too long to make changes and fix any problems, then it's only natural that other person will feel upset or taken for granted, so you do need to fix problems and make changes at an acceptable pace.

3. The reaching stability stage

Eventually, you will both reach a point where the right power balance is achieved in the relationship and you're both getting what you really want from each other and the relationship.

Over time, more changes will need to be made as you encounter new challenges in life or attempt to achieve new and bigger goals together, but with the foundation of patient, mutually respectful love in place, you will be able to accomplish anything together as a couple.

If you've reached this stage of a relationship, you will be no longer trying to change each other and it is at this stage that a genuinely strong relationship begins to develop and grow.

4. The true commitment stage

[image: Truly committed]

Couples in a truly committed relationship have moved from feeling infatuated to being deeply in love with other for reasons other than just initial feelings of intense love.

In this stage of a relationship, flaws and differences no longer cause power struggles as they are simply accepted as being part of what makes the person who they are.

If your relationship is in this stage, you will have a shared vision of your future together as a couple and you will also have a deep respect and appreciate for each other as individuals.

How Strong is Your Relationship?

If you are worried about your relationship falling apart over time, I would recommend that you at learn more about how you can deepen your woman's attraction for you.

Most of her attraction for you is based on how you think, behave, feel and take action in life and around her.

Watch this for some examples of where guys go wrong and what you should do instead...

If you make your woman feel a lot of attraction for you based on who you are as a man and how you treat her, she will love you and want to stay with you regardless of whether you put on a few kilos/pounds, or if no longer have the young, strong body that you did when you were young.

Getting Past the Roadblocks That Lead to True Love and Commitment

All relationships go through stages and a couple either gets to the higher stages, or they peak at an early and then begin to fall apart because they either aren't ready for the higher stages or don't have the relationship skills to get there.

In the video below, I explain how I went from telling my girlfriend that she could be with me on the condition that I would never get married or have children, to me eventually accepting her request to marry me.

Update: Since posting this video, my girlfriend and I have gotten married and our relationship continues to be better every day. Even though it was amazing at the start, it just keeps getting better.

As you will discover from the video above, I wasn't ready for the higher stages of commitment in a relationship when I first met her, but I was willing to do something that is a very important part of how to keep your relationship strong...

Adapt.

Both her and I have made many changes to the way we think, behave, feel and take action in life because we are both willing to adapt to each other.

In relationships that fall apart, it's usually because one or both parties aren't willing to adapt their approach to the unique dynamic of the relationship. Rather than compromising, changing or adapting, one or both parties will constantly clash and end up getting into arguments over who is right.

Yet, a big part of how to keep your relationship strong is to realize that you need to adapt to each other's unique personality to allow the relationship to grow and mature over time.

If you expect her to adapt and change to you, but you're not willing to make any adjustments, then she will eventually get tired of giving way too much in the relationship and begin to resent you.

In my case, I was happy to adapt to her wants and needs because she has always been happy and willing to do that for me. As a result, our relationship just gets stronger and stronger by the day.

Is My Girlfriend Cheating? 6 Mistakes to Avoid if You Think She is

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Both men and women are good at hiding any signs of cheating, so it's not always easy to know for sure whether your girlfriend is cheating or not.

For example: If you have ever cheated on a girlfriend in the past, you would know that it was pretty easy for you to meet up with your girlfriend hours or days later and act completely normal and natural around her like nothing had happened.

So, unless you have really obvious signs that she is cheating (e.g. you see texts in her phone where she is arranging to meet up with a guy that she's been flirting with, a friend tells you that she was holding hands with another guy, etc), it's usually very hard to tell for sure.

Where Guys Go Wrong When They Suspect a Girlfriend of Cheating

[image: Where guys go wrong when they suspect that their girlfriend is cheating]

When a guy asks, “Is my girlfriend cheating?” he usually already thinks she is, so he will become insecure and begin to change his behavior, attitude and communication style towards her as a result.

For example...

1. He overreacts to the differences in her behavior and treatment towards him.

[image: Over-reacting to suspicion of cheating]

If she has always been very affectionate and attentive in the past and suddenly begins to give him less of that, he might see it as a sign that his girlfriend is interested in another guy or possibly even cheating on him already.

At that point, he might begin to feel insecure and then ask her if she is still in love with him, is thinking about leaving him, is interested in another guy or if she would ever cheat on him.

So, how can a guy avoid overreacting at times like this?

What a guy needs to understand is that after the initial excitement of starting a relationship, having sex and getting to know each other better, most women will pull back some of their interest and affection to test a guy's confidence and emotional stability.

A woman wants to be able to see that her boyfriend is not going to become insecure, jealous and controlling if she doesn't give him 100% of her focus, attention and affection all the time.

Women instinctively know that they are going to be much safer with a guy who is emotionally stable, happy and secure in himself with or without a woman's constant reassurance.

However, it's important not to just ignore your girlfriend's sudden lack of interest.

Sometimes a woman's interest in her boyfriend will change because she actually is cheating or is going to cheat soon with a guy that she has been flirting with.

After all, cheating is pretty common in relationships. Depending on the study, anywhere from 50-60% of women admit to cheating on their boyfriend or husband.

So, if you are in the position where you're asking, "Is my girlfriend cheating?" because your gut instinct is telling you that she is, then you need to do something about it.

Ask her in a relaxed, emotionally stable manner (i.e. don't get crazy about it), "Hey â□□ this is a tough question to ask anybody and I want you to feel safe to be honest with me. I want to know â□□ are you actually cheating on me? If so, I will accept it and we will break up, so please just be honest with me. If you have cheated, you are free to leave me and go and be with the other guy. I will simply have to move on."

Saying it in that way will ensure that you have the highest chance of getting her to admit to it.

Most people (not just women) don't feel good about admitting to cheating, so if she feels as though you're going to get angry (and possibly even violent) if she admits to cheating, she will most-likely deny it and then slowly try to break up with you.

So, be calm and make her feel safe to tell you. If it turns out that she has cheated, then you can decide to forgive her and start from a clean slate, or dump her and find yourself a new woman.

2. He begins to constantly call and text her to ensure that he knows where she is and what she's doing at all times.

If a guy is worried about being cheated on by his girlfriend, he might also begin to constantly call her, text her and track her whereabouts.

It's pretty obvious that if a boyfriend is treating his girlfriend in this way, it will not deepen her love, respect and attraction for him. Yet, when a guy is feeling insecure about the idea of being cheated on, he often can't stop himself from doing it.

If you've been falling into the trap of becoming a controlling, jealous boyfriend, you need to force yourself to relax and just give her your trust from now on.

In a relationship with a woman, you can never really trust her 100% that she will be faithful, loyal and committed for life because she's a human being, not a robot.

Human beings can change the way they feel and even if a woman says, "I do" on her wedding day, it doesn't mean that she can't change her mind about that later on.

It sucks, but that's how human relationships work. There is no guarantee unless you make the relationship work by deepening her feelings of respect, attraction and love over time.

When it comes to trust, you have to bravely give her 100% of your trust in her and let her take care of it. She might betray your trust one day, but she might also be one of the women who remain faithful, loyal and committed for life.

To make a relationship work, you have to give the woman 100% of your trust and just let her be in control of maintaining it. It's the only way to allow the relationship to mature and develop over time.

If you don't give her your trust, you will simply turn her off because you will be acting insecure, jealous, controlling and being too possessive of her.

As a man, you need to be the more emotionally courageous one in a relationship. You've got to be willing to put your trust on the line and let the relationship unfold naturally.

3. He stops trying to achieve anything else in life and puts his entire focus on her.

[image: How to tell if my girlfriend is cheating]

Guys in this situation may begin to make mistakes at work (or at university) and get into trouble with their manager or boss, call in sick for work, stop hanging out with friends and essentially turn into an obsessed boyfriend who feels as though his life is falling apart because his girlfriend may be cheating.

It's understandable that a guy will feel shocked and disappointed by the possibility of his girlfriend cheating.

I know that all too well because it happened to me many years ago, which eventually lead me to fix my issues with women and become the sort of guy that woman would never want to cheat on or leave.

That then lead me to create The Modern Man and here I am today, typing up my 657th article for this site to help you and guys like you.

Based on my personal experience of being cheated on and then dumped by a woman many years ago, I can understand that if you are worried about being cheated on by your girlfriend, you might allow that fear to take up a lot of your time and attention.

However, being insecure, worrying and obsessing over her is not going to achieve anything positive.

So, what should you do instead?

What you need to do is make sure that you continue to become a bigger and better man in life, by rising up to reach for your true potential as a man.

That way, your girlfriend can feel increasingly proud to be your woman. She can look up to you and respect you as her man who is becoming a bigger and better man in life, because you are rising through the levels of life and reaching for your true potential.

You are not one of those lost, insecure guys who hide from their true potential as a man behind a relationship with a woman.

You are constantly striving to make progress on your mission to achieve your biggest ambitions in life because you're a brave, courageous, masculine man that a woman would never want to cheat on or leave.

4. He tries to make her feel guilty for causing him feel so insecure and desperate.

[image: Blaming his girlfriend for making him feel insecure]

Regardless of whether a woman is at fault, she doesn't want to find herself in a situation where her boyfriend is blaming her for his insecurity, desperation, neediness and clinginess.

What a woman wants to see is that her man remains emotionally strong, secure and mature no matter what challenges life throws at him.

Yes, it's tough to be that strong at times, but you will get used to it the more that you live your life.

Part of what women refer to as being a real man, is when a guy has the emotional strength and maturity to remain in control of his emotions and keep moving forward in life, no matter how challenging things get.

So, any attempts to try to make your girlfriend feel guilty for causing you to feel insecure or upset, will not make her change her behavior or feel any more respect, love and attraction for you.

In fact, it's just going to make her lose more respect, attraction and love for you than she already has. It may also make the idea of cheating on you or leaving you seem like an increasingly good idea to her.

5. He tells her that she can't have any male friends or talk to any other guys unless he is there.

When a guy is inexperienced with relationships, he will often make the mistake of thinking that he owns his girlfriend and can tell her what she can and cannot do.

Yet, as he gains experience with relationships, he may one day come to realize the truth that a relationship is a decision by two individuals to be together.

Both he and the woman were individuals before they met, they are individuals when in a relationship and they will continue to be completely separate individuals if the relationship breaks up.

So, if a guy wants a woman (a human being with free will, just like he has) to stay in a relationship with him, he needs to be the sort of guy that she will want to stay with for life.

After all, she can decide to be with him or leave the relationship to find herself a new guy.

It may annoy you that women could do such a thing, but that's how human relationships work.

People only stay connected with people who are relevant and beneficial in their life or are a part of their long term goals.

Everyone else is pretty much ignored and in the case of a boyfriend/girlfriend relationship, a woman will simply dump a guy and move on with her life if she wants to because, after all, she is an individual who is trying to live a happy, safe, enjoyable life.

This is confusing for a lot of guys, especially when their girlfriend has said things like, "I want to stay with you forever" or "I promise that I will never leave you" or "I want us to grow old together."

Yet, that's just what women say when they are in love. If a guy ruins her feelings of respect and attraction for him (e.g. by being controlling, insecure, clingy, etc), she can just as easily fall out of love and change her mind about wanting to be with him for life.

So, what should you do if your girlfriend has male friends and you suspect that she is cheating or going to cheat?

Be the sort of man that makes other guys look less attractive in comparison (e.g. be more confident, make progress towards achieving your biggest ambitions in life, make her feel feminine in comparison to your masculine way of being, etc).

What you need to realize is that you have a lot of direct control over how much or little attraction your girlfriend feels for you.

For example: If a boyfriend is being jealous, controlling, clingy and needy, he will be actively making his girlfriend lose respect for him and feel less attracted to him as a result.

However, if a boyfriend has the emotional maturity to remain confident, have high self-esteem and continue to push forward in life, his girlfriend will naturally respect him and feel attracted to him.

6. He begins spying on her emails, texts or social media messages.

Sometimes, a boyfriend will have access to his girlfriend's e-mails, Facebook or other social media account because he knows the password or can look at her phone or use her computer when she's not around.

Spying on his girlfriend's e-mails, texts or social media messages will often make a jealous, insecure boyfriend feel shocked at how his girlfriend is talking to other guys (e.g. co-workers, fellow students at university, or even past boyfriends or lovers).

Here's the thing though...

Most guys in this world are afraid to approach and talk to women in person, so they hide behind texts, e-mails and social media messages and attempt to get women to like them that way.

Even if a woman already has a boyfriend, fianc   or husband, she will always get messages from random guys from her past, guys that she knows from work or random guys that she has never met.

If your girlfriend is committed to you and has no plans of cheating on you or dumping you, then she will naturally ignore most message and only reply to some every now and then.

However, if you go and look through them, you might be shocked if she is having a fun conversation with a random guy from work, who clearly seems to be flirting with her.

At that point, you might feel annoyed and want to confront her about it, but it really isn't the best approach to use.

What you should say (in a relaxed, emotionally stable manner) is that you had a suspicion that she might be cheating on you or about to cheat, so you had a look at some messages on her phone or Facebook.

You can then say, "I'm disappointed that you've been doing that. At this point, you're either going to apologize to me and promise me that you'll never do that again, or we are going to break up now and part ways."

As long as you are being the more mature, emotionally stable one, she will respect your approach and feel guilty for having done it.

Stopping Her From Cheating

The best approach to use that will prevent your girlfriend from wanting to cheat is to be the sort of man who she can be proud of being with.

You've got to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time, rather than thinking that she's going to stick around forever because things felt good at the start.

To keep a relationship together in today's world, you literally have to be the sort of guy that a woman really wants to stay with.

If you don't approach it in that way, she will naturally get bored and may break up with you, cheat on you behind your back or treat you so badly that you eventually break up with her.

So, if you're worried about being cheated on your girlfriend, the best way to prevent it or stop it from happening again is to become and be the sort of man that she really wants to be with.

My Girlfriend Looks at Other Guys

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend looks at other guys, you have to make sure that you don't turn it into a bigger problem than it actually is.

She might just be looking to test your confidence, or she might be looking because she feels some fleeting attraction for those guys, just like you feel fleeting attraction for random women you see.

Either way, you have to maintain your confidence, otherwise you will cause her to either cheat on you or break up with you.

Watch this video for more info...

All women are going to look at other men, but it's how you react to it that matters the most.

Everyone is Different

If you're saying, "My girlfriend looks at other guys," you're probably like a lot of guys who have a very set idea about what a relationship should be like.

However, the truth is, we are all different and we all want different things when it comes to relationships.

For example: Some guys want to get married to one woman for life.

Others want to stay with one woman for life without getting married.

Then there are those who want to have many relationships with many women throughout their life, and finally there are even those who aren't sure what they want.

There's no right or wrong when it comes to what people want from a relationship.

Everyone is different and everyone wants different things, and this is as true for women as it is for men.

However, unlike in the past where women were forced to get married at a very young age to a man picked out for them by their father or guardian, and regardless of whether the guy was cruel, lazy or a bad husband, she was stuck with him for life.

Today, women can choose who they marry and if the guy doesn't live up to her expectations and make her feel the way she wants to feel in the relationship, she will easily dump him for someone else.

That being said, you and your girlfriend may have fallen madly in love with each other, but that doesn't automatically mean that either of you is suddenly going to become immune to the rest of the world, i.e. other men and women.

She Will Feel Attraction For Other Guys. That is Normal

Your girlfriend is going to look at other guys. Your girlfriend is even going to feel attraction for other guys. That in itself is not a terrible thing.

After all, if you're totally honest with yourself, even you feel attraction towards other women

(and maybe you even look at porn). However, that doesn't mean that you would cheat on your girlfriend and it doesn't mean that your girlfriend would cheat on you. In fact, attraction is normal and healthy.

But, if you're still asking, Should I be worried when my girlfriend looks at other guys? something is clearly making you feel uncomfortable.

The question is: Is she giving you other reasons to question her loyalty to you, or are you simply feeling jealous and insecure?

Just because your girlfriend is looking at other guys, it doesn't have to mean anything more than the fact that she's a healthy, hot-blooded woman.

However, if her looking includes any of the following warning signs, it could mean that she's losing interest in being in a relationship with you and is looking for another guy.

1. Does she insist on going out without you?

It's normal and healthy for a man and a woman in a relationship to have interests and friends apart from each other.

You don't want to be living in each other's pockets, so if your girlfriend goes out occasionally to a girlfriend's house, or to a coffee shop, etc., there's nothing wrong with that. However, if your girlfriend insists on going out alone, especially to clubs, bars or parties, and especially with other single women, her looking at other guys is not as innocent as she may be pretending.

When a woman is in love, going out without her guy doesn't appeal to her.

If your girlfriend loves and respects you, she might look at other guys, but her main focus will be you and she will have little interest in going out without you.

2. Does she blatantly flirt with other guys in front of you?

Looking at other guys is one thing, but flirting in front of you is a completely different thing.

When a woman flirts with other guys in front of her boyfriend, it's her way of crying out for help.

She's clearly saying to her guy, You're not making me feel the way I want to feel when I'm with you. Either you shape up or, as you can see, I can easily get myself another guy who WILL make me feel like I want to feel.

If your girlfriend is looking at AND flirting with other guys, she's clearly trying to get your attention.

The question is: Are you going to sit around saying, My girlfriend looks at other guys and feeling like it's all out of your control, or are you going to realize that you're no longer making her feel respect, love and attraction for you, and fix that?

3. Does she avoid having sex, or being affectionate with you as much as possible?

Being intimate is the sign of a healthy relationship. Even if you and your girlfriend aren't having sex, there must at least be a level of intimacy. This includes kissing, holding hands and touching.

However, if every time you try to touch or kiss your girlfriend she makes an excuse like, Not now, you'll ruin my lipstick or Stop. I'm not in the mood she's probably pulling away from the relationship and her looking at other guys is her way of simply seeing what type of guys might be available to her as a replacement.

4. Does she make excuses not to see you?

When a woman is in love, she will do whatever it takes to make herself available for the man she loves, because being around him makes her feel good about herself.

Of course, we all get busy sometimes.

Not being able to see you because she's studying for important exams, or has a huge project at work, is understandable.

Yet, if your girlfriend is making excuses not to see you ALL the time, you need to pay attention to the warning bells.

Is There Something About Your Behavior That is Making Your Girlfriend Look at Other Guys?

[image: What is causing her to look at other guys?]

It is perfectly okay for your girlfriend to want to look at other guys, as long as she's giving you the love and respect you deserve.

Yet, if she's saying and doing other things that are making you question her loyalty to you, then this indicates a more serious problem with your relationship.

It means that she is now looking for excitement and fun in her life that she is not getting from you.

Right now your natural reaction might be to get angry, but ask yourself, “Is there something about my behavior that is causing my girlfriend to lose love, respect and attraction for me?”

For example:

- Are you giving her what she needs?
- Are you making her feel sexy and feminine?
- Are you taking her for granted in the relationship?
- Are you letting her wear the pants in the relationship?
- Does she respect you and see you as the kind of man she wants to spend her life with?
- Are you letting your jealousy and insecurity come between you?
- Do you secretly believe she's too good for you?
- Do you believe you got “lucky” when she agreed to go out with you?
- Are you being clingy and needy?

By answering these questions honestly, you can pinpoint any problems in your relationship and then you can fix them before it's too late.

Make Her Feel the Way She Wants to Feel and She Will Lose Interest in Other Guys

What you need to understand, is that the romantic love between a man and a woman is not unconditional and there are no guarantees that it will last.

It is your job as the man, to maintain and grow the respect and attraction your girlfriend feels for you, to ensure that the love between you will deepen over time.

Rather than waste time saying, “My girlfriend looks at other guys” and feeling like your relationship is spinning out of control, you can learn how to make your girlfriend fall deeper and deeper in love with you.

You can learn how to make her feel increasingly more attracted to you sexually and have a deep and loving respect for you as a man. Doesn't this sound like something you would rather have happen to you than worrying about her looking at other guys?

My Girlfriend Wants to Have a Girls Night Out

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're asking, Should I be worried that my girlfriend wants to have a girls night out? you need to understand that the answer is not a simple yes or no.

Every relationship is different, and every woman is different.

Women today are a lot more confident and independent than ever before, and they don't have to live their lives based on what their man will allow them to do.

The modern woman isn't dependent on a man to protect her, provide for her or entertain her, which means she can choose to do whatever she wants, like have interests, hobbies and even the occasional girls night out, without having to ask her man for permission or approval.

That being said, when a woman is in a loving relationship with a guy, she will naturally take his feelings into consideration before she does something without him. She will generally prefer to spend most of her time with him and doing things together. However, that's not to say that she'll want to live in his pocket either.

In a relationship it's normal and healthy for each person to have their own interests, hobbies and friends.

So, should you be concerned if your girlfriend wants to have a girls night out?

It depends!

Are You Letting Your Insecurities Come Between You?

In a relationship, you have to give the other person your full trust and let them take care of it.

A person can never fully trust another human being, but they just have to give their trust to others to make their relationships and society function. Without trust, a relationship simply will not function harmoniously and it will eventually fall apart.

At the same time, a lack of trust in a relationship breeds insecurity, anger and frustration and it ruins the chance for the love between a guy and his girlfriend (or fiancée or wife) to grow and mature.

If right now you're saying, My girlfriend wants to have a girls night out, and it's something that's really bothering you, you have to take a deeper look at yourself and your relationship.

For example, if your girlfriend wants to have a girls night out because she's going to a girls only birthday party, to a friend's wedding shower, why are you feeling so upset and insecure about it?

Quite often, guys who feel that they got lucky when they scored with their girlfriend feel threatened when she wants to have interests outside of the relationship. This is often because he lacks the confidence in himself and in his ability to get another (even better) girlfriend than her, if she decides she wants to break up with him.

Here are some common mistakes that guys make when they lack confidence in themselves, which actually end up ruining their relationship and causing a break up.

Mistake #1: â€œYouâ€™re my first, my last, my everythingâ€!

Guys who have little or no experience with women, often get their â€œromanticâ€ advice from the movies, TV, or songs. Women also give men â€œmixed signalsâ€ because theyâ€™ll often say, â€œOh wow! Listen to the lyrics of that song; I wish I could meet a guy who would say Iâ€™m his first, his last and his everything!â€

However, in real life, although a woman will genuinely appreciate it when her man gives her his attention, affection and love, she doesnâ€™t appreciate it if he goes overboard, becomes clingy and needy and ends up making her the only focus in his life.

When a guy stops having a life outside of his relationship with his girlfriend, (i.e. gives up his friends, interests or hobbies) and instead spends every spare minute living for her â€œwhether thatâ€™s actually spending his time being with her, or doing things to please her, like running errands for her, doing shopping or cooking or cleaning for her, helping her study, etc., â€œrather than think to herself, â€œWow! What a cool guy! Iâ€™m so lucky to have him,â€ a woman will feel suffocated.

Generally speaking, women today are repelled by needy, clingy men. Why? Women are attracted to the strength in men and repelled by weakness.

A guy who uses his girlfriend as an excuse to hide from his true potential in life doesnâ€™t make her feel special. Instead she feels like she has to â€œmotherâ€ him and guide him and hold his hand because he canâ€™t face his fears (i.e. life) by himself.

Ask yourself, â€œWhy does it bother me that my girlfriend wants to have a girls night out?â€

Could it be that youâ€™re using your relationship to hide from life? Are you afraid to become a bigger and better man and just want to hide from the world behind her and a relationship? Do you feel insecure about her attraction for you as a man?

Consider that this behavior could be pushing your girlfriend away. Even if sheâ€™s the most loving, loyal and trustworthy woman, if you behave this way every time she attempts to have some â€œaloneâ€ time, you WILL end up pushing her away.

Mistake #2: â€œDo you love me?â€

Just as itâ€™s a big mistake for a guy to make his girlfriend the center of his world, it is equally unwise to expect her to give up her interests, friends, ambitions and social lifestyle for him.

Guys who make this mistake often allow their insecurity to get in the way of their relationship because they end up becoming overly-protective and jealous of their girlfriends.

Â A guy like this lacks confidence in himself, he lives in constant fear that if he lets his girlfriend out of his sight, even for a moment, she will suddenly realize that she can do much better than him and she will dump him.

This is why a guy like this will often ask his girlfriend, â€œDo you love me as much as I love you?â€ or â€œYou know I would never be able to live without you, donâ€™t you?â€ or â€œI feel physically sick when Iâ€™m apart from you. Why would you want to do that to me?â€

Although a woman will feel respect and attraction for a man who shows that he cares for her and wants to be around her, she doesnâ€™t need him to focus on her 24/7.

If you always need to be around your girlfriend, to the point where you expect her to give up her life for you, she will feel that youâ€™re mentally and emotionally weak and that she has to take care of you emotionally, which is a huge turn off for women.

You must understand that even though you love your girlfriend, you don't own her. You can't control what she does because that will only make her lose respect, love and attraction for you.

Are There Deeper Problems in the Relationship?

It's perfectly normal for your girlfriend to want to have a girls night out occasionally. In fact, you should encourage her to do this because if you're the kind of man who knows how to build and maintain the attraction between you, when she goes out without you she will realize how lucky she is to have you in her life.

However, if your girlfriend wants to have a girls night out ALL the time, then there could be a deeper reason.

Ask yourself:

- Are you making her feel the way that she really wants to feel when she's with you (e.g. attracted to you, respectful towards you, proud to be your girlfriend)?
- Are you growing and maintaining the love, respect and attraction between you and her?
- Are you allowing your insecurities (like clinginess, neediness, jealousy, etc.) to come between you?

When a woman is happy in her relationship she will not look outside of the relationship for fun and excitement. Even if your girlfriend isn't looking for a replacement guy right now, if you don't fix your issues and improve the behaviors that are turning her off, she WILL eventually look for another guy.

Be the Best Man You Can Be

It's up to you to figure out if, right now, there's a serious problem in your relationship, or if you're allowing your insecurities to cause you to make a big deal out of something normal.

Rather than sit around saying, "My girlfriend wants to have a girls night out," and letting it bother you, you need to get clear on what things you and your girlfriend can go to together and alone and why.

Unless there's a good reason why you don't trust her, in which case you should ask yourself, "Why am I still dating a woman that I don't trust?" you should give your girlfriend your trust and let her enjoy herself with her girlfriends once in a while.

Not only will this make her respect and love you more, she'll also feel lucky to have you as her boyfriend.

What Causes a Woman to Fall in Love With a Man?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

There are two main things that cause a woman to fall in love with a man, and those two things are: Respect and attraction.

Of course there are many other things as well, but when a man displays the behaviors and personality traits that women feel naturally attracted to (.g. confidence, drive and ambition, masculinity, emotional strength), he will be able to trigger a woman's feelings of sexual desire for him.

From there her feelings of respect for him will grow and she will then begin to fall in love with him.

It's the man's responsibility to then keep nurturing and growing those feelings of respect and attraction in her over time, so that her love for him will also get stronger and deeper over time. If he does that, the relationship will almost always last a lifetime.

How to Get a Woman to Fall in Love With You: 3 Mistakes to Avoid Making

It's actually quite easy to make a woman fall in love with you and want to be in a relationship with you; even if right now she is behaving (or even saying) she's not interested in you.

However, you have to bear in mind that to get a woman to fall in love with you, you first have to trigger her feelings of sexual attraction for you. Attraction comes first and then everything else will follow quite naturally.

So, if you want to get a woman to fall in love with you whether it's a woman you've just met, someone you know from work, or at university, or even a friend that you want to turn into a girlfriend realize that you can, but not if you make any of these common mistakes that guys make.

1. Thinking that he has to be tall, dark and handsome to get her love.

Many guys go through life believing that the reason they can't get a woman to fall in love with them, is because they don't fit into some ideal package of physical attraction.

For example: A guy might be very attracted to, and even secretly in love with, a woman he works with, or goes to university with. However, because he knows that men are mostly attracted to women because of their physical appearance, he assumes that women are attracted to men for the same reasons.

So, instead of approaching her and attracting her with his confidence and masculinity, he makes excuses like, "Women don't fall in love with guys like me?" or, "Women are only attracted to good looking guys, so I don't stand a chance with her, so why should I even bother?"

Yes, there are some women in the world who will only date and marry good looking guys, but the majority of women are more interested in the other qualities that a man has, than just his looks.

If this wasn't true, most men in the world would be unloved and single, because most men in the world are not male model look-alikes.

Most guys have â€œflaws,â€œ like being bald, short, tall, fat, thin, or have big ears or a big nose, or some other weird characteristic, but if you look around you the next time you are out in a public place, you will see that these â€œflawedâ€œ guys are with attractive women who clearly love them. Why?

These guys have learned that what causes a woman to fall in love with a man is his ability to make her feel attracted to him for other reasons (e.g. he can make her laugh, he can make her feel girly and feminine in his presence, etc.) besides his looks.

If you want to get a woman to fall in love with you, donâ€™t get hung up about your looks. In almost all cases, if your personality and the way you interact with her makes a woman feel attracted to you, and makes her feel the types of emotions that she wants to feel when sheâ€™s with a man, she will overlook the fact that you donâ€™t look like a male model.

2. Getting stuck in the â€œfriendâ€œ zone.

If you want to get a woman to fall in love with you and see you as someone she wants to have sex and a relationship with, you have to make her feel attracted to you first.

A common mistake that a guy can make, is that when he is secretly in love with a woman (whether sheâ€™s someone heâ€™s acquainted with, or whether sheâ€™s a good friend), he assumes that by hanging around her and pretending to be her â€œgood friendâ€œ all the time, she will eventually feel the same way about him too.

Heâ€™s hoping that by being really nice around her, and by not showing his sexual attraction for her, she will see him as being different from all the other guys that hit on her, and she will fall in love with him because he is not being disrespectful and has â€œgoodâ€œ intentions towards her.

However, there is a big difference between a woman really liking you as a friend and her really wanting to have sex with you and wanting to be in a relationship with you.

When a woman likes a guy as a friend, it might be because heâ€™s sweet, reliable, and someone she likes to talk to and hang out with without the pressure of having to dress in a sexy dress, or wear makeup, because in her mind she doesnâ€™t have to impress him.

On the other hand, when sheâ€™s around a guy she wants to have sex with and be in a loving, committed relationship with, she will do whatever it takes to be more attractive to him, because he is actively triggering her feelings of sexual attraction for him.

So, if you want a woman to stop seeing you as a friend and start seeing you as a man she wants to have sex with and be in a relationship with, you have to stop pretending to be her friend, and actively start triggering her feelings of sexual attraction for you.

3. Chasing her like a puppy dog.

Women are instinctively attracted to the strength in men and repelled by the weakness.

However, this has nothing to do with the size of a manâ€™s muscles, or how much weight he can bench press. The strength that a woman is attracted to is the confidence and emotional strength that causes a man to have a purpose and direction in his life.

For example: What some guys do when they feel love for a woman is behave like a love-struck puppy around her in the hopes that she will begin to love him if heâ€™s always â€œthereâ€œ for her.

This can mean that he allows her to push him around and have him do favors for her, e.g. run errands for her, or help her with homework, or even give her money to pay her rent or to buy something trivial because she doesn't want to spend her own money.

However, the worst mistake he can make is that he puts his life on hold, by giving up on his dreams and ambitions, giving up his own interests and hobbies, and even giving up his friends, so that he can be at her beck and call.

This is not attractive to women, and rather than make her fall in love with him, when a man gives up on his own dreams and aspirations for her, a woman feels turned off by that at a deep, instinctive level.

A woman likes to know that the man she is with is mentally and emotionally strong enough to be able to have his say in the world. She wants to know that if she gives her heart to him and chooses him as her mate, he will be able to provide for himself, her and their offspring if they have any.

Being with a man who is of weak character (i.e. someone who cannot stand true to his own dreams and ideals), is not appealing to women.

Remember: What causes a woman to fall in love with a man is his ability to trigger her feelings of respect and attraction for him, and a woman cannot respect a man who does not respect himself enough to follow through on his dreams.

You Can Make it Happen

[image: What causes a woman to fall in love with a man?]

Regardless of who the woman is that you want to have fall in love with you, and regardless of whether she doesn't know you exist, or she's told you, âIâm not interested, or, âI only like you as a friend, when you change the way you interact with her, she will naturally change how she feels about you too.

If the way you have been interacting with women has been turning them off the idea of being in a relationship with you (i.e. you were nervous, insecure, awkward, lacking in confidence, turning them off with your conversation style, etc.), it's only natural that you might be thinking, âI just don't have what it takes to make a woman fall in love with me.

Yet, that's not the case at all.

When you behave in the ways that are attractive to women and make them feel the way they want to feel when they are with a man by triggering their feelings of attraction and respect, you won't have to make a woman love you, because it will happen naturally, all by itself.

How to Make My Girlfriend Feel Special: 8 Examples

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Making your girlfriend feel special, loved and appreciated is an important part of relationship, but you need to make sure that you don't go overboard with it.

For example: If a guy is very insecure and worried about losing his girlfriend, he may make the mistake of trying way too hard to impress her and make her feel special, which will actually end up turning her off.

Watch this video for some examples...

Despite the fact that he is being a good boyfriend and is sincerely trying to make her feel special, she won't be able to stop herself from feeling turned off by his desperation.

[image: How can I make my girlfriend feel special to me?]

Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength of men (i.e. confidence, high self-esteem, bravery, etc) and turned off by the emotional weakness (e.g. insecurity, low self-esteem, being wimpy, etc).

So, when a guy feels so insecure about losing his girlfriend that he constantly feels like he needs to make her feel special, she will actually feel turned off by his emotional weakness.

A woman does want to be made to feel special, loved and wanted, but not if you're doing it because you're insecure or trying desperately to make her want to stay with you.

So, if you're keen to make your girlfriend feel special, here is how you can approach it in a way that deepens her feelings of respect, attraction and love for you, rather than turning her off...

8 Ways to make Your Girlfriend Feel Special

The first example is...

1. When you are at home together

[image: Making your girlfriend feel special when you're at home together]

Making her your girlfriend feel special when you're at home together is about her appreciating the fact that she gets to spend time with an awesome guy like you.

For example: If a guy spends most of his time with his girlfriend and isn't really rising through the levels of life and reaching for his true potential as a man, she might initially enjoy his undivided time and attention, but she will eventually get bored of it and begin to lose interest in him.

Why? Women maintain their feelings of respect and attraction for guys who do not hide from life behind a relationship with a woman.

Your girlfriend wants to know that when you spend time with her at home, it's because you love her and want to give her some of your valuable time that you could easily be spending on continuing to making progress towards your biggest ambitions in life.

That is what makes her feel like the special woman in your life who gets to spend quality time with you.

She doesn't want to feel as though you always want to be around her because you're a guy who is hiding from life behind the comfort of hanging out with her.

2. When you are out in public

[image: Making your girlfriend feel special when you're out in public together]

Something that makes a girlfriend feel special when in public places with her boyfriend, is knowing that he has the confidence and emotional masculinity to handle any situation that might come up.

He confidently moves through the world and goes after what he wants, while being a good guy and getting along with other people, rather than causing trouble or getting into fights.

If a woman is with a guy who becomes nervous or insecure in social situations and doesn't really get along well with people, then she might put up with that for a while, but she's not going to feel special to have a boyfriend like him.

Women instinctively know that they are going to be much better off in life if they couple up with a guy who can confidently move through the world and get along with people, rather than a guy who feels insecure in social situations and has difficulty getting people to respect him, like him or treat him well.

When a woman is walking through a public space and holding onto the arm of her boyfriend that she feels proud of and safe to be with, it makes her feel special and lucky to be his girlfriend.

3. When you are away from each other

If you and your girlfriend don't live together or if you spend a lot of time apart because you work long hours or do different shifts, then what can make her feel special is knowing that an awesome guy like you is still in love with her, cares about her and is committed to her even though you are not around each other all the time.

When you are the sort of guy that she can look up to and respect like that, even a simple text of, "Hey babe, I miss you" or "I love you" is going to make your girlfriend feel special.

However, if a woman is with a guy who she doesn't look up to and respect, doesn't feel much attraction for and is slowly falling out of love with and he then sends her a text saying, "I miss you" then she's not going to feel very special to get a message like that from him.

Based on her lack of respect for him, she isn't going to be missing him and wanting to see him as much as he wants to see her, so she won't feel much of a need to reply or may simply reply with something simple like, "Thanks."

4. When you text her

The way to make your girlfriend feel special via text is to not text her too often.

These days, most people have their smartphone with them wherever they go, but that doesn't mean you should use it to text your girlfriend every day and night.

Essentially, you want your girlfriend to feel lucky to get a message from you, but you don't want to go too far with it where you never message her at all or begin to take her for granted.

You simply need to take a more balanced approach to life as a man, where you are moving forward in life and rising through the levels of your true potential, while also sending her an occasional text or giving her a call when you can.

As a man, the majority of your focus has to be on rising through the levels of life and reaching for your true potential.

If you make the rookie mistake of basing your life and identity on the relationship with your girlfriend, she will eventually get annoyed by that because women instinctively know that they don't want to be stuck with a guy who is hiding from his true potential behind her.

So, to make her feel special, simply reward her with a text from you every now and again. Don't waste your time or her time texting back and forth like girls do.

If she wants to text back and forth and chat on the phone for hours with her girlfriends, then let her do that. However, you shouldn't copy her and take on the role of a woman in your relationship as well.

You need to be a man in this life and bravely rise up to reach for your true potential as a man, rather than wasting time like many feminine women do because they expect that a guy will support them, take care of them and protect them if they need or want it.

Women instinctively know that a guy isn't achieving anything and isn't becoming a bigger and better man in life when he wastes a lot of time sending loads of texts messages back and forth with her.

It doesn't make her feel special to be with a guy who doesn't have anything else to do other than text her and focus his attention on keeping her.

5. When you talk to her on the phone

A way to make your girlfriend feel special when you talk to her on the phone is to get her laughing, smiling and feeling attracted to how masculine you are compared to her.

Some guys make the mistake of always talking to their girlfriend in a neutral, friendly way and some guys even get into the habit of talking a little bit like a woman (e.g. giggling, being emotionally sensitive, gossiping, etc).

Here's what you always need to remember about women...

One the most important, fundamental things that attracts a woman to a man is how feminine she feels in comparison to his masculinity.

So, rather than talking to your girlfriend and trying to be like her in some ways, make sure that you keep being a masculine guy in the way that you talk, feel, think, behave and take action in life and when on the phone with her.

Her feelings of attraction will remain and deepen over time if you can be a man for her, so don't slip into being like her or giving up on your biggest ambitions in life because you think it will make her feel special for life if you just hang out with her all the time.

The fact is, if you are the type of guy who is attempting to achieve his biggest ambitions in life, you're not going to have a lot of time to waste chatting about nothing on the phone with her or other people.

You're going to have much more important things to do than talk endlessly on the phone like girls do, or like lost guys with no purpose do.

When you are a guy who is bravely rising up to reach your true potential as a man, your girlfriend is going to feel special to have quality time with you on a call of any length. She will feel lucky, happy and attracted to you when you give her some of your time and get her laughing, smiling and enjoying talking to you on the phone.

So, don't slip into a routine of calling her every day or night. These days, a lot of confused guys (who still don't know what it means to be a real man) make the mistake of calling their girlfriend every night to speak on the phone to show her how much he cares.

While that is nice that he cares so much, it's not what a woman really wants from a man.

A woman wants to enjoy missing you and wishing that she could spend more time with you, rather than having to talk to you every night and never getting the chance to wish that she could hear your voice.

6. When you have sex with her

One of the ways to make your girlfriend feel special when you're having sex with her is to be present in the moment.

Being present in the moment means that you're not worried about a thing and are simply there in the moment with her, enjoying her, giving her your masculine presence and connecting with her in an intimate way.

Yet, you shouldn't do that all the time, but you should add in Presence Sex every now and again.

If you always do the same thing with her, it will become predictable, boring and annoying that she has to experience the same thing over and over again, so make sure that you just mix it in, rather than drowning her in it.

Why a girlfriend feels special when she is treated to Presence Sex is that it makes her feel as though you are truly attracted to her and really want to be with her in that moment, rather than wishing you could be with another woman or simply wanting to have sex with her so you can ejaculate and get it over with.

7. When in a long distance relationship

What makes a girlfriend feel special when she's in a long distance relationship with a guy is when he continues to be the awesome guy that she fell in love with, while also becoming a bigger and better man in life everyday.

A woman needs to be able to see that her boyfriend is continuing to move forward in life, but at the same time, he is still continuing to love her, care about her and be committed to her.

If a guy is in a long distance relationship with a woman and puts his life plans on hold just to focus on her all the time, then she will eventually lose respect for him as a man and feel turned off by him.

Essentially, you need to take a balanced approach where you move forward in life on your way to becoming a bigger and better man, while also making her feel special, desired and wanted.

8. When it's her birthday

[image: Making your girlfriend feel special on her birthday]

Not all women care about their birthday, but it is a good opportunity to make her feel special.

As long as your girlfriend respects you, is attracted to you and in love with you, she will feel special in response to pretty much anything you do for her birthday.

However, if your girlfriend has lost respect for you, isn't very attracted to you anymore and is starting to fall out of love with you, then she's not going to really care if you buy her an amazing gift, take her to an expensive restaurant or declare your undying love for her.

Unless she has strong feelings for you, she's not going to really care about your strong feelings for her.

So, when it comes to your girlfriend's birthday, the most important thing that already needs to be in place is that you've been guiding her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for you in the relationship.

Then, when her birthday comes around, anything that you do (e.g. take her out to dinner, go away for a weekend, write her a love note, cook dinner and give her a sensual massage, etc) is going to make her feel special, because she's already deeply happy about the love, respect and attraction that you feel for each other.

My Wife Wants Me to Sleep With Another Woman

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a man says, “My wife wants me to sleep with another woman,” his friends might laugh and encourage him by saying, “I wish my wife would say that to me!”

Yet, getting her husband to sleep with another woman is often just a way to open up their relationship and potentially make him leave her, or give her the chance to say, “I want to sleep with another man. I’ve let you sleep with another woman, so now it’s my turn.”

So, if you’re in the position where you are saying, “My wife wants me to sleep with another woman,” it’s likely that you’re not comfortable with the idea; even if part of you feels quite excited about it.

You may be asking yourself some of the following questions:

- What is making my wife say she wants me to sleep with another woman?
- Is this just a random fantasy that she’s voicing out loud and if I ignore it, she will eventually lose interest in the idea?
- Is she testing to see if I would actually be willing to have sex with another woman, rather than wanting to remain completely devoted to her?
- What if I do sleep with another woman and I end up liking it and want to do it again?
- What if I do it and my wife ends up hating me for it?
- What if I do it and we end up getting a divorce because of it?

I’ve been helping men to fix their relationship and marriage problems with women for years now and every time sex with another person was added into the relationship, it ended in a break up, separation or divorce.

In other words, I would not recommend that you sleep with another woman if you actually want to stay with your wife.

Most people cannot handle it.

She might act like she can now, but things can and usually do change...especially, if she then starts talking about wanting to sleep with another man to even the playing field.

To keep your marriage together, you’ve got to avoid setting off negative chain reactions that will tear you and her apart.

Different Strokes for Different Folks

Although sleeping with other people is not recommended, the reality is that there is no one size fits all when it comes to the rules of marriage.

Every husband and wife is different and every relationship is based on a unique combination of likes, dislikes, morals, beliefs, interests and attractions.

In today’s world, ideas about marriage are not as hard and fast as they used to be in the past where classic monogamy was the norm (i.e. the man and woman marry as virgins, remain sexually exclusive to each other throughout their lives and become celibate after the death of one or the other) and everything else was considered taboo.

Today, some couples are more relaxed about what marriage and have become open to the idea of serial monogamy, which essentially means that the couple chooses to be sexually faithful for the duration of that relationship, (i.e. until they break up, get divorced or one person dies) and then they are free to move on to their next monogamous relationship.

Essentially, they agree to be together until the old saying, “Till death do us part” or until they no longer want to be together.

Although serial monogamy is now the most common form of relationship between men and women in today’s world, there are also couples that choose to be in non-monogamous relationships.

This can include cheating without telling (i.e. secret affairs), polygamy, open relationships, swinging, polyamory relationships, etc.

So, if a woman tells her husband that she wants him to sleep with another woman, it may be because she’s the type of person who is interested in being in something other than a traditional, monogamous relationship.

If both agree to it and they feel that it’s a lifestyle they can easily pursue together that will bring them the most joy, while still being in a loving, happy relationship with each other, then so be it; there’s no general rule that says every couple has to be the same.

However, although there are many husbands and wives that this free love type of lifestyle appeals to, in most cases, when a wife tells her husband she wants him to sleep with another woman, it may stem from a deeper underlying issue in the relationship.

Fantasy vs. Reality

Modern-day psychologists generally agree that it’s perfectly normal and healthy for both men and women to have sexual fantasies, and that having fantasies while married is no longer a sign that the person is unhappy with their spouse.

For example: Just because a man will jerk off to porn once in a while (and really feel attracted to the women in porn while doing it), it doesn’t mean that he no longer loves his woman and wants to break up with her.

In most instances, fantasies are generally just a form of escapism and nothing more.

It’s a chance to experience something kinky or unusual without the risks that would be involved if it were to happen in real life.

Fantasies can seem very erotic, arousing and daring, but it doesn’t mean that a husband and wife have to actually act out that fantasy in real life to be happy.

If your wife wants you to sleep with another woman, it may simply be a fantasy that she has brought back with her into the real world.

For example: She might have been masturbating to the idea of you having sex with another woman in front of her, or walking in on you giving it to another woman doggy style and then joining in herself.

That might sound worrying to you, but it’s no more worrying than you jerking off to hardcore porn. It’s an arousing thought and idea, but it doesn’t mean that you and her have to act out either of those things in real life.

So, the question now is this...

Do you think that you sleeping with another woman is something that should stay in the realm of fantasy, or is it something that you think needs to be turned into a reality?

Why is She Suggesting it?

There are many reasons why a wife might suggest that her husband sleeps with another woman, includingâ

1. She is testing to see how devoted he really is

[image: Testing to see how devoted you are]

If your wife is insecure about your attraction for her and your devotion to the marriage, she might be bringing that up to see if you will go through with it.

She wants to see if she can push you to have sex with another woman and if you do, it means that she was right to think that you couldn't be trusted.

According to studies conducted by several psychologists and relationship therapists, when a woman fantasizes about her husband having sex with another woman, itâs often because she fears being cheated on.

2. She wants to get rid of him

[image: Is she trying to get rid of you?]

Another reason why a wife will want her husband to begin sleeping with other women is that she knows that he won't accept a divorce if she just goes for a clean break up.

She feels as though he will probably beg her and plead with her for another chance, which will drag the marriage along further. She will then find it very difficult to move out or to get him to sign divorce papers.

3. She wants to get a better divorce settlement and get custody of the children

When a husband is already sleeping with another woman, it doesn't look good to the judge at family court.

A wife can easily make herself look like an innocent victim of horrible infidelity and get a much better divorce settlement and control of the children.

4. She is trying to get the spark back in the marriage

In most relationships, the idea of taking a fantasy or a fetish into the realm of reality is not really that appealing because the couple is already happy with their love and life together.

So, although a wife might be saying that she wants her husband to sleep with another woman, itâs possible that itâs just her weird way of trying to spice up their sex life.

Deep down, she might know that it's a bad idea, but she is simply trying to get the spark back in the marriage so she doesn't end up losing you if you decide to have an affair behind her back.

5. She wants him become open to gradually the idea of her sleeping with another man

[image: She wants to be able to sleep with other men]

Think about it...

Why would your wife want you to enjoy the pleasure of sticking your penis into a woman and enjoying yourself? What enjoyment does she get from that?

Why would she want you to passionately kiss another woman or develop feelings for her? Is she not going to feel jealous?

It just goes against human nature.

A woman won't encourage her man to go and sleep with other women unless she has an ulterior motive or if she is very sexual and wants to try all sorts of fantasies throughout her life.

So, if you do decide to go ahead with it, just know that there is usually much more to the story than she is letting on.

If you want to avoid destroying your marriage by sleeping with other women, here's what you need to do...

Create a Relationship Dynamic Where You Become Her Fantasy

On a deep and instinctive level, today's women are still looking for the kind of man that can both provide for them and protect them.

Even though a woman no longer needs her man to be able to hunt down a buffalo or take on a rival tribe to protect her, she does need him to be emotionally strong enough to survive and thrive in modern society.

A woman also needs a man who has what it takes to take the lead in a relationship, which then allows her to relax into her feminine self. She can feel protected and safe knowing that she is with a man who will remain strong no matter how challenging life gets.

When she can see that on a consistent basis, she knows that she can relax and she doesn't have to think, feel, behave and act like a man would.

She can be a real woman (i.e. feel feminine, be girly, be emotional, focus on being in love), rather than having to be a neutral woman who takes on a more masculine, manly way of being.

So, if you want to be your wife's fantasy man, you've got to let her think, feel, behave and act like a woman when she is around you.

By being this type of man for your wife, she will naturally feel turned on by you and her fantasies will revolve around the ways you can make her feel good when you're together.

When you can turn your wife on and make her feel sexy around you in new and exciting ways, she will automatically feel happier and more content in her relationship with you.

From there, she will naturally begin to fantasize more about what you can do to her, rather than what you can do to another woman.

The more attraction you can make her feel for you, the more intense her sexual desire for you will become and the less she will turn to weird, possibly marriage-destroying fantasies to make her feel the way she wants to feel.

What a Woman Needs in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Here are some of the things that a woman needs when in a relationship with a man:

1. To feel loved and accepted for who she really is deep down.
2. To feel sexy and attractive in your eyes.
3. To be able to look up to you and respect you as her man.
4. To feel attracted to you in many different ways.
5. To fall more deeply in love with you over time.
6. To feel safe that you will guide both you and her to a better future.
7. To grow together as a couple, rather than only one person growing and leaving the other behind.
8. To always feel feminine in comparison to your masculinity, rather than her becoming the more dominant one or both of you becoming neutral equals.
9. To have open communication about everything (you need to lead the way with this by being emotionally strong), rather than feeling as though you and her need to hide things from each other.
10. To feel appreciated for the little or big things she does.
11. To feel as though she can always count on you to be emotionally strong no matter what and to stick to your word like a man.
12. To see that you love her so much that you still put in some occasional effort to be romantic, regardless of how busy your life is.
13. To see that you continue to respect her, care about her and have her best interests at heart.
14. To be able to laugh and smile with you, regardless of how challenging or stressful life gets.
To be surprised every now and then (e.g. a weekend away, a massage, go out for ice cream, go watch a sunset somewhere relaxing, etc).
15. To see that you are willing to compromise on things every now and then, rather than always trying to get your way.
16. To feel as though she can trust you to remain faithful, even though you're an awesome man who other women will flirt with and hit on.
17. To feel as though you and her have the same long term goals for the future.

Sounds like a lot, hey?

Well, there's actually an easier way to look at all the items listed above.

Watch this...

Essentially, keeping a relationship together all boils down to being able to guide both yourself and her into deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love for each other over time.

That's what really counts.

A relationship will become stuck together with super glue if both you and the woman develop deeper, more meaningful feelings for each other over time.

So, how can you do that and give her what a woman needs in a relationship?

Here are 4 examples of how to do itâ□|

1. Be the Kind of Man That She Can Look Up to and Respect.

[image: What a woman needs in a relationship with a man]

One of the most important things in a relationship is for a woman to be able to respect her man.

Without respect, a woman is unable to feel proper attraction for her man and without respect and attraction, she will gradually fall out of love with him.

So, first and foremost, you have to make sure that you are the kind of man that she can continually look up to and respect.

Part of this includes not giving her too much power...

If you give her too much power, she will naturally lose respect for you because you can't even keep a woman under control.

Women want to be with a man who can handle himself in the world and not get walked all over by challenging people, bad people or bossy people.

If you can handle her at her worst (i.e. when she's throwing tantrums, being unreasonable, testing your confidence by verbally insulting you), then she believes that you can handle yourself in the world.

As a result, she respects you, feels attracted to you and loves you all the more.

According to the dictionary, the definition of respect is as follows:

Respect (noun): A feeling of deep admiration for someone based on their personal qualities, abilities or achievements.

Here are some examples of things that make a woman lose respect for her man include:

- Being insecure, needy or clingy.
- Belittling her and embarrassing her in front of others.
Using her and the relationship as an excuse to hide from his true potential in life.
- Being jealous, over-protective or suspicious of her.
- Being the kind of guy who regularly breaks his word.
- Being critical of everything she does.
- Being insecure and submissive around other people at work, socially or at family gatherings.
- Trying to control her (e.g. not letting her catch up with friends, forbidding her to wear sexy or revealing clothes, etc).
- Letting her be "the boss" or "wear the pants" in the relationship.

Essentially, to be the sort of man that a woman can continually look up to and respect, you need to make sure that you:

- Remain emotionally strong, rather than becoming insecure.
- Have her back by pointing out good things about her and making her feel confident, rather than belittling her and embarrassing her in front of others.
- Work hard at achieving your biggest ambitions and dreams in life, rather than using her and the relationship as an excuse to hide from his true potential in life.
- Trust her, rather than being jealous, over-protective or suspicious of her. If she breaks that trust, it is her mistake, not yours.

- Be a man of your word, rather than being the kind of guy who regularly breaks his word.
- Focus on her good points, rather than being critical of everything she does.
- Be a confident, self-assured man, rather than being insecure and submissive around other people at work, socially or at family gatherings.
- Let her feel as though she is free to express her true identity and hang out with friends, rather than trying to control her (e.g. not letting her go out with her friends, forbidding her to wear sexy or revealing clothes, etc).
- Maintain your masculine position in the relationship (i.e. you lead the way as the man), rather than letting her be “the boss” or “wear the pants” in the relationship.

Respect is essential for keeping a relationship together.

It’s very easy for a guy to be really nice and get a woman to respect him in the early part of a dating relationship, but if that’s just an act to get her into a relationship, his true colors will soon show and she will begin to lose respect for him.

Unlike in the past where women had to stay in a loveless relationship for life because it was shameful to break up or get divorced, most women today will gladly break up with a guy they don’t respect, love and feel attracted to.

It might suck to hear that, but it’s actually a good thing.

The pressure that we men are now under is turning us into wiser, stronger and more truly loving men who can give a woman what she really wants and needs from a relationship.

In the past, men didn’t have to worry about women and simply married one, made her pregnant and expected her to cook, clean and take care of the children.

In today’s world, we men actually have to know how to deepen a woman’s respect, attraction and love over time, otherwise we end up as yet another break up or divorce statistic.

2. Lead Both of You to a Better Future Together.

[image: guide-you-and-her-to-a-better-future]

Even though today’s modern woman usually has her own job or career, makes her own money and can usually buy most of the things she wants for herself, most women (not all) still like to know that the guy they are with, will be able to take care of her and guide both him and her towards a better future.

This doesn’t mean she expects him to do all the work, but most women in a relationship need to know that their man is the one who is making sure that they will be reaching their future goals together as a couple.

After all, if she is like most women, she wants to be feminine, which means that she isn’t going to be as emotionally consistent and strong as a masculine man.

For example: A masculine man will make sure that they stay on track to buy a house together, rather than use all their savings on frivolous things like going out to expensive dinners every week or buying too many clothes, shoes, or other things that they can do without for now.

Of course, some women are great at saving, staying on track and sticking to a budget, but if a woman doesn't have that ability (i.e. because she gets excited while walking around a shopping mall and wants to buy everything in sight), she needs a man who can allow a little bit of luxury at times, but will be the sensible one who keeps them on track to achieving their future goals.

Another example is where a guy will continue improving his qualifications so that he can get a better job, which will then provide a better future for both of them.

This then allows the woman to give up on her career if she suddenly decides that she wants to be a mother, because her man is rising through the levels of his potential and putting himself in a position where he can be a better provider.

Alternatively, he might also encourage his woman to carry on with her studies, so that she can accomplish her goals and they can have a better life together in the future, rather than only focusing on partying and having fun.

When your woman can see that you are rising through the levels of life, while also encouraging her to become the best she can be, her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you will grow and she will feel happy to be in a relationship with you.

Of course, the roles of men and women are different. Just because you are rising through the levels of your potential as a man, that doesn't mean that you can demand the same of her.

Although many women build up their own career these days, most women eventually get to a point where they want to stop running in the rat race and become a mother instead.

She might make that shift when she is 22, 32 or if she leaves it very late, when she's hit 40 and suddenly realizes that if she doesn't try to have a baby now, she will never be able to become a mother.

Whatever happens and whatever the woman decides now or in the future, she wants to know that she can rely on you to lead both you and her to a better life together as the years go on.

3. Follow Through on Your Goals and Ambitions.

It's only natural that when you are in love with a woman, (especially at the beginning of a relationship when everything is new and exciting), that you're going to want to spend as much time with her as possible.

The sex is so new, fresh and interesting and the conversations that you have are enjoyable because you're falling in love, happy to be around each other and learning more and more about each other all the time.

However, in a relationship with a woman, problems will begin to emerge if a guy stops focusing on other areas of his life and instead focus all his attention on her.

Although a woman might initially love the feeling of being the center of her man's world, she will want it to calm down eventually and will want to see him put just as much focus on achieving his biggest goal and ambitions in life.

If he doesn't calm down and take a more balanced approach, behavior that was initially seen as sweet or cute (e.g. when he showers her with gifts, takes her out on romantic dates, hangs around her every spare minute he gets, etc), will quickly begin to seem needy, clingy, jealous or insecure.

Of course, there are some women who love to have a man at their beck and call and to cater to their every whim, but most women hate it.

What a woman needs in a relationship is to know that she is loved and valued by her man, but he also has a lot more going on in his life than just her. He's not hiding from his true potential as a man now that he's scored himself a girlfriend, fiancée or wife. He's pushing forward in life like a man.

A woman wants to know that her man is excited about his own life and is working towards achieving his goals and making his dreams come true, while still being able to give her the time, attention, love and support she needs to accomplish her goals too.

If you give up your old friends, give up your interests or stop pursuing important life goals just to spend time with her, she's going to gradually lose respect for you because of it.

4. Make Her Feel Loved, Appreciated and Sexy in Your Presence.

[image: What a woman needs when in a relationship]

At the beginning of a relationship, a man and a woman will usually find it difficult to keep their hands off each other.

Based on this physical passion and attraction, a woman will know that her man is attracted to her, appreciates her, finds her sexy and wants to be with her.

Yet, over time, some guys make the mistake of continually pointing out any physical flaws (e.g. if she puts on a bit of weight, has pimples, is getting wrinkles, etc), rather than continuing to look at her as being sexy no matter what.

The couples who are still attracted to each other even after decades of being together have a dynamic where they still look at each other as being sexy and attractive.

Of course, this is all a matter of perspective and it comes from what I call, the Love Goggles.

Essentially, when you're truly in love with a woman (and she's truly in love with you), both of you will look at each other's physical appearance in a positive light. You have Love Goggles on, so you focus on feeling good about the things that you like, love, admire and respect about each other.

Rather than focusing on any negatives about each other, you will feel turned on to have sex with each other based on the loving attraction you feel.

It will feel amazing to kiss each other, your heart will flood with feelings of happiness when you cuddle up on the couch and you will mean it when you say, "I love you."

So, how do you get to that point with a woman?

You've got to be able to guide both you and her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

Respect + Attraction + Love = A Happy Relationship

A big part of what a woman wants in a relationship is to be able to look up to you and feel proud to be your girlfriend, fiancée or wife.

When you continue to deepen her feelings by being the best man you can be (e.g. by following through on your promises, pursuing your dreams and ambitions, supporting her and making her feel feminine in comparison to your masculinity), not only will your woman be happy in her relationship with you, she will feel so much love and respect for you that she will never want to let you go.

My Wife Nags Me

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your wife is nagging you, it's easy to just put the blame on her and assume that she's being annoying.

Yet, rather than writing it off as her simply being a moody woman, or wasting time getting mad or frustrated about it, what you need to do is understand the real reason for it, make the appropriate changes and you can then get on with enjoying a happy, harmonious marriage once again.

So, let's have a look at some of the common reasons why a wife will nag her husband...

3 Behaviors That May Be Causing Your Wife to Nag You

[image: My wife keeps nagging me]

The most common reasons why a wife will nag her husband, is when...

1. He gives up trying to be the man, hands over his position of power and just lets her wear the pants

No matter how confident, independent or demanding a woman is, she doesn't want to get stuck in a situation where her man gives up trying to be the leader of the relationship and just lets her take over.

For example: It's completely normal for a couple to have the occasional argument, especially when it comes to who is in charge of making decisions.

However, when arguments happen often, a husband may make the mistake of giving away too much power to his wife, without realizing that she doesn't really want to be in that position over him at all.

Rather than get into a big argument about something or end up being criticized by his wife for not doing something perfectly, he will simply step back and just let her do everything her way.

In his mind, he will assume that he is being a good, loving husband who doesn't want to annoy his wife, "I'll just let her do it. Then she'll be happy and she won't fight with me or nag me."

Yet, rather than make her happy, she ends up nagging him even more. Why?

Regardless of how capable a woman is of leading the way, she doesn't want to get stuck having to wear the pants in her romantic relationship with a man. It's fine to take on that role at work, but not at home.

A woman doesn't want to feel like she has to lead her husband around and take on the role of being the man, or worse, have to take on the role of mothering him for the rest of her life.

A wife wants her husband to be emotionally masculine (i.e. take the lead, be the protector, be the emotionally strong one, etc), so that she can relax and feel feminine in comparison to his masculinity.

Being masculine doesn't mean being domineering or treating a woman like she's a useless young girl who needs a daddy figure in her life. It simply means taking on the lead in the relationship, while still taking her opinions, needs and wants into consideration.

If a husband gives up trying to be the man and expects his wife to take on that role, she won't feel like a real woman and she will end up losing respect for him, which will then cause her to nag him, argue with him and throw annoying tantrums.

When a woman stops respecting her man, she eventually also stops feeling attraction for him, and if she doesn't respect him and feel attraction for him, she will then fall out of love with him.

So, if you're in a position at the moment where your wife effectively calls the shots, you need to get that power back asap. She doesn't want to be in that position over you and if it goes on for too long, you might get the, "I want to separate" or worse, "I want a divorce" one day.

2. He takes her for granted.

[image: My wife nags me all the time]

Life can get really busy at times and once a man gets married, he may begin to feel the pressure of his new responsibilities as a husband.

This may lead to him doing more and more to be a good husband and provider for his wife and family (i.e. working longer hours, trying to start a business in his free time, etc).

Although his intentions are good, if he doesn't make sure that he still puts in some effort to make his wife feel appreciated, she may begin to feel restless while she waits for him to achieve whatever it is he is trying to achieve.

She might say something like, "You're always working late. Your job is more important to you than I am. When was the last time we went out for a date night? I work too and I still have to come home and cook and clean, but where are you? You're never here. I'm not your maid you know, I'm your wife!"

Naturally he might think, "Here we go again! Everything I do is for her, but she never appreciates it! I have to work my ass off to provide all the nice things that she wants. Yet, does she ever appreciate that? No! She nags and complains instead!"

It's normal and admirable for you to want to be a better provider for your wife and family.

Yet, even more important than being a good provider, for your marriage to flourish, it is essential that you also put in some effort to deepen the love, respect and attraction between you and her rather than take it for granted and assume that a big fancy house, or more things are more important to her than feeling loved, appreciated and valued by you.

Unlike women from 1900, today's women aren't so worried about the idea of getting divorced.

All a modern woman has to do is turn on a TV drama show and she'll see a storyline of an unhappy wife leaving her husband, finding a new man and looking so much happier in the end.

If she listens to music, she'll hear female pop, country, hip hop or rock songs about breaking up with a man and moving on.

If she watches a TV talk show, she'll see female celebrity guests talking about how they are so much happier now that they've gone through with the divorce.

If she listens to women at work, she will hear stories of how they left their husband and are so much happier now.

So, it's a different ball game in today's world.

Back in 1900 for example, the divorce rate was less than 10% across the developed world. Women were dependent on men and it was seen as shameful and wrong to get a divorce, so it rarely happened, even if the couple wasn't happy.

Not anymore.

To keep a marriage (or relationship for that matter) together in today's world, a man needs to be able to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for him over time.

He just can't take her for granted and expect that she will stick around because she said, "I do" on the wedding day.

It sucks, but that's the reality of modern life.

You either have the ability to keep your wife feeling attracted to you, respectful of you and in love with you, or you don't.

3. He stops following through on his goals and ambitions in life.

[image: My wife nags me when I watch TV]

Another example of when a woman nags is when she feels that her man isn't living up to his full potential in life.

For example: Her husband might come home from a long day at work and, just to unwind, he will sit down in front of the TV and vegetate all night.

In his opinion, he's just letting off a bit of steam from a long, hard day and he has no idea why she would constantly nag him about that; especially when she knows how difficult his job can be and how he is only doing it to be able to keep paying the bills.

Yet, if he digs deeper, he might find that she wants him to help her out with some of the housework (e.g. take out the garbage, help make dinner once in a while, etc) especially if she also has a full time job.

She might also just want to have more of a balance in their life where the two of them go out together more often.

Alternatively, she might feel annoyed that he is settling for a dead-end job and doing just enough to get by and have a comfortable life, instead of rising through the levels of life and reaching for his true potential as a man.

She may not be able to express that to him in a clear way, so she resorts to nagging him about watching too much TV in the hopes that he will pick up the real meaning and make changes to his behavior.

Is it All My Fault That My Wife Nags Me?

[image: My wife nags me constantly]

No.

However, as the man, you need to be the one who "steers the ship" or "leads the dance" in your relationship, so to speak.

You can't expect her to take on the leading role by fixing her own behavior, fixing whatever is making her nag you and then guide both you and her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

It's not enough for you to just be a good man who wants the best for your wife.

Instead, you've got to be able to make her feel the respect, attraction and love for you that will make her want to stay in a relationship.

For example: If a husband was initially confident when he met his wife and was determined to succeed in life, but he ended up becoming an insecure man who had given up on trying to achieve his biggest ambitions and dreams, his wife isn't going to say, "Wow! What a great man I have ended up with!"

To get her to respect him and feel attracted to him again, he simply needs to begin rebuilding his self-confidence and start making good progress towards achieving his ambitions and goals.

He doesn't have to become perfect overnight, but he has to at least show his wife that he is making progress and that he isn't going to give up until he achieves what he is setting out to do.

What is She Trying to Tell You By Nagging So Much?

Most women won't come out and tell you what is bothering them and will instead use hints, arguments, tantrums or nagging as a way of conveying their unhappiness about something to their husband (or fiancé or boyfriend).

For this reason, many men often ask me, "Why do women have to be so difficult? Why can't they just come out and say what they really mean? Wouldn't that be better than being a nag all the time?"

Although that's how we men behave, women are different.

A woman doesn't want to have to spell things out for her man because she doesn't want to teach him how to be a man.

A woman wants her man to be able to figure out for himself what is wrong and then make it right like a real man would. She wants to be able to look up to him and respect him as her man.

She doesn't want to have to train him to become the man she wants, or have to wait for years in the hope that he'll finally understand and behave in the ways she needs him to.

So, rather than sitting him down and having a masculine, man-to-man conversation, she will simply nag him until he changes his behavior or thinking, and if this doesn't work, she will eventually lose respect, attraction and love for him and she will break up with him or divorce him.

If you're saying, "My wife nags me," it's highly likely that you're currently unable to see things from her feminine perspective.

Yet, if you take some time to decipher her coded messages, you might discover that she has a point and that, unintentionally, you've slipped into certain behaviors or ways of thinking that are making her lose respect for you as a man.

This is A Great Opportunity to Deepen the Love Between You and Her

When you take the time to understand where your wife is coming from, you're likely to realize that sheâs not trying to be a bad person.

You might be a really good man and have the best of intentions, but if sheâs nagging you and getting on your case, there will be a very clear for reason for it.

So, rather than feel frustrated and thinking to yourself, *âMy wife nags me and sheâs driving me crazy!*â pay attention and you will undoubtedly find ways to improve your relationship with her and deepen the respect, love and attraction she feels for you.

For example: If a wife is nagging her husband about tiny, insignificant things all the time, itâs often just her way of letting him know that the balance of power is out of sync in their relationship.

Rather than get frustrated or cower and give into her demands, a husband in that situation can simply smile, laugh at her for being so dramatic about such an insignificant thing and then take the lead to fix the problem.

When she sees that he no longer gets frustrated or intimidated by her nagging, she will begin to respect him again and relax back into her feminine position (i.e. in the âone down positionâ in the relationship where she is the less dominant one).

Remember: You are the man in the relationship and if you lead, she will naturally be able to relax and be the feminine woman that she really wants to be when sheâs with you.

When she feels the way she wants to feel, her nagging will begin to slow down and then stop.

She might test you every now and then by throwing a tantrum or nagging, but just remain calm, smile, have a little laugh and then take the lead to fix the problem or deal with the situation.

My Girlfriend is Changing: Will My Relationship Last?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend is changing and is no longer treating you the way she did at the beginning of the relationship, it could mean that:

- You have stopped making her feel enough attraction for you, so she is losing interest in being in a relationship with you.
- She's starting to want to be single (e.g. her girlfriends have recently become single and have been having a lot of fun partying and meeting new guys).
- You have been behaving in a way that has caused her to lose respect for you, so she is beginning to change her attitude towards you and her perception of you.
- You and her are simply transitioning to a new stage of the relationship and are past the initial puppy love stage.
- She is growing up and doesn't want to think, feel, behave and act like she did when you and her first got together.
- She is just pulling back her interest to test your confidence and emotional security. If you become insecure, she will lose respect and attraction for you.

What you need to understand is that you have a lot of direct control over how much or little attraction your girlfriend feels for you.

For example: If a guy is being insecure and clingy around his girlfriend, then she is naturally going to feel turned off by him because women are attracted to the emotional strength in men (e.g. confidence, high self-esteem, determination to succeed) and turned off by the weakness (e.g. insecure, low self-esteem, defeatist attitude, etc).

So, if you're currently not making your girlfriend feel enough attraction for you and have slipped into thinking, behaving or acting in an unattractive way, make sure that you fix that immediately.

There's only so long that a modern woman will put up with being with a guy whom she doesn't respect, feel attracted to or love.

If she's currently losing touch with her feelings for you, then it's only a matter of time before she potentially breaks up with you.

Is Your Girlfriend Behaving in Any Of These Ways?

[image: Is your girlfriend behaving in any of these ways?]

Although changes in a relationship are normal over time, if your girlfriend is behaving in any of the following ways, it's a pretty certain sign that she's losing interest in being in a relationship with you.

1. She doesn't return your text messages or calls.

When a woman is in love, she will take any opportunity to stay in close contact with her man.

Short of being really busy with a huge project at work, or having a really heavy exam schedule, it is very rare for a woman to not reply to a message from her boyfriend.

If your girlfriend is not texting or calling you back and when you ask her about it she always makes lame excuses like, â€œOops, sorry. I forgotâ€ or â€œDonâ€™t be so needy! I had things to doâ€ or “My phone died,” then it is clear that sheâ€™s no longer feeling the same way about you as she did in the beginning.

If she is falling out of love with you, it's important that you fix the problem now. Otherwise, it will eventually lead to either cheating or a break up.

Watch this...

2. She makes excuses not to see you.

Another clear sign that your girlfriend is losing interest in being in a relationship with you is when she makes excuses not to see you.

A woman in love will go out of her way to spend even a few minutes with her man. So, if your girlfriend is suddenly too busy to see you, sheâ€™s clearly losing interest in the relationship.

3. She makes excuses not to touch, kiss or have sex.

[image: My girlfriend is changing her attitude towards me]

Physical attraction and expression is one of the key elements to a healthy and happy relationship.

If your girlfriend pulls away when you try to touch or kiss her, or she makes excuses not to have sex, like, â€œIâ€™m really tired right nowâ€ â€œNow is not a good timeâ€ â€œYouâ€™re going to mess my hairâ€ or â€œIs sex all you ever think about?â€ then sheâ€™s definitely no longer feeling the same level of attraction for you as she did in the beginning of your relationship.

However, be warned: Don't start whining or sulking to her about her behavior. If you do, it will just turn her off even more.

Watch this...

You've got to focus on saying and doing the types of things that will make her feel respect, attraction and love for you.

She will become a better girlfriend to you if you can get a handle on that.

Another girlfriend behavior that can be a strong warning sign of a pending break up is...

4. She avoids making future plans with you.

In a relationship, itâ€™s natural for a couple to want to make plans for the future together.

This doesnâ€™t always have to be major plans like moving in together, getting married or having children, but when a woman is in love with a man, she likes the idea of knowing that they are moving forward in the same direction and are planning to be together in the long term.

If you find that your girlfriend wonâ€™t even commit to short term plans, like going with you to your brotherâ€™s wedding, or to your best friendâ€™s birthday party thatâ€™s only a few months away; she is clearly not seeing herself sticking with the relationship for the long term.

Most Women Take a While to Make a Break Up Decision

[image: Should I break up with him?]

A woman's feelings for her boyfriend don't change overnight.

It usually takes a while for a woman to lose enough respect and attraction that she eventually begins to fall out of love and believe that he isn't capable of being the man that she wants and in needs in the long term.

So, if your girlfriend is losing interest in being with you and you want to turn things around and regain her respect, attraction and love, you must first understand what caused her feelings for you to change, and then take the appropriate action to fix those things.

Here are some questions to help you pinpoint where you might be going wrong with her:

- Have you been taking her for granted?
- Have you been neglecting her?
- Do you notice the efforts she makes to look nice for you?
- Do you take her into consideration when you make, or cancel, plans?
- Have you been clingy and insecure?
- Do you feel lucky to have her and fear losing her?
- Do you believe that if she breaks up with you, you won't be able to get another quality girlfriend?
- Are you moving up through the levels of life like a real man, or are you using her and your relationship to hide from your true potential?
- Do you lead in the relationship, or are you letting your girlfriend wear the pants and make all the everyday decisions for you both?

When you offer your girlfriend what she really wants (not what you think she wants), she will feel understood and then open herself up again to feeling love for you again.

When You Give Her What She Wants Her Feelings Will Change Again

It's easy to sit around moping and saying, "My girlfriend is changing" and worrying that you're about to get dumped or go through a long, messy break up process.

Yet, it's a waste of time to just focus on worrying.

The best way to approach this situation is to look at it as an opportunity to become an even better man than you are right now.

Start to improve the things that have been holding you back so far in life (e.g. a lack of self confidence, a fear of not being good enough, a lack of purpose in life, etc) and become an even better version of who you are.

When you do that, you will not only feel better about yourself, but your improved confidence, drive and determination to succeed in life will make your girlfriend feel more respect, attraction and love for you.

She will naturally begin to change and be a better, more loving and affectionate girlfriend to you.

That's just how women are.

Why Does My Wife Hate Me? 10 Possible Reasons Why

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Some of the reasons why a wife might come to hate her husband are that:

1. He lets her wear the pants in the marriage, so she no longer feels like a feminine woman around him.
2. He has turned her off the idea of having sex with him.
3. He doesn't spend enough quality time with her.
4. He has slowly destroyed the love that she once felt for him, rather than deepening her love for him over time.
5. He hasn't stuck to the promises he made when they first got married.
6. He lacks purpose and direction in life, so she feels as though she needs to carry him rather than be supported by him.
7. He has become annoying and insecure about her lack of affection for him, which is making her feel even less interested in being around him.
8. He has become selfish in the way he approaches the relationship, compared to how sweet, caring and considerate he was when they first met.
9. He isn't making any effort to get the spark back in the marriage and expects her to just put up with it.
10. He doesn't know how to make her feel happy and excited to be in love with him anymore.

So, if you've been asking yourself, "Why does my wife hate me? and you can relate to any of the problems listed above, don't worry â they are all fixable.

I know that those problems are fixable because I help new men everyday via my phone coaching service to either fix a problematic relationship before it gets to a break up, or to get a woman back after she has left.

So, if you want my help to fix your marriage before it falls apart, here are...

7 Ways to Turn Things Around and Get the Love Back on Track

[image: Changing how your wife feels]

If your wife currently hates you and you want to change that hatred into love, happiness and a renewed feeling of passion for each other, the following 7 tips should really help you...

1. Laugh and smile more, especially during times when you usually feel angry, stressed or frustrated.

[image: Laugh and smile more]

Life can be very challenging at times.

It's not always easy and success usually isn't handed to us on silver platter.

We often have to work our butts off to get anywhere in life and even if you do a really good job, we can still encounter all sorts of obstacles and roadblocks along the way.

The same applies to a marriage between a man and a woman.

Regardless of how intelligent, wise or kind-hearted a couple are, they can still fall into the trap of taking life way too seriously to the point where they forget that it's better to try to smile, laugh and be more light-hearted about things.

So, if your wife has gotten into the habit of getting angry, irritated, annoyed and stressed over little things, then as the man, you need to take on the role of leading the way to a better state of being.

When you interact with her about something that would normally cause you to get irritated, angry or frustrated, you need to force yourself to not follow that emotional path.

Instead, try to smile, relax and be more light-hearted about it. If possible, turn it into something to laugh about together.

For example: If a couple are on a tight budget and their car gets a flat tire and it will cost money to be replaced, they might want to get angry and feel stressed about it when they consider how the cost of fixing the tire will impact their lifestyle that month or for the next couple of months.

However, it's not impossible in that moment to have the emotional strength to relax, smile and try to have a laugh and feel good about life anyway.

A husband might sarcastically say, "Oh well, this means that I won't be able to buy beer this month, so I will lose a few pounds/kilos and get my six pack abs back. I'll be beach body ready for the summer!"

Alternatively, he might say something like, "Okay, we'll get this tire fixed and hopefully our luck will be good from now on. If so, we can put a little money away each month and go on a holiday near the end of the year. In the meantime, we will drive around on 3 wheels and have it scraping around and spitting out sparks" and we'll create fires wherever we go and then have a laugh about that together as a couple.

Essentially, just try to get into the habit of being able to smile, laugh and be light-hearted about things that would normally stress you and her out.

Lead the way to a better way of thinking, feeling and being from now on and she will love you and appreciate you for it.

2. Be a man that she can look up to and respect in every way.

Regardless of how intelligent, successful and independent a woman is, she still wants to be able to look up to her man and respect him.

She wants to be able to feel safe in the knowledge that her man is someone that she can rely on to be emotionally strong no matter life gets and he rely on him to follow through on his promises.

A woman's respect is something that a man needs to earn and maintain over time. A man might be someone that she can look up to and respect for the first 5-10 of a marriage, but if he stops being that man and is no longer someone that she can look up to and rely on anymore, her respect for him will naturally begin to fade away.

For example: He might have initially been a confident guy for the first few years of the marriage, but he then becomes insecure, jealous, clingy or needy.

Alternatively, he might have said that he wants to be successful in life and work his butt off until he gets there, but a few years into the marriage, he gives up on his dreams, says that life is too hard and then settles for a mediocre life.

He might have said that he wants to have a close relationship with his family and her family, but over time, he continually talks badly about her family or creates problems in the family relationships.

So, if you want your wife to stop hating you and start loving you again, you need to make sure that you don't lose focus of being a man that she can look up to and respect in every way.

The benefit of doing that is not only that you will then have a wife who respects you, loves you and appreciates you, but you also become a much more effective man in life.

It carries over into the workplace and into your relationships with friends and family, where people can look up to you, respect you and rely on you to be a strong, consistent man all the way.

3. Show her that you're making improvements on the things that have been annoying her.

If your currently hates 5 different things about you (for example), it's not going to be possible for you to completely fix all those things about yourself within 24 hours.

Just like her, you are also a human being and human beings usually take 1-2 months to fully develop a new habit or to overcome and replace a bad habit.

So, if a husband is in the habit of being irritable around his wife, then it's usually going to take him 1-2 months to fully change that habit.

However, during those 30-60 days, he needs to show her that he is making some improvements on the things that he is trying to fix, overcome or replace.

For example: In times where he would usually get annoyed or irritable 100% of the time, he's now only doing that 50% of the time or 30% of the time, which is a big improvement on the way to completely changing the bad habit.

A wife can then see that he is changing and improving and if her husband also explains to her that it can take 1-2 months to completely change a habit, she can then relax and allow that to happen rather than expecting him to change overnight.

4. Get back into the masculine, dominant position in your marriage.

Almost all women want to be with a man who is more masculine and dominant than they are.

There are some unusual women out there who like a pussy-whipped guy that they can control, but in most cases, such a dynamic leads to a lack of sexual in a relationship and a lack of respect shown to the man.

An example of this is a British woman named Kate Thompson, who only has sex with her husband once every 10 years...

[image: Pussy whipped man]

Kate Thompson's husband does most of the cooking, cleaning and ironing. He only gets sex on birthdays that end with zero (e.g. 40, 50). A classic example of what happens when a woman wears the pants.

In Kate's own words:

"My husband is the kindest, most considerate man in the world. During the seven years we've been married, Ben has done most of the cooking, cleaning and ironing without ever being asked. And yes, he works full-time. And if you think I reward his sterling domestic efforts with treats in the bedroom, I'm afraid I fail in that department, too. Intimacy is reserved only for his birthdays – and then just the ones with a zero.

I am shamefully neglectful of my wifely duties. In fact, I am the anti-wife. The truth is that I'm just too busy and involved in my career as a writer to be a traditional, caring wife. The truth is that Iâm in awe of the way he looks after me, our sons and our home. He makes my life easier.

Does that make me a selfish, slovenly, neglectful wife?" Probably – but it also makes me a happier one." Kate Thompson

Regardless of what outspoken feminist women say on TV and in pop songs, almost all women want a man who is more confident, masculine and dominant than they are. If a woman does get stuck with a man who allows her to dominate him, she will simply lose respect for him and withhold sex.

I've heard of this happening time and time again when I've helped men via my phone coaching service. When you make a woman feel like the man, she loses her interest in having sex with you.

So, if you want your wife to stop hating you and start loving you, appreciating you and respecting you more, you need to put the pants back on your legs and let her relax into being a feminine woman.

Being a feminine woman essentially means that she is free to be emotional (e.g. be sad one minute and happy the next, throw an occasional tantrum, be irrational, be girly, etc), rather than having to think, behave, feel and act like you do (i.e. like a man).

To make your wife feel feminine around you, it's absolutely essential that you think, feel, behave and take action in masculine way around her in life.

If you are just being neutral around your wife like a friend, then there's no real space for her to be a very feminine woman around you. If she giggles like a girl for example, she will feel awkward because you're not even that masculine, so her behavior will feel out of place or uncalled for.

It's very important that you get the masculine/feminine dynamic right in your relationship, otherwise it will cause all sorts of fundamental problems between you that destroy your sexual desire for each other.

For example: If a man is very feminine around his woman (e.g. he is emotionally sensitive, acts a bit girly at times, is afraid of things that women are usually afraid of, etc), then she will naturally begin to slip into a more masculine energy and way of being around him.

So, if you want your wife to feel happy in her natural feminine state, you need take on the role of being the dominant, masculine one in your marriage.

Being dominant and masculine doesn't mean that you boss her around, treat her like she's a slave or like she's a naïve young woman who needs a daddy figure in her life.

Instead, you simply take on the role of being the one who remains strong no matter how challenging life gets or how challenging she gets.

You don't have to make all the decisions for both of you, but ultimately, a woman wants you to be present enough to make decisions that will lead to a better life for you and her.

For example: It doesn't matter so much if you decide what to eat to dinner on Monday and she decides what to eat for the rest of the week, or if you choose a restaurant to eat at this week and she chooses next week.

That stuff really doesn't matter.

Overall, all that a woman really wants to see is that her man cares enough to lead the way rather than being lazy, taking her for granted and expecting her to take on the role of a traditional man in the relationship.

5. Make her feel sexy in your eyes.

Have you ever seen those couples who are still madly in love and attracted to each other even after 30-40 years of a relationship or marriage?

This is only possible when a man is able to deepen his woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for him over time, while also making her feel like she's the most sexiest woman on Earth in his eyes.

If he makes the mistake of taking her for granted and ruining her respect, attraction and love for him, then she's not going to really care that he finds her sexy because she doesn't find him appealing.

Likewise, if a man deepens his wife's feelings of love, respect and attraction and then doesn't really look at her as being sexy (i.e. he focuses on the negative aspects of her physical appearance, rather than basing his attraction for her on his love for her), then he's not going to feel very attracted to her and their sex life will dry up.

However, if the man deepens her love, respect and attraction and then maintains the mindset of seeing his wife as the most beautiful, sexiest woman on Earth in his eyes, then both of them will feel good about having sex.

He will naturally flirt with her (e.g. spank her on the butt in the kitchen, complimenting her on how sexy she looks, trying to get an extra kiss, etc), which will make her laugh, giggle and feel more sexually confident around him.

She will be happy and excited that she is still able to make her husband (who she respects, feels attracted to and loves) feel turned on and attracted, even though she doesn't look the way she did when they first met.

6. Stop being insecure.

As a man, one of the most important things that you can ever give a woman in a relationship is the gift of your continued emotional strength.

Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength of men (e.g. confidence, high self-esteem, determination to succeed, etc) and turned off by the emotional weakness (e.g. insecurity, low self-esteem, defeatist attitude, etc).

In the past, a woman would put up with a man and stick with him for life no matter what because it was shameful to get divorced.

In today's world, women are free to leave if they aren't happy or if they find themselves stuck with a man who is either unwilling to change or incapable of changing.

So, if you've found yourself being insecure around your wife, you need to realize that we're no longer living in the old days where a woman would put up with that for life. You've got to fix your insecurities as a man and become an emotionally strong man that she can rely on.

When in a relationship, a woman will always test her man's level of emotional strength by teasing him, throwing a tantrum when he's feeling emotionally vulnerable, picking on him and saying mean things to see how he reacts.

It sounds like a horrible thing for women to do, but it's actually a very important part of what has made the human race so strong and resilient. Women push men to become emotionally stronger, rather than rewarding emotional weakness with love, respect, sex and devotion.

An emotionally weak man will explode with anger and feel betrayed by her for being so insensitive and disrespectful towards him, whereas a wiser, more emotionally strong man will simply laugh at her and her attempts to piss him off.

When she sees that he remains emotionally strong and secure no matter how much she tries to push his buttons, her respect, attraction and love for him deepens.

However, if he crumbles under pressure, she instinctively loses respect and attraction for him because women are hard-wired to ensure that they are coupled up with a man who can survive, thrive and prosper no matter how challenging life gets.

7. Get her feeling excited about new, mutual life goals.

After a couple achieves their initial life goals (e.g. get married, start a family, buy a house, raise the children, etc), they might find themselves feeling happy and content or confused and restless about what they should do with the rest of their life together.

If your wife is the sort of woman who wants to achieve more in life in addition to what you've already done together, then you need to be aware of that and begin to develop new, exciting, mutual life goals together.

If you sit down and discuss it together in a "dream big" type of conversation, you will no doubt come to a mutual goal that both of you are excited to work on achieving.

If only one of you are excited about it, then it will eventually lead to boredom, fights and potentially make you grow apart over time, so make sure that it's something that both of you will feel excited, happy and proud to achieve over time.

If you continue on in an unhappy marriage and there isn't much to aim for anymore, it's highly likely that your wife will begin to create arguments and build up resentment towards you.

As a man, it's your role to steer the ship and guide the way to a better, happier life for the both of you.

Don't leave that in her hands because she will probably go around in circles (i.e. change her mind all the time, start and stop projects, want to move house and then regret it, etc) and will end up resenting you for not allowing her to relax into her masculine direction.

Okay, I hope this article has helped you gain more insight into how you can turn your wife's hatred around and get your marriage back on track.

Different Ways of Saying I Love You to Your Girlfriend, Fianc  or Wife

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Every woman is unique and prefers to be shown that she is loved in slightly different ways.

For example: A man might say, “I love you” to his girlfriend or wife every morning and night, but if she is the type of woman who prefers to be shown that she is loved, she’s not going to appreciate the words much at all.

Think about it this way...

Do you feel most loved by a woman when she tells you or shows you by way of her actions, behavior and attitude?

If a woman only showed you that she loved you (e.g. by cooking dinners for her, cleaning up the house, ironing your clothes, asking how your day was, etc), but never said, “I love you” or didn’t say it often enough, would you feel as though she wasn’t being loving enough towards you?

Each of us require a slightly different style of love, so rather than focussing on different ways of saying “I love you” to a woman, what you really need to do is work out the exact way that your woman prefers to be shown love.

Different Ways That Women Want to Be Shown They Are Loved By You

[image: Different ways of saying I love you]

The style of love that you need to show a woman to make her feel happy will always differ from woman to woman.

For example...

1. Some women want you to show your love through your actions.

Actions might include: Moving in with her, getting engaged to her, getting married, buying a house together, starting a family, etc.

Prior to all of that, actions might include: Taking her out to wine and dine her, doing fun things together, meeting her friends and family, etc.

However, be warned: Many guys end up turning their woman off by being way too good to her, even though she doesn’t treat him well.

You’ve got to make sure that there is a balance in your relationship where you are good to her and she is good to you.

If it’s one sided and you’re just being good to her, she will lose respect for you for not being able to get her to be a good woman for you.

She will also grow to hate the woman she is in her relationship with you (i.e. she is more selfish than she usually is, she takes your efforts for granted, she treats you badly and gets away with it).

2. Some women want you to show your love based on how you behave.

Behavior might include: Being considerate, caring, loving and respectful. It can also be when you love her unconditionally, even if she is having a bad day and happens to throw a tantrum.

3. Some women want you to show your love via gifts and financial rewards.

Gifts and financial rewards might include: Birthday presents, engagement ring, going on holidays, buying a house together, etc.

4. Some women want you to show your love physically.

Physical displays of love might include: Loving, passionate sex, hugs and kisses, massages, etc.

5. Some women want you to show your love by how deeply you connect with them.

Connecting might include: Sincerely listening to her, really getting to know the real her, loving and accepting who she really is deep down, etc.

6. Some women want you to express your love in words other than just, “I love you.”

Expressing your love in words might include saying things like: “You’re the sexiest woman on Earth in my eyes” or “You are just as beautiful without make up.”

However, some women hate it when guys are too nice and sweet all the time and sometimes, they want a bit of edge. For example: After saying, “You are the most beautiful woman on Earth in my eyes,” a guy could smile and add in, “I love everything about you, especially the way you suck my...”

3 Different Ways to Show Her That You Love Her

Okay, so let’s assume that you have the perfect relationship dynamic where she respects you as her man, she feels attracted to you and is as in love with you as you are with her.

When you do nice things for her, she appreciates it and she then puts in even more effort to become a better girlfriend, fiancée or wife for you.

If that dynamic is in place, then great ☐☐ keep rewarding her with more of your precious love, attention and affection.

However, if that dynamic is in place, you need to stop kissing her ass and get her to respect you, feel attracted to you and enjoy being in love with you again. If you don’t know how to do that, I recommend that you watch Make Her Love You For Life for instructions.

With the perfect relationship dynamic in place, here are some ways to show her that you love her:

1. The Love Gaze

[image: The love gaze]

Studies have proven that if a couple looks into each other’s eyes for a couple of minutes and asks each other questions about their future dream scenario together, it helps them connect on a deeper level and feel happier, more excited about their future together and more excited to make it happen.

If you’re in a relationship, your woman might cringe at the idea because she might see it as being too romantic or even too serious of a thing to do. Simply laugh and tell her to try it. She will love it.

If she just wants to relax and look into your eyes for a couple of minutes without talking, it’s totally fine to do it that way too. After the Love Gaze, you can then hug, kiss or relax and talk about your dream future scenario together (e.g. you travel once a year, you have a family or you party all around the world rather than having children, etc).

2. The “3 Things I Love About You” Conversation

Go to somewhere that you can watch the sunset with a good view (e.g. beach, mountain, rooftop café or bar) and have a relaxing late Sunday afternoon chill out.

When there, tell her, “Hey, tell me 3 things that you love about me and I’ll tell you 3 things that I love about you.” If she wants you to go first, then go first to lead the way.

For example: A man might say to his woman, “I love the way that you look in the morning when you wake up, how you look when you get yourself all done up and how you look when you’re riding me on top in the bedroom.”

Of course, if she enjoys it, you can continue on with the exchange of compliments.

For example: “I love the way I can go from being pissed off to happy in a few seconds, just by seeing you smile and knowing that we are awesome together as a couple.”

3. The Loving Massage

Give her a massage when she is complaining about feeling aches or pains, especially at a time when you are feeling tired after work or at a time when you just don’t feel like doing it. This shows her that you love her enough to push through that and do it for her.

Personally speaking, my wife often complains that her legs ache because she wears high heels a lot. With other women that I was in casual, sexual relationships with, I would just laugh and say something like, “Ahh, you’re always sore or aching—go get a massage,” but with my wife, I mix up the responses I give.

Sometimes I will laugh at her for being such a tender, fragile little thing and tell her to stop moaning or to go get a massage (women like it when a man mixes up his responses, rather than just being a super caring, attentive guy all the time because sometimes, the woman is just complaining and doesn’t need a serious response), but other times, I will actually sit down and give her a massage without asking for anything in return.

If I didn’t actually care about her, I wouldn’t do that and she knows it, so it’s a minor, but important expression of love.

Most Modern Women Don’t Romance to Be Sappy and Corny Like the Old Days

These days, most women still do want to feel special and enjoy a bit of romance when first dating a guy and when deep into a relationship or marriage, but they don’t like it when guys go overboard with sappy romantic gestures during the dating process or even deep into a relationship.

For example: If a guy arrives at a first date with flowers for a woman, she will usually feel as though he’s trying a bit too hard to be seen as a nice guy.

In the 1960s, bringing flowers to a date would have been fine because most women rarely had sex and many would still save their virginity for marriage. Yet, in today’s world, a woman doesn’t need a guy to show her that he’s the sweetest, most innocent guy in town before she will hold his hand.

In fact, a study in the USA found that 55% of couples had sex on their first date and a European study found that 70% of women admitted to having experienced a one night stand before.

In other words, sex happens very quickly these days and it doesn’t take flowers, a teddy bear and a box of chocolates to get the job done. All you need to do is make the woman feel attracted to you and then be the good guy that you are and she will see you as a sexy, charming man.

In terms of relationships, there's nothing wrong with a bit of romance, but a woman will only appreciate it if she respects her man, feels attracted to him and is still in love with him.

If you're a romantic guy at heart, this doesn't mean that you should go against your nature and pretend to be someone you're not (e.g. a careless bad boy, an asshole who doesn't care about women, etc), but it is worth stepping back for a moment to consider whether your "romantic" actions are generating the type of responses that you really want.

Tuning Into Her Style of Love

If you have a girlfriend, fiancée or wife and you want to take your love to a deeper place that will strengthen your relationship, you need to tune into what style of love she prefers and really wants to experience with you.

For example: Does she need you to come up with different ways of saying I love you, or does she actually want you to show it via your behavior or actions? Is she happiest when you show her how much you care, tell her how much you care or a combination of both?

How does she want you to express your love for her? What will make her the happiest?

Of course, sometimes a woman doesn't know how to express it and if you ask her, she might say, "I don't know, as long as you love me and we stay together, I don't care," but if you pay attention, you will be able to pick up on what kind of love expression she responds to the most.

You then need to stop wasting time expressing love in ways that you think are important and focus in on what she cares about the most.

A word of warning though...

As a man, you have to ensure that your woman loves you and respects you in return. You shouldn't ever have a relationship dynamic where you're always giving to her and not expecting anything in return.

Women resent men who do that.

Love needs to be a two-way thing, so if you are giving love to your woman and she's not giving it in return, you need to address that with her.

If you are being a great man to her and she respects you and feels attracted to you, then she will naturally express love to you in her own unique way. You won't have to tell her to do it, because she will naturally do it.

However, if she happens to be a little immature when it comes to love and relationships, she might make the mistake of taking your love for granted.

In cases like that, you need to point it out and let her know that you are disappointed in her and know she can do better than that, but that you forgive her if she has simply made a mistake because she wasn't aware that she was behaving in that way.

A woman wants to be able to express her love for you in her own unique way, but if she's not doing a good enough job of it, there's nothing wrong with telling her where you'd like to see some improvements.

Essentially, you need to tell her where you'd like to see improvements, but you also need to show her that you are emotionally strong and secure with or without those improvements.

Why?

Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength in men (e.g confidence, high self-esteem, etc) and turned off by emotional weakness (e.g. insecurity, self-doubt, etc).

She doesn't want to feel as though you will be insecure unless she showers you with love and affection.

She wants to see that you are emotionally strong and secure no matter how much love she shows you, but she also wants to see that you don't allow her to take you for granted.

Most women hate it when a man lets himself be walked all over by a woman. She wants you to love and respect her, but not be a doormat for her to walk all over.

My Girlfriend's Parents Hate Me: 9 Possible Reasons Why

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend's parents hate you, it's not always going to be your fault (e.g. they could be trying to keep their daughter single for now or they may find it difficult to get along with people who are different than they are).

However, sometimes it will be your fault.

For example: Sometimes a girlfriend's parents will hate her boyfriend because

1. He Lacks purpose in life.

Most parents want their daughter to find a guy who is capable of succeeding in life.

A guy doesn't already have to be successful to be impressive to the parents, but he has to at least show that he has the capacity to achieve an acceptable level of success in life.

So, when a woman's parents notice that her boyfriend lacks purpose and direction in life and is essentially making his whole life about his relationship with their daughter, they begin to worry that she is wasting her time with a no hoper.

How about you?

What are you aiming to achieve in life other than have a relationship with your girlfriend? Are you making constant progress towards achieving your biggest ambitions and dreams, or are you hiding from your true potential as a man behind the safety and comfort of your relationship with her?

2. He continually fails at what he is trying to achieve in life.

[image: Constantly making the wrong decisions in life]

There's nothing wrong with failing at what you are trying to achieve, as long as you learn from your mistakes and do a better job the next time you try.

If a guy fails at something and then pushes onto victory the next time or after another couple of attempts, he will be perceived as a fighter and a man of strong character.

On the other hand, if he constantly fails at the same or similar things, never learns from his failures and doesn't show enough progress and improvement, it can understandably cause tension between him and his girlfriend's family.

The parents may begin to worry that their daughter is in a relationship with a guy who is going nowhere fast. If she happens to get pregnant to him by accident or on purpose, they worry that life will probably always be a struggle for them.

3. He ignores them and only cares about her.

Her parents conceived her and her mother gave birth to her. She is their child, no matter what guy comes into her life.

So, if a boyfriend perceives his girlfriend's parents as an annoyance or as people that he wishes would get out of their life, they are naturally going to feel resentful towards him.

4. He is selfish.

[image: Selfishly ignoring parents and only focussing on her]

Most parents want to see that their daughter's boyfriend is in the relationship because he has the intention to be a part of their family for the rest of his life.

So, if a guy doesn't treat their daughter well and only really cares about himself and his life, they will know that he isn't yet capable of having a grown up relationship.

They will look at him as just a kid or a confused guy (regardless of whether he is 18 or 50) who still doesn't know what it means to be a man in a relationship with a woman.

They will also feel as though he doesn't yet understand how to be a loving person who is capable of adding love to their family unit.

Selfishness is not an endearing quality and will not be easily overlooked or forgiven, especially when it comes to a parent's precious daughter.

5. He doesn't make her parents feel good about themselves.

Some women aren't close with their parents or family at all, but if you've found yourself saying, "My girlfriends parents hate me" then you're probably in a relationship with a woman who does care about her parents and family.

If you are in a relationship with a woman who values family and loves and respects her parents, you need to realize that you're not only in a relationship with her, but with her parents as well.

When you do interact with her parents, you need to treat them as though they are great friends of yours that you love and respect. It has to be genuine too.

You don't have to go overboard and spend a lot of energy trying to make her parents happy, but you at least need to love them and be kind to them. Treat them as though they will be important people in your life for the rest of your life.

6. He doesn't seem committed enough to their daughter.

[image: Boyfriend disrespecting girlfriend]

Some guys make the mistake of thinking that they can disrespect their girlfriend in any way they want and she will stick around because she has said, "I love you" and wouldn't want to lose him.

What parents want to see is that their daughter's boyfriend is truly committed to her and only her. That doesn't mean that he can't find other women attractive or have female friends, but it does mean that he should be more than happy to be with her and only her for life.

When a parent notices that their daughter's boyfriend doesn't seem to be the type of guy who will truly commit to her in the long run (e.g. eventually get engaged, marry her, protect her and provide for her, etc) it makes them resent him as a guy who is simply wasting her time.

Of course, she might not ever want to get engaged or have a family, but her parents will still want to see that her boyfriend is the type of guy who would be willing to give her that if she wanted it.

They also want to see that he is the type of guy who wouldn't stray and begin cheating on her later on in a relationship or marriage. If they get the sense that he is untrustworthy in that way because he isn't truly committed to the idea of being with their daughter for life, it's only natural that they will begin to dislike him.

7. He doesn't make her parents feel proud.

Every parent wants to feel proud of their children and what they accomplish in life.

One thing that adds to a parent's pride is to know that their daughter is dating someone who they regard as being "a catch", someone they can "show off" to their friends.

If a guy is a slob, rude, lazy, doesn't get along well with their family or lacks ambition and drive, then they will feel embarrassed rather than proud that their daughter is dating him.

8. He argues a lot with their daughter in front of them.

[image: Boyfriend arguing with girlfriend]

A woman's parents want to see that she is with a man who can control his emotions, rather than getting angry and arguing with her in front of other people.

Ideally, they want to see that he can turn what would have been an argument into something laugh and smile about.

If a guy argues with his girlfriend all the time, especially in front of her parents, it's not going to make them feel as though she would be safe with him for life.

Arguments should always be conducted in private and if a couple argues in front of parents, then this shows cracks in the relationship that can lead to bigger problems later on.

Parents do not want to see their children in a potentially abusive and unhappy relationship and they will not like the guy if they suspect that he is abusing her or making her miserable.

9. He is too protective and controlling of their daughter.

[image: Too protective and controlling]

It goes without saying, parents want their children to be safe, protected and taken care of.

However, a boyfriend who is so protective to the point where he stops her from having fun and enjoying her life, it isn't going to earn him her parents' respect.

Although being protective is a good thing, being stifling and overbearing is not.

A woman may feel flattered that her boyfriend starts out being protective, but if he becomes controlling, she will begin to lose respect for him because she will know that is coming from his insecurities.

Women are attracted to the emotional strengths of men (e.g. confidence, self esteem) and turned off by the emotional weaknesses (e.g. insecurity, self doubt).

Keeping Your Relationship Together

What you need to do from here is:

1. Make sure that you are following through on your biggest ambitions in life, as well as loving their daughter.
2. Treat her parents with respect and as though they are great friends of yours. Love them, be kind to them and genuinely care about them.
3. Show her parents that you are continually taking steps to become a better man in ways that you've been lacking up to this point in the relationship.

Depending on how badly you've made the parents feel up to this point, they may not be willing to immediately forgive you and forget about your past mistakes.

If that is the case for you, then I recommend having a conversation with them and starting off by saying, "I just wanted to apologize to the both of you" and then apologize for the mistakes you've made.

After apologizing for your mistakes, you then need to explain what you are now doing differently and what you are aiming to do differently in future (e.g. you've got more purpose in life, you will pay her parent's the respect they deserve rather than ignoring their place in her life, etc).

From there, you need to make sure that you follow through on your promises to become a better man than you already are right now. Let her parents see that you can make a promise and then follow through on it like a man.

When they see that from you on a consistent basis, they will begin to forgive you and then love you as the man who will always be in their daughter's life.

My Girlfriend Said I'm Not the One For Her

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a guy contacts me to say, “My girlfriend said I’m not the one for her,” he’s usually assuming that it is her FINAL decision and that he can’t do anything to change how she feels.

Yet, after helping 100s of guys to bring dead relationships back to life or to get an ex girlfriend, fiancée or wife back I know for sure that a woman’s feelings can change.

How?

You need to get her to respect you again and she will then open herself up to feeling attracted to you (e.g. when you make her laugh, when you’re confident around her, when you’re charming, etc).

When she opens herself back up to feeling attracted to you again, she will then begin to reconnect with her love for you and when that happens, she will then begin to see you as being the one for her.

She will literally get to live out the classic Hollywood movie storyline where a relationship breaks up, changes happen, the couple then gets back together and fall even more madly in love than ever before.

They then live happily ever after with a new and improved relationship dynamic that naturally creates feelings of respect, sexual attraction and passionate love.

You can guide your girlfriend back into feeling love for you again by making her feel respect and attraction for you in new ways.

For example: If a boyfriend is being insecure, clingy, needy and controlling in a relationship with a woman, then he is behaving in a way that will destroy her feelings of respect, love and attraction for him.

However, if a boyfriend is emotionally strong and confident and is able to love her in an emotionally balanced and mature way, then he will be behaving in a way that naturally deepens her feelings of respect, attraction and love for him over time.

Did You Miss the Warning Signs?

[image: My girlfriend said I'm not the one for her anymore]

These days, many guys don’t grow up around male role models who can teach them how to deepen a woman’s feelings of respect, attraction and love over time.

Without that early education, some guys make the mistake of assuming that once they get a woman into a relationship and she says, “I love you” he can pretty much do whatever he wants (e.g. treat her badly, be insecure, cry to her, stop making progress in life, etc) and she will stick around no matter what.

Yet, that’s not how it works anymore.

In the past, women were completely dependent on men and had to stick by a man for life even if he treated her badly or if she was horribly unhappy. Back then, it was shameful to get divorced, so women just put up with their man and stuck out until death did them part.

Not anymore.

In today's world, a woman is allowed to get in and out of relationships (and even marriages) as often as she wants. She will be supported and encouraged by society and even the government.

So, for us modern men, the only way to keep a relationship together for life is to have the ability to deepen a woman's feelings of respect, attraction and love over time so she never wants to leave.

If you are unable to do that, your girlfriend will likely turn to you at some point and say that she doesn't think you are the one for her.

Who is the one for her?

A guy who is able to make her feel deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love over time. A guy who makes her happy, proud and excited to be in love with him, rather than a guy who simply takes her for granted and expects her to stick around for life because things felt good at the start.

When a guy asks me, "Dan â€œ my girlfriend said I'm not the one for her. How do I fix this?" he either lacks relationship experience or hasn't yet been taught how to keep a relationship happy with a woman for life.

He has also either missed her signs of unhappiness in the relationship or chose to ignore them in the hope that she gets over it by remembering how good things used to be.

Yet, as you have probably discovered with your girlfriend â€œ ignoring the issue doesn't fix it.

You've got to do something about this, or else she will break up with you and move on with another guy who can make her feel the type of respect, attraction and love that she feels she deserves when in a relationship.

What She Really Means When She Says â€œ Youâ€œ re Not the One for Meâ€œ

[image: My girlfriend said I'm not the one]

When a woman says, "You're not the one for me" it simply means that she doesn't feel as though you have the ability to make her feel the way she wants when in a relationship.

For example: If a woman is beautiful, socially confident and determined to succeed in life, she is usually going to want to have a boyfriend who has similar qualities.

If she finds herself stuck in a relationship with an insecure guy who lacks confidence in social situations or a guy who doesn't have enough belief in himself to follow through on his biggest goals and ambitions in life, she might start to feel as though she is too good for him.

She might complain to him that she always wants to hang out with friends, while he just wants to stay at home on the couch with her, or stay home alone and play video games.

She might also complain that she is making progress in her career, while he still doesn't even know what he wants to do with his life. In situations like that, the woman will often say that she needs time alone to find herself, work on her life or she might even be more direct by telling her boyfriend, "You're not the one for me."

Making your girlfriend see you as the one is actually a very simple thing to do. You can make it complicated if you want, but it essentially boils down to thisâ€œ!

When you make your girlfriend feel the way that she wants to feel when in a relationship, she will automatically perceive you as being the one for her.

For example: If your girlfriend wants to be able to look up to you and respect you as her confident, emotionally strong man, you need to show her that you have now changed and are that kind of man anymore.

When she sees that you are no longer insecure and are now a confident, emotionally strong man, she will feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you and will stop being in such a hurry to get herself away from you and the relationship.

Don't Expect Her to Teach You

If your girlfriend doesn't feel as though you're the one for her, it means that you need to make some changes to how you think, behave and act around her.

Up to this point in the relationship, you will have been saying and doing things that have been turning her off and slowly ruining her feelings of respect and love for you.

Yet, this isn't something that your girlfriend is going to want to discuss in detail because she won't want to become your teacher in life on how to be a man.

Women want to have a ready made man, rather than having a confused guy that they need to guide and carry through life.

A big part of what attracts a woman to a man is his ability to be a man and take the lead in the relationship without needing her to carry him, or continually lift his spirits and reassure him that everything is okay.

Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness, so if a woman senses that her boyfriend is emotionally weak or confused about how to be a real man, she loses respect for him and ends up feeling more like his mother than his lover.

Feeling that way is a turn off for a girlfriend and she would rather just say, I don't feel the same way about you anymore or You're not the one for me than have to stick around to teach him how to be the man that she needs and wants him to be.

When You Make Her Feel Differently, Her Thinking and Behavior Will Change Too

What you need to do is begin thinking, talking, behaving and taking action in ways that are going to make her feel respect and attraction for you.

She's not going to be interested in any conversations about love, commitment and promises that she made in the past, unless you can first get her respect back and then begin to make her feel attracted in new and exciting ways.

Not knowing this, many guys make some of the following mistakes when their girlfriend says, "You're not the one for me"

1. Begging and pleading for her to give him another chance.

This is a common reaction that guys have when they're faced with the possibility of being dumped by a girlfriend.

A guy will often beg and plead because his girlfriend may have forgiven him and given him another chance in the past when he did it.

Yet, begging and pleading rarely works for long and even if it does work once, it doesn't deepen a woman's feelings of respect, attraction and love!

Begging and pleading comes from emotional weakness and confusion about what it means to be a real man in a relationship with a woman.

Even if begging or pleading seems to "work" the first few times, it's only because the woman is not ready to dump him yet (i.e. they are paying rent together, they work together or go to the same university, she hasn't found a replacement guy yet, etc), which is why she "changes her mind" and gives him another chance for a while.

In reality though, she is gradually losing more and more respect and attraction for him and is continuing to close herself off from him emotionally until she is ready to fully break up with him.

Closing herself off from him (e.g. becoming less affectionate, not saying "I love you" as often or at all, not wanting to spend much time together, not answering all his calls or texts, etc) is a tactic that some women use to gradually make their boyfriend more and more secure, so when the break up finally happens, he is an emotional mess and she can move on feeling good about herself.

It sucks that some women would do that to guys, but the reality is that some guys do it to women as well.

The only way to avoid being treated badly by a woman and avoid getting dumped after being put through weeks or months of rejection, is to actually start being the sort of guy that she can look up to and respect, feel attracted to and feel excited to be in love with.

Watch this video to find out what you need to do:

What you need to understand is that you can CREATE new feelings of respect, attraction and love inside your girlfriend.

How she feels about you is pretty much within your control because it's based on how you think, talk, feel, behave and act around her.

So, if you're begging and pleading to her, it isn't going to make her look at you and think, "Oh, how sweet. He's begging and pleading. He must be the one for me after all."

All it's going to do is turn her off more because you are being emotionally weak and don't even know what to say or do to make her feel attracted to you anymore.

She wants a ready made man, not a guy that isn't ready for a woman like her.

You've got to make a decision today whether you are going to step up and become a better man, or just lose her because you didn't want to improve or change.

2. Asking her to tell him what she needs him to do to make her change her mind.

When a woman is unhappy in a relationship, she will usually give her boyfriend a few chances to figure out what's bothering her and then to take action and fix those things.

Yet, if he never figures it out and keeps asking her to tell him what to do to make her love him again, she will begin to pull away and become colder towards him, until she's ready to completely break up with him.

When a woman gets to a point where sheâs saying, âYouâre not the one for meâ itâs because sheâs lost all hope that you will change and has closed herself off from the love that she used to feel for you.

It doesnât mean that her love is completely dead, but that sheâs simply no longer willing to try to connect with the love that she used to feel for you.

She doesnât see the point of staying connected to the love because youâre not doing enough to make her feel the type of respect and attraction that will justify a decision to stick with you.

Your Actions Speak Louder Than Your Words

Right now you have several choices.

You canâ

- Give up, let her dump you and then deal with the pain for months or years afterwards.
- Dump her, have sex with new women or get a new girlfriend and then move on before she does.
- Get her to feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, which will then lead her to reconnect with the love. From there, you will make the relationship even better than it ever was before.
- Get dumped and then go through the process of getting her back again.

So, what do you want to do?

If you want to keep the relationship together and avoid getting dumped, you need toâ

1. Understand what is really causing her to lose love, respect and attraction for you.

Ask yourselfâ

- Have I been taking her for granted?
- Have I been clingy, needy and insecure?
- Have I been making her feel like a real woman (i.e. feminine, girly, free to be emotional)?
- Have I been going after my true potential in life like a real man?
- Have I been letting her âwear the pantsâ in the relationship?

Your answers will determine what you will need to fix and improve.

2. Begin thinking, behaving, talking and taking action in a more attractive way.

You donât have to fix everything and be perfect to convince her to give you another chance, but you do have to show her that youâre working on your issues and improving yourself.

Are you prepared to do what it takes to keep your relationship alive?

How to Make Your Wife Fall In Love With You Again: 7 Tips

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

One of the greatest things about love is that it doesn't die.

Lately, it might seem as though your wife has stopped loving you or that the love between you is dead and gone.

Yet, what I've found is that love always continues to exist in the background and can be brought back into the foreground when a man retriggers a woman's feelings of respect and attraction for him again.

In other words, the love that your wife feels for you is still there in the background, but it is currently being suppressed by negative feelings such as frustration, resentment, stress and disappointment.

So, what is the secret of how to make your wife fall in love with you again? How can you get the old feelings of love to come out from the background and back into the foreground between you and her?

In addition to what I teach in the video above, here are 7 ways to do bring back the love...

1. Bring her happy, loving smile back

[image: Bring her happy, loving smile back]

One of the easiest ways to help make your wife fall back in love with you again is to stop taking things so seriously.

Life is serious at times, but for the most part, I've found that people tend to take things much more seriously than they need to.

Little disagreements turn into big arguments, minor annoyances turn into huge stressful problems and over time, it pushes the love out of the way and forces it into the background.

The man and woman want to be able to love each other like they used to, but they are so damn pissed off at everything.

Life becomes so difficult to even think about and the next thing they know, they've fallen out of love with each other and are starting to think that they might be happier with someone else.

Yet, what they don't realize is that they are creating their own problems by taking everything about life so seriously, rather than looking at the funny side of things or looking at things from a more light-hearted perspective.

What I've found is that love flows so much more freely between a man and a woman when they are able to smile, laugh and look at life in a more positive light.

Yet, as a man, you can't expect your woman to be the emotionally strong one for the both of you and then lead the way to a positive outlook on life.

When a man expects his woman to be strong and lead the way to better feelings for both of them, she feels turned off that she is stuck with a man who needs her to be the stronger one.

She also begins to resent him for it.

Over time, her resentment towards him builds up to the point where she finds it difficult to love him as easily as she did in the early days.

So, if the happiness has gone out of your marriage, how can you bring her smile back and begin the process of getting her to fall in love with you again?

From now on, you need to be willing to smile, laugh and look at things in a more light-hearted manner. This especially applies to things that usually make you irritated or frustrated.

Initially, this might be a bit of a struggle for some men who've gotten used to being so serious and easily irritated, but you have to be prepared to fight through the urge to get frustrated and force yourself to smile and be more light-hearted about it.

Find a way to turn it into something to laugh about or smile about. Use your unique sense of humor to put a funny spin on it and make you and your wife laugh like you used to in the early days.

When you are able to get her to laugh, smile and look at life in a more positive, light-hearted manner around you on a consistent basis, her love for you will begin to flow more freely, effortlessly and willingly.

2. Make her feel girly and feminine again

Another easy (and free) way to get your wife to fall in love with you again is to consistently make her feel feminine and girly in response to your masculinity.

When a man and a woman become too neutral around each other (i.e. neither one of them is very masculine or very feminine around each other), the sexual spark and excitement goes away.

Think about it this way...

For a battery to work, it needs a positive and negative to create an electrical charge. For two magnets to be attracted to each other, there must be a negative and positive pole. Two positives repel each other.

The same applies to human sexual attraction in terms of masculine and feminine energy.

For sexual attraction to exist and remain charged and alive, there needs to be a clear masculine and feminine energy.

A mistake that some husbands make is to continually treat their wife as though she is a neutral friend rather than treating her like a feminine woman. Some husbands also make the mistake of expecting their wife to think, feel, behave and act like more of a man rather than being emotional, irrational and girly like a woman.

Making a woman feel neutral or have to adopt a more masculine way of being not only ruins the sexual dynamic, but it also makes it difficult for the wife to love her husband in a romantic way.

She might love him as a friend and her companion, but she won't feel like loving him in the way that she used to when there was a better energy dynamic between them in the early days of the relationship.

When you make your wife feel feminine and girly in response to your masculinity, she will immediately begin to feel excited about being in love with you again because you will be making her feel like a "real woman."

Making a woman feel like a real woman essentially means that she feels feminine, girly and free to be emotional like a woman around you. She doesn't have to think, act, behave and feel like a man does when around you.

When you make a woman feel feminine and girly in response to your masculinity, she will instantly feel attracted to you in a deep, primal and fundamental way that she cannot switch off.

Making your wife feel feminine and girly is one of many different ways that you can get her to feel more attracted to you again.

You actually have a lot of direct control and influence over how much or little attraction your wife feels for you, because much of a woman's attraction for a man is based on how he makes her feel when he interacts with her.

3. Get excited about new, mutual goals

In a long term relationship or marriage, most couples team up and combine their efforts to achieve mutually beneficial and enjoyable goals over time.

For example: In the early days, a couple might work hard towards the goal of buying a home, raising children and sharing fun experiences with extended family (e.g. birthday parties for the kids, dinner parties, etc).

However, when most of a couple's major goals have been achieved or are almost achieved, the man or woman may begin to feel restless or as though the relationship or marriage doesn't have much purpose or meaning anymore.

So, it's always important to make sure that both you and your wife to have big, exciting goals that you're aiming for that will be fulfilling for the both of you.

If it's only you who has long-term goals and she has nothing to do (or vice versa), then problems may begin to emerge in your marriage.

For example: If a wife is pushing forward to achieve big and exciting goals and her husband is content to just sit on the couch for the rest of his life, she might end up feeling as though they are growing apart.

She might end up spending a lot of time outside the home and if she happens to meet a man who doesn't care about seducing married women into having an affair, she might stray and possibly even leave her husband.

On the other hand, if her husband works too much and doesn't have much time to spend with her, she might begin to seek love and attention in other ways.

If gets on an online dating site or loads up an app like Tinder, it won't take her long to set up a profile and she will then have 100s of men in the surrounding area who are willing to meet up with her right away even though she is married.

So, it's always important to make sure that you and your wife are working towards mutually enjoyable and beneficial goals; otherwise you may begin to drift apart over time.

4. Turn her on without expecting sex

After being in a relationship for a long time, it's understandable that a man and a woman might fall into some routines regarding sex.

One of the routines that tends to make a woman feel unhappy, is when her man only really wants to touch her and make her feel turned on if it means that he is going to get some sex in return.

What a man needs to do is to keep things fresh, stimulating and unpredictable by not always wanting a full, sexual result in return for his foreplay efforts.

For example: Give her a neck rub, tickle her on the couch and then spank her on the butt, or hug her and then look her in the eyes for a relaxing 5-10 seconds before telling her that you love her and think she is the sexiest woman on Earth.

Then, just get back to doing what you were doing without expecting her to want to have sex as a result of your efforts to turn her on.

Rather than feeling as though you are two, robotic human beings who are going through the same old repetitive cycles, she will feel the excitement of not knowing exactly what's going to happen around you.

She will know that you love her so much that you are willing to give her the experience of feeling turned on, without expecting anything in return.

Ironically, this will make her want to be more sexual with you more often. The more sexually interested she is in you, the more easily she will love you in a romantic, intimate way.

5. Consistently be the man she can look up to and respect

As you would know, life isn't always easy and straightforward.

Throughout life, we often encounter challenges and obstacles along the way to success, happiness and personal fulfilment.

To cope with life's ups and downs, it's important to have a more patient, open-minded perspective about life, rather than being naïve and expecting that everything should go perfectly 100% of the time.

Lacking that fundamental wisdom about life, some men fall into the trap of becoming depressed and stressed out when they realize that no matter how hard they try, life just doesn't seem to go perfectly all the time.

Confused and feeling emotionally beaten up by the ups and downs of life, these men will often make the mistake of looking to their wife for constant emotional support and guidance.

While there is absolutely nothing wrong with having an emotionally vulnerable moment as a man when you are under tremendous pressure, what a woman wants to see is that you deal with the situation like a man by focussing on a solution rather than wasting time feeling emotional.

Unlike women who are free to go around in emotional circles for life (that's part of being feminine), we men need to be clear, direct and forward moving (that's part of being masculine).

We can feel the emotions, but to be a masculine man that a woman can look up to and respect for life, we need to get on with it by focussing on a solution and moving forward, rather than wasting time feeling emotional.

When a man goes around in circles emotionally (e.g. feels depressed, complains, gets motivated and then loses motivation, throws his hands up in the air, gets excited, loses interest again, etc), a woman naturally loses respect for him as a man.

She might feel sorry for him and still love him in a pitiful way, but she's not going to love him in a romantic, sexual way.

Since she can't fully respect him as her man, she won't be able to feel enough attraction for him and when that happens, she will begin to fall out of love with him over time.

So, if you cause your wife to lose enough respect and attraction for you over time, she may fall out of love with you and then begin to stray emotionally or physically.

What's an example of how you can make her look up to you and respect you?

Stick to your word in terms of what you've promised to change about your thinking, behavior and actions.

When your wife can see that you stick by your word no matter what, she can then relax into your masculine direction and feel free to be a feminine woman.

She doesn't have to worry about being responsible for managing the direction of your life, or the happiness in your marriage.

She knows that you've got things under control and if you have promised that you will do something, she can rely on you to follow through until it's done.

Of course, approaching life in that way is beneficial for both you and her. She gets to feel like a feminine woman around you and you get a woman who loves you and looks up to you as her man.

6. Change how she feels, rather than trying to change how she thinks

In any long term relationship or marriage, it's only natural that a woman's thinking, behavior, attitude and actions might annoy her man at times.

However, how he approaches the annoyances will either bring him and his woman closer together or drive them further apart.

For example: If a husband hates how his wife enjoys talking on the phone with her family or friends for hours, it isn't something that he should demand that she change.

He might want her to be interested in spending more time with him, but if talking on the phone with family and friends is what makes her happy at that point in time in her life, he should be willing to let her have that happiness.

Of course, if he gives her all the time in the world to chat on the phone and she doesn't ever want to spend any time with him at all, then there is clearly a problem in the marriage.

Yet, the problem is not going to be fixed by demanding that she spend more time with him rather than yapping away on the phone.

The way to fix the problem and change how she feels is to begin to do some of things that I've already outlined in this article, which will trigger her feelings of respect and attraction.

When a man triggers a woman's feelings of respect and attraction for him, she will immediately begin to reconnect with her loving feelings for him.

Since she will now feel so much better when around him, she will be more eager to spend time with him and won't want to waste so much time away from him while on the phone.

7. Give her a lot of compliments without needing any compliments in return

[image: Give her compliments without needing anything in return]

One of the easiest ways to get love and compliments from your wife is to be the sort of man who remains emotionally strong and secure no matter what she says or does.

An example of this is to give her a lot of compliments without expecting or needing any compliments in return.

Of course, a wife who doesn't respect her husband or feel much attraction for him isn't going to care too much or appreciate a lot of compliments coming from him.

So, if your marriage is suffering from a lack of respect, attraction and love, make sure that you do the other things that I've mentioned in this article first, rather than trying to suck up to her with a bunch of compliments.

Your wife will value your compliments much more when she can look up to you and respect you as her man, so make sure that you work on that as the number one priority first.

When you see her responding positively to the changes in how you think, behave and act around her (i.e. she becomes more loving and attentive towards you), you can then reward her with an increase in free compliments (i.e. compliments where you don't expect anything in return).

Ironically, when you give a woman compliments without needing anything in return, she will naturally want to express more love to you and give you compliments in return.

She will be feeling good around you because you are able to be so emotionally strong and loving with or without her reassurance, so it will feel natural for her to compliment you and express her love for you.

A mistake that some men make is to give their woman compliments, but then complain and whine if she doesn't return the favor.

It's fine to complain to a woman in a confident, easy-going way to alert her to her unsatisfactory behavior (e.g. if she is the sort of woman who normally doesn't express her emotions with words, or has gotten used to taking you for granted and just assuming that you know she cares), but problems occur when a man whines and complains about things in an emotionally needy way.

Why? Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness, so when a husband smothers his wife in his emotional neediness, it's not going to have a positive effect on her.

She ends up feeling like loving him is too much work, compared to how easily it is to love an emotionally secure man. She would rather ignore him and keep out of his way, than have to deal with his emotional insecurity and neediness.

So, what should a husband do?

Essentially, you are going to get much more compliments and expressions of love from your wife when you are able to consistently be the more emotionally courageous one in the marriage.

In other words, you are able to love her and give her compliments without needing her to constantly reassure you or pump up your self-esteem. You are confident and emotionally strong with or without her assistance.

Regardless of what she says or does, you remain emotionally strong and keep bringing everything back to laughter and love.

You believe in the love that you and her share and no matter what type of challenges that you encounter throughout life together, you always remain as the one, strong, emotionally stable person that she can rely on.

When times get tough or you're faced with a challenge, you are emotionally full and strong enough to be able to make her laugh and smile and keep her feeling special, loved and appreciated.

When you approach life with her in that way, the love that she feels for you will flow effortlessly and in abundance. You will be making her feel emotionally safe, protected and hopeful about life and her future and for that, she will love you.

How to Fix Relationship Problems: 6 Examples

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

In this post, I'm going to talk about how to fix relationships problems from the perspective of a man. A relationship between a man and a woman isn't always going to be smooth sailing and sometimes there are going to be rough patches that a couple goes through along the way.

How they approach those relationship problems will either tear them apart or bring them closer together over time.

So, here are 6 relationship problems and how to fix them:

1. Boredom

[image: Boredom in a relationship]

Once the initial excitement of being with someone new has worn off, a couple may become bored with the relationship if they don't really have much to aim for together anymore.

In the beginning, the aim was to go on dates, have sex, fall in love and see what happens. After that, the aim may have been to move in together and go on a holiday or vacation together.

However, once all that has been done and the couple has also been to most of the tourist attractions around town and been out to "dinner and a movie" 20 times, if they don't have anything else to aim for, they might start to feel bored and restless.

So, part of keeping a relationship exciting and relevant to both of you is to always have something bigger to aim for together.

You've got to think about how you can take your relationship to the next level in a way that will be exciting, enjoyable or fulfilling for the both of you.

2. Constant arguing

[image: Constant arguing]

All couples will argue at some point, but when a couple is constantly arguing, it's often because they don't realize that it's okay to make communication and behavioral mistakes around each other at times.

For a relationship to remain happy, relaxed and stress free, both the man and the woman need to be able to give each other a chance to improve over time and get better at communicating and behaving in a way that leads to perfect harmony in the relationship.

Rather than expecting each other to think, behave and communicate perfectly all the time, the expectation needs to be that you're willing to grow together as a couple and improve over time.

When a couple has that understanding, there's no need for constant arguing and bickering over small things. Instead, a couple simply has discussions and gives each other feedback in a more patient and loving manner.

Knowing that you don't have to be perfect 100% of the time, takes the stress out of being around each other. It also allows you both to be able to laugh at any mistakes you make, rather than thinking that it's the end of the world.

3. Jealousy

For a man to avoid becoming overly jealous of his girlfriend (fiancée or wife), he needs to make sure that he is the type of man that she respects, feels attracted to and is excited to be in love with.

Watch this video to understand where some guys go wrong and ruin a perfectly good relationship...

When a man is able to make his woman feel a lot of respect, attraction and love for him, he will automatically be the sort of man that other women find attractive and appealing as well.

When a woman is with that type of man, she will always notice that other women find him attractive when they interact with him. She then doesn't want to find herself a better man, because she knows that she already has the type of man that other women wish they could be with.

She might test her man's confidence by pretending to show interest in other guys, or by talking about other guys who like her, but what she hopes to see is that her man remains confident in his attractiveness and appeal to her no matter what.

4. Lack of sexual desire

[image: Lack of sexual desire in a relationship]

The sexual spark between a man and a woman will die out if the difference between their masculinity and feminine energy is neutralized.

For example: A lot of guys will make the mistake of turning their relationship into more of a neutral friendship, or expecting the woman to think, feel and behave like more of a man.

Rather than allowing her to be feminine, girly, emotional, irrational and act silly and unreasonable at times (e.g. throwing a tantrum), a man will often try to teach his woman to be more like a man.

Another example of when the sexual spark will die out is where a man will stop being "the man" in the relationship.

He will allow his woman to wear the pants and essentially take charge, because he is either too lazy or lacks the emotional masculinity required to consistently be the man in the relationship.

Some guys get annoyed at how easy it is for women, because all they really have to do is look pretty and follow the direction of a man. Yet, if women were to think, behave, act and feel like men, we wouldn't find them as attractive.

Just think about how attractive you find butch, masculine lesbians compared to feminine, girly women. A man may want women to be more like men because it will be easier on him, but he then would miss out on feeling attracted.

It's the clear masculine/feminine difference between men and women that make men and women feel attracted to each other. So, when a man and a woman become neutral around each other in a relationship or when a man is too lazy or stubborn to be the man, the sexual spark will die out.

So, if the spark has died in your relationship, then you need to go back to being a very masculine man. You need to be able to make her feel feminine and girly in response to your masculinity.

When you do that, both you and her will naturally feel attracted to each other again.

In the beginning of a relationship, a woman will often put up with a guy not being able to make her feel feminine and girly, because she is desperate to get into a relationship or because it's exciting enough to be with someone new.

However, when a relationship gets past the initial stages, it's extremely important that a man maintains (or creates) a clear masculine/feminine difference between himself and the woman. If he doesn't do that, the spark will naturally die out and there will be nothing to feel attracted to anymore.

5. Trust issues

When in a relationship with a woman, you have to give her your full trust and then let her take care of it.

There's no guarantee that she will be an honest, loyal, trustworthy woman for life, but giving your trust ensures that the love, respect and attraction between you can mature and deepen over time.

If you are unable to trust your woman, she will be turned off on a deep level by your emotional insecurity and she won't be able to fully respect you as a result.

When a woman cannot fully respect her, she will be unable to feel the deeper type of attraction that grows over time in a relationship between a man and a woman.

If there other relationship problems in addition to trust issues between the man and woman, then she may begin to fall out of love with him and then either break up with him or cheat on him.

If trust issues are one of the relationship problems that you're trying to fix, then you need to make sure that from now on, you are emotionally strong and brave enough to give her your full trust.

As a man, you need to be the braver, stronger one for the both of you. You can't expect a woman to constantly have to reassure you of her devotion and commitment. You have to be strong enough to give her your trust and wise enough to know that there are no 100% guarantees with human relationships.

Something might go wrong in the future, or you and her might remain together in perfect harmony forever. It cannot be guaranteed.

However, the best way to ensure that the love, respect and attraction grows between you over time, is for you to be the emotionally stronger and braver one in the relationship.

Give her your trust and let her take care of it. Your trust will be left in her hands and she's either going to abuse it or respect it and honor it for life.

Either way, you need to make sure that you remain emotionally strong no matter what. When she sees that you are emotionally strong enough and brave enough to give her that trust no matter what, it will make her feel a deep respect and attraction for you.

Of course, if your wife (girlfriend or fiancée) is a liar and you can't trust her alone for 2 minutes with a guy, then it won't matter if you give her your full trust or not.

If she's a woman of bad character (i.e. disloyal, likes to hurt people emotionally, untrustworthy, etc), then she's probably going to screw you over no matter what.

Is your woman an honest, trustworthy woman, or is she the type who lies and would cheat on you if she could get away with it?

If she is honest and trustworthy, then fix your relationship problems and make her never want to leave you...

However, if she is dishonest and untrustworthy and isn't a good match for you, then you might want to think about replacing her...

6. Lack of respect

A woman can lose respect for her man for many different reasons.

For example, if he:

- Is too insecure.
- Belittle or criticizes her too often.
- Is docile or wimpy around confident men (e.g. at work, around friends, service staff at restaurants, etc), but then bossy and aggressive around her at home.
- Takes her for granted.
- Is too protective and controlling.
- Hides behind his true potential as a man behind the safety of their relationship (e.g. becomes a couch potato, distracts himself with pointless hobbies, etc).
- Always lets her win and get her way, or never lets her win or get her way.
- There are many reasons why a woman will lose respect for her man, but essentially it all comes back to him not being the sort of consistent man that she can look up to and respect.

The type of man that a woman can look up to and respect consistently throughout life, is a man who passionately goes after his true potential in life and pushes forward to success no matter how challenging it gets.

While he is doing that, he also makes sure to give her enough of his love, attention, respect and appreciation. He doesn't push her to the side and take her love, respect, attraction and commitment for granted.

Do You Want to Stay With Her For Life?

If you're committed to the idea of staying with your girlfriend, fianc  or wife for life, then make sure that you don't sit around taking her love and commitment for granted.

A woman will often put up with weeks or months of unhappiness in a relationship, but she won't put up with it forever.

What you need to understand is that it really is possible for a man and a woman to develop deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for each other over time.

You don't have to be one of those couples who break up or get divorced, or who end up hurting each other emotionally (e.g. cheating, emotional abusive, etc).

You can be one of those happy couples that you've seen who are still madly in love with each other 10, 20, 30 and even 40 years into a relationship.

That is what's possible for you and her.

My Wife Wants to Sleep With Another Man

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your wife wants to sleep with another man, it could be because:

1. She's trying to find a replacement guy, so she can then ask for a separation divorce and move in with him right away.
2. She's become bored with her sex life and life in general with you and has fallen victim to being seduced by a coworker, old friend or a man who likes to prey on married women.
3. She never really intended on staying married for life anyway and always secretly felt as though she'd had an affair one day and leave you.
4. You have encouraged her to want to sleep with other men by talking about affairs, swinging, partner swapping or other sexual fantasies. She now wants to live out the fantasy and see what happens.
5. She has been watching one too many drama TV shows that glamorize extra marital affairs, cheating, passionate new romance and divorce.
6. A married female friend of hers has an open relationship with her husband and they seem to be having the time of their lives.
7. She wants to get you back for cheating on her in the past.
8. You are unable to keep up with her sexual appetite and she is asking to be able to have sex with another man, but is promising to keep it non-emotional.
9. She no longer believes in the traditional view of marriage and wants to simply follow her heart and see what happens.
10. She regrets not having much (or any other) sexual experience before getting married and now wants to see what it's like to have sex with another man.
11. She now believes that sex is somehow more important than your marriage and that it will change her life, make her happier or improve your marriage.
12. She believes that it will be easy because it will be "just sex" with no emotional attachment involved.

Here's the thing...

I spend a lot of time every week coaching men over the phone who are trying to get a wife (fiancé or girlfriend) back.

I've heard all the horror stories.

In all my experience, I've only ever heard of one man who was successfully able to have an open relationship with his wife...for a year.

Yet, after the year was up, both of them had become emotionally involved with other people.

He met a new woman who made him feel alive again and his wife met a rich man who took her away on expensive travels around the world.

In other words, if your wife wants to sleep with another man, it might not seem that serious to her right now because it's "just sex," but when a man and a woman connect during sex, they can then develop a unique emotional connection that they really enjoy.

For example: The new man that she begins having sex with might make her laugh so much more than you do, or he might make her cry and chase after him, whereas with you, she always feels safe and doesn't need to try hard to get your attention.

Redefining the Path of Your Marriage

[image: Redefining the path of your marriage]

For a marriage to stay alive, it usually needs to have an ongoing, mutually enjoyable storyline that it is aiming to unfold over time.

For example: When a couple first gets married, the life story that they are aiming for is usually to get a house together, have children and enjoy the fun, responsibilities, love and challenges that come with maintaining close family relationships.

Part of the story might also be career or business goals, which then link to other goals that each or either of you want to achieve for the sake of the marriage and a better life.

So, if your wife now wants to sleep with another man, it might be a case of her no longer having enough of a story to aim for with you in the long run.

You may have fallen into a routine and simply gotten used to the idea of being with each other and not having much else to aim for, other than to stay alive and see your children grow up and be happy.

For some women, that life story is more than enough to keep them satisfied for life. However, not every woman or marriage is the same.

[image: Wife unfulfilled by the marriage]

Some women need to have more of a compelling storyline to their life to keep them interested and engaged in the marriage.

So, if your wife is now seeking happiness and personal fulfillment outside of your marriage, it may be time to redefine the storyline of how your marriage can play out over the next 20, 30 or 40 years depending on how old you are.

For example: You can ask your wife, "If we were to stay faithful to each other and remain married for life, how would you like to see that play out?" and try to get her to imagine a happy, fulfilling marriage that didn't involve having sex with other people.

Of course, not every wife is going to be willing to have that conversation (e.g. if she secretly never wanted to commit for life anyway, if she doesn't respect or feel attracted to her husband, if she just wants to end the marriage so she can get a divorce payout and then live a fun lifestyle for several years before settling down again, etc).

Marriage Isn't the Same For Everyone

[image: Marriage isn't the same for everyone]

In a perfect world, a man and a woman would get married, have a great sex life, have a loving family and live happily ever after in a monogamous marriage.

Yet, in real life, not everyone gets to experience a perfect marriage.

For example: Sometimes, a couple are not a perfect match, but they try hard to make the relationship work and after being together for a while, they decide to get married despite their gut instinct telling them that they probably shouldn't.

In cases like that, a husband and wife will be able to stay together if they can ignore the temptations of affairs and focus on other things in life (e.g. being a close and loving family, spending a lot of time working on lifelong projects, etc).

[image: Redefining the path of your marriage]

It also helps if they are able to be friends with other married couples who don't believe in divorce. When that happens, the happily married couples will usually help keep them on track, especially when they go through rough patches.

Yet, if an unhappily married woman finds herself working with other women who've gone through divorce and are now happier as a result, or works with men who constantly try to seduce her into having an affair, she might eventually get fed up of being unhappily married and either ask for a separation, have an affair behind her husband's back or even ask to be able to sleep with other men.

So, when a guy says to me, “My wife wants to sleep with another man” and asks how he can stop it from happening, it's not always a clear-cut answer because sometimes it is the woman's fault (e.g. when she is an untrustworthy woman, no longer believes in marriage or never believed in it and just put up with it for a while, etc).

However, when it is the man's fault, there is a clear-cut solution and that is to make his wife feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for him again.

In other words, he needs to get the spark back and get his wife to respect him again as her husband for life.

As you will discover from the video above, the amount of attraction your wife feels for you is mostly within your control.

For example: If a husband has stopped flirting with his wife and tends to make her feel like more of a friend than his woman, then she's not going to be feeling very turned on and excited to be in love with him.

Whereas, if a husband is able to make his wife feel feminine and girly in response to his masculinity, she will more naturally feel respectful of him, attracted to him and more excited to be in love with him as his woman.

When a Wife Tries to Fix the Marriage in Weird Ways

People don't always do things correctly, especially when it comes to relationships.

For example: When a wife is unhappy with her marriage, she might concoct elaborate schemes or come up with strange ideas to hopefully fix the complex problems between herself and her husband, or to make herself feel happier in life.

Wanting to sleep with another man is her weird way of hopefully shocking her husband into realizing she's desperately unhappy in the marriage.

She might even believe that it will be good for the marriage or their sex life, because she doesn't know what else to do.

Her husband doesn't know how to get her to respect him enough to not want to sleep with another man and he also doesn't really know how to make her feel enough attraction and love for him to be satisfied with their marriage.

So, he will often feel like he has to go along with it to keep her happy.

Yet, that will be a huge mistake in most cases because her wanting to have sex with another man is not "just sex."

It's more than that, even if she doesn't openly admit it.

In most cases, a wife wanting to have sex with another man is because she is trying to fill the gaps in her relationship with her husband by sleep with another man.

For example: Sometimes a husband may fall into the habit of spending most of his time working, or at work. In his mind he is doing this because he wants to be a better provider for his wife and his family.

Even though his intentions are good, his wife may have to endure long periods of time where she's alone. If she has a full-time job herself, she still might have to do all the housework and wait around for her husband to be free to spend sometime with her.

She might have to regularly reheat dinners for him because he can't guarantee when he'll be home. Then, when he gets home, he might be too tired and worn out to pay her much attention or joke around with her and make her laugh, smile and feel good around him.

This can make some women feel taken for granted and like she's not that important to him (even though, in his mind, he's working so hard for her and the family).

Naturally, if then she meets another guy (e.g. at work) who is charming, attentive and pays her some compliments about her appearance, she might begin to see him as being a better relationship partner than her husband.

Even if the new guy has got many flaws that will turn her off over time (e.g. he is a bit insecure, is too much of a nice guy, etc), right now, she finds him attractive and wants to sleep with him because he's making her feel the way she wants to feel when she's with a man.

Letting Her Wear the Pants

Another common cause of a wife wanting to sleep with other men is when her husband has allowed her to "wear the pants" in the relationship.

Essentially, he just goes along with everything she wants, because he thinks that will make her happy and because he doesn't have to spend any time or energy trying to argue or compete with her.

Yet, here's the thing...

No matter how independent, confident or successful a woman is, she will always still want to be with a man who is dominant enough in the relationship to make her feel like a feminine woman.

This doesn't mean that she wants to be bullied or pushed around by him, or to not have her opinions taken into consideration, but she does want to be with a man who can take the lead and guide them both through life's ups and downs.

She wants to feel that when she's with her man, she can relax into being feminine and not have to worry about taking care of him emotionally (i.e. he is emotionally strong with or without her help or reassurance).

Essentially, the more a woman is put in the position of having to lead in the relationship or take care of her man emotionally because of his insecurities, the less feminine she feels and the less sexual attraction she feels for him as a result.

When the relationship dynamic is out of sync in a marriage (i.e. the man and woman become neutral around each other rather than being clearly opposite in their masculine and feminine energy), the all-important sexual spark also begins to die.

Some guys who had little, or no, relationship experience before they got married, just assume that become neutral around each other each other is a normal thing that happens in a marriage. He doesn't realize that as a man, he needs to lead both himself and his wife into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for each other.

In the distant past, a wife would have to stay with her husband for life, even if she was unhappy. Unfortunately, that's no longer the case in today's world.

These days, a woman often has far too many confusing influences on TV, in the lyrics of pop songs, in movies and from people around her to remain fully committed to an unhappy or dysfunctional marriage.

If her husband isn't able to make her feel the way she wants to feel, a modern wife will sometimes feel like it's okay for her to look to another man to make her feel the attraction, femininity and sexual attraction that's missing in her marriage.

So, if you want to make your wife see you as her ideal man and forget about her unnecessary quest to sleep with another man, you need to start focusing on improving your ability to deepen her respect, attraction and love for you.

You have to show her that no matter where she looks, no other man can compare to you and no other sexual experience is going to be as important as the story that you and her can live out for the rest of your lives together.

Why Do Women Break Up With Men?

Below is a video that I made for guys who have already been dumped by their woman and are now looking to get her back.

In your case, your wife is still with you and most likely hasn't yet asked for a separation or divorce. However, if she wants to sleep with another man, then you better believe that separation and divorce is definitely something that she has been considering.

In her mind, she will most likely be thinking that if it feels right to leave you later on, she will do that, but for now, she will keep you close by saying that it's just a bit of innocent sex and won't mean anything.

Don't let her do that to you.

I've heard so many horror stories from men who've been in your situation or a similar situation and they became an emotional wreck while going through it all.

You've got to regain control of the relationship.

You must ensure that you fix and change whatever has been causing her to lose respect and attraction for you up to this point of the marriage.

Don't continue on making the same old mistakes (e.g. being insecure) and assume that everything will be fine. You've got to make sure that you make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you.

When she sees that you have transformed yourself and she then feels differently about you as a result, she will then naturally begin to change her mind about potentially destroying your marriage by sleeping with another man.

She Doesn't Have Feelings For Me

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a woman says that she doesn't have feelings for you, it can mean different things depending on the status of your relationship.

For example:

1. If you are still only friends and haven't even kissed or had sex yet.

[image: Only friends and haven't kissed or had sex yet]

Most women (except unattractive women) hate it when a guy says that he has "feelings" for her, before she has feelings for him.

Why?

She wants to feel attracted too. It's clear that you are attracted to her, but have you done enough to make her feel sexually attracted and turned on by you? Without sexual feelings, what you have with her is just a friendship.

So, she might have friendly feelings for you, but sexual feelings are what really count when it comes to a relationship between a man and a woman.

Watch this video to understand how a woman's attraction for a man works and how you can use it to get her to have feelings (i.e. sexual and romantic feelings for you)â□!

As you will discover from the video above, you can actively create feelings of attraction inside of her. When you do that, she then have "feelings" for you.

2. If you are already in a relationship.

[image: No feelings when already in a relationship]

The relationship may have started out well, with her developing feelings for you and maybe even saying that she loves you, but that's not the case anymore.

Somewhere along the way, you've destroyed her feelings of respect and attraction for you and she has now fallen out of love with you.

Watch this video to understand how to change how she feels before she breaks up with you...

As you will discover from the video above, you can get her to reconnect with her old feelings, but you have to make sure that you change and improve yourself to stop making the same old mistakes that have been turning her off.

3. If you have already broken up

[image: No feelings after breaking up]

It used to be really difficult for guys to get a woman back after being dumped...and then the internet came along.

Now, guys like me can help you to get your ex girlfriend (fiancée or wife) back into a relationship with you.

Watch this video to understand where guys go wrong when trying to get an ex back who doesn't have feelings for them and what you should do instead if you want to be successful.

As you will discover from the video above, the "feelings" that a woman needs to feel to justify being in a relationship are respect, attraction and love.

If she currently doesn't respect you (e.g. because you've been insecure), then she's not going to allow herself to feel much attraction for you, which will also keep her disconnected from the love.

If you want to get her to have feelings for you again, you need to start by fixing your issues and improving yourself enough so you can get her respect back.

You CAN Change How She Feels About You

If you're currently in a position where you are saying, "I really want this woman to be my girlfriend, but she doesn't have feelings for me," it's only natural that you might be feeling discouraged about your chances of making her feel differently.

After all, you've most-likely tried everything to get her to like you in the same way as you like you, including being an even nicer guy than you usually are to women.

Yet, no matter what you say or do, she remains emotionally closed off to you.

So, you might start to think things like:

- Am I not good looking enough for her?
- Am I not tall enough?
- Am I not rich enough?
- Do I need to work out more in the gym to look stronger?
- Should I wear cooler clothes?

It's all very confusing.

Yet, to someone like me, it is very simple.

The reason why she doesn't have feelings for you is that you're not doing enough to make her feel sexually attracted and turned on.

You might be a really good guy, but that just isn't enough for a woman to want to be in a relationship. The sexual element also has to be there in a strong and powerful way.

If she only kind of feels attracted to you, then she's only going to kind of have feelings for you.

You have to focus on improving your ability to attract her when you talk to her and interact with her, otherwise she just won't feel motivated to be in a relationship with you.

What you need to realize is that you have a lot of direct control over how much or little attraction you make her feel for you.

Just because she you like currently doesn't have feelings for you, it doesn't mean her feelings for you can't change.

In fact, feelings change all the time.

Have you ever noticed how a person can literally go from hating someone to forgiving them, liking them and possibly even loving them?

Maybe that even happened to you with a coworker or someone at university. You didn't like them initially, but they were then able to change how you felt about them to the point where you might have even become close friends and really liked each other.

How did this happen?

When a person changes the kind of behavior, communication style and attitude that was causing you to dislike them (or not have feelings for them), you can then begin to see them in a different light and as a result, your feelings towards them will also change.

In the case of this particular woman that you like, she can literally go from not having feelings for you, to really wanting to be with you.

It all depends on your ability to trigger her feelings of sexual attraction for you.

Right now, she most likely has "friendly" feelings towards you, but the sexual element is missing because you haven't been doing enough to trigger her feelings of sexual attraction for you.

This problem often happens when a guy is very nice to a woman because he is hoping that she will "like" him enough as a person to give him a chance to be with her.

Yet, that approach usually ends up in a rejection where the woman says something like, "Sorry, I don't have feelings for you" or "You're a nice guy, but I just don't feel the same way you do."

Watch this video to find out why being too nice to a woman and acting like just a friend is usually a recipe for disaster...

As you will discover from the video above, there's nothing wrong with being nice to a woman and being her friend, but that isn't enough to cause a woman to have strong sexual and romantic feelings for you.

You have to focus on making her feel sexually attracted and turned on by how you talk to her and interact with her.

When you do that, she will be motivated to want to kiss you, have sex with you and be in a relationship with you.

She Wants a Man Who Can Make Her Feel Like a Real Woman

One of the ways to make a woman feel like a real woman is to make her feel feminine and girly in response to your masculinity.

Making a woman feel girly in response to your masculinity is just one of more than 100 ways that you can make women feel attracted to you, but it's definitely one of the most powerful and direct ways.

A lot of guys make the mistake of suppressing their masculinity around women to seem nice, neutral and sweet.

They want to show the woman how nice, sweet, trustworthy and kind they are in the hopes that it will make her think, “WOW! He’s so nice and considerate! I have to be with him!”

Yet, the truth is that women only appreciate nice, sweet behavior from men whom they are sexually attracted to.

When a guy makes a woman feel sexually attracted to him by being masculine around her, she will then see him nice, sweet behavior as charming, sexy and lovable.

However, if a guy suppresses his masculinity (i.e. puts on an act of being an even nicer, sweeter guy than he is) around a woman and showers her with nice behavior, compliments and sweet gestures, she will see that he is trying to win her over in that way.

She will then play hard to get because she will realize that he’s a desperate guy who doesn’t even know how to attract women and is simply hoping to be liked enough to be given a chance.

Women don’t want to feel like they are doing you a favor by being with you. They want to feel lucky to score an awesome guy like you, which is why women love guys who are more of a challenge!

As you will discover from the video above, most guys are way too easily impressed by women simply based on the woman’s looks.

Attractive women get really bored of how easy it is for them to attract guys for sex and romance. All she has to do is be nice to guys and most guys will jump at the chance to be with her.

Yet, she wants more than just to give a sex-starved guy a chance to be with her.

She wants a guy who can easily attract other women, but will give her a chance to be with him if she impresses him enough.

Some guys hate to hear that women think that way and complain about how women make things so complicated. Yet, it is how the human mating dance works.

In this life, you will either that nature works that way and flow with it, or you keep trying to fight against nature and experience rejection after rejection.

Sexual Feelings Are What Really Count

You’re probably a really good guy, right?

You know in your heart and mind that you would treat her so well. You have absolutely no intention of treating her badly like you’ve seen other guys treat her. You only want good things for her and you.

Yet, she doesn’t care about that right now.

Why?

All of your good qualities (i.e. the fact that you’re a nice guy, are intelligent, have good intentions with her, are trustworthy, etc) are not important to her before she feels like you are a sexual match.

Essentially, to get a woman to have “feelings” for you and want to be in a sexual relationship with you, she needs to feel sexual attraction for you first.

At this point, some guys might wonder, “She has so many other, better looking guys to choose from, so why would she go for me? Surely those guys are going to be more sexually attractive to her than I am, right?”

No.

Some women do choose men based on looks, but the majority of women have what I call an Open Type, which means that there are open to being with all different types of guys, as long as the guy can make her feel attracted in other ways.

For example: If a guy makes her feel attracted to his confidence, masculine vibe and makes her laugh, she is going to feel attracted to him. The more ways that he is able to use his personality to attract her and turn her on, the more attraction she will feel for him.

When she feels a lot of attraction, she will actually start to look at his physical appearance in a positive light.

Even though he doesn't have male model features, she will say that he is good looking, handsome or sexy, because she is feeling attracted to him and is looking at his physical appearance through the lens of her attraction for him.

Most guys on this planet aren't aware of the knowledge that you just uncovered in the previous paragraph.

Most guys believe that a woman's attraction for a man is all about his looks, money, height and social status.

Yes, those things certainly can attract women, but women are not limited to feeling attracted to men for just those things alone.

You can attract women in other ways.

Yet, the same rule doesn't apply for our attraction for women.

We men are mostly attracted to a woman's physical appearance. We don't care if an unattractive woman is confident, tall, muscular or has a lot of money â€" she is still unattractive to the majority of us men.

Her looks are her main weapon of attraction, but for us men, who we are on the inside (and how that comes out via our body language, attitude, behavior, conversation, actions, etc) is our main weapon.

Although a woman can feel attracted to a man's physical appearance, the most intense types of attraction she can feel are based on what a guy says and does when interacting with her.

So, if you're saying, "She doesn't have feelings for me because I'm not good looking enough," you can forget about using that as your excuse from now on.

Yes, there are some women who only have sex with and date good looking (or rich) guys, but they really are a minority.

Most women will have sex with, get into a relationship with and even marry a man who is perceived as being unattractive or ugly by other people. Why?

To her, he is attractive because a woman can have feelings for a guy based on a lot more complex things than his looks, money or status.

If a guy can make her feel attracted to his personality and who he is as a man, most women won't care about his looks, his race or any of the other excuses that guys use to stop themselves from getting the women they really want.

So, when a woman says she doesn't have feelings for you, it generally has nothing to do with your looks and more to do with how you are turning her off with your behavior, attitude, body language, conversation style and actions.

3 Mistakes That Prevent a Woman From Feeling Enough Attraction

While reading through the list below, don't worry if you've made one or more of these mistakes. Why?

Women are very forgiving. If a guy changes his ways and becomes more attractive and appealing to her, a woman will almost always be willing to forgive and forget the mistakes he made in the past.

So, if you've screwed up in any of the following ways, don't worry â€¢ you can recover from it and get her to have feelings for you.

The first mistake isâ€¢|

1. Assuming that by being her friend, he will eventually â€¢ growâ€¢ on her enough that she will want to be with him in a sexual way.

[image: Mistakes that prevent a woman from having feelings]

This is probably the most common mistake that guys make with a woman they like.

A guy will assume that, because he's not a model or rich guy, the best way to get a woman to like him is to be a great friend to her first.

Yes, itâ€¢s true that a woman will sometimes â€¢ likeâ€¢ a guy like that, but liking a guy as a friend is not the same as wanting to have sex with him.

In fact, if a guy spends a lot of time building a friendship with a woman and then suddenly tells her heâ€¢s interested in her in a sexual way, she will usually be quite upset about it and may react by saying, â€¢ You know I like you as a friend, but I donâ€¢t have feelings for you in that way.â€¢

She might then give him a classic line like, “I don't want to ruin our friendship” or “I'm not looking for a relationship right now” or “I see you as more of a brother than anything else” or “We're better off as friends and I don't want to ruin that.”

Essentially, this is a woman's way of trying to hint at the fact that she isn't sexually attracted to the guy.

Why doesn't she just come out and say that?

Simple.

She doesn't want to teach him what he needs to do to be sexually attractive to her. She wants a ready made man who already gets it.

If she has to teach a guy how to initially attract her, what else is he going to be clueless about in a relationship and in life? Will he be the sort of guy that needs her to teach him how to not be insecure and jealous in a relationship?

Will the relationship have a teacher > student dynamic or big sister > little brother feel to it?

That's not what she wants.

A woman wants to feel girly and feminine around her guy, rather than feel as though she has to take on the role of being the stronger, wiser and more mature one.

So, if you've been acting like a friend to this woman when you really want to be her lover or boyfriend, then she already knows that you have sexual feelings for her.

She's not stupid.

She can tell when a guy likes her in that way.

Yet, because you've been hiding behind an act of just being a friend, she has secretly been losing respect for you and doesn't have any sexual feelings for you.

She might act like she really likes you and there is a chance for you and her in future, or she might flirt with you to make you chase her more, but until she can see that you now understand what to say and do to turn her on, she is going to remain closed off to you.

She wants you to figure this out on your own, rather than hoping that she takes pity on you and gives you a chance for being so nice to her all this time.

Of course, the same rule doesn't apply to unattractive women.

I need to point that out to be clear here.

If a woman is unattractive, then she will love it when a guy acts like a friend and sucks up to her in the hope of getting a chance. She knows that she is unattractive, so she is actively looking for a guy who doesn't believe in himself.

She needs an insecure guy who isn't going to leave her easily, or who can't easily attract other women. She knows that she can't keep a guy in a relationship for long if he is confident and can easily attract other women.

Yet, if the woman that you like is unattractive, you wouldn't be reading this article and would already be with her.

So, that means that this woman you like is either attractive, pretty or fairly pretty. In other words, she is going to be in a position in the dating market to be more picky than an unattractive woman.

If that's the case for you, then you need to stop acting like a friend and start triggering her feelings of sexual attraction for you. The more attraction you make her feel, the stronger her feelings will be for her.

In fact, as soon as you begin triggering her feelings of sexual attraction properly, you will notice a sudden, distinct change in her behavior and attitude towards you.

She will smile and look at you in a different way. She will have feelings for you.

2. Assuming that being a â□□gentlemanâ□□ is what she wants.

Many guys grow up without proper male role models to teach them how to behave like men who can naturally and easily attract women.

Without that guidance, most of a guy's information about how to behave around women comes either from the characters in movies, on TV, from their mothers or from random women they meet along the way.

Yet, getting advice on how to attract women from those sources is one of the worst things you will ever do.

For example: How many times have you heard a woman say, â□□I just want a guy who is nice and who treats me like a princessâ□□ and then seen her lust after and date jerks and assholes?

How many times has a mother told her son, â□□To get a nice girl you need to be a gentleman,â□□ but other guys are able to get laid and get a girlfriend by just being a normal guy?

The reason why that happens is that attraction is not what most people think it is. Attraction is different to the superficial cultural ideas that float around or come out of people's mouth when they give their random opinion.

A woman's attraction for a man is instinctive and happens automatically when she notices that he has certain personality traits and behaviors (e.g. confidence, masculinity, the ability to make her laugh, charming, charismatic, etc).

A guy can attract women with his personality in literally more than 100 ways, while just being a normal good guy, rather than putting on an act of being an extra nice, super polite, very generous and considerate gentleman.

Although there is nothing wrong with being nice or being a gentleman around women, many guys make the mistake of thinking it will be enough to make a woman have sexual, romantic feelings for them.

It's not.

Nice, gentlemanly behavior is only exciting to a woman if she has sexual feelings for a guy.

If a woman only sees a guy as a friend (i.e. she doesn't have sexual feelings for him), then she will appreciate and like him for how nice he is to her, but she won't be thinking, "WOW! He's being nice to me! I have to sleep with him and get into a relationship with him ASAP!"

If you want to be successful with women, you must start with sexual attraction first. When you do that, everything else flows on smoothly and effortlessly after that.

3. Telling her about his feelings before he has even had sex with her.

Most women don't like it when a guy says that he has feelings for her, before she has sexual feelings for him.

Why?

It's just so EASY for her to get guys to feel that way about her.

If a woman is physically attractive, most guys that she meets would be willing to have sex with her simply based on her looks.

Many of those guys would also be willing to begin a relationship with her, even if they don't particularly like her personality.

Why?

A man's attraction for a woman is primarily based on how she looks. Although we humans now date and have casual sex, the real purpose of our attraction is to find someone to breed with.

If a woman is of breeding age, looks healthy and has an intact body, then she is good enough to breed with.

Yet, the same doesn't apply for a woman's attraction to a man.

For most of human history, it has been a struggle for humans to survive, thrive and prosper.

Even in today's world with our smartphones and supermarkets, a woman still has the natural instinct to breed with a guy who seems like he would be a good survivor.

After all, humans are often just a hurricane or tornado away from being shoved back into basic survival conditions.

Rather than having to think, act, feel and behave like men, women rely on us men to be confident and brave enough to survive and protect her and any children they have.

Even though most people don't start having babies until later on in life these days (because of the dating and hook up culture), a woman's attraction for a man is still based on his ability to survive, thrive and prosper as well as protect her.

So, if a guy looks good, is of breeding age and has an intact body, a woman's attraction doesn't get triggered automatically like ours does for women.

Instead, she has to first assess what type of guy he is first and when she notices attractive personality traits and behaviors, her attraction then begins to switch on.

For example: Is the guy confident or nervous? Is he emotionally masculine or an emotional wimp? Is he socially intelligent or is he clueless about how to get along with all types of people?

This is what really matters to most women.

So, when a guy comes along and says, "I really like you. I think you're different to all the other women I've known. I want to treat you with the respect you deserve," he assumes that he's making his intentions clear with her.

He thinks that by showing her that he doesn't just want to have sex with her, she will think, "Wow! This guy is special. He isn't like all those other guys who only want me for sex. He's a gentleman who is honestly expressing his feelings for me! WOW! I definitely want him!"

However, that's not how it happens.

Revealing your feelings to a woman before sex almost always takes away the excitement and the suspense and anticipation that she hopes to experience with a guy.

When You Make Her Feel Attracted, She Will Have “Feelings” For You Too

You might have been thinking something like, "She doesn't have feelings for me. Have I screwed up my chances with her?" before you arrived at my site.

However, I hope that you now understand that you can change how she feels about you.

The secret is not to be even nicer, friendly and more considerate than you've already been around her. All that stuff is nice, but it doesn't mean anything unless you are triggering her feelings of sexual attraction for you.

My Girlfriend Flirts With Other Guys: 5 Reasons Why She Might Be Doing it

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend flirts with other guys, it could be due to one of the following 5 reasons:

1. She is untrustworthy and won't feel bad if she cheats on you.

[image: Untrustworthy woman flirting with other guy]

Most women are trustworthy and can be relied on to be faithful, but there are some women out there who will lie, cheat and betray their man and not even feel bad about it.

The same applies to men.

Some men will happily cheat on their girlfriend (or wife), lie to her and betray her and not really worry about it.

If your girlfriend fits into that category, then you should dump her right away to teach her a lesson.

Then, make her promise to stop doing that in future, otherwise you will dump her again.

Important: When you tell her to stop flirting with other guys, you have to do it in a confident, self-assured way, not a needy, insecure way.

Telling her to stop in a confident, self-assured way: You have to know that you are more than good enough for her and that she is the one making the mistake of flirting with other guys.

You could easily attract another woman if you wanted to, but you are going to give her a chance.

Telling her to stop in a needy, insecure way: You are insecure about your attractiveness and value to her and need her to stop flirting with other guys, because it is causing you a lot of emotional pain and stress.

Watch this video to see how some guys mess up when their woman begins to lose attraction for them and what you should do instead...

Just make sure that you don't overreact to her flirting with other guys, to the point where you come across as emotionally sensitive or weak.

Remain calm, be confident and let her know that you don't appreciate her flirting with other guys in front of you.

If she respects you, feels attracted to you, loves you and wants to be with you, she will want to stop so she doesn't lose you.

Another reason why your girlfriend may flirt with other guys is that...

2. She is trying to get you to pay more attention to her.

When a first begins, a guy will usually give a woman a lot of attention and affection because he's feeling lust and it's exciting to be falling in love with her.

As good as the beginning feels, some guys make the mistake of taking their girlfriend's love, attraction and respect for granted as the relationship continues.

Rather than making her feel sexy, appreciated and loved, he might expect that she will stick around and be faithful to him because things felt so good at the start.

So, if your girlfriend flirts with other guys, it might be that she's trying to get you to pay more attention to her like you did in the beginning, by showing you how interested other guys are in her.

3. She is trying to gain power over you.

[image: Woman trying to gain power over boyfriend]

If your girlfriend knows that you could easily attract other women, she might be flirting with other guys to make you worried about potentially losing her.

She hopes that if she flirts with enough guys, you will become insecure and she can then gain power over you by threatening to break up with you if you don't do whatever she wants (e.g. ask her to marry you, move in with her, start a family with her, clean up the house, do the dishes, run her errands, etc).

4. She doesn't respect you.

[image: Girlfriend who doesn't respect her boyfriend]

Some guys make the mistake of allowing a woman to disrespect them and treat them badly, just so he can spend time with her and be in a relationship with her.

Other guys start off a relationship well, but then screw things up by allowing the woman to gain too much power over them or by being emotionally insecure too often in the relationship.

The correct relationship that you need to have with a woman is where she respects you and looks up to you as her confident, emotionally strong man. She will then be able to remain open to feeling attracted to who you are and feel excited, proud and happy to be in love with you.

If you're unable to maintain a woman's respect in a relationship (i.e. you let her treat you badly because you're afraid that she will leave, you let her flirt with other guys in front of you, you become insecure when she talks about other guys, etc), she will then begin to lose touch with her feelings of attraction for you.

If a woman doesn't respect a guy, she will automatically begin to lose touch with her feelings of attraction for him. If she loses enough respect and attraction, she will then begin to fall out of love with him.

When that happens, a guy might find himself asking, "My girlfriend flirts with other guys. How can I stop her from doing it?"

To get things back on track, you need to get to respect you again by being emotionally strong and standing up for yourself in a confident, self-assured way rather than a needy way.

Once you get her respect back, you need to maintain that and build on it by continuing to be a confident, emotionally strong guy who doesn't put up with being disrespected. You have to know that you could easily attract another woman, but are giving her a chance to be a better girlfriend for now.

When your girlfriend respects you, feels attracted to you and is proud and excited to be in love with you, she won't feel the need to flirt with other guys because she will already have an awesome boyfriend.

5. She's not that serious about your relationship.

These days, most people don't settle down and get into a lifetime relationship or marriage until their late 20s or early 30s.

So, if your girlfriend is flirting with other guys, she might secretly look at your relationship with her as just another casual, dating relationship that she is going to have at this point in her life.

She might not be ready to settle down and fully commit herself to just one man, so she doesn't really care about showing how loyal and faithful she is.

In her mind, she's not worried if you and her break up tomorrow, next week, next year or five years from now because it's not that serious to her.

What Flirting Usually Means

When a woman flirts with a man that she is sexually attracted to, it usually means that she is signaling to him, â□□ I like you, I'm attracted to you and I wish something could happen between us.â□□

However, sometimes a woman will flirt with guys because it's her way of making guys feel good in her presence. She knows that if she flirts with guys, they will treat her better, give her more compliments and make her feel better about herself.

She might not have any intention of ever sleeping with those guys, but might simply be flirting with them because it's her way of maintaining a high level of self-esteem.

For example: She will flirt with other guys to get them interested in her and giving her compliments, which is going to be much better for her self-esteem than simply talking to them in a neutral, friendly way.

So, if your girlfriend is flirting with other men, should you stop her?

Yes and no.

You really can't stop your girlfriend from doing what she wants because you don't own her.

However, you can get her want to be loyal and only have eyes for you from now on.

How?

By making her feel fully respectful and attracted to you once again and then, continuing to build on that so she falls more deeply in love with you.

As you will discover from the video above, you have a lot of direct control over how much or little respect, attraction and love your girlfriend feels for you.

If your not currently doing much to make her feel respect and attraction for you, then you can expect her to remain madly in love with you.

You've got to make sure that you build on the respect and attraction that your girlfriend feels for you over time, otherwise she might fall out of love with you and begin flirting with other guys for real.

Being Emotionally Strong Around Her

The most important traits that women look for in a man are based on his emotional strength (e.g. confidence, high self-esteem, assertiveness, determination to succeed, strong when under pressure, emotional toughness, etc).

While a little bit of humility can be endearing to some women, being insecure (i.e. emotionally weak) and feeling like you're not good enough for her compared to other guys will rapidly destroy her feelings of respect and attraction for you.

In fact, if she notices that you are insecure about other guys being more attractive and appealing than you are, she might eventually get to the point where she thinks, "Yeah...maybe he is right. Maybe he isn't good enough for me. If so, why am I with him at all? I can do better than him...maybe I should start flirting with other guys and see who likes me and then break up with him when I am ready."

Don't put that idea in her head!

Remain confident in your attractiveness and appeal to her and as a result, you will naturally think, behave and take action in ways that are going to be more attractive to her because you will be coming from an emotionally strong place.

However, if you doubt your attractiveness and appeal to her, it's only natural that you're going to start talking, thinking, behaving and taking action in an insecure way, which is going to turn her off.

Instead of being at ease and not seeing other guys as competition for your girlfriend, you might begin to appear nervous, uptight and worried when other guys say something funny, do something "cool" or even just have an interesting conversation with your girlfriend.

When she notices that you're feeling threatened by other guys, it actually makes the other guys appear more attractive than you because women are mostly attracted to a guy's confidence and belief in himself, which you will be clearly lacking in her eyes.

As a man, you have to maintain control of your attractiveness to women by remaining confident and self-assured at all times. No matter what a woman says or does, you have to maintain your belief in your attractiveness and appeal.

When a woman sees that you have that type of emotional strength, she will naturally respect you and feel attracted to you. She will look at you as being a real man, compared to other guys who simply aren't as emotionally tough and resilient as you are.

Have You Been Putting Up With Her Bad Behavior?

[image: Putting up with her bad behavior]

Some guys make the mistake of assuming that it's good for women to be "in charge" and for men to just go along with whatever she says, by adopting an "anything for a quiet life" attitude.

While some unattractive women do want a pushover guy that they can control, the majority of women are disgusted by men who don't have the balls to put her in her place.

What's her place?

She needs to respect you. If she doesn't respect you, she will lose you. It's as simple as that.

You are the man, not her. She needs to know her place as your woman and the only way she is going to know that (and stick with it), is if you are capable of being a man that she can consistently look up to and respect.

If you put up with her bad behavior because you're worried about losing her and then having to find another girlfriend, then you're doing it wrong.

If a woman doesn't respect you, she's going to lose touch with her feelings of attraction for you and if that goes on for long enough, she will fall out of love with you.

After a while, she will feel as though there's no point staying faithful to you, because she's secretly planning on dumping you at some point anyway. So, she will then open herself to flirting with other guys to find a replacement guy, before breaking the news to you.

So, before things spiral out of control between you and your girlfriend, make sure that you put her back in her place.

How can you do that?

First and foremost, you need to be respectful towards her, show her that you love her and be a good boyfriend overall. When that is the case, you are then in a position to ask for better treatment.

So, you then tell her that you don't appreciate her flirting with other guys and if she doesn't stop doing it, you're going break up with her.

Don't say it in a whiny, bitchy type of way where you're being insecure and emotionally sensitive. Say it like a strong, self-assured man and simply let her know the deal.

When she sees that you're not being insecure and that you do respect her and love her, she will most-likely feel guilty and sorry for treating you in that way.

From then on, you need to relax and just trust that she will stop flirting with other guys. She might flirt in a friendly way with some guys just to be nice, which is fine and nothing to worry about.

However, if she flirts in an obvious way where she is sexually interested in the other guy, you need to dump her right then and there.

Again, not in a bitchy, moaning, insecure way where you are being emotionally sensitive. Just dump her and tell her that she's not the girl for you.

She will either then accept that because she doesn't care about you anyway, or she will cry and beg for another chance, at which point you can decide to give her that chance or not.

How to Be the Man in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Here are 4 examples of how to be the man in a relationship:

1. Be emotionally stronger than she is

Life is tough sometimes.

Every now and then, life tends to throw you a curveball and a woman wants to be able to rely on her man to remain strong no matter what happens.

She doesn't want to have to be the strong one or "the man" and take care of a scared, sensitive or insecure guy who can't handle the pressures of life as a human being. She wants to be able to relax into being the more emotionally sensitive and vulnerable one, rather than having to be strong for her guy because he is weak.

All across the world, women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength in men (e.g. confidence, determination, high self-esteem, calm under pressure, etc) and turned off by the weakness (e.g. insecurity, shyness, anxiety, nervousness, etc).

When a woman can see that her man always remains emotionally strong no matter how tough life gets or how much she tests him (e.g. by being less affectionate, throwing tantrums, etc), it deepens her respect and attraction for him in a profound way.

She can look up to him and respect him as the man in the relationship, rather than looking down on him and feeling as though she's gotten herself involved with a half a man or a wimpy guy who isn't emotionally strong enough for a woman like her.

These days, millions of guys across the world spend 100s of hours per year in gyms trying to build up muscle in the hope that they can appear strong to women.

There's nothing wrong with a guy working out, building muscle or staying in shape, but it's not the type of strength that makes him the man in the relationship.

He might be able to lift heavy weights, but if he crumbles under the pressure of life or becomes emotionally sensitive and weak in response to the tests of his woman, she is going to look at him as a weak, almost useless man regardless of how big his muscles are.

In today's world, physical strength rarely gets a guy promoted at work, top grades at university or success in business. As men, our inner strength is what is most valuable to women and to ourselves...and women instinctively know that.

A woman might not be able to explain it in that way, but she knows that big muscles on an emotionally weak guy (e.g. nervous, low self-esteem, lack of belief in himself, gives up easily when things get challenging, etc) is not going to pay the bills, make her feel happy and lead both of them to a better life in the future.

There's nothing wrong with having muscles, but if you're not strong on the inside, a woman isn't going to be able to look up to you and respect you as the man in the relationship.

2. Maintain mutual respect

Relationships will often fall apart when a man is unable to maintain the respect between himself and the woman.

For example: He will allow her to disrespect him and treat him badly. In an attempt to change how she is treating him, he will be extra nice to her and try to kiss up to her (e.g. by being very generous, cleaning up around the house, etc) in the hope that she will reward him with more love and respect.

[image: Don't expect her to take charge and lead the way]

Yet, the more he rewards her bad behavior, the less respect she will have for him.

Alternatively, a guy may react with anger and frustration and treat his woman badly if she doesn't respect him, which will only destroy her respect for him even further.

Neither of those approaches work in the long run because the woman loses respect and attraction for the guy and then begins to fall out of love with him.

So, how can you maintain mutual respect in a relationship?

Maintaining mutual respect is about not letting your woman push you around and treat you badly, but at the same time, making sure that you respect her and treat her well too. If either of you are out of line, as a man, you need to be the one who pulls everything back into line.

You can't expect her to "be the man" in the relationship and take charge of the situation.

If you get into an argument, you need to be a man by gaining control over your emotions (i.e. be calmer, more loving, being patient and understanding, etc) and then guide both you and her back to a more harmonious way of communicating, behaving and treating each other.

When you are able to take charge and lead the way like that and guide both you and her back into a more loving, respectful way of being, both you and her grow together as a couple, rather than falling apart through pointless arguments where you end up wasting time and energy blaming each other and trying to make each other feel bad.

For the love and attraction to stay alive in a relationship, you have to make sure that you maintain mutual respect. If a woman doesn't respect you, she will then lose attraction for you and if it goes on for long enough, she will begin to fall out of love with you.

3. Lead the way to a better life for the both of you

To succeed and live a comfortable lifestyle where you can afford to go on vacation and buy nice things, it often takes a lot of hard work, determination and persistence to get there.

Unlike those who are born in a wealthy family and live a comfortable life (often without having to work a day in their life), the rest of the population usually has to work hard and for a long time to be able to enjoy a great life in today's world.

In the competitive world that we now live in, success isn't handed out easily. If it was, everyone would just do a little bit of work and then be hugely successful in life.

It would be nice if life was like that, but down here on planet Earth, life is often a challenge and requires a lot of emotional strength and persistence to achieve great things.

Part of being the man in a relationship is taking on the role of being the person who is mostly responsible for guiding you and her to a better life in the future.

[image: Lead the way to a better life for both of you]

This doesn't mean that you have to do all the work or earn all the money, but that you have to make sure that both of you stay on track to getting where you're aiming to be in 10 or 20 years time.

When a woman sees that her man is rising through the levels of life and reaching for his true potential as a man, she will feel safe with him, respectful of him, attracted to him and will be more in love with him, compared to if he were to hide from his true potential because of laziness or a fear of failure.

4. Make her feel like a real woman

[image: Make her feel feminine in response to your masculinity]

To make a woman feel like a real woman, you need to make her feel girly and feminine in response to your masculinity.

When you are consistently a masculine man (e.g. you are emotionally strong, you don't suppress your masculine vibe around anyone, you are confident, etc), she can relax into being a feminine woman around you.

A mistake that a lot of guys make in a relationship, is to get too comfortable with their woman to the point where he treats her like a friend or "one of the guys" rather than treating her as his girl or woman.

Treating her like a neutral friend or like she is one of the guys, doesn't make her feel like a real woman.

You've always got to let your woman to be in a position where she feels girly and feminine around you. When you do that, she will naturally see you as being the man in the relationship.

Should a Man Pay for Everything?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

No.

Why?

- Some women get offended if a man insists on paying for everything.
- Some women like it when a man pays for everything on a date.
- Some women like it when a man only pays for the first date and then gets her to pay for the second date.
- Some women like it when a man pays for some dates and accepts her offer to pay from time to time.
- Some women want to pay 50/50 for the first date.

In other words, women are crazy!

No, I'm just kidding.

In other words, all women are different, so the answer to the question of, Should a man pay for everything? is that it depends on you and the woman.

Another answer to the question is that it really doesn't matter.

If you want to be successful with women, you should worry so much about what they might think.

For example: If you happen to "offend" a woman for insisting on paying for the first date, then simply laugh at the situation rather than seeing it a huge mistake has now screwed up your chances with her.

It's no big deal.

Just get the bill paid for and get on with kissing, having sex and enjoying a relationship together.

Don't make your relationship any harder than it needs to be.

Relationships are easy when you use the right approach.

Watch this video for more info...

As you will discover from the video above, many men create unnecessary problems in their relationship with a woman and then try really hard to fix those problems in ways that just don't work with women!

Back When Men Had to Pay For Everything...

[image: Back when men had to pay for everything]

In the past, a man usually had to court a woman (with the permission of her father or guardian) and if they happened to go out together, a family member would come along to make sure that they didn't touch or kiss.

In those days, it was taken for granted that the man should pay for everything and the woman simply went along looking pretty.

Even if a woman wanted to pay, she usually didn't have any money of her own because women generally didn't have jobs and were taken care of by their family until they got married.

Today's women are a lot more confident and independent. They can have job and make their own money, so they don't need a man to pay for everything during the dating process.

Yet, people aren't all the same.

Some women still hold onto the idea that a man should pay for everything, while other women don't care and just want to get on with kissing, having sex and enjoying a relationship.

When You Trigger Her Feelings of Sexual Attraction For You, it Won't Matter Who Pays

[image: Should a man pay for everything on a date?]

When a woman agrees to go out on a date with a guy, it usually means there are qualities about him (such as his confidence, masculinity, social intelligence, sense of humor, etc.), which are more attractive to her than just his looks or financial and social status.

Yes, there are some women who will only go out with a guy because he's rich, good looking or has high social status and she will then expect him to pay for everything.

Yet, most women just aren't like that at all these days.

So, when a woman is out on a date with you, it's mainly because she is already attracted to you, and she will be excited about being with you, so the minor details of who pays aren't really going to be that important.

If you're on a date with a woman and aren't sure about whether you should pay or not, you can use it as an opportunity to create even more attraction between you and her. How?

Let's assume that you and her are in a restaurant and the waiter has just brought you the bill.

Rather than feel awkward about it and get into a serious, â€œIâ€™ll payâ€ | No, Iâ€™ll pay,â€ discussion with her, be confident and use some humor to get her feeling attracted to you.

For example: The conversation may go something like this...

You: Iâ€™ve got this one.

Her: [Possibly looking shy and a little nervous]: No, let me pay for at least half.

You: [Smile and say in a joking manner]: Hmmmâ€¦|actually, maybe you should pay for all of it because you were such a chatterbox over dinner. I had to sit here listening to you for like an hour. So, you pay for it.

Her: [Most likely laughing and blushing]: Um, okayâ€¦|really?

You: [Smile and say] No, I'm just kidding. I love talking to youâ€¦|you're beautiful and interesting, so I'll get the check this time. We can split the bill next time.

Her: [Giggling and blushing some more] Okay.

Of course, saying that she was a chatterbox is just a JOKE. You are not seriously complaining about having to listen to her talk so much.

It's just silly chitchat where you are making fun of her in a playful way. As long as you understand that, she will see that you are just saying something silly for a laugh.

[image: If she is very attracted to you, she won't really care who pays for the first date]

Talking to her like that will make her feel attracted to you because you're being confident, masculine (i.e. slightly dominating her for fun) and are making her laugh.

Another example of what to say is:

You: I've got this one.

Her: Oh, okay.

You: [Smile and say] Actually, I've changed my mind. You pay for it.

Her: [Smiling, shocked, etc] Huh?

You: [Smile and say in a joking manner]: Yeah [and buy me an extra dessert to take home. I'm hungry.

Her: [Smiling, confused, etc]

You: [Smile and say]: Just kidding. I'll get the check, but you have to give me a tip for taking you on such a great date. Tip me like $100 or something.

Her: [Laughing]

What's happening here is that you are being confident and funny, which is going to make her feel attracted to you.

You are also making fun of the big "issue" about paying the bill. You're showing her that she doesn't have to be so formal around you and that she can just relax and be real.

Most of the awkwardness that comes with dating happens when one or both of the people is putting on an act of being nicer, more polite and more formal than they would normally be.

If you want the date to go smoothly, drop the act and just be your normal cool, confident and charming self. When she sees that you're being real and not putting on an act, she will then relax and enjoy herself more with you.

Where Guys Go Wrong

[image: Why don't you like me? What's wrong? I've paid for everything. I'm a gentleman!]

As you can see from the examples above, deciding on who pays can be turned into an opportunity to make her feel more attracted to you.

Yet, not all guys understand how to do that.

Here are some common mistakes that guys make when it comes to deciding who should pay!

1. He insists on paying for everything because his mother told him that's what a gentleman will do.

Growing up, most guys get their first bit of dating advice from their mother, who will usually say something like, "If you want to get yourself a nice girl, you have to be a gentleman. Treat her like a princess."

According to most well-meaning mothers, a woman will only be impressed by a man if he buys her flowers before a date, opens the car door for her every time, pulls out her chair at the table, and most importantly, pays for everything.

As great as this advice might have been back in the early 1900s, it doesn't impress the women of today. Why?

When a guy puts on an act of being much nicer than he normally is, a woman can sense it and it makes her guard go up. She's not interacting with the real version of him, so she feels like she needs to be cautious about letting him get to a kiss or sex with her.

So, what should a guy do instead?

Simple.

Make her feel attracted to him by displaying the personality traits and behaviors that naturally attract women (e.g. confidence, charisma, humor, masculinity, etc).

Once the woman feels a lot of attraction for him, she will then appreciate the fact that he also happens to be a gentleman and has good intentions with her.

She will feel excited the guy who turns her on, is also a good guy. It's like hitting the dating jackpot.

However, if a guy is just nice and is putting on an act of being a caring gentleman, the woman isn't going to be feeling turned on by him and will be wondering why he is acting like that.

It's strange how a woman's attraction works, but that's life â□□ things are strange sometimes.

A similar example is how guys who are too nice to women when they meet them, usually end up getting rejected when they try to make a move.

Watch this video to understand whyâ□|

As you will discover by watching the video above, there is nothing wrong with being nice to a woman or being friendly.

However, if you haven't first made the woman feel sexually attracted to you, she's not going to fall madly in love with you because you're being nice to her.

You have to begin by making a woman feel sexually attracted and turned on by you and then everything else flows on naturally and effortlessly after that.

The same applies to an established relationship or marriage.

If you have slipped into just being a caring, friendly type of boyfriend or husband, your woman will begin to lose touch with the spark she once felt for you.

All of a sudden, you will begin to feel more like friends and the idea of cheating or leaving will start to run through her mind.

2. He thinks that paying for everything will buy her attraction or love.

Some guys assume that if they pay for everything, (e.g. expensive dinners, drinks at a club or bar, movie tickets and snacks, etc.) a woman will automatically like him more.

While there are some women who only want money, gifts and to be treated like a princess, the majority of women don't see paying for things as the step before kissing and sex.

Most women will kiss you and have sex with you for free, without you having to buy ANYTHING.

Why?

The most important thing to most women is that they respect you (i.e. you're not a wimp, you're confident, etc), feel attracted to you and enjoy interacting with you.

I've slept with many women who paid for their own drinks at a bar, came over to my place for a first date and even brought wine or ingredients to cook up some food.

So, don't think that the secret to success with women is to pay for everything.

The most important thing is that you make her feel respect and attraction for you and that she actually enjoys interacting with you.

If she's feeling turned on, falling in love and feeling good, she's not going to anything else other than a kiss to want to have sex with you and begin a relationship.

3. He always lets her pay for everything, without ever offering to chip in or take care of some of the checks.

Some guys hear that they shouldn't pay for everything when dating a woman and they end up taking it too far by not paying for ANYTHING at all.

Although it's perfectly fine to let a woman pay for things sometimes, if a guy doesn't even offer to pay once in a while, he simply comes across as being arrogant and disrespectful, which isn't impressive to women.

Yes, some do women like rude, arrogant, selfish guys, but the majority of women do not.

If you want to be successful with women, don't put on an act of being anything other than yourself.

If you are a good guy, then be a good guy. You will then attract women who are compatible with who you really are.

If you are being real, the love and connection between you and her will be more real as well.

So, if you want to pay 50/50, pay for most dates or take turns to pay, just go ahead and do that.

Do what feels right for you, as long as you're not putting on an act of being a more generous guy than you actually are in the hope that it will impress her.

Just be your real self.

If you are being your real self and you then realize that you've been too generous or too much of a cheapskate with women, then you can decide to make some changes to who you are.

You who are is always changing, improving and growing. You're not a fixed point of consciousness that will never change.

You are learning, becoming wiser and becoming more effective at living an awesome life.

What Really Matters to Her

So, should a man pay for everything or not? The answer is: It doesn't really matter to most women.

What really matters to most women is whether or not they feel enough respect and attraction for you to kiss you, have sex with you and give a relationship a chance.

So, don't worry about the details and simply focus on making her feel sexually attracted to you and then getting to a first kiss.

Everything prior to the kiss is just details that don't really matter much at all.

As long as you are being authentic, being respectful and making her feel attracted to you, everything will work out just fine.

My Girlfriend Said She's Too Busy

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Life happens.

We all have schedules, appointments and deadlines to keep, so it unrealistic to expect your girlfriend to be available to you 24/7, 365 days per year.

Yet, if she's constantly making herself unavailable to see you and the best excuse she can come up with is, "I'm just too busy," then there is clearly cause for concern.

[image: My girlfriend said she's too busy for me]

A woman who is in love with her boyfriend will always make herself available for him, no matter how busy she gets.

Women thrive on having love flowing through their life, and they have a deep-seated need to stay in close contact with the man they love.

[image: Girlfriend wanting to be around her boyfriend]

So, if you're in the position where you are saying, "My girlfriend said she's too busy," then you need to ask yourself, "What is she trying to tell me?" and "What can I do to make her change how she's feeling right now?"

3 Signs That Indicate She's Losing Interest in Being in a Relationship With You

Major work projects, a hectic exam schedule or family emergencies aside, when a girlfriend says she's too busy to see her boyfriend, she is trying to avoid him for some reason.

For example: She might have lost attraction for him and is no longer interested in the relationship, or she might just be testing to see if he will chase her and stay interested if she doesn't.

It's also possible that she is insecure and worried about getting into a more committed relationship with him and is trying to create space between them so she can have some time to think about whether a committed, lifetime relationship is what she wants.

In most cases though, when a girl says that she's too busy to see her boyfriend, it means that she is going through the process of breaking up with him.

Instead of just coming out and saying, "It's over," she will slowly pull away from him in the hope that will eventually drift apart and she won't have to go through an intense break up with him.

For example:

1. She no longer enjoys being affectionate with you.

Most women enjoy holding hands, hugging, kissing and having sex with the man they love.

If your girlfriend is always making lame excuses like, "You'll mess up my hair," or "I'm just too tired," or even, "Is that all you ever think about?" to avoid kissing you or having sex with you, then your relationship is probably in trouble.

Some women have a low sexual libido and don't want a lot of sex or physical contact, but most women do. If your girlfriend used to be very physical and affection with you in the early days and is no longer interested in that, then she's probably not feeling much attraction for you anymore.

Do you know how to make her feel attracted to you again?

If you're currently not talking to her or behaving in a way that sparks her feelings of sexual attraction, then you can't expect her to feel eager to see you.

To keep a relationship together with a woman, you need to deepen the love, respect and attraction that she feels for you.

You can't just expect her to stick around because things felt good at the start.

Women are no longer dependent on men and are allowed to get in and out of relationships with guys until they feel as though they've met "the one."

If you want to be the one for her, you need to make her feel the way that a woman wants to feel when in a relationship with a man.

You can't just expect her to want to stay because you're a good guy and you love her.

There's more to love, respect and attraction than just that.

The feelings have to be mutual in a relationship in order for it to last and become better over time.

If you are the only one feeling attracted and in love, then your relationship will be coming to an end pretty soon.

You've got to focus on improving your ability to make her feel attracted to you, so she actually feels motivated to want to be around you.

2. She is no longer answering your calls or text messages.

[image: Girlfriend ignoring texts from her boyfriend]

Even worse than saying she's too busy to see you, if your girlfriend is not taking your calls or responding to your text messages, she is probably trying to detach herself from you and the relationship.

No matter how busy a woman gets, she will always find a spare minute to text or chat with the guy she's in love with.

A good way to test her commitment to you is to stop all contact with her for a week.

Naturally, if she's still interested in being your girlfriend, she will contact you and say something like, "What's wrong baby? I haven't heard from you. Are you okay? I've missed you!"

On the other hand if you don't hear from her within a couple of days, then you can be sure that it's not a good sign.

She is either an insecure woman who can't deal with a real relationship, or she has lost respect and attraction for you and no longer wants to be with you.

If that's the case for you, then you need to focus on getting your ex back because, in her mind, it's already over between you and her.

3. She is going out partying without you on a regular basis.

When a woman is committed to a man and her relationship with him, she won't feel the need to go out without him, especially to places like bars or night clubs where she will be hit on by men.

Of course, there are some occasions where it's not appropriate for you to join her (e.g. a girl's only birthday party, a bridal shower, a baby shower with all women, etc).

However, if your girlfriend insists on going out partying without you on a regular basis, it's usually because she's opening herself up to meeting a new guy before she fully breaks up with you.

Is My Girlfriend Going to Break Up With Me?

[image: Is my girlfriend going to break up with me?]

If you can relate to the signs mentioned in the previous section, then your girlfriend is either going to break up with you soon or wait until she is ready (e.g. she has found a new guy, she can afford to pay rent on her own or is moving in with a friend, etc).

The signs above show that, at the moment, she seems to be pulling away from you and the relationship. ...but, don't worry.

The good news is that you've noticed just in time.

Even though right now you're saying, "My girlfriend said she's too busy," and feeling like you have no control over the situation, by following the advice in this article, you can easily make her fall back in love with you.

Here is what you need to do!

1. Identify what is causing your girlfriend to lose respect, love and attraction for you.

Unless a woman is a crazy psycho, she doesn't just decide one day that she no longer feels love for her man and wants to break up with him.

Deciding to break up is a gradual process that happens over a period of time where her boyfriend (or fiancé or husband) keeps behaving in ways that are turning her off and making her lose respect for him.

For example: He's being insecure, jealous, controlling, taking her for granted, etc.

For a while, she will try to ignore it and then eventually begin to nag him about it in the hope that he'll realize she's unhappy and make some changes.

Unfortunately, most guys fail to notice the signs until it's too late.

A guy might ignore the signs because he assumes his girlfriend will stick around because they love each other, or because he feels like they are meant to be together so she wouldn't want to break up.

Yet, that's not how it works.

Today's women can easily break up with a guy and have 100s of guys interested overnight by using a dating app or using online dating. If she wants to meet guys in person, all she needs to do is dress up and look a bit sexy and go to a bar or nightclub.

It's easy for women to find a replacement guy, so before your girlfriend decides to leave you, now is the time for you to decide to make some changes to how you make her feel.

Start by identifying what is causing her to lose respect, attraction and love for you.

For example, ask yourself:

- Have I been taking her for granted and expecting her to stick with me because things felt so good between us at the start?
- Am I being too needy, clingy or insecure?
- Am I rising through the levels of life like a real man, or am I hiding from my true potential behind her and the relationship?
- Am I letting her wear the pants in the relationship?
- Have I stopped trying to make her feel attracted to how I treat her and behave around her?
- Am I being too nice to her?
- Am I being too much of an asshole to her?
- Do I even know what it takes to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for me?

If you want to successfully change the way your girlfriend feels about you right now, you need to discover the real reasons why she is pulling away from you and then you need to make the correct changes to your behavior, conversation style and how you treat her.

For example: A girlfriend might begin to lose interest in her boyfriend if she notices that he has made her become his purpose in life. He's not following through on his biggest dreams, ambitions and goals in life and simply wants to sit on the couch/sofa with her and waste his life away.

While a woman might put up with that initially, she won't put up with it forever.

A woman wants to be with a guy who has the balls to rise up through the levels of life and reach for his true potential as a man. She doesn't want to be stuck with a guy who lives a mediocre life because he's too afraid to face up to his true potential and become successful.

How about you?

Why do you think that your girlfriend has been pulling away from you lately? What is it about your thinking, behavior or actions that has been making her lose respect and attraction for you?

2. Fix your issues and improve yourself.

It won't matter if you know WHY your girlfriend is losing interest in you, if you then don't act on that knowledge.

Actions speak louder than words, so making promises to change if she gives you another chance is only going to push her even further away.

Some women will temporarily stick with a guy who promises to change, but if he's all talk and no action, she will quickly lose interest in being with him once again.

If you want your girlfriend to stick with you for real, you've got to be going through a constant stage of change, improvement and growth as a man.

Yes, it goes on for your entire life.

You will always be learning, growing and improving.

If you think that you've worked out the entire world already, you are kidding yourself. You might be an extremely intelligent guy, but believe me there is always more to learn about life.

You are always going to becoming a wiser, more well rounded, capable man.

So, don't stop now and think that since you've got yourself a girlfriend, you've now achieved everything in life.

Your life is just beginning.

It will always just be beginning as long as you are alive. There is so much to learn and understand about this life.

Show you girlfriend that you have that wisdom by constantly making improvements and becoming a bigger and better man over time.

When your girlfriend sees that you're making a real effort to improve yourself and be the man she needs you to be, she will naturally feel drawn to you and want to be around you.

When You Make Her Feel Differently, Her Thinking and Behavior Will Change

If the way that you've been communicating with your girlfriend lately has been turning her off, then it's only natural that she's not going to want to make a lot of effort to talk to you or see you.

Instead, she will continue making excuses about being so busy that she can't possibly fit you into her busy schedule. She will continue to push you away and with her actions, she will make it clear that she just doesn't feel the same way about you anymore.

However, by changing your communication style with her in a way that makes her feel attracted to you, she will naturally begin to think and behave differently.

She will feel the need to talk to you and see you in person.

Right now, you might be saying, "My girlfriend said she's too busy" and feeling worried about potentially getting dumped, but it's not too late to turn things around.

You can change how she feels.

How?

When talking to her on the phone, via text or social media or when you see her in person, you need to focus on making her feel the type of respect and attraction for you that has been missing lately from your relationship.

If she continues to see that you still don't understand what type of attraction experience she wants from a relationship, she will continue to be distant.

So, I'd recommend that you start fixing things now before she sends you a break up text, calls you to break up with you or says, "We need to talk" and then ends the relationship.

You can get her to change how she feels and become a better girlfriend for you.

In fact, it's she's like most women, that's what she will be hoping you do.

She will be hoping that you have what it takes to turn things around before she has to go through a break up with you.

Signs That My Girlfriend Wants to Break Up

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're asking, What are some signs that my girlfriend wants to break up with me? then your gut instinct is telling you that something has changed between you and her.

You might have woke up today feeling concerned that you're about to lose her, but don't worry – you can fix this.

Even if, your girlfriend is currently thinking about breaking up your relationship, you can still change how she feels by re-sparking her feelings of love, respect and sexual attraction for you.

Watch this video to understand how...

As you will discover from the video above, your girlfriend has probably been losing touch with her feelings of respect and attraction for you, which has caused you to begin worrying that she might be about to break up with you.

So, what are some of the signs to look out for?

4 Signs That Your Girlfriend Wants to Break Up

[image: How to know when your girlfriend wants to break up]

Most women don't want to have a nasty break up with their boyfriend, so instead of just coming out and saying they want to break up, a woman will often avoid the issue and hope that the relationship just fizzles out over time.

For example: Has your girlfriend been doing any of these things?

1. Has she stopped calling or texting you? Has she stopped returning your calls or text messages? Has she been ignoring you on social media?

Unless something really serious is going on in her life (e.g. she's working long hours to finish a project at work or university, a friend is going through a really tough time in life, a loved one has died, etc), a woman will always make herself available for the man she loves.

So, if your girlfriend is essentially ignoring you for no apparent reason, she's probably trying to send a message that she's losing interest or has lost interest and is about to break up with you.

2. Does she avoid telling you where she's been and with whom she's been hanging out?

When a woman loves and respects her man, she will be very open and honest about what she's doing and the people she's hanging out with.

If this is not the case for you, then your girlfriend is probably hiding something (i.e. she's hanging out with a new guy, partying with her girlfriends and trying to find a new guy or has even begun dating a new guy behind your back).

3. Is she uninterested in sharing any details about her day-to-day life with you?

[image: I think my girlfriend wants to break up]

In a healthy and loving relationship, a couple wants to listen and share details about their life, even if those details are trivial.

It feels good to talk to each other about anything and everything because you're in love, you're attracted to each other, you respect each other and you're also like best friends at the same time.

So, if your girlfriend isn't interested in talking about her life with you, she's clearly shutting herself off to you.

If she's closed off to you, she will be opening herself up to other people.

That doesn't necessarily mean she is opening herself up to other guys, but she feels better opening up to others than she does with you right now.

4. Is she going out partying without you?

When a woman loves a man and is truly committed to the relationship, she will want to party with him.

Going out partying and getting drunk (especially with her single girlfriends) without inviting her boyfriend means she's opening herself up to meeting other men.

If your girlfriend goes out with girlfriends who have a boyfriend, then you don't have much to worry about. However, even still there's no reason why she shouldn't be inviting you along.

If she doesn't want you around when she's having a good time, then she is definitely open to finding herself a new guy.

Essentially, if a person is still playing games like that, then they aren't ready for an adult relationship. It's just a dating relationship and it will break up sooner or later unless the person changes their ways.

Avoiding a Break Up

[image: How to know if she wants to break up]

Rather than feeling hopeless about the situation and simply letting her slip away from you, take charge of the situation by making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you.

As you will discover from the video above, you have a lot of direct control and influence over how much or little attraction your girlfriend feels for you.

For example: If you're being insecure, needy, clingy and jealous around your girlfriend, you are going to be ruining her feelings of respect and attraction for you and therefore, she is going to fall out of love with you.

To make her feel attracted, you need to remain confident in yourself, display high self-esteem, make her laugh and feel good around you, make her feel girly in response to your masculinity, etc.

You don't have to become perfect to keep your girlfriend, but you do need to fix the things about your behavior, attitude and vibe that are currently turning your girlfriend off.

Finding yourself in this situation with your girlfriend is an opportunity for you to not only make your girlfriend feel respect, attraction and love for you again, but to become the kind of guy you've always wanted to be.

To do that, you have to be honest with yourself about your current ability to make her feel the kind of respect, attraction and love that will keep the relationship together.

Ask yourself:

- Have I been behaving in ways that are turning my girlfriend off (e.g. being too jealous, needy, clingy or insecure)?
- Have I stopped making my girlfriend feel the way she wants to feel when she's with me?
- Have I stopped trying to reach for my true potential as a man because I now have a girlfriend?
- Am I making her feel proud to be my girlfriend?

These are important questions that you need to ask yourself because unlike in the past, today's women don't stick with a guy for life just because they get into a relationship.

In the past, a woman had to save her virginity for marriage, marry one man and stick with him for life even if she was unhappy.

In today's world, a woman can have sex with whomever she wants and get in and out of relationships until she feels like she's found the right guy for her.

So, if you want to keep a relationship together in today's world, you've got to know what you're doing. You can't just expect a girl to stick around because things felt good at the start.

Are You Unknowingly Pushing Your Girlfriend Away?

Classic examples of behaviors that make a girlfriend (or fiancée or wife) want to break up with her man include the following:

1. Being clingy, needy and insecure.

Relationships change all the time and you need to be emotionally prepared for the ups and downs, otherwise you might make the mistake of becoming insecure when things don't feel like they did the week before.

For example: At the beginning of a relationship, there will be new and exciting feelings of lust and physical desire. It will feel amazing just to hug each other, touch each other or kiss.

Eventually, the, 'I want to rip your clothes off every time I see you' phase wears off (this is perfectly normal and natural) you transition to a deep respect, emotional attraction and love for each other.

Sex, kissing, hugging and touching still happens very often, but because you are feeling a deep love, respect and attraction for each other, you begin to display that in other ways (e.g. caring for each other, building relationships with each others family, sharing experiences together, building a shared future together, etc), rather than just sex.

This is not only normal, but it's a sign that the relationship is real and has a chance at lasting for life. So, if your girlfriend is no longer behaving the way she did during the first couple of months, don't worry it's normal. Just relax and enjoy the transition to deeper love.

As long as you remain confident in your position as her boyfriend and believe in your attractiveness to her, she will remain attracted to and respectful of you based on your emotional strength and maturity.

Guys who lack relationship experience, or who are unaware of the stages of a relationship, will often mistake these changes in their girlfriend as being something bad.

Rather than see that things are actually developing in a natural and healthy way, they assume that something is wrong and then begin to feel insecure.

Feeling insecure, he then begins to behave in jealous, clingy, controlling or needy ways.

[image: What's wrong? Are you going to break up with me?]

For example: He might panic and ask his girlfriend the following types of questions, which will only make things worse because she will feel turned off by his insecurity...

- What's wrong with you? Do you still love me or not?
- Why don't you jump all over me like you used to?
- Are you going to break up with me?
- Are you still interested in being with me?
- Are you interested in another guy?
- Are you seeing another guy behind my back?
- Are your friends trying to get us to break up?

Feeling insecure about losing her, a guy might then stop hanging out with his friends so he can spend even more time with her. He won't want to let her out of his sight because he's worried that she might stray.

Rather than maintaining a balanced lifestyle and being a man that she can look up to and respect, he might also give up his own interests and hobbies to ensure that all of his spare time is devoted to her.

While a woman may feel somewhat flattered to see that her man is so devoted to her and that he likes to spend all his time with her and even worries about losing her, she will eventually begin to feel smothered by him and will then feel turned off. Why?

That type of needy and insecure behavior doesn't make her look up to him as a strong, confident man who believes in himself and his value to her.

Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength of men and turned off by the weakness.

It doesn't matter if a guy really cares about his girlfriend and loves her with all of his heart if he's emotionally weak, she's not going to be able to maintain her feelings of respect and attraction for him and the relationship will fall apart.

2. Having no real purpose or direction in life.

Women are attracted to men who know what they want in life and aren't afraid to go out there and get it.

Life is challenging and it takes balls to achieve big things in this world. You've usually got to work very hard and overcome a lot of challenges and obstacles to achieve true greatness and massive success in this competitive world.

When a guy makes a woman his most important purpose in life, she instinctively knows that he's a lost guy in this world and doesn't yet know how to be a real man.

He's hiding from his true potential as a man behind the safety of a relationship with her. He doesn't want to face the big bad world out there and wants to be able to do as little as possible outside of the relationship with her.

It's not that women want a man who is already successful in life if that was the case then the only guys with girlfriends and wives would be the successful ones but a woman wants to know that her man has the potential to become more powerful and successful, and he also has the courage to make things happen; even if that means he has to fight for what he wants and overcome many obstacles to finally achieve success.

If a guy wastes most of his time watching TV, browsing social media and being stuck in a dead end job that isn't ever going to lead to a promotion, it's not attractive to a woman because it's not achieving anything.

A woman wants to feel safe that if she stays with a guy, he is going to guide both himself and her to a better life over time.

A real man rises through the levels of life, reaches for his true potential and goes after his true purpose in life without fear.

So, the question is: Are you living life on purpose, or are you just going through the motions?

What are your biggest dreams and ambitions in life? Are you making real progress towards achieving them?

If you're not living life on purpose, make sure you begin doing so right away.

Nothing makes a woman feel more lasting respect and attraction for a guy than seeing him rise through the levels of life and reach for his true potential as a man.

It's Not Too Late to Change How Your Girlfriend Feels and Make Her Fall in Love With You All Over Again

Right now, you might be feeling like it's too late to make her change how she feels because you've made too many mistakes with her prior to today.

It's never too late.

I know this because I've helped 100s of guys to get a girlfriend, fiancée or wife back in situations where the woman is saying things like, "I hate you! Get out of my life! I never want to see you again."

If situations like those can be turned around, then getting your girlfriend to fall madly in love with you again is going to be a piece of cake.

When you can show your girlfriend that you have fixed your issues (e.g. being clingy, taking her for granted, being needy or insecure, etc) and have improved and changed, she will instinctively stop closing herself off from you and then allow herself to feel attracted to you and respectful towards you once again.

When your girlfriend opens herself up to feeling respect and attraction for you again, it won't take long before she falls back in love with you and decides that she wants to stick with the relationship rather than break up.

My Girlfriend Told Me to Leave Her Alone

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, what actually brings a woman to the point where she tells her boyfriend to leave her alone?

In most cases, it's because the guy has gradually destroyed her feelings of respect and attraction for him (e.g. by being insecure, treating her badly, being needy).

If your girlfriend told you to leave her alone, it's most likely her way of letting you down easy.

In other words, she is preparing to fully break up with you, so now is the time to fix things between you and her before it's too late...

You can change how she feels from now on.

Just make sure that you focus on making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you whenever you interact with her, otherwise she will break up with you.

When She Wants to Leave the Relationship, But You Don't

[image: Trying to let her boyfriend down easily]

Relationships rarely fall apart all of a sudden without any prior problems or issues.

Most women take a while before they start to give up on their boyfriend and say something like, "Leave me alone" or "I need some time away from you for a while."

Even though to you it might seem totally unexpected that your girlfriend has told you to leave her alone, she most likely gave you plenty of warning signs beforehand.

For example: She may have warned you!

1. Verbally

By saying things like, "I need you to stop doing that," or "If you keep doing that, I'm going to break up with you," or "This just isn't working for me. You have to change or else you and me won't last."

2. With her behavior

By being angry, cold or aloof or by sulking or crying a lot.

3. With her body language

By pulling away from you physically, rejecting your attempts to hug or kiss her, avoiding sex, etc.

4. Through her actions

By arguing or fighting with you about the same things over and over again. She might have also stopped answering your texts or calls for a while, in the hope that you would get the message and change.

Unfortunately, in most cases, guys completely miss these signs, or simply write them off as her just being a moody woman.

Other guys (I used to make this mistake) take their girlfriend for granted and expect that she will stick around because things were so good at the start.

Yet, today's women are like the women from 100 years ago who were completely dependent on a man and were not allowed to have pre-marital sex.

[image: Marriage in the old days]

Today's women can break up with a guy whenever they want and if they want to sleep with 5 or 10 more guys before settling down, no one has a problem with it anymore.

[image: Dating - Sex before marriage]

When a guy overlooks the warning signs that his girlfriend is giving him, he is usually surprised when she says, “Leave me alone” and doesn't care about losing him.

The fact is, a woman will rarely tell her boyfriend what is REALLY bothering her about his behavior. Why?

A woman doesn't want to become a guy's teacher in life about how to be a man, because that will then create a teacher/student or mother/son or big sister/little brother dynamic between them.

For a woman to remain respectful of and sexually attracted to a man in a relationship, she has to be able to look up to him and respect him as her man.

So, rather than teaching a guy how to be a man, a girlfriend will usually continue dropping hints and if he fails to pay attention and make the changes she needs, she will cut him out of her life by saying something like, “Leave me alone” or “I need space.”

3 Things You Can Do Right Now to Make Her Change Her Mind

[image: Change how your girlfriend feels about you]

Right now, you're probably wondering, “Even though my girlfriend told me to leave her alone, I still love her! So, is there anything I can do to make her change her mind?”

Definitely!

Here's what you need to do!

1. Understand what she really wants you to change about yourself.

As I mentioned above, most women will avoid giving you the real reasons why they are breaking up with you.

A woman does this because she doesn't want...

1. To have to teach him how to be the man she needs him to be. She wants him to know how to be a man without her having to lead him and take on the role of his mother, or teacher who has to educate him about what it takes to be a real man.
2. To have to deal with his emotional reaction to her feedback. Depending on what has caused her to lose respect, attraction and love for him (e.g. he is too insecure, he acts feminine at times, etc), she will know that he could react badly to what she has to tell him and he may even become aggressive or violent if she doesn't give him another chance.
3. To give him the opportunity to try and talk her out of her decision, or worse, have to put up with an emotional break down, or listen to him making promises to change.

For these reasons, you may not know exactly WHY your girlfriend has told you to leave her alone, which is why your first step to getting her back is to figure out what REALLY caused her to lose respect, attraction and love for you and make her want out of the relationship.

If you don't find the REAL reasons, you will be promising to change things that she secretly doesn't even care about.

For example: She might have felt that you were being needy and clingy and that you were using the relationship with her to hide from your true potential in life.

If that's the case, she wants to see you get clear on your biggest ambitions and goals in life and then begin making progress in that direction, rather than clinging onto her as being your one and only reason for living.

So, if you start buying her flowers and gifts, and you text or call her incessantly (basically making her feel even more smothered by you and grateful that she broke up with you), she's going to feel pissed off that you don't understand what she really wants from you.

However, don't expect her to spell it out for you. She doesn't want to be your teacher.

If you really want to get your girlfriend back (or keep the relationship together if you're not broken up yet), you've got to be offering her what she really wants, not what you think she might want.

If you are trying to get her back with the wrong offers, she will continue to feel misunderstood and she'll see no reason to stay with you.

2. Fix your emotional issues and show her that you've really changed.

Some guys get annoyed when they hear that they'll need to fix their issues (e.g. insecurity, neediness, clingy behavior, etc) to get a woman back.

A guy might ask, "Why do I have to change for her? Why can't she accept me for who I am?"

The fact is, right now your current behavior and thinking is not making your girlfriend feel enough respect, love and attraction for you.

To quote Henry Ford:

"If you always do what you've always done, you'll always get what you've always got."

In other words, if you are so set on staying the same and not making an effort to fix negative thinking, behaviors or insecurities, you will continue to present your girlfriend with the same things that caused her to tell you to leave her alone.

If you don't make any changes, your girlfriend will continue to behave coldly towards you and continue telling you to go away because there is no reason for her to change her mind.

Rather than get caught up feeling defensive about her rejection, try to realize that changing limiting behaviors and attitudes benefits you too.

It's not about becoming a "perfect man" for her, but about becoming a better version of who you already are.

When you do that, you will not only get your girlfriend back in your arms again, but you will also find that the new, improved version of you is more successful in social situations, at work and in life.

Isn't that worth changing for?

When your girlfriend sees that you have begun to fix your issues and improve yourself emotionally as a man, she will naturally be able to feel attracted to you again.

After all, love doesn't die.

If you and your girlfriend did experience love together, it is still there in the background and she will naturally become open to reconnecting with that love when she sees the new you.

As you will discover from the video above, it is possible to change the way that your girlfriend currently feels about you.

Her emotions are not set in stone.

When you present her with a more attractive version of yourself (e.g. you're more confident, more able to make her feel girly in response to your masculinity, you're emotionally stronger, etc), she will naturally become open to feeling attracted to you again.

3. Make her see you as a better option compared to other guys.

At this point, your girlfriend is probably going to be doing whatever it takes for her to get over you (e.g. going out partying with her friends and maybe even dating other guys).

The biggest mistake that you can make at this point is to become jealous, insecure or even start begging her to give you another chance. This type of behavior is totally unattractive to a woman because women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness.

If you are being emotional weak and needy towards her, she will naturally find herself feeling attracted to guys who are emotionally stronger than you are—even just a little bit stronger.

Pretty much any guy who is emotionally stronger than you are at this point will seem like a better option.

So, make sure that you don't beg or force her to experience your emotional insecurity or weakness. It will only make things worse.

Your girlfriend won't want to feel like she is doing you a favor by getting back with you. She wants to feel like you are the best guy for her, rather than feeling like she is settling for second best.

Getting her to see you as a better option to other guys is easier than you think. There are things that you can say to her right now on the phone, and there are also many things that you can say and do when you meet up with her that will make her see you in a different light.

Your Situation is Fixable

If you're saying, "My girlfriend told me to leave her alone," you might be thinking that your situation is hopeless because she seems determined not to have anything more to do with you anymore.

Yet, as you can see by what you've read so far; there are many things that you can do right now to change how she feels and get her respect, attraction and love for you back again.

You actually have a lot of direct control over how much attraction your girlfriend feels for you.

For example: If a guy is confident, charismatic, funny, masculine and charming around his girlfriend, she is going to feel much more attracted to him than if he were insecure, needy and emotionally sensitive.

When you change your behavior and the way you interact with your girlfriend, she will automatically begin to see you in a new light and she will feel drawn to you again.

My Girlfriend Won't Answer My Calls

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend won't answer your calls, it either means that:

1. She's annoyed at how often you contact her and is hoping that you get the message and then slow down a bit.

[image: Why is he calling me so often? It's so annoying...!]

To maintain the respect and attraction of a woman in a relationship, you've got to make sure that you maintain a balanced lifestyle as a man.

As a man, you need to be pushing forward in life and trying to achieve your biggest goals and ambitions, rather than spending all your time and energy on a woman.

At the beginning of a relationship, a woman will usually eat up all the attention that a guy gives her and she will be happy with that for a while, but if she eventually realizes that she is his purpose in life, she will rapidly begin to lose interest.

A woman does want to feel loved, respected and wanted by her boyfriend, but she doesn't want to feel like she is his "everything" and that, without her, his life would be boring, hopeless, etc.

2. She's testing to see how you will react if she isn't so available.

Sometimes, a woman will stop answering her boyfriend's calls to see how much power she can get over him or to see how much he really cares.

Here's the thing though...

While it might be fun for a woman to gain power over her man, when it eventually happens, she will then begin to lose respect and attraction for him.

3. She wants to break up with you, but doesn't have the courage to tell you yet.

Women don't always come right out and say, "It's over. We're breaking up" and will often begin to ignore a guy and avoid him in the hope that he gets the message and moves on.

4. She is busy and doesn't have time to be chatting on the phone all the time.

Not all women love to answer their phone every time it rings.

If your girlfriend is focused on her career or studies, or is a popular or busy person, she won't always want to answer her phone when you call.

4 Signs She Wants to Break Up With You

[image: 4 signs she wants to break up with you]

Right now, you need to determine whether or not your girlfriend is trying to break up with you, or whether she is simply trying to test your reaction to her sudden unavailability.

If she does want to break up with you, she won't necessarily have the guts to tell you that right away.

For example: Many women will say something like, "I want some space to find myself," or "I think we should just take a break from each other for a while and see what happens" or, "If we had met each other at a different time in our lives, we would have more time for each other...but, I don't know" if I can give you what you want right now.”

So, if you’re saying, “My girlfriend won’t answer my calls,” it could be that she wants to break up with you, but simply can’t work up the courage to say that to you directly.

Here are 4 signs that suggest she wants to break up!

1. She’s constantly unavailable to see you.

Unless she is completely bogged down by a hectic work schedule or a crazy study schedule, a woman will always make herself available for the man she loves.

Always.

No matter how busy she gets, a woman who is in love with her man will do anything and everything to try to meet up with him in person to feel his love up close; even if it’s just a 10 minute date during her lunch break, or on a quick kiss on her way to work in the morning, between classes, etc.

For a woman, being in love with a man and having the flow of his love run through her life and mind is what sustains her.

Not being able to be with the man that she loves is something that makes her feel terribly unhappy and she will do whatever she can to avoid being without him.

So, if your girlfriend is constantly making lame excuses like, “I’m just SO busy right now,” or “Something came up. I’ll see you when I can,” to avoid seeing you, then she is hoping that if she stays away long enough, the relationship will fade away without her having to come out and tell you directly that she wants to break up.

2. She’s physically and emotionally closed off from you.

Nothing makes a woman feel more alive than the opportunity to demonstrate her love for her man by holding his hand, hugging him, kissing him and having sex with him.

In a loving relationship, physical intimacy is an essential way for a couple to connect with each other and express their deeper feelings of love and attraction.

If your girlfriend has been avoiding any displays of affection and is suddenly not interested in having sex with you, it means that she is no longer feeling the respect, attraction and love for you that first drew her to you.

When a woman loses respect for her guy, she will then lose feelings of attraction for him.

If it keeps happening, she will then begin to fall out of love with him.

So, if your girlfriend is falling out of love with you, then you need to focus on making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you ASAP.

If you are displaying the personality traits and behaviors that naturally make women feel respectful towards and attracted to a man, then your girlfriend is not going to want to leave you.

3. She goes out without you on a regular basis.

[image: Why won't she answer my calls?]

Part of being in a healthy relationship (i.e. full of love and free of insecurity) is being cool with the idea that your girlfriend will sometimes go places without you.

She will have friends, interests and hobbies that are separate from you and your relationship. The same must apply to you too.

However, if your girlfriend is constantly going out without you, often to places like clubs or bars where she's likely to get hit on by other men, while you're sitting at home pining over her and avoiding going out with your friends, it is a clear sign that she's opening herself up to meet new men.

Personally speaking, I would dump my woman if she suddenly started going partying and clubbing with her friends and didn't want me to come along.

I would never, ever put up with being treated like that.

If she wanted to go once so she could have a girl's night with her girlfriends who were in relationships, I would be fine with that. However, if she wanted to go out and party with her single girlfriends, I would be disappointed that she wouldn't want me to come along.

[image: Dan Bacon at a nightclub with girlfriend]

In my relationship (that's her in the photo above), my girlfriend (who recently became my wife), has never wanted to go out without me.

She feels better when she's with me and has no desire to be hit on by other men.

Why?

I've been deepening her love, respect and attraction for me over time, rather than destroying it by being insecure, unloving, taking her for granted, etc.

You can have that effect on your girlfriend too.

You don't just have to sit around hoping that a woman will never leave you.

You can deepen her feelings for you over time.

Being able to deepen your woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you is extremely important in today's world.

[image: Marriage in the old days]

Unlike in the past where a woman would stay with a man for life even if she was unhappy, today's women dump or divorce guys who aren't able to give them the type of relationship experience that women really want.

[image: Women meeting and hooking up with men]

Today's women can easily go out and meet a new guy and not feel ashamed about it.

If you want your girlfriend to feel an undying desire to be with you in a relationship, you've got to begin deepening her feelings of love, respect and attraction, rather than expecting her to stick around because things felt good at the start.

4. She's been texting, calling or chatting with another guy, but tries to hide it from you when you ask her about it.

It's normal to have separate friends from each other and a couple shouldn't have to live in each other's pockets or have to report their every move to each other.

However, if your girlfriend has been texting, calling or chatting online with other guys and isn't responding to you, then she might be opening herself up to the idea of cheating or leaving you and then hooking up with a new guy.

You have to be careful how you approach her about it though. If you accuse her of flirting with another guy and tell her to stop, she might say, â€œYou donâ€™t own me. I can talk to whoever I want to talk to. I donâ€™t have to report to you every time I talk to someone.â€

What should you do instead?

Simple.

Get her to feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you (i.e. by replacing your unattractive behavior with attractive behavior) and she will usually change automatically.

If she doesn't, you need to tell her that you feel like she's disrespecting you by ignoring you and then chatting heavily with other guys, so if she doesn't stop treating you that way, you and her are finished right now.

Don't say that in a needy, insecure way. Just be confident in yourself (i.e. know that you're more than good enough for her) and tell her that if she is unable to respect you, then you don't want to be in a relationship with her anymore.

She Might Just Be Testing You

[image: She might just be testing you]

When a woman is in a relationship with a man, she will always continue to test his confidence and challenge his position as the leader of the relationship.

The testing happens when you first approach, when on a date, in a long-term relationship and even when you've been married for decades.

The testing never stops.

Why?

Women instinctively test you because it's the most important and powerful way for them to remain attracted to you and respectful of you.

If a woman tests you and notices that you don't break down and become insecure and instead remain strong and confident, the respect and attraction that she feels for you deepens.

However, if you become insecure when she tests you, a woman will then begins to question whether or not you are strong enough to be her man.

So, if you're saying, â€œMy girlfriend wonâ€™t answer my calls,â€ and it's not because she wants to break up with you (i.e. she's not displaying any "break up" signs), then she is most-likely just testing to see how much control she has over you and how confident you are in your sex appeal and value to her.

A confident guy who knows that he is more than good enough for his girlfriend won't waste time worrying if she suddenly stops answering his calls.

He will feel like it's her loss if she stuffs the relationship up and will simply continue on with his life as normal, knowing that his girlfriend feels lucky to be with him.

Additionally, because of his confidence, he will be naturally attractive to other women and there will always be women in his life who like him and hope that he breaks up with his girlfriend so they can get a chance to be with him.

Yet, guys with that sort of confidence are rare.

Most guys don't really know how to attract women with their personality and they lack confidence around women really like.

So, when a guy like that gets a girlfriend, it's usually as a result of him "getting lucky" (e.g. the woman was drunk, she just got out of a relationship and wanted a replacement guy fast, he grew on her over time and eventually got a chance, etc).

Guys who get lucky with women are usually able to feel confident at the start of a relationship, but when the woman starts to test his confidence by playing hard to get, the "lucky guy" becomes insecure, jealous and clingy.

She notices and it begins to eat away at his respect and attraction for him, which then causes her to begin treating him badly (e.g. ignoring his calls, being less affectionate, etc).

The lucky guy will then put up with her bad treatment to keep her around, or accuse her of being a bitch and demand that she changes and shows him some more respect.

Yet, neither of those approaches will keep the relationship together for long.

Essentially, he has no control over how she feels for him and simply trying to do whatever he can to hang onto what he has gotten via luck.

He doesn't know how to get her to feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for him, and he's not confident about being able to find a replacement girlfriend, so he feels stuck.

When faced with a girlfriend who won't answer his calls, a guy like that may begin to call her multiple times per day to make sure that he stays on her mind.

He may even text her or leave her voicemail messages like, What's wrong? Why won't you answer my calls? or What's going on? Don't you love me? or How can you do this to me? Don't you realize that I'm falling apart here?

However, rather than make her happily pick up the phone and call him back, she's going to be thinking, What a loser! Is this all it takes to make him lose his confidence? Pathetic! and she will lose respect and attraction for him as a man.

It's Up to You to Make the Relationship Work

[image: It's up to you to make the relationship work]

Whatever is going on in your relationship right now, you can't expect your girlfriend to tell you about it or fix it.

As the man, it is your responsibility to take the lead and make a woman feel the way she wants to feel in the relationship.

Why?

A woman doesn't want to have to take on the role as a guy's teacher in life about how to be a man.

She wants you to figure that stuff out yourself (or already know it) and then just be the man she needs.

She doesn't want to create a dynamic in the relationship where you are the student and she is the teacher, or you are the boy and she is the mother figure, because it will destroy her respect and attraction for you.

She wants to be able to look up to you and respect you as her man, not look down on you and feel as though she needs to take care of you emotionally because you're so confused (about how to be a man) or are so emotionally sensitive and insecure.

If you want to stop saying, "My girlfriend won't answer my calls," then it's up to you to figure out what is causing your girlfriend to lose respect, love and attraction for you and to then fix it.

Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness, so when you begin to show your girlfriend that you're the confident, masculine and mentally and emotionally strong man she really wants, she will feel much more excited and eager to call you.

If you're currently in a situation where you feel like all hope is lost with your girlfriend, think again.

You might have started out today thinking, "Is my relationship over? Am I going get dumped by my girlfriend?" but as you can see, that's clearly not the case.

There's always a way to re-spark a woman's feelings of respect and attraction for you as a man. When you give her what she needs, other men will begin to pale in comparison to you.

She will realize that she already has an amazing boyfriend and doesn't need to waste time trying to find a replacement.

Do Long-Distance Relationships Last?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

It's an interesting question, but of course, there's no definitive answer to the question of, do long-distance relationships last? because some do and some don't, just like some non-long-distance relationships last and some don't.

A woman will stay in a relationship with a man for life if she:

- Respects him and looks up to him as her man.
- Feels deeply attracted to his personality and who he is as a man.
- Is proud to be called his girlfriend, fiancée or wife.
- Can see that their life together is just going to get better and better.

On the other hand, a woman will want to get out of a relationship if she:

- Can no longer respect her man (e.g. he is insecure, clingy, too jealous, etc).
- Is turned off by his personality and who he has become since being with her.
- Often feels embarrassed to be known as his girlfriend, fiancée or wife.
- Can see that their life seems to be going nowhere fast and she might enjoy life more if she started afresh with a man who could guide both himself and her to a better life.

Of course, it's not always the guy's fault.

Sometimes, a woman just isn't ready for a truly committed, adult relationship and is simply with her boyfriend for a while (e.g. for fun, to help pay the rent, for sex, etc).

If your woman isn't truly committed to the idea of you and her building a life together, then it's either going to be because she's not ready for that, or because you haven't flicked that switch in her mind that makes her ready for it.

The Distance Between You

Being separated by a lot of physical distance does bring a different set of challenges into a relationship, but the couples who make it work are those who have the right foundation in place from the beginning.

What is the right foundation for a successful relationship?

- You attracted her on purpose and not by luck.
- You chose a compatible woman for you, rather than taking whatever you could get.
- She feels lucky to be with you because you're such an awesome guy.
- You've been deepening her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.
- You are clearly the man (i.e. you are masculine in how you think, behave, feel and take action in life and with her) and she is clearly the woman (i.e. she is feminine, free to be girly around you, free to be emotional, she feels safe and protected in her relationship with you, etc).

As long as that dynamic is there prior to you and her going long distance, then she's not going to want to leave you.

[image: Long distance relationship: Soldier returning home]

[image: Long distance relationship: Soldier returning home]

Just think about some of the soldiers who are deployed overseas for 12-18 months and come back to an excited, ecstatic, loving woman who cannot wait to be in his arms once again.

As long as the right dynamic is in place, your woman will be patient and your relationship will last, despite going long distance for a while.

Young Relationships Vs. Mature Relationships

A long distance relationship can happen when a couple is in college, or when they are 25 years into a marriage in their 50s and have to be apart for long periods of time because of work or business commitments.

So, it can happen to anyone.

Statistics gathered from an American survey revealed that approximately:

- 14 million women and men considered themselves to be in a long-distance relationship.
- 3% of all marriages are long-distance relationships.
- 10% of relationships that start out as long-distance relationships go on to become marriages.
- 75% of engaged couples have been separated by distance at some point in their relationship.

According the same survey, approximately 32% of college student relationships are long-distance.

This comes as no surprise when you consider that the relationship probably began in high school and then they went to different colleges after graduating.

When you consider these statistics along with the estimation that around 40% of all long-distance relationships eventually break up, the odds of a college student long-distance relationship surviving don't seem that promising.

Yet, statistics from a survey don't always tell you the whole story.

For example: It's now fairly easy to get an ex back after a long-distance relationship has broken up. I've personally helped 100s of guys and men of all ages to get a woman back after their long distance relationship breaks up.

The reason why so many guys are getting women back after break ups now, is that guys can now learn how to trigger a woman's feelings of respect and attraction for them.

You can literally control how much or how little respect, attraction and love she feels for you.

It's within your control.

However, if you're approach to her regularly makes her lose respect, feel turned off or disconnect from her feelings of romantic and sexual love for you, then the relationship will fall apart.

It won't matter if your relationship is long distance or if you're living in the same house as your woman, she's going to want to break up.

If you want a relationship with a woman to last in today's world, you've got to be able to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

In the past, a woman had to stay with one man for life because pre-marital sex was forbidden and divorce was seen as shameful.

Yet, in today's world, women can get in and out of relationships for as long as they please. A woman will only commit herself to one guy when he is able to click the commitment switch in her mind and make her want to be with him and only him.

Two Examples to Consider

Here are a couple of hypothetical examples of long distance relationships.

Have a read through and you will see why one of the relationships lasted and the other didn't.

Example 1: Todd and Jeanette

After being in a relationship for just over a year with Jeanette, Todd was given the opportunity of being promoted at work.

The promotion meant that Todd would receive a significant rise in salary, and since he and Jeanette were saving up to buy a house, the extra income was a big incentive.

However, by taking the promotion, it meant Todd would be relocating to a different city for the first 12 months and would then be able to return and work from the office in the city that he and Jeanette were from.

After discussing the pros and cons of the opportunity, both Todd and Jeanette decided it was the right thing to do and they prepared themselves for the challenges of physical separation that lay ahead.

In this case, the strong emotional connection shared by Todd and Jeanette helped them to cope with the lack of physical connection during their time apart, and the shared incentive of being able to save up the money they needed for a house deposit helped to keep them focused on the good times that lay ahead when the year of separation was over.

Todd was a confident, masculine man who was rising through the levels of life and reaching for his true potential as a man, which made Jeanette feel proud to be his girlfriend.

Jeanette was a loving, supportive woman who believed in marriage and was hoping that her and Todd would some day tie the knot.

So, when Jeanette's single girlfriends asked her to go out to nightclubs when Todd was away, Jeanette suggested that they catch up for coffee, dinner or lunch instead because she didn't want to put herself in a position where she'd be hit on by other guys.

Jeanette was committed to Todd because she respected him, felt attracted to him, loved him and was excited about where their life was heading together. She also had the maturity and good personal values to be able to say no to the requests she was getting to go out and party and get drunk with her single girlfriends.

Example 2: Matt and Tyra

For Matt, the circumstances were different.

His hot girlfriend was offered the chance to work in her company's overseas office for three months because she'd been doing an amazing job at her office.

She was really excited about the opportunity and proud of her achievement, but Matt felt resentful because he was the one being left behind.

Matt didn't care about his career and spent most of his life watching TV, playing video games, catching up with friends to drink and hang out and basically being devoted to his girlfriend.

In other words, he didn't have much purpose in life outside of relationship with Tyra. She was the most important, significant thing in his life and everything else was just a bit of fun or the responsibilities of life (e.g. earning money to pay for food, rent, etc).

Tyra tried to make him feel better about the situation by pointing out that it was only for 12 weeks and assured him that they could stay in regular contact every day.

Matt was unhappy about it and eventually said, "Well, I guess you're going to go anyway. I just want you to assure me that you're not going to cheat on me while you're away. You are my everything and I'd be nothing without you."

Tyra secretly felt turned off by his lack of purpose in life and resented him for making her feel so responsible for his sense of identity and emotional security, but she said, "Yes babeâ€¦|don't worry, I'm all yours."

While she was away, they did stay in contact every day via phone calls, video calls, text, or email, but Matt's insecurities very quickly began to turn the relationship sour.

For example: Tyra would tell him about her day at work, but every time she mentioned another man's name, he would become very jealous and demand to know all the details of who he was and how she felt about him.

He started sending her a lot of text messages during working hours and then accused her of flirting with other guys and wanting cheating on him if she failed to reply immediately.

His unfounded jealousy and the neediness of his behavior led to his girlfriend losing all respect for him and she quickly began to fall out of love with him.

A couple of weeks into her time away, she went out with coworkers for after work drinks, got drunk and ended up kissing one of her male colleagues. She kept it a secret from Matt and simply began a new relationship with the guy on the side.

By the time his girlfriend returned, she no longer saw Matt as the confident, secure man she fell in love with and she said, "I want us to take a break for a while. I'm moving out into an apartment on my own."

The guy from the other office was far away in another state, so that relationship ended too, but she kept flirting with him over text and video chat.

So, why didn't Matt and Tyra's long distance relationship last?

Essentially, Matt did way too much to turn her off and destroy her respect for him, which then caused her to begin to fall out of love with him and open herself up to other guys.

If Matt was a perfect boyfriend to her, it is still possible that Tyra would have cheated and left him anyway, but it would have been less likely.

There's never any guarantee of keeping a woman for life, but you can avoid running into problems by choosing a truly compatible woman in the first place and then deepening her love, respect and attraction for you over time.

Making it Last

Thereâs no guaranteed formula in terms of letters, e-mails, video chats or phone calls that will make a long-distance relationship work.

So, if you look around online and people are telling you to call her 3 times a week, don't be so naïve that you then follow that advice like it's a guaranteed plan.

The only thing that really makes a long distance relationship last is the same thing that makes a normal relationship last.

She has to respect you, feel attracted to you, be excited to be in love with you and be happy about where your life is heading together.

If you're lacking in any of those areas, that's what you need to work on.

Calling her up every couple of days to have a video chat is only going to make things worse if you're turning her off in subtle ways.

So, if you're going to work on anything, I recommend brushing up on your skill of attracting a woman when you interact with her.

Watch this video to understand how that works...

As you will discover from the video above, you have a lot of control over how much attraction your woman feels for you.

Her attraction for you will rise and fall based on how well you display the personality traits and behaviors that naturally attract women...

My Girlfriend Says I Take Her For Granted

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend is telling you that you take her for granted, you simply have to change a few things to fix the problem and get the relationship back on track.

Here's what you need to do...

1. Apologize for taking her for granted

[image: Apologize for taking her for granted]

For example, you can say, "You're absolutely right. I'm sorry. You're so important to me, but I've been behaving like I don't really care what you think or feel. That was wrong."

Try not to turn the apology and the current situation between you and her into something hugely serious.

Hear what she saying, sincerely apologize and then get back on with loving her, laughing, smiling and enjoying yourselves together.

Try to avoid getting angry and turning it into a huge argument that drives you and her further apart.

Take the feedback, but don't see it as an attack. Look at it as an opportunity to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you by instantly beginning to change and make her feel happier with you.

2. Remind her that everyone makes mistakes

Tell her that you're glad she has told you that you've been taking her for granted, because it has woken you up.

Then, let her know that although you did stuff up, no one is perfect and everyone makes mistakes sometimes.

3. Get her to feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you as a man

If your girlfriend doesn't respect you enough or feel enough attraction for you, she will gradually begin to fall out of love with you.

When she falls out of love with you, she will then either break up with you or ask for some time apart so she can figure out what she wants.

So, before she gets to that point, make sure that you're thinking, behaving, feeling and acting in the ways that naturally make a woman feel attracted to you.

You can literally change the way your girlfriend is currently feeling by changing how you approach your interactions with her.

Getting a Bit Too Comfortable

[image: My girlfriend said that I take her for granted]

When a guy lacks relationship experience (or hasn't learnt from his past relationship mistakes), he will usually reach a point where he gets a bit too comfortable with the idea that his girlfriend belongs to him.

What a lot of guys don't realize is that a woman no longer has to stay with a man if she doesn't want to.

In the past, a woman had to save her virginity for marriage, get married and then stick with a man for life, even if she was unhappy.

In today's world, women are free to do whatever they want. If a woman's boyfriend (fiancé or husband) takes her for granted and stops caring about making her feel the type of love, respect and attraction she wants, she will usually give him a few warnings first and if he doesn't change, she will break up with him.

A lot of modern men are shocked when their girlfriend breaks up with them because they are operating under the idea that once a couple says, "I love you" and gets into a serious relationship, they are pretty much set for life.

For example: A guy will spend too much time playing video games, watching sports, working or hanging out with friends and he will just expect his girlfriend to keep putting up with it no matter what.

A modern woman will put up with that type of treatment for a while, but not forever.

If she's attractive and can easily get herself another guy, it's not difficult for her to open up a dating app or register for online dating and 100s of guys interested in her over night.

It's not like it was back in 1900 for example, where a woman was almost completely dependent on a man.

A modern woman can earn her own money, rent her own house, buy food on her own and use a smartphone to instantly connect with 100s of horny guys.

So, if she finds herself in a relationship with a guy who is taking her for granted, she knows that she can leave and move on if she wants to.

When she gets to the point where she's had enough, she will then tell her boyfriend something like, "You take me for granted" or "You treat me like shit and expect me to stick around."

Later on, when the guy tells his buddies about what she said, he might say something like, â€œI never saw it coming,â€œ or â€œIt was so out of the blue,â€œ or â€œShe never told me what was bothering her and then all of a sudden, she said that it was over between us.â€œ

Here's the thing...

A woman doesn't usually come out and tell her guy exactly what is bothering her and exactly what he needs to do to make her happy.

Instead, she will usually give him hints during arguments (e.g. "You treat me like crap" or "I'm sick of the way you treat me"), but in most cases, a guy will overlook what she is trying to tell him and will then feel completely shocked when she breaks up with him.

It's not all his fault though, because women don't provide instructions on how to fix relationship problems. They usually just argue, complain and nag in the hope that a guy will change.

Why? A woman doesn't want to be a guy's teacher on how to be a man. Instinctively, she knows that if she has to take on the role of his teacher, it will destroy her feelings of respect and attraction for him.

A male-female relationship that has little respect or attraction cannot continue for very long. A woman might stick around because she can't afford to leave and pay rent (or a mortgage) on her own, but she will be gone as soon as it is possible for her to leave.

So, if you're currently saying something like, "My girlfriend says I take her for granted," then you are in the very lucky (yes, lucky) position of having a girlfriend who is actually taking the time to tell you what is making her unhappy in her relationship with you, before she actually breaks up with you.

You can choose to ignore her and wake up one morning to the sound of the door closing behind her as she leaves your life forever, or you can use this as an opportunity to make your relationship with her better than it has ever been.

If you don't want to lose her, you've got to understand where you've been going wrong and what you need to change to make her feel respectful of you and attracted to you again.

If you don't make changes now, she will probably break up with you pretty soon.

In many cases where a woman feels taken for granted, she will usually cheat or have another guy lined up before she breaks up with her guy.

She does that to ensure that he can't seduce her back into a relationship easily.

She wants to make him feel the kind of pain she has felt while being taken for granted for so long.

So, if you want to avoid all that mess, just start changing now.

It's so much easier than going through a messy break up and then having to get her back (if you want to, that is).

Have You Been Making Any of These Mistakes in Your Relationship With Her?

When a guy's girlfriend says that he takes her for granted, he will usually first respond by denying it. He's thinking, "But I love her more than anything. How can she even say that to me? Don't I do nice things for her to show her how much she means to me? What is her problem?"

Yet, if a woman is saying that her man is taking her for granted, there is going to be a real reason for it.

Sure, she might be crazy and demanding way too much of her boyfriend, but in most cases it is legit and you need to pay attention, apologize, change, re-attract her and then get the relationship back on track.

Here's the thing...

You are probably a really good guy with a good, kind, honest heart.

Maybe you always remember her birthday, Valentine's Day and any other special holiday and dates (like the day you met, or the first time you kissed, etc.).

However, no matter how great she feels when you buy her gifts and spoil her on those days, it will mean nothing to her if the rest of the time you are behaving in a way that makes her feel unloved and unvalued.

Consider this...

Have you been behaving in any of the following ways?

1. Failing to notice her efforts to look good for you

Women know that to attract a man and keep him interested in them, they have to look good physically.

It's not enough for a woman to just be a nice person, because we men want to have a physically attractive woman. Just think about the women you masturbate to in porn â it's pretty much all about the physical attraction you feel for how they look.

Men are naturally attracted to how a woman looks, so a guy will often overlook a woman's personality flaws (e.g. her not being very intelligent, not being very nice, etc) just to get her to have sex with him and begin a relationship.

When in a relationship, a woman knows that she â caughtâ her man by looking good initially and if she feels lucky to be with him, she will continue to make every effort to KEEP looking good for him so that he will stay with her.

However, if her guy stops noticing the efforts she is making to remain physically attractive for him, she will begin to feel unhappy and feel like he is taking her for granted.

This applies even if your girlfriend has put on some weight in the relationship, but still makes an effort to look as pretty and appealing as she can in other ways (e.g. applying make up, wearing new clothes, etc).

So, ask yourself...

Have you been failing to notice when your girlfriend is wearing a new outfit to impress you? Do you assume that she's just doing it for nothing, rather than hoping to get a, "Wow babyâ you look hot" reaction from you?

Have you ever brushed her off when she asked you for an opinion on what to wear by saying, â I don't care. Whatever you decide is fine with me babe.â

This may seem fine to you because you may not care too much about fashion or looking good, but it means a lot to her because she knows that a woman's physical appearance is the most attractive thing to a man.

You might think that your girlfriend looks great no matter what she wears, but not taking the time to pay attention to things that matter to her will cause her to question whether you actually care about her at all.

It may sound so trivial to you (don't worry, I get that. I'm a man too), but it's important to her.

If you ignore her efforts often enough, she will feel like you are taking whatever she does to please you for granted. She will then begin to feel unhappy and may start being annoying, distant or begin to nag you about random things just to make you feel bad too.

2. Putting her in second place in your life

As you go through life, plans can and do change.

Your girlfriend would be unreasonable if she got mad and said that you were taking her for granted, if you only had to change your plans with her once or twice at the last minute.

However, if it's an ongoing habit of yours, where you make plans to do something that she really wants to do with you, only to call her up at the last minute to cancel because you have to work late, or you got caught up with some friends, or your mom wanted you to go over for dinner, etc she will naturally begin to feel second best in your life.

She will feel as though you make time available for her when it's convenient for you, which makes her feel like she is just waiting around for you.

So, what place should she have in your life?

Should be your number one priority with everything?

No.

The right way to approach a relationship with a woman you love is to make her the most important person in your life, but not the most important thing.

The most important thing in your life needs to be your purpose in life.

In other words, your mission in life, your big dreams and ambitions that you are aiming to achieve throughout your life.

Never make a woman the most important thing in your life.

However, do allow her to become the most important person if you love her and are truly committed to her.

If she's just another girl that you're dating, then don't give her that level of commitment and importance.

Yet, if you see her as the one for you and the girl you love and want to commit to, then make her the most important person in your life.

To do that, you just have to care about her, love her and want the best for you and her.

It's not about lavishing her with gifts, doing loads of nice things for her or anything like that.

Instead, it's about genuinely treating her like the most important person in your life, while you also continually focus on the most important thing in your life (i.e. your purpose, dreams and ambitions).

If you are spending time with her, away from focusing on your purpose, then give her your time and attention.

If you are focussing on your purpose, then she needs to respect your focus and not be wanting to always take your attention and time away from that.

In fact, if you let her take your time and attention away too much or too often, she will lose respect and attraction for you due to letting yourself be distracted by her.

So, give her time, attention and love, but don't go overboard and make her feel like everything you do is about her.

Instead, know what is the most important thing to you, focus on that, make progress on it AND give her time, love and attention too.

If you do that, she will respect you, feel attracted to you and stick with you because it's so rare to find a man like that.

Women refer to men like that as real men and they are very hard to find.

When a woman finds one, she knows that it would be a huge mistake for her to ever leave him because other guys just wouldn't compare.

3. Not pulling your weight in the home or the relationship

In a relationship, you need to be the man and be the more dominant one, otherwise your woman will lose respect and attraction for you over time.

Being the more dominant one doesn't mean that your girlfriend is less important, less intelligent, doesn't have a say in the decision-making, or has to get stuck with doing everything around the home.

If she is always the one doing the cooking, cleaning and other housework, or, if she's always the one changing her plans to suit you, or running errands for you while you never do the same for her, she will naturally feel like you're using her.

Her opinions, needs and wants are just as important as your own because she is a living, breathing human being who deserves respect and love just as much as you do.

If a woman feels as though her guy doesn't see her as being equally important or deserving of love, then she will naturally grow to resent him and may eventually seek to get emotional revenge by dumping him (usually when he is at a weak point in life emotionally) or cheating on him to make herself feel better.

So, if you want a relationship to be happy, balanced and last for life, you need to let a woman sense that you are the more dominant one, but you still love her, respect her and appreciate her.

When you approach it that way, she will stick to you like glue for life.

She Loves You Enough to Want You to Fix Yourself

Although it never feels nice to be accused of behaving in a selfish or inconsiderate way towards someone, rather than get defensive about it, or worse, feeling hurt and misunderstood, use her feedback to become an even better, more well rounded man than you are right now.

In a relationship, it is the man's responsibility to maintain the love, respect and attraction that his woman feels for him, and a big part of that is making her feel the way she wants to feel (i.e. making her feel feminine, loved, appreciated, lucky to have you, etc).

If a boyfriend stops making his girlfriend feel loved, appreciated and valued, she will become increasingly unhappy in the relationship and she will then begin to look for ways to change his behavior (e.g. threatening to break up with him, flirting with other guys to make him jealous, etc).

With you saying something like, "My girlfriend says I take her for granted," means that somewhere along the line you stopped making her feel the way she wants to feel in a relationship, so it's now up to you to change your approach to her and the relationship.

This is where many guys go wrong, because they think, "Why should I change who I am or what I'm doing just to suit her? If she wants to be my girlfriend she should love me exactly as I am! Isn't that what love is?"

Guys like that assume that being loved for who you are means a woman should put up with a guy's insecurities or bad behavior just because they are in a relationship.

What a lot of those guys fail to realize is that negative behaviors such as taking a woman for granted, being needy and insecure, forcing the woman to lead in the relationship, etc., are common reasons why many women break up with their boyfriend (fiancé or husband).

Unlike in the past where a woman had to grin and bear it for life, today's women will leave a guy if he fails to make her feel the way she wants to feel in a relationship.

It might suck to hear that, but welcome to life as a modern man. You either know how to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction overtime or you don't.

If you don't, then you unfortunately have to suffer the consequences of getting broken up with over and over again throughout life, before you eventually work out how to be the type of man that a woman will stick with.

Right now, you can change any of your negative, unattractive behaviors and become an ever better man that you already are.

Not just for your girlfriend, but also for yourself.

By becoming a better, more emotionally balanced and well rounded version of yourself, you will not only make your girlfriend feel intense respect, love and attraction for you as a man, you will also improve other areas in your life (e.g. your relationships with friends and family, your potential of getting promoted at work, etc).

You may be a good guy already, but you become an even better man.

If you want to live a successful, happy life as a man, you should always be aiming to become an emotionally stronger, wiser and more well-rounded man than you are at the time.

Guys who keep pushing forward and reaching for their true potential as a man are the guy who others look up to and who women feel attracted to and never want to leave.

So, if you're at a point now where your girlfriend feels like you're taking her for granted, don't worry.

It's not the end of the world.

You can turn the situation around by getting her to forgive your mistaken approach and then feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you as a man.

When she does that, she will naturally begin to reconnect with the love that she once felt for you and your relationship will be back on track.

My Wife Thinks We Need Time Apart

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're saying, "My wife thinks we need time apart," then you might be feeling as though your life is falling apart at the seams right now.

All those promises you made to each other when getting married seem to mean nothing to her now.

If she is asking for time apart, it means that she is breaking up with you in the most subtle way possible.

She wants to create some distance between you and her, so she can hopefully move on without you.

Chances are, you might be asking yourself questions like:

- Does "time apart" mean that we're essentially headed for a divorce?
- What if she really enjoys the time apart and then decides that she doesn't love me anymore and no longer wants to be married?
- Do I want to start from the beginning with another woman after all her and I have been through?
- Will the time apart possibly help our marriage, or will it make us grow even further apart than we already have?
- Will I be on my own for years or for the rest of my life, while she happily moves on without me?
- What if she meets another man during the time we have apart?
- Has she already met another man, which is really why she wants time apart from our marriage?
- Is it already too late to fix the problems in our relationship?
- Is there anything I can do to change her mind?

Right now, you might not be feeling very hopeful or optimistic about your chances of keeping the marriage together, but the truth is that it's not too late to change how your wife feels and get her to change her mind.

How?

When you get her to feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you again, she will naturally reconnect with her feelings of love for you and begin to reconsider her decision to want time apart.

When you make her reconnect with her original feelings for you and fall back in love with you, she will stop feeling the need for time apart.

However, if you continue to keep making the same old mistakes and setting off negative chain reactions in your marriage, she will move forward with her idea to be apart.

What is She Not Telling You?

[image: What is your wife not telling you?]

When a woman decides that she needs to separate from her husband, her decision is not based on her feelings over just one fight or argument.

In other words, sheâs not going to sincerely say, *â We need time apart,*â just because of an argument, or because, just this once, he forgot to pick up his clothes off the floor, or he didnât do the dishes even though he promised he would.

Most women take a long time to come to the decision of separating from their husband.

Of course, there are some women who are immature and who arenât truly ready to take marriage seriously (e.g. think of some of the celebrities whoâve gotten married and divorced within a year).

There are also some women who arenât fully committed to being married and at the first sign of a disagreement, they give up and begin to think of divorcing or spending time apart.

However, in most cases, from the moment a woman says *â I do,*â on her wedding day, she is going to be committed to making her marriage work.

So, when she eventually makes a decision to ask her husband for time apart, something very negative and ongoing about his behavior, thinking or attitude has brought her to this decision.

After helping a lot of men successfully fix their relationship problems with women, Iâve found that at this point of a relationship, many guys arenât sure what has caused the womanâs desire to finally ask for time apart.

For example: A guy will usually say things like, *â We have been fighting a lot lately, so I guess itâs because of that,*â or *â I donât think itâs about specific things; itâs probably just because sheâs tired of fighting with me.*â

This isnât the guyâs fault, but itâs simply because most women donât come out and explain what the real reasons for her loss of respect and attraction are.

A woman might say things like, “I donât love you anymore” or “You donât make me feel happy anymore,” but that is rarely (if ever) followed with instructions on how to get her love you again and how to make her feel happy in the relationship.

A woman will usually give vague excuses like, *â I think we need time apart,*â or *â I just need some space to think things through,*â or even, *â Things might improve between us if we take some time apart.*â

Why donât women give instructions on how to win them over and be the man they really want?

A woman doesnât want to take on the role of being a guyâs teacher on how to be a man or how to be attractive and loveable in a relationship.

If she takes on that role, it changes the dynamic of a relationship from a man and a woman, into a mother and child or teacher and student dynamic.

For a woman to remain respectful of her man, attracted to him and in love with him, she needs to be able to look up to him as her man, not look down on him as a lost guy who still hasnât worked out how to be a man.

So, if youâre saying, *â My wife thinks we need time apart,*â and donât really know why, then you need to start by working out what youâve been doing over the course of the marriage to eat away at her respect and attraction for you.

Getting Her to Feel Attracted to You Again

Growing up, most guys are never taught how a woman's attraction for a man really works.

We get told things like, "Be nice, listen and treat her like a princess," but we don't get told, "Oh, but a woman will only appreciate that nice treatment if she respects you and feels attracted to you."

No one tells us that niceness isn't what turns a woman on and makes her remain madly in love with a guy.

What does attract women?

Watch this video for an example of how to make your wife feel more attracted to you and stop your wife from feeling the need to have time apart .

As you will discover from the video above, you have a lot of direct control over how much attraction your wife feels for you.

It's up to you how much you decide to attract her by displaying the personality traits and behaviors that are naturally attractive to women.

Likewise, it's up to you how much you decide to continue displaying the personality traits and behaviors that turn a woman off.

Mistakes to Avoid When Trying to Get Her to Reconsider Her Desire For Time Apart

[image: Why does my wife think we need time apart?]

If you want your wife to reconsider having time apart, you need to make sure that you focus on making her feel what she wants to feel.

It can't be about you getting what you want from her. At this point, she likely doesn't care too much about what you want because she is fed up of not getting what she wants.

With that said, here are some common mistakes to avoid making .

1. Making desperate promises that you're not sure how to keep

[image: Husband making desperate promises]

Most guys are good guys and it's natural that if they see their wife crying or being unhappy, they will want to make her feel better.

Although it might seem like the right thing to do to apologize to her and even to say, "I promise I'll do whatever you want me to do to make you happy and make our marriage work," it's not what she wants.

The problems in your marriage probably didn't just happen overnight, which means that you've probably apologized to her many times before.

You may have promised to change, but because you weren't fully clear about what she really wanted from you, it's possible that you've been offering to change the wrong things.

For example: A husband and wife might have had several arguments about him working late. In his mind, the husband concluded that the issue was his long working hours so he might have said,

“I’m so sorry honey. I promise I’ll stop working so late.”

In his mind, he had already solved what he perceived to be the problem and he was making things right again.

However, to her, the problem was a lot more complex than that, and his working late was only a small example of his taking her for granted in many other areas in their marriage.

Yet, by promising to fix only a small part of the problem, (i.e. by working less hours), he was clearly showing her that he didn’t fully understand the root of the real problem.

Rushed apologies don’t work on wives who want to leave, because they’ve usually gone through a lot with their husband already and know when he is clueless vs. clear on what he really needs to do.

Women instinctively know that a man first needs to understand what is causing her to be unhappy, and it will then take some time (days or weeks) for him to fix any emotional issues that he may have and improve on the mistakes that he’s been making.

So, if he makes desperate promises and claims that he’s already changed or “it won’t happen again,” a wife will usually know that he’s not going to be able to follow through on his promise.

2. Crying, begging or pleading with her to stay

When a wife says to her husband that she thinks they need time apart, it’s only natural that he might feel shocked and emotionally stunned by the news.

However, if he then loses control in front of her, it only accomplishes 1 of 3 things:

1. She loses even more respect and attraction for him because he’s behaving like a weak man in front of her.
2. She feels like she holds all the power in the relationship, which then makes her question whether or not he deserves her.
3. She feels like she has to console him because he is so emotionally sensitive, which kills her attraction for him as she takes on the role of mother, big sister or friend.

Women are attracted to the emotional strength in men and repelled by weakness.

No matter what a woman says to other people, deep down she wants a masculine man who makes her feel safe and taken care of; not a guy who loses control of his emotions like a boy or who can’t face the challenges of life or relationships.

Fortunately, even if a husband slips up and makes this mistake, it is still possible to regain her respect, attraction and love; so don’t worry if you’ve begged, pleaded or even cried to her.

There is a way back.

It’s Not Too Late to Regain Her Respect, Love and Attraction For You

Right now, it might seem like an impossible task to get your wife to change how she feels. However, there are so many easy things that you can do today to begin re-sparking her respect and attraction for you.

Remember: If the love was really there between you and your wife, it will still be there in the background; even if right now sheâs disconnected from it.

You donât have to sit around wasting time, saying, My wife thinks we need time apart, and hoping that if you give her enough space, she will miraculously change her mind and come running back to you.

What you need to do is change how she feels about you right now, before it's too late.

You need to make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction when you interact with her in person, on the phone, via text messages or on social media.

When she feels a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, she will naturally begin to reconnect with her feelings of love for you and she will then reconsider her need for time apart.

Sometimes, a wife will come back after time apart because she's just not used to being on her own.

However, if she comes back and her husband is still unable to make her feel like she's in love with him, she will just want to leave again.

So, if you want her to stay with you for life and be in love with you, make sure that you are making real changes today.

There's only so much that a modern woman will put up with these days.

All she has to do is turn on the TV and there new examples every day of women who divorce their husbands and enjoy a better life without him.

You've got to get the spark back with her before it's too late.

Get her to fall back in love with you again and she will stop feeling the need to be apart from each other.

My Girlfriend Keeps Texting Another Guy

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When an attractive woman first gets into a relationship, she'll usually still have a number of other guys who are trying to pursue her.

If she is serious about you, she will let the other guys know that she is no longer available because you are her boyfriend and she's not planning on break up with you.

However, sometimes a woman will text other guys to make you jealous because she doesn't feel like she has enough power over you, or she wants to test how confident you are in your attractiveness to her compared to other guys.

If you fail her test and become insecure, it will set off a whole series of negative chain reactions that could lead to her cheating on you or breaking up with you.

What Happened to Me and How I Fixed it (Personal Story)

[image: Dan Bacon - wife]

Personally speaking, my girlfriend (who recently became my wife) was 20 when I met her and I was 35.

That's her in the photo above. Obviously, she is hot, young and sexy, so it was no surprise to me that other guys were pursuing her around the time I met her.

When we first began our relationship, she had one particular guy (who she'd hooked up with a few months before) who was trying to pursue her via text and Whatsapp.

What did I do when I saw that he was texting her?

Nothing. I simply ignored it. From my perspective, I am a highly valuable guy and if a girl messes up with me, it's her loss, not mine.

So, when I was sitting with her on the sofa during the first week of our relationship and some other guy kept texting her, I just let it unfold. I didn't bother me at all because it's normal for a hot girl to still have other guys hovering around hoping to get a chance.

I didn't feel jealous or worry about losing her. Instead, I simply waited to see what would happen and just got on with being my normal confident, positive, forward moving self.

The only thing that crossed my mind was that I wanted to see if she'd eventually talk to me about it and ask me for advice on how she could get rid of him.

When she continued to see that I wasn't reacting an insecure way to the texts and Whatsapp messages that kept coming through, she eventually said, "Hhh! This guy keeps texting me. He's asking if you and me are serious. What should I say?"

We were in my lounge room at the time and I said in a confident, easy-going and sincere way, "Whatever you want. If want to be serious with me, then tell him that and if you don't, then meet up with him. It's up to you."

She said something like, "No way! I'm not meeting up with him. I'm with you now. I'm just replying to his texts."

It took about 4-5 days for her to get to that point.

Essentially, because she was a hot, 20 year old girl, it was only natural for her to want to text and get attention like that from another guy.

Although her and I have never discussed it since (I don't care because I know that I'm much more attractive and appealing than any guy she's met before), I know that one of the reasons she kept texting him was to see if I would get jealous.

The fact that I didn't get insecure or jealous allowed her to be able to feel a deep respect and attraction for me that would have been impossible to feel otherwise.

She knew that I could easily attract other women (I had 4 other women in my life at that time), so she didn't want to play hard to get with me and get dumped.

She's a very confident girl who knows that she's hot, so the only type of man who can truly match up with a girl like that for life, is a man who knows that he is attractive as well.

Bringing this back to your girlfriend...

If your girlfriend is attractive and could easily get another guy, you've got to make sure that you feel like you are more than good enough for her, rather than feeling like she is making a mistake by being with you.

Don't ruin your chance at deepening your girlfriend's respect and attraction for you by being unnecessarily insecure or jealous.

If she's just texting this other guy to test you, then she's going to want to see that you are confident in your sex appeal and value to her.

If you can honestly believe that the other guy is nothing compared to you, then you will naturally come across as more attractive and appealing to her because you will be confident and emotionally secure, rather than insecure.

Knowing that you're better than him is not about putting him down or saying that you're more appealing and attractive than he is. Instead, it's just about knowing that you're better than him because he said so.

Each man gets to decide his own worth in this life, so don't make the mistake of deciding that you're unworthy of your girlfriend's attention, love and devotion.

Know that you're more than good enough for her.

When you know that you're more than good enough for a woman, you can smile and even laugh at any tests she tries to put you through.

When a woman sees that you have that kind of belief in yourself, it makes her feel a deep respect and attraction for you that she could not experience if you were insecure.

Women Don't Always Behave Like We Do

Over the years, I have helped many guys understand why women behave in the strange, weird and odd ways they do.

Here are some examples for you in this video...

The first thing you need to understand is that women often think, behave and act in a completely different way than most men expect them to.

This is why, when a guy asks me, “Should I be worried that my girlfriend keeps texting another guy?” I have to explain that even though in certain circumstances it can be okay (e.g. when the guy is a very good friend she’s known for many years, if she’s working on a big project at work or in college that requires she communicate with this guy, or she’s just testing his confidence to see if he’ll become jealous), more often than not, her texting another guy is not a good sign.

[image: Texting and calling behind her boyfriend's back]

Although it is fine for a woman to be social and friendly with other men at times, if she is flirting and texting with another guy when you’re in a long-term relationship, then there is a problem.

For example: Although I was completely fine to let my girlfriend slowly get rid of a texting guy when her and I first got together, I definitely wouldn’t accept her texting now.

She hasn’t ever done anything like that since (otherwise I wouldn’t have married her) and simply laughs at any attempts that guys make to try and chat with her (e.g. she still gets random guys trying to add her and chat with her via Facebook, even though her relationship status is set to married).

I don’t care if another guy tries to contact her via Facebook, because I know that she won’t flirt with him.

I’ve made her feel deep and intense respect, love and attraction for me from the start, to the point where she has literally said things like, “If you ever dumped me, I would be screwed. There’s no way I could ever find a guy like you out there again.”

Something like that anyway. She said it in a more romantic, loving way, but that should give you an idea of her mindset prior to us getting married.

She is 100% committed to our relationship and knows that being with me is much better than risking being stuck with a guy who doesn’t have half the attractive qualities (e.g. true confidence, the ability to make her laugh and feel girly, charisma, masculine vibe, etc) that I do.

Yet, how about your girlfriend?

Does she you as being better than other guys? Does she feel like she’s got herself an awesome boyfriend, or does she feel as though she might have settled for a guy who may not deserve her?

If you’re worried that she’s rapidly losing interest in being with you, what should you do that she’s texting another guy?

[image: Why is my girlfriend texting another guy?]

You probably don’t want to become one of those insanely jealous, controlling boyfriends who forbid their girlfriend to talk to other guys, right?

Hopefully not.

However, if your girlfriend texting another guy is making you feel disrespected, it’s definitely up to you to make her stop, especially if you’ve been in a relationship more than a couple of months.

[image: Why do you keep texting this other guy?]

If your relationship is only beginning, don’t worry about it, but if you’ve been together for a long time, you need to stand up for yourself in a calm, confident way.

You have to get her to respect you, but don’t try to achieve that by getting angry and forcing her to show you respect. You have to tell her how you feel and give her an ultimatum.

For example: If I was in that situation, I would say something like, “Hey, we’ve been together for a while now and we’re a couple, but by texting other guys like that, you are showing me that you’re committed to this relationship and to us being together. I feel like you’re disrespecting me when you do that and I’m not going to put up with it. If you don’t stop texting him, then you and me are finished.”

If she keeps texting him after then, simply dump her and teach her a lesson.

If you’re worried about dumping her because you think she will run to him, then you’ve set the relationship up incorrectly.

For a relationship with a woman to be successful, you have to make her feel lucky to be with you.

If it’s you who feels like the lucky one to be with her, then it’s only natural that she will begin to stray if you stop making her feel a sufficient amount of attraction to justify being in a committed relationship with you.

What’s important is whether or not you are making her feel attracted to your personality and who you are as a man.

If the guy she is texting is making her feel more attracted to his personality, confidence and potential as a man, while you’re turning her off with insecurity and jealousy, then it’s only a matter of time before she breaks up with you.

Watch this video to understand how to stop a break up from happening...

As you will discover from the video, you actually have a lot of control over how you are making your girlfriend feel.

If you’re turning her off, making her lose respect for you and causing her to fall out of love with you, then it’s only natural that she will begin to stray emotionally.

Eventually, it will lead to her cheating or just breaking up with you.

So, I’d recommend you fix the problem now before it gets even messier and more difficult for you.

What is Causing Your Girlfriend Turn to Another Guy?

[image: Why is she losing interest in you?]

Although it’s politically correct to say that a modern relationship is a 50/50 partnership, I can assure you that this is what causes most relationships to lose the spark and break up.

If your girlfriend is feminine, then you have to make sure that you are very masculine in how you think, feel, behave and take action in life.

You can’t be neutral like a friend and expect that the sexual spark will remain. You have to be masculine, which then allows her to be feminine.

Just like a magnetic force attracts with a positive and negative, humans feel attracted when there is a clear difference in masculine and feminine energy.

If your girlfriend is turning to another guy, you may have been making the mistake of being too neutral, too masculine (e.g. aggressive, cold, etc) or possibly too feminine (e.g. being cutesy, giggling like her, etc).

Although it’s important to be masculine, you have to make sure that you also love and respect her and don't take her feelings for you for granted.

As a man, you've got to take on the responsibility of deepening the love, respect and attraction that your girlfriend feels for you over time.

You can't expect her to do that and hope that it happens magically on its own. Love, respect and attraction deepens over time when a guy is confident, masculine, but also loving, caring and considerate.

It's about being a man that she can look up to and respect, rather than being a sensitive, insecure guy that she feels she needs to take care of emotionally or a careless, asshole of a boyfriend who expects her to stick around because things were good at the start.

If a guy fails to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for him over time, the woman will gradually begin to lose interest in being in a relationship with him. She will slowly fall out of love with him and open herself up to the idea of being with another guy.

Of course, it hasn't always been like that for men.

In the past, women had to stick with one man for life because it was shameful to get divorced (people got married, rather than being boyfriend and girlfriend), but in today's world, a woman can break up with as many guys as she wants.

If a woman isn't happy, she no longer has to stick around, which is why it has become essential for modern men to be able to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

If your girlfriend is texting another guy, whether behind your back or even right in front of you, she is clearly letting you know that something about your attitude or behavior in the relationship has changed, and it is causing her feelings for you to change.

From now on, you are either going to change your approach to her and get her to feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, or you're going to potentially ruin the dynamic further and lose her.

Now that you've managed to find my site here, you don't have to sit around and wait for the day when your girlfriend comes to you and says, â€œIt's over. I'm in love with another guy and I'm leaving you.â€ If you do that, you'll most-likely be back here again watching my video on how to get an ex back.

If you want to avoid getting dumped by your girlfriend because of this other guy, you've got to make some changes right now.

Here's what you need to do!

1. Identify the real reasons why your girlfriend is losing interest in you.

If you have a think about it for a minute, you could probably come up with several reasons why your girlfriend is unhappy with you.

Although it would be nice if your girlfriend sat you down and explained exactly where you've been going wrong and exactly what you need to do to get her to feel enough respect, love and attraction for you, she's probably not going to do that.

Why? A woman doesn't want to have to teach her guy how to be a man. She wants him to figure that out himself and then simply be the man she needs.

If she has to spell it all out, she will end up feeling like his mother who has to teach him the rules of life or in this case how to behave like a real man in a relationship.

So, the first step you need to take is to figure out what is really causing your girlfriend to lose interest in being in a relationship with you.

For example: Have you been behaving in any of the following ways lately?

- Taking her for granted.
- Being needy and clingy.
- Failing to rise through the levels of life and your true potential, because you're hiding behind the safety of your relationship with her.
- Letting her wear the pants in the relationship.
- Lacking in self-confidence around her and in social situations.
- Feeling insecure about losing her to the point where you can't control your jealousy.

When you know the real reasons why your girlfriend is losing interest in you, you can make the correct changes that will make her feel understood and happy again.

When she feels a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, the other guy will become less appealing to her.

On the other hand, if you don't know exactly what she really wants you to change, you might keep making the same old mistakes, or you might try to change the wrong things.

For example: A woman might be losing interest in a guy because he is insecure and he's not reaching for his true potential as a man. Yet, he will try to impress her by taking her out to expensive dinners, telling her how much he loves her and trying to be a nicer, more caring boyfriend.

Until he fixes the real issues that are causing her to lose respect and attraction for him, she won't really appreciate all the other things he does because it's not what she really cares about or wants to see from him right now.

2. Make the changes now, before it's too late

There's really no point in figuring out what is causing your girlfriend to turn to another guy, if you don't then make a serious effort to begin improving your appeal to her.

Your girlfriend is only going to begin taking you seriously again, when she sees that you're rapidly improving in the areas that were turning her off.

My Wife Wants a Divorce and I Don't

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Right now, if you're saying something like, "My wife wants a divorce and I don't," then you probably believe that there's not much you can do to change her decision.

You can.

Just because the situation might look hopeless to you, the truth is that it's not too late to make your wife reconsider her decision; even if she's saying there's nothing you can say or do that will change how she feels.

What you need to realize is that when you make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you as a man, she will naturally feel more willing to reconnect with the love she felt for you at the beginning of your marriage, and make her want to be in love with you again.

How can you do that?

You Need to Begin Offering Her What She Really Wants, Not What You Think She Wants

[image: What to do when your wife wants a divorce]

It's natural that if you're saying, "My wife wants a divorce and I don't," you will be feeling desperate to change how she feels immediately.

However, desperation can lead to behaving in an insecure way, which will turn your wife off further and make her even more determined to go through with the divorce.

Where Many Husbands Go Wrong When Faced With the Possibility of Being Divorced

When a man is suddenly faced with the possibility of being divorced by his wife, he will usually make one of the following classic mistakes:

1. He will ask his wife to tell him what he's done wrong and what needs to do to be the man she wants.

[image: Tell what to do and I will change]

On one hand, it seems makes total sense to ask your wife what you're doing wrong, so you can then fix the problem and get on with enjoying married life together.

Yet, women don't like it when a man asks for instructions on how to be the man she needs.

Why?

A woman doesn't want to be responsible for teaching her husband how to make her feel the way that she really wants to feel in a marriage.

If the student/teacher role becomes an ongoing theme in the relationship, the sexual dynamic will go out of sync.

Rather than feeling naturally attracted to a husband that she looks up to and respects, she will feel turned off by the ongoing cycle of a teacher/student or mother/son type of relationship, where she essentially has to teach him how to grow up and be the man she needs him to be.

By asking his wife to explain what heâs been doing wrong, a man is essentially telling her heâs unable to work it out by himself. The wife then feels as though he isn't going to be the type of man she wants unless she takes on the role of being his teacher and tells him what to do and how to behave.

To a man, it makes total sense, "Tell me and I'll do it. Simple. Now, let's get on with enjoying married life together," but it's not the role that a woman wants to take on.

Most men don't care who they get their instructions from, which is fine for us men, but it's not fine from a woman's perspective.

Women instinctively know that they shouldn't be the teachers of men. They know that men shouldn't need a mother figure or female teacher to help them to be an attractive man that they can look up to and respect.

Being her husband's guide on how to be a man makes a woman feel turned off at a deep level because she has to take on the responsibility of being the âmanâ or the "mother" figure in their relationship, which doesn't allow her to feel like a real woman (i.e. feminine, girly, free to be emotional, etc).

Sometimes, a wife will tell her husband what the problem is, but she won't always be explicitly direct about it. Some wives are committed to the marriage no matter what and will forgo their natural instinct to be feminine, in the hope that they can save the marriage.

Yet, she won't like how it feels to be her husband's teacher. It will turn her off on a deep level.

In most cases, a wife will avoid the responsibility of being her husband's relationship teacher and will instead give him plenty of warning signs and hints that she is unhappy. She will then hope that he gets the message and changes before it's too late.

Although some women might come right out and say something direct like, *âWhen you choose to spend every Saturday with your friends instead of me, I feel that you are putting me in second place in your life and that makes me feel neglected and taken for granted,*â most women will simply show their dissatisfaction via their behavior, body language and actions.

By the time that a wife has reached the point where she wants a divorce, she usually feels that sheâs exhausted all her options in getting through to her man.

Despite all her hints, he still hasn't taken the initiative to change and become the sort of man who is deepening her feelings of love, respect and attraction over time, rather than destroying them.

When a wife gets to the point where she's now considering divorce, she might say something like, "That's it! I've had enough! I want a divorce. I'm leaving you" and will tell her husband that she no longer feels happy and doesn't love him like she used to.

If her husband then says, *âDon't do this to us! We made a vow to stay married for life. Tell me what I need to change and I'll do it,*â she will feel even more misunderstood and turned off by him.

For her to take on the role of teacher, it will mean that she has to forgo experiencing the type of respect, attraction and romantic love that a woman wants to feel for her man.

Rather than being with a husband that she can look up to and respect, she will feel as though she's stuck with a confused guy who doesn't yet know how to be the type of man that a woman will remain attracted to, respectful of and in love with for life.

How about you? Do you know how to make your wife feel attracted to you? Do you know how to deepen her feelings over time, rather than having them fade away?

What you need to understand is that the amount of attraction that your wife feels for you is largely under your control.

You control how many attractive personality traits and behaviors (e.g. confidence, drive, determination, emotional security, etc) that you display around your wife.

Likewise, you also control how many unattractive traits and behaviors that you display around her (e.g. insecurity, jealousy, taking her for granted, not following through on your biggest ambitions in life because you're hiding behind the safety of the marriage, expecting her to think, behave and act more like you than a man, etc).

2. He falls to pieces and ends up crying, begging and pleading with her.

Divorce is a really big deal, so it's completely understandable that a man will be shaken if his wife wants a divorce and he doesn't.

Yet, falling to pieces in front of a woman and crying, begging or pleading with her to change her mind will simply turn her off even more.

Women are instinctively attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by weakness, so when a man cries, begs and pleads because he is feeling emotionally weak and insecure, it's a huge turn off for a woman.

This is especially true in a marriage. A married woman understands that life can often be challenging and that a man requires mental and emotional strength to be able to properly survive, thrive and prosper in this world.

A wife wants to know that she can rely on her husband to be a strong man in difficult times, rather than feeling as though she is the stronger one in the marriage and needs to take care of him emotionally.

Falling to pieces in front of her at such a crucial moment, only serves to reinforce her opinion that he's not enough of a man for her and that she would probably be better off divorcing him and moving on.

However, don't worry if you have momentarily lapsed into behaving in an emotionally weak way around your wife. You can still change how she feels right now by being emotionally strong from now on and focusing your attention on making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you as a man.

If there's any hope still left in her heart that you and her can make the marriage work, she's going to need to see that you have the ability to get her respect and attraction back.

If you can't do that, then she probably won't take any of your promises seriously and will simply stick to her decision to get divorced and move on without you.

3. He makes her promises that he can't really keep.

In most cases, when a marriage gets to a point where divorce is being discussed, a husband may have already promised to change many times during prior arguments or fight with his wife.

Yet, once he and his wife have â□□kissed and made up,â□□ itâ□□s common for the man to then slowly forget about his promises and go back to his old patterns of behavior and thinking once again.

As a husband, he mistakenly feels as though he is fully protected by the vows they made on the wedding day and that she will stick by him for life, because it would be shameful, embarrassing and exhausting to go through a divorce.

It would be nice if those things were enough of a deterrent for divorce for women, but they're not, which is why the divorce rate is so high these days.

In the past, a woman would stay with a man for life, even if she was unhappy and being mistreated, because it really was shameful to get divorced.

It was also very difficult for a woman to be able to earn her own money, support herself and find a new guy after already being married before because divorcees were looked down upon.

Yet, in today's society, divorce is often pushed as "the right thing to do" by TV talk show hosts, Hollywood movies, female pop singers and TV drama shows that glamorize the process of having affairs, getting divorced and starting over afresh with someone new later in life.

It sucks, but that's how the modern world works. Women have a voice on TV and many TV shows are aimed at female audiences, who usually love to watch the drama of affairs, divorces and new love stories playing out.

In today's world, if you want your marriage to last for life, you have to be able to deepen your wife's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

In the past, men didn't have to learn about how to deepen a woman's feelings and keep her happy because they could simply take their wife for granted.

Not anymore.

You've got to be able to guide her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time, or else she will start talking about divorce if the relationship makes her feel unhappy for long periods of time and doesn't seem like it will ever change.

A husband making promises to his wife that he will change usually doesn't work when she's asking for a divorce, because sheâ□□s probably heard it all before and knows that heâ□□s only saying what he thinks she wants to hear to stop her from divorcing him.

For example: He might be promising her that heâ□□ll stop spending so much time with his friends, that he'll take her on the holiday she has always wanted.

He thinks that it will make her happy and shut her up, but that may not be what the real problem is for her.

To her, the real problems in the marriage might be that heâ□□s too insecure and has been turning her off for years because of it. She feels as though he lacks the all-important mental masculinity that she finds so attractive about men and tends to be a bit of a woman at times because he's so emotionally sensitive.

It might also be because she feels that heâ□□s been putting off having a baby, or moving to a new house, even though he knows how important it is to her.

Whatever the case, if you make promises to your wife without actually knowing what is really causing her to want a divorce, you will only highlight to her that youâ□□re still clueless about the real problems in your marriage and that even if she changes her mind, the same problems will probably continue.

The Really Good News

Your wife's current, negative feelings for you are not set in stone.

You can change how she feels.

How?

Think about this!

Have you ever really disliked someone (maybe even her at some point), but you then really liked that person when they changed the way that they interacted with you, treated you or communicated with you?

The same fundamental law of human emotion applies to your wife as well. She can change how she feels if you change your approach to her.

If the current way that you've been communicating with your wife has been turning her off, then it's only natural that she seems unwilling to reconsider her decision to get a divorce.

In fact, it's more likely that she's going to be behaving coldly towards you and maybe even saying things like, Leave me alone or I don't love you anymore.

However, when you change the way that you approach your interactions with her and begin to make her feel differently about you as a result, she will automatically begin to reconsider her feelings for you.

No matter how bad things look right now, your wife's feelings are not set in stone. Feelings can, and do, change all the time. You can change how she feels.

Just think about how you felt when you first arrived at my site to how you feel now.

You most-likely feel a lot more hopeful, happy and inspired than you did before you read my article or watched some of my videos on this page.

True?

This is because human emotions are fluid and open to change. Emotional states are not set in stone and unchangeable.

You can change the way that your wife is feeling right now, by changing how you approach your interactions and communication with her.

When your wife feels enough respect and attraction for you, she will become open to forgiving your past mistakes and will begin reconnecting with the love that she felt for you on your wedding day.

My Girlfriend Won't Open Up to Me

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're saying, "My girlfriend won't open up to me," then you're most-likely at a stage of your relationship where she's lost respect for you and is no longer attracted to you like she was at the start.

Here's the thing!

The start of a relationship is usually the easy part because the man and woman will usually both feel a lot of lust, excitement and love, so it will be enjoyable to spend time together.

Even if you and your girlfriend aren't 100% compatible with each other, the thrill and excitement of being in a new relationship will often overshadow any doubts that you each might have about the chances of your relationship lasting a lifetime.

Yet, when the initial buzz actually does wear off, it might become obvious that something between you and her isn't quite right.

So, what it is that makes a woman not want to open up to her boyfriend anyway?

5 Reasons Why She's Closed Up Around You

[image: My girlfriend won't talk to me]

Have a read through these reasons and decide which one of them most applies to your situation!

1. She doesn't have strong enough feelings for you yet.

A woman doesn't always immediately open up to a guy and fully devote her heart and mind to being in a relationship with him. Sometimes, it takes a bit of time for a woman to check and see whether you're someone worth giving that type of commitment to.

The beginning stages of a relationship are where a woman decides, "Is this guy worth it? Is he going to be someone I can look up to, respect, love and appreciate in the long term, or is he just good for a few laughs and some sex until something better comes along?"

Consider this...

Nothing is worse for a woman than being seduced into a new relationship with a guy who initially seems great, only to discover that he doesn't know how to guide her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction.

Either that or he gets laid and gets to be her boyfriend and then just relaxes and takes her interest in him for granted.

Sometimes, a guy will assume that if he and his girlfriend hang out together, go to the movies, the beach or to eat out together, hold hands, kiss and then have sex, then it will be enough for her to want to open up to him and be his girlfriend forever.

Yet, if that's all he's got to offer, they may as well be friends or brother and sister.

Getting past the initial stages of a relationship and moving onto higher levels is what allows the love, respect and attraction to grow between a man and a woman.

Additionally, having the ability to deepen the attraction that you and her feel for each other is the key to her and yourself turned on and wanting more as the years pass by.

When you say, “My girlfriend won’t open up to me,” consider that right now you may not have created strong enough feelings inside her yet, for her to be looking at you as someone that she truly wants to open up to and be with in the long term or for life.

When a woman has strong, intense feelings for a guy, she usually won’t want to be closed up and ruin her opportunity with him.

Instead, she will allow herself to fall madly in love with him and open her heart and mind to the experience of being in a loving, committed relationship with him.

As you will discover from the video above, you have a lot of direct influence over how your girlfriend feels and behaves around you.

The more attraction, love and respect that you make her feel for you, the quicker she will want to open to you and stick with you before another woman takes you from her.

Another possible reason why your girlfriend isn’t opening up is that...

2. She doesn’t trust you with deeply personal information.

[image: My girlfriend doesn't appreciate me]

You can never fully trust another person to have your back 100%, but when in a relationship with a woman, you both have to be able to take that leap of faith and give each other your full trust.

That being said, sometimes a woman may have trust issues and won’t be willing to trust a guy for months or even years until she feels safe enough to do so.

If your girlfriend won’t open up to you, it may be because:

- She was raised in an unstable environment where her trust was broken many times while she was growing up (e.g. her parents got divorced and her father often promised to take her places, but didn’t follow through on his promises, etc).
- She may have had a previous relationship where her boyfriend proved to be untrustworthy, even though he seemed like a really nice guy initially (e.g. he may have lied to her, cheated on her or may have become emotionally or physically abusive).
- She’s afraid that if she opens up to you, you will use whatever she tells you against her, or you will use it to gain power over her.
- She’s afraid that if she tells you all of her deep dark secrets, you will secretly feel turned off by it, find a replacement girl and then break up with her.

If you want her to relax and open up to you, you have to be the one to give her your full trust first, so that she can relax and respect you as a man.

If she continually sees that you’re not insecure and that you can relax enough to just love her for who she is, she will naturally also start to relax and feel more trusting of you, which will eventually lead to her opening up to you.

3. She doesn’t want to tell you what you’re doing wrong.

[image: My girlfriend has closed her heart off to me]

Once a relationship becomes more established and the initial excitement begins to calm down, a couple will often begin to become aware of each other’s imperfections.

At this point, your girlfriend may have noticed certain “problems” that she overlooked at the beginning of your courtship together (e.g. you’re insecure, you don’t have much purpose in life and are essentially basing your whole life around her, etc).

If you don’t fix those things about yourself, she will naturally begin to lose touch with her feelings of respect, love and attraction for you over time.

However, like most women, she’s not going to come out and tell you what you’re doing wrong and explain how to fix it. Instead, she’s going to give you hints and will sit back and let you figure things out by yourself.

You might see that as her closing off and no longer being willing to open to you, but it may just be her way of trying to get you to pay attention to the fact that she’s rapidly losing interest in being with you.

So, where do you think you might have been going wrong with her so far?

- Have you fallen into the habit of taking her for granted?
- Have you been letting her “wear the pants” in the relationship, boss you around, control you or treat you badly?
- Are you failing to rise through the levels of life like a real man and are instead hiding from your true potential behind her and the relationship?
- Have you been feeling really “lucky” to have her (i.e. because it’s not easy for you to attract women) and are now really afraid of losing her?
- Are you failing to make her feel the way she wants to feel when in a relationship?

Whatever the case is with your relationship, she’s not going to tell you exactly what you need to change and how to fix it. She might tell you some things, but she won’t tell you everything because she doesn’t want to have to become your teacher on how to be a man.

She doesn’t want to teach you how to be the sort of man that will be attractive to her, because she will then be taking on the role of “mother” or “big sister” to you, which will destroy her feelings of sexual attraction for you.

Instead of being your teacher, she wants you to be able to work this stuff out by yourself and just start being the type of man that she actually wants you to be.

When you allow her to relax into her true feminine self and consistently be the man that she can respect, she will then feel as though it is safe and wise to finally open up to you and give you her heart.

4. She will only open up to you when she sees that you don’t need her to.

[image: Why is my girlfriend so mean to me?]

Most women don’t like guys who are clingy and needy for love, attention and affection. If a woman feels that a guy is using her and the relationship as an excuse to hide from reaching for his true potential as a man in life, she will feel turned off by him on a deep and instinctive level.

If he then keeps asking, “Why won’t you open up to me? Don’t you trust me?” or “You know you mean everything to me. Don’t you realize that staying closed off from me like that is killing me? I love you so much” she will instinctively pull away from what she perceives as emotional weakness and immaturity.

Women are instinctively attracted to the emotional strength in men and repelled by weakness. If youâre saying, âMy girlfriend wonât open up to me,â ask yourself these questions:

- Why do you need her to open up to you? What will that do for you?
- Why canât you relax and let her open up in her own time?
- What important things are you truly focused on in your life outside of the relationship?
- Do you feel as though she is all that youâve got in life and without her, your life would be empty and meaningless?

A woman definitely does want a man who also wants her back (and who loves her and respects her), but she doesnât want a guy who feels as though he canât function without her in his life.

If a guy needs a woman like that, it makes her feel as though she has to take care of him emotionally, which is a huge turn off for her. Women want to have a man that they can look up to and respect, not a confused, emotional immature boy that needs to be take care of.

5. She doesnât respect you enough to share the information.

One of the most important things that you need to do to get your girlfriend to open up to you, is to make her feel respect for you as a man.

Sometimes, a woman will be in a relationship with a guy who she secretly doesnât respect, so his opinion about things or his feelings for her really wonât be that important to her.

What are some of the things that will make a woman lose respect for a guy?

- Not following through on his promises.
- Being too protective of her or suspicious about what she is thinking, feeling or doing when he isn't around.
- Belittling her or continually criticizing her.
- Putting her down.
- Being insecure, clingy or needy.
- Hiding from his true potential in life behind her and the relationship.
- Being nervous in social situations, especially around confident guys or attractive women.
- Always letting her win arguments or get her way because he is afraid that she will break up with him.
- Never letting her win or get her way because he wants to control her.

There are many different reasons why a woman will lose respect and attraction for her man.

Regardless of what is true for you and your girlfriend, the only way youâre going to stop saying, âMy girlfriend wonât open up to me,â is to make sure that she not only feels attracted to you sexually, but she also looks up to you and respects you as her man.

When she can look up to you and respect you as her man, while also feeling a deep, sexual desire for you, she will instinctively relax and let her guard down around you.

Opening up to you will feel like the right thing for her to do.

It will happen naturally and as long as you are deepening her feelings of love, respect and attraction, your relationship will naturally continue on through all the subsequent stages until you reach true, commitment love and devotion for each other.

My Relationships Never Work Out

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Guys who say, “My relationships never work out,” often end up believing that they’re not good enough for women and are destined to spend a life alone with a trail of broken relationships.

Either that or they blame it on women for being so crazy, demanding, irrational and unstable.

Consider this though...

Could the reason why you haven’t succeeded in previous relationships simply come down to the fact that you don’t really know what women want in a guy?

If so, don’t worry “you’re not alone.”

Most guys find women confusing, which is why I have made this video to clear up some of that confusion...

As you will discover from the video above, you shouldn’t try to base your understanding on women based on what they say.

Women don’t go around giving the instruction manual on how to attract them into a relationship and then keep them happy.

Instead, women simply reject or dump guys who don’t understand them. Why? Women don’t want to have to be a guy’s teacher on how to be attractive to women.

[image: My relationships never work out with women]

If a woman has to teach a guy to be confident and masculine in the way that turns her on, it makes her feel like more of a mother figure or big sister to him, which is a complete turn off.

Women want to be able to relax and just be feminine around a guy who already knows how to be an attractive man.

Did You Make Any of These Mistakes in Your Previous Relationships?

Some of the most common mistakes that guys make, which lead to a woman losing respect, attraction and love for him include*“*

1. Thinking that being nice to a woman is what makes her want to stick with you.

[image: Thinking that being nice to her will be enough to make her want to stick around]

Most guys have heard women saying, “I just wish I could find a nice guy,” or “Why are all the nice guys taken? I always meet jerks who are only interested in one thing. Why can’t I just meet a nice guy who treats me like a princess?”

When a guy hears that, he might then assume that to attract a beautiful woman and keep her happy in a relationship, he has to be really nice to her and show her that he’s not like all the other guys.

Yet, it doesn’t work. Why? Being nice to a woman isn’t what makes her feel sexually turned on and keen on being in a relationship with you.

What does?

Sexual attraction.

When a woman says that she wants a nice guy, what she really means is a good guy who also makes her feel very attracted.

She isn't looking for a nice guy to kiss her ass and bow at her feet.

Being nice to her is great, but she isn't going to appreciate that unless she feels very attracted to the guy.

If he's just being nice, then there's nothing about what he is doing that will turn her on sexually. Instead, she just feels nice, friendly and platonic around him.

What a lot of nice guys don't realize is that they're not alone in being a nice guy.

The fact is that there are millions of nice guys in this world and it is very easy for a woman to meet a nice guy who is willing to worship the ground she walks on if she will just give him a chance to be with her.

If a woman is attractive, most of the guys that she meets in her life are going to be nice to her in the hope that it makes her "like" him enough to be given a chance.

So, when she meets another "nice" guy she's not going to fall head over heels in love with him, because he doesn't really stand out from every other guy she's already met.

The first mistake that I outline in this video is "Thinking that being nice to a woman is good enough" and if you've made that mistake in the past, you will probably learn a lot from watching the entire video!

As you will discover from the video above, there's nothing wrong with being nice to a woman, but it isn't the thing that is going to make her say, "WOW!" she meets you and it isn't what will make her want to stick with you for life when in a relationship.

The truth is, a woman really only appreciates a guy's nice behavior in a relationship when she feels attracted to him, respects him and loves him.

2. Thinking that putting her on a pedestal will make her stick around because she feels worshipped.

Guys who lack confidence in their ability to attract women and keep them interested often make the mistake of putting their girlfriend on a pedestal.

Essentially, a guy will assume that by hanging on a woman's every word, agreeing to everything she says, allowing her to make all the decisions about where she'd like to go and what she'd like to do, etc., will make her like him more and want to stick with him because he makes her feel so special.

Aww, how sweet.

Although there are some women who enjoy being "worshipped" by a man in this way, most women realize that this type of behavior stems from the guy's lack of confidence in his ability to attract her and other women.

The woman realizes that he hasn't been very successful with other women so he is hoping that if he lets her have all the control and power in the relationship, she will stick with him out of pity.

What he doesn't realize is that in a relationship with a woman, a man has to be the leader.

Yes, a woman will sometimes make decisions and take the lead (and that is absolutely fine), but ultimately it's the man's responsibility to lead and a woman won't fully respect him or feel attracted to him if he hands over his power to her.

3. Being insecure.

Insecurity can manifest itself in many different ways.

For example: When a guy is approaching and talking to women, his insecurity may manifest itself as shyness, trying too hard to be liked or nervousness during a conversation.

Rather than being confident and saying whatever he feels like, he will worry about saying the wrong thing and will soon run out of things to say.

On a date, his insecurity might cause him to try too hard to be liked and he may come across as nervous, which will turn the woman off.

In a relationship, his insecurity might manifest itself as neediness, clinginess, jealousy and over protectiveness.

Although a woman may put up with a man's insecurities for a short while when in a relationship, she will eventually break up with him if she loses too much respect and attraction for him.

[image: Leaving a family behind after a break up]

A woman doesn't want to "baby" a guy and have to teach him how to be a man. If he can't fix his issues and overcome his insecurities on his own, most women will not stick around to hold his hand.

Some guys feel annoyed that women can't accept their insecurity, shyness or lack of confidence and just like them for who they are; but it's not the woman's fault.

A woman is instinctively attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness because for all of human history, life has been challenging.

Even though modern life is easier in some respects, it's still very challenging to be successful and a guy needs to have emotional strength to remain strong when life throws him a curveball.

Women might not be able to go around explaining why they feel attracted in that way, but they have a natural instinct to pair up with a guy who has emotional strength.

Instinctively, a woman knows that a real man will rise through the levels of life, reach for his true potential and go after his true purpose in life without fear.

A woman might not be able to explain why she broke up with an insecure man, but her feelings will be very clear. Deep down, she will know that it's probably not a good idea to stick with him.

That said, it doesn't mean that the guy can't be forgiven. I've personally helped 100s of guys to get an ex girlfriend, fiancée or wife back and many times, the main reason why the woman had broken up with him was due to insecurity and him not being enough of a man for her.

Luckily for us guys, that is something that can be easily fixed. All you need to do is learn how to be a confident, emotionally strong man and a lot of your problems with women will instantly begin to disappear.

You Can Be Successful With Your Next Relationship

Rather than going through the heartache of another relationship break up, decide now that you will begin the rapid transformation into the type of man that women desperately want to be with.

Watch this video to understand that relationships go through very specific stages and if you want your next relationship to work out, you've got to get past the initial stages and reach stage 5.

When you reach the blissful love stage of a relationship and keep it there, life is just feels so damn amazing together than you never want to leave each other.

I know this from personal experience as well because I've been with my wife now for 5 years and it just keeps getting better and better.

It all starts with your ability to attract women when you meet them and then deepen the woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you when in a relationship.

You don't have to go through life saying, "My relationships never work out," and feeling like nothing will ever work out for you.

You can be one of the guys who effortlessly deepens a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

My Girlfriend Said I'm Too Nice

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Some guys who grow up without strong male role models in their life, end up getting their dating advice from their mother who may tell them things like, "If you want to get a decent girl to like you, you are going to have to be a nice guy."

He will told that he needs to be a gentleman, be patient and essentially treat the woman like a Disney princess, even though she's just a normal, everyday girl.

On top of all that, a guy will often overhear women say things like, "I wish I could just find a nice guy to date" or "Why are guys such jerks? All they're interested in is sex. I just want a nice guy who cares about me."

With all that combined, is it any wonder that millions of guys across the globe grow up believing that being nice is the key to getting a woman and then keeping her interested when in a relationship?

Watch this video to understand some of the common lies that women tell men...and what they REALLY want men to do instead...

There's nothing wrong with being a good man, but if you're too nice to a woman (especially when she doesn't treat you well), she just won't be able to respect you.

Women don't actually want to be in the position of power in a relationship.

A woman wants you to respect her and treat her well, but she wants you to get her to respect you too. If you can't do that, she fears that she is with the kind of guy who will get walked all over in life (e.g. taken advantage of by bad people or manipulative friends, ignored for promotions at work, picked on).

Women don't want to have that feeling when they are with their man.

So, if you're saying, "My girlfriend said I'm too nice" you need to understand that women have a primal need to feel like a guy can protect them and keep them safe for life.

It's not about being macho or being a tough guy.

Instead, you just need to have a bit more balls around her and stop letting her walk all over you.

There's nothing wrong with being a good guy, but you just have to ensure that she is being respectful and nice to you too.

Don't let it become a one-sided relationship where you are doing everything for her.

[image: Am I too nice to my girlfriend?]

To be clear: You do not have to become a bad boy or treat her badly to keep her happy.

You can continue to be the good guy that you are, but you have to understand that she also needs to feel sexually attracted to you.

Being nice does not trigger feelings of sexual attraction inside of a woman, but being confident and making her feel girly in response to your masculinity does.

If you are too nice to her, too generous, too sweet and too gentle, then you will lack the all important ingredient of masculinity in your behavior and she will feel turned off.

Women only truly appreciate and feel turned on by sweet gestures from a man that they look up to and respect (i.e. he is the clear leader of the relationship, he is masculine in his thinking, behavior and actions, she feels like his woman rather than his mother or friend).

If you are trying to keep your woman happy by being sweet and nice, then it's just not going to work.

Women need to feel sexually attracted to you and a big part of that comes from the very clear difference between you and her in terms of your energy.

If you are too sweet and nice, you will seem more feminine than masculine and since she is feminine too, she won't feel like there is much of a difference between you and her.

It will feel like she is in a relationship with half a man, or a man who lacks the balls and masculinity she needs to feel attracted and turned on.

Nice Guy Confusion

[image: Does she want me to treat her badly?]

Most of the guys in this world who label themselves as being "nice" really don't know the difference between being a "nice" guy and a "good" guy.

A "nice" guy believes that to get a woman to like him and remain interested in him, he has to do whatever it takes to please her by being really nice, polite, gentlemanly and caring.

For example:

1. He must always be available to her.

Always putting her needs before his own is a common mistake that nice guys when trying in a relationship with a woman or even when trying to get a girl to become interested in dating him.

For example: Regularly canceling his own important plans to do something for her.

He might not go to see a sick friend or family member, put off an important meeting or cancel plans with friends just to run a small, unimportant errand for her, because he believes that he has to always put her needs first to keep her happy in the relationship.

Yet, what he doesn't realize is that type of behavior usually makes a woman lose respect for a guy.

When in a relationship, a woman will test her boyfriend to see how much she can boss him around and control him.

If she realizes that he's essentially her little puppy dog and will sit when she says sit, she then loses respect and attraction for him on an instinctive level.

Why? If he lets her push him around like that, will he be also be the type of guy who isn't respected in the workplace and therefore misses out on promotions? Will he be the type of guy that his male friends pick on and look down on?

2. He must put up with her bad behavior.

Regardless of how much she loves, respects and feels attracted to her boyfriend, a woman will always continue to test him.

Testing him by behaving badly is her way of seeing how far she can push him and how much she can get away with.

[image: My girlfriend says I'm too nice]

For example: She might cancel her plans with him, not reply to his texts, hang up on him, throw tantrums, demand that he buy her expensive things, or flirt with other guys in front of him.

She will test to see how much he is willing to put up with just to be with her.

From the nice guy's perspective, he assumes that he's doing the right thing by showing her that he's willing to put up with anything because he loves her so much.

Yet, from her perspective, he's probably only putting up with her bad behavior because he knows how difficult it will be to get another girl to give him a chance.

3. He must spoil her and accept all her demands.

Nice guys believe that keeping a woman interested is about spoiling her, paying for everything and lavishing her with gifts.

Of course there's nothing wrong with a guy occasionally getting his girlfriend a gift, but it has to be when he feels like doing it because she deserves it.

If he's buying her gifts or taking her out for expensive dinners, etc., because he thinks that it will please her and she'll then remain interested in him, it's likely that she'll end up using him for what she can get out of him and then dump him when he can't keep up with her demands.

4. He must constantly stay in touch with her.

Some nice guys believe that texting and phoning their girlfriend all the time is the best way to let her know how important she is to him.

However, this behavior simply never allows her to miss him and instead makes him come across as being needy and insecure.

There's nothing wrong with being available to talk or text with your girlfriend, but if you're the type of guy who "insta replies" (replies instantly to everything she sends you), she's never going to have the emotional time and space to miss you and really want your reply.

5. He must let her make all the decisions and let her dictate the pace of the relationship.

This is a common mistake that nice guys make in relationships. He believes that to keep a woman happy in a relationship, he has to hand over all the power to her.

When a woman ends up being forced to lead a relationship, she gradually stops feeling respect and attraction for her man. She might like having all the power for a while, but when she realizes that she's essentially taking on the role of "mother" or "big sister" or of "the man" in the relationship, it turns her off at a deep and instinctive level.

If you're behaving in any of the nice guy ways outlined above, then you've made the fundamental mistake that guys make of believing that your niceness is what attracted you to her.

What you've failed to understand before reading this article is that it's easy for a woman to find a "nice" guy out there because most guys in the world are nice guys or at least good guys.

However, what a woman really wants is a good guy who can also make her feel sexually attracted, respectful towards him and fall more deeply in love with him every day that they spend together.

My Girlfriend Said That I'm Too Nice. What Did She Mean?

If your girlfriend said that you're too nice to her, she's trying to give you a hint that you don't need to kiss her ass as much as you have been. You need to have a bit more balls and stop letting her push you around.

It's not about becoming disrespectful, rude or treating her mean, but simply about being more masculine and ballsy.

Whether she is a young girl or a mature woman, your girlfriend wants to feel feminine and girly in contrast to your strength and masculinity.

She can't feel that way if you're suppressing your masculinity because you're being a super nice guy around her instead.

You don't have to become a bad boy or a jerk, but just stop being so agreeable, nice, polite and overly considerate about everything.

Try to be more real around her, rather than thinking that you need to be Mr. Perfect or Prince Charming.

If your doesn't start feeling more sexually attracted to you soon, she'll simply end up seeing you more as her friend rather than as her man. If she doesn't feel sexually attracted to you, then she'll definitely lose interest in having sex with you.

[image: Am I being too nice to my girlfriend?]

So, if you're saying, âMy girlfriend said I'm too niceâ you have to understand that this is her way of saying she's not feeling the way she wants to feel when she's with you.

Even though your girlfriend may love you, if she's not feeling sexually turned on by you, she will eventually give you the, âI think we should just be friendsâ speech.

She will then go out and find herself another guy who can make her feel the way she wants to feel in a relationship.

In the past, women had to choose one man stick with him for life because pre-marital sex was forbidden.

Yet, in today's world, a woman is free to get in and out of relationships until she feels ready to settle down or feels like she's met the one for her.

By the way!

Even if your girlfriend initially referred to you as "the one," it doesn't mean that she will continue to see you that way if you no longer make her feel the way that she really wants to feel when in a relationship.

To keep a relationship together in today's world, you've got to be able to deepen a woman's feelings of respect, love and attraction for you over time, rather than taking her for granted and expecting her to stick around because she loved you so much in the beginning.

Saying that you're âtoo niceâ is your girlfriend's way of telling you that she needs you to change!very soon.

She wants you to be a confident and emotionally strong man who can make her feel intense sexual attraction, rather than just being a really nice man who makes her feel like a nice friend.

If you ignore what she is saying now, you might become one of the guys who write to me saying, “My girlfriend dumped me and I don’t know why. Please help!”

Ask yourself:

1. Does interacting with you make your girlfriend feel excited, attracted and in love, or has she been feeling like your big sister or best friend?
2. Has your relationship been filled with intimacy, sex and lustful emotions or has it all been too friendly, gentle and nice?
3. Does your girlfriend feel turned on by you and your actions, or is she feeling bored with the approach that you’ve been using lately?
4. Do you have a masculine/feminine relationship dynamic where you are clearly the man and she is clearly the girl, or are you drifting along together like nice, equal friends?

One of the keys to getting your girlfriend to feel attraction for you is by creating a relationship dynamic where she feels like your woman (or your girl).

A woman wants to feel as though she can rely on you to be her confident, masculine man all the time rather than feeling as though you aren’t prepared to be that strong and masculine and just want to be neutral around her like a friend.

As you may know, life is often very challenging and a woman needs to know that when things get difficult, you’ll be mentally and emotionally strong enough to stand up and take care of yourself and her.

She doesn’t want to feel as though you’re going to be “too nice” and worried about taking the lead or asking for what you want because you’re afraid of hurting anyone’s feelings or of coming across as being a badass.

Be a Strong, Good Guy Rather Than a Weak, Nice Guy

When your girlfriend says that you’re being too nice, she’s simply telling you she needs you to be more of a man in the relationship.

Rather than being a pushover for her and other people (which makes her feel like she has to protect YOU), she wants to know that you are her man, she is your woman and you are capable of taking care of her and yourself.

So, instead of sitting around saying, “My girlfriend said I’m too nice,” you need to focus on making her attracted to you and respectful of your masculinity.

Don’t make the “nice guy” mistake of handing over your power to her and hoping she plays nice in return.

Women secretly hate it when they have to lead a man and take on the role of “the man” in a relationship.

What women are really looking for in a man is a good guy who they can love, respect and feel attracted to for life, not a nice guy who they disrespect and feel hardly any love or attraction for.

My Wife is Not Affectionate Anymore

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your wife isn't affectionate anymore it could mean one of the following:

1. You have slipped into being neutral around her, rather than being masculine and making her feel girly in your presence.

Inside, you may feel very masculine or confident, but she's not going to feel any desire to be affectionate if you don't use your masculinity to make her feel girly in comparison to you.

If you just generally behave like a confident, masculine man, but don't put that on her (i.e. playfully tackle her onto the bed and hug her and kiss her, pick her up (if you are able to) and carry her over to the couch, be a little rough with her in a loving way), then she's not going to be feeling girl in comparison to you.

As a result, you and her will feel more like friends, than a man and wife who are attracted to each other and excited about being in love with each other.

[image: My wife is no longer affectionate towards me]

2. She feels as though affection and sex no longer need to be a big part of your marriage because you've already done that in the past and now she just wants to grow old together.

You can change how she feels about that, but you need to ensure that she is not getting the impression that you NEED affection and sex from her to feel okay about yourself.

Let her affection and the sex that you have come naturally as a result of you creating a loving relationship dynamic and occasionally making her feel very girly in comparison to your masculine approach.

3. You have done things that have caused her to lose respect and attraction for you over the past few months or years and she no longer feels that kind of spark with you.

[image: No longer feeling the spark after experiencing ongoing problems]

If you have been turning her off (e.g. by being insecure, moody, argumentative, irritable, needy), you can fix that and start making her feel attracted to you from now on.

4. She doesn't feel much excitement about the idea of getting sexual with you at the moment, because the energy you bring to the sex is too predictable.

For a long time, you've pretty much done the same thing every time, or your sexual approach to her has been quite neutral (i.e. more like a friend).

To make her enjoy the sex more, start looking at her as being less dominant than you and then doing what you want with her during sex.

Let her feel as though you're not holding back on what you really want to do to her (e.g. the way you squeeze her breasts, grab her body, move her around, kiss her neck, give it to her from behind).

5. You have been too serious in your interactions with her and there is no longer enough laughter and humor between you to make her feel comfortable about being affectionate.

As a result, she feels uptight around you rather than happy, positive and relaxed.

It seems as though you are just hanging around each other, tolerating each other and hoping that things might improve in future.

Yet, things remain pretty much the same because you're doing the same things as before, or you've tried to improve or change, but have only really changed a little bit.

For example: Sometimes a man will need to become 100% more masculine in his behavior around his woman, or the way he touches her, but he will become 20% more masculine.

She will feel a bit more attracted to him, but not enough to get excited about, especially if she senses that he fears being more masculine around her in case she challenges him (e.g. pretends not to like it, pretends to get angry, says that he's acting weird).

If he's not prepared for the fact that a woman WILL challenge a man (to see if his newfound grasp on masculinity is real or not) when he starts being more masculine around her, then he will mistake her reaction as rejection or disapproval.

The reality is though that women ALWAYS feel more attracted when a man is more masculine.

There is no doubt about that at all.

However, if you are unable to handle her challenge when she tests you, then she won't feel more attracted and will instead feel as though you still haven't fully grasped how to be a man.

So, with the 5 possible reasons above, which of the above do you think applies to your situation the most?

Whatever the case is for you and your wife, just know this: You CAN get the spark back.

The reason why, is that the amount of attraction that your wife will feel for you on a day to day basis, is pretty much within your control.

It's based on how you think, talk, feel, behave and act around her.

So, the question is: Have you been actively making your wife feel attracted to you as a man, or have you slipped into taking her feelings of attraction for granted?

Have you been simply being a good man and trying to be a little more confident, less insecure and manly, but haven't really let her el that when you touch her, or interact with her closely?

Blaming Her

[image: Why aren't you affectionate with me anymore?]

Sometimes, the guys who say, â€œMy wife is not affectionate anymore,â€ will make the mistake of assuming that if a woman stops wanting to hug, kiss, hold hands and have sex, itâ€™s pretty much her fault.

For example: He might say things like, “She’s turned into a plain Jane women who isn’t interested in sex” or “She baited me into marrying her with sex and now she’s withholding it” or â€œShe always seems to have a headache, be too tired or not be in the mood,â€ or â€œShe used to be so loving and affectionate when we first got married, I just donâ€™t understand whatâ€™s wrong with her.â€

Yes, it can sometimes be the woman's fault, but in a relationship, it's the man's responsibility to lead the way to deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

A woman reacts to the dynamic that a man creates.

If a man creates a dynamic where they both have equal dominance, the woman will go along with it, but she will feel as though they are more like friends and as a result, will slowly lose her desire to be affectionate or sexual with him.

If a man creates a dynamic where the woman is more dominant (in her energy, her ability to sway the mood in her direction, get her husband to bend to her will), then she will go along with it, but she will struggle to feel attracted to him because he is a weaker force than her.

If a man creates a dynamic where he is always only more dominant in a subtle way, then she will feel respect and attraction for him, but won't be jumping all over him with affection, or regularly desiring sex.

If a man creates a dynamic where is dominant in a subtle way a lot of the time, but much more obviously dominant occasionally (i.e. based on how he touches her, lovingly laughs at her when she is trying to intimidate her with her anger or tantrum, the way he pushes up against her and makes his presence felt) and is a good man to her, then she will naturally feel desire to be affectionate and to have sex.

The woman is simply reacting to the man.

So, while it's okay to blame her for being a pain in the butt, you're not really going to win anything by doing that.

As a man, you just have to take responsibility for the dynamic and turn it into what you want.

It might feel a bit scary, awkward or difficult to suddenly be more masculine, but just know that it will make your relationship so much easier when you get used to it.

She will naturally respect you more, be more affectionate and be much more into sex than she has in a long time.

She is Reacting to the Dynamic You've Created Between You and Her

Have you ever seen those married couples who, after decades of being together, are still madly in love, affectionate and happy to be around each other?

If that is happening, the husband has created a relationship dynamic where love and affection flows.

Just know that he could ruin the relationship by creating a different dynamic.

For example: Over time, she could go from loving him to resenting and then hating him, if he became an insecure, needy (in terms of affection), irritable man around her.

Yet, if he keeps the dynamic right, then they will remain happy and love each other more over time.

That's how it works.

Yet, not all couples get to experience that because the relationship dynamic isn't right and the man (or the woman) doesn't know how to fix it.

Before they know it, they're arguing about a lack of respect, love, affection or sex and feeling like they've made a mistake in marrying each other.

Yet, they haven't made a mistake in marrying each other, but simply have a relationship dynamic that isn't allowing respect, love, affection and sex to flow naturally and consistently.

Have You Been Making Any of These Mistakes?

1. Have you been taking her for granted?

The love, respect and attraction that you and your wife feel for each other is something that will fade away if it isn't taken care of, nourished and built on over the long term.

Essentially this means that you have to make sure that even when life gets crazy, you don't stop making her feel loved, appreciated, valued and attracted.

Unfortunately, some guys buckle under the pressure of everyday life and they stop genuinely noticing their wife and showing interest in the efforts she makes to be a good wife, look good for her husband, keep a neat and tidy home, cook all his favorite foods, take care of the children, etc.

The husband comes to expect that she should be doing that and that's just how things are. Yet, it isn't 1900 anymore. Women can leave a marriage if they want to.

[image: Where has the spark gone between her and I?]

Your wife might not be the type who wants to break up a marriage, but if she feels like you take her for granted, it's only natural that she isn't going to want to reward you with affection for that.

Has this ever happened to you?

Has your wife ever asked you for your opinion on an outfit she was wearing, and instead of really looking at her and taking the time to appreciate her efforts to look good, you glanced up from the TV or your paperwork and grunted a stock standard reply like, â€œYeah, sure honey, that's fine,â€ or â€œWhatever you like is fine by me.â€

Although chances are high that you think she looks beautiful no matter what and that she's a better judge of fashion than you, it's not what she is wearing that matters to her.

What matters to her is whether you are noticing that she's trying to please you because she knows that her appearance is what men are attracted to the most.

She knows that you will find other women attractive and she wants to know that you still look at her as the sexiest woman on Earth. She wants to feel as though you get a "Wow!" feeling inside of you when she puts in an effort to look good for you.

If she doesn't get that from you, she may try to get that reaction from other men (e.g. coworkers) who are interested in her.

Another example is letting her down or changing your plans with her at the last minute and just expecting her to keep putting up with that type of treatment.

Let's say she's booked a babysitter so that the two of you can go out for the night for the first time in months, but at the last minute you call her to tell her that you have to work late, or you've been invited for a drink with the boss after work (and how could you possibly say no to the boss?)

You might not see it as a big deal because you and her can reschedule your night out some other time, after all work is important because it's your way of taking care of her, but to her it is a big deal because you're choosing to put your job and other people before her.

Obviously, plans do need to change at the last minute from time to time, and obviously taking care of your job is important, but if you've slipped into the habit of putting her second on a regular basis, then you are taking her for granted and she is naturally going to start feeling unloved and undervalued.

There's nothing wrong with changing plans, but if you do it too often because you essentially take her for granted, it isn't going to make her feel like rewarding you with loving affection.

Playing hard to get works with women in the dating stages, but in a marriage, you actually have to care about your wife and her feelings. She's got to be the person that you love and care about the most.

2. Have you put her in the position of power?

Caring about your wife and her feelings doesn't mean that you should let her walk all over you.

A woman will always test you to see how much she can get away with and to see whether or not you are still the man (or the one wearing the pants) in the relationship.

If you let your wife boss you around and step all over your feelings, needs and wants, she will naturally lose respect for you as a man.

When a woman doesn't fully respect her man, she also loses the desire to be affectionate with him.

Touching him in any way, whether it's just to hug or kiss or hold hands, or being more intimate and having sex, will make her feel a bit repulsed and uncomfortable.

Why? Women are sexually attracted to confident men who are mentally and emotionally strong and who can, and will, continually take the lead in a relationship.

When a husband gives in to whatever his wife wants because he is fearful of losing her, she naturally loses respect for him and when that happens for long enough, she loses touch with her feelings of attraction for him.

3. Have you been hiding from your true potential as a man?

A woman will marry a man even if he isn't powerful and successful because she can see that he has the potential to succeed.

However, if when they get married, he begins to use her and the relationship as an excuse to hide from his true potential in life, she will feel turned off by him, annoyed by him, betrayed by him and disappointed in him.

She will feel as though he lured her into the marriage with the false bravado of one day getting promoted at work, taking on a better job or succeeding with the business he's always wanted to run, but when she said, "I do" he felt like he'd gotten her and could now relax and stop putting in so much effort to become successful.

Have you been following through on your dreams and ambitions since you got married to your wife?

Are you still rising through the levels of life with purpose, or are you making excuses about why you're not becoming more successful or why you've stopped following through on your goals and ambitions?

Having a setback is absolutely fine, but falling into a pattern of hiding from success and your true potential will cause your wife to lose respect and attraction for you and she'll feel repulsed by the idea of touching you or getting intimate with you.

A woman wants to feel proud of her man. She wants to be able to feel safe in the knowing that her man will continue to push forward to create a better life for himself, her and any offspring they have.

Opening Up the Flow of Love and Affection Again

It can be difficult to break a habit, but it can be done.

Right now, you're saying, "My wife is not affectionate anymore," because she may have fallen into the habit of being negative and not caring about the physical side of your relationship or even about being affectionate towards you.

To change that, you have to chip away at the bad habit, by slowly introducing better habits.

For example:

1. From now on, make an effort once per day to notice her and genuinely complement her about how she looks, or for cooking a nice meal. Mean what you say, rather than just saying it without emotion or authenticity.
2. Ensure that unless it is absolutely necessary, you keep all your promises to her and try to place her needs before things that can be placed second.
3. Once a week, tell her what you are grateful for about her as a wife and a lover (yes, even a lover. Find a way to put a positive spin on it).

Eventually, when she realizes that you're being genuine and honest with her she will start telling YOU why she's grateful for you. She will also appreciate that you're not nagging her about the lack of sex and are instead focusing on the positives of the sex that you and her have.

4. Don't wait for her to initiate affection once every few days (to begin with), stop and give her a warm, loving hug. Hold her hand for 30 seconds to a minute when you're watching TV or at the movies, even if she initially squirms or doesn't want to. Eventually she'll stop being so cold and she'll begin to initiate those things herself.

5. Smile and laugh more often.

Giving off positive vibes and being in a good mood will help to create a more loving environment, allowing her to become more open and interested in being more affectionate towards you.

Okay, I hope that helps and if you need any more help, I hope that you check out my programs on relationships here at The Modern Man.

My Girlfriend Says Other Guys Are Hot

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriends say other guys are hot, she is either:

1. Testing to see how confident you are.

This is the common reason why a girlfriend will talk about other guys being hot, attractive or appealing.

Having unshakeable confidence in your sex appeal to her is the #1 trait that will maintain her attraction for you when in a relationship.

If she talks about other guys being good looking and sees that it makes you feel insecure and begin to doubt her attraction for you, then she knows that you don't have the type of confidence that will keep her interested in the long run.

Personally speaking, my wife always tests my confidence and I never fail her tests.

I always remain 100% confident in my attractiveness to her, regardless of what she says and as a result, she feels more and more attracted to me over time.

She teases me about my receding hair line, my lack of a six pack, my lack of muscles and my deepening facial wrinkles.

She always tests to see if I have any emotional weak points and when she continually finds that I'm strong and don't have any insecurities, it deepens her respect for me.

BTW: This is her and I when we met about 2.5 years ago...

[image: Dan Bacon at a nightclub with girlfriend]

She's 22 and I'm 37, so she sometimes refers to me as Old Man Dan sometimes and says things like, "You're so old."

It's all a test and I just laugh it off or laugh at her.

From the day I met her, no matter what she has said or done around me, I have maintained absolutely belief in my sex appeal to her and other women.

For example: The other night, we were sitting on the sofa and watching some TV. She was looking through some old photos of us on her iPad and said, "Eww...look at you in this photo...you don't look good at all" and I said, "Let me see."

I looked at the photo and said, "I look awesome...I look handsome in the photo" ☐ that's a great photo." She then laughed and said that I always think I look so good.

10 seconds later, she rested her head on my lap and played with her iPad while I watched TV.

She then started talking about positive things and moments later, she will giggling and laughing and grabbed my hand, brought it to her mouth and kissed it.

A long time ago, I would have never been able to handle a woman's tests like that.

I was too emotionally sensitive and needed a woman to help reenforce my confidence with compliments, positive affection and reassurances that she liked me, loved me, wanted to be with me, etc.

However, that isn't the case anymore and hasn't been for the last 10 years of my life because I understand why women test and I accept it.

A woman will test you because she wants to reconfirm to herself that you are a confident man. Experiencing a man's confidence is an irresistible attraction drug for women. They can't get enough of it.

If your girlfriend is trying to experience your confidence by testing you, don't get angry at her for it. Instead, embrace the opportunity to make her feel even more attracted to you.

2. Trying to gain more power over you in the relationship

There is always going to be a power struggle in a relationship.

Regardless of how submissive a woman is, she will always attempt to gain power over her man here and there.

Some women are a lot more intense about it though and will consciously try to gain more and more power over you, to the point where you feel like you'd be lost without her.

A woman who tries to make her boyfriend feel insecure by saying that other guys are hot, will often be doing so because she is insecure about how much he wants her.

She may have seen him looking at other women and finding them attractive, so she tries to let him know that she can find other men attractive too. Essentially, the warning is: If he isn't careful, she might leave him for one of those guys.

3. No longer feeling enough attraction for you.

In some cases, a guy will get with a girl and they'll have a fun, enjoyable start to their relationship, but the initial attraction buzz will die off.

For example: Maybe he "got lucky" when he met her and she was feeling lonely or trying to get over an ex boyfriend, so she hooked up with him, or he grew on her over time (e.g. they started out as friends, coworkers, etc).

The start of a relationship is the easy part.

To keep the spark alive and make sure that your girlfriend doesn't want to leave you for other guys, you have to be able to deepen her feelings of attraction over time.

4. Not serious about being in a relationship with you.

Not all relationships are 100% serious and heading for marriage and a lifetime commitment.

These days, many women are happy to get in and out of dating relationships for years before they settle down with the right man.

Even if she tells her boyfriend she loves him and they enjoy a great relationship together, it doesn't mean that she is 100% committed for life.

When she's had her fun with a guy or her girlfriends suddenly become single after breaking up with their boyfriends, you can expect her to suddenly start to feel restless and want to join them if she's not truly committed to you.

Do you think that she's potentially that type of girl, or are both you and her fully committed for life?

If she is committed to you and you are committed to her, then you need to understand thatâ€¦!

Feeling Attracted to Other Men Doesn't Mean She is Cheating or Will Cheat on You Think about it this way...

Despite the fact that you love your girlfriend, find her attractive and want to be with her, you can't stop yourself from feeling attracted to other women, right?

If you see a hot girl walking down the street, you can't stop yourself from feeling attracted because it's an automatic reaction. Additionally, if you open up a porn site, you probably can't stop yourself from getting a boner and wanting to do something about it.

Attraction is a natural reaction that men and women have when they encounter attractive traits in each other. It can't be turned off, but it can be kept under control.

For example: I still feel attracted to other women, but I find my wife much more attractive than any of them. My attraction for her is fixed and I'm not changing how I feel because I'm committed to her.

There are millions of other women in this world that I find attractive, but I'm not going to sleep with them. I've already done that and now I'm in a committed relationship.

The same goes for my wife. She will see other guys as being attractive, handsome, etc, but that doesn't mean she is going to get up and leave me just to act on her feelings of attraction.

Why? The potential loss for her far outweighs the gain of acting on a feeling of attraction for a guy who probably isn't half the man that I am. Sure, he might be better looking than me, but is he going to have all of the other fundamental traits that women find irresistibly attractive in men?

I'm in the same boat. I could easily have sex with new women (there are women interested in me in my social circle), but the losses would far outweigh the gains.

I would lose the best woman I've ever met in my life. My sexy, 22 year old wife.

I would then have to go through all the initial stages of a relationship again and then decide whether or not she was worth committing to.

If I only wanted sex with her, that probably wouldn't be a possibility because she'd cling on to me and want to get in the way of my marriage.

So, have a think about the position that your girlfriend is in now...

- Does she see you as being much better than the majority of options that she choose from with other men?
- Have you been deepening her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time, or have you been taking her for granted?
- Are you rising through the levels of life and reaching for your true potential as a man, or are you hiding from your biggest dream goals behind her and the relationship?
- Does she look up to you and respect you, or has she lost a lot of respect for you lately?
- Are you and her both still excited to be in love with each other, or have you slipped into being more like casual friends?

If you think that your relationship has lost the initial spark and her attraction for you is beginning to fade, make sure that you watch the video above.

In the video, I explain how a woman's attraction for a man really works and how you can make a woman feel more attracted to you than guys who are better looking than you are.

Getting to the Root of the Problem

Your girlfriend saying that other guys are hot is not a terrible thing in itself. Attraction is normal and healthy.

So, the question you should ask yourself is, What is causing me to feel upset when my girlfriend says other guys are hot?

Let's look at several reasons why her recent behavior could be bothering you.

Do You Have Trust Issues?

Unfortunately, these days, a lot of guys grow up without good relationship role models.

Many guys come from broken or unhappy homes and often, all the relationships around them, like those of uncles, brothers, friends, etc., are also unhappy or broken.

This sets up a negative idea in their minds, which ultimately translates into serious trust issues when they find themselves in a relationship.

Trust issues can also come from being one of many children and never really experiencing what it's like to be fully loved by a parent.

So, when a guy like that gets into a relationship with a woman, he wants her to devote to him and only him to fill up the emotional gap that has haunted him since his childhood.

Here's the thing though:

To be successful in a relationship with a woman, you HAVE to trust her and she has to trust you. You have to trust that she loves you, wants to be with you and will stick by you.

Yes, she might break that trust, but if you don't give it to her (all of it), your relationship will never mature and grow to the next stages.

It will always feel stuck and the love will never reach its full potential.

A lack of trust breeds insecurity, anger and frustration and changes the way that you think, behave, feel and act around each other.

You and her always feel separate and even though you might live together or see each other regularly, there always seems to be something missing between you.

If your girlfriend ends up breaking your trust one day, then it's only natural to feel hurt, betrayed and disappointed about it.

However, you will never be able to prevent bad things from happening in a relationship by removing the element of full trust.

Insecurity, controlling behavior, fighting, accusations and excessive jealousy all work together to push and your girlfriend further apart.

The less emotionally strong you are as a man, the less respect and attraction she will feel for you and if that goes on for a long time, she will fall out of love with you.

If you're saying, "My girlfriend says other guys are hot," and she has given you no other cause to doubt her loyalty to you, then you are making the mistake of allowing yourself to become clingy, insecure and mistrusting towards her.

You've got to get control back over how you think, feel and act around her.

If you present her with your weakness and insecurity, it will gradually destroy her attraction, respect and love for you as a man.

Do You Crumble When She Tests You?

Guys often assume that just because they're in an established, loving relationship, their girlfriend (or fiancée or wife) will eventually stop testing them.

The assumption is that tests are what women give to guys that they are screening as potential boyfriends and once they've settled on a guy, the tests will suddenly stop.

That's not how it works.

Women test guys ALL the time. It never ends. Why? It is a woman's natural instinct to do it to ensure that you are still "the man" and she is the woman.

Testing your confidence and masculinity and seeing it come back as strong and powerful each time, allows her to further relax into being your woman and to continue feeling respect and attraction for you.

The key here is to realize that she is testing you to reconfirm that you are the man she should be giving herself to.

You need to be able to take it in your stride without losing it every time she says that another guy is hot.

Over time, her respect and attraction for you will deepen as she compares you to the other men that she interacts with, and even though she may still comment about other guys to you, inside she will be thinking, "There's no point being with another guy. I would probably never be able to find another man who is as emotionally strong and secure as my boyfriend is."

Rather than get upset when your girlfriend says other guys are hot, you try to instead feel grateful for her tests.

When you have that mindset, it will come through in your actions and your conversation style and she will be all over you because she will know that she cannot do better than you.

Even if the other guys are more physically handsome than you, in her eyes you will always be the best.

Is She Behaving in Other Ways That Are Making You Doubt Her Loyalty to You?

Most women don't just come out and say they want to break up with a guy. Instead, they will show him signs that they are losing interest in being in a relationship.

So, the question is: Is your girlfriend doing more than just saying that other guys are hot? Is she also behaving in any of the following ways?

Ask yourself:

- Does she make herself available to you no matter how busy she gets, or does she regularly make excuses not to see you?

- Does she actively try to stay in contact with you as often as possible, or is she taking days and even weeks to reply to your text messages or return your calls?
- Is she loving, attentive and keen to touch, kiss and have sex with you, or does she make excuses pretty much every time you try to touch her or initiate sex with her?
- Does she always want to go out with you, or does she regularly insist on going out without you; especially to places like clubs or bars where she had a good chance of getting hit on by other guys?
- Is she still making an effort to look good for you, or has she let herself go?

These are all signs that thereâs a deeper reason why she says other guys are hot, and if you want to save your relationship with her, you have to find out what is causing her to fall out of love with you and fix that.

As you will discover from the video above, a woman will fall out of love with a guy after losing respect for him and then losing touch with her feelings of attraction.

If your girlfriend is genuinely finding other guys to be hot and is losing attraction for you, then you need to work on fixing that now before she cheats on you or breaks up with you.

Are You Allowing Your Insecurities to Ruin a Good Thing?

In many cases, a woman who looks at other guys is doing just that â looking. It doesnât mean she has any intention of cheating on her guy.

However, when a guy feels like he got âluckyâ when he hooked up with his girlfriend, her natural appreciation for other guys will bring out his insecurity and jealousy and make him feel like heâs not good enough for her.

Hereâs the thing thoughâ!

If you let your insecurities control you, you will eventually end up losing her. Women are turned off by emotional insecurity and turned on by emotional strength.

The only way to stop feeling insecure is to be the opposite of insecure, which is to be confident.

Here are the dictionary definitions to show the difference between confidence and insecurity:

Insecurity (noun): Lack of confidence or assurance; self-doubt.

Confidence (noun): Belief in oneself and oneâs powers or abilities; self-confidence; self-reliance; assurance.

No matter how often your girlfriend says other guys are hot, you need to believe in yourself and know that she wants to be with you more than she wants any other guys. You need to believe this completely and not worry about it at all.

If you donât believe in your attractiveness and sex appeal to her, you will keep looking for reasons to prove that youâre not good enough for her.

You might allow your insecurities and jealousy to slowly erode the trust, attraction and love she feels for you and she will then eventually dump you for one of those âhot guysâ, which will make you feel justified in being upset every time she made a comment about another guy.

Donât aim for that bitter sweet ending where you can say, “Hah! I told you so â I wasnât good enough for her.”

Instead, make sure that you are good enough for her by believing that you are. It all comes back to how you perceive yourself and your sex appeal to her.

Personally speaking, I stick to the idea that I’m the most appealing, attractive guy in the world, even though I know that there are handsome men, models, etc out there.

What matters most when you’re attracting a woman for the first time or maintaining the attraction of your woman in a relationship is that you have an unshakeable belief in your sex appeal.

My Girlfriend Wants a Threesome

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Having a threesome is considered to be one of the top male sexual fantasies and contrary to popular belief, it's also a top female sexual fantasy too.

However, the problem is that sexual fantasies are usually meant to be just that, fantasies.

In life, you don't have to make all of your fantasies become a reality to be happy.

It's fine to imagine doing some crazy things that may mess up your relationship, but that doesn't mean you have to follow through on it.

Some couples do act out the fantasy of having sex with other people, but from my personal experience helping 100s of men fix relationship problems, I've never heard of a threesome improve a relationship.

According to studies done on the subject, rather than revving up the sexual spark in a relationship, bringing other people into a relationship rarely works out in the way it was intended.

Should You Go Ahead With the Threesome?

It depends.

If you know that you aren't intending on staying with your girlfriend for life, then go ahead and enjoy it.

Sure, it may end up causing you and her to break up a lot faster, but at least you get to experience a threesome.

On the other hand, if you are intending on marrying your girlfriend and staying with her for life, then having a threesome probably isn't going to help your relationship.

Watch this video to understand the 5 stages that a relationship goes through...

If you have a threesome, it will become very difficult to keep the relationship at the blissful love stage if either of you develop insecurities about it.

However, having a "three way" might work out to be a good thing if both of you are:

- Completely committed to each other.
- Absolutely secure in the fact that you both find each other incredibly attractive.
- Only doing it for a bit of fun because you are both daredevils and love to push the limits.
- Are not looking for an easy way out of the relationship by hopefully falling for someone else and then leaving before the other person finds someone new.

That last point there is usually the problem point.

If your girlfriend is already thinking that if she likes the new guy, she will continue seeing him on the side in secret and then eventually break up with you if she has feelings for him, then having a threesome isn't going to be of benefit to you.

Instead, it's just going to be an easy way for her to break up with you and move on without you before you find another girl.

That way, she can escape the pain of being the one who was broken up with.

Yet, if your girlfriend only wants to have a threesome with another woman once (e.g. because she's always been curious about what it would feel like to be with a woman, or she wants to feel the jealousy of you being with another woman), then it should be okay.

[image: What's it like to be with two women at once?]

Not all relationships are intended to last for life and your girlfriend may just be with you for fun for a while.

That's okay if you're cool with it.

You and her can enjoy yourselves and explore different things together, as long as you know that the relationship will probably end in the near future.

In most cases though, having a threesome might be a shared fantasy, but the chances of you both getting out of it what you originally imagined is unlikely.

A threesome will usually just cause a couple more pain, problems and heartache than it's worth.

Of course, the exception is when you and your girlfriend aren't very committed to each other, are just with each other for fun and are secretly intending to break up one day anyway.

What's it Like to Be With Two Women at Once?

Personally speaking, I've had three threesomes in my life and while it was good for my ego, it wasn't that amazing in terms of the sex.

It was enjoyable, but it isn't something that even makes the top 5 list of great things that I've done in my life.

Essentially, you've got two women who are looking to take turns to ride your rod and if you ignore one of them, she usually feels left out and sort of becomes useless unless you're instructing her to do extra things (e.g. play with your balls, suck the other girl's tits, etc).

That said, there are some really good moments and it does feel great where you're skin-to-skin with two women and they're taking turns to kiss you, while stroking your middle leg.

It's nice, but it doesn't compare to the heart buzz you get when you're kissing and having sex with a sexy woman that you truly love.

It is fun though.

The most glorious moment that I had in a threesome was when I was standing on a bed and the two women (that I picked up from a nightclub) were on their knees taking turns to suck me off.

That was pretty good.

However, I have to be honest and say that nothing compares to the love, sex, intimacy and companionship that I've shared with my girlfriend (who recently became my wife after a brief engagement period) over the past 2.5 years (this is her if you wanted to check her out).

I'm not saying that to be nice to her or to be politically correct. It really is true. She is more than enough woman for me.

I don't have any desire to add more women into our relationship and I certainly wouldn't approve of her wanting to add a guy into our bedroom.

If my wife wanted that, she'd be dumped in an instant if she didn't change her mind. There's no way that I would put up with that sort of emotional disloyalty.

Of course, she wouldn't ask for that because I've chosen to marry a hot, sexy woman who is as loyal as it gets.

She is all for family, sticking together for life and laughs at any idea of ever breaking up or giving up. She's once said that it would be a nightmare for her to try to find another guy like me.

I'm not saying that to brag, but to point out something important about your girlfriend...

If your girlfriend wants to have a threesome, she probably isn't seeing you as a guy that she wants to keep all for herself for life.

She might start out saying that she just wants a threesome with another woman, but that may turn into a request to add a man into the mix if she sees you enjoying yourself with the new woman.

In theory, having a threesome when in a relationship can work for some people.

However, it takes emotional maturity and a high level of confidence in all three people involved to be able to handle the reality of acting out a fantasy and then parting ways without destroying the relationship.

Personally speaking, my wife is very confident and knows that she is hot, but I know that she wouldn't be able to handle seeing me with another woman.

She just wouldn't want another woman getting the experience that she gets with me in the bedroom. She booked that for herself when we said, "I do."

However, I did have a girlfriend about 4 years ago who was keen on having a threesome with another woman or man.

It never happened, but I eventually broke up with her anyway because she wasn't the type of girl that I could trust for life.

She wanted to settle down and start a family, but her parent's were divorced, her best friend was divorced and she didn't think that there was anything wrong with that.

She saw divorce as normal and almost expected, which was one of the main reasons I broke up with her.

What about you and your girl?

Is she serious about you? Does she want to settle down with you? Is she just with you for a bit of fun for a while?

You have to get clear on that and then make your decision based on that.

You might feel like you really love her and don't want anything to get in the way of your relationship, but if, deep down, you secretly think you will break up with her one day, then you should probably open up to the idea of having a threesome.

Examples of How a Threesome Affected a Relationship

The names and some details have been changed to protect privacy, but this is roughly what I was told by two phone coaching clients...

Tom's story

“When my girlfriend first suggested the idea of a threesome, I couldn’t believe my luck. I thought to myself, how many guys get to say ‘my girlfriend wants a threesome’ in the real world, I thought it was just something that happened to rock stars, celebrities or pro athletes. I was really turned on by the idea and she couldn’t wait to start discussing which people we should invite into our bed. That’s when things changed for me. She was talking about women that she knew who would be interested in taking part and it was clear that she was really turned on just thinking about it. She said that she had always wanted to kiss a few of those women and had fantasized about having sex with them. I then started to wonder if the sex with me was no longer doing it for her. I started to feel like maybe I would just be the ‘extra’ person in the bed, so I then became insecure about my role in her fantasy. That insecurity led to me to begin doubting myself and doubting our relationship, and my constant need for reassurance from her after that, eventually led to her changing her mind about the threesome. A few months later, she broke up with me.”

Drew’s story

Drew’s story is different to Tom’s in that he and his girlfriend went ahead with the idea of acting out her threesome fantasy.

Again, this isn’t exactly what was said, but is based on my memory of what was said.

“At the time the idea first came up, all I was thinking was – awesome! The idea that there might be drawbacks didn’t enter my mind. However, after the event I realized that I probably enjoyed the experience more than she did. When we talked about it, she said that in her fantasy she got aroused by watching me with another woman, but in reality she felt insanely jealous and it hurt her to think that I might be enjoying sex with another woman more than her.”

The fallout from the event is that Drew’s girlfriend then had much lower self-esteem around him than before and became insecure about being naked around him.

She compared herself to other women all the time, and questioned Drew’s feelings for random women that he would happen to mention in conversation.

For her, acting out her fantasy was a mistake because she had not considered the emotional impact it would have after the fact.

For Drew, he essentially said...

“Having a threesome was not all it’s cracked up to be. I had a great relationship with my girlfriend before we went ahead with it and now we’re struggling. We’ve gone from having an adventurous and active sex life to hardly ever having sex at all. It was fun, but it’s not worth breaking up a relationship over. Now I want to repair this, so what do I say to her? What is my next move here?”

What Will Your Next Move Be?

If you don’t want to let a threesome ruin the great relationship that you have with your girlfriend, explain to her that in life, people don’t have to act out random fantasies to be happy.

Let her know that millions of couples from all over the world have worked out how to remain happy and in love for life, without having to add other people into their bedroom.

On the other hand, if you don't care about messing up your relationship with her, go ahead and enjoy yourself in the threesome.

My Girlfriend Wants to Go Out Alone With Her Friends. Should I Be Worried?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If youâre thinking, âMy girlfriend wants to go out alone with her friends” and are now asking, “Should I be worried?” or “Should I stop her?” the answer is that it depends.

If she is untrustworthy and has been openly flirting with other guys in front of you lately, then she may end up giving out her phone number, kissing a guy or even sleeping with him if she goes out alone with her friends.

On the other hand, if your girlfriend is trustworthy, most of her female friends are in relationships and they simply want to have a girl’s night for once, then you should trust her.

If you don’t give her that trust, she will lose respect and attraction for you because you will be coming across as insecure.

Women are naturally attracted to and respectful of men who are confident and secure in who their attractiveness to women.

5 Questions You Should Ask Yourself About Your Girlfriend and Your Relationship With Her

Before you talk to your girlfriend about the possibility of her going out without you around, ask yourself the following questions...

1. Is she an honest, loyal trustworthy woman, or have you caught her lying to you many times before?

You can never fully trust a woman in a relationship, but if you want the relationship to mature and reach its true potential, then you just have to give her your full trust.

If you don’t, the relationship will get stuck in the early stages, she will lose respect and attraction for you and it problems will begin to emerge.

If your girlfriend is a decent, trustworthy and loyal woman who has no difficulty saying âno to men hitting on her, then you really have nothing to worry about when she goes out alone with her girlfriends.

In fact, itâs important that you give her your trust so that she can see that you are confident in her desire for you and her loyalty to you.

She will be happy to see that youâre not worrying about her cheating on you every time she has a harmless hook up with her friends.

On the flip side however, if your girlfriend is a liar, enjoys flirting with other guys or has given you cause to doubt her loyalty to you, then obviously youâre not going to give her your full trust.

A woman who enjoys lying, flirting with other guys and being disloyal should be dumped and if youâre not dumping her, you should ask yourself why youâre prepared to put up with her bad behavior.

Could it be because you feel lucky to have scored with her and you doubt your ability to get another (even better) girlfriend than her?

If she can't be trusted, then my advice to you is to dump her and then begin to move on without her. If that doesn't teach her a lesson and make her change her ways, then she would have cheated on you anyway and it would have been you who was taught a horrible lesson by her.

On the other hand, if she can be trusted, you should let her go out alone with her friends, but only if it's to catch up with her girlfriends who are already in relationships or to have a "once off" party night with her mix of single and taken girlfriends.

If she just wants to catch up with girlfriends who are in love with their boyfriend, fianc  or husband, then you've got nothing to worry about.

However, if she wants to go out and get wasted with her single girlfriends, then you have a valid reason to begin worrying that she might be thinking of straying.

2. Is she going out alone with her friends all the time, or is it an occasional thing?

Being in a relationship should only be a part of your life, not your whole life.

In other words, even though you and your girlfriend love, respect and adore each other, you don't have to live in each other's pockets 24/7 to prove your love and devotion for each other.

It's perfectly normal and healthy in a relationship for both you and your girlfriend to have interests, hobbies and friends that apart from each other. There is nothing wrong with that and in fact, it can be good for you and your girlfriend to maintain some separate interests and relationships to keep a healthy balance in your life.

That will likely change if you get married, but if you're just boyfriend and girlfriend and are still learning about life and wanting to feel free at times, you need to be able to give her that space to explore her thoughts and be around people without you sometimes.

This is why, if your girlfriend wants to go out alone with her friends occasionally, you should actually encourage her to do so.

Tell her, "Cool, have a great time. I'll miss you, but I'm happy that you're going to catch up with your friends and I hope you enjoy hanging out with them."

Then, get on with doing whatever you are focused on achieving in life (e.g. passing your university course, building up your career or expanding your business).

Don't sit around worrying what she might be thinking, feeling or doing when she's not around you. Be a man and get on with moving forward in life when she's not around. When she sees that you're doing that, it will deepen her feelings of respect and attraction for you.

What if she goes out alone too often?

If going out alone has become something that she wants to do ALL the time, it could mean that she's no longer feeling the way she wants to feel with you and she's trying to distance herself from you and the relationship.

You will know if that is the case if she's no longer very affectionate, doesn't really care if you and her cancel plans on each other and is no longer telling you that she loves you and wants to be with you for life.

3. Is she going to places like coffee shops, restaurants or bookshops, or is she going out to nightclubs or bars?

When a woman is committed to a man and her relationship with him, she won't feel the need to go out without him to nightclubs or bars and potentially put herself in a position where she will get hit on by other guys.

It just won't be of interest to her.

Instead of getting attention from other men, she would prefer to be around her man or to spend time with her friends doing things that won't expose her to being hit on by random guys.

For example: She will meet her friends at a coffee shop or restaurant, or they will meet at a friend's house, go to the beach together, etc.

However, sometimes there are occasions when your girlfriend will have to go out on her own with her friends (e.g. a "girls only" birthday party catch up or a "bachelorette" party / hen's night).

4. Are your girlfriend's friends all women, or are there single guys in the group too?

It's one thing if your girlfriend is hanging out with a group of female friends, but if her friends include single guys, then there's a possibility that these guys may be interested in her.

A lot of guys don't have the confidence to approach and pick up single women, so they often resort to trying to steal women from other guys, especially by using the "friends" approach.

A guy will hang around a married woman or a girl who has a boyfriend and he will act like he just wants to be friends. Yet, the entire time, he will try every trick in the book to try to get her to like him and become open to leaving her guy for him, or at least having a fling.

Even if your girlfriend isn't interested in any of the single guys right now, if she puts herself in a compromising position (e.g. like getting very drunk), she may end up kissing him or having sex with one of those guys at some point.

When a woman is in a committed relationship with her boyfriend and loves and respects him, she will not regularly hang out with other single men. It simply will not be of interest to her at all.

5. Do you and your girlfriend have a great relationship filled with mutual love, respect and attraction, or has your behavior been turning her off lately?

Have you been deepening the love, respect and attraction that your girlfriend feels for you?

Have you been giving your girlfriend the love and attention she needs in the relationship? Do you still hold hands, kiss and have sex like you did in the early days?

Does your girlfriend respect and love you as her man? Does she feel like a real woman (i.e. feminine, girly, proud to be your woman, safe and protected by you, etc) when she's with you?

If the relationship that you and your girlfriend have is solid and if you are giving her what she needs, then there is absolutely no reason why she would be looking outside of the relationship.

So, you have nothing to worry about. She will stick by you and if she does make a mistake, then clearly she has stuffed things up with an awesome man. If you are able to make her feel the type of love, respect and attraction that a woman wants to feel in a relationship, then you are what women refer to as a "catch."

However, if you've been unable to keep the spark alive and you pretty much "got lucky" when you met your girlfriend, then you're probably worried that another guy will make her feel more attraction than you do.

Be careful how you react to the situation now because if you react with insecurity, it will set off a whole series of negative chain reactions.

Watch this...

So, if you're worried that she is going to meet another guy who makes her feel more attracted than you do, don't let that show.

Rather than turning your girlfriend off with insecurity, you need to show her that you're confident in yourself and believe in your sex appeal to her.

If you don't know how to make her feel a lot of attraction for you, then don't shy away from learning about that.

Not every guy is an expert at attracting women initially and then maintaining a woman's attraction in a relationship, but you can learn how to do it.

Some guys are naturals when it comes to women, but most guys need to learn a little or lot on the subject of attracting women.

Just make sure that you don't become insecure about the idea of her potentially meeting a guy who makes her feel more than you do.

If your girlfriend sees that you are insecure, she will naturally feel turned off by you.

When she goes out alone with her friends and happens to interact with other men who are more confident than you, she will actually begin to feel attracted to them.

Why? Women are attracted to the confidence and strength in men, so your insecurity and jealousy will look like a weakness to her and will begin to turn her off.

She will contrast how she is feeling around the new guy compared to you and she will realize that he is more of a match for her, mentally and emotionally.

Make Her Feel Lucky to Have You as Her Boyfriend

As a man, it is your responsibility (not the woman's) to deepen the love, respect and attraction in your relationship.

Most women wait for their man to lead the way to a better relationship and if he doesn't, they become unhappy and look for ways to get out of it.

Rather than saying, "My girlfriend wants to go out alone with her friends," and feeling like you're losing her, work on deepening the attraction, love and respect that she feels for you.

When you do that, she will want to stay home with you because she'll be afraid of losing you.

She will want to show her commitment to you and ensure that other women can't get access to you.

My Girlfriend Thinks We've Grown Apart

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend thinks that you and her have grown apart, it can mean that:

1. She feels as though she's now a lot more mature than you are, or that you are now much too mature and sensible for her.
2. She no longer feels attracted to you in the ways that she once did because she's grown out of that type of relationship (e.g. a cute, puppy love type of relationship).
3. She is rising through the levels of life and reaching for her true potential, but you're not reaching to achieve much at all.

[image: We've grown apart]

4. You don't seem to fit in with her new friends and she feels like you're dragging her down, or holding her back from becoming a cooler, more interesting person or living a cooler, more interesting lifestyle.
5. The relationship has become more of a friendship, rather than a traditional man and woman dynamic where you are clearly the man and she is your woman.
6. She no longer feels interested in having sex with you because you haven't been able to deepen her respect and attraction for you over time.
7. She loves you as a person, but she doesn't feel like she is "in love" with you anymore.

There are many different reasons why a woman might say that you've grown apart.

Which of the 7 examples above fits your situation the best?

4 Words That No Guy Wants to Hear From His Girlfriend

[image: Growing apart in a relationship]

Your girlfriend most likely began the conversation with you by saying these dreaded four words, "We need to talk."

Hearing her say that probably made you feel sick to the pit of your stomach because, instinctively, most guys know that when a woman says that she needs "to talk" it's probably not going to be good news.

Fast forward a short while later and you've now found yourself in the position where you're saying, "My girlfriend thinks we've grown apart," and wondering what you can do to fix the problem.

You might be feeling as though you're about to losing someone who is really important to you and your sense of happiness and well-being life and wondering, "Is it over between her and I now?" or "Is there anything I can do to change things or is it already too late?"

She's Not Going to Tell You the Real Reason Why Her Feelings For You Have Changed

[image: We've been growing apart lately]

Few guys really understand what a woman means when she says, "I think we've grown apart" because it's not a very detailed, clear explanation of the real problems between you and her.

Growing apart can mean a lot of different things, as I pointed out at the start of the article, but what it means to your girlfriend isn't necessarily going to be something that she wants to openly share.

In most cases, when a guy directly asks his girlfriend to explain what she means, she's just not going to tell him.

Instead, she will give a fairly vague answer like, "We're just too busy in our lives right now," or "We just aren't spending the same time together like we used to."

However, if you tell her you can change this, she'll more than likely brush you off with another classic statement like, "Maybe we should just take some time apart and see how things go from there. I think we've lost track of what we really want from each other."

This is her way of letting you down easy without actually having to get into the details of what is causing her to lose love and attraction for you. A woman will rarely come out and tell you that certain attitudes and behaviors have been turning her off.

Instead, she will start off by giving you hints by saying things like, "I think we're drifting apart," in the hopes that you'll get the message, figure out the deeper problem and then take action to fix it.

Why don't women just come out and say what the REAL problem is?

Essentially, they don't want to have to lead you through the situation and feel like your mother or teacher.

Your girlfriend doesn't want to have to teach you how to be a man, because this will put her in the position of power in the relationship, which will not only put the relationship dynamic out of sync between you and her, but she will also end up losing respect for you as her man, which will then make her begin to fall out of love with you.

The good news is that you can fix the problems between you and change how she feels about the relationship.

You just have to make her feel the way she wants to feel in the relationship and her feelings for you will naturally begin to come back to life.

If you let things slide and don't take action to make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, she will most-likely say, "We need to talk" again sometime soon.

Yet, this time around, she might want to break off the relationship with you for real.

Understand What She Really Wants You to Change About Yourself

[image: She is waiting for you to change how she feels]

If you're saying, "My girlfriend thinks we've grown apart," you might not really know what she really wants you to change.

In your mind, the relationship seemed to have been going along fairly well until she said that you and her had grown apart. While you were feeling fine and were happy to continue on as is, she wasn't feeling what she wants to experience in a relationship.

To get your girlfriend to feel attraction for you and fall back in love with you again, you need to discover the real reasons why she believes that you have grown apart. You then need to make the correct changes to your behavior, attitude, conversation style and the way you treat her.

Consider the following:

1. Have you been taking her for granted?

[image: Have you been taking her for granted?]

This is one of the main reasons why a woman will stop feeling the way that she wants to feel in a relationship.

Certain behaviors (e.g. failing to take a genuine interest in the efforts she makes to look good for you, or not appreciating the nice things that she does for you, etc) can lead to her feeling unappreciated and under-valued.

Some guys feel as though once they get a girl as their girlfriend, she will stick around for life because the sex was great in the beginning, they both fell in love and they've shared a lot of good times together.

Yet, that's not how it works in today's world.

For a woman to want to stay in a relationship with a man for life, the man needs to be able to deepen the love, respect and attraction that she feels for him over time.

He can just take her love for granted and expect that she will stick around because things felt good at the start.

Another common mistake that guys make in terms of taking their girlfriend for granted, is letting her down at the last minute after she has gone to a lot of trouble to cook a special dinner, or even just plan a quiet evening at home together.

Even though plans can and do change (and that is fine), if you cancel on her at the last minute repeatedly, she will naturally begin to feel unloved and she will start to feel as though you are growing apart and that she's only there for your convenience.

2. Have you failed to move up the levels of life like a man?

In a relationship, a woman wants to be able to see that, if she sticks with you, life is going to get better, more interesting and more enjoyable over time.

She wants to see that you have big goals and ambitions that you're working towards and that you have the confidence and drive to follow through and succeed, no matter what challenges life throws at you.

If a girlfriend feels as though her man is just sitting back and letting life pass him by, she will feel insecure in the relationship.

She will begin to question her place in his life and she will wonder if they could have a great future together.

If a guy spends more time watching TV, hanging around in a dead-end job and generally drifting through life while his girlfriend is busy working her way up in the business world or improving herself through her studies, she's going to feel as though they are growing apart.

She might put up with it for a while, especially in the early stages of a relationship where the sex is new and she still enjoys hanging out with the guy, but if it goes on for too long, she will begin to lose respect for him.

3. Have you stopped making her feel the way she wants to feel?

In the past, a woman had to stay with a man for life, even if she was unhappy.

Women had to save their virginity for marriage, marry one man and stick to the vow of "Till death to us part."

Not anymore.

Today's women can get up and leave if they aren't happy.

In case you haven't noticed, there's an approximate divorce rate of 50% across most of the developed world today, compared to less than 10% back in 1900.

In other words, you have to be able to deepen your girlfriend's love, respect and attraction for you and take the relationship to the next level if you want it to last for life.

In a relationship, it's the man's responsibility to maintain and grow the attraction between himself and his woman.

If he slacks off, her feelings for him will gradually diminish and she will begin to become open to partying with her single girlfriends again or flirting with guys to see what happens.

If you've slipped into a "comfort zone" with your girlfriend and aren't really concerned with how she feels, then it will only be a matter of time before she pulls the plug on the relationship.

You can turn things around, but you have to be prepared to improve your ability to make her feel the type of attraction that she wants to feel in a relationship.

As you will discover from the video above, if you keep causing her to feel turned off by you, it's only a matter of time before she will cheat on you or break up with you.

What you need to understand is that you can actively re-attract your girlfriend by beginning to display more of the personality traits and behaviors that women naturally find attractive about men.

You can also get her respect back by beginning to show her that you are rising through the levels of life and reaching for your true potential as a man and you are also paying more attention to her feelings and to making her feel loved, noticed and appreciated.

Love Doesn't Die

Even though you are currently saying, "My girlfriend thinks we've grown apart," and possibly feeling worried or depressed about the idea of potentially losing your girlfriend, you need to understand that love doesn't just die.

Yes, it may feel like the love is dead right now and your girlfriend may even be saying, “I don’t feel the same way about you anymore,” but, what that really means is that she doesn’t feel like she used to feel in the beginning of your relationship.

It doesn’t mean that you can’t rekindle that love inside of her and make her love you the same way again. It also doesn’t mean that you can’t make the love stronger than it was before.

When you give her what she really needs, her feelings for you will naturally begin to change because she will be feeling the way she wants to feel.

Rather than looking at this situation as a bad thing, you can use it as an opportunity to not only make your girlfriend fall deeper and deeper in love with you, but also as a chance to fix any insecurities you may have and become a better, stronger and more complete man than you are right now.

You might be a great guy, but you can always do better.

If your girlfriend feels as though you’re drifting apart, there’s no doubt that you can do a better job of being the man that she needs you to be.

Am I a Good Boyfriend?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're asking yourself, Am I a good boyfriend? what is motivating you to ask the question?

Are you asking the question because:

1. You are in a relationship and are suddenly feeling insecure about your girlfriend's feelings for you?
2. You've recently been dumped and are now feeling insecure about your chances of getting another girlfriend and keeping her happy in a relationship?
3. You've never had a girlfriend and you're wondering if you've got what it takes to be a good boyfriend?

Whatever question applies to you, the fact that you're asking yourself, Am I a good boyfriend? suggests that you're feeling unsure of yourself.

The irony is that being unsure of yourself is something that makes her think of you as being an unsatisfactory boyfriend.

A woman wants you to believe in yourself and your attractiveness to her, no matter what, while still being a good man to her.

Whether a guy is meeting a woman for the first time, on a date, in a relationship or having sex with a woman, the main trait that she hopes he will have is confidence.

In other words, that the guy is sure of himself, believes in himself and can simply be present with her and enjoy the moment.

Women are naturally turned off by guys who second-guess themselves all the time because women don't want to be paired up with a guy that might crumble under the pressures of life.

[image: Why am I not good enough for her?]

A woman wants to see that, no matter what happens, you always retain your belief in yourself and if you make a mistake or are lacking in a certain area, you remain confident and work on fixing the mistake or improving your weakness.

So, if you want to be a good boyfriend, the first place to start is within.

You've got to know that you are good enough and if there is anything that you need to improve, you can work on improving that while retaining your belief in yourself.

The Perfect Boyfriend on TV or in Movies

These days, a lot of guys get confused over what it means to be a good boyfriend because they are constantly bombarded with conflicting messages from movies, TV shows, pop songs and random opinions from people who aren't relationship experts.

For example: The guy that a woman describes as the perfect boyfriend in a movie is more than likely going to be the guy with perfect Hollywood good looks. He's also going to have the perfect body, perfect job, perfect house, perfect car and probably the perfect fluffy pet too.

Yep, he's just perfect in every way, but here's the thing - he's not real. Nobody is absolutely perfect in every way.

Some women are delusional and expect a guy to be perfect in every way, but the majority of women are much easier to impress and keep happy in a relationship.

Watch the video below to understand how some guys make their relationship more difficult than it needs to be...

As a man, you simply have to continue making your woman feel attracted to you by displaying the personality traits and behaviors that naturally attract them.

For example:

- Being confident, rather than being insecure.
- Sharing love with her in a balanced way, rather than constantly needing her to reassure you that she loves you.
- Making her feel feminine and girly in response to your masculinity, rather than making her feel like "one of the boys" or like your neutral friend.
- Being in the position of power, rather than handing over your power to her in the hopes that it makes her happy.
- Being a man that she can look up to and respect, rather than being a man that she feels pity for.

Are You Being the Type of Guy That She Really Wants?

A woman wants to be in a relationship with a guy who has what it takes to naturally lead the way and allow her to relax into being a feminine, emotional woman.

Although a woman might put up with it for a while (sometimes even years), she will gradually fall out of love with a man who expects her to think, behave, act and feel like he does.

If a woman isn't able to think, behave, feel and act like a feminine woman (i.e. girly, emotional, etc) in a relationship, she will eventually become bored, restless and frustrated. She will then often begin to flirt with other guys who have the ability to make her feel more girly and feminine.

How do you make your girlfriend feel? Does she feel like a sexy, feminine, girly woman around you because you're such a confident, masculine guy?

If not, maybe you should ask yourself the following questions...

Have you become too needy or emotionally sensitive?

When a guy is feeling insecure and unsure of himself in a relationship, he will sometimes slip into seeking constant reassurance from his girlfriend about her feelings for him.

If he continually asks her things like, "Am I a good boyfriend?" or "Do you still love me?" then he isn't behaving in the confident, self-assured, emotionally secure way that his girlfriend needs to see to retain her feelings of respect and attraction for him.

If he keeps behaving like for long enough, her feelings for him will begin to change.

She will then become less interested in sex, will feel annoyed when he asks for a hug and will begin to feel smothered by how often he texts her, calls her or wants to see her.

In most cases, the boyfriend will then feel even more needy and emotionally sensitive, which will turn her off even more.

Watch this video for an example...

Are you being too possessive or jealous?

Following on from the above, being needy often leads to being too jealous or becoming overly possessive of a woman. If you begin to question your girlfriend's every move and attempt to spend every available moment with her, then you're in danger of suffocating the life out of your relationship.

If you then begin to sulk and feel hurt every time she chooses to do something that doesn't include you, she's going to see your behavior as weak and wimpy and a complete turn off as a result.

There's nothing wrong with wanting to spend a lot of time with your girlfriend or protecting her from situations where other guys might take advantage of her, but you've got to give her your trust.

If you can't give a woman your 100% trust, the love cannot grow and mature between you.

It will always be blocked by the fact that you are unwilling to trust her and the more jealous and possessive you become, the more respect and attraction she will lose for you.

When a woman begins to lose a lot of respect and attraction for her boyfriend, she then begins to fall out of love with him.

Are you putting her on a pedestal?

[image: Am I a good boyfriend?]

A "perfect boyfriend" in the movies will often shower his girlfriend with gifts and throw himself at her feet.

He will do absolutely anything and everything for her to hopefully impress her and keep her happy.

This might make a woman's heart skip a beat in the movies, but in the real world it will usually just make her sick.

Real women do not want to be put on a pedestal or have a guy behave like a slave in the hope that she sticks with him.

A woman will stick with a guy that she can look up to and respect, not a guy that she can push around and disrespect.

Some women do keep a guy like that around (often for life), but the guy's life is almost always miserable and she rarely will want to have sex with him.

The real way to not only get a woman to stick with you for life, but to love you, desire you, respect you and feel happy to be with you, is to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

This is done by being the sort of man that she can look up to and respect, while also being the guy that she feels attracted to and is excited to be in love with. It's actually a lot easier to do that most guys realize.

The reason why so many guys have difficulties with their relationships with women, is that they never get taught how to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

So, without that education, they unknowingly turn their girlfriend off, ruin her feelings of respect and attraction and gradually destroy the love that existed at the start of the relationship.

It's not because the guy is a bad person or lacks intelligence, but that he simply doesn't know what else to do to succeed.

To him, women are difficult, a mystery, too complicated and too hard to please.

Yet, for a guy who understands women, being successful at picking up women and keeping a relationship together is a very simple, natural and effortless thing to do.

Women are a lot easier to attract than most guys realize, but if you never get taught what women really want, it will likely remain as a frustrating mystery for you for life.

For example: If you try to be the perfect boyfriend by doting on a woman and making her every wish your command, it doesn't mean that she will stick with you for life, respect you and desire you sexually.

[image: Now do you like me?]

If you go overboard with your attempts to kiss up to her and essentially be her "yes" man who does whatever she wants, you will end up making her see you as a weak, desperate man and she will no longer feel sexually attracted to you as a result.

You might have great intentions by being so nice to her, but that isn't what makes a woman deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for a guy.

Being nice to her only deepens her love, respect and attraction if you are also the type of guy that she can look up to and respect, rather than a doormat boyfriend who she can walk all over.

Are you taking her for granted?

[image: Am I being a good enough boyfriend?]

Some guys make the mistake of thinking that once a woman says, "I love you" she is essentially his and he can do whatever he wants.

While that approach worked back in the time where a woman had to save her virginity for marriage and then stick with her chosen husband for life, it doesn't work in today's world.

If a woman is not being treated with love, respect and care, she now has the right to get up and leave a man.

The society around a woman today even encourages her to do so, compared to how things used to work in the past when society demanded that women stay with one man for life.

If you want a woman to stick with you, it's no longer possible to treat her badly and take her for granted. She might put up with it for a while, but she won't put up with it forever.

In today's world, it's just too easy for a woman to put up an online dating profile and have 1,000s of matches overnight or go to a bar or nightclub and have sex with a guy on the first night.

She doesn't have to stick with a guy who takes her for granted, so if you want her to stick around, you've got to be able to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

Are you being enough of a man for her?

Every day, I help new guys to get an ex-girlfriend, fianc  or wife back.

One of the most common reasons that I see as being the cause of the break up is that the guy essentially wasn't enough of a man for her.

In other words, he wasn't rising through the levels of life to reach for his true potential as a man, or he wasn't manly enough and had become a bit feminine around her.

It can also be that he isn't emotionally strong enough and has made her feel as though she almost has to take care of him emotionally.

What a woman really wants is to not have to worry about her man.

She wants to be able to trust that he will remain strong no matter what and he will keep pushing forward to create a better life for himself and her.

She doesn't want to be stuck with a guy who needs her to "mother" him or constantly lift his spirits because he's unmotivated, depressed or lacking mojo for life.

She also doesn't want a guy who expects her to take the lead or "wear the pants" in the relationship because he can't be bothered doing so.

If you want to be a good boyfriend, you've got to be able to allow your woman to feel feminine, girly and free to be emotional like a woman.

You can't expect her to be sensible, rational, logical and strong like a man all the time.

Yes, she likely has the capability to be like that (e.g. at work, at university, etc), but when in a relationship with a man, she wants to be able to relax into being her most natural, feminine self as possible.

If you can allow her to relax into being a woman, while also giving her the trust and space to grow and explore life in the ways she wants, she will see you as being much more than a good boyfriend.

You will be her chosen man for life.

My Girlfriend Told Me She Likes Another Guy

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend has told you that she likes another guy, it is either your fault or hers.

If it's your fault, it means that you haven't been doing enough to build on the attraction, respect and love that she feels for you.

You may have been slowly destroying her feelings for (e.g. by being jealous, insecure, needy, etc) rather than building on her feelings.

If it's her fault, it means that she is disloyal, untrustworthy or was only using you for a while because you were nice to her.

She knew that she could control you in a relationship and secretly, she always intended to break up with you or cheat on you at some point and it has now gotten to that point.

So, what should you do if you've found yourself saying, "My girlfriend told me she likes another guy" and wondering what your next move is?

Should you put your hands up in defeat and watch her walk out of your life with the other guy, or should you fight to keep her?

It depends...

If the fault rests with you, then you need to improve your ability to make her feel the type of respect, attraction and love that she needs to feel for you to justify staying with you.

If that is the case, then watch this video...

If the blame rests with your girlfriend (i.e. she is disloyal, untrustworthy, was just using you for a while, etc), then you need to decide whether or not you're going to keep putting up with her lack of respect towards you, or if you are going to dump her and move on.

If you were a guy who can easily attract other women, then you might dump her and then begin hooking up with other women.

However, if you know that it's going to be difficult to find another hot girl like her, then you might try to hang on to her as long as possible, even though you know that she's probably going to begin cheating on you soon unless you change your approach and begin attracting her.

What Caused Your Girlfriend to Fall For Another Guy?

[image: What caused her to fall for another guy?]

Whether you feel comfortable to admit it or not, something happened (or stopped happening) in your relationship to cause your girlfriend to lose touch with her feelings of respect, attraction and love for you.

For example: You became insecure about your attractiveness to her and as a result, you started being jealous, controlling or emotionally sensitive.

She then started losing interest in you because women just can't maintain feelings of sexual attraction for a guy who is insecure.

Here's the thing...

Unless she is a habitual cheater or enjoys getting guys to love her and then dumping them, a woman doesn't wake up one day and decide she's suddenly interested in another guy and wants to leave her boyfriend.

For most women, this is something that happens over a period of time and mostly because she's not getting what she needs from her boyfriend.

When a woman stops feeling the way she wants to feel, (i.e. valued, appreciated, attracted, loved, etc.), she will naturally start to feel unhappy in the relationship.

During that time, if she meets a guy who is charming, confident, masculine and interesting and who fills the gaps that she is missing in her relationship with her boyfriend, she will naturally open herself up to feeling attraction for him.

If she is a loyal, trustworthy woman and really wants to stay faithful to her boyfriend, she might try to fight her feelings of attraction for a while, but it won't be easy if she has lost touch with her feelings of love, respect and attraction for her boyfriend.

This is why, if you're saying, "My girlfriend told me she likes another guy," the first question you have to ask yourself is, "What is this guy giving her that I'm not?"

If you dig deeper, you are likely going to discover that your girlfriend likes this other guy because he is filling the gaps you have been leaving open in your relationship with her.

For example: If you have been taking your girlfriend for granted by failing to notice and appreciate the efforts she makes to look good for you, or if you've been canceling dates with her on short notice and putting her in second (third or fourth) priority to your work, friends or family, it's only natural she will feel that she's not very important to you.

A woman definitely appreciates it when a man works hard to achieve his goals and maintain great relationships with friends and family, but not if he goes too far and takes her love, respect, attraction and commitment for granted.

After all, she is a human being and needs to feel loved, wanted, appreciated and desired too.

She might be able to put up with being ignored for a while, but if it goes on for too long and happens too often, she will begin to feel restless.

Then, when she meets another guy who is much more attentive, interested and available, she will begin to like him because he is giving her what she is not getting from you and is making her feel the way she wants to feel.

Another thing that this other might be offering her that you are not is confidence and emotional maturity.

For example: If you are being needy, clingy and insecure around her and he is being confident and emotionally strong, she's going to feel a natural attraction for him compared to you.

Why? Women are naturally attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness.

A girlfriend will often put up with her boyfriend going through a tough time emotionally, but if he doesn't pick himself and use the experience as a lesson to become an even stronger man than before, she will lose respect for him.

Women want to be with the sort of guy who can take life's challenges in his stride and keep growing and becoming stronger every day, week, month and year of his life.

If your girlfriend now likes another guy, he might be a more mature guy than you in that sense. He might be a guy who is rising through the levels of life by reaching for his true potential as a man.

On the other hand, maybe you are the kind of guy who has been using your relationship as an excuse to hide from your true potential in life.

Instead of facing your fears like a man, you choose to “hide” away from life by watching TV, checking social media, playing computer games and hanging around your girlfriend all the time.

If that’s the case, then a guy who is more ambitious than you is going to be more appealing to her.

She may feel like if she gets with him, she will be happier and he will lead both himself and her to a better life together.

The good news is that, given enough time, chances are very high that your girlfriend will realize that this guy is only filling in the gaps that are missing with you and her attraction for him will end.

If you do let her go or if she does leave you to be with him, he will most likely be a “rebound boyfriend.”

65% of rebound relationships fail within 6 months because the woman realizes that while the new guy certainly filled some emotional gaps, he doesn’t have everything that she is looking for.

However, you don’t sit around waiting for her to hook up with him and then break up with him.

If you want to keep her as your girlfriend, you need to begin focusing on improving your ability to deepen her love, respect and attraction for you.

If you’re going to get her to see you as her ideal man, you have to show her that no matter where she looks, other guys pale in comparison to you. You can only really do that by:

Fixing the gaps that exist in your relationship with her (e.g. things like being needy or insecure, being unable to make her feel like a real woman, being unable to commit fully to the relationship, etc.)

Being the kind of man that she really needs you to be.

Showing her that you’re a better man and that no other guy (not even the guy she likes right now) can make her feel the way that you can.

Mistakes to Avoid

If your girlfriend has told you that she likes another guy, it’s completely understandable if you feel hurt by that.

However, rather than losing control of your emotions and saying or doing something that you will regret later on, you need to stay strong and do what it takes to make her feel the type of love, respect and attraction that she will need to feel to justify staying with you.

Here are 3 classic mistakes to avoid making in this situation!

1. Trying to compete with the other guy.

Trying to compete with the other guy in any way (e.g. by badmouthing him, showing off that you have a better car/job/bank account to him, etc), is only going to make you look like a petty, immature and childish sore loser in this situation.

Here’s the thing...

Your girlfriend is already comparing you to him subconsciously (and even consciously) and by trying to compete with him, she will actually see him as the better man.

Why?

She will see that you feel insecure about your attractiveness, value and worthiness compared to him.

What she actually needs to see to feel respect and attraction for you, is to see that you're not threatened by the idea of her liking another guy.

Now, that's not to say that you need to show her that you don't care.

You do need to care, but just don't be insecure and threatened by it.

If you do become insecure, the other guy will automatically seem more attractive than you if he has been thinking, behaving and acting confident around her.

Rather than try to convince her you're better than him, have the mindset that you already ARE better than him.

If you believe in your attractiveness to your girlfriend and to other women, then your actions, conversation style and body language will come across in an attractive way.

Your girlfriend will notice that, regardless of what she says about liking another guy, you still believe that you're much more attractive and appealing than he is and you don't even need to try to prove it to her.

You just know and she can see it in your body language, feel it in your vibe and see it in your actions.

When your girlfriend sees this, she will naturally feel attracted to you because women are instinctively drawn to strong, masculine men who believe in themselves no matter what life or anyone else throws at them.

2. Trying to make her jealous by talking about other women who like you

Tit for tat (an eye for an eye) might seem like a good idea, but unless you're actually able to begin dating and having sex with new women right away, your girlfriend will see right through any attempts that you make to cause her to feel jealous.

3. Promising her that you will change if she gives you another chance to prove yourself

A woman will often give her boyfriend a few chances to improve or change before she makes the decision to break up with him, especially if she still has hope for the relationship.

However, if he never seems to change and ends up making her feel the same way after she has given him yet another chance, she will switch off her feelings for him and open herself up to other guys.

This is why making promises and telling her you that you change is not going to make her suddenly see you as a better option than the other guy.

After all, if she has given you chances before and you still haven't worked out how to be the sort of guy she needs you to be, how can she be sure that you will get it right this time?

If you want your girlfriend to take you seriously and feel committed to making the relationship with you work, then you are going to have to fill the gaps that are causing her to feel attraction for the other guy, and show her that she matters enough for you to change.

If you aren't willing to fix any emotional issues that you have (e.g. insecurity, neediness, jealousy, etc) and improve yourself, she will feel as though you aren't taking how she feels seriously.

Itâ€™s up to you to show her that not only do you value yourself, but you also value her and the relationship. You can show her that by actually changing, rather than promising to change.

Make Her Feel Lucky to Have You

[image: Make her feel lucky to be your girlfriend]

You can sit around all day saying, â€œMy girlfriend told me she likes another guyâ€ and feeling like youâ€™ve already lost her, or you can take control of the situation and turn it around and make your girlfriend not only feel respect, attraction and love for you again, but also make her feel that sheâ€™s lucky to have you and that sheâ€™d lose if she ever let you go.

Then it will be your decision if you want to stay in a relationship with her, or if you would rather break up with her and find yourself another woman.

My Girlfriend Says I Am Selfish

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend is suggesting that you are selfish, the question now is: Do you agree with her and if so, what are you going to do about it?

If you love your girlfriend and want to make sure that your relationship doesn't end up in a break up, make sure that you read through this entire article so I can help you fix the problem and get things back on track with her.

Use This as a Wake Up Call

[image: My girlfriend thinks I am selfish]

The most successful men in this world always keep an open mind about feedback that they get from others.

Rather than thinking that he does everything perfectly all the time, a successful man will remain open to the idea that he might be able to improve some things about his communication style, attitude, behavior, vibe and actions to become an even better man.

This is the opportunity that your girlfriend is now presenting you with, so use it as a wake up call.

For example: Watch the video above and you will discover that a relationship needs to get past the stage of just “working” for it to last.

If you don't want to end up getting cheated on or dumped, then now is the time to make changes before she gets tired of being taken for granted.

The problems in the relationship are not all your fault, but as the man, you have to take responsibility to fix any problems and guide you and your woman to a better feeling place, rather than just expecting her to put up with it for life.

So, if currently you're saying something like, “My girlfriend says I am selfish,” then you may not be not feeling great about yourself (or her) right now.

You might even be feeling angry or resentful towards her for saying such a thing and thinking, “How dare she that say I am selfish. I love her and care about her...I'm a good man! What is she talking about?”

So, what is she talking about?

What Does She Really Mean When She Says That You Are Selfish

[image: How am I being selfish?]

Most women don't explain the real reasons why they are unhappy with a man, so they will instead say things like, “You're selfish,” or “You're so self-absorbed,” in the hopes that you'll realize that there is a deeper, more pressing issue in the relationship that is making her lose respect and attraction for you.

Now at this point you might be thinking, “Why must women be so confusing? Why don’t they just SAY what is really bothering them and be done with it rather than make guys guess?”

Well, to begin with, for most of human history, women have been oppressed by men.

This oppression meant that a woman had to endure a man who behaved badly towards her and she couldn’t say or do anything about it because chances were, if she did, she would get beaten, or even killed for her efforts.

Unfortunately, even today there are many places in the world where this can and still does happen. Although women today are much more confident and independent than women from prior generations, they are still hardwired to avoid saying something that could potentially cause her man to hurt her.

Another reason why a woman won’t just say what is really bothering her is because she doesn’t want to have to teach her man how to BE a man.

She expects him to be able to take what she tells him, (e.g. “You’re selfish”) and then understand the deeper meaning behind those words.

She hopes that he will take on that feedback, fix his issues and improve himself, without her having to hold his hand and guide him through the steps of being a man.

Naturally, if her man doesn’t figure things out by himself, she will slowly begin to lose respect for him.

Over time, this will erode the love that she feels for him too and he’ll end up being dumped and wondering to himself what went wrong.

So, rather than feeling bad about her calling you selfish, ask yourself this!

Have You Been Taking Her For Granted?

[image: You're so selfish! You don't even care about me!]

At the beginning of a relationship, a guy will usually do whatever he can to create attraction between himself and his girlfriend.

He’ll do everything he can to keep her happy, excited and attracted (e.g. take her out to dinner, get her laughing, make her feel happy, etc).

Yet, over time, as they get more familiar with each other and the initial “fireworks” wear off between them, some guys then make the mistake of slipping into taking their girlfriend for granted.

In most cases, this isn’t something that a guy does intentionally, but the pressures of everyday life, like a hectic work schedule, exams, paying bills, etc., can lead to him forgetting to pay her the attention that she needs to feel loved, appreciated and valued in the relationship.

When this happens, he might find himself fighting with his girlfriend more often over seemingly “minor” things.

He won’t be able to understand why she seems to want to argue about every little thing and why she has stopped being so affection towards him, so he might react by getting angry or losing interest in trying to make her smile, laugh and feel happy.

Some classic examples of a boyfriend taking his girlfriend for granted (Note: Taking her for granted is essentially being selfish), could include the following:

1. Not appreciating the efforts that she makes to look good for you.

[image: Not appreciating your girlfriend's efforts to look good for you]

If a woman is actively trying to keep the spark in a relationship alive, she will try to make herself look more physically appealing and attractive because this is what men are most attracted to about women.

So, she might buy new shoes, wear sexier or more fashionable clothes, change her hair, wear more makeup or lose some weight.

While this might seem unimportant to her boyfriend (e.g. he might think, â€œShe is beautiful no matter what she wears or how she looksâ€œ), she will see it as important.

Women know that their appearance is what men are attracted to the most and if she lets herself go, she fears that her boyfriend's attraction for her will eventually begin to fade away.

This is why, when you fail to notice her efforts, or worse yet, if she asks you, â€œHow do I look?â€œ you just grunt in reply or say something like, â€œYou look fine,â€œ she will feel hurt and unappreciated.

She will feel as though with you, she just doesn't seem to be able to create the right spark of attraction and desire that she hopes a guy will continue to feel for her.

If she becomes insecure about that, she will often begin to flirt with other men and get them showing sexual interest in her, to hopefully boost her self-esteem.

Yet, when she starts flirting with other men while she's not feeling much respect, love and attraction for her boyfriend, she will be more likely to become open to cheating or will actually cheat if she meets a guy who makes her feel the way she really wants to feel around a man.

Even though she might be flirting with other guys behind her boyfriend's back, she will still accuse her boyfriend of being selfish because he just isn't showing her the type of appreciation that she wants to feel about her attractiveness to him.

2. Not noticing most of the little things that she does for you.

When a woman loves you, respects you as a man and feels attracted to you, she will do all sorts of nice, little things for you.

For example: She will make you a coffee, clean up around the house, do your laundry, let you take up most of the bed when sleeping, etc.

However, if you don't ever compliment her or thank her for some of the little things that she does and you are also thinking, behaving and acting in a way that is eroding her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you, then she might eventually get to a point where she says that you're selfish.

In a relationship, it's easy to fall into patterns.

For example: You might have established a routine where your girlfriend cooks dinner for the both of every night.

Maybe you have a really busy schedule so she has agreed to run some errands for, like do your grocery shopping, pick up your clothes from the dry cleaners, etc.

Helping each other is a normal and healthy part of being in a relationship with someone.

Yet, when you start assuming that she should always do the cooking, or she must always be the one to fetch your dry cleaning or do your shopping, without ever telling her how much you appreciate her efforts, or do something really nice for her in return, she will naturally begin to see you as being selfish and ungrateful.

3. Not taking her feelings into consideration when you make plans.

Another example of a boyfriend's selfishness is regularly letting his girlfriend down or changing his with her plans at the last minute.

Let's say that you made plans with your girlfriend to spend a quiet night at home and watch a new chick flick she's been wanting to see for a long time.

You then call her up at the very last minute because you and some friends got caught up having fun after work (or college), and you lost track of the time.

You might not consider that to be a big deal because you might think, "I'll make it up to her some other time," but to her it is a very big deal.

Why? In her eyes you're choosing to put other people before her and if you do this type of thing a little too often, she will naturally assume that you're not only being selfish, but you're simply not putting the same value on being with her that she is putting on being with you.

It's fine to treat a girl like that if you're dating multiple women at once and don't care if she dumps you, but if it's your one and only girlfriend, it's just not cool. You've got to show her more respect than that.

Yes, even with a committed girlfriend, plans will have to be changed at the last minute sometimes, but if you've made a habit of breaking your promises to her, she will naturally feel unhappy about it and will call you selfish in the hopes that you'll realize your behavior is making her feel taken for granted and unhappy to be around you.

You Can Change How She Feels Today

Rather than feeling annoyed or confused and saying, "My girlfriend says I am selfish," consider yourself lucky, because you have the opportunity to fix your behavior before it's too late.

Other guys sometimes get dumped by a woman right away, but your girlfriend clearly cares enough about you to fire off some warning shots first. So, make

If you want to change how your girlfriend feels about you right now, you have to be the one who actively makes her see you in a new light.

Don't expect her to see that you really aren't selfish, without you changing anything about your thinking, behavior, attitude, vibe or actions around her.

You don't have to fix everything and become perfect to make her see you differently, but you also can't say you will change at some point in the future if she just shuts up and stops referring to you as selfish.

Instead, what you need to do is sincerely ask yourself, "Why did my girlfriend say that I am selfish? What is she really telling me and how can I use this to improve our relationship and make her feel more respect, attraction and love me than ever before?"

From here on in, focus on making small changes and improvements every day and this will show her that you have taken her concerns seriously and have taken steps to become and be the man she needs you to be.

She will then naturally drop her guard and open herself up to feeling much more love, attraction and respect for you again.

In fact, when she sees how much you've changed so quickly, she will feel excited about the fact that she has a man who can take feedback and use it to become an even better man.

Men like that are rare and when a woman realizes she has a man like that, she holds on and never lets go.

Of course, that is just one of the many secrets that I can teach you.

Continue learning now and I'll teach you how to make her feel sexually attracted to you, respectful of you and totally in love with you for life.

Don't worry – it's easy.

My approach to relationships is essentially about getting the woman to be a good woman for you, rather than you having to put in loads of work to keep her happy.

My Girlfriend Wants to See Other People

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend wants to see other people, it means that she's not feeling enough respect and attraction for you to justify remaining committed to you anymore.

She doesn't really think that staying in a committed relationship with you is a good investment of her time, so she is thinking of replacing you.

She may have also met a new guy recently who has the ability to make her feel the type of attraction she really wants, so she is starting to value the attraction experience with you less and less.

As a result, she would be thinking that she'd be cheating herself out of a great opportunity if she didn't see what it feels like to be with him for a while.

She knows that something isn't quite right with your relationship, but may not know exactly what it is.

She just has a feeling that you're probably not the one for her because she's not falling more and more in love with you over time.

Instead, she is starting to feel like you just don't make her feel that attracted anymore.

So, your girlfriend might really like you as a person and feel some attraction for you, but something about you or your relationship is telling to her that you're not the guy that she should settle down with right now.

For example:

- She might have just wanted to be with you for a short while to make herself feel better after breaking up with another guy who she really cared about.
- You might find it difficult to attract women and she has now realized that you got lucky with her.
- She has been feeling turned off with the approach that you've taken to the relationship (e.g. if you've been too clingy, needy and emotionally sensitive around her).
- You might not have much purpose and ambition in life and she's worried that over time, you will become more of a burden than benefit to her.
- She might have been hoping that your relationship would progress to the next levels (e.g. engagement, moving in together, marriage, children, etc), but nothing was happening, so she gave up on that with you and opened herself up to other guys.
- You might have wanted to settle down with her too quickly, whereas she still wants to be young and free with you for a while, without having to think about getting engaged, married and having children.

I know that it might suck to have to think about those possibilities when it comes to you and her, but if you want to stop her from feeling the desire to see other people, you're going to need to focus on improving your ability to make her feel the way that she wants to feel.

Your girlfriend hasn't fully broken up with you yet, but if she's interested in seeing other people, then it's only a matter of time before she does.

At this point, you have a few options:

1. Dump her and let her feel the immediate pain of losing you. Then, when she comes back to you, make sure that you focus on deepening her love, respect and attraction for you.
2. Hang in there and hope that she doesn't find another guy to replace you.
3. Focus on making her feel more respect and attraction for you than she ever has before, therefore making other guys seem like a less appealing option.

If you're interested in giving number 3 a go, then watch this video to understand where you might have been going wrong with her and what you can do to change that...

As you will discover from the video above, you have a lot of control over how much or little attraction your girlfriend feels for you.

As a man, you need to actively make a woman feel attracted to you based on what you say and do around her.

For example: If you're being insecure, needy or clingy around her, it means that you are actively turning her off.

She's Probably Not Going to Tell You the Real Reason Why

When a girlfriend tells her boyfriend, "I want to see other people," she's usually taken by surprise and shocked that she would be thinking in that way. He will often feel as though this has come "out of the blue" and that she's making a rash decision, or making a mistake.

Yet, in most cases, a woman will have given her boyfriend plenty of "hints" (e.g. with her body language, by telling him to stop annoying her, by arguing with him over seemingly unimportant things, by saying that she isn't sure why she got with him in the first place, etc) to let him know that she is unhappy in the relationship.

Unfortunately, most guys either miss these "hints" completely, or simply write them off to her being a moody woman. A guy will often think, "Ahh, she'll get over it" because he assumes that once he gets a woman into a relationship, she is now "his woman" and she will never leave him.

Then, seemingly out of the blue, his girlfriend says, "We need to talk," and tells him that she wants to see other people. If he then asks her why, she'll simply brush him off by saying something like, "I'm just not ready to be in a serious relationship with just one guy right now," or "I'm just too young to have a serious boyfriend" or "I don't know, I just think that we should see other people."

Whatever the reason your girlfriend gave you when she told you she wants to date other people, you can be sure that she didn't tell you the real reason.

Why? A woman doesn't want to teach a guy how to be a man because if she teaches him once, she'll have to teach him twice and then that type of dynamic will grow in their relationship. After a while, she will feel like a bit of a "mother" figure, big sister or friend to him, which will ruin her feelings of sexual attraction.

Women also have a natural instinct to let a guy down as softly as possible and give him a feeling of hope that if he just keeps his distance, she'll eventually change her mind and come back to him.

Why? For most of human history and even to this day, a woman could be hurt or even killed for breaking up with a guy.

Women know that even the nicest of man has the potential to snap and become violent and since she probably won't be able to defend herself, she simply lets him down lightly and tries to find another guy who will hopefully be able to keep her ex boyfriend away.

If your girlfriend wants to see other people, it means that she is most-likely trying to find a replacement guy, so she can eventually say to you, "Sorry, I don't want to see you anymore. I have a new boyfriend and I am in love with him. Never contact me again."

If you want to avoid getting to that point, you have to work out where you've been going wrong in the relationship (e.g. taking her for granted, being clingy or insecure, etc) and correct that. You also need to focus on making her feel attracted to you in new and exciting ways (e.g. by being more charismatic, confident, fun to be around, masculine, etc).

3 Common Mistakes to Avoid

If your girlfriend wants to see other people, it essentially means that she is breaking up with you slowly.

So, like a typical break up situation, make sure that you don't make any of the following mistakes, which will turn her off you even further!

1. Begging and pleading with her to change her mind

Sometimes, the shock of potentially being dumped gets the better of a man and he ends up begging and pleading with his girlfriend for her to change her mind.

Some guys even try to make their girlfriend feel guilty, by telling her, "I can't live without you. If I can't be with you then I'd rather die."

Yet, this type of behavior is not going to make her change her mind and will simply make her feel more turned off. Women want to be with a man they can look up to, respect and admire not a guy they look down on, disrespect and dislike.

Although begging and pleading is a classic how to get your girlfriend to take you back technique in romantic comedy movies, in the real world it only makes a woman lose even more respect and attraction for a guy.

So, rather than begging or pleading with her, just take it like a man.

Accept it, but then switch into making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you.

2. Promising her that you will change if she gives you a chance to prove yourself

In an effort to get his girlfriend to change her mind, some men will promise to change anything that she wants.

He will tell her that if she just gives him a chance to prove himself, he will show her that he is the man for her.

Yet, the problem with that approach is that women don't want to feel like they are doing a favor for a guy by being with him. A woman wants to be with a guy who makes her feel lucky to be with him and who she has to continually impress, not the other way around.

Since a woman will rarely give her boyfriend advice on how to be the type of man that she really wants, he will end up offering her things that don't hit the mark.

For example: A boyfriend might say to his girlfriend, â€œLet's just go away together. I know we've been busy at work/college so this will help us reconnect with each other.â€

Yet, she might have felt that he was always being clingy, needy and insecure in the relationship and to her, this is just another example of his needy behavior. She perceives it as him just wanting to be around her more, so he can feel good about himself, but she knows that she's not going to be feeling the way that she wants to feel, because he doesn't know what she really wants from him.

Without understanding the actual attitudes and behaviors that you really need to change to make her feel the way she wants to feel, most of the things that you promise will not connect with her.

3. Trying to make her jealous by lying about being with other women

Although going out, dating and having sex with other women is definitely a good way to make a woman feel jealous, what sometimes happens is that a guy will lie about it to his girlfriend to â€œshockâ€ her into wanting him back.

He might say something like, â€œSure, no problem if you want to see other people, go ahead. I've already got other women who are interested in me and I've already been out with some hot new women,â€ or something along those lines.

In reality, he's just sitting around alone at home pining over his girlfriend, but because he doesn't know what else to do, he's hoping that if he shows her that she's about to lose him to another woman, she'll suddenly realize what a great guy he is and she'll come running back to him.

That isn't a good strategy though because a woman has a simple and easy way to catch him out if he's lying to her. All she needs to do is to congratulate him and pretend that she's happy for him.

If he then quickly tells her, â€œIt's not serious between me and these women. I'll stop seeing them if you want to try again. You know you're the one for me,â€ she will know that he was just lying to make her feel jealous.

Naturally, at this point, she will lose even more respect and attraction for him as a man and she'll make an effort to start seeing other people as soon as possible to make sure he won't try to manipulate her in that way again.

So, you shouldn't try to lie or deceive her into thinking that you're fine without her.

You actually have to be fine without her to truly make her feel the type of jealousy (and other painful emotions) that will make her reconsider her decision to want to see other people.

Getting Her to Change Her Mind

Just because your girlfriend wants to see other people, it doesn't mean that her love for you is dead.

One of the most important things that I've learned about love is that it doesn't die.

The love is still there in the background, but she is simply not willing to connect with it right now.

At the moment, your girlfriend doesn't feel like she wants to be in love with you, but you can change the way that she feels about you by doing 4 simple things:

1. Learn to understand what she really wants you to change about yourself. Reminder: A woman will rarely explain what she really wants.
2. Fix your emotional issues (e.g. insecurity, clinginess, jealousy, commitment issues, etc) and show her that youâve improved and changed.
3. Get her on the phone as quickly as possible to arrange a meet up so she can experience the new you in person.
4. Make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you at the meet up.

Donât spend one more day saying, âMy girlfriend wants to see other people,â and feeling like youâve lost a good thing.

When your girlfriend realizes that youâve fixed your issues and improved yourself and that youâre now a much better man than the one she originally fell in love with, she will naturally open herself up to reconnect with the love, respect and attraction that she felt for you before.

My Girlfriend Wants to Break Up. How Can I Change Her Mind?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Before your girlfriend said that she wanted to break up with you, she would have gone through the following, 3 step process:

1. She lost respect for you as a man.
2. She then lost touch with her feelings of attraction for you.
3. She then began to fall out of love with you.

If your girlfriend wants to break up, the secret to changing her mind is to make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you.

You can make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you by beginning to show her that the relationship between you and her is getting better and better every day.

If she can see that and feel it, she will stop wanting to break up with you and she will fall back in love with you.

Common Mistakes to Avoid

I often get emails from guys who ask me things like, “My girlfriend wants to break up. What should I do?” or “My girlfriend wants to break up, but she still loves me. How can I get her to reconsider her decision?”

Unfortunately, the majority of the guys who contact me have already made some classic mistakes that have caused their girlfriend to feel even more certain that she wants to break up with them.

So, if you are a guy who is saying, “My girlfriend wants to break up” and you want to know what you can do to convince her to change her mind, make sure that you don't make the following classic mistakes...

1. Begging or pleading with her to change her mind.

If a girlfriend says to her boyfriend, “I want to break up” and he then says, “Okay, I love you and want to be with you, but if you want to break up, I accept that” and then gets her to leave, she is going to think, “What the?” but she will also be feeling respect and attraction for him at the same time.

Women naturally respect and feel attracted to men who love them, but who not need them. So, when a boyfriend makes the mistake of begging and pleading with his girlfriend to not break up with him, she naturally loses respect for him and begins to lose touch with her feelings of attraction for him.

If a boyfriend begs and pleads not to be broken up with, he is essentially revealing to his girlfriend that he needs her more than she needs him.

In some cases, the boyfriend will know that he had gotten lucky when he got into a relationship with her and he will have a difficult time finding another girl, so when she decides that she wants out, he naturally feels desperate to hang on to what he has got.

Yet, that isn't attractive to women.

Women are naturally attracted to guys who can easily pick up other women, but who decide to devote themselves to a woman if she meets his standards and continues to treat him well in a relationship.

Unless a woman is unattractive or insecure about her attractiveness, she will not want to be with a guy who needs her more than she needs him. For an attractive woman who knows that she is attractive, she will be aware of how easy it is for her to get other guys interested.

All she has to do is put up an online dating profile and she will have 100s of matches overnight, or head out to a bar or nightclub on the weekend and she is guaranteed to get laid.

With a woman like her, no amount of begging or pleading will change the way she is feeling because she knows that she doesn't have to settle. She knows that it will be easy for her to find a new guy, so nothing that her boyfriend can say to her will actually change her mind.

To get her to change her mind about breaking up, you need to show her by the way that you think, act and behave that you've learned from the mistakes you've made and you are now a better, more attractive and appealing man as a result.

Your behavior, body language, vibe, conversation style and attitude need to be making her feel respect and attraction for you, not pity and disgust. Unless you are focussing on making her feel what she wants to feel, she's probably not going to change her mind unless she breaks up with you and finds it difficult to get a new guy.

The mistake of begging and pleading also includes hounding your girlfriend with calls and messages and thinking that if you just message her enough, she will eventually understand where you are coming from and change her mind.

Yet, that is not the approach that works.

To get her to change her mind about the break up, you have to understand where she is coming from and make the necessary changes to your behavior, thinking, actions, vibe, attitude and approach to her and the relationship.

If you've already made the mistake of begging and pleading and she has now broken up with you, don't worry.

We all make silly mistakes in life and as long as you learn from it and don't do that again, you've become a better, wiser man from making that mistake and it's now something to laugh about.

Don't let her make it out to be something worse than it was.

If you begged for another chance, it was simply a silly reaction that you and her can now laugh about. Nothing more, nothing less.

Don't take it so seriously.

Focus on what actually works: Changing your approach so you now give the attraction experience she really wants from a relationship.

Another mistake to avoid is...

2. Asking her to explain exactly what you need to change

A woman doesn't want to have to take on the role of a man's teacher in life, so while she might give her boyfriend some vague reasons for the break up (e.g. "I don't know if I want to be in a relationship right now" or "I need time away from you to figure out what I want" etc), she won't actually tell him what he needs to do to keep her.

For example: Many women will break up with a guy who simply isn't enough of a man for her. He might be too neutral around her, which makes her just feel like a friend to him, or he may have become a bit too feminine and emotionally sensitive, which then robs her of the attraction that she needs to feel for a man's masculinity.

When a girlfriend breaks up with a guy, it's usually for very specific, deeper reasons (like the example of him not being enough of a man for her, not making her feel girly in response to his masculinity, etc) that she isn't going to be willing to share.

So, when her boyfriend then tries to get her to change her mind by saying, â€œWhatever it is that you want, I promise that I will do it. Just tell me what you want. I can change. Just tell meâ€ it rubs her the wrong way.

A woman doesn't want to have to spell out what she needs from her man. Instead, she wants to relax into being a feminine, emotional woman and that can only truly happen when she is with a guy who knows how to be a man.

Some guys are lucky enough to grow up around male role models who can teach them how to be the type of man that women love, respect and feel attracted to. However, most guys just don't ever get taught that type of thing and are instead told incorrect things like, “Treat her like a lady. Buy her nice things. Listen to her.”

Yes, that is great advice if she actually respects you and feels attracted to you, but if she doesn't have those feelings for you, she's not going to want to stay with you for life because you're nice to her and buy her nice things.

Rather than expecting your girlfriend to teach you fundamental lessons on how to be the type of man that women want, you need to learn that stuff yourself.

What you need to understand is that you have a lot of control over how you make your girlfriend feel. If you are saying and doing the types of things that make her feel respect and attraction for you, then she's naturally going to feel that way towards you.

However, if you're saying and doing things that are turning her off, then she's naturally going to feel turned off and will want to continue with her idea to take a break and then break up with you.

The next mistake to avoid is...

3. Handing over your power in the hope that she will take pity on you.

Putting a woman in charge of the relationship isn't what she really wants.

Sure, a woman wants you to respect her, listen to her and care about how she feels and what she wants, but she doesn't want you to be a guy that she walks all over in a relationship.

Some guys make the mistake of thinking that they can prevent a break up with their girlfriend by giving her all the power. Essentially, he will do, say and think whatever she wants him to, in the hope that it makes her feel pity for him and want to stay.

In his mind, he feels like it is the perfect way to show how much he cares, but to her, it's just another reason why she can't respect him as a man.

4. Involving her friends or family in the break up.

A classic mistake that some guys make when trying to get a girlfriend to change her mind about breaking up, is to call in the help of her friends and relatives.

Guys who do this assume that by showing her friends or family how devastated he is by her desire to break up with him and what a "nice guy" he really is, they will take pity on him and try to convince her that she should reconsider and change her mind.

Yet, this is an approach that will backfire in a big way because a guy who actively seeks the pity of others is not the kind of guy that women respect or feel sexually attracted to.

How to Keep Your Relationship Together

If you want to go from saying, "My girlfriend wants to break up" to, "My girlfriend is madly in love with me and never wants to let me go," then you need to commit to changing the things about you that have been ruining her feelings of respect and attraction for you.

When you make changes for the better and show her that you've now got what it takes to make her happy, she will naturally begin to change her mind about the break up.

My Girlfriend Said We Need to Talk

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a girlfriend tells her boyfriend that they need to “talk” it essentially means that she’s no longer feeling enough love, respect and attraction for him to justify being in a relationship.

Her instincts are telling her that she should break up with you, but she’s not quite sure how to go about it.

So, before she decides to fully break up with you, watch this video to ensure that she changes her mind about breaking up...

To get her to reconsider her decision, you need to get her respect back, then her attraction and she will then begin to reconnect with her feelings of love for you.

However, if you ignore what she is saying and just hope that she gets over it, she will gradually begin to fall out of love with you and may eventually break up with you.

Stay Calm and Re-Attract Her

If your girlfriend has given you those four, horrible words of, “We need to talk,” then you’re probably not feeling optimistic about what’s going to follow.

Chances are that you’ve been thinking things like...

- She’s going to dump me, I can feel it!
- I don’t know what I’m going to do if she breaks up with me. I can’t live without her in my life.
- There’s probably nothing I can do to make her change her mind.
- It’s too late; it’s over for us.
- What if she hooks up with another guy immediately after breaking up with me?
- Is she interested in another guy already?

Prior to her saying that you and her have to “talk,” you were probably feeling relaxed, happy and content about the fact that you have a girlfriend, she loves you and she will be yours for life.

Yet now, you’re probably feeling as the rug has been pulled out from under your feet. You might not be able to eat or sleep properly because you’re worried about losing her.

Don’t worry! you can fix this.

Even though your relationship looks like it’s in serious trouble at the moment, there are many things you can do immediately to make your girlfriend feel differently about you. You don’t have to wait for her to break up with you and you don’t have to wait until it’s too late.

When you make her feel differently about you and get her to see you in a new light, and you can do that starting right now, she will automatically begin to reconsider her feelings for you.

Making her feel differently about essentially comes down to making her feel attracted to you and respectful of you as a man once again.

For example: To make her feel respectful towards you, she’s going to need to see that you’re pushing forward in life towards your biggest goals, ambitions and dreams, rather than hiding behind the safety of being in a relationship with her.

In terms of making her feel attracted to you, a lot of that will come down to your ability to make her feel girly and feminine around you, rather than feeling neutral or worse, feeling like the more masculine/dominant one in the relationship.

It's up to you to begin interacting with her in ways that trigger her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

You cannot expect her to want to stay in a relationship merely because you love her and care about her; you have to let her experience the types of emotions that she needs to feel when in a relationship.

Don't expect her to explain all this to you either, because

Women Usually Don't Say What They Really Mean When it Comes to Dating and Relationships

If you have the talk with your girlfriend, she's probably not going to tell you what's really bothering her about the relationship.

She's more likely to use one of those clichéd statements like, I don't feel the same way about you anymore, or I need some space to figure out what I really want in my life, or It's not you, it's me, rather than actually come out and tell you what is really bothering her.

Why? Women don't want to give you all the real, deeper reasons why they are unhappy in the relationship because they don't want to teach you how to be a man.

A woman wants her boyfriend to know how to be a man without her having to teach him. If she has to mother him and show him how to be the kind of man she really needs, her respect and attraction for him will diminish and she will feel turned off by him at a deep level.

This is why guys who are able to get their girlfriend to feel differently about them, start by identifying the real reasons for her unhappiness in the relationship.

Right now you might not know what these reasons are, but consider the following

1. Have you been taking her for granted?

Most guys would not intentionally do things to make their girlfriend (or fiancée or wife) feel neglected, unloved or unappreciated. Yet, life sometimes has a way of getting in the way and some guys end up taking their woman for granted without even noticing that they're doing it.

Taking your girlfriend for granted is not just about getting her do all the housework or all the shopping by herself. Often, it's simply failing to appreciate the efforts that she makes to look good for you.

It can also come down to canceling your plans with her at the last minute. Yes, plans do change, but if you've been canceling your plans with your girlfriend regularly by using the We can do something together another time, excuse, it's only natural that she will begin feeling that she's taking second place in your life.

To keep a woman happy to be in a relationship with you, it is vital that you continue to deepen the love, respect and attraction between you, rather than taking it for granted and thinking that she won't ever leave you.

In the past, a woman would stay with one man for life because she had to save her virginity for marriage and then respect the vows she made on her wedding day.

In today's world, a woman can leave whenever she wants. If a guy wants a woman to stay with him for life, he has to be able to guide her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction, rather than just expecting that she will stick around because things felt good at the start.

2. Have you been letting her wear the pants in the relationship?

Some guys believe that the only way to keep a woman happy in a relationship is to let her "wear the pants" and follow her lead. Yet, although a woman might enjoy having power over a guy for a while, she will eventually lose respect for him because of it and when that happens, she will lose touch with her feelings of attraction for him.

You will often hear women on TV saying that today's woman is independent and doesn't need a man to lead and tell her what to do. This can be confusing for guys who aren't experienced enough with women to know that what women say and what they actually do are often two completely different things (e.g. a woman says she wants a nice guy and then hooks up with a bad boy).

Confused guys often end up suppressing their masculinity in a relationship (i.e. they let her wear the pants, they try hard to impress her and get her approval, etc) because they assume this is what their woman wants.

In reality, regardless of how intelligent, strong and independent a woman is, the truth is that she still wants her man to be a man.

She doesn't want to feel that she has to "mother" a guy and lead him through the steps of a relationship. A woman wants a guy to be mentally and emotionally stronger than her so she can relax and be the feminine woman she wants to be.

If you force your girlfriend to take on your natural, masculine role in the relationship, she won't feel like a real woman and she will not enjoy being around you.

By you "wearing the pants," it doesn't mean that you have to lead everything, decide on everything and boss her around. Instead, it means that you simply need to take on the role of being the more emotionally strong one and lead the way to a better life for you and her.

You can also get her to take responsibility of certain tasks, make decisions at times and lead the way, but you still have to be the one who she can rely on when she breaks down and cries or gives up when things get tough.

Not all women will break down and cry or give up when things get tough, but if a woman is feminine (i.e. she is girly, emotional) and doesn't have the mindset, energy or attitude of a man, she won't like having to think, act and behave like a man.

If you make your girlfriend feel like she has to be a man like you, she will eventually become bored of being around you and will yearn to be with a man who can make her feel like a feminine woman again.

3. Have you become clingy, needy and insecure?

A common mistake that is often made by guys who say, "My girlfriend said we need to talk," is to become emotionally needy or insecure.

For example: A guy might begin to ask for regular reassurance that she still loves him and wants to be with him and will explain that without her, he is nothing and will essentially crumble and die. He might also try to make her feel guilty by suggesting that he would commit suicide if she left him.

“If you and I weren’t together, I don’t even know if I would want to live. How would you feel if you were responsible for me committing suicide? I will do it. You are everything to me, so what’s the point of living if I don’t have you?”

Any type of emotionally weakness (e.g. insecurity, neediness, anxiety, clinginess, social fears, etc) is a sexual turn off for women. A woman might put up with being with a guy who is emotionally weak for a while, but if he doesn’t fix his issues and improve himself, her lack of respect and attraction for him will cause her to begin falling out of love with him.

Women are attracted to the strength in men, not the weakness, so the more a guy tries to hold on to her in an emotionally weak way (e.g. begging, crying, pleading, etc), the more she pulls away and the less attractive he becomes in her eyes.

You Can Change How She Feels About You

It doesn’t matter if your girlfriend currently isn’t feeling what she really wants to feel in a relationship. What matters is that you now begin to trigger her feelings of respect and attraction for you. When you do that, she will naturally begin to get over her idea of breaking up with her.

Right now, she is in a relationship with you, so you have a perfect opportunity to fix things before it results in an actual break up. Getting her to reconsider her decision essentially comes down to you improving yourself to become more attractive to her that you have been lately.

There may be some things that your girlfriend finds attractive about you at the moment, but if she feels like she needs to talk, it means that the things that are turning her off are outweighing the things that are keeping her in the relationship with you.

If you want to change the negative feelings she has towards you right now, you have to make changes to your way of thinking and behavior that is turning her off.

For instance: If you’re being clingy and insecure, you need to become more confident in your sex appeal to her, your value to her and your ability to keep her happy in a relationship.

If you’ve been letting her wear the pants in the relationship, you have to start taking the lead and allowing her to relax into feeling like more of a feminine woman when she’s with you.

You don’t have to fully fix everything and become perfect to get her to feel differently about you, but you do need to start working on those emotional issues properly.

If you have begun to fix your issues and improve yourself emotionally as a man, she will be able to see it in your actions, body language and conversation style and she will feel a renewed sense of excitement about being in a relationship with you.

How to Know if Your Wife is Having an Affair

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

There are many signs that might suggest your wife is having an affair, but they don't always mean that she actually is doing it.

For example: A wife may have stopped wearing her wedding ring so often, or come home late from work without it on.

A husband might worry that it's a sign she is having an affair and is taking it off when she's with her new man.

Yet, in reality, it could just be that she is bored of wearing it, wants a better ring because she's embarrassed of her ring compared to those of her co-workers or is starting to outgrow the ring because she has put on some weight.

Of course, her not wearing the wedding ring could mean that she is having an affair.

However, it is how you REACT to these clues and signs that really matters. Watch this video for more info...

Some husbands ruin a perfectly good marriage simply by overreacting to potential signs or clues that their wife is cheating.

She may have been thinking about it, but hadn't done it.

Yet, because he is being so unattractive now (i.e. by being insecure, doubting his attractiveness to her, being emotionally sensitive), she is starting to really like the idea of potentially having an affair or asking for a separation or divorce.

So, make sure that you aren't creating a problem where none exists.

Signs That Could Mean She is Having an Affair

Of course, sometimes a wife is having an affair, so a husband does have cause to be worried.

What should he do before confronting her?

Look for more clues, but be calm and don't jump to conclusions.

Some obvious clues, which may just be innocent and might not mean that she is having an affair, include:

- Suddenly spending a lot more time trying to look pretty, but not actually caring what you think. Sometimes, a faithful wife will do this to regain some power in the relationship, make you chase her a little or to test your confidence in your attractiveness to her. It doesn't always mean that she is having an affair.
- Regularly going out for a girl's night out with single girlfriends from work and coming home very late, smelling of alcohol and not ever being in the mood for sex with you. While she may not have cheated yet, if she keeps doing that, she most likely will cheat. There's only so many confident, charming guys that she can resist before alcohol finally causes her to make a silly mistake.
- Spending a lot of time texting on her phone, but always making sure that you are unable to see who she is texting or what she is writing. Sometimes a faithful wife will do this because her husband has a habit of being too nosey or controlling. She might also do it to regain some power in the relationship or make him chase her a little more. However, in some cases, it means she is flirting with a guy and is either having an affair or heading in that direction.

- Suddenly putting a pin lock on her phone to keep you out, even though you haven't accused her of anything and have simply attempted to have a quick look at her messages because you think something is up. A faithful wife might react in this way to punish her husband for not trusting her. It doesn't always mean she is having an affair, but it could be a sign.
- Her being unable to maintain eye contact with you when you ask her why she is home late, how the girl's night out went or why she is putting so much effort into her appearance all of a sudden. At this point, she might not have cheated, but body language like that usually indicates that she is no longer in love with you or feeling like she has to be totally faithful and committed to you.

If you suspect that your wife loves you as a person, but is no longer in love with you, I recommend that you fix that problem ASAP.

When a woman isn't in love anymore, she starts to feel less committed to a relationship or marriage.

If another guy comes along and creates a strong feeling of attraction and new love inside of her, while you keep turning her off at home (e.g. by being insecure, being too neutral around her), she will start to feel drawn to him and may decide to go ahead with an affair.

Why Have You Started to Wonder if Your Wife is Having an Affair?

[image: Find out if your wife is having an affair]

If you are a man who looking for information on how to know if your wife is having an affair, an important question that needs to be answered first is, why are you looking for this info?

What has happened to raise your suspicions and make you feel worried that she might be sleeping with another man? What has happened to make you feel as though your wife might now be having an affair?

Chances are high that you're worried she might be having an affair because you have been experiencing troubles in your relationship that you just can't seem to fix (e.g. she has lost interest in sex, is no longer affectionate, doesn't say "I love you" anymore, seems to be more interested in her phone than you).

Sometimes those suspicions and worries are valid, but you have to very careful not to turn her off even further than she is already.

In many cases, a husband will actually lead his wife to cheat because of how badly he reacts to her lack of affection, desire to look better or overly keen interest in her smartphone.

Mistakes to Avoid

How to know if your wife is having an affair is one of those queries in Google that points to you directly to evidence to suggest that she is, but jumping to conclusions without any real evidence is a mistake that must be avoided.

If something about her behavior has raised your suspicions and sparked an idea in your mind that she might be having an affair, then it's quite possible that your subsequent behavior may make things worse between you and her.

For example: Let's say your wife has started to go out with her friends more frequently than before. Until recently, she met up with her girlfriends a couple of times per month, but lately she's been organizing outings a couple of times a week.

Instead of finding your own things to do when your wife is away, you may have been sitting at home on your own feeling left out and your mind has started to go into overdrive as a result.

You're now questioning whether she might be having an affair because after hanging out with her friends, she always says that she's too tired for sex. Your suspicions and insecure feelings cause you to seek regular reassurance from her that she still loves you and isn't thinking of having an affair or having one already.

Unfortunately, approaching her in an insecure way and asking her about or accusing her of having an affair will only create more problems between you.

If you and your wife are able to talk about serious issues like that in an easy-going, light-hearted way and are able to have a laugh about it, then it won't be a problem. However, if the communication between you is more serious and insecure, then expressing your fears about her potential infidelity isn't going to go down too well.

If she isn't having an affair, but you are convinced that she is and you become needy, insecure and over-protective as a result, she is going to lose touch with her feelings of respect and attraction for you.

She will then begin to feel suffocated by your neediness, causing her to look for more opportunities to do her own thing out with the relationship...and so a vicious cycle begins.

Who or What is to Blame For the Current State of Your Marriage?

If you suspect that your wife really is having an affair, then something about your attitude or behavior in the marriage may have caused her to lose respect for you, lose attraction for you and begin to fall out of love with you as a consequence.

Of course, it may not be all your fault. If she is having an affair, it could also mean that she is a woman of bad character and despite saying, "I do" on your wedding day, she always knew in the back of her mind that she would be open to having an affair or divorcing you if she was no longer happy.

Yet, if your wife is the type of woman who really believes in marriage and has been loyal to you all the way, then her desire to have an affair may come down to your lack of ability to deepen her love, respect and attraction for you over time.

Most guys don't get taught how to create and maintain the ideal relationship dynamic with a woman and simply try to guess their way through it. In the past, this was absolutely fine because a woman had to stay with a man for life.

Back in 1900 for example, divorce was still taboo (the divorce rate was less than 10% across the developed world) and even if a wife was unhappy, she had to stick by her promise of "Till death do us part."

[image: Marriage in the old days]

Not anymore.

[image: Modern women]

In today's world, a woman can get up and leave if she wants to. The society around her will support her and even encourage her actions if she is leaving an unhappy marriage with a man who is unable to make her feel the way that she really wants to feel.

For example: A lot of men unknowingly cause their wife to lose respect and attraction for them by slipping into the false belief that women are happier in a relationship when they're put in the position of wearing the pants.

This is a mistake on many levels, but not least because it leads to a wife seeing her husband as a weak, wimpy and sexually unattractive man.

[image: Sucking up to her by doing housework won't last]

Women are naturally attracted to men with alpha male qualities.

Alpha males are confident, masculine men who are natural leaders in life and in a relationship.

Regardless of how intelligent or successful a woman is with her career, she will almost always prefer to be with a man who takes on the role as the more dominant one in the relationship.

That doesn't mean she wants to be bossed around, corrected and control, but instead that she wants to relax into the feminine role.

In other words, she wants to be your woman and to be able to look up to you as her man.

She wants you to be the strong one in the relationship, rather than making her feel like she needs to support you emotionally and lift you up.

She wants you to be the pillar of strength in her world and the man that she feels excited and proud to be in love with.

If a wife feels her husband is taking a back seat and putting her into the driving seat of the marriage, it doesn't make her feel happy.

She might like the feeling of control for a while and get off on bossing her husband around, but she will eventually grow tired of it because it will cause her to think less like a feminine woman and more like a logical, masculine man.

When the relationship dynamic makes a woman feel less feminine, the all-important sexual dynamic that is needed to keep a relationship on track is knocked out of balance.

To keep the sexual spark alive, there needs to be a clear masculine/feminine dynamic.

Being 50/50 is being neutral and doesn't create a sexual charge.

Likewise, putting your wife in charge and asking her to be the strong, masculine one will ruin her feelings of sexual desire for you when she notices that she is stronger than you.

When this happens in a marriage, a wife may begin to notice the exciting affairs that other women in TV sitcoms are having and feel attracted to how masculine the men that they have affairs with always seem to be.

If you've ever seen an affair play out in a TV drama show, the man will always make the woman feel like a feminine, sexy woman. This is not a coincidence.

Additionally, if a woman feels like something is missing in her romantic life and she hears her work colleagues or friends discussing their sexy affairs, she may become open to the idea of straying and looking for the excitement of an affair herself.

She might have started out as a trustworthy, loyal wife who was committed to the idea of only being with you for life, but if you've been taking her love, respect and attraction for granted, she may have become open to exploring new ways of feeling happy.

Can You Fix the Troubles in Your Marriage Before it's Too Late?

Yes.

The good news is that human emotions are not fixed in a permanent state.

If your wife is currently feeling unsatisfied by the way that you make her feel, it doesn't mean that you can't change that.

When you learn how to bring the qualities that first attracted your wife to you back to the forefront and then focus on creating the ideal relationship dynamic between you, then you have a great chance of fixing the troubles that you're having in your marriage.

Do you know how to trigger your wife's feelings of respect and attraction for you? Do you know how a woman's attraction for a man really works?

You were obviously able to attract your wife into a relationship and then marriage, but have you lost touch your ability to make her feel attracted?

To keep a relationship or marriage together, a man has to be able to keep his woman's feelings alive. You can't just expect her to stick around, even though she's not feeling what she wants to feel in a relationship.

Unfortunately, the world isn't the same as it was 100 years ago, when it was shameful to get divorced.

These days, we men need to be able to keep a marriage together, rather than just taking our woman for granted and doing whatever we want.

So, if you feel as though you haven't yet lost your wife to another man, you should really think about switching your focus from, "How to know if your wife is having an affair" to "How to be the type of man that a woman feels more attracted to, respectful of and in love with over time."

When you have what it takes to rekindle the deep love, respect and attraction that she felt for you when you got married, you will have what it takes to get your marriage back on track.

All of a sudden, other men won't seem so appealing to her and she will begin to reconnect with her original feelings of love for you.

Except this time, it will be much more meaningful and exciting because she will be falling in love with you all over again.

She will feel happy and proud of her decision to marry you because, unlike many of her friends who are unhappy with their husband, she has a husband that she is more in love with than ever.

My Girlfriend's Ex Boyfriend Wants Her Back

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you are making your girlfriend feel more attraction, respect and love than her ex-boyfriend did, then you've got nothing to worry about.

However, if he using an ex back system like the one I provide here at The Modern Man, you need to careful because he will most-likely be making her feel a lot of respect and attraction for him and making her question whether or not she should be with you.

Regardless of how good your relationship is right now with your girlfriend, she can instantly begin to feel turned off by you if she notices that you feel threatened by her ex-boyfriend.

Watch this video for an example of how insecurity about your attractiveness to her can ruin your relationship...

What your girlfriend will want to see is that, no matter what he says or what she does, you always maintain confidence in yourself and know that you're a better option than him.

She also wants to feel like if she did get back with her ex boyfriend, you would easily be able to attract another women like her or a woman who is even more beautiful than her.

If your girlfriend gets the sense that you feel insecure because you think her ex-boyfriend is more attractive to her than you are, it will automatically begin to make him more attractive in her eyes. Why?

It will create a contrast between you and him. He will seem confident and you will be coming across as insecure. Since women are attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness, your girlfriend will automatically begin to feel turned off by you.

[image: Is she going to leave you for her ex-boyfriend?]

Of course, none of this would be happening to you if you were your girlfriend's first love, but, if you're saying, "My girlfriend's ex boyfriend wants her back," then she's clearly had some previous experience with other guys.

Inevitably, your girlfriend has love and relationship baggage, which right now is coming back to haunt you.

So, a question to ask and answer here is: Should you be at all worried that your girlfriend's ex boyfriend wants her back?

It depends...

Is Your Girlfriend Giving You Reasons to Doubt Her Full Commitment to You?

[image: Are you going to cheat on me with your ex boyfriend?]

Your girlfriend's behavior will let you know whether she's interested in taking her ex boyfriend up on his offer for a reconciliation, or whether the idea of being with him makes her cringe. For example: He might be texting her or trying to chat to her online.

If your girlfriend seems upset about this and tells you, â€œDamn! Itâ€™s my ex again! Heâ€™s really driving me crazy...I wish heâ€™d just get the message and leave me alone!â€ while she deletes his message, sheâ€™s clearly letting you know by her conversation, actions and body language that sheâ€™s not even remotely interested in getting back with him.

If she runs into him when youâ€™re out together and she gets aggravated and says something like, â€œDamn! Thereâ€™s my ex again. Can we leave?â€ then it means that is probably over him and is now focused on being in a relationship with you.

On the other hand, if sheâ€™s being secretive about his messages, or if you detect some underlying sexual tension between them when they meet unexpectedly, then you may have cause for concern.

If you ask her something like, â€œSo, whatâ€™s really going on between you and your ex?â€ or â€œSo your ex boyfriend wants you back, how do you feel about it?â€ and she seems uncomfortable and answers vaguely, â€œItâ€™s complicated,â€ or â€œIâ€™m just not sure how I feel about him right now,â€ then she clearly hasnâ€™t resolved her issues with him.

If this is the case, it might be a good idea for you to step back and let her figure out who she really wants to be with.

This might mean that you will choose to cut your losses and move on and find yourself another, better girlfriend than her who is emotionally ready to commit fully to you.

Alternatively, you might choose to move on and date other women and wait until she comes crawling back to you with an apology.

However, what you must not do is make any of the following mistakes that guys who find themselves saying, â€œMy girlfriendâ€™s ex boyfriend wants her back,â€ usually tend to make.

My Girlfriend's Ex Boyfriend Wants Her Back: 3 Mistakes to Avoid Making

It's not a nice feeling to know that your girlfriend might be interested in opening herself up sexually to her ex-boyfriend. Just the thought of her having sex with her ex probably gets you feeling nauseous, angry or panicked.

However, regardless of how much it might hurt you to think that she might be considering him over you, it's important that you don'tâ€

1. Become clingy and needy.

[image: My girlfriend has been contacted by her ex boyfriend]

Sometimes, when a guy feels like his girlfriend is losing interest and opening herself up to the idea of being with another guy (or guys), he will react by becoming clingy and needy.

For example, he might:

- Constantly call or text her.
- Regularly need her to reassure him that she loves him and will pick him over her ex.
- Avoid hanging out with his friends or working on his life goals just so he can be available to her 24/7.
- Feel sad, lonely or lost without her and need her constant reassurance that she loves him and wants him, in order to feel good about himself.

A guy like this might believe that all heâs doing is lavishing his woman with the attention, love and adoration that she deserves; after all, what better way to show her that heâs a better guy than her ex, right?

Yet, this type of behavior often has the opposite effect and results in turning the woman off both him and the relationship.

Generally speaking, a woman wants to be in a relationship with a man who makes her feel lucky to be with him, rather than feeling like sheâs doing him a favor by being his girlfriend.

If your girlfriend is being pursued by her ex boyfriend, being clingy and needy around her will only make him look more appealing to her.

Rather than thinking, âWow, Iâm so lucky to have such a wonderful boyfriend. I would never go back to my ex because he could never give me this type of attention,â she may instead begin to think, âRight now, any other guy would be a better option than feeling suffocated like this by my boyfriend. Maybe my ex isnât that bad after all...maybe I should meet up with him.â

2. Pick a fight with her ex boyfriend.

Yes, itâs not cool when your girlfriendâs ex boyfriend doesnât get the message that sheâs with you now, but thatâs his problem not yours.

Again, unless your girlfriend is giving you cause to doubt her loyalty to you (in which case, you should just dump her and walk away if she doesn't change), picking a fight and trying to beat up her ex boyfriend up for wanting her back will only make you look childish, immature and insecure.

Getting into a fistfight to defend your woman might seem like the romantic thing to do; after all, isnât that what they do in the movies, TV shows and music videos? Yet, in real life, picking a fight with her ex will only make your girlfriend question her decision to be with you.

She wonât necessarily pick her ex over you because you got into a fight with him, but she may begin to think that you are insecure about your attractiveness and value to her.

She may also begin to worry that you are the type of guy who canât control his emotions when threatened, so she will wonder if you would ever get violent with her too.

You simply have to realize that her ex-boyfriend is nothing compared to you. You are better than him and if she doesn't realize that, you need to dump her.

If you are afraid to dump her because you're worried that you won't be able to get another hot girlfriend, then you will most-likely fall into the trap of being emotionally insecure during this time, which will turn her off and may cause her to want her ex back.

3. Try to compete with her ex boyfriend.

Youâre in, heâs out. Your girlfriend picked you and sheâs with you now.

You've got to see it that way and believe in yourself, rather than thinking that you now have to compete with him.

Badmouthing your girlfriendâs ex boyfriend by giving her a long list of all his faults, or telling her how much better looking, muscular, rich, smart or good to her you are, only makes you look insecure.

Your girlfriend already knows all these things about both him and you. Just as thereâs a lot of good reasons why she broke up with him, there are also a lot of good reasons why she is with you. Right now, she has picked you. She likes you and wants to be with you, so embrace that and don't worry about her ex.

Women are very good at reading a guy's body language to determine whether or not he feels insecure. If you think that your girlfriend's ex boyfriend is better than you, it will come across in your body language, vibe and conversation style and your girlfriend will pick up on it.

She will then instinctively feel more attracted to him because he will appear more confident and masculine in the way he thinks, feels and behaves. All women are more attracted to men who believe in themselves and don't see other men as being competition to them, so make sure that you hold onto the belief that you are better than him.

4. Accuse her of cheating or wanting her ex boyfriend back.

Most people have a past, which is why it would be naïve of you to assume that your girlfriend never had feelings for another guy before she met you.

Yes, she may have loved him and enjoyed being with him, but he is her ex and you are her new boyfriend. You need to believe in yourself and your attractiveness to her, otherwise her ex will become a more appealing option than you.

Just because your girlfriend's ex boyfriend wants her back, that's not her problem.

Even if she has some unfinished business with him (like she's still collecting all her stuff from his place, etc.), and she has to meet up with him from time to time, or chat to him online, via text or on the phone, it's not a sign that she's cheating on you with him, or an indication that she wants him back.

Some insecure guys will regularly check their girlfriend's Facebook, LinkedIn, Whatsapp, Twitter, Instagram or other social media pages to see how often she's communicating with her ex. They might also read her text messages while she's not looking.

A guy like that may then question her about certain posts or text messages, especially if, in his eyes, they sound suspicious. If he's feeling especially insecure, he might even accuse her of being unfaithful or of wanting to get back with her ex.

However, it's understandable that when you're saying, My girlfriend's ex boyfriend wants her back, being suspicious of your girlfriend's loyalty and intentions might feel like the natural, normal thing to do.

Yet, you must understand that doing so is the quickest way to lose her respect and attraction for you as a man.

It's fine to feel a bit protective over your woman and to show her that you care. However, if you're too suspicious and protective because you're afraid she'll go back to her ex boyfriend, it will only cause her to lose respect and attraction for you.

You have to ensure that she can naturally maintain her positive perception of you, and that her feelings of respect and attraction for you continue to grow over time.

If you chip away at that respect and attraction by being insecure, she will naturally begin to look at her ex (and even other men) in a more positive light and she will begin to wonder why she is with you.

If you want your relationship to work, you have to give her your full trust knowing that she may break that trust. If she breaks your trust, then that is her problem.

You have to know that you're a great guy and that she is lucky to be with you. Fearlessly give her your love and trust and if she decides to stomp all over that, it is her loss.

She will only want to leave you though if you are making her lose respect and attraction for you. Right now, you have a perfect opportunity to improve her feelings of respect and attraction for you by remaining confident in yourself and your attractiveness to her.

Deepen the respect and attraction she feels for you by showing her that you don't feel threatened by her ex-boyfriend and you know that you're a better option than he is.

Even if you secretly think that he might be a better option than you, it's important that you don't let your girlfriend pick up on that. Let her see that you believe in yourself and your attractiveness to her.

Make Your Girlfriend Feel Lucky to Have Picked You

[image: Make her feel lucky to be your girlfriend]

No matter what your girlfriend's ex boyfriend says or does, you need to remain relaxed and easy-going. It's not a competition between you and him because your girlfriend has already picked you.

When your girlfriend can see that you aren't worried that she might have some lingering feelings for him and are completely confident about your place and value in her life, it will make her feel a whole lot of respect and attraction for you.

Rather than sit around doubting yourself by saying, "My girlfriend's ex boyfriend wants her back," realize that you are really better than him.

Once you adopt this belief, you will have nothing to worry about because you will naturally be thinking, behaving and acting in a way that deepens your girlfriend's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

My Girlfriend Thinks We're Moving Too Fast

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

There are several reasons why your girlfriend will tell you that you're moving too fast.

Sometimes, this can happen if she has just come out of a long relationship and is feeling unsure about getting involved with someone else so soon after her break up.

Other times, it could be because the relationship is really new and you seem to already be thinking about settling down with her.

[image: Why are you acting like this? I love you. Don't you feel the same way?]

In other words, there is no challenge, no thrill of the chase and nothing for her to aim for with you.

You are smitten about her and will do anything to hopefully get her feel the same way about you, even though she isn't treating you well or respecting you as her boyfriend.

If you have been making your girlfriend feel like she doesn't have to do anything to impress you and can even treat you badly and you'll still be 100% keen on her, then she's going to start to feel turned off by the lack of challenge.

She's going to feel like she has too much power over you and as a result, it just won't be exciting to her.

Women aren't don't remain madly in love with guys who hand over their balls to a woman and hope that she is nice to them.

Women remain madly in love with men who remain in the position of power, while also being a good man to her.

By the way...

Preferring a guy who is more of a challenge isn't about her wanting to waste time with "silly mind games" that she should just grow out of.

Instead, it's about knowing that her man respects himself enough to not allow her to treat him badly and continue to get away with it.

For example: If a woman is always being demanding, rude and selfish and her guy is being increasingly nicer, more generous and more submissive around her, she isn't going to respect him.

Instinctively, she is going to be turned off by his weakness because he can't even handle her, so how is going to handle challenging people out there in his daily life?

You've got to remember that a woman's attraction for you is directly wired to her survival instincts.

She wants to be able to feel safe with her man, knowing that he is a good man who also knows how to get her and other people to respect him, without having to get into arguments or fights.

A man who has confidence in himself and also has the social intelligence to be able to handle himself around any type of person.

That is what really makes a woman feel safe.

So, if you're putting up with your girlfriend's bad treatment of you and being even nicer to her and sucking up to her, she isn't going to be feeling a lot of attraction and love for you.

She will feel turned off and will say things like, "I think we're moving too fast" because she can see that you are totally in love with her, while she is secretly feeling turned off by you.

By the way...

Women know that most of the guys who are willing to put up with a woman's bad behavior and who don't require the woman to impress them in any way, are the type of guys who really don't know how to attract other beautiful women.

Guys like that rely on getting lucky, being a woman's friend and trying hard to get a chance with her or sucking up to a woman to get a chance.

They don't actually know how to actively attract beautiful women, so they can have their choice.

So, a guy like that will lock onto pretty much any good looking woman who shows him interest and gives him a chance.

He will then try his hardest to impress her and make her happy, even if that means putting up with her bad treatment of him, her lack of affection or her selfish attitude.

Women hate that.

It's not a turn on at all.

So, when a woman gets the feeling that she's made a mistake by allowing her boyfriend to "get lucky" by getting a chance to be with her, she will then begin to want to slow things down.

It might have felt good for her at the start or when you first kissed, but if your girlfriend is getting the sense that you would struggle to attract other women if she dumped you, then she's going to begin saying things like, "This relationship is moving too fast. I think we should slow it down or spend less time together."

As you will discover from the video above, you can turn things around with your girlfriend if you can start approaching her and the relationship correctly from now on.

Where Guys Go Wrong

If you are now in the position where you're saying, "My girlfriend thinks we're moving too fast," you might be making one or more of these classic mistakes that are turning her off and pushing her away...

1. Not creating enough attraction.

[image: I don't know if I want this as much as you do]

As a guy, you have to actively make a woman feel attracted to you when you interact with her. You can't expect that because you feel attracted to her, she will magically feel the same way about you.

You've got to actively turn her on by what you say and do when you're with her in person, when you're talking to her on the phone and when she checks you out on social media.

A big mistake that guys who don't know how to make women feel sexually attracted to them make, is to behave like a good friend to her, even though they are interested in being in a sexual relationship with her.

They give off the "friend" vibe by always being available to her and doing favors for her like fixing things around her house for free, helping her out with money, running all her errands for her, etc. Then, out of the blue, they suddenly try to hold her hand, kiss her or move to sex.

If a woman doesn't feel attracted to a guy sexually, she will think, What is this guy doing? Why is he trying to kiss me? How do I let him down without hurting his feelings?

If she is particularly comfortable having him around to do all those nice things he's been doing for her, she may even say to him, I think we're moving too fast. In this way, she gives him enough hope to keep him around, but puts the brakes on his advances.

Another example is a guy who lacks confidence and has low self-esteem, but who gets lucky with a woman he really likes, and she agrees to go out with him.

Yet, over time, he allows his insecurities to cause him to doubt himself, which she instinctively begins to pick up on. She will sense that he doesn't feel as though he is good enough to be with her and she will begin to lose respect and attraction for him as a man.

Why? Women are attracted to the strength in men and repelled by weakness.

They don't want to feel that they're doing you a favor by being with you; they want to feel lucky to be with you.

If you're not making your girlfriend feel intense attraction for you, and if you're not making her feel like she's lucky to have you, she will naturally not feel respect and attraction for you.

So, although she may not fully want to dump you because you're convenient for her, she WILL tell you that you're moving too fast. However, if she meets a guy who can spark intense feelings of sexual attraction in her, she will drop you like a hot potato to be with him.

2. Sharing his deep feelings for her too soon.

Some guys make the mistake of revealing their feelings too soon. For example, a guy might have only been on a few dates with a woman and they may have only held hands, or briefly kissed goodnight, when he tells her, I'm CRAZY about you! You're the one for me! I really think we're meant to be together!

Quite understandably, if a guy reveals his feelings to a woman before they have sex, it almost always takes away the romance, excitement, suspense and anticipation that she hopes to experience with him.

The fact is, if a woman is attractive, she knows that there are numerous men who are willing to have sex with her and be in a relationship with her.

If you're saying, My girlfriend thinks we're moving too fast, you need to understand that you're not the only guy who is interested in her, and she doesn't really care that you have feelings for her.

Essentially, if you're not making her feel the way she wants to feel when she's with you, she will look for any excuse to get you to back off.

You might think that it's wrong to hide your feelings from her, you might even be saying, Why is it wrong to tell her how I feel? Why should I play games with her? I thought women WANT men to be honest about their feelings.

However, creating and maintaining the right dynamic when in a relationship with a woman is very important, and if she doesn't feel respect and attraction for you, she will not be interested in being in a relationship with you.

3. Being a needy, insecure, jealous boyfriend.

[image: Being a needy, jealous or insecure boyfriend]

Sometimes guys make the mistake of trying to become the most important thing in their girlfriend's life.

This isn't so much about just being important to her, but rather about wanting her to give up other things that are important to her, like her hobbies, her friends, ambitions and dreams, and only be with him.

They become clingy, over protective, jealous and smothering, and they live in fear of losing their woman.

A guy like this constantly needs his girlfriend to reassure him that she loves them and wants to be with him, and he constantly says things like, "I really love you, you know that don't you?" or "You mean everything to me. I couldn't take it if we broke up."

[image: But, I love you and you mean everything to me]

That type of behavior is not attractive to a woman.

If your girlfriend perceives you as being mentally and emotionally weak she will be turned off by you and she will look for an "easy" way to get herself out of the relationship like telling you you're moving too fast.

4. Needing her more than she needs him.

Although some women (masculine women or insecure women), like it when their guy needs them more than they need him, most women don't.

Most women want to feel lucky to be with their guy. They want to feel that even though he could have any woman he wants, he chose her and this makes her feel attracted and turned on.

When a guy needs his girlfriend more than she needs him, it's usually because he is missing a key ingredient in his life; that being a life purpose that is more important to him than her.

When a guy makes a woman his life purpose or his reason for living, she feels turned off by that.

If she gets the feeling that his life would crumble if she wasn't in it, and that she's the one that is keeping him together and that, in a sense, she is what is supporting him and without her he'd be lost, she instinctively loses respect for him.

A woman doesn't want to feel like she is the one leading in the relationship and the one who has to be responsible for the future of the relationship, because being in that position makes her feel like less of a woman.

Make Her Feel Lucky to Have You

[image: Making her feel lucky to have you]

Even though right now you're saying, "My girlfriend thinks we're moving too fast," it doesn't mean that you can't turn things around and get her feeling lucky to be with you.

When you fully understand what is causing your girlfriend to tell you that you're moving too fast, you can make the changes she needs to make her feel that if she "plays games" with you, she will lose you and that will be a bad thing for her.

As a man, it's your responsibility to guide both yourself and your woman into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for each other.

You have to take the lead and be the man in the relationship so that she can relax into her feminine self and know that she can fully rely on you.

When you make her feel like this, she will feel lucky to have you and she will be the one who wants to move things faster.

My Wife Doesn't Want to Be Married Anymore

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your wife doesn't want to be married anymore, it's because she has stopped feeling the way she wants to feel in a marriage. She's not experiencing the type of feelings that warrant dedicating herself to one man for life.

You may have done a great job of making her feel a lot of love, respect and attraction for you in the early stages of the relationship, but if she's feeling like she wants out, then those elements are now missing from the marriage.

If your wife cares about the commitment she made to you on your wedding day and is concerned about how she might be perceived by family, friends and coworkers if she becomes a divorcee, she will be more open to you winning her love back.

When you make her feel how she wants to feel with you, she will naturally change her mind about not wanting to be married anymore.

You might have started out today thinking, "My wife doesn't want to be married anymore," and feeling like you were going to lose her forever, but it doesn't have to be that way.

Even if your wife is currently saying, "I don't love you anymore," or "My feelings for you are dead," what she really means is that, right NOW, she doesn't feel like she can be in love with you.

However, the love that you and her tapped into early on is still in the background; she's just not willing to connect with it right now. She doesn't feel like she wants to be in love with you right now, but that doesn't mean it's hopeless and you can't change the way that she feels about you.

When you make her feel enough respect and attraction for you, while also getting her to forgive you for your past mistakes, she will naturally become open to reconnecting with her loving feelings for you and will stop looking for a way to end the marriage.

So, how can you change how your wife feels right now and save your marriage?

Understand What is Causing Her to Say That She Doesn't Want to Be Married Anymore

Chances are that if a guy is saying, "My wife doesn't want to be married anymore," then the next words coming out of his mouth are, "I never saw it coming. It came like a bolt out of the blue."

Yet, the reality is, his wife probably gave him numerous signs and warnings before she reached breaking point it's just that he either never noticed them, or he chose to ignore them or write them off to her being "moody" or "just a typical woman."

Regardless of what is true for you and your wife, it's unlikely that she woke up one morning and, over a cup of coffee, thought to herself, "Hmmm! I don't want to be married" anymore.â

In fact, she likely went through a long and difficult process, while also trying to get through to you to let you know how unhappy she was feeling, before she came to that decision.

So, if youâre going to make her change her mind, you have to make sure youâre giving her what she really needs and not what you think she needs.

When you know the REAL reasons why your wife doesnât want to be married to you anymore, you can make the correct changes that will make her feel understood and happy to be interacting with you again.

On the other hand, if you donât know exactly what she really wants to change, you will most likely be making classic mistakes that will be turning her off and convincing her even more that she doesnât want to be married.

For example:

1. Donât ask her to explain why.

Right now youâre probably thinking, âWhy donât you want to be married anymore?â or âWhat have I done? What can I change to make you feel differently?â

However, actually coming out and asking your wife these questions is not a good idea (but donât stress if youâve already done it; itâs only natural to want some answers from her).

Why shouldnât you ask her to explain why?

A woman doesnât want to be a manâs teacher in life.

She doesnât want to teach him how to be the kind of man who makes her feel the way she really wants to feel.

If she teaches him once, he will probably want to be taught again later on and it will create an ongoing cycle of a mother-to-son type of relationship, where she essentially has to teach him how to grow up and be a man.

By asking your wife to explain âwhyâ she doesnât want to be married anymore, youâre essentially telling her youâre unable to work it out by yourself.

You're saying that you don't know how to be a man and unless she can teach you what to do, you are stuck, lost and hopeless.

This simply makes her feel disappointed in you as a man. She feels that you canât be the type of man she needs you to be if she doesnât teach you how to do it.

Most women donât want to play the role of being a guyâs teacher or mother in life, because taking on that role doesnât make them feel like they want to feel, (i.e. feminine, girly and like a real woman).

Your wife wants to feel like youâre leading in the relationship and that she can respect you and look up to you. She wants to feel feminine in your presence, not like she has to âwear the pantsâ and lead you.

2. Donât put yourself into a position where youâre apologizing and promising her anything just to please her.

It might feel like the right thing to do to constantly apologize to your wife and tell her that youâre sorry for everything youâve done to make her feel like she doesnât want to be married to you anymore, but believe it or not that's not what she wants to hear from you right now.

In fact, chances are you've already apologized many times before and you've probably even promised her you'll change every time she threatened to leave you. Yet, once the initial shock wore off and things went back to normal you forgot your promises.

The truth is, a rushed apology won't work, because her decision to stop being married is not based on superficial problems, but rather on deeper, more complex issues.

For example: She might need you to become more proactive in pursuing your goals and rising through the levels of life.

Maybe she needs you to stop being so jealous and insecure, or perhaps she feels that she's been taken for granted for too long.

Whatever the case, by apologizing without actually knowing what is causing her to want out, you're simply making her feel that, if she changes her mind, all she'll have to look forward to is a lot of the same old problems.

3. Don't cry, plead, beg or whine for another chance, even though you haven't yet changed.

Even when a break up is just between a boyfriend and his girlfriend of a few months, many guys become very emotional. So how much more justified is a guy to cry, beg, plead or whine when his wife tells him she doesn't want to be married anymore.

Sadly, this is the worst type of behavior he could be displaying at this time.

Although right now you might be in shock and feeling justified in your emotions, you must understand that women are extremely turned off by emotional weakness in a man.

Whenever a guy gets emotional in that manner, it's a major turn off for most women.

Besides, this is not what your wife wants.

She wants to know that you've understood what is causing her to feel the way she's feeling and for you to focus on fixing your issues and improving yourself.

Then, and ONLY then, will she feel comfortable with the idea of giving you another chance; NOT because you've begged or cried.

Love Doesn't Die

Right now it doesn't feel like you can make your wife change how she feels about you, and about being married to you.

Yet, if there ever was love between you and her, it is something that she can and almost certainly will reconnect with if you switch your focus to making her feel the type of respect and attraction that she wants to feel for you.

The key to that is you believing in yourself and believing that you can make her feel differently about you, and that you can get another chance with her.

Some men get their wife back immediately, while for others it takes a couple of days, weeks of months.

Maybe it won't happen overnight for you, but if you believe in yourself it will happen.

Just having that belief in yourself, and being a mentally and emotionally strong man who is dealing with his issues head on, will make you more attractive to your wife.

Why sit around saying, “My wife doesn’t want to be married anymore,” and feeling like all hope is lost, when you can see by what you’ve read here that you CAN make her change how she feels.

Not only that, but you really can make her fall even more in love with you than ever before.

To accomplish that, you need to switch your focus away from trying to be even nicer to her and instead focus on being attractive to her.

Let her see that you know where you’ve been going wrong and have already begun to change.

When she sees that, she will feel a renewed sense of respect for you as a man.

Then, as long as you are also focussing on getting the spark back between you and her, she will naturally begin to reconnect with her feelings of love and will then begin to reconsider her decision about leaving the marriage.

How to Stop Being Jealous in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

To stop being jealous in a relationship with a woman, you need to:

- Trust in her love and attraction for you.
- Believe that you are more than good enough.
- Know that by being jealous, you actually make other guys appear more attractive than you because women are turned off by emotional weakness.
- Know that you will never improve your woman's love, respect and attraction for you by being jealous.
- Make sure that your life is balanced and you have other important things to focus on, rather than putting too much focus on her.
- Understand that if she messes up the relationship by cheating on you with another guy, then it is her loss, but don't push her into doing that by turning her off with your emotional weakness.
- Understand that women want you to love them, want them and protect them, but they don't want to feel as though you would be lost without them.

You need to be able to trust in the fact that she is with you, rather than worrying that some other guy is going to attract her away from you.

You need to believe that you are more than good enough for her and then get on with becoming and being an even better man.

You should always be aiming to improve yourself as a man by reaching for your true potential and following through on your biggest goals, dreams and ambitions in life.

If you do that, your woman will naturally feel a deep respect, attraction and love for you.

You will be what women refer to as a real man.

By the way...

If you have been finding it very difficult to stop yourself from being jealous in a relationship, you might find it helpful to answer the following questions...

Do You Have Purpose in Life Outside of the Relationship?

[image: Has she become your main purpose in life?]

If you lack purpose in life, it's quite possible that the woman in your life has become the center of your universe.

She is a main part of your identity as a man and without her, you'd probably feel lost and alone.

Think about it for a moment...

If a guy has nothing very important that he's aiming for (i.e. his biggest goals and ambitions in life) and has no important, independent interests outside of the relationship, it stands to reason that he's going to feel jealous of anything his woman does that doesn't involve him, right?

She is his world, so if she is enjoying things without him or seeming like she is losing interest or drifting away from him in any way, it's going to send a shockwave through his emotional mind. In his mind, she is the most important thing in the world and without her life almost isn't worth living.

If his girlfriend (fiancée or wife) chooses to spend time with other people from time to time doing her own thing and following her own interests, he will naturally feel jealous and even protective of her.

Problems occur when his feelings of jealousy lead to blaming her for making him feel that way.

Yet, she's most likely not doing anything that she intended to make him feel jealous and his feelings are being caused by his own lack of purpose and balance in life. She is living a more emotionally balanced life, but he has everything stacked to one side.

Professor Richard Smith from the University of Kentucky says, "Jealousy arises when a relationship is infringed on by a rival who threatens to take away something that is in a sense rightfully yours."

If a guy who lacks purpose (i.e. he isn't going after his biggest goals and ambitions in life and is hiding behind the safety of a relationship with a woman), then he's going to see her independent interests as rivals that are threatening to take her away from him. Yet, the only real threat to the relationship is his emotional dependence on her.

Being joined at the hip and doing everything together does not make a relationship a healthy one.

A relationship can only grow and become stronger when the two individuals involved also have the opportunity to grow as people and to follow their own individual passions, as well as doing things together as part of a couple.

It doesn't mean that a couple has to spend a lot of time apart, but they do need to be able to feel free to do whatever they feel like, while also maintaining their commitment to each other.

A woman will remain committed to a guy who has the ability to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction. However, jealousy, clingy behavior, neediness and other emotional issues put a stop to a woman's capacity to fall deeper in love with her man.

Women are attracted to men who have purpose in life; men who have personal ambitions they want to achieve, and, most importantly, men who are passionate about achieving those ambitions.

You don't need to be passionately pursuing some lofty ideal (e.g. creating world peace, curing cancer, ending poverty, etc), but you do need to know where you're going in life and be passionate about getting there.

Regardless of what your biggest dreams are as a man, you need to show a woman that you're making progress towards achieving your true potential and realizing your biggest dreams.

The bottom line is that if you lack purpose and your world essentially revolves around her, then the feelings of jealousy that you will naturally experience as a result may eventually tear your relationship apart.

Are You Insecure About Your Attractiveness and Value to Women?

[image: Becoming insecure and developing a fear that she will cheat]

Psychological studies have shown that jealousy is likely to be a much bigger problem for guys who are insecure in themselves as men, especially when it comes to attracting women for sex and relationships.

In the same way that a guy who lacks purpose may view his woman's individual interests as rivals to their relationship, a guy who is insecure about his attractiveness to women may feel threatened anytime she is around other.

For example: If his girlfriend always goes to an exercise class or a hobby club on a Tuesday evening. He calls her when he knows that she should be back at home and she doesn't answer.

He then panics and his insecurity leads him to repeatedly calling her cell phone, texting her and leaving voicemail messages to check up on her whereabouts.

When she finally answers, she informs her boyfriend that she's just having an after class drink to celebrate someone's birthday. Yet, he can hear male voices in the background and he wants to know who is there.

The moment she mentions a guy's name, he feels a surge of jealousy and either tries to play it cool or asks more questions about the guy, such as, "What does he look like?" and "Have you met him before?"

He then spends the rest of the evening sitting alone dwelling on whether she might be cheating on him. He imagines her getting drunk and being hit on by guys who are more attractive than him and he begins to feel angry at her for doing this to him.

Yet, she isn't doing it. His insecurity is causing him to feel that way.

If he was confident in his attractiveness and value to his girlfriend and other women, he wouldn't be worried about it.

He would know that the majority of guys she meets would pale in comparison to him and if she did get drunk and cheat on him, it would be her loss because many other women would love to take her place as his girlfriend.

Being insecure about your attractiveness and value to your woman will never help you.

It's always better to believe that you are more than good enough for her and do not question that in your mind. Just believe it and live it.

Accusing your girlfriend or being interested in other guys or seeking her constant reassurance that she loves you will not make your feelings of jealousy go away. Instead, it is more likely to lead you into a vicious cycle of neediness and even more jealous behavior as a result.

Insecurity in a man is not attractive to women and behaving this way will become a complete turn off to your woman.

Successful relationships are built on trust and even though you might feel worried to trust her, you simply have to.

If you don't give her your trust and let her take care of it, your insecurity will eat away at her respect and attraction for you.

After a while, she will fall out of love with you and may end up dumping you or cheating on you.

Stopping the Jealousy

[image: Stopping the jealousy]

The answer to the question of how to stop being jealous in a relationship is to become and be a confident, secure man who knows who he is and where he's going in life with or without her.

You have to know that you would be happy with or without her because you have the ability to easily attract other women and you also have purpose in life that is extremely important to you.

You are a man who is rising through the levels of life to reach your true potential.

She is simply your beautiful woman who you love, respect and want in your life.

Don't base your entire sense of identity and purpose in life on her.

Make her a big part of your life, but approach life in a way where you would be happy with or without her.

This doesn't mean that you should ever say to her, "Hey, I don't need you to be happy" because that would be rude and would make her feel unappreciated.

Instead, you simply have to love her, respect her and be good to her, while also following through on your biggest goals, dreams and ambitions in life.

Don't make her your #1 ambition or goal in life.

Women don't want that from a man.

A woman wants a man who stands up and rises up through the levels of his true potential as a man, with or without her support.

If you need her to be constantly supporting you and encouraging you along, she will resent you for it.

A woman wants a man who is strong with or without her support and reassurance.

Ironically, when you do that, she actually gives you her support and reassurance.

She becomes a better girlfriend or wife and always wants to show you and tell you how much she loves you, supports you and feels happy to be with you.

My Girlfriend Wants to Leave Me

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend wants to leave you, it means that she's no longer feeling enough love, respect and attraction for you to warrant being in a relationship.

She might like you as a person or care about your feelings, but she just isn't able to feel what she wants to feel when in a relationship.

The Shock of Potentially Losing Your Girlfriend

[image: Why does my girlfriend want to leave me?]

If you're saying, My girlfriend wants to leave me, chances are high that you're feeling shocked, surprised and hurt right now.

You may even be saying to yourself, I don't understand what happened. I thought we were doing fine. Yes, we had our ups and downs, but isn't that how all relationships are? I just never saw it coming; this is just so sudden. Why can't she just give it another chance?

The first thing you have to understand is that a woman doesn't just suddenly decide she wants to leave you. She goes through a long process and will first give you plenty of warnings (whether verbally, or by the way she behaves), to let you know how unhappy she is.

If you miss these warnings, you will find yourself saying, My girlfriend wants to leave me, and wondering what went wrong and how she could have fallen out of love with you so easily.

Secondly, just because your girlfriend is saying she wants to leave you right now, it's not something that has to actually happen. When you change your thinking, communication style and behavior and make her feel heard and understood, she will naturally open up to the idea of staying with you.

After all...love doesn't die. Right now your girlfriend may not want to connect with the love she felt for you, but it's still there in the background and you can change how she feels. Love always remains alive, but it sometimes gets pushed into the background because superficial feelings (e.g. resentment, frustration, confusion) make it difficult to connect with it.

One of the most important things that you need to do to get her to reconnect with her feelings of love for you, is to begin to trigger her feelings of respect and attraction for you as a man.

If you don't do that, then you will want to stay with her, but she just won't be interested because the feelings won't be mutual...

You've got to make sure that from now on, you are actively making her have feelings for you again. That is what matters the most to her. She isn't really concerned about your feelings right now.

She is thinking of leaving you, so she has reached a point where she thinks that you just won't ever understand how to make her have feelings for you again.

Her Secret Reasons For Leaving You

[image: I don't want to be with you anymore]

Do you know the real reasons why your girlfriend wants to leave you, or just the superficial reasons that she's given you?

For example, did she say things like, "I just need some space to sort myself out right now," "I think we've grown apart," "I don't feel the same way about you anymore," or "I don't want to be in a relationship right now?"

A woman won't always tell you exactly what has caused her to lose respect, love and attraction for you.

Why? She doesn't want to be your teacher on how to be a man.

She doesn't want to have to teach you how to be the man that she needs. She wants you to work that stuff out on your own and then come back to her and show her that you have truly improved and changed yourself. Only then will she feel happy with the idea of opening herself up to loving you again.

Most guys never truly know why their girlfriend (or fiancée or wife) wants to break up with them, so they never make the correct changes to their thinking and behavior. So, when they try to get their girlfriend back or make her change her mind, they end up offering her the wrong things.

If you want to stop your girlfriend from leaving you, you have to know the REAL reasons she wants to break up with you.

For example!

1. Did you stop making her feel loved, valued and attracted?

This is one of the main reasons why so many relationships fail. Usually at the beginning of a relationship, a guy goes out of his way to be romantic, attentive and loving. Yet, over time, he becomes more neglectful and stops taking notice of his girlfriend the way he used to in the beginning.

Usually, this is not an intentional thing. But, often guys allow "life" (e.g. paying bills, working late, studies, etc.) to intrude on their relationship.

Ask yourself, have you been taking your girlfriend for granted? When was the last time you genuinely noticed her and gave her genuine, positive feedback on how good she looks?

Have you fallen into a pattern of saying, "Mmmm" that's okay, when she wears a new outfit or does something thoughtful for you? When was the last time you genuinely told her that she's special and that you're grateful for the efforts she makes to look good for you and spoil you?

Or what about putting her first in your life; have you cancelled a date with her at the last minute because you got caught up with friends, more than once or twice?

Although it's likely that it's not your intention to make your girlfriend feel like you don't value and appreciate her, this type of behavior says the opposite.

To keep a woman happy in a relationship with you, it is essential that you deepen the love, respect and attraction between you rather than taking it for granted and assuming that just because in your mind you love and appreciate her, she will automatically know this.

Actions speak louder than words and if your actions have been giving her the impression that you don't care for her or appreciate her, she will naturally tell you she wants to leave you.

2. Did you become insecure, needy and clingy?

[image: How can I stop her from leaving me?]

On the opposite side of taking a woman for granted, some guys get too involved in the relationship and become needy or clingy. They lose focus on all other areas of their life and end up using the relationship as an excuse to hide from their true potential in life.

For example, a guy may stop hanging out with his friends because he wants to spend all his time with his girlfriend.

Or, he might give up his hobbies because he'd rather take up something new that they can do together. He may spend all his spare time helping her with chores, running errands for her or helping her study.

He may shower her with gifts he can't really afford. He may even give up the opportunity to get a promotion or a better job because it will take time away from her. He'll often tell her, "You're everything to me. There's nothing I wouldn't do for you."

In his mind he's being the romantic, loving and attentive boyfriend, but to her he's being clingy, needy and overbearing.

Although initially a woman will be flattered by all the attention, eventually the novelty will wear off and she will begin to wonder why you're using her and your relationship to hide from the world. She'll begin to question why you're afraid to become a bigger and better man who likes to work hard on his purpose in life or his career, while also being able to give plenty of time, love and emotional support to her.

To be the kind of man your girlfriend will want to stay with, you have to make her feel respect for you. You have to be the kind of guy she can look up to and feel that if she sticks with you, you'll take her places.

Showing Her That You've Improved and Changed

If you want to stop your girlfriend from leaving you, you have to first fix any emotional issues that are turning her off (i.e. you're unable to control your jealousy, you are clingy, you take her for granted, you are afraid to commit, etc).

You can't promise her, "Just give me another chance and I'll change," or "Whatever you need me to do I'll do it if you stay." You actually have to make the changes first and then let her see these changes in you, either in person or via your online presence on social media sites such as Facebook, Instagram, etc.

You don't have to fully fix everything and become perfect to get her to change her mind, but what you need to do is start working on those emotional issues properly so that when she interacts with you, she will be able to pick up that you've really improved and changed.

She Won't Leave You if You Make Her Realize That You're a Better Option Than Other Men

You can sit around saying, "My girlfriend wants to leave me," and wait for the day when you'll hear that she's got a new boyfriend or that she kissed a guy after going clubbing with her girlfriends on a Friday or Saturday night. Alternatively, you can show her that she'll be a fool if she lets you go, because no other guy can make her feel the way that you can.

When you make the right changes to your thinking and behavior and present yourself in a way that makes her feel love, respect and sexual attraction for you, then she will naturally start thinking differently, talking differently, behaving differently and she will then instinctively feel drawn to you again.

How to Know When Someone Loves You

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Love comes in all different flavors and strengths and for different reasons.

For example: The love that a mother has for her children, the love that a friend has for a friend, the casual love that a woman might feel when she's dating a guy, the love that a truly committed wife feels for her husband, etc.

Even if a man and a woman are in a relationship and a woman says, "I love you," to him, it doesn't necessarily mean that she is experiencing the strongest type of love that is possible between them.

Not all couples get to experience what truly committed, deep, unconditional love feels like.

You will know it when you're experiencing that type of love with a woman because you will both:

- Love each other for who you are individually and together.
- Be patient as each of you grow, mature and develop individually and together.
- Sincerely care about the happiness and life experience of each other.

If you're in a relationship with a woman and the love isn't true, each of you will always keep the real you shut away from the other.

You may love each other at the beginning of the relationship when experiencing new feelings of lust and going through the honeymoon stage of the relationship, but once the initial buzz wears off, you may begin to take each other for granted or fall out of love.

A couple that is truly in love will literally feel better around each other as each day passes. The love will become stronger, deeper, more meaningful and more genuine as time goes on.

Are You a Loveable Kind of Man?

[image: Are you a loveable kind of man?]

The short answer to the question of how to know when someone loves you is to be a man with loveable qualities.

In other words, be the type of man who women not only respect, but feel sexually attracted to. A man who knows that he is good enough for women and therefore loves women fearlessly.

When you know that women respect you and feel attracted to you, there is nothing to be afraid of.

You can love a woman and if she doesn't love you back, it's almost as though you will then feel sorry for her. She misses out on being with such a great guy, so it's not your loss, but hers.

At The Modern Man, we're often contacted by guys who doubt themselves around women and don't know how to get women to feel enough for them to want to begin a relationship or remain in a relationship.

For example: Some guys are interested in a female co-worker, but they're unsure of whether or not to approach her and ask her on a date or suggest catching up outside of the workplace.

Other times, guys want to know exactly how to tell if a female friend is interested in becoming more than a "just friend" or how to go about getting a girl to fall in love with them.

Whatever their particular circumstances are, the bottom line is that these guys feel insecure in themselves and are afraid to go after what they want because they fear rejection.

They know that they are unsure of how to make the woman love them back, or even feel attracted to them. A guy might be able to get a woman to like him as a friend, but that isn't the same as her feeling sexually turned on by him and wanting to begin a sexual relationship.

Do you know how to make a woman feel enough attraction for you to want to have sex with you when you meet her and then want to stay in a relationship with you for life?

Watch this video to find out...

You Have to Believe That You Are Worthy of Her Love

Women are instinctively attracted to confidence in a man and insecurity of any kind is a real turn off. The harsh reality is that your need to ask how to know when someone loves you is a good indicator that you're feeling insecure, making it very unlikely that the "someone" in question loves you.

Women are naturally attracted to guys who believe that they are more than good enough to be loved. If a woman gets the sense that you doubt your attractiveness to her or don't feel worthy of her love, she will feel naturally turned off by you.

Women want to be in love with a man who knows that he is more than good enough and, if she is on her best behavior around him, she might be able to get him to truly love her.

He can have pretty much any woman he wants, but if she is a good girlfriend to him, a great lover and a great friend, she might get to experience truly committed, deep and unconditional love with him.

Women would rather experience love with a great man like that, than be loved by a guy who doesn't feel like he's good enough. Why? Women are attracted to the strength in men and turned off by the weakness.

Knowing that you are more than good enough to be loved by her is a display of emotional strength, but doubting yourself displays the type of emotional insecurity that turns women off.

Where Guys Go Wrong

When a guy can't really work out if a woman loves him or not, he will often make the mistake of trying way too hard to be liked.

He will hope that if he is just likeable enough, it will eventually lead to love.

Yet, that's not how it works.

If you want a woman to love you, she has to respect you as a man (i.e. look up to you, respect your emotional strength, etc) and feel sexually attracted to you (i.e. because you're confident, charismatic, charming, funny, etc).

When guys don't know how to get a woman to truly respect them and feel attracted to them, they often make one or more of the following mistakes:

1. Behaving like her in an effort to be more likeable or relatable

When a guy desperate to be liked by a woman, he will often hope that becoming her "best friend" will make her eventually fall in love with him.

He will hang out with her and gossip, pretend to be interested in fashion and the girly TV shows she likes or music she loves and generally act like one of her girlfriends.

While this approach to women certainly helps you be able to get along with them on their level, it does not create the type of respect and attraction that leaves to truly passionate love.

Instead, it leads to a friendly type of love where the woman loves the guy like a best friend or big brother.

There's a big difference between a woman liking a guy and lusting after him with sexual desire.

A woman needs to feel sexually attracted to a guy to be able to fall in love with him and if there are no feelings of lust, it ain't going to happen.

Being "one of the girls" does not make a guy a sexually attractive or position him as a loveable guy in a potential boyfriend way.

Instead, most women will assume that he is secretly gay, confused about how to be a man or lacks the balls to show his real interest in a woman.

2. Always being available

Another common mistake that guys make when they're desperate to be loved by a woman is to make themselves available to her around the clock.

Sometimes, a guy will think that by being at her beck and call and always dropping everything to run to her whenever she needs help, she'll eventually come to realize that she can't live without him and that she has been in love with him all along.

That kind of stuff really only happens in movies, not in real life. It's a good storyline for some people to watch because it's "entertaining" to see the clueless guy eventually get the girl.

In the real world, it rarely plays out like that because women are more attracted to men who have important things going on in their life other than just a woman.

If a guy appears to have nothing going on in his life other than her, he becomes less sexually attractive.

She may not consciously think it, but her instincts will tell her that if a guy is behaving like that, it means that he will most-likely become insecure, jealous and over-protective if they had a relationship.

Watch this video for an example...

Women instinctively know that the confident, masculine alpha male they are hoping to meet is going to be hard to find and they will have to compete with lots of other women to "win" him for themselves.

If you're effectively handing yourself to a woman on a plate and showing her that your entire life purpose is about her, then you're not that guy.

3. Being super-nice

Following on from the above, guys often fall into the trap of being super-nice by putting a woman on a pedestal in an effort to make her fall madly in love with them.

This approach worked in the fictional reality of romance novels set in the 19th century, but it doesn't work in today's world.

Modern women do not want to be put on a pedestal and behaving in a super-nice way makes a guy come across as weak, wimpy, and desperate and these are not sexually attractive traits.

There's nothing wrong with being a nice guy, but to be loved by a woman, you need to be an emotionally and mentally strong, sexually attractive nice guy.

There's nothing wrong with being nice to a woman when you're picking up women or in a relationship.

However, to ensure that a woman is feeling what she needs to fall in love and stay in love, you must also focus on actively triggering her feelings of respect and attraction for you.

Just being a nice, good guy is not good enough.

You've also got to be the sort of guy that women respect and feel attracted to.

It's easy to make a woman feel some respect and attraction for you at the start of a relationship, but where guys really struggle is in maintaining and building on that over time.

The men who are able to build on their woman's feelings for them are the ones who never get dumped, cheated on or divorced.

My Girlfriend is Still in Love With Her Ex

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

So, youâre dating a really great woman.

You love her and in your mind you see you and her being together for a long time, except thereâs one major problem...

She is still in love with her ex.

The question going through your mind right now may be, âIf my girlfriend is still in love with her ex, do I even stand a chance with her? Can I get her to forget him, or will I end up losing her?â

Well, that depends!

Are You Her Rebound Guy?

[image: Girlfriend missing her ex-boyfriend]

As much as you might hate to admit it to yourself, if youâre saying, âMy girlfriend is still in love with her ex,â then youâre probably asking yourself, âAm I her rebound guy?â

There are many definitions for ârebound guyâ but the simplest definition according to the Urban Dictionary is:

Rebound guy: A rebound guy is someone who you date or go out with to keep yourself busy, and you use him to keep your mind off your ex who you still have feelings for.

This doesn't mean that your girlfriend doesn't have feelings for you.

However, if she is still in love with her ex, it means that he makes her feel more love, respect and attraction than you do...

If you are her rebound guy, it doesn't mean that you can't be her main man and get rid of her ex.

You can, but you have to focus on giving her a better attraction experience than he ever could.

At the moment, she is probably attracted to you because you are filling certain gaps that were missing in her previous relationship with her ex.

For example: If her ex was a self-absorbed guy who took her for granted, she may be attracted to you because you are a nice guy who treats her like a princess.

On the down side, if youâre too nice to her and lack the balls that she finds attractive in a man (e.g. you let her decide everything, you are too generous to her, you treat her so nicely even though she treats you badly, you don't know how to put her back in her place in a loving, but assertive way), she will miss that from her ex.

She will start to compare how he made her feel compared to you and even though you are being good to her, she will feel more drawn to him because the attraction she felt for him was much more enjoyable.

Women know that a guy who is super nice to them is usually hiding something.

What is he hiding?

The fact that he can't really attract other women by choice, so he overcompensates by being really nice, giving and sweet in the hopes that the woman will be happy.

Yet, although she might like being treated like a princess for a while, she just won't be feeling a strong spark of sexual attraction for him because he lacks the balls that she needs a man to have around her.

Are You Making Her Feel Attracted to Him?

Many guys unknowingly push their girlfriend into the arms of another man or a former flame, by being insecure.

Watch this video for an example...

For example: If feel insecure about her still being in love with her ex, she will feel turned off by your emotional weakness.

If she then remembers how confident he used to be about his attractiveness to her, she will focus on the fact that she is now with a guy who feels like he isn't good enough for her.

Women hate that.

What a woman wants is a man who remains confident in his attractiveness to her no matter what she or anyone else says or does.

It's not about being arrogant, showing off or putting the other guy down.

Instead, it just about having that relaxed confidence in yourself where you know that you are the man and that her ex guy isn't better than you.

If you doubt that for a second, she will pick up on it and it will turn her off.

So, be strong, otherwise you will be making her feel attracted to him and as a result, she will feel like she is more in love with him than you.

She is Forgetting a Lot of the Negatives About Him

Now that she's dating you, he is no longer treating her badly like he used to, so it's easy for her to focus on his positives and forget his negatives.

If you are being insecure, clingy or needy, she won't be feeling attracted to you and will begin to focus on your bad qualities in comparison to him.

Attraction has a funny way of messing with our minds (just think about how you suddenly think, feel and act when you see naked women), so if your girlfriend is feeling attracted to her ex, she isn't going to be thinking straight.

To stop her from wanting to be with him, you have to stop saying and doing the things that have been turning her off about you.

Once she sees that you make her feel the way she wants to feel (e.g. loved, appreciated, valued, taken care of, like she's with a man who knows what he wants in life and isn't afraid to go and get it), her ex will begin to fade in her mind because she will be getting what she needs from you.

You Have to Make Her Ex Pale in Comparison to You

Yes, it sucks having to be the guy who's saying, â€œMy girlfriend is still in love with her ex,â€ but just because she feels like that now, doesn't mean you have to sit around in the sidelines and hope she'll miraculously change her mind and decide that you're the man she really loves.

You've got to start being the type of man that makes her ex-boyfriend pale in comparison to you. Let her see by way of your behavior, actions, attitude and vibe that you are a way better man than her. This doesn't mean that you should suddenly be nicer to her than you already are, but instead, you need to focus on triggering her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

Right now, you have the advantage because she is already dating you.Â If you do the right things, she will naturally stop thinking about him and fall more deeply in love with you. To achieve that, make sure that you...

1. Don't compare yourself with, or compete with her ex.

[image: Sorry, but I still love my ex]

Yes, her ex is an ex for a good reason, and yes you're probably a great guy in many ways that he's not.

However, telling your girlfriend, â€œBut, Iâ€™ve got such a great job and he is so brokeâ€ or, â€œWhat could you possibly see in that loser?â€ or, â€œHow can you forget how badly he treated you? I do everything for you...I have always treated you so wellâ€ will unfortunately make you look insecure to her.

Even if all these things are true about her ex, the more insecure she perceives you as being, the bigger the â€œgapâ€ in your attractiveness to her will grow and the more appealing her ex will look to her.

If you want your girlfriend to see you as being â€œbetterâ€ than her ex, you have to BELIEVE that you are.

You can't convince her with words or by badmouthing him. You have to show her with your actions, your body language and in your conversations with her.

2. Don't try to make her feel sorry for you.

[image: Don't try to make her feel sorry for you]

If you think saying to your girlfriend, â€œHow can you do this to me?â€ or, â€œBut, I love you so much and youâ€™re hurting meâ€ is going to make her suddenly realize that you're the love of her life...you're unfortunately wrong about that one. In fact, what's more likely to happen is you'll push her right back into the arms of her ex.

Women are attracted to the strength in men and repelled by weakness. Nothing is a bigger turn off for a woman than a guy who is â€œfeeling sorry for himselfâ€.

3. Don't sit back and hope that she'll eventually choose you.

Yes, you shouldn't compete with her ex, but sitting around hoping she'll choose you without making any effort to fix your issues and improve yourself, is just wishful thinking.

If you don't know what things are attracting her to her ex and repelling her from you, you won't know what gaps to fill.

For example:

- If you're insecure, you have to work on becoming more self confident.
- If you let your girlfriend make all the decisions in the relationship, you have to take the lead and be the man in the relationship.
- If you're needy and clingy, you have to work on fixing that and becoming more mentally and emotionally strong.

When your girlfriend sees that there's nothing her ex can give her that you can't, she will naturally begin to see you in a new light. She will begin to see you as the better option because you can make her feel the way she wants to feel in her relationship.

Do you know how to make your girlfriend feel the type of attraction that she really wants to feel?

If not, you need to focus on improving your ability to give her the attraction experience she really wants.

If you don't, she will naturally feel attracted to other guys (or her ex) and will be wondering how she can end things with you, so she can get the attraction experience she really wants in a relationship.

Why Are You Putting Up With Her Lack of Love and Devotion to You?

[image: Why are you putting up with her bad treatment of you?]

You don't ever have to settle for being second best in anyone's life. If you're saying, "My girlfriend is still in love with her ex," it means that right now you're settling for second place. Ask yourself why?

If right now you could date any woman you wanted, would you still be with your girlfriend? If your answer is "Yes" then clearly you love her and that's okay.

By improving yourself and fixing any issues that are making you unattractive to her, you can make her feel a deeper respect and attraction for you. When she sees that you are better than her ex she will naturally realize that her feelings for him are nothing compared to how she feels about you.

On the other hand, if your answer is "no", then you need to ask yourself why you're putting up with a woman who is clearly not treating you with respect. Could it be that you lack belief in yourself and in your abilities to attract other (even better and hotter) women than her?

Alternatively, could the problem be that you simply don't know how to get your girlfriend to feel a lot of love, respect and attraction for you?

Is Marriage Obsolete? Modern World Facts

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

With the latest statistics showing that around half of all marriages will end in divorce, it's no surprise that many people are now asking, "Is marriage obsolete?"

According to the findings of a recent survey, 25% of Americans now believe that marriage is becoming obsolete. This is a viewpoint shared by young people in particular with 44% of those in the 18 to 29 year-old age bracket considering marriage to be a thing of the past.

Yet, is marriage really obsolete? Could it really be the end of marriage as we know it?

Well, the fact that around half of all marriages end in divorce indicates that around half of all marriages survive and there's plenty of evidence to suggest that many of those marriages remain happy for life.

We've all seen those couples who've been married for 40+ years yet still remain madly in love with one another, right? Of course, not all couples who stick together are happy in their marriage and there are those who simply resign themselves to putting up with what they've got rather than going through a divorce.

So, if you're asking, âIs marriage obsolete?â because you're questioning whether or not it's going to be right for you or because you're in a marriage that's already on the verge of breaking down, you may also be wondering what it is that the couples who stay madly in love have over those who simply put up with each other in an unhappy marriage.

What is it that makes the difference between a happy marriage and a marriage that ends in divorce or a couple living separate lives?

In the video below, Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man) explains why he decided to accept his girlfriend's marriage proposal, as well as how he has been able to maintain a happy, passionate, loving relationship, despite the 15 year age difference between himself and his now wife (he recently married her).

As you will see from the video above, marriage isn't something to be afraid of if you go into it with the right mindset and you also have the ability to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

Marriage Wreckers

[image: Marriage wreckers]

One of the most common reasons for a marriage breakdown is simply a lack of understanding over what it takes to make a marriage work in the real world.

These days, guys get bombarded with misleading messages when they watch how TV marriages work and they get sucked into believing that the way to keep a woman happy in a marriage is to let her wear the pants and to put her in the position of taking charge.

This is not what real women living in the real world want. Sure, it makes for some comedy moments for TV viewers (i.e. when the wife is yelling at the cowering husband or when the husband seems like a total idiot compared to his smart, sensible wife, etc), but it's not the way successful marriages in the real world work.

In the real world, a woman wants to feel like a woman in a relationship (i.e. feminine, emotional, girly at times, irrational at times, etc) and it takes a man who knows how to be a traditional masculine man to make her feel that way.

[image: Marriage wreckers]

These days, a lot of guys make the mistake of being too neutral with their woman (i.e. the guy is neither very masculine or very feminine, but is somewhat in between) by losing touch with their masculinity.

The more that a woman is made to feel neutral or masculine around her man, the less like a woman that she feels and the resulting imbalance in the sexual dynamic causes the all-important sexual spark to fade. Without a clear masculine/feminine dynamic between a man and a woman, the sexual desire cannot remain alive.

[image: Man who has lost touch with his masculinity]

Another mistake that husbands often slip into making in a marriage, is taking their wife for granted. A good example might be showing up late for dinner on a regular basis, not making her feel sexy and noticed or often calling her at the last minute to say he's going to be late because he and a friend are heading out for a drink on the way home.

Adopting an attitude of, "I'll get something to eat when I'm out" or, "Keep dinner in the oven and I'll get it later" might seem harmless and unimportant to him, but if it's something that he makes a habit of doing, he will gradually make his wife feel that her efforts and her contribution to the marriage are unimportant therefore she's unimportant to him.

Marriage is Not Obsolete

Marriage was created help ensure stability in personal, family and community relationships. Rather than having no trust in the other person's devotion and loyalty to you, marriage offers a new level of perception and emotional connection that can only be understood by those who have actually gotten married.

Prior to getting married, many guys see marriage as only being beneficial to women, but in reality, it's a good deal for both men and women. As long as the man is able to deepen his woman's love, respect and attraction for him over time, the experience of their love and relationship becomes more amazing for both of them.

Even though marriage seems like an out-dated idea to those who haven't tried it, the fact remains that it is a beneficial tradition when approached correctly. Many people know this, which is why marriage doesn't like it will become obsolete anytime soon.

There have been some changes to how and when people get married, but it's still happening in record numbers all over the world.

Today's women are much less dependent on men than previous generations of women, which has changed the average of when a woman gets married. The average age for a woman to get married has risen to 26 years compared to back in the 1950s when the majority of women married in their teens.

This may make it appear as though modern women aren't interested in marriage and only want to date and have sex with men all their life, but statistically speaking, most women eventually settle down and get hitched.

The average age for men to get married is now 28 years, highlighting the fact that many couples don't immediately move out of their parents' home into their marital home, but instead live independently or live together before considering tying the knot.

Many couples live together and have children without ever marrying and evidence suggests that more and more men are choosing not to settle into a life of sticking with one woman.

How about you? What is your relationship goal with women?

The choice to marry later in life has led to statistics showing that there are now more unmarried people in the 25 to 34 year-old age bracket in America than married people in the same age bracket. Interestingly, for those who do choose to marry, stability is no longer considered the main reason for doing so and virtually every couple questioned gave love as their number one reason for getting hitched.

Is Marriage Right For You?

The bottom line is that whether or not marriage is right for you will depend entirely on your individual view of life and what's important to you. It will also depend on whether or not you have actually experienced the type of true love that makes both you and the woman feel like you would never, ever want to split up.

You don't ever have to get married if you don't want to. You can decide to sleep with new women for life, or get in and out of relationships for life.

The world has changed and the days of having to marry to be able to hold your head up as a respectable member of society are gone. Likewise, the days of being labelled a social outcast for living together or having children out of wedlock are gone.

As a modern man, you have a choice to make...

Go down the traditional path of relationships by getting married to one woman and staying with her for life.

Have sex and relationships with many new women throughout your life and never get married.

Either way, you can be happy and you can enjoy your life. You can enjoy your life with or without marriage. It all comes down to what you really want and what makes you the happiest as a man.

My Girlfriend Has Changed Her Behavior Towards Me. How Can I Get Her to Change Back?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend has changed her behavior towards you and is no longer treating you with love, care and warmth like she did when you first got into a relationship, it means that she's losing touch with her feelings of respect, love and attraction for you.

This can happen if it's her fault (e.g. she gets a promotion at work and suddenly feels like she is more valuable than her boyfriend, she meets new friends who convince her that she's too good for her boyfriend, she goes out and parties with her girlfriends and flirts with other guys), or it could be partly your fault.

If it's her fault and she is just treating you badly all of a sudden, then you should warn her that you will break up with her if she doesn't change and if she doesn't, you should break up with her.

If she feels a sense of loss because she is being dumped by a great man like yourself, then she will want to change and make you forgive her for straying or treating you badly.

However, if she doesn't feel like she'd be losing out on much by not being with you, she may decide that a break up is fine with her.

That's why you need to be clear on what you want from her and what you're willing to do to make the relationship work.

For example: If you believe that her change in behavior is partly your fault, then you can do something about that by beginning to stop setting off unnecessary, negative chain reactions in the relationship.

Watch the video above for more information.

Stop the Changes and Get Her to Reconnect With Her Original Feelings For You

How can you avoid her changing even more and get her to reconnect with her original feelings for you?

The easiest way to get her to care about you like she used to and begin being a good girlfriend again is to begin triggering her feelings of attraction, respect and love for you.

If you don't do that soon, she will most-likely fall out of love with you and then break up with her. Just because you attracted her at the start of the relationship, it doesn't mean she is attracted to you now.

If you have been turning her off, you need start turning her back on and making her feel happy and excited to be with you.

You don't have to do a lot of work to achieve that.

You just need to focus on giving her the attraction experience she really wants (e.g. if you're too soft and gentle with her, but she needs a guy with a bit more balls, you need to start being more assertive.

If you're too selfish and take her for granted, you need to start being more loving and giving). Don't go overboard though and go from one extreme to the other. Whatever you have been lacking, you need to start adding that in, rather than flooding the relationship with it.

Understanding What Caused Your Girlfriend to Change

[image: Her behavior changed because she no longer feels attracted and in love]

There's no getting away from the fact that if your girlfriend is no longer the way she was at the beginning of your relationship, there has to be a good reason for it.

Something happened to cause her feelings for you to change, and if you're saying, "My girlfriend has changed" and wondering how you can get her to change back, then you probably aren't really sure why she stopped feeling the way she used to.

Women will rarely come out and say what is really bothering them.

A woman would rather say things like, "You're so selfish" or "Why do you always play those stupid video games?" or "Why do you always let everyone push you around?" than say what she really means. Why?

2 main reasons:

1. To avoid being hurt

In the past, and even in many places around the world today, women have been beaten and even killed if they tried to stand up to, or break up with a guy.

So, in order to protect herself, a woman would rather hint at what's bothering her, in the hopes that her boyfriend will figure it out and fix himself, rather than actually say what's on her mind and face getting hurt.

You might be the sort of boyfriend who would never physically hurt your girlfriend, but she is still going to have that survival instinct to protect herself.

2. To avoid taking on the role of teacher

Almost all women do not want to be a guy's teacher on how to be a man.

She wants her boyfriend to figure out (without her guidance or leadership) what the issues in their relationship are, and then take action like a real man to fix them.

She doesn't want to feel like she is his mother or teacher in life because that would ruin her feelings of sexual attraction for him.

Being a mother figure, big sister or teacher to her boyfriend is unattractive to almost all women.

If she is forced into that role, she won't be able to fully respect, love and feel attraction for her boyfriend because she will see him as being immature and childish compared to her.

A woman wants to be able to look up to her man with respect and rely on him to be emotionally strong and wise, rather than having to lift him up, carry him along and help him grow up and be a real man.

As a boyfriend, not getting a clear reason about what is bothering her in the relationship can make it difficult for you to be certain about what really made her feelings for you change.

This is why you have to be brutally honest with yourself and decipher her hints so that you can understand the deeper meaning behind her casual words.

For example: Here is what a woman usually means when she says:

You are so selfish.

This is a woman's way of saying, You are taking me for granted and I am no longer feeling loved, appreciated or attractive when I am with you.

When a woman stops feeling the way she wants to feel, it's natural that her feelings for her man will change and she will start losing respect and attraction for him.

If he doesn't catch on to her hints and make changes to regain her respect and attraction for him, she will eventually fall out of love with him.

Unlike in the past where a woman had to be stuck in a bad relationship for life, today's women will quickly break up with a guy for not making them feel the way they want to feel in a relationship.

Why do you always play those stupid video games?

There's nothing wrong with a guy playing video games, but if a woman is saying that to her boyfriend, it usually means, What are your goals and ambitions for your life and for our future together?

Why are you spending all your time and energy on this, rather than becoming a bigger and better man in the real world?

Can I rely on you to provide and protect me in the long run?

Have you given up on reaching for big goals in life now that you've got me? Is this all that your life is going to amount to?

In a woman's eyes, playing video games is not achieving anything in the real world.

She wants to know that she can rely on her man to lead them both towards a better life, rather than hiding behind games, or whatever excuse he's using not to pursue his dreams.

There's nothing wrong with playing video games (I play and I'm happily married), but video games cannot come before you achieving your big goals or making your woman feel attracted and in love with you.

You should only be playing video games when you really have spare time, rather than playing because you are avoiding working on what you know you should.

Why do you always let everyone push you around?

This is a woman's way of saying, I need you to take the lead and be the man in the relationship or I don't want you to let me boss you around all the time. Grow some balls.

One of the biggest mistakes guys make in a relationship is believing that a woman wants a nice guy who is always agreeable and easy going and lets her (and everyone else) make all the decisions for him.

In the real world, women are attracted to confident, masculine men who can take the lead in a relationship and in life.

A woman will lose her respect and attraction for her guy if friends regularly disrespect him or if he is looked down on in social situations.

If she realizes that his behavior stems from insecurity, neediness, lack of confidence or an inability to be a masculine guy who is respected by others, she will find it difficult to maintain any real feelings for him.

She might like him as a person and care about him as a friend, but she won't want to have sex with him or be stuck with him for life.

Feelings Always Change

As you've probably seen throughout your life, feelings are not cast in stone.

For example: There may have been times where you originally liked someone, and then for various reasons, your feelings changed and you started disliking them.

Of course, the opposite is also true.

Just because right now you're saying, "My girlfriend has changed her behavior towards me" it doesn't mean her feelings for you cannot change again for the positive.

Right now, your girlfriend may not feel like she wants to be with you in a relationship.

She might have even said that she doesn't love you anymore, or even that she wants to break up with you. However, her feelings about you can definitely change.

If the way in which you're currently communicating with her is turning her off, she's going to be behaving coldly towards you and it's even likely that she's going to be pushing you away and saying she doesn't want to be with you anymore.

For example, if you're:

- Begging and pleading with her to give you another chance.
- Asking her to forgive you for your past mistakes (e.g. insecurity, neediness, jealousy, etc), even though you don't know how to properly fix those mistakes.
- Promising her that you'll change.
- Asking her to explain why her feelings for you have changed.

Approaching your girlfriend in that way isn't going to fix the situation.

It will simply remind her that you don't understand her, don't understand how to be the man she needs and you probably don't even care about improving yourself.

You just want her to love you the way that she used to.

On the other hand, when you change your communication style with her and present yourself as a man who has already begun to fix his issues and improve himself, she will naturally begin to think about you differently.

She will start to feel renewed sense of respect for you as a man and this will make her open to feeling attraction and love for you again.

Changing How She Feels Before You Lose Her

[image: Why don't you love me the way you used to?]

Right now, you might not know how to make your girlfriend feel attraction and respect for you again.

Maybe you feel like youâ€™ve lost your way with her and that itâ€™s too late to get her back.

You might feel as though you’ve tried everything (you haven’t) and nothing that you’ve done has worked (you’ve been trying the wrong things).

So, just relax.

Know that you can fix this.

You are a smart man, but you have simply been missing a few pieces to the puzzle and have been trying all the wrong things to fix the problem (e.g. being nicer to her, trying to get her to work on the relationship, showing her how upset you are).

Don’t worry – today is a new day and you really can turn this around and get her to be a good girlfriend to you once again.

At The Modern Man, weâ€™ve helped men from all over the world to fix a broken relationship with a woman or get a woman back after breaking up when everything seemed so lost and hopeless.

We’ve seen all sorts of cases where a woman will say, â€˜I hate youâ€™ or â€˜I never want to see you againâ€™ and yet when her guy made her feel differently, she naturally opened herself back up to the relationship again.

She reconnected with her feelings and her behavior went back to being loving, caring and warm once again.

As long as you focus on triggering her feelings of respect and attraction for you as a man, she will naturally begin to reconnect with her feelings of love for you.

Her behavior may have changed recently, but that doesn’t mean she can’t change back and become an even better girlfriend to you.

In fact, what most women really want is a man who makes them feel motivated to be a better woman to them.

Women don’t want you to say, “Hey, be a better girlfriend to me,” though.

Instead, it’s about making her feel so respectful of you, so attracted and so in love that she does it because she wants to make you happy and never lose you.

My Girlfriend Said She Doesn't Feel the Same Way Anymore

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

One day you are cruising along in a happy relationship with your girlfriend and believing that everything is fine and the next you find yourself saying, “My girlfriend said she doesn't feel the same way anymore.”

Right now, there may be hundreds of questions going through your mind, like:

- How long has she been feeling this way?
- Why didn't I see it coming sooner?
- What did I do to make her stop loving me?
- Has she found someone else?
- Does this mean she's dumping me?
- Is there anything I can do to make her feel love for me again?

The good news is that you can definitely change the way she feels. What you need to focus on from now on is making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you as a man. If you don't do that for her, she may eventually fall out of love with you completely and then break up with you.

Watch this video by Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man) to understand how a woman's attraction works and how you can use it to reignite your girlfriend's feelings for you...

As you will discover from the video above, you have a lot of direct control over how much or little attraction your girlfriend feels for you.

No matter how bad things seem between you and her right now, you need to understand that your girlfriend doesn't have to be stuck on a negative feeling about you forever.

Human emotions always change and just because your girlfriend is currently saying she doesn't feel the same way anymore, it doesn't mean her feelings have to stay like that forever.

For example: Even if she has now moved out (if you were living together), or is now avoiding seeing you or answering your calls, if you respark her feelings of respect and attraction, she will naturally become more open to the idea of being with you within a few days, or after a couple of weeks depending on how badly things have been messed up between you.

Essentially, when you present her with a new and improved version of yourself, it's only natural for her to drop her guard and open herself back up to the idea of being with you again.

However, what you need to understand first, is that even though you can change the way that she feels about you, you also have to be willing to face up to the fact that, for her to be feeling the way she's feeling about you now, there must have been certain attitudes and behaviors in your relationship that were turning her off.

By changing some of those things about yourself first, or at least by giving her the impression that you've changed, you will be making her feel understood and she will be more open to the idea of being with you again.

She's Not Going to Spell it Out For You

[image: Why don't you feel the same way anymore?]

A classic mistake that guys who say, "My girlfriend said she doesn't feel the same way anymore" make, is to ask their girlfriend for an explanation. "Why have your feelings for me changed? Why don't you love me anymore? What did I do wrong? What can I do to make you love me again?" etc.

Often, guys who have little or no experience with women (or don't know what women really want in a man) will react in this way. If you've reacted in that too, it's okay. It's only natural for you to a bit more information from her other than the "I don't feel the same way about you anymore" speech.

Unfortunately, most women won't give you the real reasons why their feelings for you have changed. Instead a woman would rather give you a vague, "I think we should give each other some space for a while" or "I just don't feel the same way anymore."

Why are women so vague?

A woman doesn't want to mother the man in her life. If she has to teach her man how to BE a man, the relationship dynamic goes out of balance. She ends up wearing the pants in the relationship and that is the quickest way for a woman to lose respect and attraction for her man.

[image: If you don't change how I feel, then it's over between you and I]

Most women do not want to play the role of being a guy's mother or teacher in life, so if you can't figure out what the problems in your relationship are on your own, it means that she has to teach you, and doing that doesn't make her feel the way she wants to feel.

So, if you're going to make your girlfriend change how she feels about you now back to feeling intense love, respect and attraction for you, you are going to have to show her that you fully understand what caused her to lose love and attraction for you.

How?

Understand What Caused Her Feelings For You to Change

Somewhere along the line, something about your attitude or behavior in the relationship must have changed to cause her feelings for you to change. So, by understanding which attitudes and behaviors caused her to stop loving you, you can fix those things and make her see you in a new light.

Ask yourself:

- Did I take her for granted?
- Was I needy or clingy?
- Did I become too jealous and turn her off?
- Did I use our relationship as an excuse to hide from my true potential as a man?
- Did I make her feel loved and appreciated?
- Did I make her feel like a real woman?
- Did I let her have all the power in the relationship?

- Did she feel taken care of?

Those are only a few examples of what may have caused your girlfriend to stop feeling the same way about you. Yet, there could be other, more subtle reasons why she no longer feels the same way.

A woman will decide to break up with a guy for many different reasons.

She may tell her boyfriend some vague reasons why she is ending it, such as, “I don’t feel the same way anymore,” but she will rarely tell him some of the more subtle reasons, such as, “You’re not enough of a man for me” or “You don’t make me feel girly enough...I feel like a friend to you, rather than your woman.”

Why do most women withhold the more subtle reasons? Essentially, she doesn’t want to teach her boyfriend how to be a man and doesn’t want to teach him how to win her back. She wants him to work it out on his own and be the man that she needs him to be. If he can’t do that, then he’s not the man for her.

Do I Have to Become Something I’m Not to Get Her to Love Me Again?

No.

Fixing your issues (things like neediness, insecurity, jealousy, clingy behavior, lack of confidence, etc.) is not just to please her. Although getting your girlfriend to fall even deeper in love with you than before is a great bonus, improving yourself is of benefit to YOU.

Becoming a stronger and more well-rounded version of who you are right now, you get to win. Not just in your relationship with your girlfriend, but in your life as well.

Imagine how wonderful it would be to go through life feeling confident and self assured. Imagine how you would feel if everyone you met gave you instant respect. Imagine how it would feel to have your girlfriend do whatever it takes to please YOU because she’s afraid of losing you. This isn’t a fantasy. This is what happens when you improve yourself.

You don’t have to fully fix everything and become perfect to get your girlfriend to feel love, respect and attraction for you again, but you do need to start working on those emotional issues immediately.

If you’re currently in a situation where you feel like all hope is lost with your girlfriend, think again. You might have started out today thinking, “My girlfriend said she doesn’t feel the same anymore” and felt like you were going to lose her forever, but it doesn’t have to be that way.

You can respark her feelings of respect and attraction for you as a man and when you do that, she will naturally begin to reconnect with the love.

My Girlfriend is Always in a Bad Mood

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

In the beginning, a relationship is almost always full of exciting, fun and hopeful feelings.

A couple will naturally spend as much time together as possible because it feels so great to be around each other.Â Â

For the guy,Â everything aboutÂ his girlfriendÂ mayÂ seem wonderful in his eyes. He might look at her as being perfect for him and she will feel the same way back.

Yet, if he isn't able to guide her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction over time, she may begin to lose interest because the relationship just doesn't seem to be going through the requiredÂ stages to reach a state ofÂ true love and commitment.

This is why it can come as quite a shock when a guy's girlfriendÂ â□□suddenlyâ□□ changes from being a happy, fun-loving woman to always being in a bad mood.Â

If youâ□□re finding yourself saying, â□□My girlfriend is always in a bad moodâ□□ then youâ□□re probably at the point in your relationship where the initial thrill of being together has worn off.

Suddenly, youâ□□re stuck with a girlfriend who has gone from being happy and fun to one who is always grumpy and in a downer mood.

You may be asking yourself, â□□What is wrong with her? Why has she changed?â□□ and â□□What can I do to make her change back to being the happy and fun person she used to be?â□□

Don't worry – it's just a natural phase of a relationship and you can get past it. Watch this video for more info...

If you'd like to learn how to get to the blissful love stage of your relationship, where your girlfriend stops being so moody all the time, watch Make Her Love You For Life

Understanding the Signs

[image: Understanding the signs prior to a break up]

Right now youâ□□re probably feeling frustrated and even a little angry with her. You might even have had fights with her and in your frustration told her, â□□Whatâ□□s wrong with you? Why are you always in a bad mood? Is it that time of the month AGAIN?â□□ More than likely this only made her even angrier and put her in an even worse mood.

To begin with, you should understand that a woman doesnâ□□t just suddenly change for no reason at all. If youâ□□re finding yourself saying more and more, â□□My girlfriend is always in a bad mood,â□□ then she is â□□tellingâ□□ you (via her behavior and body language) that sheâ□□s no longer feeling the way she wants to feel in the relationship.

The â□□bad moodâ□□ is literally your girlfriendâ□□s way of telling you how unhappy sheâ□□s feeling. She is hoping that you have the masculine wisdom or awareness to begin making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, so she can begin to let go of the unhappiness she is currently feeling with you.

[image: What's wrong with you? Why are you acting like this?]

At this point youâll probably be saying, âWhy canât she just spell it out? Why all the mind games? If sheâs unhappy about something why canât she just tell me what it is so I can fix it?â Right?

As nice as that would be if women just told men what is bothering them, itâs not how it works. A woman doesnât want to have to âmotherâ her guy and teach him how to lead and be the man she needs in the relationship. She doesnât want to have to teach him how to behave like a real man and then wait for years in the hopes that he will get the hint and change.

She will give him signs, like ânaggingâ him about the same things constantly, or acting in a bad mood when he behaves in a certain way.

If over time he continues to behave in the same ways because heâs missing her signs, she will slowly begin to lose respect and attraction for him, making her seem even more grumpy and disagreeable. If he still doesnât change the behaviors and attitudes that are turning her off, she will eventually fall out of love with him and she will dump him.

So, rather than just assume that your girlfriend is being a moody woman, consider that sheâs telling you there are certain behaviors and attitudes that are making her lose respect, love and attraction for you

Have You Been Behaving in Any of These Ways?

There are many reasons why a woman will decide to break up with a guy, but some of the common ones are:

1. Becoming too clingy and needy

[image: How to stop being clingy]

Naturally, itâs nice when at the beginning of a relationship a couple can barely keep their hands off each other. However, over time feelings of lust will mature and transition into feelings of deeper love, respect and emotional attraction.

This is normal and even healthy. However, for some guys who lack experience with women, when this happens they begin to panic and start thinking, “Does she still love me?” or âWhat if sheâs met another guy?â etc.

They then do the one thing they think will make her change back to the way she was âbeforeâ âthey become clingy and needy. A guy will want to show his girlfriend how upset he is about her lack of affection and how horrible he feels without her constant assurance that she finds him sexy.

He will feel like he is losing his girlfriend, when in reality, the relationship is simply transitioning to a more advanced stage on the way to true love and commitment. Not knowing that, he might begin to:

- Desperately ask her things like, âWhatâs wrong? Do you still love me?â
- Repeatedly text, call or message her on social media sites like Facebook, etc. He will then get upset or angry at her when she doesnât respond IMMEDIATELY.
- Put his dreams and goals on hold so that he can spend every waking moment with her.
- Neglect his friends and family to hopefully show her how devoted he is to her.

- Feel that she's the only woman who could make him feel love, respect and attraction and without her, he would be lost.

That type of behavior is a big turn off for a woman. Why?

Women are attracted to the strength in men and turned off by weakness. A clingy, needy guy comes across as being mentally and emotionally weak and a woman doesn't want to constantly have to reassure and baby her guy to make him feel confident about himself and the relationship.

If you have been behaving in these ways, it's natural that your girlfriend will be pulling away from this neediness and she will respond by being in a bad mood.

2. Taking her for granted

On the opposite scale of the clingy, needy guy is the guy who takes his girlfriend for granted.

Although this is rarely and intentional act, many guys often get caught up in the day-to-day hassles of life and slip into behaviors that make their girlfriend (fiancée or wife) feel unloved, unappreciated and unattractive.

Examples of this can include:

- Failing to notice the effort she makes to look good for you.
- Making plans with her and then canceling at the last moment. Obviously, the occasional cancellation is normal as life happens, but if this happens all the time, she will begin to feel that she's not important enough to you to put her first.
- You never pitch in and help out where appropriate and expect her to do everything for you without doing anything for her.

A woman doesn't expect you to devote every waking moment to her (because that will be needy and clingy and she will feel turned off by you), but she does want to feel that she's important enough for you to appreciate her and make her feel good about herself and what she does for you.

3. Letting her wear the pants in the relationship

Some guys believe that in order to make their woman happy, they have to agree to everything she says and to let her wear the pants in the relationship, i.e. let her take charge of all the decisions. This might be a great scenario for a TV sitcom or romantic comedy, but in real life, a woman is attracted to a masculine, confident man who can take the lead in the relationship.

Yes, of course she still wants to be heard and have her opinions taken into consideration, but she wants to know that she can rely on her man to take the lead and make the ultimate decision that will be right for them.

When a woman ends up taking the lead in the relationship, she naturally stops feeling respect and attraction for her man because she has to mother him.

She will become moody and unhappy, and eventually she will fall out of love with him and she will look for a man who can make her feel the way she wants to feel in a relationship, i.e. feminine, protected, safe and like a real woman.

It's Not Too Late to Change How She Feels

You don't have to keep saying, "My girlfriend is always in a bad mood" because now you know that she's basically calling out to you to change before it's too late. Clearly her feelings for you are not dead and if you make the right changes to your behavior and attitudes right now, you can re-spark the respect and attraction in her and make her fall even more in love with you than before.

Don't waste another day putting up with her bad moods. Find out what the underlying problem is and take action to fix it right now, before she ends up doing something silly like breaking up with you...

My Wife Wants Me to Move Out: Mistakes to Avoid

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Relationships of all types break up for many different reasons and even the most successful of marriages can go through rocky patches and difficulties from time to time.

Whether or not a marriage can be saved or a relationship can get back on track depends entirely on the individual circumstances and the feelings of those concerned, so if you're a guy saying, My wife wants me to move out, the first step towards putting things right is to take a long hard look at exactly what happened to cause her feelings to reach this stage.

Watch this video by Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man and creator of Make Her Love You For Life) to understand how to get her to change her mind about wanting you to move out...

Once you understand what is really missing in your marriage, the next step is to consider how much effort you are prepared to put in to turn things around.

In other words, how much are you willing to improve yourself to make your wife feel like it's justified to change her mind and give you another chance?

If you are willing to do what is required to turn things around, read on...

Why Does She Want You to Move Out?

[image: Just leave me alone. I'm done. I want you to get out of this house.]

Long before reaching the point of saying, My wife wants me to move out, a husband will have received plenty of warnings from his wife to let him know about her unhappiness.

The problem is that a woman does not always voice her unhappiness, choosing to communicate through her body language, vibe and attitude instead.

However, not all guys are tuned-in to a woman's non-verbal communication and this why being asked to move out by their wife, often comes as a surprise.

[image: Wife wanting her husband to leave]

Even though her request for you to move out might have come as a shocking surprise, it's something that has been building up for quite a long time in her heart and mind.

The thing is, it's highly unlikely that your wife just woke up one morning and decided that she wanted you to move out for no reason.

This is why the first step toward fixing the relationship must always be to take the time to figure out exactly what happened to cause her to feel so badly that she wants you to get the heck out of the house and possibly her life.

Of course, if you already know what happened to cause the upset perhaps you cheated on her or some aspect of your behavior led to a similar degree of emotional turmoil then you already know that changes for the better will need to be made if there's to be any chance of turning things around.

Whether or not infidelity can ever be forgiven is ultimately down to your wife but it's only by taking personal responsibility for your actions and demonstrating through your attitude and behavior that you are truly sorry for the mistakes youâ€¢ve made and that you are committed to making changes for the better, that you can begin to earn back her trust and respect.

Whether you know her reasons for wanting you to move out or you are currently in the dark and reeling over her suggestion that you should move out, the bottom line is that her desire to put some distance between herself and you is the result of her falling out of love with you.

Why Has She Fallen Out of Love With You?

[image: Should I break up with him?]

It takes time to fall deeply in love with someone, and it takes time to fall out of love with someone, but the process of falling out of love begins with a loss of respect and a consequent loss of sexual attraction.

A woman falls in love with qualities in a man that mark him out as someone who has what it takes to make her continually feel like a woman (i.e. feminine, girly, protected by her man, etc).

When your wife became your wife, she must have seen all of the qualities she was looking for in a man in you and something must have changed to cause her feelings for you to change.

For example: Have you become less of an alpha male throughout the marriage (e.g. you have become insecure, emotionally sensitive, afraid to rise up and reach for your true potential as a man)?

The qualities that women are instinctively attracted to are alpha male qualities, even if women don't know that themselves.

Women are naturally attracted to men who are confident, know what they want and aren't afraid to go after it.

An alpha male is also a man who doesn't become emotionally sensitive and need his wife to be constantly reassuring him of her love or commitment.

He knows that he is the man and as a result, she respects him and feels attracted to him.

Of course, I'm talking about good guy alpha males here, not bad guys.

Some men take the alpha male concept too far and end up becoming rude, selfish, obnoxious and heartless.

That's not what a woman wants either.

She wants a balanced man, who is emotionally strong, loving and fearless when it comes love and life.

As a result, she can look up to him and respect him as her man.

An alpha male has what it takes to be a "provider and protector" in a relationship, making him a man who offers a woman the security she's instinctively looking for in a marriage.

That's not just about money.

Providing and protecting has a lot to do with the kind of attraction experience you provide (e.g. are you too nice or too neutral around her, or are you charismatic and attractive in your behavior) and the emotional protection and security you provide for her.

As an alpha male, you're a natural leader and you're a man who can be relied upon to always be true to himself; a man who has the strength of character to always stand by what he values and believes in.

If married life has led to becoming less alpha (i.e. letting your dreams and ambitions take a back seat and opting to accept an easier, generally less ambitious route through life instead), then your choice to let things pass you by instead of pushing yourself to achieve your true potential can cause a woman to lose a lot of respect for you.

When a woman loses respect for you, she then finds it difficult to feel sexually attracted to you.

When that happens, she begins to fall out of love with you.

By the way...

The same thing happens if you fall into the trap of believing that the way marriages are popularly portrayed on TV is a true reflection of the way marriages should work in real life.

TV marriages generally show the wife â€œwearing the pantsâ€œ and the husband adopting an â€œanything for a quiet lifeâ€œ approach by just going along with whatever she wants.

This is not what real women in real marriages want.

Remember, women are attracted to alpha male characteristics in a man.

Behaving in this way and effectively putting your wife â€œin chargeâ€œ in your relationship makes her feel less feminine, and this in turn leads to her feeling less sexually attracted to you.

Mistakes to Avoid

When a man says, â€œMy wife wants me to move out,â€œ he's really asking for help because he wants to know what he should do to make his wife change her mind, right? With this in mind, the following mistakes must not be made.

1. Don't beg or plead with her to give you more chances

[image: Begging and pleading for forgiveness]

Begging and pleading with her in an attempt to get her to change her mind will do nothing to change the way she feels about you.

Whatever has happened to cause her to lose respect and sexual attraction for you, behaving this way will only reinforce her opinion of you as a weak, wimpy, and sexually unattractive man.

2. Don't make empty promises

Following on from the above, making promises of every description in a desperate attempt to get her to change her mind will backfire.

For example: A man might say, â€œI promise I can change; just tell me what you want me to do and I'll do it,â€œ or words to that effect, but in doing so, he's simply highlighting the fact that he has no idea what the problem is or what he needs to do to fix things.

A woman doesn't want to have to spell out what the problem is, she wants her man to be mentally and emotionally committed enough to her and the relationship to be able to work it out for himself *â€œ*and to take the initiative to fix things by himself.

3. Don't attempt to â€œbuyâ€œ your way back in Another common mistake husbands make is to think that buying things for his wife will help him to â€œbuyâ€œ back her affections.

This might mean promising to buy her something he knows she has always wanted, or promising to take her on a special "romantic" holiday, but none of that changes the way she is feeling.

Unless you've been super tight with her throughout the marriage, your wife is most-likely not going to be interested in what you can "buy" for her.

Instead, she's going to be interested in how you make her feel on a day to day basis in your marriage.

She wants her husband to have what it takes to make her feel madly in love and feel a deep respect and sexual attraction for him.

If you want to learn more about developing the qualities that make you the alpha male your wife wants you to be, and you want to know how to create the ideal sexual dynamic in your marriage so that she will never want you to move out ever again, watch this video...

My Girlfriend is Texting Her Ex Boyfriend

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The truth is, you can never trust a woman to be 100% faithful and honest for life, but when you are in a relationship you have to give her your full trust if you want it last.

Without trust, a relationship cannot grow and develop through the necessary stages to reach what I call, Blissful Love.

So, if you have been finding yourself saying, “My girlfriend is texting her ex boyfriend” and are worrying that she will leave you for him, then you need to calm down and trust in her attraction for you.

Of course, what she is doing isn't the nicest thing, but you have to maintain your cool, otherwise you might make her feel more attracted to him than to you.

Watch this video to see what I mean...

So, although it's not your fault that she is texting her ex and making you question your trust in her, you have to maintain your cool.

Then, you need to work out if you have been turning her off and start making changes to your behavior and communication style, so she feels more attracted to you than to him.

Why is Your Girlfriend Texting Her Ex Boyfriend?

[image: Why is your girlfriend texting her ex boyfriend?]

Before you jump to any conclusions about your girlfriend, you need to get clear on a few things first.

For example:

- How often does your girlfriend text her ex boyfriend? Did she do it once? Is it something that she does once in a while just to be polite? Does she text him every day?
- Is she texting him because she's asking to give her something of his that he has (e.g. her books, clothes or favorite chair?), or is she texting him to find out how he is, what he's doing, etc?
- Does she show you the texts, or does she try to hide it from you?

How you answer those questions will determine what you need to do.

Essentially, if she is just texting him to politely say hello back, then you need to control your jealousy and maintain belief in your attractiveness to her.

When she sees that you're not threatened by a casual text exchange with her ex, she will actually feel a lot more respect and attraction for you, which is a good thing.

However, if she is flirting with him via text and still misses him, then you have a problem to deal with because she is likely considering breaking up with you.

If you think she might be considering breaking up with you, make sure to watch the video above.

Is Your Relationship With Her a Rebound Relationship?

[image: Why rebound relationships fail]

Rebound relationship: The relationship that a person has immediately after breaking up a long-term relationship with someone else.

Sometimes, a woman will get into a rebound relationship with a guy who is the complete opposite of her ex boyfriend, to make herself feel better (e.g. He was mean to her, but you are nice. He was insecure, but you are confident).

Yet, rebound relationships don't always last, especially if you are unable to offer her a full attraction experience (e.g. you're a good guy, but she just doesn't feel much of a spark with you).

So, if you are the "rebound guy" and she is still texting her ex, then your girlfriend probably has unresolved feelings for him.

She may still love him and want to be with him, so unless you can make her feel more attraction, respect and love than he does, she will naturally gravitate back to him.

Often a woman will break up with a guy not because he's a terrible boyfriend that she would never get back with, but simply because he was displaying certain attitudes and behaviors that were putting her off.

This is also why many women will go straight into a new relationship after a break up as they are looking for a guy who will fill the gaps that were there in their past relationship.

For example: If a woman breaks up with her boyfriend because he was de-motivated and lacked goals and ambitions in his life, she is then more likely to date a guy who is ambitious and who is rising through the levels of life like a man should.

If her ex was shy, nervous and insecure she will look for a guy who is confident. If her ex failed to make her feel loved and valued, she will look for a nice guy who makes her feel like a princess.

If you're going to make your girlfriend forget her ex and fall deeply in love with you, you have to ask yourself what gaps are you filling for her that her ex boyfriend wasn't doing.

Yet, you also have to ask yourself, what gaps does her ex boyfriend fill that you're not filling?

Have you been actively making your girlfriend feel attracted to you, or have you been turning her off?

You Can Make Her Forget Her Ex Boyfriend

If you want your girlfriend to stop texting her ex boyfriend and fall deeply in love with you, you are going to have to make some changes.

Of course, some guys will ask, "She's the one texting her ex boyfriend and breaking my trust, why should I be the one who changes?"

What you need to understand is that a woman will often date a guy who is not her ideal man, but who simply fills the gaps she felt were open in her previous relationship.

If your girlfriend is still texting her ex, quite clearly she's not finding everything she's looking for in a man with you.

So, if you want her to forget her ex and have a happy and lasting relationship with you, then you need to start giving her what she really wants when with a man.

To do that, you need to start becoming a stronger more well-rounded and complete version of who you are right now. This will not only make your girlfriend forget her ex and feel more respect, love and attraction for you as a man, it will also improve other areas of your life too.

For example: If you're a really nice guy who always lets other people have their way in an attempt to be liked, by building your confidence you will not only be more attractive to your girlfriend, you will also be treated with more respect in social situations, in your work and career and with your family.

3 Ways to Begin Changing the Way She Feels

1. Identify the gaps in your relationship with your girlfriend

For example: Are you needy, clingy and insecure? Do you lack drive and ambition? Do you let her wear the pants in the relationship?

If so, you must begin doing the opposite so that she can feel the type of respect and attraction for you that is required to keep a relationship together.

2. Put in some effort to fix your issues and improve yourself

Whatever your issues are (e.g. you're unable to control your jealousy, you are clingy, you lack purpose in life and are placing way too much importance on your girlfriend, etc), you need to sort that stuff out asap.

You can't say to your girlfriend, "I promise that I will change" or "Tell me what you want to do and I will do it" to get her to change the way she feels about you.

Why? Most women don't want to be a guy's teacher on how to be a man. A woman wants you to sort that stuff out yourself and be the type of man that she needs you to be.

If you're not willing to put in any effort to fix your issues and improve yourself, her ex-boyfriend is going to look like an increasingly attractive option to her.

3. Show her that you're a better man than her ex boyfriend

When she can see that you are fast becoming the type of man that she always wanted you to be, she will begin to lose interest in texting her ex.

However, if you can't make her feel that way and instead begin to turn her off by being overly jealous or insecure, she will become increasingly interested in the attraction that she feels for her ex.

All her ex has to do is be more confident than you to be more attractive than you.

So, don't fall into the trap of becoming insecure about the texts. Instead, just remain calm and find out what the reason for the texts is.

If she is texting to be polite, then it's fine, but if she's flirting with him via text, you should tell her to stop and let her know that if she doesn't, you are going to dump her.

If she doesn't stop, dump her.

[image: Dump her and let her come crawling back]

If you've been focussing on becoming a more attractive man, then she is going to regret losing you and she will try to get you back.

You Deserve to Be Happy

Right now you're in a relationship that is making you feel insecure, unhappy and even stressed. No matter what is going on with your girlfriend and her ex boyfriend, you deserve to be treated with respect and consideration.

This is why you have to ask yourself honestly, “Is she worth it?” and “Is she really the girl for me?”

If you had a few, really beautiful women fighting over you right now, would you still want to be with your girlfriend?

It doesn't matter if you answer yes or no.

What matters is that you believe in your attractiveness to other women, believe that you deserve to be happy and believe that you deserve respect from the women you are committed to.

If you are willing to accept a woman who isn't 100% devoted to you, what does that say about you?

If you are the type of boyfriend who has been deepening her love, respect and attraction over time in the relationship, then she needs to show you more respect and devotion.

If you put up with her lack of respect for you, it's usually just going to make her feel less respect, attraction and love you for you.

So, right now, you have to decide what you're going to do about her.

You can get your girlfriend to fall deeply in love with you and forget her ex-boyfriend, or you can attract another beautiful woman to replace her.

How Can I Get My Wife to Love Me Again?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

We all know that relationships don't always run smoothly and that rocky patches are par for the course.

Yet, when a guy contacts The Modern Man for advice by asking, "How can I get my wife to love me again?" it's usually gotten to a point where the problems that he's now having in his marriage have become much more difficult to resolve than any other rough patches he's found a way through before.

If a husband really wants to get his wife to truly love him again, he must begin by taking a long, hard look at himself and his marriage and from there figure out what has changed to cause his wife's feelings for him to change.

To begin with, have a watch of this video by Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man) and creator of Make Her Love You For Life

Why Has Your Wife Fallen Out of Love With You?

[image: Why has your wife fallen out of love with you?]

In the same way that it takes time to fall deeply in love with someone, falling out of love with someone is also a process that happens over time.

If you are asking, "How can I get my wife to love me again?" finding an answer comes down to figuring out what has happened to cause her to fall out of love with you in the first place.

At the time of getting married, she must have seen all (or at least a lot) of the qualities that she was looking for in a husband in you, so what has changed to cause her feelings to change?

Chances are high that something about your attitude or behavior in the marriage has led to your wife seeing you differently and therefore feeling differently about you.

For example: Is it possible that you've lost touch with your masculine charm and have slipped into being a bit of a softie around her?

Maybe you've become a bit too emotionally sensitive or you haven't been able to control your jealousy in the relationship?

Maybe you end up taking her for granted and she lost respect for you?

As you may know, women feel the most amount of attraction for emotionally secure, loving, confident alpha males.

This type of alpha male has qualities that mark him out as a man who has what it takes to be a provider and protector in a relationship, as well as a lover.

He's someone that she can look up to and respect, as well as the man that she can feel girly and sexy around.

You may have been that guy for her early on, but if you weren't able to build on her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time, she would have placed less importance on the fact that your relationship and marriage was so good in the early days.

[image: Marriages around the year 1900]

In the past, a woman had to stick with her husband for life, even if she was no longer happy or no longer in love with him.

It was shameful to get a divorce at back in 1900 for example, the divorce rate was less than 10% for most of the developed world.

Not anymore.

[image: Modern women]

Today's women don't have to stick with a marriage if they aren't happy.

Unfortunately, they are surrounded by a culture that is okay with divorce and often even promotes it as a good solution to a problematic relationship.

After a divorce, all an ex-wife needs to do is open up Tinder or put a profile on Match.com or one of the thousands of other online dating sites and she will instantly have 100s, if not 1,000s of men complimenting her and trying to get her out on a date immediately.

[image: Modern women]

To get your wife to love you again, you need to fix the issues and problems that you have been bringing into the marriage, rather than expecting her to accept you without any changes or improvements.

From now on, in any interaction you have with her, you need to focus on making her feel respect and attraction for you as a man.

You need to make sure that whatever you say and do around your wife and in your life from now on is actively triggering her feelings of respect and attraction for you as a man.

When you can do that, she will naturally drop her guard and begin to reconnect with the love that she has for you.

The mistake many husbands make is allowing their marriage to change their attitude to life.

It can be all too easy to slip into "lazy" patterns of behavior such as giving up on personal dreams and ambitions, choosing to hide behind their wife as an excuse for not continuing to push themselves to achieve their full potential in life.

This might lead to taking the "easy option" in the marriage by falling into the trap of thinking that a woman wants to be "in charge" and wants to "wear the pants" when it comes to making decisions on a daily basis.

This is not what a woman wants.

Sure, it's the way marriages are popularly portrayed on TV and in the movies, but it's not what real women living in the real world want.

In the real world, women are initially attracted to alpha males and they then remain attracted for life if the guy remains alpha and is able to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

If your attitude or behavior in the marriage leads to your wife seeing you as less alpha, she begins to lose respect for you as a man and feels less sexually attracted to you as a result.

Without feelings of sexual attraction, she then begins to fall out of love with you.

With all of the above in mind, the answer to the question of how to get your wife to fall in love with you again is to show her (via your attitude and actions) that you have what it takes to make her feel the way she wants to feel in your marriage again.

4Â Classic Mistakes to Avoid

If youâre asking, âHow can I get my wife to fall in love with me again?â the only effective answer is to identify the changes you need to make in yourself as a man to become the man she first fell in love with and then make those changes.

This is not necessarily going to be a âquick fixâ but itâs the only way to get your wife to not only fall in love with you again, but also stay in love with you. With this said, the following âquick fixâ approaches are mistakes that must be avoided:

1. Making empty promises

Many husbands make the mistake of realizing thereâs a problem in the marriage and then asking their wife to tell them what that problem is.

Theyâll say something along the lines of, âWhat can I do to fix things; whatever it is you need I can do; just tell me what you want me to do differently and Iâll do it.â

The mistake theyâre making is promising her that they can fix things when they clearly have no idea what needs fixing.

A woman does not want to have to spell out what the problem is and she does not want empty promises.

She wants her husband to be emotionally committed enough to her and their marriage to be able to work it out for himself. She wants him to confidently take the lead as the man so that she can relax into being a woman.

2. Attempting to âromanceâ her

All too often a husband will attempt to âromanceâ his wife into falling in love with him again by behaving in an overly romantic way.

This might mean being especially sweet and attentive around her or doing extra things for her.

Yet, the problem with this sort of approach is that while being âniceâ and doing âniceâ things is fine if youâre a confident, masculine, sexually attractive alpha male, it will do nothing to make her feel sexual attraction for you if she sees you as a weak, wimpy, lower ranking male.

3. Attempting to âbuyâ her love

Following on from the above, buying your wife extravagant presents or cute, fluffy tokens of affection, or treating her to expensive candlelit meals, will not change the way she is feeling about you.

Sheâs not interested in what you can âbuyâ for her or what material possessions you can offer her, sheâs only interested in what you can offer her as the man you are in the marriage.

She wants her husband to have the inner qualities it takes to make her feel deeply and madly in love.

4. Devoting even more time to her

Another common mistake is to think that spending more time together will bring you more âtogetherâ as a couple.

However, if your wife has fallen out of love with you because you have become insecure and needy in the marriage, behaving this way will only make things worse.

The same applies if she has fallen out of love with you because you have given up on your dreams and ambitions and settled for an "easy life."

The man she fell in love with had personal drive and ambition; he had purpose. Your lack of purpose makes you a less attractive man.

Bringing the Love Back

All of the above "quick fix" approaches fail to address the fact that all relationships, marriages included, go through natural stages.

A wife doesn't need her husband to regain the excitement of the "honeymoon" stage by whisking her off on a romantic holiday or attempting to paint over the real cracks in their relationship in any other way.

Instead, she wants him to be the man she fell in love with and she wants her love and respect for him to continue growing as he continues to be a man that she can rely on to be her "provider and protector" at each new stage of the marriage.

My Girlfriend is No Longer Interested

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

A common reaction that guys have when they start thinking, “My girlfriend is no longer interested” is to assume that their relationship is headed for a break up and there’s nothing they can do to stop it.

Fortunately, there is always a way to rekindle a woman’s feelings for you and avoid a break up.

In fact, if you watch the video below and follow the advice provided, your girlfriend will not only change how she feels about you right now, she will even fall deeper in love with you than she was before.

You can get her to become interested in being with you again.

Her feelings for you are based on what you say and do when interacting with her.

As long as you begin making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you from now on, she’s not going to want to leave you.

She will begin to reconnect with the love she used to feel for you, except now it will be much more deep and meaningful.

You will have given her the exciting experience of falling in love with the same man all over again, but this time she feels even more for you.

Women love that, so don’t waste time worrying that you’re going to lose her forever.

Focus on attraction and she will change how she feels about you and the relationship.

She will have strong feelings for you again and will want to stick with the relationship and see where it goes.

All you have to do then is to make sure that you guide the relationship to Stage 5.

What is Stage 5? Watch this video for more info...

As you will discover from the video above, it’s not enough for a woman to just feel attracted to you at the start.

There is much more beyond that, which is so much more enjoyable, meaningful, exciting and fulfilling.

All of it happens at Stage 5.

By the way...

People’s Feelings Change All the Time

Did your girlfriend feel a lot of love, respect and attraction for you during the first few minutes of knowing you?

Probably not.

However, by talking to her and building up a connection, your body language and communication style made her feel attracted to you.

She went from thinking, “Who is this guy and what does he want?” to “Wow! I like him.”

Iâ€¦ definitely go out with himâ€¦ all in the matter of a few hours, days or weeks.

This means that when you met, your behavior and communication style was attractive enough to her for her to be interested in becoming your girlfriend.

So, quite clearly, her feelings for you changed from â€œnot interestedâ€ to â€œinterested.â€

Unfortunately, somewhere along the line you stopped behaving in the ways that initially attracted her to you, which is why you now find yourself saying, â€œMy girlfriend is no longer interested.â€

Basically, her feelings changed again from â€œinterestedâ€ to â€œnot interested.â€

The good news is, if her feelings for you changed once before, they can easily change again.

At the moment she may not feel like she wants to be with you anymore. She might even be saying things like, â€œI think we need to break upâ€ or â€œI need some spaceâ€ or â€œI just donâ€t feel the same way about you anymore,â€ but her emotions can definitely change again.

How quickly your girlfriend is going to go from not being interested in you anymore, to being open to feeling respect, attraction and love for you again, depends on the approach that you use.

Remember, there may be things about you that are still attractive to your girlfriend, but if sheâ€™s losing interest, right now the things about you that are turning her off are outweighing the things that are drawing her to you.

If youâ€™re going to make her change the way she feels about you right now and make her feel interested in you again, youâ€™ve got to be able to present her with qualities and features about yourself that are attractive to her.

Itâ€™s actually very easy to make her change how she feels about you once you know what youâ€™re doing.

You donâ€™t have to sit around wasting time saying, â€œMy girlfriend is no longer interestedâ€ and hoping that if you pretend nothingâ€™s wrong, she will magically change back to being in love with you. What you need to do is make her feel differently.

How do you do that? By making her feel understood, and by making her feel attracted to you when you interact with her, whether that is in person or on the phone, via text, or on social media.

What Has Caused Her to Lose Interest?

[image: Are you a loveable kind of man?]

If your girlfriend is no longer interested in being in a relationship with you, something about your behavior or attitude in the relationship must have also changed to cause her to lose interest.

So, if you want to re-spark the respect, attraction and love your girlfriend felt for you before, you must first understand what has caused her to lose interest, and then you must fix those things and get her love back.

To help you figure out what may be causing your girlfriend to lose interest, ask yourself if youâ€™ve been behaving in any of these ways...

1. Are you being clingy and needy?

[image: Clingy, jealous, insecure boyfriend]

Does the more your girlfriend pull away from you make you cling to her tighter? Do you keep asking her “Why?” or, “What’s wrong?” or, “Do you still love me?” or, “What can I do to make you love me again?”

2. Are you too jealous or insecure in the relationship?

Does seeing her talk to other guys make you feel jealous? Do you constantly ask yourself, “What is a girl like her doing with a guy like me?”

Do you feel lucky to have her, almost to the point where you feel like she deserves someone better?

Do you believe that if she breaks up with you, you won’t be able to find another girlfriend like her?

3. Do you let her wear the pants in the relationship?

Do you believe that if you ever disagree with her she will stop loving you?

Do you let her have her way and make all the decisions in the relationship because you fear that she will break up with you? Do you let her take the lead?

Fix Your Issues and Improve Yourself

[image: Fix your issues and improve yourself]

As a man, it’s up to you to understand the emotional issues and behaviors that are turning your girlfriend off and then fix them.

For example: Have you become too insecure, jealous, controlling, needy or argumentative? Have you been taking her for granted and treating her badly, or have you been sucking up to her and giving her way too much power in the relationship?

The thing is, just knowing why your girlfriend is no longer interested is not good enough.

To get her to feel respect and attraction for you again as a man, you need to actually start fixing those things and improving yourself right now, before it’s too late.

You don’t have to become perfect to make her feel attraction for you again, but you do need to show her that you’ve understood what has been causing her to lose interest in you, and that you’re working on fixing your emotional issues.

Once you’ve begun fixing your issues and improving yourself emotionally as a man, it won’t take long before your girlfriend will begin noticing these changes in you.

She will begin to sense it in the way you interact with her, see it in your body language and hear it in your voice. She will naturally feel renewed attraction for you because you will be giving her what she really wants in a man.

On the other hand, if you try to get her to “change her mind” about how she feels about you right now without really fixing or improving anything, she will simply stay “turned off”.

It’s Almost Never Too Late to Make a Woman Feel a Renewed Sense of Respect and Attraction For You

Right now you’re probably feeling confused and desperate and it’s easy to make mistakes that will push your girlfriend further away. What you need to understand is that women are attracted to the strength in men and repelled by weakness.

Qualities like, insecurity, neediness, a lack of self confidence, etc., are not going to be attractive to her, so if you want to get your girlfriend to feel attracted to you again, you have to make her feel the way she wants to feel when she's with her man.

If you feel that you don't have the type of confidence in yourself that will make your girlfriend (and other women) feel attracted to you, then that is where you have to start improving yourself.

Rather than sit around saying, "My girlfriend is no longer interested" and feeling like there's nothing you can do to change it, click around and keep learning from us here at The Modern Man.

We'll show you quick and easy ways to get her love, respect and attraction back...

How to Make a Woman Fall in Love With You Again: 3 Mistakes You Must Not Make

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're looking for advice on how to make a woman fall in love with you again, the first thing you need to do understand why a woman falls out of love with a man.

Essentially, she has lost touch with her feelings of love with you because you ruined her feelings of respect and attraction for you.

Don't worry, you can get that back.

Just because she has lost interest in you now, it doesn't mean that you can't get her to feel respect and attraction for you again. You can!

Once a woman feels a renewed sense of respect and attraction for a guy that she once loved, she will reopen her heart to the love that she used to feel for him. It's a completely natural and normal thing and it happens all the time.

What Changed?

[image: What changed about your relationship?]

A lot of the guys who contact us for advice on how to get a woman to love them again say that the change in their woman's feelings for them came out of the blue — one day she was in love and then the next day she was out of love.

However, this is unlikely to be the case as falling out of love with someone is a process that takes time, just like falling in love with someone takes time. To get her to love you again, you first of all need to look for some answers to the question of what changed about you to cause her disconnect with the love she once felt for you.

1. Did you become less sexually attractive?

Women are instinctively attracted to alpha males. If you have alpha qualities, you have genuine self-confidence and a masculinity that women can sense when they're in your company. When your woman fell in love with you, she must have seen these sexually attractive qualities in you, so what changed?

If you want to know how to make a woman fall in love with you again, something about you or your behavior must have changed to cause her feelings for you to change and getting those feelings to change back again comes down to figuring out what changes you need to make for the better.

As Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man) explains in this video, a man's ability to trigger a woman's feelings of sexual attraction is critical to maintaining her desire to want to stay in the relationship.

Do you have the skill of being able to actively trigger a woman's feelings of sexual attraction and then deepen that attraction over time in a relationship?

If not, then it's only natural that a woman will fall out of love with you and want to leave the relationship.

2. Did you become clingy or overly possessive?

One of the most common love killing mistakes guys make in a relationship is becoming clingy and overly possessive, or behaving in any other kind of way that shows him to be insecure.

Women feel the most amount of sexual attraction and respect for confident, emotionally secure alpha males and guys with the type of qualities that effectively give them their pick of women.

If a guy then begins to behave in a clingy or overly possessive way, he's showing himself to be a guy who lacks confidence and fears losing his woman because he's unsure of himself and his ability to attract another woman into his life.

Insecurity of this type is a complete turn off and a woman won't feel flattered by a guy wanting to spend every moment with her or showing jealousy if she chooses to spend time with friends and doing things that don't include him, she'll feel suffocated and turned off by his weak and wimpy behavior.

3 Mistakes You Must Not Make

With the above in mind, if you're looking for answers to the question of how to make a woman fall in love with you again, the following mistakes are mistakes you must not make:

1. Don't make promises you can't keep

If you've realized that your woman has fallen out of love with you or that her feelings for you have changed, it can be all too easy to promise her the earth in an attempt to get her to feel differently again.

You might say something along the lines of, âWhatever it is you need from me, I can do itâ or, âI can change; whatever you want me to be or to do differently, I can do it.â

The very fact that you're looking to her to tell you what she wants or to tell you what changes she wants to see in you only backs up her feeling that you don't know what the problem is and you don't know what negative changes have taken place to cause her feelings for you to change.

If you don't know what changes need to be made to fix things, you can't make changes for the better and your promises are all empty.

To get her to fall in love with you again, you need to show her that you have what it takes to confidently take the lead in your relationship and to turn things around by making changes for the better, becoming a better man and a more sexually attractive and loveable man in the process.

2. Don't try to âbuyâ her affections

Another common mistake guys make when they think their woman is falling out of love with them is to lavish her with gifts and tokens of affection in an attempt to maintain her interest. A woman doesn't fall in love with a guy because of what he can buy for her, she falls in love with a guy because of the way he makes her feel.

To feel sexually attracted to a guy, she needs to feel like a woman in his company and it takes alpha characteristics, alpha thinking, and alpha behavior to make her feel this way.

Lavishing her with gifts or devoting every spare moment to doing things for her might be something you want to do but unless you're doing it as a confident, masculine alpha male, behaving this way will make you come across as a guy who is so insecure in himself and what he's got to offer as a man that he has to buy a woman's affections with material possessions.

To get a woman to fall in love with you again, you need to show her through your thinking and your behavior that you've got the alpha qualities she's looking for in a man.

3. Don't try to talk her into feeling differently

When a guy wants a woman to return to the feelings she once had for him, he'll often try to get her to focus on the good times they've shared in an attempt to get her to feel that way again.

The problem with this is that there's nothing you can say that will make a woman feel differently about you and reminding her of times past will only remind her of how much you've changed and not in a positive way.

If you're trying to get a woman to fall in love with you again, you need to show her through your actions and your attitude that you've recognized the mistakes you made to cause her feelings for you to change and you've taken action to make improvements for the better.

Saying that you can change is not enough to make her feelings for you change, but showing her that you have developed the qualities that make you a more attractive man will.

When she feels a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you, she will look at you again through different eyes and rediscover what it was about you that she fell in love with the first time around.

When you've got what it takes to make her feel the way she wants to feel in your company, you've got what it takes to not only make her fall in love with you again, but fall even more deeply in love than ever before.

My Girlfriend is Losing Interest

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The love, respect and attraction that a man and a woman feel for each other needs to be taken care of, because a relationship is not a static thing.

A relationship is always changing and transforming and as a man, it's your responsibility (not the woman's) to make sure that you guide both you and her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

Why it is the man's responsibility to keep a relationship on track?

Women don't want to have to lead the man that they are in a romantic, sexual relationship with because it makes her feel like his big sister, teacher or a mother figure in his life.

When a woman feels that way about her boyfriend, she loses respect for him and then stops feeling sexually attracted to him.

[image: Why is my girlfriend losing interest?]

She then stops feeling like she is in love and as a result, she loses interest in him and the relationship.

A woman wants to be able to relax into her feminine role, rather than having to take on the masculine role of being the leader, boss or the person responsible for all the big decisions.

She wants to be free to feel like a girl, think like a girl and behave like a girl around her man, rather than having to feel, think and behave like a responsible man.

A woman will sometimes take on the masculine role because her boyfriend can't and she may even feel like she is enjoying it initially, but after a while, she will realize that her boyfriend doesn't make her feel very feminine.

She will feel like more of "the man" in the relationship, which isn't what she really wants.

A woman wants to be able to feel girly and feminine around her man because he is so masculine in his thinking, behavior and the way he takes action in life. She wants to relax into his masculine direction and be free to be the woman she is deep down.

The Start Doesn't Make it Last

Unfortunately, most guys end up taking their girlfriend for granted and assuming that because things felt good at the start of the relationship, she will stick around and put up with him for life.

Yet, most modern women know that they can easily break up with a guy and find a replacement boyfriend almost instantly, so they usually don't put up with it for long.

To keep a relationship together, you've got to build on your girlfriend's feelings for you, rather than just taking them for granted and expecting her to deal with being unhappy and turned off.

If a guy takes his girlfriend for granted, expects her to guide and lead the relationship or behaves in ways that are a natural turn off for women, then the respect, love and attraction between him and her will NOT last.

Eventually, he will find himself saying, My girlfriend is losing interest and wondering why it is happening.

[image: My girlfriend is losing interest in me]

So, if you're in a situation where you have recently noticed that your girlfriend is losing interest, you're probably feeling worried about losing her and afraid of feeling the pain of being dumped. You may be asking yourself, "Is there anything I can do to re-spark her feelings for me before she breaks up with me?"

Fortunately, the answer is "Yes!"

By understanding what is causing your girlfriend to lose interest in you and then making the appropriate changes to the behaviors and attitudes that are turning her off, not only can you re-spark her feelings for you, you can even make her fall even deeper in love with you than before.

Here's what you need to do....

Step 1: Avoid These Classic Mistakes

When a guy is faced with a potential break up because his girlfriend is losing interest, he might begin...

1. Asking her what's wrong.

It seems like a good idea, but it's not what she wants you to do.

She wants you to understand how to be the kind of man she really wants, without her having to explain everything to you.

That might seem a little annoying because she has the answers, but won't tell you.

Yet, she doesn't want to take on the role of being your guide in life about how to be a man.

If she takes on that role, she fears that she will have to keep helping you and teaching you for life, which will be unattractive to her sexually.

She will literally feel turned off by the fact that she is with a guy who needs to be coached by his own woman on how to be a man.

Yet, you probably don't see it that way or can't understand why she just won't tell you.

After all, what's simpler than asking her, "Why are you pulling away from me? Why are you so cold? Don't you love me anymore?" or even, "What do you want me to do to make you love me like you used to?" and then getting her to tell you what you can do to make things right.

However, a woman doesn't want to hear these things from her man. She doesn't want to have to be his teacher or mother and have to teach him how to behave like a man.

She doesn't want to have to give her man a list of things he needs to do to make himself attractive to her because she wants him to be able to work that stuff out himself. She wants him to already know how to be a real man because if he can't do that on his own, she will have to take the lead in the relationship and show him how to do it.

Naturally when a woman has to lead in a relationship and has to teach and guide her man on how to behave like a real man, she will slowly lose respect and attraction for him. She will also stop feeling feminine and taken care of, and eventually her love for him will start to die.

2. Promising to change.

Another normal reaction that many guys have when they notice that their girlfriend is losing interest, is to try and appease her by telling her what she wants to hear.

Telling her, “I can see your feelings for me have changed. Tell me what you want me to do and I promise I’ll do anything. I just don’t want to lose you” seems like the right thing to do.

He assumes that if he sincerely apologizes and then promises to give her what she wants, it will change her feelings for him. Yet, this doesn’t work.

[image: Don't promise to change. You need to actually change if you want her to take you seriously]

Just like she doesn’t want to have to teach him how to behave like a real man, she also doesn’t want him to promise her that he WILL change one day.

A woman wants to know that her man is clear about what is causing her to lose interest in him, without her having to tell him, and that he’s already taken steps to fix those behaviors.

Promises can be easily broken and she doesn’t want to stick around hoping that ONE day he’ll change and be the man she wants him to be.

3. Hanging on to her like glue.

What’s the first thing most of the guys who say, “My girlfriend is losing interest” do?

They become clingy, needy and insecure.

They instinctively attach themselves to her like glue, hoping that if they hold on to her tightly enough she will have a change of heart.

They’re hoping that she’ll think, “Wow! How could I have missed how much he loves me? The way he clings to me must mean we’re meant to be together forever. Yes, I see it now! I was wrong in thinking I’m losing interest. In fact, I’m more in love with him now than ever before! Yayy for clingy, needy guys!”

However, in the real world this just doesn’t happen. Why? Women are attracted and drawn to the strength in men.

When a guy becomes needy and clingy he only comes across as being mentally and emotionally weak and that turns a woman off.

In the end, rather than make her feel more love and attraction for him, his clingy, needy behavior only manages to push her even further away.

Step 2: Identify and Fix the Behaviors That Are Making Her Lose Interest

We’ve established that a woman isn’t going to tell her man what behaviors are causing her to lose respect, attraction and love for him because she doesn’t want to have to be his teacher.

This is why, if you want to turn things around with your girlfriend before it’s too late, the first thing you have to do is identify what behaviors and attitudes are turning her off.

For example:

- If you’ve been clingy, needy and insecure, you need to work on building your self confidence.
- If you’ve been neglecting her and taking her for granted, you need to make her feel loved, appreciated and cared for.

- If you are the kind of guy who is afraid of the future, you need to start making goals for yourself and you need to start moving up through the levels of life despite those fears.
- If you have allowed your girlfriend to wear the pants in your relationship, you need to take the lead and behave like a real man.

Whatever, the cause for your girlfriend to lose interest in you, it's up to you to find what is relevant in your relationship.

However, knowing the cause is not enough. You also have to take action and fix those things. Once your girlfriend sees that you have changed, it's only normal that her feelings for you will change too.

It's Up to You to Turn Things Around

Right now your girlfriend might not be feeling much respect and attraction for you, but feelings can change.

When you change the way you are behaving and communicating with her to a way that makes her feel more attracted to you, she will naturally begin to think and behave differently.

You don't have to change into someone you are not just to please her.

Instead, you simply need to understand that fixing your lack of confidence, insecurity, clinginess, etc., is a benefit to you in all areas of your life.

Even though you might be a great guy already, you can do better and be better.

Your life isn't complete yet.

You still can grow, improve and become an even better man that you already are.

So are you just going to sit around saying, "My girlfriend is losing interest" and feeling like there's nothing you can do about it, or are you going to take action right now to make her regain her respect, attraction and love for you?

What you need to realize is that times have changed.

Men all over the world are starting to learn how to be truly attractive to women.

If you don't understand how to maintain and build on your girlfriend's attraction for you, don't be embarrassed to learn about it.

When you start making her feel attracted to you in new ways, you will be amazed at how much better of a girlfriend she becomes.

All of a sudden, she goes back to the sweet, warm, loving girl that you used to know.

Yet, this time, she falls more in love with you than ever before because you are an even better man that you were before.

How to Get a Woman to Love You: Mistakes Guys Make

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Love is a beautiful thing.

Unfortunately, a lot of guys go through life never really experiencing what true love feels like. They have relationships with women and after it breaks up, they are left wondering, “Was I really in love? Did she really love me?”

If that happens often enough to a guy throughout life, he may eventually begin to wonder what it takes to make a woman really love him. He doesn't want to end up as another divorce statistic or be dumped by yet another girl that he really loves.

So, what is the answer to the topic of how to get a woman to love you?

Be Attractive, Be a Man and Love Her Fearlessly

The secret to get a woman to love you is to:

1. Be attractive to her

Do you know how to make a woman feel attracted to you? Are you aware of how to deepen her feelings of attraction over time when in a relationship? Watch this video by Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern) to understand how a woman's attraction for a man really works and how you can use it to get a woman to love you...

2. Be a man that she can always look up to and respect

This means that you are a man of your word and that you always follow through on your promises. It's also about being the sort of guy that other men respect, rather than being the guy that others pick on. In other words, being an alpha male.

Being a man that she can always look up to and respect is also about having big dreams and ambitions in life and going after those with unrelenting confidence and determination.

3. Love her fearlessly

Loving a woman fearlessly is about giving her your love without being afraid of the consequences. You're not worried that there is a certain level of uncertainty when it comes to human relationships and that you can't fully trust her to stay with you for all of eternity.

Rather than wasting time worrying and being afraid, you simply love her with a full and open heart. You know that if you are attractive to her and you are a man that she can look up to and respect, then there will be no reason for her to ever want to leave you.

The only way the relationship will fall apart is if you choose a woman with bad character (e.g. a lying, cheating woman) and she ends up doing something stupid.

Being Fundamentally Attractive to Her

If you love a woman and you want her to love you back, loving her alone is not enough to get you what you want. You need to have the type of fundamental qualities that she's looking for in a man and she needs to fall in love with you because of who you are, not just because you want her to. So have you got what it takes to be attractive to the woman that you're hoping to get to love you back? Some of the fundamental qualities that women are attracted to in men include...

1. Confidence

Women are instinctively attracted to men with genuine self-confidence. This means that if you're secretly in love with a woman, but you don't have the confidence to believe in your sex appeal or attractiveness to her and only see yourself as being good enough to be a friend, then she's probably going to agree with you.

If your interactions with her are missing the all important self-confidence that attracts women, then she might develop friendly feelings for you like having you in her life as a friend, but she probably won't fall madly in love with you.

A guy who lacks confidence in his sex appeal to a woman can talk to her for months or years, only to be instantly pushed to the side when another guy comes along who has the confidence to attract her and move the interaction forward to kissing and sex.

2. Masculinity

The type of masculinity that most women are turned on by is not the bulging bicep type, but the type that shows in the strength of a man's character and the way he handles himself in life. A man with true masculinity has a strong presence about him that women can feel. It can make a woman feel literally weak at the knees with desire for him.

Just by the way that he looks her in the eye, sometimes looks her up and down when she talks to him or in the way that he seems to be confident, relaxed and in control when talking to other men is the type of masculinity that really impresses a woman. She feels girly and feminine around him because he is so wholly masculine in how he thinks, behaves and takes action in life.

Having what it takes to make a woman feel feminine and girly in response to your masculinity is a big part of how to get a woman to love you.

3. Social Intelligence

A guy with social intelligence has what it takes to be get along with all types of people in different social environments. He's the sort of guy who is respected by others, but also respectful towards others too. He easily makes friends because he makes people feel good when around him, while also ensuring that they respect him.

A man with confidence, masculinity and social intelligence has a likeability factor that makes him someone other people — men and women — respect, and this in turn makes him a sexually attractive man in a woman's eyes.

When a woman meets a guy who is confident, masculine and socially intelligent, he doesn't have to do anything special other than be himself and she will naturally open herself up to falling in love with him.

Women are looking for guys who have those fundamental qualities, so when she meets a guy who she and other women would label as a "catch," it only makes sense to deepen the connection by falling in love in the hope that it will mean she gets to be with him for life.

Do You Have What it Takes to Be Easily Loveable For Most Women?

Some guys who contact The Modern Man for advice on how to get a woman to love them, have already made the classic mistake of trying way too hard to be liked by the woman. This is especially the case for guys who know a woman as a friend, but secretly want her to be more than just a friend.

Unfortunately, many guys make the mistake of thinking that by being her best friend, doing stuff for her, always being there for her and generally making themselves available to her whenever she needs help or just needs a shoulder to cry on – she will eventually fall in love.

Sure, this might be the way things work out in the movies, but real life isn't like the movies. In real life, the more desperate a guy thinks, behaves and acts in an attempt to be liked by a woman, the less sexually attractive he becomes in her eyes.

Being liked by a woman is not the same as being loved by a woman. If you want to know how to get a woman to love you, you need to know how to get a woman to feel sexually attracted to you and that means learning how to demonstrate the fundamental qualities that she's going to be looking for in a man.

For example...

Are you currently too shy around women that you find attractive?

If you don't have the confidence to approach a woman or you behave in a shy, anxious, and insecure way when you're around a woman you like, you're not showing her the inner confidence she's looking for.

Are you being masculine enough around her?

Some guys make the mistake of almost behaving like "one of the girls" as a way of being liked by women. They gossip, have a sudden interest in fashion and say, "OMG!" a lot when talk about celebrities.

When a guy behaves like "one of the girls" around a woman in an effort to be liked, he's not going to be displaying the masculine qualities that she's looking for in a guy. Behaving this way might make a woman like him more as a friend, but it won't make her feel sexually attracted or turned on.

Women might fall in love with shy guys, girly guys and socially awkward guys in the movies, but it's not the way to get a woman to love you in real life. In the real world, women usually fall in love with a guy who has the fundamental qualities that she's looking for and the ability to make her feel more deeply in love over time.

Are you offering her enough of a challenge?

A lot of guys don't like it when women play hard to get during the dating process, but there is very specific reason why women do it. Watch this video by Dan Bacon to understand why women play hard to get when guys are too keen and why women prefer guys who offer a bit of a challenge in the beginning...

My Girlfriend Makes Me Angry

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

No relationship is perfectly happy, calm and harmonious all the time.

There are always going to be times when you and your girlfriend (or fianc  or wife) disagree on something.

There are times when you will argue and there are also times when you  ll briefly get angry at each other.

That  s perfectly normal and natural.

However, when you wake up one morning and you realize that instead of thinking,   Wow, I really love my girlfriend and enjoy being around her so much   you  re thinking,   My girlfriend makes me angry,   then you know that there is a real problem and something about your relationship needs to be fixed, before it  s too late.

Luckily, it  s usually a simple thing to fix.

If your girlfriend makes you angry, then you  re probably didn  t know that women always test a guy  s confidence and ability to maintain control of his emotions under pressure.

Women test guys when they first meet them, on a date, during sex and in a relationship.

It doesn  t matter if you are an amazing guy and have a great relationship with your girlfriend, she will ALWAYS test your emotional strength.

[image: Couple fighting: Woman testing her man's emotional strength]

Women always try to get under a man  s skin and provoke some kind of a response out of him, which is why you are probably getting angry with your girlfriend.

She  s found your weak spot (emotionally or mentally) and is simply pushing your buttons.

She  s hoping that you stop reacting with anger or insecurity, but she  s not going to tell you that because women don  t ever want to have to teach a guy how to be a strong man.  

If you become insecure or get angry and lose control of you emotions, she simply   loses respect and attraction for you and if that goes on for long enough, she will eventually fall out of love with you.

So what can you do about it?

Feel the Anger, But Don  t Lose Control of Your Emotions

[image: Why is she always trying to make me angry?]

There  s nothing wrong with getting angry at your girlfriend if she is out of line or treats you badly.

Being treated with disrespect is not acceptable and if you find that your girlfriend disrespects you, lies to you or treats you badly in any way, it  s perfectly natural that you will get angry with her.

In fact, not only is it natural, it  s vital that you show her that her bad behavior is not acceptable.

She has to know that if she doesn  t treat you with love and respect, you aren  t going to remain committed to the relationship and will seek to end it.

However, regardless of the circumstances or her behavior, your anger should always be controlled. Essentially, this means that you shouldn't become irrational and start saying or doing silly things that you'll regret later on. You can be angry at her, but make sure that you're calm and in control of your emotions and your thinking.

At this point, some guys may ask, “Yet, how do you remain in control of your emotions? Anger is a wild, powerful emotion, so how can you control it? When my girlfriend makes me angry, I can't pretend that it's not affecting me... I have to express that anger, and anger by definition is being out of control; right?”

Wrong.

If you look up the dictionary definition of anger, it is:

Anger (noun): A strong feeling of displeasure and belligerence aroused by a wrong; wrath.

Anger (verb): To arouse anger or wrath in.

Anger is not being out of control by definition. Anger is a strong emotion (like fear or jealousy), that allows you to express your displeasure about something.

A man who is emotionally strong and mature will feel the anger, but will remain in control of his emotions and thinking by not letting his thoughts run wild and become irrational. He will focus on trying to get to a solution, rather than trying to get into a heated argument and end up saying hurtful things to his girlfriend.

A guy who lacks the emotional strength and maturity may end up activating his fight or flight response and then lose control of his emotions. He'll let his thoughts run wild and say things to his girlfriend that fuel his anger even more.

For example: If a guy's girlfriend disrespects him and he wants to correct this behavior in her, he may begin to shout at her and show her how angry he is. Yet, shouting at her will almost always just make her become defensive and possibly even more disrespectful towards him, so nothing positive is achieved at all.

Seeing her man being out of control emotionally (no matter how justified he thinks his anger is), is not attractive to a woman and causes her to lose respect for him as a man. Being out of control with angry not only leads to more arguments and more reasons for you to say, “My girlfriend makes me angry,” but it also erodes away at the trust, love and attraction you feel for each other.

Mistakes You Should Avoid Making When You Get Angry

Expressing your anger is sometimes a good way of letting your girlfriend know that you're not happy with what she has said or done. However, there is a right and wrong way to do it.

Here are 3 classic mistakes you should avoid making when feeling anger around your girlfriend:

1. Trying to convince her that you are right and she is wrong

Sometimes, a guy will find fault with almost everything his girlfriend says or does, to the point where she ends up feeling smothered and controlled by him. When she doesn't live up to his expectations and demands, he feels angry at her.

Yet, if he just stopped to realize that no-one (including himself) is perfect and that the purpose of a relationship is to calmly, lovingly grow together as a couple while deepening the love, respect and attraction, he wouldn't feel the need to lash out at her.

Instead, he would feel the emotion of anger or disappointment and then focus on trying to make the situation better through love, understanding and calm patience, rather than heated arguments.

Regularly correcting so that you can show her that you are right and she is wrong is not healthy for a relationship. For the love, attraction and respect to grow and deepen over time, a woman must feel free to be feminine around you.

When a guy regularly gets angry at his girlfriend and tries to change her behavior to be more masculine (i.e. logical, sensible), he is essentially trying to turn her into a female version of himself. In other words, he's trying to get her to think and behave like a man at times, which then makes her feel annoyed that she can't be a feminine woman around him.

To maintain a successful relationship, both of you need to be trying to make each other happy no matter what, rather than trying to win arguments and make each other feel bad, or conform to each other's idea of perfection.

When you realize that you are in a relationship where neither of you is perfect, you can then both agree to try to do better and be better because you love and respect each other. However, don't expect her, or yourself, to be perfect tomorrow.

If you work towards a better relationship from a place of love, you will eventually be saying, "My girlfriend makes me happy" rather than, "My girlfriend makes me angry."

2. Being mentally or emotionally (or physically) abusive

The glue that keeps a relationship between a man and a woman together is mutual respect, love and attraction. If a guy loses control of his emotions almost every time his girlfriend makes him angry, over time she will lose touch with the feelings of respect, love and attraction that she once had for him.

If your girlfriend is being disrespectful towards you at times, just be the man in the situation and don't get dragged into name calling, put downs and abuse.

When you find yourself in a situation where you're losing control of yourself, tell her that you want to take a couple of minutes to cool down and you will then continue the discussion. It's better to do that than lose control of your emotions and then do something that you'll regret later on.

3. Letting her get away with bad behavior to avoid a fight

To make a relationship successful for life, both the man and the woman need to make sacrifices and compromises along the way to keep each other happy and maintain the harmony.

If her behavior is causing problems, there's no point in letting her continue along that path. She has to be willing to make compromises and changes just as much as you do. If you never confront the issue that's causing you to get angry with her, neither of you will be able to grow and become better for each other.

Rather than avoid a confrontation, talk things through with your girlfriend in a way that allows both of you to feel understood, loved and cared for. By being willing to compromise and see each other's point of view, you will effectively be keeping the peace and harmony in the relationship.

Guide Her into Deeper Feelings of Love, Respect and Attraction For You

In almost every case, when a guy says “My girlfriend makes me angry,” his intentions are usually good (i.e. he doesn't want to get angry at her, but just don't know how to fix the problems between them). Generally speaking, although most guys want to be in a loving and harmonious relationship; they simply don't know how to create and maintain that dynamic.

In a relationship, you need to love each other and help each other grow as individuals and as a couple. However, that doesn't mean you have to give in to her or let her have her way, nor does it mean you must make her do what you want all the time.

One of the keys to a balanced and happy relationship is for you to be a strong, emotionally secure man, so she can relax and be your woman. If you get angry when your girlfriend tests you, she will lose respect and attraction for you and if that happens too often, she will eventually begin to fall out of love with you.

My Girlfriend Said I'm Insecure

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you are saying, “My girlfriend said I’m insecure,” then today is a great opportunity for you to grow as a man.

You can let her accusation sit inside your head and make you feel even more insecure, or you can choose to take it as a piece of “constructive criticism” that will literally change your life and fix many of the problems in your relationship.

Watch this video for an example of how a guy will ruin a perfectly good relationship with a woman due to his insecurities...

As a man, you have to make sure that you remain confident at all times about your attractiveness to your woman.

If you become insecure and then start behaving in jealous, controlling or needy ways, your girlfriend is guaranteed to feel turned off by you.

It's just how nature works.

Women just can't maintain a feeling of sexual attraction for a man who is emotionally weak.

So, even though your girlfriend may really like you and love you as a person, she is going to fall out of love with you if you continue being insecure.

What is Insecurity?

According to the dictionary, insecurity is explained as follows:

Insecurity (noun): Lack of confidence or assurance; self-doubt.

Insecurity is one of those universal qualities that women find unattractive about a man, whether they are meeting him for the first time or in a relationship.

Even though some women might accept an insecure guy initially, almost all women are turned off by emotional weakness in men.

Regardless of whether she's a mature woman or a young girl, a woman will be instinctively drawn to the strength in a man and repelled by any weakness.

It won't matter if the guy is good looking, tall or making a lot of money – if he is insecure, a woman just won't be able to maintain her feelings of respect and attraction for him.

If that goes on for too long, she will eventually fall out of love with him and potentially break up with him.

Do You Really Understand How to Attract Women?

It's very easy for a woman to attract men for sex or a relationship.

In fact, all she really has to do is wear a short skirt to show off her legs, or a tight top to show off her boobs, put on some make up, do her hair and guys will be falling all over themselves to ask her out.

This is because men are mostly attracted to a woman's physical appearance and they will often overlook a woman's shortcomings, (e.g. if she's not very intelligent or not very nice, loving or caring as a person), because of the intense attraction they feel for her physically.

On the other hand, for most women, the most important thing is how a man makes her feel.

When a man makes a woman feel turned on by his self confidence, masculinity, mental and emotional strength, social intelligence, humor, etc., most women will place less importance on the fact that he's not a tall, male model with loads of money.

So, if you're saying, "My girlfriend said I'm insecure," you have to understand that somewhere along the line, you stopped behaving in the ways that initially attracted her to you. Rather than giving into feelings of emotional weakness (e.g. jealousy), you need to force yourself to be strong for her.

Why is Your Girlfriend Calling You Insecure?

[image: Being a needy, jealous or insecure boyfriend]

Some guys will say, "My girlfriend is making me feel insecure by the way that she behaves," without realising where their insecurity really stems from and how to change it.

For example: For some guys, their insecurity is something that they've carried along with them since childhood and made worse over time by dwelling on it and attaching it to their deep sense of identity.

Maybe they were raised by parents who weren't very supportive or loving. Maybe they struggled to make healthy, nurturing friendships. Maybe they were bullied at school.

Whatever the case, because of certain experiences early on in life, he grew up believing that he's not good enough and that no matter what he does in life, he's destined to be hurt and disappointed by those he loves and counts on.

These are the type of guys who usually avoid approaching attractive women because they don't feel worthy.

However, despite his insecurities and inability to attract women by choice, sometimes a guy gets lucky and scores himself a girlfriend.

Without really knowing how to approach and attract women on purpose, he somehow he manages to get a girl to begin a relationship.

Yet, once in the relationship, those nagging doubts that are stored deep in his mind begin to creep in.

The old negative voice in his head begins to say, "You're not good enough for her" or "She's beautiful and you are nothing...she will leave you soon" or "What's a guy like you doing with an amazing girl like her? This isn't going to last...she will fall for another guy soon" or, "You just got lucky, but she'll soon realize that she can do better than you and she'll dump you."

Slowly, but surely, that little voice erodes any self belief he might have had and he starts doing things to hold on to his girlfriend.

For example:

1. He becomes needy or clingy.

[image: He becomes clingy, needy and insecure]

A common reaction for the guy who thinks he got lucky with his girlfriend is that, once she's in a relationship with him, he stops doing anything else with his life and sticks to her like glue.

He might stop hanging out with any friends that he had prior to the relationship and spend all of his time with her.

Yet, the more he alienates himself from people who were once in his life, the more he feels like he needs his girlfriend for his emotional security and sense of identity.

Other behaviors include texting her numerous times a day to remind her how much he loves and misses her, or making plans to be together every spare minute he gets.

If she tries to do anything without him, (e.g. hang out with her friends or pursue a hobby) he feels hurt and betrayed, which then often leads to arguments where she tells him that she's tired of his insecurity.

Women are attracted to the strength in men, not the weakness, so the clingier and needier a guy behaves, the less attractive he becomes in her eyes.

So, a vicious cycle begins where his needy behavior becomes clinginess, which in turn causes his girlfriend to lose even more respect and attraction for him, resulting in him becoming even more needy and clingy.

Get the idea?

2. He constantly needs reassurance about her feelings for him.

Another common sign of insecurity is when a guy constantly asks his girlfriend, "Do you still love me?" or "Have you ever thought about breaking up?" or saying, "I don't know if I could live without you. I would rather kill myself or die in an accident than be without you."

Although he believes he's being romantic and showing her how much he loves her, to her he's simply highlighting his insecurity as a man in this strange, challenging world that we live in.

If he asks her insecure questions like that once or twice, she may just write it off as him having a bad day, but if he behaves like this ALL the time, she'll start to feel turned off by him at a deep level.

She'll start to ask herself, "Do I really want to be stuck with an insecure guy like this for the rest of my life?"

If she then sees her friends dating strong, confident, masculine men, she will begin feel jealous of what they have.

This will lead to her telling him that if he doesn't stop being so insecure, she doesn't know if she wants to be with him anymore.

Unfortunately, this doesn't help an insecure guy feel better about himself or the relationship, so he will usually become even more insecure, making her lose even more respect and attraction for him.

3. He becomes jealous and possessive.

[image: Possessive boyfriend]

Obviously, when a guy feels lucky to get his girlfriend (rather than feeling like she is lucky to be with) and also believes that if she dumps him he will find it difficult to find a new woman, his behavior will reflect that belief.

Naturally, he will become jealous and possessive over her and have a hard time letting her do her own thing, have her own friends or have fun in a social environment without him.

Unfortunately, this behavior only makes her pull away from him even more, reinforcing his negative belief about himself and his ability to attract (and keep) a woman.

My Girlfriend is Always Negative

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Why is it that some people are so positive, upbeat and always see the best in others and in life, while others are always negative and nothing ever seems to be right or can please them?

Ideally, we would all like to avoid negative people and would prefer to surround ourselves with people who are always happy and positive.

Yet, sometimes this just isn't possible (e.g. at work, university, at family gatherings).

So, what do you do if you find yourself in a relationship with a negative woman?

How can you get her to change?

Well, part of getting her to change is by you leading the way to a different way of reacting to things that would normally make her be negative, get angry, feel stressed or throw a tantrum.

Watch this video for an example...

Although she is the one being negative, it's actually up to you as the man to guide the relationship to a better dynamic.

That may seem unfair, but it's just how relationships between men and women work.

If a man is unable to get his woman to be a good woman and instead allows her to become a negative, angry, bitter, annoying girlfriend, then she's eventually going to get tired of being that way and blame it all on him anyway!

So, as a man, it's always better to take control of a situation and make it work the way you want to.

If you can get her to be a good girlfriend to you, feel happy and be more positive, she will stick to you like glue because she needs your influence to be like that.

Are You Wondering if She is Worth the Effort?

[image: Are you wondering if she is worth the effort?]

If you're saying, "My girlfriend is always negative," then you are probably feeling lost and confused about what you should do about her.

Part of you might be saying, "I really love my girlfriend and I want to help and support her. I don't want to lose her over this" while the other part of you is saying, "Her negativity is starting to affect my life. I feel useless because I can't help her...and her attitude is starting to make me feel negative too. Should I dump her, or keep putting up with this?"

That, of course, is a personal choice.

You have to do what makes you happy, but just remember: She will most likely be a much better girlfriend if you lead the way to a better relationship dynamic.

Women are very responsive to the leadership of a man, so if you can lead you and her to a happier, more positive way of being around each other, things will automatically start to improve in your relationship.

All of a sudden, she will feel happy about being a good girlfriend to you.

If other guys haven't been able to make her behave in that way, she will respect you, feel attracted to you and love you so much more than she ever felt for them.

What Being Negative Says About a Person

Over time, I've learned that most people are good on the inside and have good intentions.

Yet, sometimes people just don't get the right guidance they need while growing up, so they end up lacking in social and relationship skills.

For example: A woman might want to be positive and be a good girlfriend, but she just doesn't know how to be that way and is so "stuck in her ways," that she doesn't really see any other way of being.

In some cases, a person is filled up with so many insecurities, or they've associated with the "wrong" people for too long, that they end up behaving in ways that go against their inner (good) nature.

For example:

- They often feel depressed.
- They have a negative self image.
- They always criticize others.
- They get jealous easily and often feel insecure in their relationships, sometimes going as far as accusing their boyfriend (or visa versa) of cheating on them.
- They often fight with everyone in their life and have a sense of "everyone is out to get me."
- They lack confidence in themselves and are always comparing themselves (and coming up short) to others. Even if they appear to be acting superior deep down they are feeling insecure.
- They feel insecure about their value as a person, so they put others down in order to feel good about themselves.

With this in mind, when your girlfriend is being negative, it is possible that deep down what she really wants is to be liked, loved, understood and appreciated by you and by others.

My Girlfriend is Always Negative: How Can I Get Her to Stop?

[image: My girlfriend is always negative]

The best approach to take is not to dump her, but to try to get her to laugh and smile more often about things. She will do that more often if you can show her that life doesn't have to be that serious and that it's okay to laugh and smile about things.

It's not always easy to get a negative person to start laughing and smiling more often, but if you are persistent and can show them that laughing and smiling is much more enjoyable than complaining and frowning, they will eventually get used to being a bit more positive.

Another thing that you can do is to address the issue of negativity with your girlfriend. Sometimes a person isn't aware about how negative they are really being until someone objective points it out to them.

Remember itâ€™s not about criticizing her and making her feel even worse about herself than she already does. If she feels understood and supported she may be open to seeing that her behavior is negative and that itâ€™s also affecting you and your relationship.

If she opens up to you, you can then help her get professional help (if sheâ€™s depressed). Or, you can help her by being patient and supportive while she works at developing her social skills and improving her self esteem issues.

How can you get hurt to open up to you? Simply ask questions and listen. Don't try to prove your point by attacking any mistakes she makes in her thinking. Simply let her speak and when you notice a mistake in her thinking, ask her if she thinks that thinking that way is the best way to approach things.

She may say that she is correct in that moment, but she will likely admit that she was wrong later on when she's had time to think about it.

Sometimes People Are the Way They Are

On the other hand, if you talk to her about it and she denies it, or even accuses you of trying to make her feel bad about herself, or of being jealous of her, then maybe itâ€™s time to ask yourself, â€œWhy am I putting up with a negative girlfriend? What is stopping me from breaking up with her and finding myself a new, better, more positive woman than her?â€

Sticking around a negative woman who doesn't want to fix herself is also a reflection on you. You don't have to break up with her if you don't want to, but you should ask yourself what is attracting you to her and keeping you around?

Often guys will stay in a relationship with a woman who is negative, selfish, domineering or even abusive because they fear that if they dump her, they won't be able to find anyone else. Either that or it's convenient to stay with her because she's paying half the rent and bills.

So, what is the case for you? Answer these questions to your self and you will probably work out why you are really sticking with her rather than dumping her to teach her a lesson and hopefully wake her up out of the negative state of mind that she's been living in...

- Do you feel confident about yourself and find it easy to talk to attractive women in person, or do you often feel shy, insecure and nervous around beautiful women?
- Do you take the lead in your relationship with your girlfriend and make the decisions like a man, or do you let your girlfriend wear the pants?
- Are you rising through the levels of life by pursuing your goals like a real man, are you using your relationship with your girlfriend to hide from your true potential?
- Do you believe in yourself and your ability to attract quality women, or do you fear that your current girlfriend is the best you can get?

If you answered Yes to the second half of any of the above questions, then putting up with your negative girlfriend may stem from your own insecurities and lack of confidence around women in general.

As a man, you have to be able to attract women by choice, rather than taking whatever you can get. If you don't have confidence in your ability to attract other quality women, you will often fall into the trap of putting up with crap from a unworthy woman when in a relationship.

It's Up to You

You can sit around feeling helpless, saying, My girlfriend is always negative, and letting her pull you down into a negative state of being with her, or you can decide to take control of your life right now.

If you know that you can easily attract other beautiful women, then your decisions about the relationship will be made from a position of strength.

However, if you feel like you'd be lost without her, then it's only natural that you will keep putting up with her negativity, rather than breaking up with her or at least threatening to break up with her to wake her up.

If you decide to stay with your girlfriend and work things out, it will be because you know you can find another woman who is even better, more positive and hotter than your girlfriend; but that you CHOOSE to stay with her for the time being.

You are a good, loving man and you want to help her become more positive because you love her and you believe that she can break free from her negative way of being.

On the other hand, if you decide that your current girlfriend is bringing you down and is never going to change, will you have the confidence to break up with her? Do you have confidence in your ability to attract new, quality women?

How to Deal With a Long-Distance Relationship: Golden Rules

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're wondering how to deal with a long-distance relationship, you may be:

1. About to get into a long-distance relationship and feeling concerned about how to deal with it (e.g. how to control jealousy, how to maintain attraction, etc).
2. Already in a long-distance relationship and struggling to deal with it.

Either way, there can be no denying that a long-distance relationship brings with it the potential to experience a different set of challenges than you might expect to have to deal with under normal circumstances.

So, how do you deal with it and are there any "golden rules" a guy should know about to help him make a go of a long-distance relationship?

Golden Rules For Long Distance Relationships (LDRs)

[image: Golden rules - long distance relationship]

Each couple has to find their own way to suit their own particular circumstances because each long distance relationship is different.

However, there are some golden rules that really must be obeyed if a relationship is to stand any chance of survival once it becomes a long-distance one.

The first thing to be aware of is that unless a relationship is already fairly well established before it becomes a long-distance one, there's very little chance of it surviving once there's distance between you.

Couples who deal with it and manage to make their relationship work are couples who already have a strong emotional connection before there's physical distance between them.

It's having that connection that keeps them together when physical contact becomes limited, and without it, the lack of physical contact and the feelings of closeness it brings will inevitably lead to them drifting apart.

Assuming your relationship is already established, the BIG golden rule that must be obeyed as it becomes a long-distance one is to make sure you continue to be the man that she fell in love with in the first place.

In this sense, the question of how to deal with a long-distance relationship is no different to the question of how to deal with any relationship.

If you change in a negative way and become less attractive as a man as a result, your relationship is doomed to failure whether there's physical distance between you or not!

With this in mind, the "rules" are as follows:

1. Don't become a jealous man

This is one of the toughest challenges a guy has to deal with in a long-distance relationship.

Most guys even struggle to avoid jealousy when they are in a normal relationship with a woman (e.g. live together, see each other many times during the week) and it's sometimes even more challenging when you're long distance.

Watch this video to understand how some guys ruin a perfectly good relationship with a woman due to insecurity...

Let's say you and your woman are hundreds of miles apart and talk to each other every day by phone.

All of a sudden, she happens to mention another guy's name in conversation and you instantly feel jealous.

The name she mentioned is probably just someone from her work or someone connected to one of her friends, and under normal circumstances you probably wouldn't even have noticed it being mentioned, but, and it's a big but, because you're hundreds of miles apart, you can't help yourself from being consumed with jealousy at the thought of her being around another man.

This is not good!

Think about it for a moment, if you were in an ordinary relationship and you became jealous every time your girlfriend mentioned another guy's name, how would she react?

Imagine how she's going to feel about you if you begin to question her every move and make her feel guilty about speaking to other guys.

She's going to see you as an insecure man and that's not an attractive trait.

Women find it difficult to maintain feelings of respect and attraction for insecure guys, so you need to continue being the confident, secure guy she fell in love with if you want to make your relationship work.

2. Don't become overly-possessive

Feelings of jealousy can lead to behaving in an overly-possessive way. In an ordinary relationship, this might mean being clingy and wanting to do everything together, and in a long-distance relationship it's going to mean wanting her to limit what she does on her own so that you don't have to feel jealous about her doing stuff that doesn't include you.

This is not good!

In any relationship, whether it's long-distance or not, being overly-possessive will eventually suffocate the life out of it.

Women are turned off by clingy, possessive behaviour.

A clingy man is a weak man in her eyes, and that's not an attractive trait.

Sure, in the early days of a relationship it's natural to want to spend every waking moment together, but in relationships that work, each individual has their own separate interests out with the relationship and that's what gives them space to grow as people, allowing the relationship to grow stronger as a result.

Women don't feel sexually attracted to weak, wimpy guys, so you need to continue being the strong, confident, and masculine guy she fell in love with if you want to make your relationship work.

3. Don't become less of a man

Abiding by the golden rule of continuing to be the man that she fell in love with means making a conscious effort not to become less of a man (e.g. by slipping into the common pitfalls of jealousy or overly-possessive behaviour). Relationships that work have the ideal relationship dynamic, and the same principles can be applied even when the relationship becomes a long-distance one.

The bottom line is that a woman wants to be able to feel like a woman in her relationship, and this is why women fall in love with strong, confident, masculine men who have what it takes to make them feel feminine.

A man doesn't need big muscles to be strong and masculine, all he needs to have is strong alpha male characteristics that naturally maintain the attraction and respect of a woman.

A man with genuine self-confidence, true masculinity, and an understanding of how to use his alpha male power is a man who knows how to lead the way in a relationship, even when physical contact is limited and that's how to deal with a long-distance relationship

My Girlfriend Said I'm Too Clingy

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Recently, a guy wrote into The Modern Man to ask for help.

He said, "My girlfriend said I'm too clingy, but I don't think I am."

He then asked, "Why does showing her how much I love her make her say that I'm being too clingy? Isn't she just being unreasonable?"

Although it's natural to feel defensive when someone attacks your good intentions, especially when it's the woman you love, it's important not to write it off and assume that she's just being unfair in her criticism of you.

Why?

A woman's attraction for a man is mostly based on how his behavior, thinking and actions make her feel.

If you are being clingy, insecure and needy, it is going to make her feel turned off by you and if that keeps happening for long enough, she will eventually break up with you.

You're actually lucky guy to have a girl like her because, instead of dumping you or cheating on you like a cold-hearted woman would, your girlfriend has made the effort to tell you that your behavior (i.e. being too clingy) is turning her off and making her feel smothered and unhappy in the relationship.

Watch this video to learn how many guys ruin a relationship with a woman by being insecure...

Your girlfriend is putting up with your clingy behavior now, but she is eventually going to get tired of it and start feeling attracted to confident guys who seem more independent.

You don't need to suddenly act like you don't care about her or anything drastic like that.

In fact, you don't need to act anything.

Instead, you've just got to start being a more emotionally balanced and emotionally strong man who isn't so dependent on her for your happiness, sense of worthiness or sense of identity in this world.

Emotional Strength vs. Emotional Weakness

Women are naturally attracted to the strength men, so showing signs of emotional weakness (e.g. neediness, clinginess, unreasonable jealousy, etc) is always going to be a turn off to women.

A guy's real strength isn't necessarily about his muscles, but rather about his mental and emotional strength, his masculinity and self confidence.

When a guy is being clingy with his girlfriend, he is showing her that he lacks the all important emotional strength that women look for in a man.

[image: Clingy, jealous, insecure boyfriend]

She automatically feels as though she can no longer rely on him to be the man in the relationship and begins to feel responsible for his emotional well being, almost like a mother or big sister would for a young boy.

Instead of being amazed by his desperate need for her, the girlfriendÂ feels turned off by him on a deep and instinctive level.

When that happens, she begins to withdraw from him both physically and emotionally.

Of course, when he realizes that sheâs pulling away, he makes the mistake of giving her more of what she doesnât want â clinginess, neediness and unreasonable jealousy.

Right now, you might be asking yourself, âHow am I being too clingy? Why does she think I am a clingy boyfriend?â

So, let's look at some examples...

My Girlfriend Said I'm Too Clingy: 3 Reasons Why She Could Be Right

If your girlfriend is telling you that she thinks you are too clingy, it means that she's losing respect and attraction for you.

If you cause her to lose too much respect and attraction for you, she will eventually fall out of love with you.

When that happens, she will probably break up with you or cheat on you.

So, make sure that you fix the problem now rather than letting it get worse...

1. Do you constantly bombard her with text messages or phone calls so youâre never out of her mind?

[image: Bombarding girlfriend with texts]

Some guys believe that the key to a successful relationship is making sure they stay on their girlfriendâs mind by regularly texting her or phoning her when they are not together.

To a guy like that, it is a sign that he is being romantic, treating a woman well and making her feel loved.

A guy willÂ believe that she may think, âWow! My boyfriend is so attentive and caring. Look how he never stops thinking about me. Iâm so lucky to have an awesome boyfriend like him. Iâll never leave him for another guy because heâs just so nice and romantic.â

The truth is that, although a woman will definitely feel respect and attraction for a man who shows her that he wants her, she doesnât need to be reminded about it 24/7.

If youâre constantly texting or calling her, youâre making her feel like she has to mother you and take care of your fragile emotional state, especially if youâre the type of guy who gets upset if she doesnât answer her phone every single time, or reply to your text messages immediately.

Behaving in that way is a hugeÂ sexual turn off for a woman.Â A woman doesnât want to feel like sheâs a manâs mother.

That is un-sexy to her and it switches her off emotionally.

Of course, the more âswitched offâ she becomes, the clingier and needier he becomes and the more she pulls away.

Rather than be smothered by calls and messages, a woman wants to be in the position where sheâs always thinking about YOU and missing YOU.

She wants to feel consumed by her love for you and she wants to consider herself lucky to have â caughtâ such a great guy like you.

Not thinking, â *Heâs so clingy and needy. I just wish he could behave more like a real man.*â

2. Do you need her to constantly reassure you that she still loves you and wants to be with you?

[image: Being clingy or overly-possessive]

When a guy has grown up without having many close friends, has been single most of his life, or has experienced an unloving relationship with his parents, it can then negatively affect his romantic relationship with a woman.

For example: When he finds a woman who will go out with him, he might latch on to her emotionally because heâs afraid that she will dump him and heâll end up feeling lonely and unloved once again.

He will constantly look for emotional reassurance from her and heâll regularly ask her questions like, â *Do you still love me?*â or â *Youâd never leave me, would you?*â

If she says, â *Will you stop asking me whether or not I love you all the time?*â or â *You know I wonât leave you, but youâre driving me crazy with all your insecurity,*â instead of realizing that heâs just being too clingy and heâs turning her off, he begins to think, â *Why is she being so offish with me? Why wonât she say she loves me? Is she going to break up with me? Has she met someone else?*â

Of course the more insecure he feels about her answers, the clingier he becomes and the less reassuring she becomes.

As I said before, a woman is attracted to the strength in a man and repelled by weakness, and clinginess is the quickest way to make a woman lose respect and attraction for you.

3. Do you have hardly any friends or interests outside of your relationship with her?

Some guys get totally â swallowed upâ by their relationship, to the point where theyâll say, â *My girlfriend is my life. We do everything together and when we are apart I feel physically sick. I canât stand even being a few hours away from her. My life would be so empty without her. I donât know what Iâd do if she ever broke up with me.*â

Again although he might think this is romantic and what she wants to hear, a woman is more attracted to a guy who goes after his true potential in life and does not hide from the world behind his relationship, than she is to a guy who declares his undying love for her all the time.

To keep a relationship together, you need to keep a balanced life going for yourself and for her. It can't all be about being together all the time or doing everything together.

Living in each otherâs pockets and avoiding the rest of what life has to offer is not attractive to a woman and can, in fact, make her feel smothered and trapped

Clinging to her and sacrificing all other areas in your life is not a romantic turn on for her.

Rather than focus all your energy on her, having friends and interests outside of the relationship is not only healthy, it also allows her to miss you and enjoy you more when you get together.

You Can Be the Strong Man That She Wants and Needs

[image: Become emotionally stronger]

If you want to get back your girlfriend's respect and attraction for you as a man, you have to stop your clingy, needy behavior.

When you get rid of your insecurities and become the kind of man who can make her feel the way she wants to feel, she will change and become an even better girlfriend to you.

You will realize that the inconsistent reassurances she was giving you, pale in comparison to the love, respect and adoration you are getting from her now.

She will literally become a completely different woman around you and will stop looking at you as being a nuisance or an annoying boyfriend that she has to get rid of somehow.

So, if you sincerely want to stop being clingy and start having a better relationship with your girlfriend, you must be willing to eliminate your insecurities and become a mentally and emotionally stronger man than you are right now.

Clinginess is just a reaction to a belief that you're not good enough and that you have to overcompensate in your relationships (with your girlfriend and even with friends and colleagues) to get the respect, love and approval you crave.

You Can Make Her Feel Respect, Love and Attraction For You

[image: Woman feeling properly turned on by her man]

If you're smart (I know you are), you will use this as an opportunity to become an even better and stronger (mentally and emotionally) man than you are right now.

You may be a good man today, but you can be even better tomorrow.

If you take on this opportunity to improve, you will raise your relationship to the next level where your girlfriend will feel even more respect, attraction and love for you.

She will stop referring to you as a clingy and will start looking up to you and respecting you as her emotionally strong, masculine man that she is madly in love with.

On the other hand, if you don't do anything about your clingy behavior, she will likely decide to break up with you or worse, cheat on you and then break up with you.

Make a decision now to begin changing the way you behave around her.

Learn to trust that she does love you and want you in her life.

Don't smother her with your need for emotional reassurance.

Be strong.

Be the man that she needs you to be.

When you change, she will change.

Women are very responsive to men and when in a relationship that is falling apart, most women just want the man to get things back on track again.

She doesn't want to have to go through a messy break up with you.

She loved you at the start and she now wants you to man up and make her fall even more in love with you.

Is My Girlfriend Going to Break Up With Me?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

No guy is going to ask himself, "Is my girlfriend going to break up with me" if he doesn't already feel like there is something wrong in the relationship.

Whether it's because she's already said, "I need some space to think about us" or because she's been behaving a little weird lately, the fact is, if you're asking the question, something is definitely not feeling right in your relationship.

To get a quick understanding of where things might be going wrong, you should watch this video by Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man):

Note: The video above will help you prevent the break up from happening.

However, if she ends up breaking up with you and want to get her back, watch this video: How to Get Your Ex Back: 5 Common Mistakes to Avoid

How Can You Know When Your Girlfriend Wants to Break Up With You?

When a woman stops feeling the way she wants to feel when she's with her man, she slowly begins to lose attraction, respect and finally love for him. Over time she begins to detach herself from him and from the relationship.

However, instead of just breaking up with her guy when she first begins to fall out of love with him, a woman will, instead, begin to show signs that she is losing interest in him, or is no longer interested in being in a relationship with him.

If you're asking, "Is my girlfriend going to break up with me?" begin by looking at the following list to determine if she's been behaving in all, or some, of these ways.

1. Has she become unavailable to you?

In today's world, we all lead busy lives and it's perfectly normal to sometimes be unable to answer the phone, respond to a text message or even arrange a meet up at certain times. However, no matter how busy it gets, when a woman is in love, she will always make herself available for her man.

If your girlfriend is suddenly avoiding you or is taking too long to respond to your calls or texts, she is clearly saying, "I'm not feeling the same urgency and attraction to get in touch with you that I did in the past." Try to stop calling or texting her entirely for a few days.

If she doesn't call you to see why you're not calling her (unless there's a really serious reason), then she is definitely cutting herself off from you and getting ready to break up with you. If that's the case, you must switch gears and do your very best to begin making her feel attracted to you again.

2. Has she become reluctant to have sex or even be affectionate with you?

A classic sign that things are not as they should be in a relationship is when a woman stops wanting to have sex or even being affectionate.

If every time you try to touch, kiss or initiate sex with your girlfriend she pulls away from you, or says things like, â€œDonâ€™t! Youâ€™re going to smudge my lipstick,â€ or â€œNot now! Canâ€™t you see Iâ€™m busy?â€ when she never used to react in this way before, then it is a definite sign that her attraction for you has waned.

3. Has she started going out without you more and more?

When a woman is with a man who makes her feel attractive, loved and appreciated, it is natural for her to want to spend most of her time with him.

Yes, itâ€™s natural and even healthy for a man and a woman to spend some time away from each other with their own friends and pursuing their own hobbies. But, when she would rather go out with her friends than be with him or inviting him to join her, it is a clear sign that she is pulling away from him and even making herself available to meet other men by appearing to be single.

4. Has she started flirting with other men when youâ€™re around?

In the best case scenario, when a woman flirts in front of her boyfriend, it is her desperate way of telling him that sheâ€™s not getting the attention she needs from him. If a woman stops feeling the way she wants to feel when sheâ€™s with her man, she will look for someone else who can give her what sheâ€™s craving.

However, in the worst case, sheâ€™s already lost respect, love and attraction for her man, and flirting with other men in front of him is less of a cry for attention and more a statement of, â€œIâ€™m moving on and I want you to see it.â€

5. Is she spending more time talking on the phone, chatting online or texting people you donâ€™t know?

When a womanâ€™s social life suddenly picks up and she starts putting a lot of time and energy into it, you can be sure somethingâ€™s going on.

Especially if when he asks her who sheâ€™s talking to she brushes him off with a casual, â€œNo-one important,â€ or â€œNo-one you know.â€ Once again, like going out without him, talking to strangers on the phone or online all the time is a womanâ€™s way of opening up her social circle and making herself available to meeting new men.

Okay, So Your Girlfriend Wants to Break Up With You. What Now?

Assuming that all, or some, of the above warning signs have occurred in your relationship, right now youâ€™re probably thinking, â€œDamn...it looks like my girlfriend is going to break up with me...! Is there anything I can do to stop it from happening?â€

Luckily, the answer is yes and it's not something that has to take months or years either. There are practical things you can do right NOW that will help re-spark the attraction between you and her so that you can regain her love and respect for you.

As explained above, the main reason a woman starts pulling out of her relationship is because she has stopped feeling the way she wants to feel when sheâ€™s with her man, which in turn makes her lose respect, attraction and love for him. However, those feelings can re-sparked.

Basically, the real secret to keeping your relationship together is to deepen the love, respect and attraction that your woman feels for you so that she will no longer have thoughts about breaking up with you. The best way to do this is to understand what is causing her to stop loving you in the first place.

Start by making a list of things that you believe are causing problems between you. For example:

- Have you been neglecting her?
- Have you been taking her for granted?
- Do you still take time to make her feel feminine and attractive?
- Are you clingy? Are you smothering her with your neediness and insecurities?
- Have you been unable to control your feelings of jealousy in the relationship?
- Are you afraid of losing her because you think she's too good for you? Is this making her have power over you?
- Are you leading in the relationship, or are you letting her wear the pants?
- Do you have plans for your future, or are you pretty much stumbling through your life?

By understanding what behaviors are pushing her away, you will be able to take steps to change these things. Remember, your girlfriend already has feelings for you. Even though right now these feelings may be leaning towards the negative, you can easily regain her love and respect by showing her that you are taking her seriously.

Preventing the Break Up

By being brave enough to ask, "Is my girlfriend going to break up with me?" you are clearly the kind of guy who's prepared to do what it takes to change; and we can help you. By using the techniques from The Modern Relationship, you can regain her respect and attraction again and prevent the break up.

When you change the way she feels by changing how you think, behave and act around her, your girlfriend will see that you're serious about making your relationship work and her attraction for you will grow.

My Girlfriend Said I Don't Understand Her

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a girlfriend tells her boyfriend that he doesn't understand her, it's almost always about how she feels attracted to a man.

For example: Sometimes, a guy will be really good to his girlfriend. He will treat her well, compliment her all the time, let her decide pretty much everything and do whatever he can to make her happy.

Yet, all the while, she will be treating him badly and he will just put up with it.

He just doesn't have the skills to make her want to be a better woman to him and as a result, she simply doesn't feel enough attraction for him.

When he notices that she doesn't love him the same way as he loves her, he might try even harder to impress her and treat her even better than before, but it just doesn't have any effect on her.

She still doesn't love him because the attraction just isn't there.

Only when you truly understand what your girlfriend wants in terms of attraction, will she then begin to change and be a more loving and attentive woman to you.

She will open up, fall more in love with you and want you and her to stay together for life.

However, if you keep offering her the wrong attraction experience (e.g. you're too nice, but she needs a guy to have more balls and not let her push him around), then she's going to be frustrated that you just don't understand her and what she really wants.

She Thinks Differently to You...and That is Okay

[image: You just don't understand me]

Fact: Men are different to women.

Generally speaking, when faced with the same situation, a man will react and feel differently than a woman would.

For example: A woman will watch a sad movie and may react by crying and needing her man to hug her and comfort her, whereas the man will feel the emotions, but won't feel the need to shed tears like a woman would.

Even if a man is deeply affected by the movie emotionally, and even if he gets a little misty eyed, he will still remain in control of his emotions and be the man.

However, what many guys fail to realize is that this is true for EVERYTHING.

Women will see and interpret things differently to men, and this usually includes how she interprets his attitude, behavior and reactions to what she tells him.

If he says or does the "wrong things" in her eyes, she will get angry with him and she'll accuse him of not understanding her.

If he then doesn't make the effort to understand her point of view, she will end up feeling misunderstood and even resentful towards him. Over time this can lead to her breaking up with him.

If youâre saying, âMy girlfriend said I donât understand her,â it is possible that youâre not fully listening to what sheâs really trying to tell you, which makes her feel frustrated and angry towards you and probably leads to many arguments and even full-blown fights between you.

Rather than get frustrated and angry with her, you need to understand what sheâs trying to tell you so that you can make the necessary changes to make her feel heard and understood.

Try to Understand Her Point of View

[image: Trying to understand her point of view]

Most guys are good guysÂ and donât intentionally go out of their way to behave in ways that will make their girlfriend angry or feel misunderstood.

However, despite their good intentions, sometimes they will behaveÂ in ways that turn her off.

No-one is perfect.

However, no-one likes to be told that they are wrong.

If, when your girlfriend tells you that your behavior or thinking is wrong in some way, for example she says youâre being selfish, or inconsiderate, or lazy, etc., itâs natural for you to want to deny it and lash out at her.

Often you may even feel that youâre doing the right thing but sheâs making you feel like youâre in the wrong and naturally you want to tell her, âYouâre just being so unreasonableâ or *âYouâre always being so petty.â*Â This only makes her feel even more angry and misunderstood.

Rather than jump to your own defense every time your girlfriend âattacksâ you or accuses you of doing something wrong, try first to understand where sheâs coming from. By putting yourself in HER shoes, you can determine what sheâs thinking and feeling.

Right now you might be saying, âWhy must I be the one who puts myself in her shoes, why doesnât she try to see things from MY point of view?â

First of all, youÂ are the man in the relationship...not her.

When you show her that youâre man enough to listen to her and make her feel heard, she will naturally follow your lead.

In a relationship, you need to love each other and help each other grow, not win arguments or try to prove each other wrong.

Secondly, when you try to see things from her perspective, you will be surprised to discover that her explanation alerts you to a misunderstanding between you which will allow you to see where sheâs coming from rather than just assume you know.

2 Common Reasons Why Women Feel Misunderstood

[image: Tell me what I need to know]

Most guys who say, âMy girlfriend said I donât understand her,â also say âI TRY to understand her or I THINK I understand her but when I ask her to tell me what she wants, she pulls away from me."

If you don't know exactly what she wants from you, you will most likely be offering her the wrong things when she accuses you of not understanding her.

You've got to be offering her what she REALLY wants, not what you THINK she wants, if you're going to make her feel understood.

However, a woman is NOT going to come out and tell you exactly what's bothering her. Why? Because she doesn't want to be your teacher and have to teach you how to be a man. She wants you to know how to be a man without her guiding you or teaching you.

If she has to spell it out for you she will feel like she is taking on the role of your teacher and this is a turn off for her.

All this might feel confusing to you if you don't really have much experience with women. However, when a woman says she feels misunderstood, it's often because a guy is making some of these classic mistakes:

1. He's taking her for granted.

Here's a common reason why some couples fight. Let's imagine that your girlfriend bought a beautiful new dress and made herself look pretty for you.

When you see her, instead of saying, "Wow! You look sexy! I'm going to take you out and show you off," you either don't even notice her, or worse yet, you wait for her to ask you what you think of her new dress and then say, "Oh, is that new? It's nice."

Then, when she gets upset with you and you say, "What do you want me to say?" or "Why are you getting so upset over a dress?" she will naturally respond by saying, "Forget about it! You just don't understand me!"

Generally speaking, most guys are not being cruel or inconsiderate; it's just that they don't realize how important this is to her.

Many guys don't realize that although a woman wants to be with an independent man who has purpose in life and independent interests apart from her, if he slips into neglecting her and failing to meet her needs in the relationship (e.g. making her feel loved, appreciated, attractive), she will feel misunderstood and begin losing respect and attraction for him.

2. He's not listening to her.

Most misunderstandings in a relationship begin when a man fails to really listen to what his woman is trying to tell him.

You don't have to give in and do what she wants (doing so will just put her in a position of power and she will lose respect for you as a man), but when a woman wants a certain thing from you and the relationship and you want something entirely different, and you write her concerns off, then it's only natural that she will feel that you're not listening to her.

For example: Your girlfriend might want you to stop watching TV every night and when you ignore her, she gets upset with you or even starts an argument.

To you, the argument over you watching TV might seem petty and you might even feel like she's trying to control you, or like she's trying to take away the things that you like.

However, if you dig deeper and listen to her, you might find that she wants to have a more balanced life with you where you and her get to spend more time together, go out together or do things that you both enjoy together.

Alternatively, this might be her way of telling you that youâ€”re not really making the effort to reach your true potential as a man. Rather than go out and better yourself and make things happen for you and her, youâ€”re lazing in front of the TV in your â€”comfort zoneâ€” and doing enough just to get by.

Even though she may not be able to come straight out and say that to you, she will make a big deal about the â€”TVâ€” hoping youâ€”ll figure it out for yourself.

When you write it off as her being a nag instead of making her feel heard, she will naturally feel hurt and sheâ€”ll accuse you of not understanding her.

By being more open to listening to her, rather than getting annoyed or writing things off to her being in a bad mood, you have the opportunity to improve your relationship with her.

Making Her Feel Understood

[image: Making your girlfriend feel understood]

When a woman says, â€”You donâ€”t understand me,â€” she expects you to figure out by yourself what is actually bothering her, and then make the appropriate changes to your thinking and behavior to show her that sheâ€”s been heard and understood.

If you try to get her to tell you what she wants, she will only close up and pull away from you even more.

If you want to stop saying, â€”My girlfriend said I donâ€”t understand herâ€” you have to show her that sheâ€”s been heard.

So, the next time she brings up an issue, even something minor, like you watching too much TV, or that youâ€”re texting her too much, or that youâ€”re being too jealous or insecure, rather than get annoyed with her, ask yourself, â€”What is she REALLY trying to tell me here?â€”

Dig a little deeper and youâ€”ll soon discover that thereâ€”s usually a deeper reason for her saying what sheâ€”s saying.

Then you can take the necessary action to change those things and improve yourself.

You don't have to be perfect or change everything about you just to please her, but, by showing her that youâ€”re taking her seriously and understand her point of view, she will naturally feel a renewed sense of love, respect and attraction for you.

She will feel like there is hope for you and her and that you're not so bad after all.

Additionally, if you're making her feel attracted to you in new ways, she will begin to feel excited that she is in a real relationship that keeps getting better over time.

Women know how difficult it is to find a guy who can make the relationship feel better and better over time, so when she realizes that you are that man, she will not want to let you go.

She will start being a better girlfriend to you and making sure that you feel happy, loved and appreciated.

Is it Okay to Let Your Girlfriend Have Guy Friends?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Over the years, we've received thousands of questions from guys about women and dating. A common question we get asked is: Is it okay to let your girlfriend have guy friends?

The answer is: It depends.

If your girlfriend is a woman of good character who is loyal and trustworthy, then okay. Having friends, both female and male, outside the relationship is quite normal and common for many couples.

However, if she has given you reason to doubt her loyalty, if in the past she has cheated on you or if she goes out often without you with these guy friends, there could be an underlying problem in your relationship.

Generally speaking, if a woman loves you, adores you and respects you as her man, she will prefer to spend most of her time with you than with other men; even if they're just friends.

[image: Girlfriend hanging out with guy friends]

Of course that's the simple answer. However, to best answer whether it is okay to let your girlfriend have guy friends, it's important to look at where the question is coming from.

Basically, when a guy is concerned about his girlfriend having guy friends, it usually boils down to 2 main reasons:

1. He is feeling jealous and insecure.
2. He has noticed that the relationship is no longer the way it used to be and he's worried that she's going to break up with him.

Finding Out What's Really Going On in Your Relationship

If your girlfriend having male friends is bothering you enough to ask, Is it okay to let your girlfriend have guy friends? then you probably have cause for concern. Not because this means she's going to cheat on you with them, but because you're feeling insecure about it.

Essentially, being jealous and insecure in a relationship leads to negative behaviors, such as being needy and clingy, which can lead to problems in the relationship. The truth is, women don't want to be stuck in a relationship with a clingy or needy guy. Why? Because this type of behavior can signal deeper underlying causes such as:

1. Making his girlfriend his purpose in life.

When a guy lacks purpose in life, he will often make the mistake of making his girlfriend his be-all-and-end-all so to speak. He will use the relationship to hide from the world instead of rising through the levels of life to reach his true potential as a man.

A common example of this is a guy who says, My girlfriend is my entire life. I do everything just for her, and who not only stops making goals for himself, but even stops hanging out with his friends or doing anything without her.

Yes, a woman wants to be with a man who loves and adores her, but she also wants to know that he has a plan for his life and his future (and hopefully her future with him).

If a guy uses his relationship to hide behind so that he doesn't have to face up to life, she will feel turned off and will instinctively look to other guys (even in the form of guy friends) to experience what it feels like to be with a real man.

2. A lack of confidence about his value to her.

Guys who spend all their time worrying about every guy who talks to, or even looks at, their girlfriend because they're afraid they will steal her away, only do so because they don't believe they are as valuable to her as she is to them.

These guys usually feel "lucky" to have snagged her because in reality they're not very confident in themselves and their ability to attract another woman if she dumps them.

Remember: Women are attracted to the strength in men and are turned off by weakness. So, if you are the type of guy who sees any other man (even her guy friends) as your competition, then it will actually turn her off you and will even push her towards perceiving these other guys as being more attractive to her than they really are.

She will begin to wonder if you're really the alpha male she thought you were and she will begin looking at other guys as being better than you.

3. A lack of trust.

As I mentioned earlier, unless there's a very good reason why a guy doesn't trust his girlfriend around other guys (because she cheated on him), constantly being distrustful of her only highlights his lack of confidence in himself as a man who can give his woman what she needs to stay faithful to him.

You can never really trust a woman 100%. However, to have a healthy and successful relationship with a woman, you HAVE to give her that trust.

That doesn't mean you are guaranteed that she won't betray that trust and that you won't end up feeling hurt and disappointed, but if you don't give her your trust fully, you'll end up falling into the trap of behaving like a weak, clingy insecure guy who lacks confidence.

All of which will end up destroying her attraction, love and respect for you as a man. And in the end she WILL break your trust and dump you for the kind of man who doesn't feel threatened by other guys because he knows he's good enough for her.

Sometimes Where There's Smoke There's Fire

Sometimes when a guy asks, "Is it okay to let your girlfriend have guy friends," it's because this is just one more thing in the relationship that is bothering him. If you're concerned about your girlfriend's guy friends, could it be that you noticed other signs that indicate she might want to break up with you?

Do any of these signs ring warning bells?

- Does she insist on going out with her guy friends all the time?
- Does she spend more time with her friends than she does with you?
- Does she dress up more attractively when she goes out with her friends than she does with you?
- Does she avoid communicating with you (via phone call or text message) when she's out with her friends?

- Has she stopped being affectionate with you and do you still have sex regularly?
- Does she prefer to go out clubbing with her friends and not have you around?

Answering yes to all or some of these questions could mean that your girlfriend is no longer feeling the way she wants to feel when she's with you, so she is looking to other men (even guy friends) to make her feel good about herself.

When You Feel Good About Yourself You Will Also Feel Good About Your Relationship

Ultimately, it only matters if it is okay to let your girlfriend have guy friends if you don't feel confident enough in yourself to maintain her attraction for you as her man.

My Girlfriend is Trying to Make Me Jealous

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're saying, My girlfriend is trying to make me jealous then you're probably feeling frustrated, confused and maybe even a little betrayed by your girlfriend right now.

You may be asking yourself, Why is she doing this to me? and even, Am I doing something wrong?

To better understand why your girlfriend is trying to make you jealous, you first need to understand that women behave in completely different ways to men. For men, things are usually as simple as What you see is what you get. Most men will say and do what they mean. Simple and straight forward.

However, women will rarely say (or do) what they mean. They'll say It's fine when they really mean It's NOT fine, or they'll say, I need space when what they really mean is, I want to break up with you.

When it comes to relationships, just because a guy manages to get himself a girlfriend, it doesn't mean he can then sit back and relax and just assume that the relationship will flow naturally by itself. In any relationship, it's the man's responsibility to maintain the love, respect and attraction that his woman feels for him.

Yet, at the same time, he needs to understand that it doesn't matter if him and his girlfriend have only just met, or if they've been dating for a long time, she will always test him. It doesn't matter how much attraction she feels for him, or how much she respects him; she will keep testing him. It doesn't even matter if she's head over heels in love with him; she will test him.

And one of the many tests women will subject a man to, is trying to make him jealous.

Why Do Women Test Men?

Often guys will ask us here at The Modern Man, Why are women so complicated? Why do they always do things that men can't understand? Why should a woman test a man; especially when they're in a relationship?

The fact is, a woman will test a man to see how much power she has over him. This is her way of checking that he is really the kind of man she wants him to be. If, when she tests him he faces her test with confidence and mental and emotional strength, she will feel attracted to him. Her respect for him will increase and she will naturally fall more deeply in love with him.

On the other hand if when a woman tests her man he crumbles under the pressure because he can't deal with it in a masculine and confident way, she will more than likely begin to question whether he's really the man she wants to be with.

When a guy who is inexperienced with women, or who simply doesn't understand women says, My girlfriend is trying to make me jealous, he naturally panics and ends up making mistakes that in her eyes add up to TEST FAILED.

3 Mistakes to Avoid Making When Your Girlfriend is Trying to Make You Jealous

The best approach to take when your girlfriend is trying to make you feel jealous is to simply not get involved in it.

Put your focus on other things, laugh at her attempts to make you jealous and just keep moving forward in life. If you can show your girlfriend that you have that type of emotional strength where you love her and want her in your life, but are not dependant on her for your emotional security or confidence, it actually makes her respect you.

However, if you don't take that approach, you might end up making one of the following mistakes...

1. Feeling insecure.

[image: Feeling insecure in a relationship]

Women are naturally attracted to confident, emotionally secure men and turned off by insecure, emotionally weak men. When a woman tries to make her boyfriend jealous and he reacts by becoming clingy, needy and insecure, she will feel repelled by him on a deep level.

Although it may seem normal for you to get upset when your girlfriend comments about, or flirts with other guys, the real reason is not her behavior but rather how you feel about yourself.

[image: Feeling insecure in a relationship]

If you feel that you're lucky to be with your girlfriend and that if she leaves you, you won't be able to get another girlfriend, you will naturally feel insecure when she appears to be interested in other men. However, all that you are doing is making her lose attraction and respect for you as a man. Don't get involved in her games. Simply love her and laugh off any attempts that she makes to cause you to feel jealous. Do that and you will pass most of the tests that women put you through.

2. Trying to make her jealous in return.

It might feel like a good idea to try and make her jealous back when she tries to make you jealous, but ultimately this is pointless and will only lead to needless arguments where she will try to make you out to be the bad guy even though she's the one who started it.

When you're confident in yourself and in your abilities to attract women, you don't have to try and make her jealous because deep down you know that you're already good enough and much better than any guy she could potentially hook up with.

3. Fighting over her.

Just because your girlfriend is trying to make you jealous, it isn't anyone else's fault. Picking a fight with another guy over her is just playing into her hands. She will get the satisfaction of knowing that she got to you and then she'll end up being the dominant one in the relationship.

However, if this happens, the relationship dynamic will go out of sync and she will end up dominating you, which will eventually lead to her losing respect for you.

You Can Pass Her Tests With Flying Colors

The next time you catch yourself thinking, “My girlfriend is trying to make me jealous and I don’t like it,” instead of getting upset or angry about it, use it as an opportunity to make her feel more attraction for you. As long as you believe in yourself, you can handle what she throws at you with a casual confidence that will draw her even closer to you.

When you’re confident in yourself it comes across in your actions, in your tonality and in your body language. No matter how she behaves, your actions (and re-actions) will be saying to her, “It’s okay if you want to make me jealous, I know I’m better than any guy you flirt with.” At the same time by not taking the bait, you are turning the tables on her.

When a guy doesn’t get jealous, a woman will naturally begin thinking, “Why isn’t he afraid of losing me? He must know he can easily replace me.” Without having to say it, you’re letting her know that you can have any other woman if you wanted to, but you are choosing to be with her.

This makes HER feel like she needs to be the one to work hard to keep YOU and this only makes her feel even more turned on and attracted to you.

What Makes a Healthy Relationship?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

All relationships go through stages and it's unrealistic to expect everything to be a bed of roses all of the time.

However, if the following elements are in place, the relationship should remain healthy:

1. The man is actively deepening the woman's love, respect and attraction over time, rather than taking her for granted.
2. The man has purpose in life and is rising through the levels of his true potential as a man, rather than hiding from it behind the woman.
3. Both the man and woman are able to love each other fearlessly, rather than loving each other in an insecure manner where they always try to protect their heart.
4. Both the man and the woman are genuinely committed to growing as a couple and creating a future together.
5. Both the man and the woman have the same type of long term goals for the relationship and are excited whenever they make any progress towards those goals together.
6. There is a clear masculine and feminine dynamic in the relationship (i.e. the man is clearly the man and the woman is clearly the woman, rather than the man and woman being equal in their expression of masculinity and femininity), which ensures that the sexual desire for each other doesn't die.

In your attempts to understand what makes for a healthy relationship, it's also helpful to look at where things often go wrong...

Common Problem 1: Living in Each Other's Pockets

Living in each other's pockets and being practically joined at the hip is not what makes a healthy relationship. Unfortunately, a lot of couples fall into this trap and they seem to think that spending every waking moment together is what "togetherness" is all about.

For some guys, this means not having any individual interests out with the relationship, and not spending any time with friends unless their girlfriend comes along. This is not healthy.

Firstly, "togetherness" does not necessitate being physically together at all times, it means feeling connected emotionally as well as physically, and it's a connection that can only be made when both parties are on the same wavelength in terms of what they want out of the relationship.

Secondly, not having any individual interests will eventually lead to both parties feeling suffocated by the relationship. Unless you're able to do your own thing, you're unable to grow as a person, and without individual growth, your relationship can't continue to grow - it stagnates.

A good example of this came from a guy called Alex who contacted The Modern Man for advice on how to get his sex life back on track. He'd been living with his girlfriend for just over six months and his sex life had taken a dive from once or twice every day to once a week if he was lucky.

Well, the first thing that needed addressing was that Alex should not be feeling "lucky" to be having sex on his girlfriend's terms, it should really be the other way around.

When a man creates and maintains the ideal sexual dynamic in a relationship, his woman will feel more than lucky to be having sex with him and she's going to be wanting it more than once a week.

When Alex and his girlfriend first moved in together, they effectively shut themselves off from the rest of the world in their own little loved-up cocoon.

They stopped hanging out with their friends and doing the individual stuff they used to do, choosing instead to stay in and snuggle up on the sofa every evening or only go to social events together as a couple.

To make matters worse, they also met up every day for lunch as their workplaces were just a short walking distance apart.

In Alex's words, he described his relationship as very close and his girlfriend as his soul mate because they were able to hang out and do everything together, without having to be around anyone else. Too much together time and the consequent lack of opportunity to grow as individuals was suffocating the life out of their relationship.

Eventually, they had nothing new to talk about; they had no time alone to discover anything new about themselves as individuals, and the relationship was becoming stale as a result.

The bottom line was that Alex's girlfriend was becoming less interested in sex because she was beginning to see him as more of a friend than a boyfriend.

Common Problem 2: Being Equals in Everything

Time and again we hear from guys who want to know why their relationship is not as happy as it once was when they've been doing everything by the book. Well, it all comes down to which book they've been learning from...!

Unfortunately, it has become quite a popular belief that modern couples should share all relationship responsibilities on a 50/50 basis.

This is based on the fact that it's now normal for both men and women to have full-time jobs, so both of them should do their fair share of household chores etc.

It's a theory that sounds good on paper, but the reality is that it doesn't create a healthy relationship in practice.

To create the ideal relationship dynamic, a man and a woman need to have their own roles within the relationship.

Now, before you start complaining that this all sounds a little too 1950s and not relevant to modern life, consider the fact that recent research has proved that role sharing makes it 50% more likely that a relationship will fail or end in divorce.

Statistics show that when men take on traditionally female roles and vice versa, relationship breakdowns are 50% more likely than in relationships where men are men and women are women, so to speak.

The reason for this is simple: Women want to be in a relationship with a man that they describe as a real man.

A man going by the "modern" idea of shared responsibility is a man who in a sense becomes less masculine and more feminine, and the same can be applied to women as they become more masculine and less feminine.

This upsets the all-important balance in sexual chemistry and the end result is less sex.

Maintain a Healthy Relationship By Embracing Your Role as the Man

The answer to the question of what makes a healthy relationship is really quite simple.

It takes a man with strong, alpha male characteristics to lead the way and to allow a woman to relax into feeling like a woman to create a healthy relationship dynamic.

When you accept your masculine role in the relationship, you allow yourself to create the ideal sexual dynamic between you and your woman and you create a stronger, happier, and healthier relationship as a result.

My Girlfriend Nags Me All the Time

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Nothing can be more frustrating than being in a relationship where you feel you're walking on eggshells around your girlfriend (fiancée or wife) all the time.

When you find yourself saying, "My girlfriend nags me all the time," and when nothing you seem to do is right for her, it's easy to start thinking, "I can't take this anymore" "Why is nothing I ever do good enough for her?" and "I love her, but I don't know what's wrong with her all the time."

Although it's easy to just write it off as her being difficult or fussy, or even to just ignore it and hope that somehow she'll miraculously stop behaving this way, when your girlfriend nags you, it's her way of telling you, "I'm not happy with the way things are in the relationship. You're not making me feel the way I want to feel and if you don't shape up and make some changes, I'm going to break up with you."

In a relationship, it's the man's responsibility to not only maintain the love, respect and attraction that his woman feels for him, but also to maintain the correct relationship dynamic.

If he fails to do that, she will gradually begin losing respect for him as a man, and she will start behaving in "negative" ways, like nagging him all the time, in an attempt to make him realize that she's not happy in the relationship.

If he fails to take any action and make her feel understood, she will become irritated and frustrated by the relationship and will usually end up breaking up with him.

What Is She Trying to Tell You Every Time She Nags You?

[image: My girlfriend nags me all the time]

A woman doesn't just "nag" because she likes the sound of her voice, so to speak. Even if to you she's being petty or unreasonable, like if she nags you to put the cap back on the toothpaste, or if she nags you because you came home late from work or college, to her these things pinpoint a deeper underlying issue.

A woman will nag a man because:

1. She feels more masculine than him.

In the past, men and women lived by clearly defined gender lines. The men had all the power and the women were forced to do what their father, and later on their husbands, told them to do.

In today's world, women have become so confident and independent, that most men end up believing women no longer need a man to lead in a relationship. This is why so many modern men no longer know how to behave around women. Add to this the fact that the media is constantly bombarding us with confusing signals.

Take for example the lyrics in popular songs like Destiny's Child "Independent Women":

"Tell me how you feel about this Try to control me boy you get dismissed"

Pay my own fun, oh and I pay my own bills

Always 50/50 in relationshipsâ€”â€” Destinyâ€”s Child

It almost seems like women want to think, behave and act like men and that guys have become an optional extra in their life. Yet, that isn't what is really going on. Women are simply becoming stronger and more independent and they want men to become even stronger than they are.

Most guys end up feeling confused about the â€”rightâ€” way to behave around women because they don't really know what their true place in a woman's life is. Some guysÂ respond by suppressing their masculinity and letting the woman â€”wear the pantsâ€” in the relationship because they think thatâ€”s what she wants.

Yet, regardless of how intelligent, strong and amazing a woman is, she still wants her man to be the man.

If youâ€”re saying, â€”My girlfriend nags me all the time but I donâ€”t know whyâ€” let me tell you why: Itâ€”s because sheâ€”s feeling more masculine than you. You are forcing her to be somewhat of “the man”Â in the relationship and sheâ€”s feeling the burden of always having to make the everyday decisions, or tell you what to do.

[image: My girlfriend nags me all the time]

Her nagging you is her way of letting you know that she wants you to be mentally and emotionally stronger than her, so that she can sometimes relax into being a feminine woman.

She doesnâ€”t want to feel pressured into being the man in the relationship, or have to â€”motherâ€” you because youâ€”re sitting back and suppressing your masculinity because you think thatâ€”s what she wants you to do.

If you keep forcing her to take on the masculine role, she wonâ€”t feel like a real woman and she will not enjoy being around you.

2. She feels he is taking her for granted.

For a woman to relax in the relationship and be a feminine woman, she needs to feel that her man is making her feel the way she wants to feel. It is the manâ€”s responsibility to maintain and grow the love, respect and attraction that him and his woman feel for each other.

However, many guys who lack experience with women often assume that getting a woman to go out with him is where the hard work lies and once sheâ€”s â€”hisâ€” he can relax and revert to old (negative) patterns and behaviors. Add to this the pressures of everyday life, and it often leads to him becoming neglectful of his girlfriend (fiancÃ© or wife).

When this happens, a woman naturally begins to feel taken for granted. She feels un-loved and un-appreciated and she resorts to nagging him in the hopes that heâ€”ll notice how miserable she is and make changes in his attitude and behavior.

3. She feels like she has more purpose in life than he does.

A woman likes the idea of being with a man who is able to have his say in the world and who will ultimately be able to provide for himself, her and their children if they have any. The idea of being with a man who is going to struggle to put food on the table is not appealing to women.

Yet, a woman will be just as attracted to a man who has the potential to become more powerful and successful, as she is to a guy who is already powerful and successful.

When a woman ends up in a relationship with a guy she perceives as having potential to become more successful in his life, only to discover that heâs hiding from his true potential and using his relationship with her as an excuse because he actually lacks purpose, she will naturally feel turned off.

She will end up becoming a nag in the hope that heâll pick himself up and rise through the levels of life like a real man. If he fails to do that, she will eventually lose respect and attraction for him and eventually her love for him will die.

When She Feels Heard She Will Stop Nagging

When a woman nags her guy, she will rarely come out and say what is actually bothering her. So, rather than say, *âIâm tired of being in charge and I need you to step up and man up,*â sheâll say things like, âWhy canât you ever make a decisionâ or âIâm tired of telling you to put your stuff away / take out the garbage / pay the billsâ etc.

If youâre going to stop saying, *âMy girlfriend nags me all the time,*â youâre going to have to improve your understanding of women. You need to understand what your girlfriendâs body language, actions and behavior is really saying. You need to âdecipherâ her nagging so that you can figure out what is really bothering her.

Once you know what is causing her to be a nag, you need to take action and fix those things in yourself. Iâm not saying you have to become someone youâre not, but rather a better, more complete version of who you are right now.

When your girlfriend feels understood, she will naturally relax and open up to the idea of being your woman, because she can fully rely on you to be her man. She wonât feel the need to nag you anymore because sheâll be feeling the way she really wants to feel when sheâs with you.

How to Survive a Long-Distance Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're wondering how your long distance relationship is going to survive, the first thing you need to know is this...

She will wait for you, be faithful to you and yearn to see you, as long as you are continuing to trigger her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you. If you are doing that, then there is no reason for her to want to leave you and find a new guy.

Most women spend much of their lives trying to find a guy who can deepen their feelings of love, respect and attraction in a relationship and when they find it, they rarely let go.

Watch this video by Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man) to understand how a woman's attraction for a man works and how you can use it to protect your long distance relationship...

How Long Have You and Her Been Together in Person?

We often get emails from guys who want to know how to survive a long-distance relationship and not lose their girl in the process.

Sometimes it's because the woman they are in a relationship with is relocating temporarily through her work or going travelling for a few months but usually it's because she's been offered the job opportunity of a lifetime with the only downside being that it'll mean moving to a different town or spending long periods of time overseas.

Whether or not a long-distance relationship can survive or not is down to how much both parties want it to survive, and a big part of that is going to come down to how long they've been together and how well-established the relationship is.

Generally speaking, relationships that are in their early days are unlikely to survive. When two people are still getting to know one another, putting distance between them inevitably leads to drifting apart because the emotional bond that's needed to hold them together when they're not physically together hasn't had a chance to form.

However, the majority of guys who email us here at The Modern Man have been in their relationships long enough to know that it is a serious relationship that they want to keep alive, even though it's now going to be a long-distance one.

The very fact that guys ask how to survive a long-distance relationship reveals that they already have concerns about whether or not the woman will want to keep it alive. Sometimes they are already a few months down the line and the reality of a long-distance relationship is much tougher than they imagined.

Sometimes they are just about to relocate and the reality of what it's going to mean in terms of their relationship is just beginning to hit home. Either way, the concerns guys have are generally always the same, and they are concerns that revolve around their own insecurities.

What If She Meets Someone Else?

[image: What if she meets someone else?]

When a guy's main concern is that she might meet someone else, he needs to ask himself why. Is his gut instinct telling him that she will cheat, or is it just a case of him being insecure?

If you are in an established relationship and you both want to keep the relationship alive even though it's going to become a long-distance one, why would she start looking for someone new the moment you're gone?

Look at it this way, you're still going to be the same guy she fell in love with and the guy she wanted to get into a relationship with even when you are hundreds of miles away from each other, right? Well, let's just say that if you're not, then that's where you're getting things wrong.

If you allow the change of circumstances to change you into someone else because it unleashes a truck-load of insecurities in you, you might not be the same guy she fell in love with any more.

Women are attracted to confident men, men who are secure in themselves and in who they are, and men who have a relaxed, self-assured attitude to life as a consequence.

Women know that a man with these qualities is a man who has his pick of women so they work hard at chasing him down and securing his affections for themselves. If you become an insecure guy who questions her every move, and you become desperate in your need for constant reassurance from her, you're in danger of losing her respect and killing the sexual attraction in the process.

What If She Cheats on Me?

[image: What if she cheats on me?]

Feelings of insecurity coming from you will change the way she feels about you. The way you feel affects the way you think and the way you behave.

If you are consumed with feelings of doubt and feelings of jealousy every time you hear another man's name mentioned, you are more than likely going to behave in an overly-possessive way. Your insecurities force her into "taking charge" in the relationship and she will feel under pressure to constantly reassure you and constantly bolster your flagging self-esteem.

If this is allowed to happen, you're really getting it wrong, because she's no longer able to feel like a woman in the relationship. In fact, she's going to feel like a mother caring for a child and the all-important sexual spark that's needed between a man and a woman is lost.

If she then meets a man who possesses all the character traits that first attracted her to you, she may well cheat on you because she will feel powerless to resist a man who reminds her of what it feels like to be a woman.

How Can I Make Sure That I Don't Stuff Up the Relationship?

Getting it right comes down to not letting the change of circumstances in your relationship change the man you are, or change your masculine role in the relationship.

A temporary distance between you need not change the relationship dynamic if a successful dynamic already exists. When you are an emotionally stable man; a man with genuine self-confidence, a man with strong alpha male characteristics, and a man who is genuinely comfortable in his own skin, then you are a man who sparks an instinctive sexual attraction in your woman.

When a successful relationship dynamic exists, there's no place for unwarranted jealousy, over-protectiveness, clinginess, or any other destructive negative emotions and behaviours. You feel confident in your role as the leader in the relationship and she feels confident in her role as the woman in the relationship.

Sure, you're going to miss each other and you're going to have to figure out ways of keeping each other satisfied when you're apart, but when you get it right, the emotional connection you have will make sure that sexual sparks are going to fly whenever you happen to get together physically.

My Girlfriend Had a Fling

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're saying, My girlfriend had a fling, you are probably feeling very hurt, betrayed, angry and confused right now.

You are probably asking yourself, How could she do this to me? Does this mean our relationship is over? Was it my fault; what did I do wrong? or even Can our relationship be saved after what she did?

Well, it depends.

The key to any successful relationship is trust and although you can never fully trust a woman 100%, you just have to. A relationship cannot function without trust, which is why you should now honestly answer these questions to yourself:

1. Do you want to stay in a relationship with your girlfriend who cheated on you, or do you want to break up with her?
2. Can you fully forgive your girlfriend for having a fling, put it all behind you and learn to trust her again so that your relationship can move forward and become better than before?
3. Can you accept that certain behaviors and attitudes from you may have caused your girlfriend to stop feeling the way she wanted to feel when she was with you, so she turned to someone else to get what she felt was lacking in your relationship?
4. Are you willing to make changes, fix any of your issues (that may have caused her to lose respect and attraction for you) and become an even better man than you are right now, so that you never again have to find yourself in the situation where you are saying, My girlfriend had a fling?
5. If you had your choice of women right now and could be dating and having sex with as many hot women as you want, would you still be thinking about staying with your girlfriend?
6. Are you simply holding on to a woman who cheated on you because you're afraid that if you dump her you won't be able to find another (even better) woman than her?
7. Do you lack confidence in yourself and in your ability to approach, meet and date new women?
8. How would you feel if you married your girlfriend or had a family with her and she cheated on you again? Do you really want to go down that path?
9. Do you sincerely believe that she made a mistake and will never do it again?

You Can Make a Fresh Start

Right now you're probably switching between feeling angry with your girlfriend and wanting to hurt her back, and feeling like you don't want to lose her.

Either way, when your girlfriend had a fling with another guy, she highlighted the fact that your relationship is not what it should be. This is why, although what she did really, really sucks, it's also a good thing because you can make a fresh start.

How?

1. Understand what caused her to have a fling.

Whether you want to stay in a relationship with your girlfriend, or you want to dump her and go out and get yourself an even better and more attractive girlfriend than her, you first have to understand what caused her to cheat on you. Why?

Understanding what caused her to have a fling benefits you because when you know the real reasons why she did this, you can make the correct changes that will then make her feel understood and happy to start the relationship again with a clean slate.

Alternatively, if you get into a relationship with a new woman, you won't be at risk of making the same mistakes that caused her to have a fling in the first place. On the other hand, if you don't know exactly what she really wants you to change, you will most likely end up making the same mistakes again.

Although it's easy to put the blame entirely on her for what happened, blaming her is not going to make the underlying issues in your relationship, (and in future relationships) go away. If you decide to stay with her, and then only "sweep everything under the carpet," what will happen is, eventually she will either have another fling, or, she will dump you.

2. Fix your issues and improve yourself.

If you renew your relationship with her without fixing your issues and becoming the kind of man that she needs you to be, she will most-likely cheat on you again.

On the other hand, if you dump her and get into a new relationship without fixing the issues from your current relationship, you will inevitably repeat the same mistakes and end up being cheated on again, or simply being dumped.

This is why it's so important to understand what caused your girlfriend to have a fling; so that you can fix those things and avoid repeating past mistakes, whether in your current relationship, or in a new relationship.

But, you'll probably be saying, "SHE is the one who had a fling, why should I be the one who has to change?" Basically, you have to understand that when a woman is getting what she needs from her man, she will never cheat on him because no other guy will be able to make her feel the way her man already does.

However, when a man behaves in ways that turn her off, she will look for a guy to fill the gaps that she's feeling in her relationship.

For example: If a guy is clingy, needy and insecure in his relationship, his girlfriend (fiancée or wife) will feel smothered. If he doesn't fix this behavior she will naturally find herself drawn to men who are confident and independent. Why? Women are instinctively drawn to strength in men and repelled by weakness.

Another example is if a guy takes her for granted, is careless with her feelings and doesn't put in the effort to make her feel loved, appreciated and cared for in the relationship. Naturally, when this happens, she will look for a guy who is attentive, caring and treats her like a princess and makes her feel the way she wants to feel.

Whatever you decide to do with your current relationship; understanding and then fixing the issues that caused your girlfriend to have a fling will help you in the long run.

3. Decide what YOU want to do.

The changes you make in your attitude and your behavior will definitely help make your girlfriend regain respect, love and attraction for you as a man. However, whether you're prepared to give your relationship with her another chance depends solely on you â€œ NOT her!

You can decide if you want to forgive her and trust her again. If you do, it will be because you want to, not because you are afraid that if you lose her you will never be able to find another girlfriend again.

Don't Let Her Actions Destroy Your Sense of Self-Worth

You can sit around saying, â€œMy girlfriend had a fling,â€œ and feeling like a worthless victim, or you can use this bad experience as an opportunity to improve yourself and become an even better man than you are already.

The fact is, youâ€™re not changing for her, or any other woman, youâ€™re changing for YOU. Youâ€™re not changing who you are deep down as a guy, instead you are adding to who you already are right now.

When you become a stronger, more confident and more well-rounded man than you already are, your girlfriend (and other women) will see it in your actions and in your body language and will be drawn to you.

Your girlfriend (present or future) will feel like SHE has to work hard to maintain YOUR interest, because she knows that if she steps out of line, not only can you dump her, you can also replace her in a heartbeat.

Can Long-Distance Relationships Work?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

A long distance relationship will work if:

1. You are the type of guy that she is willing to wait for and be faithful to.
2. You are able to build on her attraction and respect for you from a distance.
3. You don't become insecure, overbearing or boring during the times she is away from you.

Her feelings of respect and attraction for you are going to be based on how you make her feel when she interacts with you on the phone or a video call (e.g. Skype, Facetime, etc) and when she looks at how you are living your life via social media.

If you're unsure how a woman's attraction for a man really works, watch this eye-opening video by Dan Bacon (founder of The Modern Man) to understand how it works...

Mixed Opinions

If you look around online, there are just as many people saying that long distance relationships cannot work as there are people saying that they can work.

People who have been there and tried it for themselves will tell you that the reality of not spending physical time together makes it impossible to maintain any kind of lasting emotional connection and the outcome is that you eventually drift apart.

Yet, should their personal experience lead to the conclusion that all long-distance relationships are doomed to failure? It didn't work out for them, but could it work out for you? Can long-distance relationships work?

Making Connections

If you have just met someone who lives in a different location to you and it's not a distance that makes for an easy commute on a regular basis, there's little chance of your relationship going anywhere. A successful relationship between a man and a woman is a relationship built on sexual attraction.

If you are in the early stages of a relationship, there's going to be an instinctive need for physical contact when the sexual dynamic is right, and it's the physical connection that leads to the development of a meaningful emotional connection.

If you don't have that physical contact, you're going to struggle to get connected or stay connected on any level. So, in this case, the answer to the question of, "Can long-distance relationships work?" is no.

Unless a solid physical and emotional connection has been established in a relationship before it becomes a long-distance one, it's not going to work out.

Phil's story...

Phil met Jude at a mutual friend's wedding. In his email to me, he wanted to know where he was going wrong with his relationship because four months down the line he had still not had sex with her.

In that four months, Phil had been away on three business trips and each trip took at least 10 days, so they had actually only been on six dates since the wedding. Because of this, physical contact was limited, but the real problem was that Phil was on his best behaviour each time they got together.

Unfortunately, Phil had made the all too common mistake of thinking that treating a lady right meant being a gentleman and keeping his hands to himself until he was given the go-ahead.

The go-ahead was never given because Phil's hands-off approach was standing in the way of Jude being able to feel like a woman in his company. The lack of physical connection left Jude feeling she needed to keep her guard up, so the relationship couldn't move forward.

Making it Work

The world is a much smaller place now than it was even just a generation ago. If you go back two or three generations, the majority of men only met women who lived in their local area and it wasn't unusual for people not to have moved away from the town they were born in.

This is no longer the case. Today, a typical night out socialising in bars and clubs can lead to meeting women from all over the world, let alone different towns in your own country.

If you're a guy who has taken my advice and learned how to approach women, get engaged in conversation and move things forward into kissing and sex, you might find that you're in the position of wanting to develop a more committed relationship with a woman you've met.

So what happens if she's only in your area temporarily, or what happens if you're in a job that involves spending three months of every year working overseas? If there's already a physical and emotional connection, can long-distance relationships work?

The answer is yes, they can, but only when both parties are willing to do whatever it takes to make it work.

Mark's story...

Mark and Kate have been together for three years. They met at work when they both worked for the same company and moved in together 10 months later. Two months after setting up home together, Mark was head-hunted by another company and offered a dream job. However, accepting it was going to mean frequent overseas trips for up to three months at a time.

It wasn't an easy decision, says Mark. Kate had only just moved in and we were really happy with life, but I knew that the job offer was the opportunity of a lifetime for me.

Two years after accepting the new job, Mark and Kate are still together, so how did they make their long-distance relationship work?

It all comes down to wanting the same things in life, says Mark.

Kate and I both wanted to keep our relationship together so we sat down and had a totally open and honest discussion about what being apart for months at a time would mean for us. Sex was a big concern, so we had to be up-front about how we felt and then figure out ways to deal with the separation and still satisfy each other's needs. For us, the time apart has allowed us to grow as *individuals and our relationship has grown stronger as a result.*â€œ

Mark's story is proof that long-distance relationships can work, and Mark and Kate are not alone. Couples with a strong physical and emotional connection can find ways to make temporary separations work when they already have the right relationship dynamic.

Modern relationships are different to the relationships our grandparents had, and many modern relationships become long-distance relationships simply because the world and our lifestyles have changed.

However, something that hasn't changed is the need for sexual attraction to bring a couple together and then keep them together. In Mark's case, the sexual spark wasn't dampened by being apart, in fact, being able to grow as a result of his new job fanned the flames.

*It was being my own man and knowing where I wanted to go in life that attracted Kate to me in the first place. Getting the chance to further my career and going for it turned out to be a real turn on for her. She loves the man that I am, and she loves supporting me in my opportunity to realise my ambitions. If anyone asks me how we manage to make it work, I tell them I found the right woman.*â€œ

Is it Okay to Cry in Front of Your Girlfriend?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

It depends.

In most cases, a woman will lose respect and attraction for a guy who cries in front of her. However, there are exceptions, which we will discuss throughout this post.

The first thing we need to get clear when answering the question, “Is it okay to cry in front of your girlfriend?” is to understand the dynamic between a man and his girlfriend when they are in a relationship.

Naturally when a guy is single he will behave differently to when he is in a relationship. Of course, a man’s fundamental beliefs will always stay the same, but some guys who have no, or little, experience with women, will put on an act to initially attract a girlfriend.

Once they settle into a relationship, all the qualities that attracted her to him begin to fade away. For example, a guy might pretend to be more confident, masculine, strong and in control than he really is, but when he settles into the relationship’s comfort zone he allows his insecurities and fears to come out.

Instead of continuing to take the lead in the relationship and being the more dominant one so that he can maintain his girlfriend’s respect and attraction for him, he instead allows her to become more dominant and he starts behaving like a woman, while she is forced into the role of wearing the pants in the relationship.

Which brings me back to the question: Is it okay to cry in front of your girlfriend?

2 Example Scenarios

Scenario #1 Jason and Donna

Jason is a single guy.

One day he’s at a party with some friends when he spots a beautiful woman. The first thing that goes through his mind is, “Wow! She’s really hot! I’d definitely have sex with HER!” Casually he walks up to her and starts a conversation.

He’s funny, interesting and flirts with her creating sexual attraction between him and her. Her name is Donna. Slowly Jason starts thinking, “I really like her. I want her to be my girlfriend.” He asks her out on a date and she accepts. Soon Jason and Donna are a couple.

Jason’s friends are jealous because they can’t believe Jason managed to get such a beautiful woman to be his girlfriend. In the beginning while they are still dating Donna wants to impress Jason, so she makes an effort to please him by always looking beautiful, wearing make up, doing her hair and taking care of her figure so that she can retain the attraction between her and him. She feels lucky to have such a strong, masculine guy interested in her and she is doing her best to make him her boyfriend.

However, over time things change!

As soon as Jason and Donna settle into a comfortable relationship, Donna starts letting herself go. Instead of dressing up, she hangs around in an old, dirty tracksuit all day. When they go out together she never wears make up anymore and she always wears boring clothes that aren't flattering. Worst of all she eats all day. Suddenly her hot body turns to fat. Jason feels turned off by her now and he avoids wanting to have sex with her and he doesn't go out in public with her anymore.

As you can see, all the things (her looks) that attracted Jason to Donna are no longer there. The thing is, Jason is not being shallow. It's just a fact that men are mostly attracted to a woman's physical appearance and how that makes him feel.

When a woman lets herself go, a guy may stop feeling attraction for her and the relationship will then suffer.

Now let's look at a scenario from the woman's perspective.

Scenario #2 â Frank and Cindy.

Frank and Cindy meet in much the same way as Jason and Donna. Cindy is really beautiful and most guys think she's quite a catch. Frank on the other hand is just an ordinary guy (maybe even a little bit ugly).

In fact, Frank is so unattractive physically that a lot of other guys see him with Cindy and wonder, What has he got that I don't? Why would a beautiful woman like her choose HIM?

Cindy would say, Frank is SO confident. He's a real man who knows how to make a woman feel safe and taken care of. You see, what has happened between Cindy and Frank is a classic example of what happens between men and women ALL the time.

Like I mentioned before, men are mostly attracted to women based on how they look. This is why a guy will even date a beautiful woman even if he doesn't much care for her personality. On the other hand, women are mostly attracted to the things about men that are not related to looks.

When Frank approached Cindy he behaved in ways that made her feel instant sexual attraction for him. What she didn't realize at the time was that Frank was only pretending to be confident, self assured and mentally and emotionally strong.

Deep down Frank feels shy, insecure and nervous around beautiful women. However, as luck would have it, Cindy fell for him that night and soon they were boyfriend and girlfriend.

Then things began to change.

Soon Frank's real personality began to come through. You see deep down Frank felt weak and insecure. These feelings began to come through in strange ways. When Frank had a bad day at work, he'd come home and CRY.

If someone upset him; Frank would CRY. In the beginning Cindy would comfort him. She'd think, It must have been a really bad day. I'm sure Frank won't do this again. However, Frank began to cry over things that 99% of men wouldn't even get watery eyed over.

[image: Is it okay to cry in front of your girlfriend?]

Whether he was watching a sad movie or if his boss was being difficult with him at work, he'd cry. Eventually, Cindy and Frank started fighting; and guess what? Yes, Frank would CRY!

Eventually Cindy had enough and she broke up with him (and yes he cried then too and begged her to stay).

Yet, WHY did Cindy break up with him?

Was it because she was a cold hearted bitch?

No.

Just like Donna stopped making Jason feel attraction for her by letting herself go, in the same way Frank stopped making Cindy feel the way she wanted to feel. In the beginning Cindy was attracted to the strength in Frank.

She felt attraction for his confidence, masculinity and mental and emotional strength. When Frank started behaving like a woman, Cindy began to feel insecure in the relationship. She began to lose respect for Frank as a man and finally she stopped feeling attraction for him too. This is normal. Women are attracted to the strength in men and repelled by weakness.

[image: Feeling turned off after her boyfriend cried]

And this is why real men don't cry in front of their girlfriends over minor, insignificant things.

There Are Exceptions

Of course there are always exceptions to any rule.

For example: When a close loved one, such as a parent, grandparent, sibling or close friend dies, it's perfectly okay for a guy to cry at the funeral or get watery eyed. A few tears can even be considered a good and healthy thing and a woman will not lose sexual attraction for her man because of it.

Another example of when it's okay for a guy to watery eyed in front of his girlfriend is when he achieves something great, like receiving a great award or accomplishing a great feat (climbing a mountain, crossing an ocean solo, winning a gold medal, etc.). In cases such as these getting watery eyed (but not crying) in front of your girlfriend will not diminish her attraction for you.

However, if you cry, sob and loose control of yourself, she will more than likely turn away and wait for you to regain control of yourself. She won't want to see if you in that emotionally weak state because women aren't attracted to emotional weakness.

Getting watery eyed because you are real enough to feel emotions is different than crying uncontrollably. If you carry on too long she will naturally start thinking, "I wish he'd stop crying now. He's behaving like a girl."

Be the Strong Man That She Needs

I hope that by giving you the above scenarios I have been able to answer your question of, "Is it okay to cry in front of your girlfriend?"

Ultimately, a woman is attracted to a man because of how he makes her feel and the stronger he is (emotionally), the better she will feel around him. When a guy behaves in ways that make her feel feminine, protected and taken care of, she feels attraction.

If on the other hand she feels that she has to carry the slack in the relationship to compensate for her man's weakness, she will at best, begin to feel like a mother figure or sister to him and at worst, she will begin to lose respect and attraction for him.

Get watery eyed if want to, but make sure you stay in control of your emotions and make sure that you remain being the "man" in your relationship.

My Girlfriend Likes to Party and I Don't

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Being in a relationship doesn't mean you should live in each other's pockets.

Having friends and interests apart from each other is normal and healthy, and unlike in past generations where men could leave the house whenever they pleased while the women stayed at home, women today are as likely to have a girls night out as guys are to have a guys night out.

However, where do you draw the line? For example: Is it safe to let your girlfriend to go partying without you?

It depends. If you're okay with it and it's something the two of you agree to, then sure. However, if you're saying, "My girlfriend likes to party and I don't" you're probably not feeling entirely comfortable with the arrangement. However, you don't want to come across as being the clingy, needy, jealous and insecure boyfriend who tries to control his girlfriend's every move, right?

Here's the thing: If partying is an essential must do thing in your girlfriend's life that she simply can't live without, then she has to do it even if you don't like it. She has to trust her gut instinct and follow her heart. However, that being said, when in a loving relationship, it's also normal and natural for her to change over time.

Often, a woman will naturally reach a point in her life where she needs to change. She will find that she wants to stop behaving like she used to, stop doing what she did when she was single and she will start doing what is necessary to keep her relationship together for life, or at least for the long term.

She will realize that for a relationship to be happy, healthy and lasting, both her and her boyfriend have to work at growing the trust, respect, attraction and love they have for each other and this includes giving up certain things, like partying all the time.

The question is: If your girlfriend likes to party and you don't should you be worried about it, or should you just relax and let her enjoy herself?

Trust is Vital in a Relationship

Being able to trust each other in a relationship is vital if the relationship is going to last and be happy. However, trust is also a very fragile thing. Although when in a relationship you HAVE to trust each other, you also have to be aware of the fact that that trust can easily be broken one day.

If your girlfriend is a decent woman who treats you with respect and generally doesn't give you any reason to doubt her loyalty to you, then partying with her girlfriends once in a while is perfectly okay.

The question is: Is your girlfriend giving you other reasons to doubt her loyalty to you? Is she behaving in any of these ways?

1. Does she go partying with single girlfriends?

[image: My girlfriend likes to party, but I don't]

Itâ€™s one thing for a woman to hang out with friends who also have boyfriends. Even going to a club can be okay if she goes with other women who are in a committed relationship, because in a case like that itâ€™s not about going out to find a man, but rather about dancing and having a good time together.

However, if your girlfriend is going out to clubs, bars and parties with SINGLE girlfriends who are looking to find a man, she is putting herself in a position to get hit on too.

By their very nature, nightclubs are designed for partying, drinking, dancing and finding someone to have sex with. Even if your girlfriend is not open to being hit on, simply by being around women who ARE, she is opening herself up to being approached by other men.

After a drink or two a personâ€™s inhibitions naturally lessen, so, if your girlfriend continuously puts herself in a situation where sheâ€™s hanging out with other women looking to be picked up, and then has a few drinks and gets approached by a guy, she will be less likely to resist him.

This can mean she will openly flirt with him and she may even end up kissing him or taking his phone number.

If your girlfriend loves and respects you, she wonâ€™t be interested in going partying with single girlfriends and putting herself in a position to get hit on by men. Instead sheâ€™ll have just as much fun going out with her friends to restaurants, coffee shops or to each otherâ€™s houses.

2. Does she go partying with single men?

When a woman goes out with single, men such as guy friends or work colleagues on a regular basis, itâ€™s not a good sign. Even if sheâ€™s not interested in them herself, someone in the group may be interested in her and is just waiting for her to have a few drinks and let her guard down to make his move.

No matter how much your girlfriend likes to party and you donâ€™t, if itâ€™s a choice between partying it up with other guys, or going somewhere else with you, you should always be her first choice. If youâ€™re not, sheâ€™s clearly not as committed to being in the relationship as you are.

3. Does she insist on going partying without you?

When a woman feels love and respect for her boyfriend she would rather have him come along to most things with her. Short of it being a â€œgirls onlyâ€ birthday party, or wedding shower, if your girlfriend insists on going out partying by herself, she is clearly opening herself up to meeting other men.

In a relationship, you have to give a woman your full trust, but you still have to be aware of the red flags when they pop up. If your girlfriend would rather go out without you, it doesnâ€™t sound like she considers you to be â€œthe oneâ€ for her.

Maybe youâ€™ve also simply stopped saying and doing the types of things that make her feel attracted to you. Youâ€™ might have fallen in the trap of taking her love, respect and attraction for granted and are just expecting that she will stick by you because things felt good at the start of the relationship.

4. Have you ever found an unknown guyâ€™s number on her phone after a night out?

If a woman has a boyfriend and isnâ€™t open to cheating on him, she wonâ€™t take another guyâ€™s number. That being said, she could have taken the number just to get him to leave her alone, but if that was really the case, she would have at least told her boyfriend about it, or she would have deleted it quickly off her phone as soon as he turned his back.

What Are You Prepared to Do About it?

You can sit around saying, “My girlfriend likes to party and I don’t” and hoping that things will change by themselves. However, if your girlfriend is giving you cause to doubt her loyalty to you, you have to ask yourself, “Why am I putting up with this?” and “What am I going to do to change it?”

If you love your girlfriend and you want to keep her in your life, it’s your responsibility as her man to grow the love and attraction between you so that she only has eyes for you.

If her eyes are wondering, then somewhere along the line you stopped making her feel the way she wants to feel, and she’s looking outside of your relationship for the attention, attraction and excitement she’s not getting from you.

Rather than sit around hoping she’ll “grow out of it” and eventually get over her desire to party, you have to identify the problems in your relationship and make an effort to fix any issues and attitudes that are pushing your girlfriend away from you.

On the other hand, if this is really a problem in your relationship, and no matter what you do, your girlfriend still wants to go partying when you don’t, ask yourself, “Why am I sticking around with a woman who doesn’t have the same values and interests as me?” Could it be that you don’t believe you can do better?

Whatever the case, we are here to help you. Whether you need to become the man that your girlfriend really wants you to be, or whether you want to build your confidence and go out and get yourself an even better girlfriend; we have everything you need right here on this website.

How to Control Jealousy in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you're looking for advice on how to control jealousy in a relationship, the first thing that you need to know is this...

You shouldn't try to "control" jealousy in a relationship; you should try to get rid of it completely.

How can you get rid of your feelings of jealousy?

Give Her Your 100% Trust and Let the Relationship Unfold Naturally

[image: Give her your full trust]

When in a relationship with a woman, you have to give her your 100% trust so that the relationship can be free to grow, mature and reach higher levels of love, respect and attraction. You have to trust that she feels attracted to you, trust she loves you and trust that she is committed to you.

She might break that trust, but that's the risk you have to take if you want the love, respect and attraction to grow and mature between you. Without the foundation of unconditional trust, neither of you will ever be able to fully relax and enjoy the type of companionship, intimacy and closeness that comes with an emotionally secure relationship.

You Have to Remain Strong, Especially When She Tests You

[image: You have to stay strong]

Women are not attracted to the emotional weakness or insecurity of men, so if you want to remain attractive to your woman in a relationship, you have to remain emotional strong and secure at all times.

...especially when she tests you.

Regardless of how great the relationship felt early on (e.g. you had awesome sex, she said "I love you" 20 times a day, you could talk to each other on the phone for hours, etc) or how smooth things seem to be going between you and your woman right now, she will ALWAYS test your emotional strength to see if you are man enough for her.

The tests that a woman will put you through will go on for the rest of your life, so you'd better get used to it now. It never ends and there is a good reason why, which I will explain later.

Two of the guaranteed tests that a woman will put you through during a relationship are:

1. When she pulls back her interest and stops being affectionate towards you.
2. When she tries to make you jealous in very subtle or obvious ways by saying that other guys are interested in her, or that she finds another guy attractive.

How a guy reacts to those tests will determine the path that the relationship will take. If he reacts with insecurity and jealousy, she will begin to lose respect and attraction for him and if that happens often enough or for long enough, she will gradually begin to disconnect with the desire to be in love with him.

On the other hand, if he reacts with confidence, love and emotional strength, her feelings of love, respect and attraction for him will deepen over time. The couple will be able to reach the higher levels of the relationship and get to experience what it feels like to be truly in love in an emotionally secure relationship.

A personal example of a test that my girlfriend (who is now my wife) hit me with happened while we were watching MTV on the sofa at home. The singer Will.i.am came on the screen (the black guy from Black Eyed Peas) and she said, "I love his eyes. Now, he's a handsome black man...I like him." She didn't have to say that out loud to me. She could have kept it to herself, rather than putting it out there to see how I would react. Yet, she was just doing what women do; they instinctively test men to see how emotionally secure they are.

Why? Women are attracted to the strength of men and turned off by the weakness. If a man continually reacts in an emotionally insecure way to her tests, a woman will not only lose touch with her feelings of attraction for him, but she will begin to lose respect for him and then begin to fall out of love with him. It's just how it works.

Anyway, so when my girlfriend mentioned that Will.i.am was handsome and that she loved his eyes, I could have begun to feel insecure and jealous about her finding Will.i.am to be attractive. Yet, I didn't. Why?

I am aware that the fleeting attraction that I feel for 100s of women that I see on TV means nothing compared to what I feel for her. She's the one who I am sitting on the sofa with and she's the one who I've chosen to be with in a relationship, not those random women on TV who will be gone in a flash.

The same applies to her.

I am the guy that she is in love with, in a committed relationship with and it doesn't matter to me if she feels a fleeting attraction for some random guy on TV or a guy walking past us on the street. I trust in the fact that we love each other, are attracted to each other, respect each other and are growing together as a couple.

Me feeling a temporary attraction to a woman walking by us on the street or a woman on TV isn't going to make me break up with her and vice versa.

By the way...

In case you're wondering what my reaction to her comment was, it was this, "Yes, he's a handsome man..." and I then talked about how great his music is and what the Black Eyed Peas did for the music industry.

30 seconds later, her and I were reminiscing about a time when we were dancing to the Black Eyed Peas song, "Don't Stop the Party" at a club with some friends and one of our friends got up on a podium and started dancing like a nutter. He ended up getting so into the song that he spilt his drink on his shirt. We were laughing and shaking our heads at the same time. Crazy night.

Can you see what happened between me and my girl there? Instead of allowing a situation like that to make me feel jealous and insecure, I actually used it as a way to deepen her love, respect and attraction for me. We connected about the some good times we had in the past and she felt respect and attraction for me because I didn't become insecure and jealous.

She knows that no matter what she says or does, I will always remain strong and I won't be affected by it. Knowing this, she cannot help but feel respect and attraction for me. As a result of being that emotionally strong, I feel better and she feels better, so everyone wins.

Yet, if I had reacted with jealousy and insecurity to her comments, neither of us would have felt good.

How to Avoid Being Jealous in a Relationship With a Woman

[image: How to avoid becoming jealous in a relationship]

If you want to avoid being jealous, controlling and insecure in a relationship, you need to establish the right foundation as a man.

You've got to:

1. Be able to attract women by choice, rather than accepting whatever you can get and then trying to make it work with an incompatible woman

If a man "gets lucky" with a woman and somehow fumble his way into a relationship with her, he is always going to secretly know that he got her by chance and doesn't really know how to attract and pick up other quality women like her.

So, when she begins to withdraw her affection or tries to make him jealous as a way of testing his emotional security, he will most-likely react in an insecure way because he will be very afraid of losing what he's got.

Her sudden lack of interest in him will make him begin to doubt himself, accuse her of being interested in other guys, ask her if she still feels the same way about him or tell her how much he needs her in his life.

He may even begin to treat her nicer, buy her lots of gifts or try to convince her to marry him or start a family with him, because he doesn't know how else to get her old feelings back.

When he reacts with insecurity or desperation in response to a woman's test of his emotional strength, it will instantly begin to erode her feelings of respect and attraction for him.

It doesn't matter how good the relationship was up until that point; the fact that he can't be the emotionally strong man that a woman ultimately wants and needs will make her begin to question her decision to be with him in a relationship.

As a man, you have to be able to know how to actively attract women so you can have your choice of women, otherwise you will probably accept second best or end up with a woman who isn't a compatible match for you.

The relationship might feel good in the beginning when all the lust and new emotions are present, but once the dust settles and you really aren't a good match for each other, the relationship will gradually begin to fall apart.

By the way...

Do you know how to attract women when you meet them? Are you able to naturally trigger feelings of intense sexual attraction inside of woman when you talk to her, or do you hope to get lucky or be liked because you're such a good guy?

Watch this video to find out...

2. Your woman cannot be your number one purpose in life

When in a relationship with a woman that you are truly committed to and in love with, she should definitely be a very important part of your life, but she should not be your “everything.”

If you make a woman your “everything” and base your most of identity, sense of self worth, happiness and emotional security on your relationship with her, she can easily make you feel jealous and insecure by pulling back her interest in you as a test.

Women test men in this way because they are instinctively driven by nature to encourage men to be stronger. It’s much more beneficial for everyone if a man is brave enough to do more, achieve more and make life better for her and humanity, rather than just hiding behind a woman and the safety of a committed relationship.

If you make a woman your number one purpose in life, she will resent you for it. She might like all the attention and endless time on the couch with you in the beginning, but she will eventually grow tired of it and begin to complain that you are not doing enough with your life.

3. You have to be fearless with love

Love is at it’s best when you can be fearless and let it grow and unfold naturally. If love is being held back by the constraints of insecurity and emotional weakness, it will never reach its full potential and you won’t ever get to experience what it’s like to be truly in love.

As a man, you have to be able to love your woman completely and fully open up your heart to the love without worrying about the potential negative consequences (e.g. feeling hurt if the relationship breaks up, being cheated on, etc).

You have to be brave and love fearlessly. Without that, the love will only ever be shallow or temporary and will easily be forgotten if the woman moves on and gets into a relationship with a guy who loves more fearlessly than you do.

However, despite his best efforts, a man will never be able to love a woman fearlessly if she is his purpose in life, as mentioned in point 2 “Your woman cannot be your number one purpose in life.”

If a man doesn’t have any dream, ambition or purpose that he is working towards in life, which is much bigger and more important than her, then he will naturally fall in to the trap of fearfully loving his woman.

Instead of being a balanced man who loves his woman and wants her in his life, but doesn’t need her for his emotional security, he will be an imbalanced man who needs his woman more than she needs him. He will be worried that his world might come crashing down because she is his world and she is responsible for his emotional security, sense of purpose, self-worth, etc.

All it will take for a relationship like that to begin to fall apart is for the woman to test the man by pulling back her interest, trying to make him jealous or pressing down on some his emotional weak spots.

As soon as she does that, she will see the change in him and realize that he isn’t a complete man and has been hiding from his true potential as a man behind her and relationship. That will be a killer blow to her feelings of respect and attraction for him. Instinctively, she will feel turned off at a deep level. Why?

We men instinctively seek to breed beauty and health into the human race via women, which is why we are mostly attracted to beautiful, youthful looking women who are of breeding age.

Women instinctively seek to breed strength, bravery, skill and innovation into the human race, which is why they are mostly attracted to confident, alpha males who go after what they want, challenge the status quo and seek to create a better life and a better world for themselves, the woman and for humanity.

Jealousy is a Choice

[image: Jealousy is a choice]

One of the most important lessons that you will ever learn about handling your emotions as a man, is that pretty much all of it comes down to a choice.

Happiness is a choice, confidence is a choice and likewise, jealousy is also a choice.

It's all a choice.

As a man, you have to be emotionally intelligent enough to make the choice to be happy, confident and emotionally secure, rather than choosing to be unhappy, self-doubting, insecure and jealous.

It's all within your control. You have to take the reins of that control and build on what you already have emotionally. For example: You have to build on the confidence that you have, you have to build on the happiness that you have and you have to build on the emotional strength that you have.

It's a constant evolution, development and strengthening of who you are as a man. The stronger you become, the more attractive you are to women and the more effective, productive and successful you will be in life.

Yet, if you choose to regress, fall back into your old ways or be controlled by painful memories from your childhood or the painful experiences of your early dating and relationship life, it means that you're not growing up as a man. You're not becoming a bigger and better man because you are choosing hold yourself back.

From this day onwards, what you need to know is this...

You can be a confident, happy man who is successful in a loving, committed and trusting relationship with a woman. You can pass a woman's tests with ease and you can become an increasingly strong, wise and powerful man over time throughout your life.

As a Man, You Have to Be the Brave One

When you look at the world around you, it will become clear that we men are expected to be the brave, emotional strong ones and women are free to cry, complain, bitch and moan about anything and everything. That's just how nature works and when you understand and accept the deeper reasons why it works that way, you will really appreciate it.

The tests that women put us men through are well designed by nature to ensure that the human race continues to become stronger and reach its ultimate destiny. It's a very good system that works surprisingly well.

Yet, imagine if it didn't work the way it did...

Imagine a world where women reward men with sex, love and devotion for being emotional weak and afraid. It would be a completely different world. Countless generations of humans would breed more and more weakness and fear into the human race and we'd probably end up living underground in fear. Laughing as I imagine it

So, learn to appreciate the way that women work. It really is a blessing to you as a man that women will always test you. The more emotionally strong and secure that you become as a man, the better you feel and the more love, respect and attraction that your woman will feel for you.

Is My Long Distance Relationship Working?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Even if a man and a woman are on opposite sides of the world while in a long distance relationship, the woman will stick by her man and be 100% faithful to him if she feels that he is worth it.

If your woman feels proud to be with you and feels a lot of respect, love and attraction for you, then there is no need for her to cheat on you or break up with you. If you are making her feel that way, other men simply won't compare to you.

She will know that it would be a big mistake and a huge personal loss for her to choose a lesser man over you.

Think about it...

Many soldiers go off to war and come back to a woman who has faithfully waited for months or even more than a year for him to return. While he was away, she didn't cheat, she didn't want to leave him and she couldn't wait to be in his arms once again.

[image: Long distance relationship: Soldier returning home]

She literally counted down the days until she could see him again. She excitedly planned many things for them to do together when he got home. She kissed him and blissfully hugged him and didn't want to let go.

[image: Long distance relationship: Soldier returning home]

That is what is possible when you have the right relationship dynamic and make a woman feel increasing amounts of love, respect and attraction over time.

Not all guys get it right though.

Continuing on with the soldier example here, many soldiers come back to find that their girlfriend or wife is no longer in love with him, has moved on with someone else or has been sleeping around behind his back.

In cases like that, the woman is either someone of bad character (i.e. disloyal, untrustworthy), immature and not ready for a truly committed relationship or it is actually about him not being worth sticking by and being faithful to.

So, if you are wondering, "Is my long distance relationship working?" then it's safe to bet that you're probably not really sure how much love, respect and attraction your woman truly feels for you, right?

The fact is, you may not even really know how to deepen a woman's respect, love and attraction for you in a relationship. You may be one of the guys who are making the mistake of just hoping that the relationship works because you've been a good man to and have been telling her how much you love or need her in your life.

As you will discover in this post, being good to her is not enough. You also need to make her feel a lot of respect, love and attraction for you. Without that, it's very easy for a long distance to fall apart.

4 Signs That Your Long Distance Relationship is in Trouble

No relationship runs perfectly 24/7, 365 days a year, but what separates the strong relationships from the weak ones is that couples in strong relationships fix any problems that come up and become even closer as a result.

If there are problems in your relationship that keep happening over and over again and you haven't been able to fix them, it means that your relationship is in trouble. You have to grow and become even closer by fixing any problems that come up and becoming a more harmonious, in love couple.

If you are wondering, "Is my long distance relationship working?" you may have been experiencing one or more of the following problems with her:

1. She doesn't return your calls or text messages.

[image: A woman beginning to lose interest in talking to her man]

Unless something else in her life, such as a hectic work schedule or having a crazy study schedule, is taking up all of her free time, a woman will always make herself available for the man she loves; especially in a long distance relationship.

No matter how busy she gets, a woman who is in a loving relationship will crave to get a little love fix from her guy. She will need the constant flow of his love into her heart and mind. His love will be something that comes to define who she is and she will feel like it is part of the sustenance that keeps her alive and happy.

This means that no matter what else is going on in her life, she will proactively talk to him by returning his calls, or at the very least text him a quick, "Sorry, I'm really busy right now, but I'm thinking of you! I love you. Talk tomorrow." She will then contact him the next day and be happy to talk to him.

If your girlfriend is not returning your calls or texts and when you mention this to her she gives you a vague excuse like, "Oh, sorry, I was just SO busy," or "My phone is acting weird and I didn't get your message," more than once or twice, it is a clear sign that she's losing interest in you, or at least losing interest in continuing with a long distance relationship.

A good way to test this is to stop calling and texting her for a few days. If she's still into you, she will call you up and be worried about why you haven't called her. On the other hand if she doesn't, you have some serious decisions to make.

Personally speaking, since working out the attraction and relationship techniques that I teach here at The Modern Man, I have never had to proactively call my women to stay in touch. They have always eagerly stayed in touch with me.

Now that I'm engaged and planning to get married in the future, the same rule still applies. My fiancée is madly in love with me and can't stand to be apart from me, even though she is a perfectly confident and emotionally secure woman.

The reason she can't stand to be apart from me is that she feels so much love, respect and attraction for me. It feels good to be around me, even if we are sitting on the couch and watching TV or if I'm in my office here writing up new posts for The Modern Man and all she gets is a 15 minutes with me every hour or so when I take a break.

The love that we share in our relationship is far beyond what we would experience if either of us hooked up with someone new. When you have that type of love in your relationship, there is no need to break up, cheat or fight. You just love each other so much and happily and very gladly move forward in life as a couple.

2. She's almost always unavailable when you try to reach her and she's vague about the people she hangs out with.

[image: Huh? Why is he texting me this insecure crap?]

Part of what you have to accept when you have a long distance relationship is the fact that your girlfriend will be going out without you.

She will be going out to coffee shops and restaurants, to parties and even to bars and clubs with other people, which will most likely include other guys in the group.

This is the challenge of not being together; you both still have to have normal, fulfilling lives without each other. This is natural and normal and if your girlfriend keeps you up to speed with what she's doing and whom she's with (and visa versa), there shouldn't be anything to worry about.

However, if you're sitting at home pining over her and avoiding going out with your friends so that you can call her 3 times a day or night and she's out partying it up and never telling you where she's going and who she with, it is a clear sign that she's either opening herself up to meet a new man, or is already dating and having sex with other men without you knowing about it.

If she loves you, respects you and wants to be with you, your girlfriend will be very open and honest about what she's doing and whom she's hanging out with while she's away from you. If this is not the case, she clearly has something to hide.

Personally speaking, I have come to realize that you can never trust a woman 100% in a relationship, but you simply have to. Likewise, she can never trust you 100%, but she has to in order for the relationship be harmonious and for the love to mature between you.

You've just got to give her your trust. If you don't feel that she deserves it because she keeps lying to you, then you simply have to dump her to show her that you're serious. If that doesn't wake her up and get her to apologize profusely to you, then she doesn't even love you or care about the relationship.

3. She isn't very interested in sharing many details about her day-to-day life with you.

In a loving relationship, a couple wants to listen and share details about their life, even if those details aren't even very important. You love her and care about her, so you are willing to listen (even if it's just for 30 seconds to a minute) as she tells you about something she was thinking that day or that happened during her day.

Likewise, if you want to talk about something random that you were thinking or that happened during your day, a woman who loves you will listen and be there with you in the moment, even if she doesn't think what you're talking about is very important. The fact that you are saying it is important enough to give her attention to it.

If your girlfriend isn't telling you what's going on in her life, she is clearly beginning to distance herself from you. She might not want to lose you, but based on how she is feeling, she is beginning to become open to not having you in her life.

This may be because she's tired of having to be in a long distance relationship while all her friends are able to kiss, hold hands and have sex with their boyfriends, while she can only talk to you on the phone, Skype, Facebook video call, Facetime, etc.

Her being distant with you may also be because she's trying to push you into taking the lead in the relationship by making plans to bring the two of you together. She wants to see if you will step up and make something happen before it is too late, even if that means arranging for her to come to see you or to meet half way.

4. She makes excuses when you try to arrange a meet up.

One of the most important aspects of a long distance relationship is the number of times a couple can get together in person. Even if it is once a month or once a year, seeing each other in person helps to keep your feelings alive and fresh.

By getting together in person and creating memories with each other, you will create a special bond that she can hold on to when she's at home alone, or when she's out with her girlfriends who are hugging and kissing their boyfriends.

When she can remember the last time you went out together on a romantic date, had passionate sex and spent time building a deeper connection, it will be easier for her to remain faithful and happy until your next hook up.

On the other hand, if every time you suggest getting together in person, she gives you a lame excuse like, It's just not a good time for me right now, or I think you should concentrate on work (or your studies). We can get together when things aren't so busy for you, she's likely moved on with her life (maybe has even found herself another boyfriend), but just doesn't want to come right out and tell you.

A woman who is in love with her man and needs to feel his love in person will do anything and everything to try to meet up with him. She might even work two jobs or sell items from her house or apartment to be able to afford a ticket to come and see you.

That's how powerful true love, respect and attraction is. Nothing else compares to it. The feeling that you get together when in a relationship is better than a new person could offer you in a relationship. You want to be together and nothing will stop you.

On the other hand, if your woman doesn't really care whether or not she sees you, it means that you've unknowingly set up the dynamic of the relationship incorrectly. In other words, you've made the mistake of needing her more than she needs you.

To make a relationship with a woman last for life, she has to feel like she is lucky to be with you. She has to look up to you and respect you and feel like she is lucky to be with a great guy like you.

That doesn't happen by treating her even nicer than you have been already. It's about being a man that she can look up to and respect and it's about ensuring that she knows how valuable of a man you really are.

If your woman feels like she is more valuable than you and that you're the lucky one, then she may open her heart to another guy who makes her feel lucky to be interacting with him.

A woman wants to feel excited to be with her man, rather than feeling like she is doing him a favor by being with him.

Are You Making Her Feel Enough Attraction For You?

[image: Are you making her feel enough attraction for you?]

Women are attracted to the strength in men and turned off by the weakness.

To be successful in a relationship (long distance or not), you have to make your woman feel the default types of attraction for you by at least being a confident, masculine and emotionally strong man. If you are insecure and emotionally weak, it will turn her off on a deep level and she will find it difficult to hold onto any feelings of attraction she once had for you.

It won't matter to her if you build more muscle at the gym, lose weight or put on weight, wear stylish new clothes or get a new haircut; she still won't feel much or any attraction for you because you aren't even getting the fundamentals (i.e. confidence, masculinity in how you think, behave and communicate with her, emotional strength) right.

When in a long distance relationship, she will be meeting other guys throughout her daily life and if the only recent memories she has of you are that you are insecure and feeling desperate or lost without her, a new guy's confidence will be even more appealing to her.

She will compare you to him and wonder why she is with you when you can't even make her feel attracted. She will think about why she feels attracted to the new guy and, if the love and connection that you share isn't very strong or worthy sticking around for, she may decide to open herself up to being with the new guy.

In a long distance relationship, it's easy to let your mind run wild with insecure thoughts like “What if she meets another guy?” “What if she starts thinking that a long distance relationship is not for her?” “What if she gets tired of waiting?” “What if she gets horny and just wants to have some casual sex?” etc.

It is understandable that you might think that way, but it will never, ever help you. Being insecure in a relationship is never, ever something that will make your woman feel more attraction and respect for you.

She has to see that you are not worried and are not threatened by other guys. Yes, she may still cheat on you or leave you depending on how loyal of a woman she is, but that is not something you can prevent by being insecure.

[image: Girlfriend on an annoying call with her long distance boyfriend]

In a relationship, you have to give the woman 100% of your trust and let her take care of it. If she doesn't take care of it, there is nothing you can do about it. However, if you are constantly checking on her or asking her if she has been with other people, you are sending her a clear signal that you're an insecure man who needs her more than she needs you.

That's not how she wants to feel.

Yes, a woman does want to feel appreciated, love, wanted and missed, but she doesn't want you to be insecure about it.

In a long distance relationship, it is very easy to ruin things by becoming jealous, clingy or even angry when she takes a bit too long to call you back or when she goes out with her friends.

Always remember this: A woman in a long distance relationship doesn't have to put up with a nervous, insecure, jealous guy. She can simply start dating and having sex with others guys whenever she wants to.

In today's world, a woman won't feel ashamed for breaking up a relationship and hooking up with a new guy. In the past, when women had to save their virginity for marriage and stick by their man for life, that would have been a very shameful thing to do. However, in today's world, if a woman isn't happy, the society around her encourages her to move on and find love with a more compatible man for her.

As the man in the long distance relationship, it's up to you to create, and keep creating, attraction between you so that even if she goes out and meets other guys, the only thing on her mind is, "I can't wait to get home to phone my man. I just miss him so much and all these other guys are just jerks compared to him."

How can you make her feel attracted to you? Watch this video below to understand how it works!

It's Up to You to Make it Work

[image: Couple chatting on Skype - long distance relationship]

As a man, it is your responsibility to take the lead and make her feel the way she wants to feel in a relationship.

As long as her man makes her feel attracted, respectful of him and in love with him when they interact, a woman will remain interested. Of course, some women are immature and disloyal and there's not much you can do about those women.

If she is still at a stage in her life where she doesn't want to settle down and her girlfriends are going out and hooking up with guys every weekend, then you're going to need to be really skilled at making her feel attracted to you and wanting to be with you.

If you don't know how to make her feel intense attraction for you and really want to see you, she will probably just hook up with another guy and move on without you.

If you want to stop asking, "Is my long distance relationship working?" then it is up to you to take the next step.

I am here to help you if you want to learn how to make her feel intense love, respect and attraction for you.

You can make her only want to be with you, even though you are currently in a long distance relationship.

You can do it.

Why I Decided to Accept My Girlfriend's Marriage Proposal

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

[image: Dan Bacon with wife]

Update: We are now happily married and have twin girls.

It's official.

Dan Bacon from The Modern Man is engaged and is now on the path towards marriage.

So, what is going on?

Why would someone like me get married when I've had so much choice with women over the years?

Why would I decide to go down a more traditional path of a relationship?

Before I get into that and answer some other questions about relationships and the state of marriage in today's world, one thing that I want to point out first is that marriage is not for everyone.

I understand that.

I understand that some guys want to have sex with many different women throughout their entire life and never get married.

Every guy should choose the path that he feels will bring him the most happiness, joy and fulfillment in life.

So, the question that I want to ask you before I begin talking about my experience is, "What is your relationship goal with women?"

Survey: What is Your Relationship Goal?

I ran a small survey recently and the results at the time of typing this article are:

- Marry a woman and stay with her for life: 43%
- Stay with one woman for life without getting married: 10%
- Have relationships with many women throughout life: 32%
- Still not sure: 16%

Total voters at the time of writing this: 338

Please have your say by adding in your vote below.

Now that I'm engaged, I'm definitely not saying that everyone should get engaged or that it's the best thing to do to make a relationship work.

Deciding whether or not to live as a de facto boyfriend and girlfriend couple or as a wedded husband and wife is a personal choice that a man and a woman need to make for themselves.

Your decision will be based on what you really want in the end with women.

Deciding whether or not to get hitched only makes sense when you find the right girl and have the sort of love that I'm going to talk about in this post.

In This Post

Here are the questions that I'm going to answer in this post and after I've finished with that, I have some important questions for you about your success with women and your relationship goals.

1. Why did I accept my girlfriend's marriage proposal after rejecting other girlfriends in the past?
2. Why not keep having sex with new women for life?
3. Isn't marriage a risky thing to do in a world with such a high divorce rate?
4. Am I worried about the 15 year age difference between her and I?
5. Is it really possible to stay together for life anymore?
6. What are my future plans for The Modern Man?

1. Why did I accept my girlfriend's marriage proposal after rejecting other girlfriends in the past?

When I say marriage proposal I don't mean that she got down on a bended knee and asked me to marry her.

It has simply been a case of her asking me to marry her on a number of occasions and me finally saying yes.

When her and I first met and were about 2-3 weeks into the relationship, she had already began talking about marriage and family with me, like most women did throughout all the years that I was living the bachelor lifestyle and enjoying my choice of women.

Whenever she brought it up, I told her that I wasn't interested in family or marriage and if she wanted to be with me, she could be with me in a committed relationship and that would be it.

[image: Dan Bacon - grocery shopping with wife]

Back then, that was basically my attitude towards her and the future of our relationship, but over time I have developed a newfound appreciation, love and wanting for family.

It's something that her and I want to build together and whenever we talk about family, we always talk about having a really close, connected and loving family.

We're excited about all the things that will come along with that.

So, why I chose her and accepted her proposal compared to the other women that I've been with over the years is mainly that I just wasn't ready in the past.

Over the years, I've had some amazing girlfriends and have been in love and had an awesome time with so many women, but I just wasn't ready to settle down.

Yet, that has changed now and I'm more open to it.

There are so many reasons why I have said yes to her request to marry me (e.g. compatibility, true love, a relationship that just keeps getting better and better, etc).

[image: Dan Bacon wife kissing]

We both have the same long term goals and views about life, we're in love, we respect each other, we're attracted to each other and we have an awesome relationship.

So I thought, "Why not?"

She definitely deserves it more than other women I've been with, because she willing to go without family and marriage just to be with me.

She was never a pain in the butt about the fact that I said I would never marry her and would never want kids.

She just loved me patiently and waited in hope that I would change my mind.

When I did change my mind, it sincerely felt like the right thing to do.

When you meet the right girl, it just feels right, so why not?

2. Why not keep having sex with new women for life?

[image: Dan Bacon - when it all suddenly changed for me]

If you know about my story, you'd know that I used to be hopeless with women and couldn't get myself a girlfriend.

I then discovered all of the techniques that I now teach here at The Modern Man and I've enjoyed my choice of women for more than 10 years and for the last 2 years and 4 months, I've been with my girlfriend who is now my fiancé.

It never got boring having sex with new women all the time.

[image: Dan Bacon - playin']

[image: Dan Bacon in field]

[image: Dan Bacon - The Modern Man]

Picking up new women all the time is a really fun lifestyle to live and I would often say to myself, “I love my life” because it feels good to be getting so much love, affection and pleasure from women.

I was perfectly happy with the path I was following, but then I met my girlfriend and we developed an amazing love and connection and it’s not something that needs to be thrown away.

Our relationship has always just kept getting better and better and I have a newfound appreciation, love and wanting for family, so my perspective has changed.

Hooking up with lots of women was so much fun, but true love is just as fun.

I could have kept going down the old path and continued to be happy being the playboy type of guy, but there is another side of life with women that I want to explore and I think that it’s going to be just as amazing, especially when we start a family and let all that unfold within our close, loving relationship.

3. Isn’t marriage a risky thing to do in a world with such a high divorce rate?

[image: Dan Bacon - heading away on a holiday with wife]

If you look around the world, the divorce statistics are pretty high in most countries. Depending on the country it can go up to 40, 50 and even 60% in some places.

When looking at those numbers, marriage can seem like a daunting or scary thing to enter into.

However, if you look at the positive side of things, with a divorce rate of 50% for example, it means that 50% of the couples are able to stay together.

Not all of those marriages are going to be happy, but there are couples out there who after 30, 40 or 50 years into a relationship are still completely happy and in love.

In fact, they are in more in love than ever before and have built a lifetime of memories together.

That type of relationship success is possible.

I’m going to walk that path now and I hope to be an inspiration to you if you want to go down that path also.

I want to show you that you don’t need to be afraid of the divorce rate.

I want to be living proof for you that when you use the right approach in a relationship, it stays together and it gets better and better over time.

Update: My wife and I have been together for almost 5 years now. You can now learn how to keep the love and sexual spark alive in a relationship for life in my new program, Make Her Love You For Life

If you are one of the guys who have gotten some or all of my programs about approaching and picking up women, you would already know that the wisdom I provide about women and about being a man really does work.

If you have been using my techniques, you would know that you can have your choice with women and you would have been experiencing that already.

All of those foundational programs have been created and now I want to show you what is possible with relationships.

I have already begun to do that with my program The Modern Relationship and with Better Than a Bad Boy and I am going to continue building more wisdom and knowledge for you about success with women.

Iâm going to continue to provide you with more techniques, more insights and more inspiration for you to go after what you want and achieve what you want with women. (I’ve now done that with my new program, Make Her Love You For Life).

One thing to point here about marriage is that I donât think that marriage is the ultimate thing that people have to do to keep a relationship together for life.

There are couples out there who stay together for life and never get married, so I am definitely not saying that you have to get married and that marriage is the way to keep a relationship together, but it is something that can be done.

Getting engaged and then getting married is something that a couple can do to show their commitment to each other.

In the case of my relationship, I donât really have a massive desire to get married at all, but itâs something that Iâm not afraid of doing.

Iâm mostly doing it out of respect for my girlfriend and her family.

She comes from a family that places a lot of importance on marriage and staying together for life and thatâs fine by me.

Her family loves me with or without the marriage, but Iâm happy to enter an engagement and go down that path as a sign of respect to them and also because Iâm just not afraid of it.

Iâm not worried that if I get into this marriage it will end up in divorce.

I donât see any reason why her and I would want to break up, especially when our relationship just gets better and better all the time.

If our relationship was getting worse and there were problems, then I would be doubting it, but we just get better and better for each other every day.

It sounds a bit corny, a bit romantic and maybe a bit selfish because Iâm talking about myself, but Iâm just telling you for the sake of showing you that itâs possible.

You can have a relationship that gets better and better over time.

4. Am I worried about the 15 year age difference between her and I?

[image: Dan Bacon with wife at beach]

When I met my girlfriend back in 2012, she was 20 and I was 35.

As of writing this, Iâ€™m now 37 and sheâ€™s 22.

15 years is a big age difference between her and I.

Some studies will suggest that itâ€™s risky to have such a difference in age and that it will most-likely lead to a break up or divorce very soon.

Yet, Iâ€™m not afraid of those studies, just like Iâ€™m not afraid of the divorce statistics where approximately 50% of couples end up divorcing.

I know that my relationship with her gets better and better every day.

Whatâ€™s been happening between her and I is that the love, respect and attraction has been deepening over time.

Itâ€™s not fading away.

That is the sort of thing I teach in my relationship program, Make Her Love You For Life and in a completely different way in my dating/relationship program, Better Than a Bad Boy.

It's about being the sort of man that a woman respects and looks up to.

She feels like a real woman around you (i.e. feminine, free to be girly and emotional, engulfed by the love she feels for you).

Iâ€™ve been doing that and it is working as described in the program.

Iâ€™ve taken on a bit of a challenge by having a younger girlfriend, but Iâ€™m not afraid of the commitment I have made with her.

I know that love is a powerful thing and that when a man and woman truly love each other, respect each other and feel attraction for each other and then build a life together, it can stay together for life.

If you look at the world around you, it's obvious that there are so many couples who get it right and live a life of love and happiness together.

Of course, there are a lot of people who get it wrong, but Iâ€™m going to be one of the people who get it right.

[image: Dan Bacon at a nightclub with girlfriend]

Another thing about my girlfriend is that I actually met her in a nightclub.

A lot of people say that you can't meet your perfect girlfriend or a potential wife in a nightclub.

They will suggest that women in nightclubs are the sort of women who can't be trusted and you can never settle down with them, but Iâ€™m going to be living proof that they are wrong.

Iâ€™m going to show you that wherever you meet a woman (e.g. in a bar, online, through friends, at a cafe, university, at work, etc), you can make the relationship work.

Whatâ€™s most important is that you deepen the love, respect and attraction that she feels for you and that you are the sort of man that she wants to be with and stay with.

On paper, it seems like a risky situation that I'm in.

Itâ€™s like, "Hang on...she was 20...you met her in a nightclub...thereâ€™s no way you can get that to work."

Well, Iâ€™m going to show you that you can make it work.

Iâ€™m going to show you that it is possible.

Iâ€™m going to show you that you don't need to be afraid.

Iâm going to show you that you can have a relationship with the type of woman that you want. Whether you want to pick up your next door neighbor, a girl at university or a woman at work, Iâm going to show you that you can have the woman that you want and you can make it work.

5. Is it really possible to stay together for life anymore?

If you know a lot about science and about fields such as nanotechnology, artificial intelligence, biotechnology, gene therapy and other technologies that may contribute to human life extension, you will know that a lot of the top scientists in the world are talking about humans being able to live a lot longer very soon.

So, what would happen to your relationship if you were able to live for 100, 150 or even 200 years in a healthy state of being?

Are you going to be able to keep a relationship together for life if you’re essentially ‘young’ for 200 years?

Additionally, what if the divorce rate goes up higher than it is right now? It is going to be possible to stay together for life?

You canât say, “Yes! 100% for sure” because it seems like there will be a lot of changes to society and humanity in the coming decades.

In my case, there are absolutely no guarantees that her and I will stay together ‘forever’ and for all of eternity.

What I do know is that we are in love now, weâre going forward with it and are going to build a family.

If the world changes in 40 years time, then so be it.

If the world does change dramatically and it becomes impossible to stay together with one woman, I donât think it will be seen as a failure to have lived an amazing life with a woman whom you truly love and who truly loves you.

If you have lived a life and enjoyed a lifetime of amazing experiences together, it wonât be your fault if the world suddenly changes and divorces rates skyrocket.

However, if things continue on and it remains possible to stay together in a relationship for life, then it will continue to be possible for you to do it too.

If you look out there into the world today, you will see couples that are still happily married or happy in a relationship 30, 40 or 50 years in.

That is possible.

A lot of people get it wrong, but that doesnât mean that itâs not possible to get it right.

6. What are my future plans for The Modern Man?

All of the structured training programs about approaching and picking up women and getting yourself a girlfriend are available on my site.

All of the techniques are there and are ready for you to use.

Iâve been using the techniques and 1,000s of guys from around the world have been using them as well.

Theyâve been enjoying success with women and so have I.

From here on in, Iâm going to continue being an inspiration, a role model and a guide for you in terms of success with women.

Iâve already helped 1,000s of guys to get themselves a girlfriend, Iâve helped 100s of guys to get their ex back and Iâve helped guys to get the spark back in a dying relationship with a girlfriend, fianc  or wife.

Iâm going to continue on that path, working full time on The Modern Man like I always have.

In my personal life, I am continuing to gain more and more wisdom, knowledge, insights and experience about how to be happy in a relationship, how to live a balanced lifestyle, how to be in love and stay in love and enjoy an amazing life.

Iâm continuing to gain more and more knowledge of those things and Iâm intending on sharing that in the future.

In the meantime though, before I even get to all of that, Iâve got some more programs that I want to make about texting/SMS.

A lot of guys have been asking me for advice on that.

I will also be releasing a product about sex and I have some relationship programs planned as well.

[image: Dan Bacon - Dating Power seminar]

Iâve been working on The Modern Man since 2005 and Iâm not going away.

I am someone that you can count on now and in the future.

Iâm going to be here for you as a guide, as an inspiration and as a teacher to help you get the results that you want with women.

Talking about that, here are some questions for you...

Important Questions About Your Success With Women

- What do you want to achieve with women?
- What are your ultimate goals?
- What have you already achieved by using my techniques and methods?
- What do you still need help with?

All different types of guys come to my website looking for help with women.

Some guys have never had a girlfriend and are still a virgin.

Some guys have a girlfriend, but arenât sure if she is good enough for them.

Some guys are afraid to approach women, while others are comfortable approaching women, but canât seem to get women to feel enough attraction for them.

Some guys are in a relationship with the woman they love and it is falling apart or has already broken up and they are trying to get her back.

There are so many different needs that guys have in terms of their success with women and Iâ€”ve got all the programs for that.

So, I hope that if you are enjoying my advice in the posts and videos that Iâ€”ve been making, you actually take the next step and invest in my programs for your success with women.

The wisdom, skills, understanding, power, confidence and success that you will get from using the advice in my programs is priceless. Yet, which program is ideal for you?

You most-likely fit into one of the following three categories:

1. You are interested in approaching women and getting a girlfriend or getting laid.
2. You are in a relationship that seems to be falling apart and you want to fix it before it breaks up.
3. Your relationship has already broken up and you want to get her back.

If you are interested in approaching women, getting a girlfriend or getting laid, then I recommend that you read The Flow and then get any or all of the other programs that I have at The Modern Man, except for Get Your Ex Back: Super System.

If you're in a relationship that seems to be falling apart, I recommend that you watch Make Her Love You For Life to prevent a break up, get the spark back and make her love you the way she used to.

If your relationship or marriage has already broken up and you want to get her back now, the program for you is Get Your Ex Back: Super System.

When guys are starting out and they haven't got any of my programs, it can be difficult to instantly understand the enormous value contained within them.

The wisdom, experience, techniques, insights, mindsets and realizations that are contained within those programs are priceless.

Most guys really don't know that until they've gone through the programs and had the realizations, gone through the transformations, used the techniques and gotten the results.

So, it's hard for me to tell you to go and try my programs if haven't ever experienced it.

It's not like suggesting that you purchase a bottle of water.

Everyone knows what a bottle of water is and what is going to happen if you buy it.

You buy the bottle of water, drink it and are hydrated once again.

Yet, with my programs, it's difficult for some guys to understand what they are going to get in the end.

So, I will explain a bit about it for you now...

The more that you learn from my programs, the more confident that you become with women.

As you learn from my programs and have the realizations, you become more sure of yourself as a man and you truly begin to understand what it means to be a man.

Women feel intensely attracted to you when you meet them; they feel emotionally connected with you, they want to be with you and they want to stay with you.

Instead of you trying to get women to like you and hopefully getting one woman to say yes to going out on a date with you, most of the women that you meet are attracted to you so you get to enjoy your choice of women.

In terms of a relationship, your woman feels more and more respect, love and attraction for you over time.

She is in the position where she wants to impress you and make you love her even more. She wants to build the relationship and she wants to be with you.

She doesn't have one foot out the door thinking, "I've got to get out of here. This guy isn't for me." She's thinking, "I want to be with this guy. This is the man for me" and she sees other guys as being nothing compared to you.

That is the sort of position that you can be in as a man in a relationship with your perfect woman.

To some guys, that might sound unbelievable or impossible.

Yet, all you need to do is look out there in the world; there are couples in relationships where the woman does feel that way and the man doesn't look like anything special.

In terms of approaching and picking up women, look out there into the world around you; there are guys who don't look like anything special and they've got a beautiful girlfriend, fiancée or wife or they are enjoying their choice of women.

You can do it too.

Going After What You Want With Women

The most important part of this post is for you to be inspired to go after what you want, whether that is having sex with lots of women and enjoying that lifestyle or settling down with your perfect woman.

You can be successful with women.

You don't need to be afraid of relationships.

You don't need to be afraid of approaching women.

If you are afraid of approaching women, then learn my confidence techniques, learn my conversation techniques, learn my attraction techniques and then use them and you will see that approaching women is one of the easiest, most exciting things that you'll ever do in your life.

When you use the right approach and techniques, approaching women is so much fun because they like you when you begin talking to them, they feel attracted to you and it's easy.

When it comes to relationships, don't be afraid of the divorce statistics.

There are couples out there who do it right and when you use the right approach to relationships, it gets better and better over time.

The main point of this post is for you to think about what you really want with women.

I hope that me sharing my experience serves as an inspiration for you to not be afraid of going after what you want with women.

Why Do Women Want to Feel Protected By Their Man?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

In today's world, a woman can get her own food, buy her own home, lock her own doors and if she needs help in an emergency situation, she is perfectly capable of calling the police or fire department on her own.

She can now be a leader of men, pursue her dreams and change the world how she sees fit.

She can fight battles alongside men, be a stay at home mom, or party like there's no tomorrow.

She can have sex before marriage, break up with a guy who isn't treating her well and travel around the world for as long as she feels like it, without feeling like she has to settle down and get married to be considered a real woman.

[image: Modern women enjoying their freedom]

The world is her oyster.

Yet, if she is like most women, she doesn't feel safe on her own and still has an instinctive desire to feel protected by her man.

If she's so good at taking care of herself, why does she need to feel protected by a man?

It is Still Dangerous For Women Out There

[image: Women feeling unsafe in public]

Unfortunately, despite the heavy police presence in today's world, a woman can still be taken (and kept) against her will, raped or even killed.

Evidence of this can be found in the almost weekly TV news reports shown across in the world. This is as true for women today as it was a thousand years ago or even 10,000 years ago.

So, a woman's instinct to feel protected by her man isn't about our long forgotten "caveman days" or some other obscure evolutionary theory like that. Instead, her ongoing need to feel protected is simply about the fact that we still live in a very challenging and sometimes dangerous world.

The danger for women is not only about men who might want to hurt or kill her; it's about the challenge of survival against the elements of nature. Despite our supermarkets, highways and smartphones, human societies are usually just a hurricane or tornado away from basic survival.

[image: Life isn't always easy. Humans are often just a hurricane or natural disaster away from basic survival]

We're not out of the woods yet in terms of having this reality completely under control.

Whether or not a woman is consciously aware of the fact that we're only a hurricane or tornado away from basic survival, she is still naturally going to feel more attracted to a man who seems like he would keep her safe under any circumstance.

This is her natural instinct and it isn't something that women will be changing anytime soon.

Hard-Wired Human Instincts Don't Go Away Overnight

For most of human history, a woman had to rely on a man to physically protect her and her offspring. If a man was unable to protect her, she was at risk of being taken advantage of, hurt or even killed by other men who didn't have to worry about being sent to prison or being shamed on TV by the media. For 99% of human history, there was no TV, no telephone to call the police and no advanced medical treatments for serious and painful injuries. It was basically the survival of the toughest. The physically weak could be taken advantage of and they often were.

Only in the last 50 to 100 years have women begun to feel safe when home alone or while walking along some well-lit streets at night without the protection of a man by her side. It really depends on the city though because most cities still have a lot of rapists prowling around.

According to a recent study, it was found that 68% of sexual assaults and rapes are not reported, so just because it doesn't appear on the news every night, it doesn't mean that it isn't happening.

Despite the increase in feelings of safety while living in a modern, civilized, a woman's instinctive desire to feel protected by a man hasn't gone away. It's a hard-wired instinct and it is difficult to ignore for even the most independent of modern women.

Should Men and Women Switch Roles? Should Women Start Protecting Men Now?

[image: Should men and women switch roles?]

No.

Reading this article, some women may think, "Why do men have to keep us safe? Many of us women are perfectly capable of keeping men safe. We can fight in wars or even in cage fights for the UFC, so why can't we be the ones who protect men?"

I say, "some women may think" because most women still like to feel protected by a man and don't ever plan on fighting in a war or a bloody cage fight for the UFC.

It is awesome to see women on the front lines with men and even in the UFC, but that doesn't mean that men and women need to switch roles. I don't think that women need to take on the role of being "the protector" of men, unless of course an individual woman chooses to do so for her own reasons.

In my opinion, women add more value to the world when they "challenge" men to become stronger, instead of trying to "protect" men from the big bad world around them.

Why Women Challenging Men is a Good Thing

[image: Why women challenging men is a good thing]

If women accepted guys without challenging them in any way, it would begin to eat away at the emotional strength of the human race.

Here's what I mean...

When a woman interacts with a guy and rejects him because he is nervous, insecure and self-doubting around her, it represents a challenge to him to fix his emotional issues and become stronger, or face the prospect of being alone for longer.

If he doesn't improve his confidence and continues on in life as an emotionally weak man, he will continue to get rejected or dumped out of a relationship with a woman can no longer put up with his insecurity and emotional weakness.

Instead of rewarding men for being weak, women challenge men to become stronger and over time, this benefits humanity by making us all stronger and more resilient.

In the video below, I explain the real reason why a lot of good men fail with women...including why I used to fail and get rejected.

Back when I was getting rejected by women, I had no idea that my lack of emotional strength was the main reason why women didn't like me.

I didn't know how to be confident and as a result, I would display nervousness and try hard to impress women in the hope that they would like me enough to give me a chance.

Rather than women rewarding my emotional weakness with sex, love and devotion, they rejected me. It didn't matter how nice I was to women, they instinctively felt turned off by the fact that I wasn't very confident.

In fact, most women felt emotionally stronger than me, which turned them off on a deep level. It was only when I worked out how to be confident and began displaying confidence in my interactions with women, did they finally start to take me seriously.

Women Made Me a Stronger Man

My wife and I at the beach. I recently got married after living the playboy lifestyle for more than 10 years. I had sex with more than 250 women, but immediately gave up that lifestyle when I met her.

It is largely thanks to the challenging behavior of women that I am able to write this article today with clarity and confidence.

Before women challenged me to become the man that I am today, I was nervous, self-doubting and unsure of myself. I had a low level job and suffered from mild social anxiety. I was still the same good guy that I am today, but I was mentally and emotionally weak.

Sometimes, usually after having a few drinks, I could work up the courage to approach women. Yet, they would almost always challenge me by behaving uninterested, asking me questions designed to make me squirm (e.g. "Why are you talking to us?") or they would simply reject me.

They could sense my weakness and they didn't want anything to do with it.

I felt horrible and I was deeply annoyed at women for behaving in that way. However, it wasn't until I sorted out my emotional issues and became a confident man that women started showing me interest and respect.

Instead of rewarding me for my weakness beforehand, women challenged me to become a stronger man or face more rejection and loneliness.

When I became a confident and emotionally secure guy, women stopped ignoring me and rejecting me and began showing me lots of interest and falling madly in love with me if we happened to start a relationship. It was a nice reward to get for all the hard work I put into improving myself.

Back when I was getting rejected though, I really felt bitter towards women.

I saw them as being mean, bitchy and stuck up. I hated women and loved them at the same time.

Yet, when I became truly confident and was rewarded for it, I gained a newfound respect and appreciation for the contribution that women make to the development, strength and wisdom of humanity.

Now, I look at women with love and respect, for it is because of women that I have become the strong man that I am today.

[image: At the beach]

Of course, me getting my dating life sorted out wasn't the "wider benefit to humanity" that resulted from women challenging me. The bigger benefit was in the strong, clear-headed leader that I became and still am to this day.

Due to the massive amount of personal growth I had to go through to become a more confident, emotionally strong and socially intelligent guy (all to get women to feel proper attraction for me), I ended up getting promoted at work (three times within six months).

In response to the challenge from women, I went from being a self-doubting customer service employee at the bottom of the ladder in my office, to a respected leader of international company.

I didn't only become a leader of just one team; I eventually became the leader of the managers and began to teach those managers about leadership. I rose above all of my prior insecurities and self-doubt and became a powerful, useful man for the world...all thanks to how women treated me.

If women had initially accepted me as a weak man, none of that would have happened and I would not be running The Modern Man today and helping thousands of other guys to transform themselves into confident, more capable men.

I always hear back from Modern Man customers who've not only fixed their dating life by using my advice, but have gotten promoted at work, improved their relationships with family and friends and become someone that others can look up to.

In my opinion, women don't need to protect men from the big bad world.

Instead, most men actually need women to challenge them to become stronger and to be a pillar of strength for this world.

The Genius of the Masculine/Feminine Dynamic

[image: The genius of the masculine feminine dynamic]

When it comes to a sexual relationship between two human beings, there is always someone who is more masculine or more feminine than the other.

It is the masculine and feminine difference between two people that creates the sexual attraction, just like positively charged magnets will be attracted to negatively charged magnets and vice versa.

It's just how nature works and it's actually quite ingenious.

For example: In a homosexual relationship, one man is usually more masculine than the other guy and for a lesbian relationship one woman is usually more feminine than the other woman. In a heterosexual relationship, the man is traditionally the more masculine one and the woman is more feminine.

So, what does this have to do with a woman's desire to feel protected by her man?

It helps us answer the question of why most women want to feel protected by their man, while some women are not interested in having a man give them a feeling of protection at all.

Generally speaking, a woman who does want to feel protected by her man is usually going to be a more feminine woman at heart. A feminine woman will be more interested in love and relationship that she has with her man.

Being in love and being with her man will be her number one priority in addition to anything else about life that she might be interested in (e.g. family, music, art, dancing, beauty, cooking, etc).

Of course, that's not to say that a masculine man can't be interested in any of those things; some of the best art and music of all time has been created by men.

A masculine man can take an interest in ANYTHING he likes (even if that means he works as a hairdresser or designs clothes for a living), just like a woman can take an interest in ANYTHING she likes.

However, what a guy needs to understand is that a feminine woman (the type of woman who likes being "the woman" or "feeling girly") will be more attracted to masculine men who are focused on their purpose in life, who are confident and strong and who are generally considered to be a "man's man."

If a guy feels mostly attracted to feminine women (just think about the type of porn you jerk off to – that will tell you the type of women you turn you on the most), he will need to think, behave and take action in a very masculine way in life if he wants to attract a feminine woman and maintain her attraction in a long term/lifetime relationship.

The more masculine he is, the more naturally attractive he will be to feminine women.

Just in case your wondering, by "masculine" I am not talking about lifting weights to build big muscles. The most important masculinity (from a woman's perspective) is in how you think, feel, behave and take action in life.

The truth is, you can be considered very masculine by women without ever lifting a single dumbbell in the gym.

Of course, not all women want a very masculine man.

[image: Butch lesbians or feminine women]

The type of woman who doesn't want to feel protected by her man is usually going to be more masculine at heart.

She may have grown up with a father who wanted a son (but never got one), so he showed more love to his daughter when she behaved like a boy. As a result, she developed a masculine personality and identity.

She might have also have been born with a more masculine energy, which is just as common, especially among lesbian women.

A masculine woman will be more interested in her career and will usually prefer a more feminine man who will essentially let her wear the pants in a relationship. There's nothing wrong with a woman being more masculine at heart and having a more feminine man; if that's what makes both of them happy, then go for it.

Yet, I have found that the majority of women who have a subservient man or feminine man, wish they had a more masculine man; a man who wears the pants in a relationship and naturally makes them feel safe and protected.

What I Love About the Dynamic Between Men and Women

What I love most about the dynamic between men and women is how it challenges men to grow and become stronger.

Instead of slowing the human race down by rewarding emotionally weak, insecure men with sex, love and devotion, women speed up the progress of humanity by maintaining their preference for confident, emotionally strong men.

If men were too afraid to stand up to the challenges of life and instead wanted to feel protected by their woman, what sort of world would we be living in?

Is it really the role of women to protect weak men, or are women achieving more for humanity by challenging men to become stronger?

I think not.

Men who see this as unfair simply haven't yet experienced the type of sexual and loving bliss that comes from being a masculine man for a feminine woman. Nothing quite compares to it.

When a man refuses to be strong and happens to get a woman into a relationship, she will eventually lose respect and attraction for him and they will either continue on unhappy, or she will cheat on him or dump him.

[image: Breaking up with an emotionally weak man]

I know this because it happened to me and because I've helped 100s of guys to get a woman back after being dumped for that very reason.

How to Stop Being Clingy: The Secret

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a man's clinginess begins to overshadow the good parts of the relationship, it's only a matter of time before the woman's love will start fading away.

Bit by bit, his clingy behavior sucks the happiness, the harmony and carefree feelings out of their relationship and creates an annoying, negative tension that makes it difficult for his woman to be around him.

Since women are naturally attracted to confident, emotionally secure men and turned off by insecure, emotionally weak men, she will feel repelled by him on a deep and instinctive level.

[image: Why am I feeling clingy around my girlfriend? How can I quit being needy like this?]

When he notices that she is pulling away and losing interest, he will often make the mistake of becoming even more clingy and needy, which will turn her off even more. It's a vicious cycle that usually ends in a break up for most couples.

To help you understand how and why that happens, here's a video that I made for guys who have already been broken up with and are trying to understand how to get their woman back...

As you will discover from the video above, a woman will usually go through 3 stages before she decides to break up with a guy.

Being clingy will ruin a woman's respect for a guy and if he keeps doing it, she will stop feeling attracted to him (remember: Women are attracted to the emotional strength of men and turned off by the weakness) and will gradually begin to fall out of love with him.

[image: Why are you being so distant?]

If you are sincere and serious about wanting to know how to stop being clingy in your relationships with women, you first need to understand what is causing you to behave in a clingy way.

After helping many guys to eliminate their clinginess and become a confident, independent man that women respect, admire and remain attracted to in a relationship, I have identified the following common causes of clinginess for men in relationships with women...

1. Lack of purpose

If you lack purpose in life, you will often make the mistake of making your girlfriend (fiancée or wife) your purpose in life. Women want a man who loves them, but who is rising through the levels of life and reaching for his true potential that is related to his purpose in life.

A woman doesn't want a boy who hides behind his mother from the big, bad world. In other words, they don't want a guy who hides from the world behind her, the relationship and household responsibilities.

2. Inability to attract other beautiful women

If you got lucky when you met your girlfriend (fiancée or wife) and found it difficult to attract other women before you met her, then your secret insecurity about this will cause you to cling to her.

You will see her as your safety blanket and protection from the world of rejection around you.

How good are you at attracting other women?

Watch this video to understand how a woman's attraction for a man really works and whether or not you need to improve your ability to attract women...

3. Lack of confidence about your value to her

If you are worried that every guy who talks to her or who she looks at is going to steal her away from you, then aren't very confident about your value to her. Remember: Women are attracted to the strength in men and turned off by the weakness.

If you are the type of guy who sees other men as your competition, then it will actually turn her off you and make other guys seem more attractive. She will sense that you're not an alpha male and are looking at other guys as being better than you.

4. Loneliness

Guys who've experienced a lot of loneliness (e.g. due to not having many friends, not having great relationships with friends, being single for long periods of time, feeling unloved by his parents, etc) will often become clingy when they find a girl whom they love and want to be with.

Since he is so worried about her potentially losing interest and leaving him, a guy who has experienced a lot of loneliness will cling to him woman like glue because he doesn't want to lose the feeling of togetherness that he has been experiencing.

For a relationship to be successful, it has to be a give love dynamic rather than a take love one. For example: If you need to take love from her to make yourself feel better and don't have much love to give to her, the relationship will lack balance and will begin to feel unfair.

A woman wants to be with a guy who wants her, loves her and respects her, but doesn't NEED her for his emotional security and sense of identity. You have to be your own man (i.e. a man who is going after big ambitions and dreams in life), in addition to the man that you are for her.

5. Trust issues

[image: Being insecure]

The truth is, you can never really trust a woman to be 100% loyal, honest and loving to you for life. However, to be successful in a relationship with a woman, you HAVE to give her that trust.

You also need to be wise enough as a man to know that you can't trust another human being 100%, so if she ends up breaking your trust, then it is fine to feel disappointed and upset, but you shouldn't be so surprised that you let it crush your world.

Without giving her your trust all the time in a relationship, you will fall into the trap of being insecure, clingy, protective and mistrusting – all of which will destroy her attraction, respect and love for you as a man.

Remember: Women are attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness. You've got to become and be a strong man, otherwise you won't ever be what women really want.

For a relationship to reach the higher stages of true love and commitment, you have to allow the love and connection to mature and deepen over time, rather than destroying it or halting it by being emotionally weak or untrusting.

Failing to Be the Strong Man That She Really Wants and Needs

[image: How to stop being so clingy]

As a man, the most important thing you can offer a woman is your emotional strength and the worst thing you can offer is your weakness.

When I talk about strength, I'm not referring to your ability to lift heavy weights in the gym; Iâ€¢m talking about your mental and emotional strength (i.e. confidence, drive, self-belief, self-esteem).

Insecurity (noun): Lack of confidence or assurance; self-doubt.

Confidence (noun): Belief in oneself and one's powers or abilities; self-confidence; self-reliance; assurance.

As you can see from the dictionary definitions above, confidence is the opposite of insecurity.

If you are insecure when in a relationship with a woman, it is only natural that you will feel clingy, needy and possibly overly-protective of her at times.

However, if you are a confident guy who knows that he could easily have other women and who also has the right approach to life (i.e. your life purpose is your number one priority and she is a close second), then you will be less likely to ever become clingy.

Why is a Man's Confidence So Important to a Woman?

A man's confidence is important to women because the world we live in is a challenging place and at her core, she is a feminine woman who wants to feel protected by a mentally and emotionally strong man.

She wants to be able to stand next to you in this world and feel like she will be okay because you are there with her.

This is made clear by the honest lyrics of the Miley Cyrus song, â€¢Adore Youâ€¢.

*"I'm scared oh, so scared
But when you're near me
I feel like I'm standing with an army of men Armed with weapons"* – Miley Cyrus

Regardless of whether you love or hate Miley Cyrus, the fact is that her lyrics in that song are honest and explain what women really want to feel when around a guy.

That song is not about a clingy guy who is afraid of the world and needs to feel protected behind her emotional strength. It's about a confident man who knows who is, what he wants from life and he will stop at nothing to achieve it.

The guy she is singing about would be confident in social situations, other guys would respect him and heâ€¢d make her feel girly and feminine around him because of how mentally and emotionally masculine he is.

All women (except for butch, masculine lesbian women) want to feel girly around guys, even if they deny it in public situations, such as on a talk show or during an interview.

If you want to get to the point where you are the sort of man that makes a woman feel like she is standing with an army of men that are armed with weapons, then you must start getting rid of your insecurities and become a real man who can make women feel girly in response to your masculinity. If you are a clingy guy, then you need to face up to the fact that you are an insecure guy. Accept it and then do what it takes to not be that weak guy any more.

You are better than that.

You're not a weak, clingy guy. You are a strong man. It's there inside of you and you've just got to let it exist, rather than adding fuel to the fire of your insecurities and letting your weakness control your life.

Let your strength be the basis of who you are, not your weakness.

If you let your weakness define who you are, you will think, behave and act in all sorts of weird ways that are based on that insecurity.

A clingy guy will feel like his only hope is to spend more time with his woman and show her how much she means to him. He'll constantly try to show how much he loves her, he will constantly text or call her when they are apart and he will ask if she has missed him.

[image: Constant texts from a clingy man]

To a guy who is feeling insecure, all of this feels like the right thing to do because in his warped emotional state, he believes that his clinginess will demonstrate how much he loves his woman and she'll feel compelled to stay with him.

Yet, that isn't the way it works.

Women are not attracted to emotional weakness.

If you don't want to be yet another dumped guy who comes to me to learn how to get an ex back, I recommend that you fix your clinginess now.

My Girlfriend Doesn't Love Me Anymore

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your girlfriend doesn't love you anymore, she may still be telling you that she cares for you and doesn't want to hurt your feelings, but she's just not in love anymore.

So, how can you fix that?

Simple.

You need to make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you as a man.

When you make her feel respect and attraction for you again, the love that she used to feel for you will naturally begin flowing back into her heart and mind.

However, if a woman doesn't respect her boyfriend (e.g. because he is insecure, has been annoying her, lacks purpose in life, is emotionally weak or sensitive, etc), then she will begin to lose touch with her feelings of attraction for him.

If that goes on for long enough, she will eventually fall out of love with him, which is the stage that you're at now.

All Relationships Go Through Stages

[image: Why doesn't she love me like she used to?]

All relationships go through stages and the initial feelings of lust and, if the couple approaches the relationship correctly, their intense physical desire for each other will eventually transition to deeper feelings of love, respect and emotional attraction.

A change in how you feel is normal and both you and your girlfriend should expect that to happen and be happy when it does, because it means that you're on your way to reaching the deeper, more meaningful stages of a relationship.

If a guy lacks relationship experience, he might notice the change in feelings and begin to worry by thinking, "My girlfriend doesn't love me anymore. What do I do?"

When he sees that she isn't trying to rip his clothes off for sex anymore, or she doesn't rush over to cuddle him at every chance she gets, he needs to understand that it doesn't necessarily mean she has stopped loving him.

Instead, it usually just means that she's secure in the relationship and is enjoying the next stage of it.

So, should you be worried about your girlfriend?

It depends.

If you have caused her to lose love, respect and attraction for you because you've become insecure, needy, too protective or haven't been enough of a man for her, then yes you have cause to be concerned.

To get her love back, you will need to first get her respect back for you as a man, then her attraction and after that, she will naturally open herself up to loving you again.

Love is something that can be brought back to life under the right conditions, so you just need to make sure you create and maintain those conditions.

Your girlfriend may currently be saying that she doesn't have feelings for you anymore, but that's simply because you're not saying and doing the kinds of things that will make her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you.

If you're slowly losing her, you're probably coming across in a way that is further destroying her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you (e.g. you're being insecure, needy, clingy or angry when interacting with you).

Why Has She Fallen Out of Love With You?

[image: Why has she fallen out of love with you?]

If your girlfriend has fallen out of love with you, something about your attitude or behavior in the relationship must have changed to cause her feelings for you to change.

If you want to turn things around and get your girlfriend to even more deeply in love with you than she was before, you must first understand what caused her change of heart before you can take the appropriate action to fix things and get her love back.

Consider the following...

1. Have you become needy or clingy?

A common mistake that is made by guys who begin to feel their girlfriend doesn't love them anymore, is to start seeking her constant reassurance by asking things like, do you still love me? or how much do you love me?

Being needy like that is a complete turn off for women.

Why? Women are attracted to the emotional strength of men, not the weakness, so the more that a guy asks her if she still finds him attractive or still loves him, the less attractive he becomes in her eyes and so a vicious cycle begins.

Very often, needy behavior leads into clinginess, which then causes a woman to lose even more respect and attraction for her guy.

2. Have you become too possessive or controlling?

Neediness and clinginess usually go hand-in-hand with jealousy, overly possessive and controlling behavior.

For example: If a guy's girlfriend is suddenly spending more time with her friends, he will see as a sign that she doesn't love him anymore or that her friends are trying to get in the way of their relationship.

He might then try to stop her from hanging out with her friends or make her constantly reassure him that she still loves him and isn't going to cheat on him or leave him. That type of insecurity is such a turn off for women that it's almost enough of a reason for most women to break up with a guy and never look back.

Women feel naturally attracted to confident guys who are secure in who they are (i.e. they don't feel threatened by their girlfriend's friendships and don't become overly-possessive of her when she chooses to spend time away from him).

Neediness, being overly possessive and being controlling will not make a woman feel more love for you at all. Instead, it will simply make her feel suffocated by you in your relationship and begin falling out of love with you as a result.

3. Have you been showing her enough appreciation?

Some guys aren't needy, insecure or clingy at all.

In fact, they are the total opposite and essentially don't care about their girlfriend. He simply expects her to stick around and put up with his bad behavior because they are a couple.

Yet, unlike women from the early 1900s, today's women don't have to stick around if they are unhappy in a relationship. It's no longer shameful for a woman to break up with a guy and get in and out of relationships until she feels like she's experiencing the kind of mutual love, respect and attraction that she deserves.

Here's the thing...

A woman does want to be with an independent man who has purpose in life and independent interests outside of the relationship that are important to him (e.g. his ambitions and goals, friends, family, etc), but if he constantly neglects her and fails to meet her needs in the relationship, she will eventually feel unappreciated and lose touch with her feelings of love for him.

An example is if the guy cancels plans with her at last minute, or lies about how busy he is to get out of doing certain things with her.

If he regularly change his plans at the last minute because something else comes up, she's not going to feel important like an important person in his life.

What I Know About Love

In the lead up to getting engaged to my girlfriend (update: We recently got married), I slept with more than 250 women and had a number of great relationships.

Every time I was with a woman in the past, I had to break up the relationship because she would want to marry me or start a family with me, but I just wasn't ready.

I'm glad that I didn't settle down so quickly though because all of that experience has taught me a LOT about love.

One of the most important things I've discovered is that the love between a man and a woman will fade away if it isn't taken care of.

You can't just expect that a woman will continue to feel excited about being in love with you just because things felt good at the start. You have to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

The romantic love of a man and a woman is not unconditional and there is no guarantee that it will stay alive unless you actually take care of it.

For example: You and your girlfriend may have fallen MADLY in love with each other and been like that for years, but if you stop being a man for her or turn into an insecure, jealous, overly-protective guy, then her love will begin to fade away.

Knowing this, I educated myself on the right way to behave when in a relationship and then did that. The result was that the love between me and my girlfriends has always deepened and become stronger over time.

Since discovering what I now teach here at The Modern Man, no woman has ever wanted to break up with me. Even though I am in committed relationship with my perfect woman now, I still have ex-girlfriends contacting me and hoping that I might become available once again.

It's a nice feeling to know that you're wanted by women and that you're going about things in the right way. It's much better than sitting around worrying if her love will last or if she's beginning to look elsewhere.

Getting Her Love Back

If you're saying to yourself, "My girlfriend doesn't love me anymore" and you want to get her love back, you just need to flick her "Good Girl Switch" back ON.

The truth is that a woman doesn't want to fall out of love with her boyfriend.

She wants to be a good girlfriend for him, love him and treat him well.

When you flick her Good Girl Switch back ON, she immediately starts to behave differently around you.

She goes from saying that she doesn't love you anymore, to saying that she loves you more now than she ever has.

From there, the relationship just gets better and better every day, week and year that you are together...

How to Be a Good Boyfriend: 4 Mistakes to Avoid

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

To keep your girlfriend happy and ensure that she wants to stay with you for life, you need to commit to the idea of loving her, as well as being the type of man that she can be proud of in every way.

For example, to be a good boyfriend you should:

1. Continue to put in effort to trigger her feelings of attraction for you, rather than taking her for granted.
2. Continue to follow through on your biggest goals and ambitions in life, rather than getting lazy and hiding from your true potential behind her and the relationship.
3. Not expect her to be perfect 100% of time, but do expect her to continue to put in real effort to be the best girlfriend she can be for you.
4. Keep your lifestyle together varied (i.e. don't focus all of your energy on work and not have any time for play, vacations, quality time together, etc).

If your behavior and attitude makes her unhappy and if you don't really care about giving her your love, then the relationship will gradually fall apart.

Being a good boyfriend is easy to do, as long as you have the right mindset and attitude. Love her for who she is and be patient as both of you grow together in the relationship.

Above all, make sure that you continue to make her feel attracted to you. Unlike in the past, women are no longer ashamed to break up with a guy if the relationship isn't working out or if she isn't feeling the type of love, respect and attraction that she wants to feel when in a relationship with a guy.

Watch this video for more info...

As you will discover from the video above, you can deepen your girlfriend's feelings of respect, love and attraction for you over time. You don't have to be another one of those couples who fall out of love and break up before the relationship reaches the stage of truly committed love.

Mistakes to Avoid

Here are some common mistakes that guys make when trying to be a good boyfriend, which actually end up ruining their relationship and causing a break up.

1. Saying, "You're My Everything...and Without You, I'd Be Nothing"

[image: You're my everything. Without you, I'm nothing]

Women really love it when you give them genuine affection, attention and love, but they don't like it when you go overboard and make them the only focus of your life.

Some guys stop focussing on other areas of their life and zone right in on their girlfriend, which ends up making her feel smothered instead of happy.

A guy who makes this mistake may try to spend every spare minute he has with her, or spend his spare time helping with her homework, household chores and errands.

He might buy her lots of expensive gifts, take her on trips he can't afford or or shower her with other tokens of affection. He might regularly tell her how much he needs her in life his and that his life would be nothing without her. Sounds like a good boyfriend, right? Wrong.

Yes, there are women who want everything to be about them, but that isn't the woman you should want to be with anyway. The perfect girlfriend is one who loves her boyfriend as much as he loves her and who goes out of her way to make him feel special too. She wants a man who:

- Has more to his life than just her.
- Is an alpha male is striving to reach his true potential as a man.
- Will work hard on his purpose in life or his career, while also giving plenty of time, love and emotional support to her.

If you make her your “everything” and hide away from other areas of life, she will naturally begin to lose interest after the initial novelty of being flattered by all your attention wears off.

She may even come to the conclusion that you're afraid to become a bigger and better man and just want to hide from the world behind her and a relationship. To be a good boyfriend, you have to be a man that she can look up to and respect.

2. Asking, “I’m Your Everything, Right?”

[image: I'm your everything, right?]

Just as it's a mistake to make your girlfriend the center of your universe, it is equally unwise to try to convince her give up her dreams, ambitions and social lifestyle for you.

Men who make this mistake often begin to think, behave and act in an insecure way around their girlfriend. They become clingy, overly-protective, jealous and so forth. They live in terror of losing their woman and constantly need to be reminded of how much she loves them.

A man like this might demand answers to questions like, “How much do you love me?” or “Have you loved other guys like you love me?” Other men will insist that their girlfriend should focus her life only on him and spending time on other things or with friends is disloyal to him.

He will try to control her and will think that by showing her his “supremacy” over her, she will be impressed by his “strength” and will respect him. However, the result he gets will be the exact opposite; his girlfriend will lose more and more respect every time he tries to control her or behaves in an insecure way.

If you want to know how to be a good boyfriend, you must understand that you don't “own” your girlfriend and you should never try to control what she does. It's up to her how many times she sees you per week or whether she wants to catch up with friends without you.

The more you try to control her, the more she will want to rebel against you or get away from you.

On the other hand, if you give a woman the freedom she rightfully deserves, while also being attractive to her (i.e. by being a confident, strong man who is reaching for his true potential in life, while also giving love, attention and emotional support to her), then she is going to want to see you all the time and will rarely want to go out with friends if you're not by her side.

3. Not Taking the Lead

[image: Not taking the lead in a relationship]

Women can make their own decisions and lead people in many areas of life, such as in the workplace. However, when it comes to a boyfriend-girlfriend relationship, most women want to relax and allow you to take the lead.

Instead of asking her, “Where should we go tonight?” or saying something like, “I don’t care what we do. You decide where we can go tonight and I’ll go” a woman wants you to take on the leading role and allow her to relax into your masculine direction.

She will want to take the lead at times, but generally speaking, she will want you to take on that role in the relationship. If you don’t, then she will feel unsatisfied at her core and will naturally begin losing respect and attraction for you. When that happens, she will gradually begin falling out of love with you.

4. Copying the Behavior of Men From TV Sitcoms or Movies

When a man is in a relationship with his ideal girlfriend and wants to know how to be a good boyfriend, he often will look for advice in all the wrong places.

He will watch TV shows or romantic comedies and think that what he is seeing on TV is how relationships are supposed to be. For instance, he’ll see a boyfriend behaving in a nervous way around his girlfriend and essentially being a doormat for her to walk all over.

Despite the fact that a woman wouldn’t enjoy being with a boyfriend like that in the real world, the TV scriptwriters will turn the situation around by the end of the episode or series and his girlfriend will be madly in love with him and everything will be just fine.

These days, a lot of men don’t stop to think that TV sitcoms and movies are generally designed as entertainment. The scenes are meant to amuse the audience and keep them watching, not educate them on how to be happy in a relationship.

Be the Best Man You Can Be

To be a good boyfriend, you should focus on becoming and being the best man you can be.

Be someone whom she can be proud of and look up to. However, at the same time, make sure that you encourage her to be the best woman she can be.

Don’t try to get her to hide away from life because you’re afraid she’ll meet another guy. Love her and encourage her, but don’t get in the way of her doing whatever she wants to do.

If you can do that while also becoming a bigger and better man every day, then you won’t be a good boyfriend, you’ll be an amazing boyfriend.

The Modern Man's Guide to Gift Giving

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

'Tis the holiday season and whether we like it or not, this is the time of year for gift giving.

However, before you rush out to the stores to spend a fortune on your lady, stop for a moment to think about what really matters to her.

Physical gifts can be special reminders of your love or a small token of your affection, but gifts come in many other forms and don't all need to be bought from a store at the mall.

For instance, the ultimate gift that you can give to a woman is your love. If she is truly loved by a man whom she respects, feels attraction for and loves in return, then she isn't going to be very worried about whether or not you spend a lot of money on a physical gift.

From her perspective, anything you get for her will be special because it's coming from you, the man whom she loves, respects and feels attraction for.

Do you know how to make a woman feel attracted to who you are, rather than what you buy for her?

Watch this video to understand how a woman's attraction for a man works and how you can use it to make her appreciate anything you get her...

As you will discover from the video above, your real value and worth to a woman is in how you make her feel by way of your personality, confidence, vibe and attitude.

Don't Try to Buy a Woman's Love

[image: Trying to buy a woman's feelings]

Where a lot of guys go wrong is in thinking that they can buy a woman's love and commitment with gifts, weekends away and other expensive objects.

What really matters to a woman is whether or not the love you share is true, whether or not she can respect you as a man and whether or not she is attracted to you.

[image: Don't try to buy a woman's love]

Without those three elements in a relationship, it won't matter if you buy her a Mercedes Benz for Christmas â your relationship problems will remain bubbling under the surface.

All that said, there's nothing wrong with buying your girlfriend or wife a gift to show her you care or to make her feel extra special.

Just make sure that you don't try to use the purchasing of gifts to make up for the lack of effort you put into the relationship, the problems you've been causing in the relationship or the lack of purpose and drive you have as a man in your everyday life.

The best gift you can ever give a woman is to be a real man for her, to truly love her and to always strive to deepen the love and connection that you both share. Those gifts are priceless and will always be more appreciated by her than any physical object you can buy for her from a store.

Gifts That Show You Care

Weâve all heard the expression, Itâs the thought that counts, but is that really the case?

Well, in the case of buying a gift for the special woman in your life, yes it is.

Making her feel special is all about letting her know that you were thinking about her at the time of buying it. This means that you should choose something that is relevant to her interests, your relationship together or is something that she'd really like or appreciate â not just something you picked from a random store shelf at the last minute.

The ideal gift for the woman in your life is going to be something that matches her personality; something that shows you understand her and know her likes and dislikes, or something thatâs relevant to her life and your relationship. All women are different and all relationships go through stages, so your choice should ultimately reflect this. For example:

1. A new dating relationship

If youâre in the early stages of a relationship, youâre not necessarily going to know everything about your new girlfriendâs likes and dislikes, but something you can be sure of is that sheâs going to love any gift she sees as being romantic or charming.

Generally speaking, young women love to be given cute trinkets, jewelry or teddy bears that they can keep close to them to remind them of you when youâre not spending time together.

However, a more mature woman in a new, dating relationship will feel the same way, but she may prefer to be given something a little less cutesy that she can keep with her when sheâs not with you, perhaps even something that belongs to you.

If the relationship is very new, then you shouldn't go overboard and get her loads of gifts. A small gift or even a weekend away is best, but try not to shower her with gifts, unless both of you really want to do that for each other.

2. A serious, committed girlfriend

If youâve been dating a girl for quite a while or youâre in a committed relationship, you'll be more aware of her particular likes and dislikes and therefore what sort of gift would hold the most meaning for her.

In fact, itâs not unusual for steady girlfriends to drop plenty of subtle hints about what theyâd like on the run up to Christmas or to another traditional "gift giving day" such as a birthday, anniversary or Valentine's Day.

Of course, women usually don't like having to spell things out for a guy; she wants him to be able to pick up on her body language, read between the lines and be emotionally tuned-in enough to the relationship to pick up on those signals and then act on them.

Maybe sheâs running low on her favorite perfume or a new fragrance has just been released and sheâd love to have it. There may be an item of designer clothing that sheâs been longing to have, or a new autobiography out by someone she admires and would love to read about.

In this type of relationship, it's important to find a gift that is personal to her and shows that you actually listen to her and care enough to pay attention to the things she likes, even if you don't like them.

She wants to feel special, so not picking up on her hints about wanting a book and then choosing a title thatâs of no interest to her will leave her feeling that youâre not actually paying her any real attention at all.

The same applies if you don't pick up on her hints about her favorite perfume and instead buy her a fragrance she has never worn around you or doesn't like. However, thatâs not to say you shouldn't get her totally unique and original gift.

It's fine to take a risk and give her something unique that she may have never thought of, but just make sure you don't give her something that she hates, but that you like. It's about making her feel special and appreciating her, not getting her to like what you like.

3. A wife, fianc© or long-term girlfriend

The longer youâve been together, the more important it is to choose a gift thatâs relevant to her or your relationship together.

She may have a particular hobby or interest that you could support her in by giving her a related gift, or a particular luxury food or drink that she'd never buy for herself, but would love to be given as an indulgent gift.

Maybe sheâs reached a stage in her life where she already has everything she needs, so booking a weekend away or tickets to go and see a show will mean more to her than another piece of jewelry or another beautiful, but essentially useless object.

Always Remember to Focus on Giving Her the Most Important Gift of All

For most women, the most important the gift is being head over heels in love with you, being truly loved by you in return and looking forward to her future with you. When a woman has that sort of love flowing through her life, then physical gifts are merely a bonus and certainly aren't necessary to show that you care.

When you truly love a woman and you are the type of man whom she can truly love, then gifts are just an occasional, surprise bonus on top of an already amazing relationship.

If you do exchange gifts around the traditional âgift givingâ times of year, then she won't expect much at all because her heart will already be full of happiness just by being with you.

As long as the love, respect and attraction between you continues to deepen, it really doesn't matter what gift you give her â she'll appreciate it and love you even more as a result.

How to Fix a Broken Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

To fix a broken relationship with a woman, you need to work on regaining her respect and attraction for you and she will then begin to reconnect with the love once again.

Essentially, if your woman is no longer interested in being with you, it means that she's gone through the following three stages to get to this point:

1. She lost respect for you as her man.
2. She stopped feeling attraction for you.
3. She fell out of love with you.

You can change that.

As you will discover from the video above, you can fix your relationship by gaining control of the chain reaction effect in your relationship.

When you are in control of the chain reactions, you will automatically begin getting her respect back and making her feel attracted to you again. She will then reconnect with the love and will be happy with you again.

The Fear of Losing Her

[image: The thought of losing her]

Whether you've been together for a few months, a few years or for what seems like a lifetime, it's a horrible feeling to have to wake up one day and realize that your relationship is falling apart. Just imagining her with another man is enough to make you sick to your stomach.

So, how can you escape the fear of losing her? How can you regain control? Watch this video...

One of the keys to understanding how to fix a broken relationship is to understand what actually makes a relationship work.

It's only when you know how to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for you and then then act on that knowledge that you will naturally and easily begin to fix your broken relationship.

Essentially, a relationship between a man and a woman will work if:

- The man guides both himself and the woman into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for each other.
- They share the same long term (not just short term) outlook on life.
- They grow together as a couple, rather than one person growing and the other being left behind.
- The man makes her feel like a feminine woman because he remains in a masculine way of being, rather than being neutral around her or worse, being feminine around her.

When Things Fall Apart...

[image: How to fix a broken relationship]

When we first embark on a new relationship, most of us find it difficult (if not impossible) to imagine that the glorious feelings of joy, euphoria, romance, passion and even lust will ever go away.

So, when the relationship feels like it is falling apart, most people are taken by surprise and begin to question:

- How did this happen?
- Why did this happen to us? We were so in love?
- Why didn't I see the signs?
- What did I do wrong?
- What is love if it doesn't last?
- Does she still love me?
- How can she be thinking of breaking up with me, when we were so madly in love before?

And finally...more importantly:

- How can I fix it?

If you are willing to fix the problems in your relationship, then you have a great chance of getting things back on track. However, if you're just looking for a "quick tip of the day" and aren't prepared to put in some effort, then your relationship will likely remain broken and eventually break up.

Did You Miss the Signs?

[image: Fixing a broken relationship]

Another secret to the process of how to fix a broken relationship, is to take responsibility. Accept or admit to yourself that you were either not paying attention to the signs, or you did notice them, but have waited this long to do anything about it.

Depending on the severity of the signs she was giving you about her dissatisfaction with the relationship, you will be able to gauge how serious the damage to the relationship is.

Sometimes, it will only be a little bit broken and you'll be able to fix it quite quickly. Yet, other times, it's going to take a lot of effort and a lot of time before she begins feeling what she used to feel for you again.

For example: Here are some signs that suggest a relationship is broken or is on the way to breaking up.

- Often being irritated at just the sight of each other.
- Screaming/yelling at each other pretty much every time you disagree about something.
- Fighting over way too many trivial things.
- Ignoring each other because neither of you see the other as being worthy of much of your attention.

- Spending less and less time together.
- One of you is sleeping on the couch (or in another bedroom) a lot more.
- Sheâ□□s complains about you to her mother and friends every chance she gets.
- She goes out clubbing or partying without you.
- To avoid spending time together, one or both of you are leaving the house earlier every morning and coming home from work later and later in the evenings.
- There is no more intimacy; romantic dinners, holding hands or affectionate kisses are a thing of the past.
- The sex has dried up to pretty much zero, or only happens once a month.

If you can relate to many of the signs above, then your relationship is in trouble.

You can fix it and you can get the love and harmony back in your relationship, but to do that, you're going to need to make sure that she wants to fix the relationship as well.

Getting Her to Want it Too

Fixing a broken relationship is completely possible and it happens all the time, all over the world. However, to truly be successful at it, both parties have to want it. If your woman currently doesn't want it, then you're going to first have to focus on regaining her respect and attraction for you.

Once that is back, she will then begin opening herself back up to loving you and the idea of committing to you in a relationship will feel like the right thing to do and what she wants to do.

Fixing a Broken Relationship

So, let's have a different look at how to fix a broken relationship by asking you a bunch of questions to help you understand what needs fixing, changing or adjusting.

1. Did your directions in life change?

When a couple gets together, initially it usually all about lust, sex and intimacy and only after a while do they start to discuss (or hint at) their plans for the future.

Often, these plans for the future do not match and on a subconscious level both parties will soon realize that as dating partners they are great, but as life partners they are incompatible.

If this is something that has happened to you and neither of you wants to come out and say it directly, you could find yourselves moving in opposite directions rather than moving forward to the deeper stages of a relationship.

As that happens, you and her may begin doing things to break the relationship apart because you're unwilling to fess up and admit that you're just not that compatible anymore.

2. Did one of you cheat?

Cheating is a sign that there serious problems in the relationship.

Cheating is the result of many underlying issues such as lack of confidence, the need for attention, the desire to ruin the relationship that way instead of having to tell the other person you no longer want to be committed to them, etc.

An issue like this cannot be swept under the carpet and needs to be addressed urgently. If a woman cheats, you should dump her and have sex with at least one new woman (not a hooker!), who is at least as pretty as her, but preferably prettier. Once the score is settled and you are even, you should then get back into a relationship if both of you want it.

Forgiving her cheating is usually a recipe for disaster because most men won't be able to stop feeling insecure and hurt about it.

Personally speaking, I would do what I've suggested above. I wouldn't accept a woman's cheating and then hope that we live happily ever after. Life is like the movies where actors play out unusual, strange and dramatic roles to entertain an audience.

3. Did the spark die out?

Sometimes the spark of the relationship simply dies. When couples first embark on a relationship there is often a lot of charming and romantic behavior, as well as flirting and exciting seduction.

However, when they settle into a relationship and the initial excitement wears off, most people don't know how to get that back.

4. Did you stop being the guy she fell in love with?

[image: Did you stop being the guy she originally fell in love with?]

There are certain qualities and characteristics about you that your woman was attracted to when you first began the relationship.

If those qualities disappear and are mostly replaced by unattractive qualities (e.g. insecurity, jealousy, over-protectiveness, you not having much purpose in life, etc), then she may begin to look elsewhere to find what she believed she had found in you.

How to Fix a Broken Relationship in One Night

When a relationship breaks, there is no quick fix remedy that will make it all better overnight, so if you're one of those guys who gets sucked into thinking there is a magic trick, you will be disappointed.

If you really want to fix your broken relationship, you must accept that it's going to take some effort from you to evolve as a man.

You can't go on behaving like you have been and think things will change. Likewise, you can't simply â□□plan a romantic dinnerâ□□ and expect that everything will be fine after that.

Relationships are much more complex than that and to keep a relationship together, you have to be the type of man that she respects and feels attraction for all the time, not just for one night.

What Do You Need to Improve About Yourself?

[image: What do you need to improve about yourself?]

If you're wondering how to fix a broken relationship, then chances are high that you might be contributing to at least some of the problems in the relationship.

If your woman is to blame, then you either need to dump her and get a new woman, or explain to her what you don't like and let her know that you're willing to grow and change together, to rekindle the love and feelings that were so enjoyable for you both in the past.

However, if most of the blame falls on you, then what do you need to improve about yourself? For example, certain aspects of a man's behavior can create serious problems in a relationship, such as:

1. Thinking, behaving or acting in an unattractive way around her

Most guys don't ever get taught how to attract women by their father or other adult male role models as they are growing up.

As a result, they are left to work it out for themselves.

Some guys are naturals with women and know what to say and do to be attractive to a woman. Yet, most guys need a bit of help and in their confusion, they end up turning women off in ways that they don't even understand.

As a result, the woman who once fell in love with them is now feeling turned off and thinking about leaving or cheating on him.

Watch this video to understand what you need to do to fix the problem...

Once you have re-sparked her attraction for you and made her feel respect for you, it's so much easier and more natural for her to feel love and appreciation for you.

She wants to be around you because she feels so good with you now.

The next area of improvement that many men need help with in a relationship with a woman is...

2. A lack of confidence and self-esteem

High levels of self-esteem and self-confidence are qualities that women find sexy in a guy and are one of the things that women are most attracted to at the beginning of a courtship. This attraction will remain for life if he remains confident and full of self-esteem.

However, if he is showing a lack of confidence and self-esteem too often during the relationship, the woman will gradually lose more and more respect and attraction for him. She will start to question her choice in a guy and wonder if he was faking it just to get her to like him.

If she feels like she's been cheated into believing he is someone he's not, or if she now has to start "mothering him" to get him to believe in himself, she will definitely start backing out of the relationship.

3. Not following through on your big ambitions and goals in life

During the early part of a relationship, couples usually don't discuss their goals and ambitions in life in too much detail. However, later on, it becomes a very important part of a woman's respect and attraction for her man.

If you initially seemed to be a man of purpose and convinced her that you had big plans to succeed in life, but you then slacked off or gave up, she will naturally feel as though she's been tricked into being in a relationship with a liar.

A woman wants to see that no matter how challenging life gets, her man is strong enough to keep pushing forward to achieve his biggest goals and dreams. However, if she finds herself in a relationship with a guy who is hiding from his true potential as a man behind her and the relationship, she will naturally begin to lose respect and attraction for him.

If she doesn't change and start following through on his promises to be a bigger and better man than the guy she met, she will begin to fall out of love with him.

Do All Women Cheat?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Not all women cheat, but cheating has definitely become more common these days because women don't have to put up with a man for life if they don't love, respect and feel attraction for him.

In the past, it was shameful to break up or divorce, but it has unfortunately become very common and acceptable.

If you don't want to get cheated on by a woman, you can lessen the odds to nearly zero by:

1. Choosing the right woman for you, rather than accepting whatever you can get.
2. Deepening her feelings of love, respect and attraction throughout the relationship, rather than taking her for granted.

A lot of guys simply accept whatever they can get with women and as a result, they often find themselves trying to make a relationship work with a woman who isn't compatible.

[image: Incompatible couple]

To avoid finding yourself in a relationship with a woman who isn't compatible with you, it's important that you develop your ability to attract women.

When you are able to attract women with your confidence and charismatic personality, you then have your choice with women and can choose a perfectly compatible woman for you.

[image: Compatible couples]

Watch this video to understand how a woman's attraction for a man works and how you can use that to get yourself a compatible woman and then avoid being cheated on later on in a relationship...

As you will discover from the video above, it is possible to be the sort of man that a woman never wants to leave.

Not all women cheat, but when a modern woman finds herself in a relationship with a man who she isn't very compatible with, she now has the option to leave or cheat to ensure that she has a new guy to go to when she breaks up with her old one.

Why Are You Asking if All Women Cheat?

When a man asks, "Do all women cheat?" it may be because the woman he loves has recently cheated on him, a friend has just been cheated on or he has suddenly realized that he's been cheated on by most women he's been with.

Either way, when a guy has been cheated on by a woman that he truly loves and is hurting as a result, it's only natural that he's going to question whether all women are likely to treat him the same way in future.

According to statistics published in the Journal of Marital and Family Therapy (USA), 57% of men and 54% of women admit to having cheated at some point in their lives when in a relationship.

Interestingly, 74% of the men surveyed said they would have an affair if they knew they would never get caught and 68% of the women surveyed said the same.

With these kind of statistics, it's fair to say that not all women cheat and not all men cheat, but clearly there's very little difference between the genders when it comes to infidelity.

So, if you ever hear someone saying that women cheat more or men cheat more, just know that they are basing it on their personal experiences.

Generally speaking, it's pretty much the same because I have found that most women are not willing to admit to cheating because it is more detrimental to a woman's social standing than it is for a man.

I would say that cheating is pretty much even amongst men and women.

What Counts as Cheating?

[image: Is she cheating?]

So, what actually counts as cheating?

This is a question that many couples in a relationship will never ask one another because they don't want to give the other person the impression of being okay with a bit of flirting or hugging when interacting with the opposite sex.

I think that it goes without saying that having sex with someone else when you're in a relationship is definitely cheating, but what about kissing someone else, or flirting with someone else, or even just having sexual thoughts about someone else?

Cheating can be physical or it can be emotional and unless both parties have clearly agreed on their expectations of one another, there's plenty of potential for upset.

A lot of the guys who contact me with questions along the lines of, "Do all women cheat?" or "Why have so many of my girlfriends cheated on me?" have found themselves in situations where they see their girlfriend's flirtatious behavior as unacceptable, yet she sees things differently.

For example: One guy explained to me that his girlfriend had become really good friends with a male work colleague of hers and had spent a lot of time with him outside of work.

He felt that by spending so much time with him sometimes sleeping over on his couch she was cheating on him, but she couldn't understand why he felt that way because her male friend was just that, a friend, and there was nothing going on between them.

If this resonates with you, you need to question whether you really want to be in a relationship with a woman who has very different relationship expectations to you.

Personally speaking, I would see that as unacceptable behavior and if my girlfriend (update: I recently got married to my sexy, 22 year old girlfriend who is 15 years younger than me) ever wanted to sleep on the couch at a guy's place from her work, it would be the last time she would be able to call herself my girlfriend.

However, I don't have a problem with her having male friends. She has plenty of male friends. It's just that she doesn't sleep over at their house! My girlfriend and I have had the chat about what we see as acceptable and unacceptable and as a result, neither of us feels as though we need to hide friends from each other.

What Makes a Woman Cheat?

If you're in a situation where your definition of cheating is different to your woman's definition, it's all too easy to slip into patterns of behavior that will make the situation worse.

For example: You might become insecure and jealous when your woman interacts with other guys or accuse her of liking guys she talks to or even looks at. Insecure thinking, behavior and actions never, ever helps the situation and only makes it worse because women are attracted to the emotional strength in men and turned off by the weakness.

If you don't want a woman to feel the need to cheat on you when in a relationship, you have to be the sort of man who she can look up to, not look down on.

As a man, it's your responsibility to guide you and your woman into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for each other. If you fail to do that because you're too busy being insecure and trying to stop her from looking at other guys, then she will naturally begin falling out of love with you and other guys will become more appealing to her.

The bottom line here is that women are attracted to confident men who are secure in themselves and what they've got to offer in a relationship.

Men with genuine self-confidence and true, alpha male characteristics are men who effectively have their pick of women. If you're that man, the woman you have chosen to be in a relationship with will be doing everything she can to ensure that you choose to stay in a relationship with her.

Thoughts of cheating on you are never going to be on her mind for very long, because she will always be reminded (because you will consistently be the man in the relationship) that she already has what she wants and needs.

However, any sort of behavior that reveals you to be a man who lacks confidence or a man who is insecure in any way will make her feel less sexually attracted to you and much more open to thoughts of cheating on you when she's in the company of other men.

Today's Women Can and Do Leave if They Are Unhappy

[image: Marriage in the old days]

Unfortunately, today's approach to relationships is not like how it was back in the 1800s where it was considered shameful for a woman to break up with a man.

These days, all levels of society actively encourage women to break up with a man if he isn't good enough. SO, when a woman isn't happy, she just goes out and gets herself a new man.

[image: Dating - Sex before marriage]

TV shows, TV talk show hosts, celebrities, teachers and even family and friends are saying to women, "If you're not happy, then dump him!" and that is giving women the freedom of mind to cheat if they want to (because relationships aren't seen as that serious, unless they are serious) and dump guys who aren't up to scratch.

Are You Causing Women to Cheat?

Personally speaking, the whole reason I started The Modern Man was that I got cheated on by the love of my life and went through years of loneliness and depression before eventually getting my mojo back.

In the relationship with the girl who dumped me, I was too needy, I wasn't enough of a man for her and she, like most modern women, realized that she didn't need to stay faithful to me. So, cheated on me and then dumped me.

Back when my ex-girlfriend cheated on me and then dumped me, I too was asking, "Do all women cheat?" and was turned off the idea of relationships for many years following that experience.

The pain of having my heart broken like that was just too much. I remember thinking that I was going to remain single and alone for life because women were just too difficult.

Back then, I didn't know what I eventually put into videos like this that are now helping men all around the world...

After going through years of pain and loneliness after being cheated on and then dumped, I eventually realized that just because you're in a relationship with a woman, it doesn't mean that she is obligated to stick by you no matter what.

If you end up being an insecure, emotionally-weak guy and don't make her feel what she wants to feel, she will eventually have to start thinking about herself and her needs. She will warn you and request that you change, but if nothing does, she will naturally begin to stray.

Do You Have the Ability to Maintain a Relationship That Lasts For Life?

How do you behave when you are deep into a relationship with a woman (i.e. past the initial dating phase and the honeymoon phase)?

Have you been causing women to cheat on you because you've always slowly ruined the love, respect and attraction you feel for each other, rather than deepening it and guiding you and her into the more advanced levels of a relationship?

If you're an insecure guy (i.e. you have low self-esteem, don't see yourself as being very valuable to most women, you aren't very confident in social situations, you need a woman to be emotionally gentle with you because you are sensitive, etc), then you're probably going to become jealous of any other man in your woman's life, even if she is just friends with him.

This insecurity may lead you to being overly-possessive and suspicious of her every move when you're not around. When she continually sees that side of you, her attraction and respect for you will gradually diminish until she begins falling out of love with you.

When that happens, she will either break up with you or cheat on you and then break up with you. Being insecure in a relationship with a woman is never helpful. It always creates problems rather than fixing them.

For example: The more insecure a guy thinks, behaves and acts around his girlfriend, the less attraction she will feel for him.

Her lack of attraction will usually lead to her behaving in ways (e.g. pulling back her interest, being less affectionate, etc) that arouses his suspicions even more, causing him to become even more insecure...and so the vicious cycle continues.

Suddenly she stops dedicating all of her time to him and begins spending more time with other friends. He then becomes more insecure, jealous, controlling and protective and she falls further out of love with him.

How about you?

Have you ever felt suspicious because your girlfriend didn't respond to a text message quick enough, or didn't pick up her phone right away even though you knew she was awake and available to talk?

Chances are she was in the shower or doing something else equally innocent at the time, but your insecurity led to you imagining she was with another man or simply losing interest in you.

That kind of insecurity is never helpful in a relationship. Sure, if she's a liar and she's always flirting with other men, then you have reason to be suspicious, but why would you be in a relationship with a woman like that anyway?

If you want to avoid being in a relationship with an untrustworthy, incompatible woman, you need to choose your women instead of accepting whatever you can get whenever you get lucky once in a while.

Some Women Use Men For a While and Then Discard Them

Always remember this important fact of nature: Women are attracted to confident, alpha males and while they may put up with a lesser male temporarily (e.g. to use him for money, to use him to get over an ex, to use him for some attention, etc), they will never be truly loyal to him.

If an alpha male comes along and is willing to commit to her, she will jump ship so fast that the lower-ranking male won't know what happened.

A woman yearns to be with a guy who can make her feel a deep and continuous attraction for him. This comes down to you being a well-rounded man who is able to deepen her respect, love and attraction over time.

These days, you can't expect a woman to stick around just because a relationship felt good in the beginning.

If you don't want to be another victim of female cheating, you need to become and be the sort of man that women don't want to cheat on.

It might sound like a lot of work, but it's actually a lot easier than going through a life of stress and worry about potentially being cheated on. When you know that you're the type of guy that a woman wouldn't want to cheat on, it allows you to relax and get on with enjoying life together.

Things to Do In a Long Distance Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you don't want to be sitting around worrying that she might be cheating on you or thinking about leaving you, the secret is to make her feel high levels of respect, love and attraction for you.

If those three elements are not there, then it won't matter how often you chat to her on Skype, Facebook, Whatsapp, via SMS / text, email or phone. Without respect, love and attraction, most modern women will cheat (54% in normal relationships and approximately 70% in long distance relationships).

If you don't want the relationship to fall apart while you are a long distance from each other, you need to make sure that you are being the type of guy that she continues to feel a lot of respect, love and attraction for.

Watch this video to understand how it works...

Then and Now

[image: Relationships stuck together for life]

In the past, most people lived out their entire life in the original town or city where they were born. Yet, today's world is a lot different and an increasing number of relationships are becoming long-distance.

Unlike in the past where it was forbidden and taboo for a marriage to end in divorce (people didn't have casual, unmarried relationships back in the late 1800s to early 1900s), today's culture accepts break ups and divorce as normal.

[image: Women are now free to break up with men if they want to]

Women are now free to have sex with whoever they want and break up with a guy in a local or long distance relationship. If a woman isn't feeling the type of love, respect and attraction that she wants, she doesn't have to stay faithful and wait around hoping that things change.

Going Long Distance

Almost everyone knows one or a few people who have travelled and even lived overseas, or simply relocated to another part of the country.

Lately, an increasing number of guys have been contacting me looking for help before they lose their long distance girlfriend, fiancé or wife.

While most guys are looking for advice on things to do (e.g. chatting on Skype, watching a movie at the same time, etc) in a long-distance relationship, what they really need help with is how to maintain her feelings of love, respect and attraction for them.

A lot of the advice you will find online centers around "doing things together" virtually, but no matter how many things you do together online, it won't stop her from cheating on you or leaving you if she doesn't actually feel a lot of respect, love and attraction for you.

I recommend that you watch this video for more of an insight on modern relationships:

Is Your Relationship Really Ready For Long Distance?

The first thing I need to make clear to guys who are after tips on things to do in a long-distance relationship is this: Your relationship needs to be fairly well established before it becomes a long-distance one, otherwise she will be less committed and invested in the idea of you and the relationship.

It takes a strong emotional connection to be able to cope with the limitations in physical contact that a long-distance relationship will create, so unless that emotional bond has had time to form, the lack of physical closeness will inevitably lead to a gradual drift apart.

I have friends who are married and either the man or woman has to be away for long periods of time because of work commitments. They've been able to make it work because they already have an established relationship, are still madly in love and are completely committed to each other.

However, I also have friends who've lost a girlfriend (or some of my female friends who've lost a boyfriend) because of distance. In their case, the relationship fell apart mainly because they weren't completely committed to each other yet. It was love and they were enjoying the sex, but one or both of them just weren't truly ready to commit to the other.

Where Guys Go Wrong

The Internet is awesome and it's great that millions of people are blogging online and helping each other out. However, sometimes a blogger's good intentions to give dating and relationship advice ends up causing problems for men.

One common piece of bad advice online is that you should "Skype daily" or "Send her e-gifts" of some sort. While there is nothing wrong with doing something cute or sweet every now and then, you should not lay it on too thick or do it often. Why? If a woman doesn't feel much respect and attraction for you, then sending her sweet things online will have the opposite effect.

She will begin to think, "Why am I not feeling excited to get this sweet message from him?" or "Why do I feel like I don't want to talk with him much anymore?" That is obviously not how you want to make a woman feel in a long distance relationship.

Some bloggers will tell you to spend as much together with his her as possible.

This will mean doing things via video calls, watching TV shows at the same time, staying involved in each other's daily lives via phone calls, text messages, emails, and any other means of "live" communication available. It makes sense to be in regular contact, but trying too hard to be involved in a woman's life actually turns her off.

Women are naturally attracted to a man who has purpose in life OTHER than the woman. If you are sitting around thinking about her all day instead of being a man and rising through the levels of your true potential to reach for your true purpose in life, then it will naturally turn her off.

She might enjoy all the attention initially, but she will quickly begin to feel turned off by you. At that point, she will begin to open herself up to the idea of being with other men.

Guys who spend too much time pursuing a woman in a long distance relationship can easily get to the point where they feel insecure.

When she's not in the mood to "hang out virtually" one night, he might begin to worrying that he's losing her or that some other guy has stolen her heart. He may then begin to behave in jealous and insecure ways, which will turn her off and make her begin to question the "man" she is holding out for.

Women are attracted to the strength in men and turned off by the weakness. So, showing her your emotional weakness to a woman in a long distance relationship will only cause her to lose attraction for you and for other men to suddenly appear more attractive in her eyes.

Stay True to the Man You Are Trying too hard to make up for not being together physically, will usually lead to suffocating the life out of a relationship with a woman.

If you're not growing as a man and reaching for your true potential life as a man, then you're stagnating. When she feels that and notices it, her attraction and respect for you will begin to diminish and the relationship will begin to feel unnecessary and weird to her.

It will no longer be seen as something that is she wants or enjoys, but will instead feel like a burden for her. You will become someone that she has to take care of, rather than a man she can look up to and feel proud, lucky and excited to be with.

You need to keep being the man she fell in love with while also becoming a bigger and better man each day if you want her to stay in love with you. That principle of male-female relationships applies whether you're living together or are or thousands of miles apart.

The core thing you need to remember in terms of things to do in a long-distance relationship is that keeping any relationship alive and making it a successful one comes down to being a man who knows how to create and maintain the ideal relationship dynamic in a male-female relationship.

This means being a man who knows how to make a woman feel like a woman and a man who has what it takes to naturally lead the way in a relationship "irrespective of whether it's a long-distance one or not.

So, instead of looking for cute things to do in a long distance relationship and wasting time, energy and money buying her a bunch of gifts or gadgets, ask yourself these questions...

Am I the sort of man that she will happily stay faithful to?

Have I sparked enough attraction in her for me that she isn't interested in other men?

Have I been guiding her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for me, or have I been slowly killing our relationship with my insecurities or emotional weakness?

The Beginning of a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The beginning of a relationship is the easy part because everything feels new, wonderful and exciting. The question is: Will you get past the easy part and get to the more difficult stages of a relationship where you and her truly fall in love and deeply commit to each other for life?

[image: Will you get past the beginning of your relationship?]

As a man, it's your responsibility to guide a woman into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for you. If you don't do that, the relationship will gradually begin to fall apart and will usually end in a break up.

Why?

In the past, a woman was almost completely dependant on a man for her survival. She had to remain a virgin until marriage and then stick with her chosen man for life, even if she wasn't happy because divorce was pretty much forbidden.

[image: Marriage in the old days]

Back in 1900 for example, the divorce rate was less than 10% across the developed world, whereas today it's at an average of 50%.

If you want to keep a relationship together with a woman, you've got to be able to deepen her feelings of respect, love and attraction for you over time. Much of this comes down to your ability to be an attractive man in her eyes.

Watch this video to understand how it works...

Feeling Gooooood

There is no greater feeling in the world than the excitement and the thrill that you experience at the beginning of a relationship. Everything is new, fresh and exciting and you and the woman are buzzing with new feelings of love, lust and belonging. It feels goooooood.

You're happy with yourself for landing a new girlfriend and that gives you a feeling of satisfaction and achievement. You are now officially a member of an exclusive club: The Couples Club.

No more lonely nights, no more hanging out trying to find the right girl and no more anxiety about approaching women. No more being the only without a woman at a party or being the third wheel when you hang out with your buddy and his girlfriend.

So, Where Do You Go From Here?

Once the dust has settled and the excitement of being at the beginning of a relationship has worn off, many guys find themselves stuck and unsure on how to proceed.

Most people assume that you should just keep hanging out, having sex and seeing each other and that will cause both of you to fall deeper in love with each other.

Yet, that's not how it works.

If you want a woman to gradually feel deeper and stronger feelings of love, respect and attraction for you, then you need to be what she refers to as a real man.

Don't Seek Advice From Women

Since a lot modern guys grow up without a lot of male role models around them, much of the information they get about dating and relationships comes from women; their mothers, grandmothers, sisters or school teachers.

The fact is, while women do know what they want from a man, they are too ashamed to say it in public or even around most friends. Why? They can't say, "I like a confident guy who knows he can have me. He's so confident and sure of himself that I have to impress him to get with him."

Instead, they will say, "I like a nice guy who listens, is caring and doesn't think he can just have me" because they don't want to give all guys the impression that they are actually a lot easier to pick up than they let on.

Growing up, a mother may tell her son to "be a nice boy," to shower his girlfriend with flowers and gifts, to call her (or text her, or e-mail her) every day and to do what his girlfriend tells him to do.

She'll say that being nice and being a gentleman is the way to ensure he doesn't get dumped before the beginning of the relationship has even had a chance to get started. Yet, in reality, women do not respond well to guys being extra nice in the hope of being rewarded with love, sex and affection.

This "getting to know each other" period at the beginning of a relationship is crucial, and is what will determine whether the relationship is going to develop into something serious and long term, or whether it is going to fizzle out and die right at the start.

While a mother has good intentions for telling her son that sort of thing, it is not the answer to keeping a woman interested and guiding both you and her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for each other.

Separating the Men From the Boys

[image: Separating the men from the boys]

Women are more attracted to an alpha male than any other type of male.

An alpha male is strong, both mentally and emotionally, he's confident, he's self-assured and he's the kind of guy who knows what he wants and goes out and gets it. The opposite of an alpha male is the lower-ranking male (starting from beta male and going all the way down to an omega male).

The lower-ranking male is mentally and emotionally weak, lacks confidence and self esteem and is the kind of guy who waits around hoping for life to happen.

A guy like that will often be able to get lucky and get to the beginning of a relationship with a woman, but once this initial lust buzz has worn off, the woman will usually dump him and move on.

Lower-ranking males will usually do whatever they can (including drinking alcohol to work up the courage to approach a woman) to put on a brave front and approach women they find attractive.

From there, they will say and do whatever they can to impress the woman and hope that she gives her phone number out, kisses him, dates him and commits to being in a relationship with him.

If they are lucky enough to get a dating relationship going with a woman, it's usually with the type of woman who doesn't have a lot of relationship experience, is desperate to find a new guy right away (e.g. to get over an ex) or who isn't very attractive to most men.

Sometimes though, a guy will score an awesome woman (the type that most guys want), but it usually won't last for very long. As the relationship gets going, he won't just can't stop his lower-ranking male style of thinking from causing problems between himself and the woman. For example, he will:

1. Become insecure:

Insecurity creeps in and he begins to question his good luck. He begins to wonder why his woman likes him and assumes that she will likely dump him soon, just like most girls have done to him before.

2. Be unable to control his jealousy

Stemming from his insecurity and lack of confidence, he will begin to feel jealous. He'll secretly feel that any guy that she interacts with will be a threat to his relationship with her.

This lower-ranking male thinking will cause him to start accusing her of liking other guys or even cheating. He might even tell her that if she wants to stay with him, she's going to have to stop talking to other guys she knows...who he thinks will steal her from him.

3. Feel submissive or powerless around her

After putting on a confident front at the beginning of the relationship, these guys will gradually become submissive by handing over their power to the woman.

He will pretty much let the woman become the dominant one to the point where she ends up feeling like "the man" in the relationship and that turns both of them off each other sexually.

4. Stop seducing her:

Nothing is worse for a woman than being seduced into a new relationship, only to discover that it was all an act or that the guy really doesn't know how to guide her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction.

All he can do it get to the beginning of a relationship, have sex, go hang out together at a few cool places (e.g. beach, movies, etc) and then that's all he's got to offer. Without continuous seduction a relationship, it may as well be a friendship. Continuous seduction is what keeps a woman (and a man) turned on and wanting more as the years go on.

5. Stop adoring her

He's got the girl, so now it's time to concentrate on playing the new, massive video game that has just been released, right? Wrong.

Guys who behave the same way they did when they were single will be single again sooner than they thought. There's nothing wrong with playing video games when you're in a relationship, but there is something wrong with taking a woman for granted and hiding from your true potential in life behind video games.

You've got to make sure that you maintain a healthy balance between focussing on your interests and giving her the love, attention and respect she deserves.

Life Changes When You Get Into a Truly Committed Relationship

Here's what happened to me when I met my girlfriend, who recently became my wife (we got engaged after a short engagement period)....

Deep down, some guys don't want to have to make any changes about themselves or lifestyle when they get a girlfriend.

If, in your heart and mind, you don't want a relationship to change you in any way, then just make sure you don't try to make it a committed one.

If you're just interested in dating relationships that last a few months to a year or are dating multiple women at once, then you don't have to worry about changing anything about yourself â□□ the relationships will most-likely end.

However, if you want a relationship to last, then you need to choose the right woman and then be prepared to constantly grow as a couple. If only one of you grows, but the other remains stagnant, then problems will arise and it will all begin to fall apart, unless the other person lifts their game.

Guide You and Your Woman Into Deeper Love

As a man, it's your responsibility to guide both yourself and your woman into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction for each other.

You have to be the leader with that. She has to do it too, but just don't expect her or request her to be the leader of it. It is your responsibility.

Is it Okay For Men to Cry?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

A woman might not say anything in the moment, but crying like a woman would (e.g. over a movie or challenging time in life) will almost always decrease the amount of respect and attraction she feels for you.

Some women, especially those who are insecure and want an emotionally weak man who needs them, will say that they LIKE a guy who cries.

Of course she does; she wants an emotionally weak man who needs her for his emotional security and stability. She isn't confident enough in herself to be with a man who is so emotionally strong and secure that he would be absolutely happy and fine, with or without her.

So, don't get led astray by what random women say about wanting men to cry. From all of my years of research into sexual attraction between men and women, I have found that crying in front of a woman reduces the amount of attraction and respect for you. However, there are some exceptions to that rule.

Acceptable Times to Cry or Get “Watery-Eyed”

There are times when it is perfectly acceptable for guys to shed a tear or get watery eyes. Women are not turned off sexually if a guy becomes watery eyed at the funeral of a close loved one.

However, some guys don't feel the need to cry in that situation because they've already thought about life and death and knew it was coming. Instead, they will fully experience the grief, loss and sadness, but will not need to cry about it.

It really depends on the man's outlook on life. It's not right for anyone to say whether a guy can't cry at the funeral of a close loved one because it is a personal choice that has to do with his philosophical outlook on life.

I have found that a woman will still be just as sexually attracted to her man if he does or doesn't cry at the funeral of a close loved one. Yet, if he wails and sobs for a long time and she has to comfort him for hours (or days), then she will naturally begin feeling turned off by his inability to maintain control of his emotions and face the reality of life.

No matter how difficult the situation is that a guy is faced with, falling to pieces is not attractive or encouraging to a woman. A woman still wants to know that she can rely on her man; even when everything around him has hit rock bottom.

Another exception for crying is shedding â□□ tears of joy.â□□ Not actual â□□ tears,â□□ but a slight misting (watering) of the eyes is okay.

Events that warrant such a reaction can include: The birth of your child, a triumphant moment for humanity, a well deserved and hard earned graduation, victory in an ultimate sport event such as winning Olympic Gold, and other such overwhelmingly triumphant and emotional events and occasions.

Women are fine with a man becoming watery eyed in such moments, but they are not fine if he wails, sobs or cries uncontrollably.

Crying, at the above-mentioned times is normal and acceptable and does nothing to diminish a man's credibility or masculinity. In fact, a man who can experience depth of emotion can be attractive to women.

Remember: Men who wail, whine and cry at the drop of a hat are definitely NOT attractive. Women perceive such a man to be more like a woman and thus they don't feel the type of sexual attraction and respect that they naturally feel for men.

The TV Show That Gets Me “Watery-Eyed”

I am happy to admit that pretty much EVERY time I watch Long Island Medium, it gets me watery-eyed. Why? Watch an episode and see for yourself.

Prior to watching that show, I wasn't interested in having a family, but it has completely changed the way I feel about life, love and family. It reminds me of the connection we all have as humans and the bigger family we seem to be a part of.

HOWEVER, despite how emotionally moving the show is, I never let myself lose control of my emotions to the point where I actually cry or shed tears. Why? That is what the feminine does. The masculine maintains control of his emotions and the feminine loses control.

I am a man and because of that, I don't think, behave or act like a woman. I sit there watching the show with my girlfriend and the most I ever get is watery eyed, whereas she's always reaching for a tissue to wipe away her tears.

There's nothing wrong with a man acting like a woman (e.g. a gay guy), but if a heterosexual man behaves like a woman, he's not going to be seen as a masculine man that most women want to have sex or a relationship with.

He may be able to attract some very masculine women who are looking for a weak man, but most women will be turned off by him at a fundamental level.

[image: Man crying]

Think about it...

Imagine a really masculine man. He's tough, confident and alpha. When you interact with him, you naturally feel as though you should respect him. You also feel safe around him because you know that most other guys would fear him.

Then, all of a sudden, he starts crying uncontrollably about how he lost his job and looking for someone to comfort him and make it all better. Do you still look at him as a truly masculine man? If you do, then you don't understand what it means to be a man and you've most-likely been acting like a bit of a woman in your life.

If you think it is masculine to lose control of your emotions like a woman, then I don't even have to guess about whether or not women remain attracted to you in a relationship – I know for a fact that they'd lose interest in a guy like that.

A guy like that might be able to get himself into a relationship, but his feminine side (i.e lack of masculinity in the area of maintaining control of his emotions), will eventually turn the woman off and she'll lose interest.

Unacceptable Times to Cry or Get “Watery Eyed”

[image: Man crying after losing his job]

When a man is facing difficulties and obstacles in his life, it is understandable that he can (and will) become upset about it. Dealing with problems in life is normal, but weeping like a little child because of it, is not.

Life might throw you lemons at times, but whether you choose to make lemonade from those lemons, or cry over your misfortune, is what separates the men from the boys.

So here are some examples of when it is not okay for a man to cry:

- After losing his job / being fired from work.
- During a fight with his girlfriend / wife.
- While his house is beingÂ repossessed.
- When hisÂ cat / dog / canaryÂ dies.
- When isÂ passed over for a promotion.
- When the love of his life has ditched him.
- While watching The Lion King.
- When trying to get his ex back (e.g. while begging and pleading with her).

Okay, you get the picture, right? No matter how tough life gets, if you are a man and want women to perceive you as being a man, it is not okay to cry about it.

If a man cries every time heâ□s faced with a problem in life, he begins to look mentally and emotionally weak to women. Women are naturally attracted to men who are like pillars of strength in this world and naturally turned off by men who crumble into a pile of sand/gravel when pushed or challenged.

Masculine strength is what women find attractive in a man because it is what they rely on for day to day support and also in times of difficulty. Women don’t want your weakness, even if they SAY that they do when being politically correct in TV interviews.

Most Women ENJOY Crying

Many women admit that they “love a good cry” and a lot of them cry a couple of times a month. However, if a guy starts behaving like a woman and decides that he “loves a good cry” too, he will be fundamentally unattractive to a woman because unlike a man who is a pillar of strength, he is like a pillar of sand that crumbles when challenged.

A guy who loves to cry is more interested in feeling like a woman than being a strong man who can be a pillar of strength in this world. Don’t get sucked into thinking that “showing your sensitive side” will make women say, “Awww...he’s so cute and vulnerable. I want to hold him and take care of him forever.”

Women may say, “Awww, how sweet” when a guy cries, but secretly they feel NO attraction for him at all. Women are attracted to the strength in men and turned off by the weakness. It is a fact of nature.

Be Careful Where You Get Your Advice on What it Means to Be a Man

Over the years, I've been asked all sorts of questions by guys who are seeking to improve their success with women. It's no surprise to me that lately, a common question has been, â€œIs it okay for men to cry?â€ because the media is full of examples of men crying and then women encouraging it.

Sometimes the women are just being politically correct for the cameras and other times they are honestly saying that they like when a man cries (because they prefer weaker men).

You should also note that not all of the women will encourage it when it happens in front of them. Many of them women will shut their mouth, look down or away and then hope that the guy stops being such a girl.

In the early to mid 1900s, the "real men" were usually depicted as being the hardy guys who could raise a barn, fight a war, skin a deer, strip and re-assemble an entire car and sweep a woman off her feet, all in the space of a single afternoon.

Guys like John Wayne, Clark Gable and Humphrey Bogart were the icons of manhood; and above all else these guys depicted the feelings of the era: Real men don't cry.

Enter the 1980s and 1990s...

Fed up with the whole macho image of previous eras, popular culture began taking a more gentle and feminine approach to the issue of men crying. Women had a voice in the media and they really began to use it.

The media, women's magazines such as Cosmopolitan and even the psychologists of the day began to publicly encourage men to â€œget in touch with their feelingsâ€ and to â€œexpress their feminine side.â€ This heralded the beginning of a new era where men were now forcefully encouraged to, â€œLet it all out and have a good cry.â€

Confused by all the hype, men turned themselves into S.N.A.Gs (Sensitive New Aged Men) and began to â€œexpressâ€ themselves by crying openly during a sad movie, crying to their girlfriend/wife or a woman they were interested in...and the backlash was extreme.

Women everywhere began running in the opposite direction, crying out, â€œEEEEWWWW!!!!â€ Why? No matter what women might say on TV or even in person, they are not sexually attracted to the weakness in men.

Displaying emotion is fine, but emotional weakness and being overly-sensitive is not. Enter the 21st century and men are just as confused as ever. So, it's no surprise that so many guys are arriving at The Modern Man everyday and asking, â€œIs it okay for men to cry?â€

Be careful where you get your advice on how to be a man. Most of what you hear in the media is politically correct bullshit and will actually reduce your success with women.

If you want to be successful with women and you don't know how to go about it, learn from a proven expert like me – not from random people on TV who are almost always going to censor or tone down what they say to be politically correct and avoid offending anyone.

Staying in Control of Your Emotions: That is the Key

Hopefully, I have answered the question of, “Is it okay for men to cry?” clearly enough for you and have put the debate to rest.

While it is okay to get watery-eyed (teary-eyed) about something, it is not okay to lose control of your emotions like a woman. If you do, women will naturally feel turned off by your lack of masculinity.

Ultimately, success with women is about taking on your natural role as a man. Men who behave in ways that make them appear weaker than a woman (i.e. can't control his emotions) are unattractive by women.

If a man is weaker than her (emotionally), a woman will either reject him if he's just approached her, or dump him if he's managed to get into a relationship with her.

Are College-Educated Women Bad Wife Material?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

According to a study published in the American Law and Economics Review, women are responsible for filing approximately 70% of divorce cases in the United States.

Statistics are hard to come by for other countries, but it's safe to guess that the average rate would be somewhere between 60-80%.

70% sounds like a big number for American couples, but it actually gets worse for men who marry college-educated women.

According to the study, evidence is given that among college-educated couples, the percentage of divorces initiated by women is approximately 90%.¹

What the?

Is it possible that the more a woman learns and the more money she earns, the less she wants to be tied down into a traditional role of playing second fiddle to him in a relationship?

Possibly.

However, the rates of divorce are still very high in countries where women don't attend university in high numbers and can't earn much or any money of their own, so it wouldn't be accurate to put it down to those two factors alone.

According to the above-mentioned study, "As a woman's earning capacity increases relative to her husband's, it may be in her interest to seek out another spouse more equal in ability and earning power who will simply be a better companion or more comfortable with her high ambitions for herself" (Sweeney, 1997).²

That sounds pretty selfish though when you think about it because in most cases, a man earns more than a woman, but he doesn't end up leaving her because she's holding him back in life.

Alas, that's where the difference lies between men and women.

Most men tend to enjoy taking on the role as a woman's protector and even provider because it can give a man a feeling of confidence knowing that his woman needs him and relies on him.

On the other hand, most women aren't naturally wired to enjoy being a protector and provider for a man.

So, if a woman ends up feeling like she is a man's protector or provider in a relationship, in addition to the relationship having other problems (e.g. lack of sexual attraction, fights and arguments, being taken for granted), it can cause her feel unsatisfied with the relationship dynamic and want to leave.

Eventually, she dumps him and tries to find a man who can give her the feeling of being safe and protected, even if he happens to be earning less than her.

Now, on one hand, you could say that a woman is selfish for leaving a man who ends up making her feel like she is providing for him and protecting him, while on another hand you could say that it's just nature playing out.

Naturally, most men are wired to want to protect and provide for women and most women are wired to want to feel protected and provided for by a man.

Of course, that doesn't mean that a woman can't earn money, or couldn't protect herself if she needed to.

It also doesn't mean that men should provide everything for women and be servants to women.

Additionally, it doesn't mean that women shouldn't earn money and pay for things or buy things for their man in a relationship.

If a woman is earning money, then she should contribute just as much as the man does financially.

So, the fact that men are naturally wired to want to provide and protect doesn't mean that a woman should get a free ride and just sit back as her man pays for everything they need as a couple, so she can then go on endless shopping sprees for herself.

Instead, what it means is that men and women are naturally wired to like a certain relationship dynamic (i.e the traditional relationship dynamic where the man is the protector and the woman feels safe about him being able to help provide a better future for the both of them) and when that dynamic isn't in place, break ups and divorces are much more likely to happen.

Update: Interestingly, another study that I featured in a recent video found that even feminist women preferred men who treated them and looked at them in a more traditional way (i.e. as wanting and needing the protection of a man and wanting to play a more feminine role in a relationship). Career Women and Divorce

[image: Are college educated women bad wife material?]

To quote editor Michael Noer from Forbes.com, "Guys: A word of advice. Marry pretty women or ugly ones. Short ones or tall ones. Blondes or brunettes. Just, whatever you do, don't marry a woman with a career."

According to Mr. Noer (and many social scientists), by marrying a college-educated career woman you run a higher risk of having a shaky marriage.

It seems that recent studies have found that professional women are more likely to get divorced, more likely to cheat on their husbands and less likely to want to have children.

If they do decide to have kids, they are more likely to be unhappy about it.

By the way...

I am not suggesting that it's best for women not to be college educated or have a career.

If a woman wants to get a college education, she should have that option.

It should be up to her, of course.

The point of this article is to highlight the fact that, according to statistical data from sites like Wikipedia, college-educated women are more likely to initiate divorce than non-educated women.

I am a big fan of smart chicks helping to improve the world, especially in areas like science, but the statistics do show that brainy women who can earn a good living tend to be trigger happy when it comes to divorce.

I personally know of a few couples where the woman is college educated and they are doing fine, but since one of my jobs here at The Modern Man is to help guys get their ex girlfriend or wife back after an unnecessary break up, I know a lot of guys who've been divorced by college educated women or career-focused women.

In most cases, the guy will have given her too much power in the relationship, become needy or insecure and she will then say something like, “I need time to find myself” or “We’re going in different directions in life.”

In many cases, a career woman will be getting so much satisfaction from what she is achieving at work that she will feel emotionally full enough to let a man go.

If her man isn’t rising up to his true potential as a man and making much progress, a career woman will often feel as though she is more of a “man” than he is.

She will then want to find a more masculine man that she can look up to and respect, not look down on or feel sorry for all the time, or at least a man who doesn’t make her feel like she is the protector and provider.

However, such men are hard to find and many career women often end up dating into their 40s and 50s, never being able to find what they refer to as a “real man” because those men are either taken or having sex with younger, prettier women in their 20s.

It’s price women have to pay for getting involved in the workforce and becoming successful.

Of course, all the divorcing going on out there isn’t just from career women or college educated women.

An uneducated woman or a woman without a serious career will also dump or divorce a guy who isn’t enough of a man for her, or who isn’t making her feel what she wants to feel in a relationship.

However, the statistics definitely show that college educated women and career focused women tend to dump or divorce men in higher numbers.

In other words, the more she learns and the more she earns, the higher the chance that she will stray, or just won’t stay.

So, the question is, “Are college educated women bad wife material?”

Well, the answer is that a lot of it depends on who she marries.

If she marries a man who knows how to make her be a good woman to him and their love is true from the beginning, then they should be fine.

Yet, if she marries a guy who allows her to get away with treating him badly and isn’t able to make her feel like she’s in love with him, then the relationship is going to have all sorts of problems (e.g. lack of sex, lack of affection, arguing, tantrums, ignoring each other, feeling disconnected).

As a result of her ability to leave and support herself financially due to her career success, she has the option to leave and in many cases, she just won’t have the motivation to keep working on a relationship where she isn’t in love anymore.

So, it could be the exact same woman, but she married a different type of guy and as a result, the outcome was either stay together for life, or end in a divorce.

Of course, sometimes it’s because the woman is a horrible woman and would divorce any man she got married to.

Yet, if you’re honest about it, you will realize that those women are the minority.

The majority of women are naturally wired to want to be in a relationship with a man who makes them feel safe and protected (even if she is earning more than him) and if a woman finds that, it’s highly unlikely she will want to divorce him.

Why?

It will be very difficult for her to find a man who can accept her level of success, not become insecure about it and, at the same time, make her feel safe and protected with him.

Personally speaking, the men that I know who are happily married to career women or highly-educated women are men who are rising through the levels of life and reaching for their true potential as a man.

The men aren't all earning more than their woman.

The man is rising up and reaching for his true potential as a man, so he doesn't feel intimidated by or insecure about his wife's success with her career.

Instead, he is proud of her and happy that he has a woman who is capable of earning money, succeeding in her career and enjoying her life with him at the same time.

Changing Times, Changing Relationships

The world isn't the same as it was 100 years ago.

Heck, it's not even the same as it was back in the 1980s, 90s or very early 2000s.

These days, many TV dramas and sitcoms glamorize the idea of cheating and divorce.

Celebrities who appear on TV talk shows often proclaim to be so much happier after getting divorced and finding a new man.

Back in 1900, it would have been shameful to divorce or break up, but these days, many celebrities and pop idols tend to portray divorce as being a cool thing.

Times have definitely changed and along with it, so have ideas about what a relationship between a man and a woman should be.

Here are some insights from a few studies:

- The man as the breadwinner: A study in the research journal Social Forces found that most women — even the self-proclaimed feminists — are happier when their husband is the main breadwinner.³ Many women will try their hand at a career, but will often change their mind later in life and want to be a stay at home mom. A woman's place is not in the home or being a housewife. Instead, her place is what she wants it to be. However, in today's world, a woman grows up being told that she should have dreams like a man and do whatever she wants. For a lot of women, that sounds great until their maternal instinct kicks in and they fall in love with being a mother and supporting their husband or man by cooking, cleaning and being his cheerleader while he takes on the role as the breadwinner for the family.
- Children later in life: 43% of college-educated women from Generation X (born between 1965 and 1978) are not mothers — and are happy about it too.⁴ Studies in the UK, Europe and the United States show that remaining childless is now the choice of significant numbers of educated women. As one college-educated woman put it, "I've never felt maternal and can't think of anything worse than having children. I want to do clever things and reach my full potential. A child would get in my way." She may never change her mind, or she might suddenly change her mind and want children one day and that is okay — each to their own.

However, as you would have seen, most career women regret it later in life and end up going through a lot of stress when trying to make IVF work them, or ending up having to use a surrogate to produce offspring.

- Dedicating herself to work rather than you: According to data from the Survey of Income and Program Participation, the more hours a woman works outside the home, the higher the possibility of divorce. Interestingly, enough the same statistics did not apply to men, which suggests that a traditional approach to relationships (i.e. the man as the breadwinner and the woman as his cheerleader, lover and mother of his children) may still be the best option if you want your marriage or relationship to stand the test of time.Â â□µ

Conflicting Statistics

According to research at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, 81% of college graduates over the age of 26 who got married in the 1980â□□s, were still married 20 years later.

For college graduates under the age of 26 who married in the 1980â□□s, 65% of them were still married 20 years later.

However, when it came to couples who got married at the same time, but who were only high school graduates, only 49% were still married 20 years later.

In 2009, 2.9% of adults aged 35â□□39 without a college degree divorced compared with 1.6% with a college education.â□·

Essentially what this means is that if you are a college-educated man married to a college-educated woman, your chances of staying married are actually higher.

Huh?

The statistics from the various studies all seem to conflict each other, so what is the right answer?

Should you marry an uneducated woman, a high school drop out or a woman with a masters degree?

Personally, I think that basing your decision to commit to a woman based on her education level is the wrong approach.

The best way to choose a woman is based on her character, values and her compatibility with you.

If you pay attention to the random statistics that the media comes out with every now and then after a new study is produced, you will notice that they usually contradict each other.

It's all a jumbled mess out there, with one study saying that you should avoid college-educated women and the other saying that college-educated women are the perfect type of woman to marry.

Are Men Still Interested in Marriage?

According to a poll that I've been running on my Youtube channel, 58% of men want to get married to a woman and stay with her for life and the majority of my audience is currently from the USA, Canada, UK, Australia and India.

So, many men out there do still want to get married, even though it might not seem that way if you talk to certain people or groups who are against it.

Although marriage is not high on the agenda for some guys these days, the fact remains that more than 50% of Americans over the age of 18 are married.â€

Statistics from other countries show higher and lower marriage rates, but the USA is usually a good statistical base to refer to.

Choosing a Good Wife

Whether youâ€re planning to find a woman to marry very soon or may be interested in marriage later in life, choosing a woman who is a good wife material could make the difference between celebrating your 50th wedding anniversary together, or losing 50% of your assets in a divorce court.

According to John Molloy, author of Why Men Marry Some Women And Not Others, there are definite types of women that men should marry and types of women that men steer clear of.

In his quest to determine what makes a woman a good wife material Molloy interviewed more than 3,500 people and when he asked the guys who were about to get married to describe their ladies, only 20% of them used the words gorgeous or sexy in their descriptions. 80% of guys focused more on the personality traits of their future wife than her physical attributes.

According to many of the guys, marrying the kind of woman you can take anywhere and be proud of was of vital importance.

Another aspect that makes a woman a good wife material is being viewed favorably by her future in-laws.

According to psychologist Dr Jane McCartney, an expert in human behavior and relationships, Men don't look for very sexy wives, because at a very basic animal level they want to be sure the children they are raising are their own. Men are attracted to qualities such as loyalty, discretion and kindness when they look for a wife. Feisty and flirty is fine for a girlfriend. It's just not what men want in life partners.

I agree with McCartney, but that isn't what I have done.

When I chose my girlfriend (she was 20 when we met and I was 35), I had been on the look out for the sexiest woman I could find.

When I saw her, I turned to my friend and said, "Now THAT is what I'm talking about."

I then interacted with her to see what her personality was like and found she ticked all the boxes that I was looking for, so I let her be my girlfriend.

Yes, I let her.

That's how it was.

I was a player and if a girl was going to get to be my girlfriend, it was a case of me letting her have that privilege.

Of course, as I got to know my girlfriend, who is now my wife, I developed a tremendous amount of respect for her and she has turned out to be a real blessing in my life.

She recently gave birth to our beautiful twin daughters and her and I fall more in love with each other every day.

It's pretty cool, to say the least.

What is Good Wife Material?

Most guys would agree that a "good wife" is a woman who:

- Is beautiful.
- Maintains a healthy weight range throughout life.
- Doesn't smother you or block you from going after your dreams in life and instead supports you.
- Is responsible, but still knows how to let her hair down and have fun.
- Has a sense of humor.
- Knows all your faults, but still loves you.
- Is good with money.
- Is kind and generous.
- Inspires you to a better man.

Personally speaking, this is my criterion for choosing a woman.

When I met my girlfriend, I knew she was a great match because she ticked all of the following boxes and more.

Good wife material	Bad wife material
Beautiful	Average or ugly
Sexy	Plain Jane / no sex appeal
Intelligent	Dumb
Helpful / generous towards her man	Selfish
Energetic	Lazy
Cool	Socially awkward
Good family values	Doesn't care about family values
Against divorce. Believes that a couple can work through problems	Thinks divorce is a good thing. Can't be bothered working through any problems
Loyal	Disloyal
Honest and truthful	Lies often
A great cook	Hopeless cook or unwilling to cook for her man
Respectful towards her man to his face and behind his back	Disrespectful towards her man to his face and behind his back
Stays in great shape	Overweight or puts on a lot of weight when in a relationship
Healthy sex drive	Not interested in sex

Great social skills / gets along well with others	Poor social skills
Gets along well with your family and friends	Causes problems with your family and friends
Has similar or the same long term life goals as you (e.g. have a family or not have a family)	Disagrees with your long term goals
Agrees with your desire to have or not have children	Disagrees with your view on starting or not starting a family with her
Doesn't expect you to be perfect, but appreciates any extra effort you make to be an even better man	Gets angry, complains or even wants to break up over small things that can be improved or fixed with a bit of effort
Makes you a better man	Brings you down

Settling For a Crappy Woman

When it comes to choosing a woman, many guys simply accept whatever they can get and then “try to make it work” with her.

This happens as a result of a guy not knowing how to attract and pick up women in the first place, as well as thinking that women have all the power in the dating game.

If you want your marriage or relationship to last in today's world, you have to choose the right woman for you as well as know how to maintain the love, respect and attraction in your relationship.

If you don't do that, you have at least a 50% chance of being another divorce statistic.

The couples that you see who are still happily married or madly in love 40 or 50 years into a relationship are those who have met their perfect match and then approached the relationship correctly.

They have strengthened their connection and bond over time as well as deepening the love, respect and attraction they feel for each other.

If you can't deepen the love, respect and attraction in your relationship, it doesn't matter how good of a woman she is.

She will leave.

You have to be able to create and maintain a relationship dynamic that leads to both of you falling more and more in love with each other over time.

Without that, either one of you will eventually want to leave.

Meet “Britain's Worst Wife”

[image: Pussy whipped man]

Kate Thompson's husband does most of the cooking, cleaning and ironing. He only gets sex on birthdays that end with zero (e.g. 40, 50). Is it wrong for a couple to live like that?

Kate Thompson is referred to as “Britain's worst wife” and she is proud of it. In Kate's own words:

"My husband is the kindest, most considerate man in the world. During the seven years we've been married, Ben has done most of the cooking, cleaning and ironing without ever being asked. And yes, he works full-time. And if you think I reward his sterling domestic efforts with treats in the bedroom, I'm afraid I fail in that department, too. Intimacy is reserved only for his birthdays – and then just the ones with a zero.

I am shamefully neglectful of my wifely duties. In fact, I am the anti-wife. The truth is that I'm just too busy and involved in my career as a writer to be a traditional, caring wife. The truth is that I'm in awe of the way he looks after me, our sons and our home. He makes my life easier.

Does that make me a selfish, slovenly, neglectful wife?" Probably – but it also makes me a happier one." Kate Thompson

I have always said that if you let a woman wear the pants in a relationship, the sex will dry up very quickly.

She will then withhold sex and reward you with it if you are on your best behavior.

Kate Thompson is a perfect example of that.

The fact is that Kate's husband would be doing a LOT of masturbating to porn, in addition to doing a lot of cooking, cleaning and being on his best behavior for her.

Is that wrong?

No, it's just different.

It's the exact opposite of what we teach here at The Modern Man, but if he wants to do that, he can.

My opinion is that you should do whatever makes you the happiest and most fulfilled in life.

I certainly wouldn't ever accept a woman like Kate Thompson, but I can see how a woman like that would make some guys happy.

After all, he does have about 1 billion porn videos to jerk off to whenever he wants to.

If he's happy with that, then all the best to him.

Additionally, somewhere along the way, they managed to have sex and create two children, so it's not all bad for him.

Not my cup of tea, but it is a way of living.

What we teach here at The Modern Man is how to create and maintain the type of relationship dynamic where the love, respect and attraction that you and your woman feel for each other deepens over time, rather than fading away.

As a result, your woman is naturally affectionate, loving, attention and kind towards you.

She wants to have sex with you, she wants to be good to you and she goes out of her way to make that happen.

You know the couples that you've seen who are still madly in love and excited to be around each other, even though they are 40 or 50 years into a relationship?

That's what we teach here at The Modern Man.

In the case of Kate and her husband, it sounds like she likes him as a person and loves him as her husband, but she doesn't feel much or any sexual attraction for him.

Rather than being a husband and wife who still have sex and are excited to be around each other, Kate and her husband are more like housemates or friends.

It's not "wrong" to do that, but it sure would be unfulfilling and possibly even a bit lonely to spend your life with a woman who would rather work than be around you, let alone ever have sex with you.

Do You Want to Get Married?

According to our online survey here at The Modern Man:

- 37% of men want to marry a woman and stay with her for life.
- 36% of men want to have relationships with many women throughout life.
- 18% of men still aren't sure what they want.
- 9% of men want to stay with one woman for life, but not get married.

Statistics above are accurate at the time of writing this post (based on 211 votes). Place your vote below to have your say:

To Marry or Not to Marry

I think that marriage is becoming a bit of strange idea to the current generation, because all you have to do is turn on Discovery Channel or the National Geographic Channel and you will see people talking about the latest breakthroughs in life extension.

Flick the channel and watch Entertainment Tonight or ENews and you will see celebrities and other public figures going through a messy break up or divorce.

On one hand, it feels like marriage is the "right thing to do" and will give you a secure life all the way to death.

Yet, on the other hand, marriage has a 50% chance of ending in divorce and there is a growing belief among scientists that people may be living to 150-200 years old in the near future.

Then, if you reach that age, new technology will be available to extend your life even more.

So, what should you do?

Additionally, how have I approached that topic with my wife? Watch this video to learn why I decided to accept my girlfriend's marriage proposal and how I've handle the idea that humans (including me) could be living a lot longer than usual.

Ancient Greek Approach to Marriage: Does it Still Apply?

[image: Socrates - Ancient Greek philosopher]

Socrates (an Ancient Greek philosopher) once said around the year 430 BC, "By all means, marry. If you get a good wife, you'll become happy; if you get a bad one, you'll become a philosopher..."

Does that advice still apply to today's world?

Well, not quite.

That was easy for Socrates to say back then because there was no divorce court, or forced child support.

In today's world, if you marry the wrong woman, she will take 50% of your assets in divorce court and you will also have to pay child support, even if she cheated on you before divorcing you.

My advice is to:

- Don't accept second best: Choose a woman who is truly compatible with you.
- Trust your gut instinct: If your gut instinct is telling you that she's not the girl for you, then she probably isn't. Dump her and find a new woman.
- Deepen the love: Instead of making the mistake that millions of divorced couples have made, be smart and deepen the love, respect and attraction between yourself and your woman.
- Maintain mutual respect: Respect your woman and treat her right. Expect the same in return and if she doesn't provide it, have a serious discussion and get her to change her ways or lose you.
- Make her proud to be with you: Be the man that she wants to stay with for life by continuing to reach for your true potential as a man.

How to Save My Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If it currently seems as though your girlfriend (fiance or wife) has lost interest in trying to save the relationship, you need to focus on making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you. Watch this video to understand how to save your relationship before it's too late...

You Can Change How She Feels

[image: Changing how she feels]

It's not impossible to change how she feels.

Think about it...

Have you ever hated someone and then really liked them later on when they changed their behavior or communication style with you? Of course you have. It's completely normal, natural and common to do that.

A human is never stuck in an emotional state forever. They can always be persuaded or influenced to feel differently if the situation or dynamic changes. If you want to save your relationship, you have to focus on changing how she feels.

This doesn't involve trying to convince her to stay or to remain in love with you. Instead, it's about making her reconnect with the love, respect and attraction that she used to feel for you, by changing the way that you approach your relationship with her.

Losing Her and Not Knowing What to Do to Stop it

[image: How to save my relationship]

There's nothing worse than knowing that your relationship is falling apart, but you don't have a clue what to do to fix it and get the spark back between you. If you really love this woman, it's only natural that you're going to be thinking to yourself, "I want to know how to save my relationship."

The first thing I want you to know is that it is not only possible to save a relationship, it's actually quite easy.

Why?

The love that you and a woman share NEVER goes away. What happens is that the love gets pushed into the background because of all the negative feelings in the foreground. To get back in touch with the loving feelings you once experienced with each other, you need to make changes to your behavior and how you treat her. When you do this correctly, the love naturally comes flooding back.

So, what has led you to begin thinking, "I want to know how to save my relationship"? Are you worried about being on your own? Are you worried about her wanting to be with other men?

Whatever the case is for you, what you must not do is try to save the relationship for your own selfish reasons.

To save a relationship, you must allow her to feel as though you are doing it for the both of you because you want to take of the love that you and her have shared so far. It can't be just about you getting her to want to be with you. It has to be about you guiding both yourself and her into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction. Not just for your benefit, but for her benefit also.

Noticing the First Signs of Trouble in a Relationship

[image: How to save my relationship]

Relationships rarely fall apart over night.

In most cases, a woman will be feeling unsatisfied for months or even years before she breaks up with her man. Why so long? Humans try to hold on to the loving relationships in their life. It's a natural instinct. In addition to that, break ups feel like crap. It's a horrible experience, especially if you are unsure whether or not you will feel okay on your own.

Some of the first signs of trouble in a relationship are:

1. Arguments over simple things

To sustain a relationship for life, couples need to learn how to communicate with each other in a loving, supportive and easy-going way. If it always seems to be a battle about who wins the argument, both will end up losing when the relationship falls apart.

2. Lack of desire for intimacy

The amount of sex that a couple has will generally decrease over time, but if the sexual attraction, respect and love are deepened, the couple will still want to be intimate. Even if sex only happens once a week, the couple still feels good about it and wants to do it. Outside of sex, the couple will enjoy hugging, giving each other a kiss or lovingly looking into one another's eyes for a second or two.

3. Insecurity and lack of trust

You can never really trust another human being to be totally loyal and honest with you, but you just have to.

If you can't give a woman your full trust to be loyal and respect your love and feelings, you will never have a true love connection with her. Love feels dangerous and risky, but really, it's not that scary at all. You can never lose for loving a woman. What have you lost if she disrespects your love? Nothing. She has stuffed up, not you.

To be successful in a relationship with a woman, you have to get rid of your insecurities (e.g. "Does she find other men attractive?") and just trust her with your love.

Avoiding the Downward Spiral

[image: How to save my relationship]

When a woman begins to lose respect and attraction for her man, she will often begin to change how she treats him.

Suddenly, she will stop being as loving and happy as she used to be. She won't be interested in hugging him, she won't give as many (or any) compliments and she will seem to be spending more time on other parts of her life.

This is where many men go haywire and begin the downward spiral towards a break up...

Noticing the change in her behavior, many men will become needy, clingy and desperate for her affection. He may even begin to attack her character (e.g. "Are you cheating on me?" or "You want to sleep other men, don't you?"), which will cause her to lose more respect and attraction for him.

Instead of feeling loved and safe with a man that she respects and feels attraction for, she will begin to feel hated and trapped by a man that is using her for his emotional security. No matter what he says or how much he pleads with her to stop behaving that way, she just won't change.

When he doesn't see any improvement, his behavior will usually become worse and they will rapidly begin to drift apart. Then, one day, she will turn to him and say something, "We need to talk. I'm not happy any more. I don't think we should be with each other any more."

Unfortunately for most guys, they just don't know how to react in that moment and unknowingly turn the woman off with begging, pleading and arguing.

How to Save My Relationship: The Secret

The secret to saving your relationship is to stop doing the things that are making your woman lose respect and attraction for you. Instead, start doing the things that will regain and then deepen her respect, attraction and love for you. When you do that, you will notice that the love naturally comes flooding back.

To begin the process, I recommend that you have what I call the Perfection Conversation with her. Essentially, you need to acknowledge to her that you are not perfect (in terms of how you've been behaving and treating her), but for the sake of your love, you are willing to continually make a serious effort to become a better man for her. In the same conversation, you also need to get her to acknowledge and realize that she is not perfect either.

When you've both been able to say that, it helps relieve a lot of built up tension. If she doesn't realize it on her own, keep the conversation going and say to her that the reason why you would both want to become closer and closer to perfect for each other is because you love each other.

If you didn't love each other, you wouldn't be willing to improve anything, change anything or make any compromises, but you are.

Act Now, Before it's Too Late

[image: How to save my relationship]

While it is possible to get your girlfriend (fiance or wife) back if she has left you for another man, it does make things more difficult.

If you are serious about wanting to save your relationship, I recommend that you take action now before she opens herself up to being with other men. Here are the programs that will save your relationship:

- If she hasn't broken up with you yet: Watch Make Her Love You For Life and use the techniques to save your relationship.

- If she has already broken up with you: Watch Get Your Ex Back: Super System

On the other hand, if you're starting to feel like you don't want to save your relationship with her and instead want to quickly attract new women to move on before she does, I recommend that you read my book The Flow.

The techniques from The Flow allowed me to have sex with more than 250 women before settling down into a relationship with my girlfriend. The choice is yours, but I just want you to know that I am here to help you.

Is She Cheating on Me? (5 Classic Signs to Look Out For)

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Most women will never cheat on their man, but if you've started to wonder, "Is she cheating on me?" and are worried about losing your girlfriend to another guy, here are 5 classic signs that she might be cheating.

1. She suddenly pays a lot more attention to how she looks, but she doesn't care what you think

[image: Suddenly concerned about her looks]

If your girlfriend suddenly decides to pay a lot more attention to her physical appearance than normal, then she's probably trying to look her best for someone other than you.

If she suddenly changes her hair and clothing style and appears very interested in what you think and whether or not it impresses you, then she's probably not cheating and is simply trying to look good for you.

However, if she doesn't care what you think about her new look, then she likely cares what someone else thinks.

Sometimes, a girlfriend (or wife) will begin behaving badly because she wants to get her boyfriend's attention. She's thinking of leaving him, but she wants to see if he will change.

Could that apply to you?

Could it be that your girlfriend (or wife) has stopped seeking your approval when she changes her hairstyle (or buys a new outfit) because she feels that you no longer appreciate her and notice her like you did in the early days?

If you've made the mistake of taking her for granted and no longer really care, she may have started trying to get attention elsewhere.

2. She wants to go out partying or clubbing with her single girlfriends

[image: If she is clubbing without it, she might cheat...especially if she gets drunk]

This is a pretty obvious sign that she is thinking of cheating or she is already cheating.

When a woman is committed to her man and loves him, respects him and feels attracted to him, she will not want to go out clubbing or partying without him. She will identify herself as being his girlfriend and will not be looking to hook up with other men.

If your girlfriend goes out with her girlfriends who are all in happily committed relationships, you don't have much to worry about if it's just a once off occurrence.

However, if she goes out often without you, it means that she's got one foot out the door and is trying to find a replacement guy before she breaks up with you.

3. She immediately gets defensive when you ask her what she's been doing

If your woman is cheating on you (or at least thinking about it), she will get defensive when you ask her about what she's been up to.

For example: If she gets defensive and doesn't want to talk when you ask where she went for lunch and with whom, it's a clear sign that she feels the need to hide something from you.

Sure, it might just be a guy that she has a crush on at work and she might just be enjoying the attention.

On the other hand, if the guy is a confident guy who knows how to make her feel attracted to him, she may find it difficult to ignore her sexual attraction for him in future.

4. Doesn't allow you to come near her when she is messaging on her phone

If your girlfriend has nothing to hide, she won't care if you're sitting next to her while she is scrolling through Facebook or chatting to a friend via SMS.

However, if she always turns her phone away from you, turns it off when you get near or asks you to go away when she's texting, it means that she has something to hide.

Again, maybe it's just a guy who is flirting with her and that she hasn't yet cheated with, but if he knows how to attract her, she might not be able to resist him for long.

5. She stops caring about you

[image: She no longer cares]

When a woman loves a guy, feels attracted to him, respects him and wants to be with him, he will be the most important person in her life.

She will care about him and want to ensure that she maintains his interest.

However, when a woman is cheating on her guy, he will suddenly become almost irrelevant to her. She just won't care.

She will end phone calls with, "Whatever..." and then not text or call back. She will stay over at her "girlfriend's house" (which usually means she slept at a guy's house) and won't make much or any effort to see you.

Of course, just because a woman goes cold and is no longer interested, it doesn't always mean that she has cheated.

However, if it goes on for too long and you don't turn things around and make her happy to be with you, she will either break up with you or cheat on you at some point.

Are You Asking Her Too Many Insecure Questions?

[image: Breaking up]

If you are hounding her with a lot of questions about who she was with, who she is talking to online and what she might be secretly thinking, then you're doing it wrong.

When in a relationship with a woman, you have to give her your 100% trust and then let her take care of it.

Yes, she might betray you, but chances are she won't. As long as you are deepening her love, respect and attraction for you over time in the relationship, she will have no reason to want to cheat on you or break up with you.

When you read cheating statistics online, you might be worried that pretty much all women cheat, but it's not true.

The majority of women will not cheat on their man as long as the relationship feels good and evolves over time to become better and better.

Have You Become Clingy or Needy?

Could it be that your girlfriend is choosing to spend time with other people because she is feeling suffocated by your clingy or needy behavior?

Successful relationships are built around two individuals who are free to do whatever they want, but who choose to spend the majority of their time together.

A woman will want to spend the majority of her time with her man if he is actively saying and doing the types of things that make her feel attracted to him, not repelled by him.

If your girlfriend is spending a lot of time with friends and less and less time with you, it may be her way of trying to create enough distance between you and her, so that things can gradually fall apart and end in a break up.

That doesn't mean she is cheating on you already, but she may be trying to get some new guys interested so she can feel more confident when she does break up with you.

Changing Before it's Too Late

[image: Changing before it's too late]

These days, a woman doesn't have to remain loyal to a man if she doesn't feel like committing to the relationship.

In the past, a woman had to stay with a man for life even if she was unhappy, because it was shameful to divorce.

[image: Marriages around the year 1900]

Not anymore.

[image: Modern women]

If you want to keep a relationship together in today's world, you have to deepen a woman's love respect and attraction for you over time.

You can't expect that a woman will stick around and be faithful if you're not making her feel the way she really wants to feel when in a relationship.

If a woman is unhappy, she has the freedom to break up with her guy and get a new one. If she is a woman of bad character (i.e. disloyal, unloving, selfish), she might even cheat on him a few times before breaking up with him.

[image: Modern women]

It sucks, but that is how it works these days.

You can keep a relationship together for life and be one of those couples who are still madly in love after 30-40 years of being together, but you have to do it right.

You have to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

Saying I Love You: How Soon Should You Say It?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

I love you.

It's a powerful statement, isn't it? It means a lot to us humans. We value it, we savor it and we want it. We want to be loved and want to love.

Saying "I love you" is so powerful that it can instantly bring you and a woman closer together after days, weeks, months or even years of knowing each other.

However, just because saying I love you is powerful, it doesn't mean you should rush to say it to a woman. If you begin saying "I love you" too early on, it can ruin the relationship before it has a chance to develop.

When Not to Tell Her That You Love Her

[image: When not to tell a woman that you love her]

There isn't a perfect time (e.g. after 5 hours and 32 minutes and 21 seconds) to declare your love for a woman, but there are a few times when saying "I love you" will ruin the sexual courtship before it has a chance to grow into true love.

Some of those include:

1. When she isn't fully attracted to you: Attraction is the first step you need to go through with any woman you want to have sex with.

If a woman isn't sexually attracted to you, then she isn't going to be interested in exploring sexual, romantic love with you. She might "like" you as a person, but the love that a man and a woman feel for each other in a sexual, romantic relationship is completely different.

2. When she is the type of woman who wants to say it first: Most women want to say it first. They dream of meeting a guy whom they feel so much attraction and love for that they just HAVE TO blurt out those three words before he does. More about that in the next section.

3. When she still isn't sure whether or not she wants to get serious with you: When a guy hasn't fully attracted a woman or has behaved in a way that has caused her to lose respect for him as a guy, she will be hesitant about allowing her feelings to develop.

Before getting to the "I love you" statement, you must ensure that the woman is really attracted to you, respects you and wants to be with you. Without that, she will usually just say, "Thanks" in response to your "I love you."

4. When she's not in love with you: Some guys make the mistake of thinking that if they tell a woman how much they love her and care for her, it will make her fall in love right back.

Yet, that isn't how it works.

First comes attraction, then comes respect and then comes love. If she looks down on you as a guy (i.e. doesn't respect you) and sees you like more of a nice guy friend (i.e. she isn't attracted to you), then she won't be romantically in love with you.

5. When she feels more valuable than you: Some guys make the mistake of giving a woman the impression that he would be SO LUCKY to be with her. Yet, what a woman really wants to feel is to lucky to be getting a chance with YOU.

Watch this video to understand why...

She wants to see you as the sort of guy who could easily have other women, but are choosing her because you like her. She doesn't want to get the impression that you are "in love with her" because she's the only one who has been showing you any interest.

From all of my experience with women, I've found that the best approach is to get her so attracted to you that she says it first. Just let the tension build up by kissing her, having sex with her and having a great time together. Eventually, she will just come out and say it and it will be an awesome moment for both of you.

Give Her the Gift of Being Able to Say it First

[image: Waiting for her to say it first]

Being able to say "I love you" to a man before he says it to her, is how women really want it to be.

A woman wants to have her feelings build up so much that she feels like she just has to tell you that she loves. It is a rare and exciting experience for a woman and it will make her love you even more.

In TV dramas, movies and music videos, you will sometimes see women complaining about men don't say I love you first. Why? It's a good storyline that makes both men and women watch the movie, listen to the song and keeping watch the TV show.

If TV and movies were exactly like real life all the time, people would find them too predictable and wouldn't want to watch. When people are watching a movie and can see that the two characters are obviously in love, but are not saying "I love you" to each other, it makes them keep watching to witness the "magical moment" when they finally do.

The Story of How I First Told My Girlfriend That I Loved Her

[image: Love is sweet]

My girlfriend and I

[image: Getting packed for a weekend away]

My girlfriend and I getting packed for a weekend away

When I first met my girlfriend (update: We recently got engaged and then married shortly after), we both felt an intense attraction for each other and instantly got along with each other on various levels that are important to both of us.

I was so attracted to her that when I saw her walking into the nightclub with her girlfriends, I turned to my friend and said, â□□ Now THAT is what I'm talking about. I'd let her be my girlfriend for at least a few months.â□□

I said it that way because I was used to having many girlfriends at once and it was normal for women to compete to be my girlfriend. Back then, I wasn't thinking that I'd settle down with one woman anytime soon.

Nowadays though, my friend and I look back on that night and laugh because those "few months" that I said she could have with me have continued on until this day and we're now married.

What was strange for me (a guy who was used to having his choice with women for many years) and for her (a beautiful young woman who had men offering her the world to get a chance to be her boyfriend) was that both of us couldn't eat or sleep properly for the following two days after meeting each other.

We were both "lovestruck" and we knew that we'd found someone really special.

Yet, despite our strong feelings for each other, neither of us said "I love you" right away. In fact, one night about a week into the relationship she thought she heard me say, "I love you" to her, but I had said something else (can't remember what I said, but it was completely unrelated).

She then told me how most of the guys she'd met would say, "I love you" or "I think I'm in love with you" within 20 minutes to an hour of meeting her. She then said that some of her hot girlfriends had also experienced the same thing and they hated it.

This wasn't big news to me though.

I had known about that for a long time because I'd already been sleeping with beautiful women for many years at that point. Most beautiful women experience the same thing because most guys confuse their feelings of lust with love, or they make the mistake of causing the beautiful woman to feel as though she is way more valuable than he is.

Hearing my girlfriend say that she hated how easily guys fell in love was just another reminder of how important it is to say "I love you" at the right time when you're beginning a relationship with a beautiful woman.

Anyway, to cut a long story short, my girlfriend (who is now my wife) eventually said, "I love you...I really do love you" as we were laying in bed one evening after having sex. I said it back and said, "I love you...I didn't expect this to happen, but I really love you."

In total, it took her about 7-10 days to say it and she then admitted that she had wanted to say it to me earlier, but wanted to wait until it felt right. She also said that she was happy that I hadn't rushed to say it to her.

It may sound like a fairly trivial thing to discuss who should say "I love you" first, but creating and maintaining the right dynamic when in a relationship with a woman is very important.

We all want to be with someone who is truly compatible with us and if I had been like the other hopeless romantic guys that she had met, it would have been a minor reason for her to question whether or not we were a perfect match.

By the way: This is what happened recently between her and I if you are interested to know how everything played out...

The Difference Between Lust and Love

Lust (noun): Intense sexual desire. Passionate craving.

Love (noun): A profound affection for another person.

When you're in lust with another woman, your sexual desire for each other is like an addict's need for their drug of choice.

Many guys will begin saying â□□I love youâ□□ at this point because of how much desire they are feeling for the woman. However, it's not something that you should say to express your lust for her. Expressing your lust for her can be done by saying, "Oh babe...you're so sexy" when you're having sex or by smiling at her and saying, "You're sexy" when you are 1-2 minutes into your first ever conversation with her.

If you approach a sexual courtship with a woman correctly, you will effortlessly go from stage to the next until you reach the point where you and her are truly in love and committed to each other. However, if you go against the flow of a natural sexual courtship, most of the women you meet will reject you or lose interest in you in the early stages of dating.

Falling in Lust

A major reason why many relationships become lose their spark and become stale is that they were mostly based on the initial and temporary sensation of lust, rather than on true love.

Depending on the couple, intense feelings of lust can last for days, weeks or months. However, unless you build the relationship beyond that stage and establish a true, intimate bond in and out of the bedroom, the lust won't automatically turn into true love.

Instead, you will begin to feel bored around each other and the relationship will start to fall apart.

I often get contacted by guys who've just been dumped by the woman they love. Unfortunately for these guys, they just didn't know how to guide the woman into deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love. Everything was so good in the beginning, then it got stale and then she broke it off. It's a common problem these days.

[image: Marriages around the year 1900]

Back in the early 1900s, it was still shameful for a woman to break up with or divorce a man. Premarital sex was forbidden and if a couple got married, they had to stick together for life otherwise almost everyone would look down on them.

In 1900 for example, the divorce rate was less than 10% for most of the developed world, whereas it is approximately 50% and sometimes more for most of the developed world today.

In today's world, if you want your relationship to last a lifetime, you have to do it right. You can't just take a woman for granted and think she will stick around because she will feel ashamed to break up with yet another guy.

[image: Modern women]

Today's women are encouraged to break up with a guy if he isn't the right one for her. It's a completely different playing field these days and only the guys who understand how to guide a woman into deeper feelings of love, respect and attraction are able to keep their relationship together for life.

True Love Changes Your Perspective on Relationships

When a man truly loves a woman (and vice versa), his perspective of her and the relationship they share becomes bigger and more far-reaching than a woman that he is just dating or having sex with for a while.

Instead of looking at her as yet another girlfriend who he will hang out with for a couple of years, it feels right to want to commit to each other for life. Truly in love with each other, they dedicate themselves to each other's happiness, well-being and fulfillment in life, instead of just thinking as an individual or about themselves and their wants and needs in life.

Personally speaking, I went from having 4-5 women in my life at once to being completely happy to dedicate myself to one woman. I loved the other women that I was with, but it was a different kind of love. It was more of a love for them as a person, rather than the dedicated love and commitment that I now give to my wife.

You will know when you've found true love because it completely changes your perspective on relationships and your desire to commit to one woman. True love is completely different to the temporary love that you will feel for a lot of the women you meet in your life.

If you have found true love with the woman you're with now, make sure that you take care of it. If you want it to last a lifetime, you have to focus on deepening her love, respect and attraction for you over time.

What is True Love Between a Man and a Woman?

True love is when you both care as much, if not more, for each other's happiness and needs than you care about your own. You are there for each other and you know that you don't want or need to be with anyone else.

You have each other's back and are both willing to do whatever it takes to make each other feel happy, loved and fulfilled in life. You communicate openly with each other on all levels without fear because you know that the love is real. You are not only each other's greatest lover, but each other's closest companion...

My Wife Doesn't Love Me Anymore

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The first thing you need to know about love is that it doesn't die.

If you and your wife were once truly in love and it now seems like the love is gone, all is not lost. The love has simply been pushed into the background because of all the negative feelings that is in the foreground of her mind.

For both of you to get back in touch with the loving feelings that you once experienced together, you need to lead the way by making changes to your behavior and how you treat her. Essentially, you need to start saying and doing the types of things that will attract her to you rather than repel her further away.

When you do this correctly, the love will automatically come flooding back. Love does not die. It simply gets pushed into the background. Love is much bigger, deeper and far reaching than most people realize.

So, don't worry – you can fix this.

Getting Her to Love You Again

Getting her to love you again begins with making her feel a renewed sense of respect and attraction for you. When you do that, she will naturally begin to connect with the love once again.

If you don't actively make her have feelings for you again, the relationship will feel too one-sided. It will be about how much you love and need her and how much she wants to get away from you.

To fix the problem, you must make sure that from now on, the feelings are mutual in your marriage.

When you reignite your wife's feelings of love, respect and attraction, everything starts to fix itself and she begins to look at you the way she used to.

So, don't worry – you can do this.

It's completely normal and natural for a man and a woman to fall back in love with each other. Millions of couples have done it before and you can do it too.

Don't Give Up on the Love

[image: My wife doesn't love me anymore]

When a guy e-mails me with something along the lines of, "Dan, my wife doesn't love me anymore. How do I get the love back?" I sincerely feel sorry for him.

I hate to hear about marriages falling apart because I am a big believer in sticking to one's promises. However, I'm never worried for him because after years of helping guys to be successful with women and even to get an ex back, I know that it's easy to get a woman's love back.

If your wife loved you before, she can love you again. You simply just need to go about it in the right way and it will begin to happen naturally and automatically.

Where Husbands Go Wrong

[image: My wife doesn't love me anymore]

The biggest mistake that many husbands make is trying to fix the problem without first understanding the cause.

For example: A husband might be saying to his wife, “Okay, look...I will start cleaning up the dishes more and I'll make more of an effort to arrange a date night for us once a month” thinking that he has the answer to what she really needs.

Yet, from her perspective, that isn't going to make her happy in the way that she wants. Why? Depending on what makes HER happy and what SHE really wants him to improve and change, she might be happiest if he:

- Spends more quality time with her side of the family.
- Listens to her more when she ranted on about random things (like women do).
- Stops listening to her so much and instead crack some jokes sometimes when she is ranting on (e.g. Smile, laugh and say, “You're such a drama queen...” or “Geez, it sucks to be you. I'm glad I work where I do...your job sucks” and then laugh with her).
- Looks at her as though she is the sexiest woman on Earth.
- Makes her feel happy to be spending time doing the housework because you are focused on your purpose in life and are rising through the levels of life to reach for your true potential, so you can provide for the family and become the man you are capable of being.

And so on...

Being a great husband and being attractive to a woman over the long term is not something that is taught in schools, so the majority of men simply try to fumble their way through it and hope for the best.

Some men are lucky to grow up with great male role models around them who have the skill, ability and willingness to teach them how to be a great man. Yet, most men don't get that sort of education and are left to their own devices.

Whatever you decide to do right now, just make sure that you take the time to think about what she really wants you to improve about yourself and how you treat her. Think about the times when you've seen her the happiest with you and ask yourself why.

Think about the times when she's been the most turned off by you, when she's lost respect for you and when she has lost touch with her feelings for you.

Here's a video that I made to explain a major reason why many relationships and marriages break up and how you can avoid it happening to you...

Are you making any of the classic mistakes outlined in the video above? If so, you've got to start making changes now before it's too late.

Unfortunately, marriage isn't what it once was. In the old days, a woman had to stay with her man even if she was unhappy. It was shameful for her to get divorced so the old marital promise of “Till death do us part” really did apply.

[image: Marriages around the year 1900]

Not anymore.

[image: Modern women]

In today's world, a woman is free to do whatever she wants. She can get divorced and remarry if she's unhappy. So, if you want to avoid that happening to you, make sure that you put in the effort to make some changes now.

You have to stop saying and doing the things that are ruining her love, respect and attraction for you and start saying and doing the things that will reignite her feelings of love, respect and attraction.

“She’s Lost That Loving Feeling”

[image: My wife doesn't love me anymore]

The love between a man and a woman is something that needs to be taken care of, nourished and deepened over time. You can't just take it for granted, abuse it and expect that it will continue to feel good.

If you have been taking your wife's love for granted and haven't been able to deepen it over time, it will have been getting pushed into the background and will feel less real and true over time.

The more that your wife disconnects with her feelings of love for you, the more that she will begin to focus on the things that she doesn't like about you. She will become less forgiving and will start to feel annoyed and turned off by your quirks.

If that goes on for a long time, it may feel like you've fallen out of love with each other. Yet, in reality, you've just forgotten how to love each other.

As a husband, it is your responsibility to take care of the love and guide your wife into deeper feelings of respect, attraction and love for you. If you don't do that and instead allow the love to fade into the background, things will naturally start to fall apart.

Get Her Love Back Now, Before it's Too Late

[image: My wife doesn't love me anymore]

If you are serious about wanting to save your marriage, I recommend that you take action now before she asks to separate and then opens herself up to being with other men.

As a man, it is your responsibility (not hers) to deepen the love, respect and attraction in your marriage. Most women wait for their man to lead the way to a better relationship and if he doesn't, they simply leave.

Is it Okay to Let Your Girlfriend Go Clubbing?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

The answer to the question of, “Is it okay to let your girlfriend go clubbing?” is that it depends.

It depends on what type of woman she is, how good your relationship is and who she will going to the club with.

Times when it’s okay for her to go clubbing without you:

- She truly loves you and is sincerely and fully committed to your relationship.
- She is going to a club with her girlfriends who are in committed relationships or married.
- She has to go for a work function or event and she isn’t allowed to invite people from outside the company.

Times when it’s not okay for your girlfriend to go clubbing without you:

- She doesn’t feel much respect, attraction or love for you and isn’t fully committed to the relationship.
- She’s going out to a club with her single girlfriends to get drunk and dance all night.
- She’s going with a guy or a number of guys, some of which will feel attracted to her and hit on her.
- She isn’t coming home that night and will be staying at a girlfriend’s house.
- She has cheated on you before.
- She often flirts with other guys in front of you.

Why Does She Want to Go Out Partying Without You?

[image: Why does she want to go clubbing without you?]

The fact is, when a woman is happy in her relationship and is truly committed to her man, she won’t feel the need to go out clubbing without him.

Sometimes, she might want to catch up with her girlfriends by herself, which is totally fine, but if her girlfriends are single and going to be trying to pick up men, then there’s no need for your girlfriend to be there.

If her girlfriends want to go to a club and party, her number one prerequisite should be that you come along too.

If she loves you, respects you and feels attracted to you, then she’s going to want to have you around all the time.

She is going to feel better with you there because you are her man and she wants to have fun times with you.

Personally speaking, my wife (I recently got married to my sexy girlfriend that I met in a nightclub when she was 20 and I was 35 – see photo below) would laugh at the idea of going out partying without me.

She knows that without me there, guys would be trying to hit on her and she doesn’t want to be annoyed by that.

She also doesn't need guys to make her feel sexy, wanted or loved because she already feels that way with me.

Her and I have the type of relationship that most people dream of having (i.e. we have remained in the Blissful Love stage of our relationship and it just gets better and better).

Watch this video to understand how it works...

My wife and I completely in love, we respect each other, we are attracted to each other and we're also best friends.

I couldn't be happier.

Yet, things weren't always so good for me with women...

The reason why I created The Modern Man in the first place, is that many years ago, the girl who I thought was "the love of my life," went out clubbing with her sister and a girlfriend, cheated on me and then dumped over the phone the next morning.

[image: Dan Bacon ex girlfriend]

I was destroyed.

I lost a lot of confidence and spent several years alone after she did that to me.

It was back in the time where there wasn't anyone online helping guys to get ex women back.

I was on my own.

[image: Dan Bacon at home alone]

I couldn't believe what had happened to me.

I mean, I loved her so much.

I was completely committed to her and she cheated on me.

It killed me.

It also completely turned me off having new relationships with women because I felt betrayed by her and unwilling to trust other women.

The fear of being cheated on and dumped again felt worse than being alone, so I simply avoided women that I found attractive.

Secretly, I didn't think that I was worthy enough to keep an attractive woman in a relationship.

I believed that they just wouldn't be happy with a guy like me.

[image: Dan Bacon at lunch alone - work]

Eventually though, I got tired of feeling like a reject, so I decided to work out how to attract women when I met them, so I could have my choice with women rather than getting lucky like I had with the girl who dumped me.

Back when I met my ex-girlfriend, I didn't even know how to attract women and I simply got lucky because both of us were drunk at a party.

Yet, after the initial buzz wore off, she showed less and less affection and interest, which then caused me to become needy, clingy and insecure.

I also had no idea how to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for me and I simply expected that she would stay with me because things felt good at the start.

Yet, that's not how it works anymore.

In the past, a woman had to stay with a man for life even if she was unhappy because it was shameful to get divorced.

In 1900 for example, the divorce rate was less than 10% across the developed world, compared with an approximate average of 50% in the developed world today.

In the old days, a woman had to put up with her husband and he could even get away with controlling her and being an asshole if wanted to.

She knew that getting divorce would bring shame to her and her family, so she sucked it up and stuck by the old marital promise, "Till death do us part."

[image: Marriages around the year 1900]

Not anymore.

[image: Modern women]

Today's women have the freedom to do whatever they want.

They can sleep with guys that they meet at a bar, get in and out of relationships whenever they want and settle down if they decide to.

They don't have to get married and they don't have to stay loyal to a guy, unless they feel like it.

[image: Modern women]

The only way that a man can keep a relationship with a woman together for life is to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction over time.

You cannot expect that a woman will stick around just because things felt good at the start.

Even if your girlfriend sincerely says, "I love you" and you have a history of good memories together, it doesn't mean that she will stick by you if her feelings happen to change.

As bad as this sounds, the truth is that she isn't yours and you don't own her. She is an individual and she has the freedom to choose who she wants to be in a relationship with.

In today's world, she's not yours for life, even if she's your wife.

[image: Divorce or break up]

To keep a relationship together, you have to be the sort of man that she wants to stay with.

It doesn't matter that things felt great at the start or that you're a good guy who really loves her.

What matters is whether or not she feels enough love, respect and attraction for you to warrant staying with you.

The couples that you see who are 30-40 years into a relationship and still madly in love is what is possible when you approach your relationship correctly.

The only way to get to that point though is to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for you over time.

You have to be a couple that love and respect each other and want to be in each other's life.

You can't just ignore what makes her happy or be unwilling to compromise and go out and join her to party for a while.

Why Don't You Go Out With Her?

Do you hate clubbing?

Are you not interested in building up a relationship with her friends?

Do you dislike her friends?

Are you too busy to party?

Do you hate the loud noise or the crowds?

Whatever your reason is, it's most-likely not going to be good enough for her.

If she really enjoys partying and you hate it, then it's usually only a matter of time before things start to fall apart or she simply cheats and then breaks up with you.

[image: Why don't you go with her?]

Over the years, I've helped a lot of guys to get a girlfriend back.

A fairly common reason for a break up (especially with younger guys) is that he meets a girl who enjoys partying, but he doesn't go out with her because he hates clubbing or drinking.

Instead of having a good time and getting to know her party friends, a guy like this will often stay home and expect that she will just keep coming around to see him.

He might also demand that she stop partying and start being more responsible like him.

After a while, the woman begins to feel as though they're no longer a match because he doesn't appreciate the type of life that she really enjoys.

She starts to wonder why she is with him at all and then either cheats on him or breaks off the relationship and then hooks up with a guy at a club that weekend.

This is what I call a Negative Chain Reaction in a relationship.

Watch the video below to learn more...

If you let the Negative Chain Reactions get out of control, it almost certainly leads to cheating or a break up.

So, if your girlfriend really wants to party and you don't, here's what I recommend that you do..

Go out partying with her all the time.

Yes, all the time.

Let her be the one to say that she is getting bored of clubbing and wants to spend more time with you.

Don't be the needy guy who tries to pull her away from what she enjoys because you want her to give her full attention to you.

Be the confident, cool guy who loves and appreciates who she is and what she cares about.

Build up a relationship with her friends, get drunk and party together often.

This will make her love you, respect you and appreciate you so much more.

When that happens, she will automatically feel less desire to party and more desire to start building a future together as a couple.

Yet, just make sure that you allow her to get to that point.

Don't force her away from partying because it will only make her resent you.

If you are serious about your girlfriend and you want to the relationship to last, make sure that you love and appreciate who she is.

Get involved in her life and enjoy it together until she begins to feel the desire to spend more time doing boyfriend/girlfriend things and hanging out together with other friends who are relationships.

Will Your Girlfriend Be Drinking at the Club?

[image: How to pick up a woman]

Did you know?

- Alcohol increases testosterone in the body which in turn increases libido in women.
- Alcohol increases sexual desire and arousal.
- Alcohol leads to a loss of sexual inhibition.

If your girlfriend does have a few drinks, she will naturally become more open to the idea of talking to random guys.

She might even flirt with a few guys and talk to them, but if she is truly committed to you and wants to be in a relationship with you, she will reject any attempts that guys make to kiss her or get her phone number.

However, if there are problems in your relationship and she goes out with her single girlfriends to let her hair down, she may decide to drink a few too many drinks and then end up kissing a random guy just for the fun of it.

Is There a Serious, Fundamental Problem With Your Relationship?

[image: Is there a serious, fundamental problem in your relationship?]

Take a moment to ask yourself some serious questions about your relationship:

- Are you giving her what she needs? Do you actually know what she needs to feel happy with you?
- Does she feel excited to be with you?
- Have you lost the spark that was there at the start?
- Does she seem to enjoy getting flirting/sexual attention from other guys?
- Why is she looking for excitement away from you?
- Is she loyal and trustworthy?
- Is a third party trying to split the two of you up?
- Does she see you as a man that she respects and wants to stay with, or is she just staying with you until she can find a replacement guy?

So, if you've found yourself asking the question, â□□Is it okay to let your girlfriend go clubbing?â□□ what you might want to start asking yourself is, â□□How can I be the type of man that my girlfriend would rather stay home with?â□□

Why Do Women Hate it When Men Play Video Games?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

There's nothing wrong with playing video games as a man.

Additionally, even though some men get nagged by an angry girlfriend or wife for playing, you really can get your woman to be totally fine about it.

Personally speaking, I enjoy playing video games and have created the type of relationship dynamic where my wife doesn't complain, or nag me about it at all.

[image: Dan Bacon with wife]

I don't make my wife feel left out or ignored, so she still gets the love, attention and affection she wants and deserves.

Additionally, she knows that I am focused on achieving things in real life and only play video games for a fun release, so she has nothing to complain about.

Where a lot of men go wrong is that they forget about the primal instinct a woman has, to be with a man who is focused on providing security for their future (i.e. he is focused on his biggest goals and ambitions in real life and is rising through the levels to make that happen).

Women want to feel safe and protected by a man.

It's just how they are.

Part of what makes a woman feel safe and protected, is when she sees that that her man is so emotionally strong and focused that he can achieve big things in real life, rather than just in a video game.

He's not like other men who feel fear when it comes to real life and hide away from their true potential as a result.

Instead, he is a man who stands up and rises through the challenging levels of real life, reaching for his true potential as a man, no matter what happens in the world around him (e.g. the Covid-19 pandemic).

That is impressive to a woman, makes her feel safe and protected and as a result, it stops her from feeling the need to nag or complain.

Of course, some women will still nag to test their man's masculinity (i.e. will he stop playing the game, even though he has been making great progress in his career, has made her feel loved and wanted and is simply playing for a while to unwind, or will he stop playing and feel like has to do even more for her?).

If a man stops playing and gives in, even though the relationship is balanced and she is being taken care of, then she will actually lose respect for him as a result.

She might then further test his masculinity, by nagging even more and making it out as though him playing video games is ruining the relationship, even though it's not.

So, make sure that you don't get tricked into feeling like the worst man in the world because you're playing a video game.

It's totally fine, as long as you are focused on your real life goals (and making progress) and have been making her feel loved, wanted and appreciated.

If you do that, a woman (for the most part, unless she is testing your masculinity) will stop nagging and feel happy that she has such a great man, who is making progress in life, making her feel safe as well as making her feel loved, wanted and appreciated.

She's a lucky girl if she has that and she knows it.

On the other hand, just playing a video game and rising up through the levels in the game, doesn't make a woman look at her man and think, "Wow! He's kicking ass in that game! I feel so safe about our future together in real life!"

To her, it's just a game.

So, if a woman she sees her man being so keen, excited and interested to pass levels in a video game that won't achieve anything in real life, her instincts kick in and she feels annoyed and angry that he is wasting his time and energy on something that will amount to nothing for them and won't make her feel safe and protected in the long run.

Of course, he might have a fairly good job and they might be doing okay for now, but that doesn't satisfy a woman's need to feel protected and safe in the long run.

What satisfies a woman's instincts, is when she sees her man continually rise up and reach for his true potential in real life, rather than accepting a certain level of life (i.e. doing okay, getting by) and giving up on the big dreams or ambitions he once had.

She knows that when he plays a video game, he doesn't just give up and accept a low level of success.

He keeps going, rising through the levels and make sure that he succeeds.

Yet, does he do that in real life?

Is he that much of a winner in real life?

That is what a woman is looking to see.

The thing is, he doesn't have to achieve big things in the real world today, tomorrow or even this year, but he needs to be working towards it.

When he begins working towards it, she needs to see that he doesn't give up and keeps going, just like he would when playing a video game and trying to reach a new level, or unlock a new feature.

She looks at her man kicking ass in real life (i.e. being courageous as he tries to achieve his ambitions, achieving goals, never giving up) and that is what stops her feeling the need to nag, because it satisfies her ancient, instinctive need to feel safe about a future with the man she has chosen.

Of course, it doesn't mean that a man has to do everything and a woman can just sit around on her butt and do nothing.

In today's world, most women work and strive and most couples pay bills together, but that's not the point here.

What we're talking about here is why women get annoyed and nag men who play video games.

The thing is,Â there is nothing wrong with playing video games and there are also no absolute rules on how you have to live.

For example: If a man doesn't want to achieve anything in real life, he doesn't have to.

If he just wants to work a normal job, play video games and ignore his girlfriend or wife, then he can do that.

Yet, if his woman is pissed off with him 'wasting time' playing video games and ignoring his true potential in real life, then her commitment to him is not guaranteed.

Just like a man can 'do whatever he wants' and decide to invest his time and energy into playing video games that won't achieve anything in real life, a woman can decide to leave a boyfriend, fiancé or husband if she wants to.

If you want your relationship to last, you need to ensure that you approach your life in a balanced way, rather than leaning too much into gaming (unless of course, it's your profession and you earn money from it).

Every couple is going to be different in terms of how much spare time they have, so you need to decide how much time you can really invest into kicking ass in video games vs. achieving things in real life and making your woman feel loved and appreciated.

It's something you have to balance.

3 Other Reasons Why Women Hate it When a Guy Spends Too Much Time Playing Games

1. It makes her feel neglected

[image: Why a girlfriend will feel annoyed at her boyfriend who plays video games all the time]

In the past, a woman would stick with a man for life even if she was unhappy.

A man could neglect his wife, treat her badly and take her for granted and she would have to stick by him because it was shameful to get divorced.

[image: Marriages around the year 1900]

In most cases, women were completely dependent on men in the past, so they really didn't have any other option but to stick around and put up with it.

Not anymore though.

[image: Modern women]

These days, women earn their own money and have the freedom to have sex with whoever they want.

A woman can also break up a relationship or marriage if she feels like it.

So, if a woman finds herself in a relationship with a man who is neglecting her due to putting most of his spare time and energy to gaming, she will naturally begin to feel like he is taking her presence in his life for granted.

If there are a lot of other problems in the relationship, then feeling neglected due to her man playing video games can become one of the reasons why she just decides to break up with him, or divorce him.

From her perspective, she isn't getting the love that she wants, the relationship has loads of problems and he seems more interested in solving problems in games than solving the problems in his relationship with her.

2. She doesn't share your feelings of excitement, or sense of achievement

[image: Girlfriend gets mad when I play video games]

The person playing a video game will experience all sort of exciting emotions and feel a sense of achievement and pride when they finish the level, or unlock a certain feature or function.

It's a really cool experience.

Yet, if a woman isn't playing the game and experiencing it for herself, she is almost certainly not going to share her boyfriend's (or husband's) feelings of excitement or achievement.

She will see him being so serious, focused and keen about the game, but to her, it will seem like a whole bunch of noise and nonsense, because she's not experiencing for herself.

In most cases, she doesn't want to either.

Most women aren't naturally wired to want to engage in wars, dominate opponents and compete for victory over long periods of time.

Some women like that, but most don't.

Most women are wired to want to be a nurturer and have their focus be on relationships, which was essential for 99.9% of human history when people lived close to extended family and had to rely on maintaining close relationships to survive.

Despite the fact that we live in a modern, civilized world with supermarkets, phones, video games, shopping malls and so on, a woman's natural instincts haven't gone away.

She still wants to focus on her relationship with her man and have love be a major part of her life.

She doesn't want her life to be around waiting around in the background while you play video games.

So, if you are investing a lot of your energy into gaming and she isn't able to share in your excitement, then something will feel off to her.

She will feel as though you are more excited about the game than her, or your life together as a couple in the real world.

As a result, she sees you focusing your energy in a way that isn't productive, or effective for you and her as a couple.

When that happens, it can cause a woman to start nagging, getting mad about little things, complaining, being a pain in the butt and generally being in a bad mood.

A woman will do that in the hope that her boyfriend (or husband) will pick up on her cues and stop gaming so much, or begin approaching the relationship (and his life) differently, so she can then feel good about him relaxing and gaming every now and then.

If he doesn't listen, or he gets into arguments with her about it, then she will naturally start leaning towards wanting to break up.

3. Gaming doesn't build on her attraction for you

To keep a relationship together, you have to be able to maintain and even build on your woman's attraction for you over time.

It's easy to do once you understand how a woman's attraction works.

When her attraction for you is maintained and built up over time, she literally doesn't want to nag, complain and be a pain in the butt because she knows that it would be a huge loss for her if the relationship ever ended.

She knows how difficult it would be to find an awesome man like you.

So, she starts being nicer, more loving, more understanding and respectful of you.

You just have to be able to maintain that and the relationship will last for life.

How to Make a Long Distance Relationship Work

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

A long distance relationship will work if you are the sort of man that a woman is willing to wait around for.

If a woman truly loves her man, respects him and feel attracted to him, she will have no reason to want to find a new guy. However, if your woman doesn't fully love you, has lost some respect for and doesn't really feel that attracted to you, then she will possibly begin to lose interest in the relationship.

In the past, a woman had to marry one man and stay with him for life, even if he was away for long periods of time. It was shameful for anyone to get a divorce, so women felt obliged to stick by their man.

[image: Marriages around the year 1900]

These days, it's a different story.

[image: Modern women]

If a man is unable to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for him over time, she will gradually fall out of love with him and lose interest in the relationship. She will then find love and happiness with another guy, or just have sex with other guys for a bit of fun.

[image: Modern women]

Society encourages women to be happy, free and do whatever they want. Women are allowed to kiss, have sex and get into a relationship with whoever they want. If you want to maintain the interest of a woman, you have to know how to make her feel attracted to you.

Do you know how to make your woman feel attracted to you? Watch this video to understand how a woman's attraction for a man really works...

4 Classic Mistakes to Avoid When in a Long Distance Relationship

In today's global community where many people travel for business or pleasure, it's not unusual to find yourself in a relationship with a woman who lives in another state or another country. You may have met her in a bar, through friends, at work or online. Despite your mutual desire to be together in the same place, you just can't do that right now.

If you've found yourself in that type of situation and you want to know how to make a long distance relationship work, just make sure you don't make the classic mistakes that many guys make. If you approach the relationship correctly, it will be her who is trying to keep it together and maintain YOUR interest. Believe me, that's what she actually wants in her relationship with you and that's how it should be.

1. Boring Her Via Video Chat

These days, video chat is essential in a long distance relationship, but it has to be done right.

If you approach the chats in a way where you're not even creating any attraction or sexual tension between you and her and are instead turning her off, boring her or even annoying her, video chat will actually work against you.

You have to be able to chat to her in a normal, easy-going way, but also add in things that are going to make her feel attracted to you (e.g. humor, flirting, charm, confidence, etc).

2. Being Insecure

If you want your long distance relationship to work, you have to give her your full trust.

Even though you know that you cannot trust her 100%, you still have to give her that trust. If you don't, it will cause you to think, behave and act in an insecure way, which is a huge turn off for women.

Some insecure guys will regularly check their girlfriend's Facebook, LinkedIn, MySpace, Twitter, Instagram or other social media page to see who she is communicating with and if she is hanging around anyone new.

A guy like that may then question her about certain posts or comments on photos, especially if it involves another man or men. If he's feeling especially insecure, he might even accuse her of being unfaithful or ask her if she is thinking about cheating on him or leaving him.

Although it might feel like the natural, normal thing to do, being insecure in a long distance relationship is never helpful as a man. Women are attracted to the confidence of men, not the insecurity.

You have to ensure that she retains a positive perception of you and experiences an ongoing feeling of respect and attraction for you. If you chip away at that respect and attraction by being insecure, she will naturally begin to look at other men in a more positive light and will begin to wonder why she is with you.

A mature, emotionally-secure man will simply get on with his life as per normal. He will miss his woman and want to see her, but he will charge on to achieve his ambitions and goals in life even though she isn't around.

His girlfriend will sense that he is happy and confident without her around, which will make her feel respect and attraction for him.

It's not about acting or pretending that you don't need her in your life to be happy and confident, but actually being that way while also making sure that you show her love, respect and attention when you interact with her.

3. Posting Up Lonely Photos on Social Media

[image: Posing in photos thinking that if he looks good, it will make his ex jealous]

A classic mistake that many guys make these days is posting up lonely photos on Facebook,

Instagram, etc.

In most cases, the guy thinks that if he “looks good” then his girlfriend or wife will miss him more. Yet, he’s alone in the photo.

What he doesn’t realize is that women feel turned off by lonely guys who think that they need to look good to be attractive. Yes, women can feel attracted to a man’s physical appearance, but the most important types of attraction are based on what a guy says and does.

So, if you’re in a long distance relationship and you want to make sure it works, don’t post up lonely photos. Instead, post up photos of you looking happy and confident and having fun with other people.

That is what makes a woman feel respect and attraction for a guy. She sees that he’s happy and confident without her, which makes her feel respect for him and feel attracted to his emotional intelligence and strength.

4. Disconnecting From Each Other’s Life

As the old saying goes, “Out of sight, out of mind.”

If your girlfriend doesn’t feel much love, respect and attraction for you and you then stay out of her life, she will gradually drift away and begin to see you as her ex, rather than her boyfriend.

The best solution is to agree to speak at a certain time every week, or even a couple of times a week if you have the time. When you talk on the phone or video chat, really get into the conversation and chat about life, what’s been going on in each of your lives and what you’re looking forward to doing together in future.

In addition to making her feel love, respect and attraction for you, it’s important to allow her to feel like you still care. When that happens, she won’t need to get those feelings from another guy.

How to Be Happy in a Relationship

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you want to be happy in a relationship, you need to:

1. Love and accept each other for who you are, while also always trying to do better and be better for each other.

Neither of you need to be perfect right now, but always try to do better, be better and love better.

2. Don't take things too seriously.

Always try to smile and laugh at things that you'd otherwise get angry at for each other. If you're not used to living life that way, you will initially have to remind yourself and possibly even force yourself to smile and laugh more.

The reward is less stress, more love and easy happiness together.

Here's a video that I made to explain this point...

3. Try your absolute best to love each other unconditionally.

Allow both of you to feel safe in the knowledge that you are loved and that the other person is going to be patient with you, stick by you and allow your love to grow and mature.

4. Deepen her love, respect and attraction for you over time.

In the past, a woman had to stay with a man for life, even if she was unhappy.

[image: The old days...]

It was shameful to divorce, so a woman would stick by her man even if he was unable to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction. Heck, he could even treat her badly if he wanted to and she would still stick around.

Not anymore.

[image: Modern women]

In today's world, a woman is free to do whatever she wants. She doesn't have to settle down early, remain a virgin until marriage or even get married at all.

[image: Start with kissing and sex and then take it from there]

To keep a relationship together in today's world, a man needs to know how to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for him over time. If he doesn't, she may eventually fall out of love with him, get bored and cheat on him, break up with him or divorce him.

5. Genuinely see each other as more than enough.

It's only natural that you will find other women attractive (e.g. when walking down a street, looking at porn, watching TV, etc) and that she will find other men attractive.

However, as long as both of you have the mindset that you are both more than enough for each other, you won't feel the need to find happiness in a new person. Sure, after 15 years of a relationship, she won't look the same as she once did, but that doesn't mean you still can't look at her as being the sexiest woman on Earth in your eyes.

You both have to decide that you've chosen each other and don't need anyone else. A woman will stick by her decision to stay with you if you deepen her love, respect and attraction for you over time.

The Truth About Relationships Between Men and Women

Despite all the changes that have happened in our society and the effects on relationships, it is still possible to keep a relationship together for life if you approach it right.

Personally speaking, I recently got married after a short engagement to the girl of my dreams. In the video below, I explain why I got married, my approach to the relationship and what I do to make sure that the relationship will last.

Staying Happy Together For Life

Have you ever seen those couples whoâ€”ve been together for decades, but are still happy and madly in love with each other?

You can just tell how happy they are and how much they love each other by the way they look at each other. They are there for each other as best friends, but they are also lovers.

The man will look at his woman as though she's the sexiest woman on Earth and she will look at him as a sexy man. How is that possible?

Simple.

You have to deepen the love, respect and attraction that she feels for you. As a man, you have to know how to create that type of dynamic and then you need to create it and maintain it.

Leaving it to chance or taking her for granted is no longer an acceptable relationship strategy for a man. The relationship is either going to get better and better over time, or it's going to get worse.

Keeping the Sexual Spark Alive

[image: Wife doesn't want sex]

It is normal to stop having sex?

Yes and no.

When a couple reaches their 50s or 60s, they don't have much sexual drive anymore unless they are taking hormones.

However, from the ages 18-50, happy couples still have sex. In most cases, it won't happen as often as it did in the first couple of years of the relationship, but it will still happen.

If a couple truly loves each other and after 10 years of marriage, only has sex once a week, they don't have anything to worry about. When a couple is truly in love and going after mutual goals or spending a lot of time with their family, they know that sex isn't the most important thing.

There is no set number of times per week that a couple needs to have sex. As long as they find each other attractive, are in love and have sex whenever they feel like it, there's nothing to worry about.

Do You Know How to Make Her Feel Attracted to You?

One of the most important things that you need to do is continue to make your woman feel respect and attraction for you as a man.

Things that can turn a woman off and make her lose respect for a man include:

- Not following on his promises.
- Being insecure, clingy or needy.
- Hiding from his true potential in life behind her and the relationship.
- Being nervous in social situations.
- Putting her down often.
- Being too protective or suspicious.
- Always letting her win because he is afraid that she will get angry.
- Never letting her win because he wants to control her.

There are many different ways that a woman will lose respect and attraction for her man.

As a man, you have to know how to make your woman feel enough attraction for you in the relationship, otherwise she may decide to fulfil her desire to feel attracted elsewhere with another man.

How to Fix a Relationship With a Woman

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If your relationship has lost its spark and now only consists of arguing, frustration and a lack of affection, here's what you need to do:

1. Stop taking things so seriously

The quickest way to fix a relationship is to stop taking things so seriously and start laughing, smiling and joking around more.

I understand that it's not always easy to do, especially if your relationship is falling apart. Life is tough sometimes and it can even get annoying...I get it. However, there's no better medicine than laughter.

You've got to do it.

Whenever you and your woman are feeling frustrated with each other, you as the man have to lead the way to a better emotional state. You've got to force yourself to smile, laugh and joke around more...especially at things that usually piss you off or annoy you.

Initially, she will almost certainly try to block your attempts to make her smile, laugh and feel good. However, if you can just persist and be the courageous one who pushes forward, she will eventually drop her guard and become more open to smiling, laughing and loving you fully again.

2. Start making her feel attracted to you in new ways

Do you know how to make her feel attracted to you? Has anyone ever taught you how a woman's attraction for a man really works?

If not, watch this video and I will explain how it works...

3. Be the man, but still respect her

No matter how successful or intelligent a woman is, she will always feel more attraction for a man that she can look up to and respect.

Some guys make the mistake of either handing over power to their woman, or taking away all of her power. Neither extreme is healthy.

To keep the love alive, you need to be the man, but also still respect her, love her, appreciate her and consider her needs and wants. You are the leading man, but that doesn't mean she doesn't get a say.

4. Give her your full trust

[image: Being insecure]

If you're at a point now where you're looking for advice on how to fix a relationship, you are probably beginning to lose trust in her desire for you, right?

You have begun to imagine that she is thinking of leaving you and finding herself a new guy.

Don't do that.

You have to give a woman your full trust. She has to be able to see that you are confident in her desire and loyalty to you and that you're not worrying about any random thought that she might have about leaving you.

Accusing her of cheating, wanting to cheat or even feeling a passing attraction for another man (just like you feel innocent attraction for many women you see on TV, on the street, in porn, etc) will never, ever help you fix a relationship.

When she sees that you are insecure and see other guys as being more attractive to her than you are, she will actually begin to feel attracted to other guys. Why? Women are attracted to the confidence in men, so your insecurity will begin to turn her off.

If she interacts with another guy who seems more confident than you are, she will naturally feel more attracted to him than she feels to you.

This is why you have to maintain trust in your woman's desire and loyalty for you. She has to be able to see that you are confident in your sex appeal to her and are not comparing yourself to other guys and worrying that she might like them instead.

5. Go back to the beginning

One of the keys to keeping the romance alive in a relationship is to never stop treating a woman like you did when you first met her.

For example: When you first met your woman, you probably showed a lot of interest in listening to what she had to say, going out on dates, laughing together and making her feel happy with you.

Are you still doing those things?

If you are serious about keeping the love, romance and passion alive in your relationship with her, you will put in the effort. Additionally, if you truly do love her, it won't actually feel like a lot of effort at all.

In fact, you will enjoy doing it.

When a man really loves a woman, he wants her to be happy. He is flexible, open-minded, compassionate and attentive. However, when a man just wants to keep a woman in a relationship because he's too afraid to be on his own, he will find it difficult to give her his full love.

He will want to take love from her in the form of compliments, reassurance that she loves him, nice treatment, hugs, kisses, etc. He will want to store up as much of her love as possible, so he can feel good about himself.

That's no way to approach a relationship.

You've got to give a woman your love because you truly do love her. When you truly love a woman, it will feel easy and natural to be a great man for her.

Is Marriage Worth It?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Marriage isn't for everyone, but if you are a man who knows how to attract women (and you thus have your choice of women) and you also know how to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for you when in a relationship, then marriage isn't a scary thing.

When the love, respect and attraction between you and your perfect woman (that you chose, not that you got lucky with and have been trying to "make it work" with) deepens over time, starting a family or getting married feels like a natural thing to do.

Marriage Can Be Good For Your Health

If you're wondering, is marriage worth it? here are some statistics that might interest you.

In a study of over 127,000 American men, it was concluded that married men enjoyed better overall health than men who were divorced, widowed or living alone.

A separate study that ran for 10 years, also concluded that death rates among married men were 46% lower than in unmarried men. If you look at the statistics that way, it would seem that marriage might be worth it just to extend your life, right?

Not quite.

Why?

Not every marriage is a "happy" marriage and evidence from further studies suggests that the stresses of an unhappy marriage may actually increase a man's potential of developing heart disease and dying younger. So, the question remains: Is marriage worth it in today's day and age?

Changing Times

[image: No sex before marriage vs. have sex whenever you want]

Over the past couple of generations, our attitudes towards marriage have changed beyond recognition.

In the early 1900s, it was almost unthinkable that a couple would begin living together before getting married (unless the parent's were in the same house and you slept in separate rooms) and you certainly wouldn't expect to have sex before marriage.

In the old days, getting married was something that pretty much all young men and women aspired to. Being married made you a "normal" and respected member of society. So much so that reaching your early 20s and still not being married made you stand out as "abnormal" or made you look like a social reject.

Fast forward to today and things couldn't be more different....

[image: Modern women]

Many people are now happy with the idea of having many relationships throughout life or staying with one person for life, but not getting married. Of course, that doesn't mean that it's impossible for them to change their mind later on if they find the perfect person.

Is Marriage the Right Thing For You?

Social trends and statistics can't answer the question of whether marriage is worth it for you.

Only you can decide whether it's the right path for you to follow in life.

Personally speaking, I was never interested in marriage at all until I met my sexy wife. When I met her, I had been enjoying a lifestyle of having sex with new women all the time, which never, ever got boring.

Yet, when I met her, something inside of me changed. I began to feel and experience love on a level that I've never experienced before. I'd had amazing, loving relationships before, but this was different.

Back when we first met, she would sometimes be feeling so much love for me that it would make her cry tears of joy, even though we'd only begun dating. She also cried tears of joy on our wedding day and I have to admit that I even got a bit watery eyed.

True love is a pretty cool thing.

I didn't agree to marry her immediately though. It took me about two years to agree to getting engaged and we then got married 4 months later because there was no need to prolong things anymore. It was also a convenient time to get all the family together (which wouldn't have been possible if we did it later in the year), so we just went ahead with it.

I haven't ever regretted getting engaged or marrying her. I enjoyed the lifestyle of having sex with lots of women for more than 10 years and now I'm enjoying married life. It's just as good, but in a different way.

Before I met my wife, I was going through life with the idea that it would be fine to just stay with a woman for life without getting married, but it's not that simple. My wife comes from a family that is serious about marriage and they reject the idea of divorce.

So, when I met them, they weren't shy to ask me if her and I would ever get married. I initially told them, "We're not rushing things" as a way to deflect the question because I still was against the idea of marriage.

Yet, as our love deepened over time and I saw that she was a loyal, loving, caring, honest woman who always had my back, I began to relax into the idea of getting married. After a while, I stopped seeing it as a scary thing to get into and started seeing it as a natural progression of a great relationship.

How about you?

Are you worried about getting married because you are concerned about losing half your money when going through a divorce? Do you look at divorce statistics and assume that you will end up as one of them?

I used to worry about those things too. I used to think that marriage was something that could only work in the past or that was only beneficial to women. I thought that it just wasn't worth it for men. What got rid of those worries was realizing that it was actually possible to deepen the love, respect and attraction in a relationship. I realized that if 50% of marriages were ending in divorce, then 50% were remaining intact.

I also began to pay more attention to the fact that I'd often seen married couples who were still madly in love and completely happy after 20, 30, 40 and even 50 years of marriage.

When I realized that it was possible to have a successful marriage, it stopped looking like such a scary thing to get involved with.

For the record...

I did get my wife to sign a prenuptial agreement. She may be the most loving, caring, honest woman I've met, but that doesn't mean she might not ever turn into a psycho. Rather than having to worry about anything bad happening in future, I got a great lawyer and we signed an iron clad agreement.

Initially, she was offended that I wanted her to sign a prenup and suggested that it meant I didn't love her, but after an hour of sulking on her own in the bedroom, she eventually came out and said that she understood where I was coming from and would sign it.

Love is great, but it doesn't mean that you still can't be smart and protect yourself. I'm almost certain that her and I will stay together for life, but I'm also open minded about the fact that science is suggesting that human lifespans are on the verge of increasing dramatically.

Who knows what will happen if you are married to a woman for 100 years and your body is still youthful and vital. Who knows what will happen when there are virtual worlds that you can go into where you can physically feel and experience things (i.e. have sex with virtual women).

Sure, all that stuff is a possibility and can be looked at as science fiction, but it's probably going to happen. In the meantime, I'm going to continue on living a normal life. My wife and I now want to start a family and experience that side of life.

Honestly, I couldn't be happier with my decision to get married to her. If you'd asked me 5 years ago whether I would ever get married, I would laughed at the idea and told you that I was happy enjoying the lifestyle of having sex with lots of women.

Yet, now I really feel like marriage is worth it for men and women. It takes the love that you feel for each other to another level. You commit to each other in a more definite way and you begin to approach life as a couple who will be together for life.

My wife and I have plans that stretch out as far as 50 years from now (I'm 37 now and she's 22. I think science will increase lifespans in the next 30 years, so I'm open minded about living a much longer life).

It's fun to talk about our plans and begin working on them together. We're taking steps towards a future that we are excited to share together.

Are You Ready For Marriage?

If you want to marry a woman and stay with her for life, here is what you essentially need to do:

1. Only accept a woman who is perfectly compatible with you.

If you don't know how to attract women when you meet them, you won't have many options with women and you might end up feeling desperate and accepting the wrong woman for you.

Many guys do this and then try to "make it work" with a woman who isn't compatible with them. Personally speaking, when I saw my wife walk into the nightclub where I met her, I said to my friend, "Now THAT is what I'm talking about."

If you want to feel proud of your woman and remain attracted to her, you must choose woman that you find incredibly sexy. If you want the relationship to last a lifetime, she must also have great character (i.e. loyal, caring, loving).

Don't try to make it work with a woman who isn't right for you. You have to be able to attract women when you meet them so that most of the women you meet are interested in you. Only then will you be in a position to pick and choose.

2. Actively deepen the love, respect and attraction in your relationship

Unlike in the past, today's women do not have to stay with a man who isn't right for them.

Unfortunately, divorce is no longer seen as shameful by most people and TV shows, movies and pop singers often attempt to make it look "cool."

If you want to keep a relationship together for life, you have to know how to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction for you over time. If you can't do that, marriage will not be worth it.

Marriage, or any relationship for that matter, will be a huge pain in the ass, because the woman just won't put up with not feeling how she really wants to feel. She will throw tantrums, treat you badly and potentially eventually dump you or even cheat on you.

I know this because it happened to me many years ago, which caused me to work this stuff out and become good with women. I also know it because I've helped 100s of guys to get an ex back after being dumped.

In today's world, a guy has to pick the right woman for him and then deepen the love, respect and attraction over time in a relationship.

Falling Out of Love: 6 Common Mistakes to Avoid

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

A woman will fall out of love if you are unable to deepen her feelings of respect and attraction for you.

In the past, a woman had to marry one man and stay with him for life. Not anymore. In today's world, women can sleep with whoever they want, get in and out of relationships and only settle down when they feel it is right for them.

This is why it's so important for modern men to have the skill of being able to deepen a woman's love, respect and attraction over time.

Have you been able to do that with your woman, or have you been slowly ruining her respect and attraction for you? Here are some common mistakes guys make that cause a woman to begin falling out of love...

1. Suffocating Her

It's only natural that if you really love this woman, you're going to want to spend a lot of time with her.

However, make sure that you're not holding her back from doing things without you because you're worried she might cheat on you, leave you or fall in love with a new guy. When in a relationship, a woman needs to feel like she has the space to do whatever she wants because you are confident and have given her your full trust.

If you suffocate her with neediness, clinginess or insecurity, then she will gradually begin to lose respect and attraction for you and when that happens, she will begin to fall out of love with you.

At the start of a relationship, a woman will usually enjoy the fact that you want to spend so much time with her. However, if she isn't allowed to hang out with other people because you are worried about losing her, she will feel like she is suffocating.

2. Annoying Her

When a woman begins to lose respect and attraction for her man, she will then begin to withdraw some love, affection and attention. She will become more distant, cold and uninterested in hugging, kissing and having sex.

This is very confusing for some guys and they don't know how to handle it. Some guys make the mistake of becoming annoying (e.g. biting her, arguing with her, being silly all the time, etc) in an attempt to wake her up out of the distant emotional state that she is in.

Yet, that's not the right way to do it.

Instead of becoming annoying, what a guy needs to do is become more of a man.

He needs to be able to make her feel more respect and attraction for him because he is being more of a man, not less of a man.

When he does that, the feelings will again be mutual.

He will feel attracted to her and she will feel attracted to him. He will feel respect and love for her and she will feel respect and love for him too.

Another mistake that leads to falling out of love is...

3. Criticizing Her

Some men make their woman feel as if she can't do anything right.

If she cooks dinner, he might say that it tastes okay, but he will focus more time and energy on telling her how she could have made it better. If she cleans, he might feel happy about it, but he will focus more on telling her that it's not good enough.

If she is helping him with a project, whatever she does just won't be good enough. In short, he's a nitpicker and his constant criticism wears her down to the point that she soon begins to fall out of love with him.

The love between a man and a woman needs to be taken care of. It's not something that stays there unconditionally just because things felt good at the start. There's nothing wrong with giving a woman constructive feedback, but you should always try to focus more of your energy on making her feel good about herself, than on criticizing her.

4. Not Trusting Her

You can never fully trust a woman, but you have to.

If you don't give a woman your full trust, the love between you will never reach its full potential. She will never feel like she can relax and respect you as a man. She will always feel like you're just too insecure and can't relax and just be in love with her.

Of course, if your girlfriend (fiance or wife) is a liar, then there's no need for you to give her your full trust. Women who enjoy lying should be dumped.

I recently got married to the girl of my dreams, but if I hadn't broken up with my previous girlfriend, I would have never met my wife. My previous girlfriend was sexy, young and exciting to be around, but she had one major flaw: She lied...a lot...and she actually enjoyed it.

Only after being with her for a year did I see enough repeated evidence that she was a habitual liar. Then, when I discovered a big lie that she told me (it was a shocker), I decided that I just had to break up with her.

It wasn't easy to break up with her because she was a sexy, young, pretty woman and we had a good time with each other, but I had to do it. A couple of years later (after sleeping with about 50 more women), I met my wife. She's even sexier and prettier than my ex and best of all, she's a woman of good character (i.e. honest, loyal, caring, compassionate).

If you are currently in a relationship with a woman who deserves your trust, then give it to her. Give her your 100% trust. However, if you're in a relationship with a woman that you know you can never trust, you really should break up with her and move on.

5. Patronizing Her

Women want to be able to share everything with their man. She wants to know what is happening in his life, both good and bad.

So when a woman sees that her man is troubled about something and he won't share his concerns by saying things like, It's business. You wouldn't understand, or Don't worry your pretty little head about it. I'm the man and I'll take care of it, or words to that effect, he is causing an emotional disconnection between them.

While a woman does want to feel protected and secure by knowing that her man can take care of things and deal with challenging situations in life without her, she doesn't want to be patronized and feel as if she is merely a trophy on his arm, rather than his true love and closest companion in life.

6. Boring Her

As a man, you are responsible for taking care of the level of romance, fun, happiness and adventure that exists in your relationship.

Unless you've got yourself a woman who loves to plan everything for you both and is always a bubbly, happy person no matter what you say or do, then then responsibility is yours.

Most women want to relax into the masculine direction of a man. They want to be free to think like a girl (e.g. constantly changing their emotional state, talking about random or unimportant things in a dramatic way, being silly, etc), rather than having to take on a more masculine energy.

The more you can allow her to get in touch with her girly side, the less likely she will be to feel bored of being with you.

If all a man is interested in doing is watching TV or sports, playing video games or working, she will eventually feel bored of being in his presence.

Regardless of how busy your schedule is or how stressed you are from work or study, you need to actively add some fun, romance, happiness and adventure into your relationship. You also need to make sure that you're allowing her to feel girly, think in a girly way and act in a girly way around you as often as possible.

Should Marriage Be a Contract With an Expiry Date?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Imagine if marriage was a contract that expired after 10 years, rather than being a lifetime contract that could only be ended through a divorce or through death.

I'm going to coin a term here and call this an Expiry Date Marriage, which is something that society is not ready to accept in 2014, but will most-likely be completely open to by 2045.

Here's how an Expiry Date Marriage would work:

- The marriage contract would be for 10 years and would then expire.
- If the couple did not renew their marriage certificate, they would be free to go their separate ways without having to go through a messy, costly and time-consuming divorce process.
- If a couple wanted to remain married, they would simply fill out a renewal form for another 10 years.
- If a couple wanted to end the marriage before 10 years, they would simply fill out a cancellation form and the marriage would be dissolved without any divorce proceedings.

Why Am I Suggesting the Idea of Expiry Date Marriages?

I understand that some guys who will read this won't want to face up to the reality that the world around them is changing, as it always has.

However, it is my responsibility as a role model in this area to be open and honest and to put forth ideas that will help men make more intelligent decisions regarding women and relationships.

Expiry Date Marriages might not be an option for another 30 years, but at least I will have done my job at opening a guy's eyes to what is happening to relationships between men and women in 2014.

Here are some of the reasons why I am suggesting Expiry Date Marriages as an idea to consider:

1. Human lifespans are increasing every year

[image: 100th birthday]

The old idea of "staying together for life" is no longer as simple as it once seemed.

In the past, a couple would marry, stay together and then die at approximately 70-80 years of age.

[image: Marriage in the old days]

Getting married for life was something people could accept because we had a very limited lifespan and there was absolutely no way to stay alive any longer than usual.

However, if what science is telling us is true, people who can make it to the year 2045 will have access to technology that will make a human body revert back to being a healthy 30 year old.

In other words, we wouldn't have to grow old and frail if we didn't want to and could choose to have a youthful, healthy body for an indefinite period of time.

What will happen to marriage when staying alive for 200+ years becomes normal? I'm not talking about staying alive and being old and frail, I am talking about being youthful.

When that happens, will humans want to stay in a marriage for 200+ years even though 50% of couples in 2014 can't even last in a marriage with our current lifespan of only 70-80 years?

Maybe some couples will be able to do it because they'll truly be in love and will have built a strong family around them, but what about the couples who don't want to stay together forever?

Should they have to go through costly, messy divorce proceedings as a punishment for not staying together forever?

Most people see the idea of increasing lifespans as "science fiction" even though life expectancy has been increasing every year for the last 100 years.

If the trend of increasing lifespans continues (I think it will actually speed up over the next 30 years), people who can make it to 2045 will most-likely be able to live indefinitely from then on.

When that happens (or if it happens), what will happen to marriage? Marriage is based on the idea of sticking together for life, growing old and then dying, but what will happen when death is delayed for hundreds of years, or even when death becomes optional?

Watch the full documentary below (Decoding Immortality) and you will see that, Nobel Prize-winning scientist Elizabeth Blackburn, discovered an enzyme that can keep cells young indefinitely. This is just one of many developments that have happened in recent years.

2. Culture always changes

[image: Racism - interracial marriage]

All across the world today, people have very strong views about how things "should be." Most people think that they know how life should be lived and that anyone who disagrees with them is wrong, naive and should just listen to them.

A classic example is how white people used to passionately protest about the "mixing of the races," only to later realize that we are all human, regardless of our different skin or hair color.

We are all from the same human family, but many thousands of years ago, we simply went our separate ways (venturing in different directions around the planet) and are now interacting and interbreeding with each other again in a more globalized, connected society.

These days, interracial marriage is seen normal and people have stopped protesting about it.

However, if you told a racist person back in the 1930s that they should be open to interracial marriage, they would've probably told you that they were 100% set on their opinion and would never change it.

Many of those people went to their grave being racist, but many also opened their eyes and stopped clinging to an incorrect perspective of the reality around them.

The same goes for guys today who believe that nothing will ever change.

Many guys want to live the same type of lifestyle that their grandfather or great grandfather lived (e.g get married and then die at 70-80 years of age), even though lifespans are increasing and science is working out how to reverse aging.

As a man in 2014, you may not like the idea of staying alive for longer, but believe me – the culture around you is going to change over the next 30 years and it will become normal and acceptable when the technology is available to the public.

Throughout history, culture has always changed when new technology was made available to the public and living for longer will be no exception.

[image: Culture always changes]

Japanese Samurai: "We will be samurai forever. Our culture will never change." English gentlemen: "Our way of life is the proper way to live. This is the way life should be and it will never change." Hippies: "We've worked it out. We'll grow our hair long, party and just do whatever we want." Metal rockers: "Society sucks! Rock on!!"

I think it would be fair to assume that most of the Japanese Samurai didn't think past their culture and mistakenly believed that the samurai tradition and lifestyle would continue on forever.

Yet, Japanese culture changed and the samurai became irrelevant and unnecessary in their society.

The top hat wearing gentleman of early England thought they had it all worked out, but the culture changed and they became irrelevant as well, even though they would have fought against it and tried to convince people to continue behaving like they did.

The hippies thought they'd discovered a new and better way for humanity to live, but most of them gave up and got a job. Likewise, just because it has been the norm for people to get married and then prepare to die at 70-80 years of age, it doesn't mean it will always be that way.

Culture always changes, especially when new technologies are discovered and made available to the public.

3. Men usually get screwed during the divorce process

[image: Men - divorce]

In most countries, a husband usually has to give 50% (or more) of his assets to his ex-wife, even if she didn't earn any money throughout the marriage. It's almost as though the legal system is making him pay for her "services." Women in 2014 have an incentive to divorce their husband, take half of his money and assets and then go splurge it on a fun lifestyle.

The law that requires husbands to give 50% of their assets to an ex-wife was relevant back when women couldn't earn their own money, but women now have equality and can hold high paying jobs, run businesses or be supported by government payouts (in some countries).

The divorce law hasn't been changed because it's still a "hot potato" to deal with in a politically correct world. Politicians and the general public would rather ignore it than face up to the fact that men are currently getting screwed by the legal system when it comes to divorce.

Of course, I'm not talking about men being forced to pay child support – that is a completely different issue and one that I support.

Personally Speaking...

[image: Dan Bacon with girlfriend]

My girlfriend and I plan to stay together for life, but are aware that life is changing all around us and we may end up living indefinitely, if what science is telling us is true.

I'm currently 36 years of age and if no further scientific developments are made and I naturally grow old and die at 70-80 years of age, then I am almost 100% certain that my girlfriend and I will stay together for life.

However, if scientists successfully reverse the aging process in humans (they've already done it for some lifeforms) and I end up living indefinitely, then I'm pretty sure that my girlfriend and I may take a break around the 1,500 year mark! Lol...

My parents (and my girlfriend's parents) are still happily married and I definitely believe in the idea of marriage and staying together for life.

Update: We recently got married. She signed a prenup and she now runs a successful business of her own, so I am not worried if we part ways in 1,000s years time, lol. I believe that if her and I live out normal human lifespans, we will never break up. Our love and commitment really does become a deeper, more profound and more meaningful every day.

In 2014, I am living my life as though I will die at 70-80 years of age, but with the knowledge that I probably won't. Believe me, I know it will sound "sci fi" to some guys about living indefinitely and if that is the case for you, I recommend that you get updated on what is actually going on in your world.

Watch the entire four seasons of Through the Wormhole and you will see that the world has been rapidly changing without most people being aware of it. Technologies that will radically change the fabric of society and how it functions are currently in final testing phases in many labs and factories around the world.

Over the years, I purposefully rejected many women who wanted to marry me or start a family with me. When I was ready, I selected the perfect woman for me and we are now in an amazing relationship that seems set to last a lifetime.

However, it will be interesting to see what happens to humanity over the next 30-40 years if science does reverse the aging process for humans and presents us with the opportunity to live indefinitely.

I plan on sticking with my girlfriend for life and being a role model for other men who want to keep a relationship together with a woman for life, regardless of the changing world around them.

Along the way and over the years, I'm not going to be afraid to challenge old ways of thinking about marriage and relationships.

I know that people usually don't like change and are afraid of new ideas that make them feel uncertain, but as modern men, we need to be stronger than that; we've got to open our minds to the reality that the world around us has always been changing and it will continue to change at a faster pace than it ever has before.

The Benefits of an Expiry Date Marriage

Here's what I think would happen if we switched from a lifetime marriage contract to an Expiry Date Marriage contract:

Benefit #1: No More Messy and Costly Divorces

With an approximate 50% divorce rate in most developed countries, can you imagine how much time, energy and taxpayer money is wasted going through unnecessary divorce proceedings in lawyer offices or courts?

Can you imagine the emotional pain and turmoil that couples experience when they are forced to go through divorce proceedings?

I understand that punishing couples by forcing them to go through a divorce proceeding helps to keep some marriages together, but it's obviously not working; almost 50% of marriages end in divorce in many developed countries.

If the divorce rate was only 10% then the idea of Expiry Date Marriages wouldn't matter so much, but since almost half of married couples end up divorcing, shouldn't we be looking at cleaner, more efficient ways of dealing with the problem?

When Gweneth Paltrow and Chris Martin decided to end their marriage back in March 2014, they didn't refer to it as a divorce. They both still love each other, but decided to go their separate ways while still maintaining a positive friendship while taking turns to look after and raise their children. They haven't yet begun divorce proceedings, but if they do, it will probably get messy and even nasty like most divorces.

Paltrow and Martin were married for 10 years, so if the Expiry Date Marriage contract was available, would they have taken it? Would it have taken the romance out of the idea of getting married, or would they have signed up to a marriage that included a clean exit clause?

On her website Goop.com, Gweneth Paltrow wrote, "We have always conducted our relationship privately, and we hope that as we consciously uncouple and coparent, we will be able to continue in the same manner."

[image: Conscious uncoupling]

I know, I know...

Most guys don't want to acknowledge the idea of conscious uncoupling because we want to keep living the same way that our grandparents did.

We don't want the world to change and we don't want to feel uncertain about a relationship potentially ending sometime in the future. To many, the idea of conscious uncoupling sounds like a cop out for people who are not good at relationships...and I agree.

Whether or not you agree with what Paltrow and Martin did despite having two children, the fact is that culture has always changed and will continue to change.

Just because life used to be about working on a farm and living with your immediate family until death, it didn't stop much of the world's population from moving into cities and living a mostly independent lifestyle away from their immediate and extended family.

Things change; they always have and they likely always will. Old traditions always get replaced with new ones over time.

A lifetime marriage contract is no exception and I know that society isn't ready to deal with issue in 2014, but we will probably have to in the coming decades.

As I said earlier in this article, I believe in staying together for life and I really do think that my girlfriend I will be able to do it. Yet, I am also aware that the world around you and me is changing at a rapid rate. As men in 2014, we can't just sit around and expect life to stay the same forever.

We have to be stronger than that and open our mind to the reality of change. Throughout the ages, most people have passionately fought change, but it just keeps happening whether we like it or not.

I plan to stick with my girlfriend, but who knows what the world will be like when scientists reverse aging for humans, when AI (Artificial Intelligence) thinks for itself and joins minds with millions of other AI to become billions of times smarter than humans.

All of that is on the horizon and if you want to see it unfolding, I recommend that you watch the entire series of Through the Wormhole (presented by Morgan Freeman).

You may be one of the guys who desperately wants to believe that the world never changes, but it always has and is now changing at a faster pace than ever before.

My advice on dealing with our changing world is to become a man who has purpose in life other than just a woman; to think bigger than just the way of life from people who lived 100s of years ago.

We're living a different time from that of our parents, their parents and their parents. It is fine to want to stick with one woman for life (I'm going to be doing that now, after having sex with more than 250 women), but it isn't fine to believe that the world isn't going to keep changing around you.

If you can't open your mind up to the changing world around you, then you can expect a lot of disappointment when it does and when your ideas about "how life should be lived" comes crashing down around you. Prepare yourself for change by being open to it, rather than sticking your head in the sand to ignore it and then being a sorry victim of change.

Benefit #2: It Would Keep the Pressure on to Remain Attractive, Loving and Relevant

[image: Staying relevant and attractive]

Many married couples get to a point where they stop worrying so much about making the other person feel happy, proud and excitement to be sharing life with them.

After a while, a high number of those marriages end in divorce or reluctantly remain together "for the sake of the kids."

However, if a couple knows that it is socially acceptable and legally permissible to walk away from marriage when the 10 year contract is up (without having to go through a messy and costly divorce), it will most-likely put more pressure on both parties to remain attractive, loving and relevant in each others life.

A wife who loves her husband and wants to get the marriage contract renewed will continue putting in the effort to make her husband feel the way he wants to feel in the relationship, and visa versa.

Personally speaking, my girlfriend and I have made sure to envision what our life would be like together in 40 years time. We've spent time thinking about how we want our lives to unfold together if we are to die at 70-80 years of age, or if we get to live on indefinitely thanks to breakthroughs in science.

I have a lot of plans for The Modern Man over the next 40 years, but aside from that, she and I have plans about starting and raising a family that sticks together for life. We talk about traveling to places around the world together and eventually with our children.

We currently have a great bunch of friends who are also in committed relationships, are beginning to settle down and who are still enjoying the single life.

We have "dream plans" with a few of our closest friends to hopefully buy land next to each other and have family BBQs and party nights and then grow old together (or live on indefinitely...!).

We are open to the future together and want to approach it together as a couple and then as a family, if and when we decide to have one.

What About the Children?

[image: What about the children?]

According to psychologist Carl Pickhardt, Ph.D., for a young child, divorce shakes the trust and dependency on his or her parents.

The child begins to wonder, “If my parents can lose love for each other, can they lose love for me?” or “With one parent moving out, what if I lose the other parent too?” Adolescents tend to react in a more aggressive and rebellious way, believing that, *“If they can’t be trusted to stay together and take care of the family, then I need to start relying more on myself.”*²

That makes sense when talking about a traditional divorce, but with an Expiry Date Marriage, a child would grow up in a society that makes it known that couples can finish their marriage after 10 years. As a result, it won’t come as such a shock to the child and he/she will likely want do the best he/she can to make sure that his parents are happy together.

Growing up, he would know that love is something that needs to be taken care of and that relationships shouldn’t be taken for granted. In my opinion, Expiry Date Marriages would force people to become better at relationships and parenting and it might just be the thing we need to keep relationships together as our lifespans increase.

Personally speaking, if my girlfriend and I start a family in the next few years, I plan on keeping that family together for life. I think it would be a mighty fine achievement to still be happy after 200 years together, even though the world keeps changing around us.

I am continuing down the traditional path of staying with one woman for life¹ and I hope to be a role model for other men who want to do the same. However, I am going to keep my mind open to the possibility that life will continue to change around us. I’m not going to blindly believe that everything will stay the same forever, because culture always changes over time.

A New Idea for a New World?

Cultures have always changed throughout the ages even though many of the people involved in the culture firmly believed that their way of life was the only way.

Change is inevitable and I believe that people’s views about what constitutes marriage and family are beginning to shift, whether we like it or not. With so many divorces happening across the world, it has become clear that something isn’t quite right about the way things are when it comes to relationships between men and women.

If we want better relationships we should look at making changes to the agreement of a relationship between a man and a woman; and maybe a marriage contract with an expiry date is a good place to start.

Here is a summary of the pros and cons of an Expiry Date Marriage:

Pros.

1. Costly, messy and time-consuming divorce proceedings can become a thing of the past.

2. A 50/50 split of money and assets will longer be a factor â□□ what you bring into the marriage is what you take out, so women canâ□□t marry men for their money anymore.
3. Couples will need to be better at relationships and take care of their love together, rather than taking each other for granted and staying in an unhappy marriage “for the sake of the kids” or because it is shameful or costly to end it.
4. Children would grow up knowing that relationships have to be taken care of.

Cons.

1. Some couples may not commit fully to the relationship because they know it is legally simple to exit the marriage.
2. Growing up knowing that mom and dad are potentially going to split up in 10 years time may harm the development of some children.
3. Couples may feel as though they no longer have to stick with each other through tough times.
4. Children may lose faith in the idea of marriage for life.

What Do You Think?

Do you think that couples should be able to cleanly exit a marriage, without having to waste taxpayer money? Or, do you think that couples should be legally, financially and socially punished for ending a marriage?

Poll

Clean Exit or Punishment?

- ☐ Couples should be punished for getting divorced. They should be forced to go through costly divorce proceedings.
- ☐ Couples should be able to quickly and cleanly exit a marriage, without wasting taxpayer's money in the courts or having to waste their own money hiring lawyers.

Facing Up to the Reality of Modern Relationships

Believe me, I am fully aware that most guys do not want to even THINK about the possibility of a relationship breaking up.

So, talking about the concept of Expiry Date Marriages will frighten and worry some guys. However, it is my duty to make sure that guys become strong men who can deal with life, not encourage men to ignore the world around them and walk into failure and disappointment when it all falls apart.

Whether we like it or not, marriages and relationships are breaking up all over the world at an approximate rate of 50%. Ignoring the changing world around you and hoping that it will magically go away is not the solution.

In today's world, if you want your relationship to stay together and not end in a break up or divorce, you actually have to be good at relationships.

Men in the early 1900s could get away with being bad at relationships because divorce was seen as shameful and sinful, but in today's world, it is unfortunately seen as acceptable by many and is even made to look "cool" by certain TV drama shows that depict women divorcing a husband and going onto live a fun, sex-filled lifestyle with a "better" man.

Keeping a relationship together in today's world requires that you actually know what you're doing and if you need help with that, I recommend that you watch my popular program called, Make Her Love You For Life

Friends With Benefits ...Can it Work?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

If you want a friends with benefits relationship with a woman to turn into an exclusive, committed relationship, you have to make her feel so attracted to you that an exclusive relationship becomes her idea.

When she wants to be exclusive more than you do, the relationship begins with the right dynamic because you are giving her a chance to be with you. Women love the thrill of the chase and it's much more exciting for a woman to have to convince you to be exclusive with her, than feel like she is doing you a favor by becoming exclusive with you.

Why? If she is attractive, most are way too easy to attract and seduce. Watch this video to understand why...

What to Do if You Genuinely Only Want Sex and Not a Relationship

[image: What to do if you genuinely only want to have sex with her]

If you are genuine about your desire to only be friends with benefits, you simply need to let her know that you find her sexy, but that you're not looking for a girlfriend right now.

For example: If she makes an effort to look sexy, pretty or beautiful, openly say to her, "Wow...look at you today. You're looking sexy...I like it" so she knows for sure that you see her in that way.

At some point, she's going to ask you about why you don't have a girlfriend. Simply, "I'm not looking for a girlfriend right now, but I like spending time with you because you're sexy." She will get the message.

Some women who really like you will hope that they can change your mind and get you to commit to them, but that's all part of the fun for both of you when it comes to FWB relationships.

Personally speaking, I've had many women cry their eyes out in an attempt to get me to feel sorry for them and commit, only to then call me an asshole for not committing...and then come to see me for sex a week later.

FWB relationships are often full of that type of drama, but if you initially made it clear that you're not looking for a girlfriend, she can never sincerely accuse you of being an asshole. Instead, she will actually secretly respect you that little bit more because you're a man of your word and are not easily swayed by the pity pleas of a woman.

Why Most Guys Can't Handle FWB Relationships

[image: "But, I want to be more than just lovers..."]

Unless a guy can easily attract and pick up other beautiful women whenever he wants, he will almost always end up developing "feelings" for a friends with benefits woman.

He might start out acting like he is totally cool with the idea of a FWB relationship, but when he develops feelings for her and notices that she still wants to keep things casual, he will usually start behaving in a way that turns her off.

For example: He will become insecure about her desire for him and ask questions like, “So, do you like me?” or “Are you attracted to me?” or “Do you have any feelings for me?” or “Do you enjoy what we have?”

All of those questions are turn offs for a woman because women are attracted to a guy’s confidence, not his insecurity. To make her want to have an exclusive relationship with him, he has to make her feel so attracted to him that she begins to develop feelings for him.

Can You Handle a FWB Relationship With Her?

[image: Friends with benefits]

If a female friend suggests that you and her become “friends with benefits” (i.e. have casual sex and not become boyfriend and girlfriend), it’s a pretty enticing offer.

Yet, can you handle it? To clearly answer that question, consider the following...

1. Do You Really Only Want to Be Just Friends With Her?

If she’s suggesting adding sexual benefits to your friendship, you obviously get on well and feel relaxed in each other’s company. She definitely finds you attractive, but by suggesting that you become friends with benefits, it usually means that she doesn’t see you as someone she wants to be in a “serious” relationship with.

Either that, or she is trying to manipulate your emotions by pretending to only want to be friends with benefits so she can have sex with you, make you fall in love with her and then beg her to be your girlfriend. In other words, she’s insecure about your desire for her and wants to make sure she really gets you to want her and commit to the idea of being with her.

So, what do you really feel for this woman? Is it really just her friendship that you want? Is there a danger that adding “benefits” to the mix will lead to you wanting more from her than she’s prepared to offer?

Think about it for a moment....

Friends with benefits have sex together but they’re not together. Let’s say you’ve had sex with your friend on a couple of occasions when no other guys are really pursuing her. It all feels fine at that point and on the surface it sounds like a win-win situation; she wants sex and she’s calling you...why wouldn’t you give her what she wants?

Well, it’s usually not that simple...

If you don’t have any other options with women because you don’t really know how to attract women, how are you going to feel when her dating life picks up and she starts having sex with other guys?

What are you going to be doing when she starts having sex with other guys? Are you going to care? Are you going to want her to stop and just be with you because you’ve developed feelings for her? Will you feel betrayed or rejected?

If you’re not approaching and having sex with other women right now and are secretly hoping to get into an exclusive relationship with her, it will almost certainly blow up in your face. The only way to avoid her rejecting you is to really, truly know how to attract her and make her only want you.

2. How will you feel if she gets into a relationship with another guy and stops being your FWB?

If you've been getting regular sex from her every week for a few months and have maybe even developed feelings for her, will you feel rejected if she gets into a relationship with another guy? Will you want to make her change her mind?

What if she tells you that she's now in love with the new guy and says that she can no longer be your FWB?

If you are the type of guy who can easily attract and pick up other women, you're not really going to be worried about it at all. In fact, you're probably going to be happy for her.

However, if you got lucky with her (i.e. she wasn't very attracted to you, but gave you a chance because she was bored and needed some action, or she needed a guy who make her feel loved after getting dumped by a boyfriend) and you have no other options with women, it's probably going to feel like a serious break up to you.

You will probably look at her as your girlfriend and will have been trying to get her to change her mind about the FWB.

This is why, as a man, it's so important that you understand how to attract women. If you don't know how to attract women and are simply trying to get lucky, you will almost always get rejected or dumped by women that you like.

If you start falling in love with her and want to have her as your committed girlfriend, but she's dating other guys and still looking for the one for her, how will that make you feel?

Will you be able to get her to want only you by making her feel a lot of attraction for you, or will you end up behaving in a needy, insecure way that turns her off?

Threesomes, Swinging, and Other Sexual Fantasies... Should You Act On Them?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Is acting upon common sexual fantasies a good or bad thing for a relationship?

For the majority of couples, deciding to be adventurous and begin acting out sexual fantasies that involve other people, usually ends up in painful break up or a messy divorce.

The simple reason for this is based on the powerful, overwhelming feelings of jealousy, insecurity and anger that a person can feel when they see their wife or husband enjoying sex much more with someone else.

If a man finds that his wife is no longer interested in sex, one of the last things he should consider is a threesome or attending a swinging party. In most real world relationships or marriages, it will simply cause more problems faster and give the couple (or at least one of them) a reason to go their separate ways.

TV Relationships Vs. REAL Relationships

If you watch enough of the latest TV shows or movies, you'll often see couples trying to â€œspice up their sex lifeâ€œ by following through on commonly known sexual fantasies like threesomes, swinging, dressing up in costumes or tying one or the other to the bed and then using a whip, feathers or whatever.

Yet, does any of that stuff bear any resemblance to the real world; and is it the sort of sex life every modern man should aspire to have with his wife or girlfriend? More to the point, if itâ€™s not the sort of sex life you have in your relationship, does that mean youâ€™re missing out?

The short answer is â€œNo.â€œ

The long answer is: The continuous promotion of these types of sex scenes on TV and in the movies has been leading a lot of modern men to feel that unless their relationship includes all or some of the â€œkinkyâ€œ stuff they see on TV, then they are boring and have failed in their sex life as a man.

It's just not true. Why? Well, firstly you should stop and understand the REASON why sex scenes of threesomes, swinging, role reversal sex, getting dressed up in costume (e.g. the woman in a nurse outfit, a black vinyl dominatrix outfit, etc) appear in movies and on TV shows.

The reason is that such scenes are more ENTERTAINING to watch for the audience, compared to only ever seeing a loving, happily married couple getting it on the bed on every TV show and movie.

Unlike the TV and silver screen movies of the 50s, in today's world it is no longer taboo to talk about sex or show sexual fantasy scenes and that is why movie directors feel free to use them in â€œeverydayâ€œ entertainment. However, thatâ€™s just it; the world of entertainment is not the real world!

If you're going to be a happy, fulfilled modern man, you need to consciously separate the â€œentertainment realityâ€œ you see on TV and in movies with the â€œactual realityâ€œ that people live on a daily basis in the real world. If you confuse the two realities, you will feel unhappy and feel like a failure as a man.

Unfortunately, a lot of modern men worry that they are missing out when they watch other guys on TV successfully convincing their wife or girlfriend to have a threesome with another woman. He thinks, â€œWow, that would be awesome.

Why don't I have that with my girlfriend/wife?â€œ However, what he doesn't realize is that 99% of people just have sex with ONE person at a time and he is NOT a failure for doing that too! He also doesn't realise that the couples who DO introduce other people into their sex life usually end up breaking up!

Personal Story

When I was working in the corporate world, I worked with a female manager who told me that she and her husband were thinking of getting into swinging.

This woman was a well-mannered, highly-educated woman in her early 40s, so the announcement kind of took me by surprise. Prior to their interest in swinging, she usually spoke about her husband, their children and their family life.

It sounded like a typical marriage going along fairly nicely. However, a couple of weeks after she told me that they were looking into trying *â€œswinging,*â€œ all the drama started to unfold. It was like she was living out her own TV drama show and her life had FINALLY started to mirror what she was seeing on TV.

The morning after her first night of swinging, she walked into the office with a skip in her step and a huge smile on her face. Excitedly, she told me how she and her husband had gone to their first swingers party the night before.

She said, *â€œI had two guys fking me at once. Oh my gosh...it was amazing Dan. Simply amazing. I can't wait to go back!*â€œ I asked her, *â€œWhat did your husband think of that?*â€œ and she replied, *â€œOh, he was too busy li*king a woman out on the couch in front of everyone, while people watched and egged him on.*â€œ

At that point, I didn't have an informed opinion on whether swinging was good or bad for a relationship or a marriage, but I was amazed that they had not broken up overnight and said, â€œOkay, well I hope all stays well for you and your husband.

Sounds like you both had a great time.â€œ She was buzzing around the office all day, smiling and interacting with her team members. They were all looking at each other with confused expressions on their faces, wondering why she was being so much nicer and friendlier than usual. At that point, she really was happy.

Two months later, I noticed that she had been continually telling me about one of the guys she'd been sleeping with at the parties.

She was in love with him and asked me, *â€œDan, what should I do? I'm not interested in sleeping with my husband anymore?*â€œ and I was lost for words for a minute and just said, *â€œMaybe you guys should stop. This sounds like it's going to kill your marriage*â€œ and she quickly added, â€œThat would be a good thing...â€œ (about it killing their marriage).

Shortly after, she started working out at the gym, got a completely new hairstyle and stopped talking about her husband altogether, unless it was something negative to say about him. Another two months later, she told me, *â€œDan, don't tell anyone this, but I've had enough of him (her husband). I've told him I want a divorce.*â€œ

...and just like that, a family of six people was torn apart and she and her husband became another divorce statistic. I wasn't impressed and from that day on, I lost a lot of respect for her as a person based on the way she had been treating her husband.

I won't go into the details, but she began treating him like crap and trying to get him to hate her so much that he would ask for a divorce. It just wasn't cool.

â"Would you, could you in a boat? Could you, would you with a goat?â" â" Dr Seuss

Harmless Fun?

Fantasies may well be harmless â"day dreamsâ" that both men and women indulge in from time to time, but that all changes and becomes a problem when someone who is in a committed relationship becomes fixated on a need to act out a fantasy (that involves other people) to feel satisfied sexually.

Back in 1908, professor Sigmund Freud made the statement that, â"A happy person never fantasizes, only a dissatisfied one.â"

I don't think there's anything wrong with occasionally and very briefly fantasizing about another woman while you are in a relationship with your girlfriend or wife.

However, personally speaking, in my last three serious, committed relationships (I broke off each of them because the woman wanted to get married and start a family with me and I'm wasn't ready for that until meeting my wife), I didn't spend much time fantasizing about other women. I was completely satisfied with my woman and vice versa.

Research has found that men who are happy in their relationships and satisfied with their sex lives fantasize less about other women than men who are unhappy, thereby backing up Freud's theory. However, the opposite applies to women and that is a GOOD THING for you as a man.

The more sex a woman has with her man, the more she fantasizes about having sex with him. This is a win-win scenario in a relationship because a woman's fantasies boost her sexual desire (making her happier) and since you are getting all of her sexual attention and energy, you will be happy too.

â"She Wants a Threesome, Should I Go For It?â"

On the surface, this would seem like a dream scenario for the guy who feels he's missing out on what he is seeing on TV and in the movies, but what if she eventually wants to try a threesome with another man, not another woman?

Fantasy (noun): The faculty or activity of imagining things that are impossible or improbable.

Sexual fantasies by definition are never meant to be acted out, they are fanciful dreams that belong only in your imagination. However, if you want to act out sexual fantasies, I recommend you do it with a woman that you're just sleeping with casually, NOT when you are in a committed relationship with your girlfriend or wife.

I've personally had 4 separate threesomes (each time with different women) and I can tell you that while it's kind of cool and you feel like a bit of a king, it really isn't the answer to all of your life's problems.

Having sex with a woman who truly loves you and whom you truly love and are intensely attracted to (i.e. she is sexy and beautiful) is so much better in my opinion. I mean, threesomes are cool and a bit of fun, but they are nothing to base your life around in my opinion.

If the relationship dynamic is right between you and your woman, the sexual charge will remain strong and that is all that's needed to generate a truly satisfying sex life for both parties.

TV shows and movies promote "kinky" sex purely to ENTERTAIN the audience, so by you not taking part in daily orgies it doesn't mean that you're missing out on what everyone else is doing. The truth is that it only takes one man and one woman to experience great sex and knowing how to create and MAINTAIN that all important sexual charge in a relationship is all you need.

If you and your woman love each other and have regular sex, there is no need to change anything. Explore other parts of life together, but don't think that having sex with other people will fix any of your relationship problems. In most cases, it will just make things worse.

The Seven Year Itch: Fact or Fallacy?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

Some people believe that after 7 years in a relationship, a couple will feel the “itch” to move on and find someone new.

Statistically speaking, most marriages that end in divorce do break up at the 7 to 8 year mark, but that doesn't mean it's impossible to keep a relationship together for life.

In the developed world, approximately 50% of marriages do remain together for life, so it is possible.

While it's true that many of those 50% of marriages are unhappy ones, there are also couples who fall more in love and experience an increasing level of happiness and satisfaction together over time.

In other words, it is possible to be even more in love with each other when you get to the seven year mark.

The way to do that is to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

Watch this video to understand the 5 stages of a relationship and how to keep a relationship together for life, rather than falling victim to the 7 year itch...

Staying together past the 7 year mark really comes down to your ability to deepen the feelings that you have for each other over time, rather than letting it fade away.

Millions of couples are able to do that and the love literally become stronger, more meaningful and more enjoyable over time.

You may have seen those couples who are still madly in love 30, 40 or 50 years into a relationship or marriage.

That's what is possible.

The Rules of Relationships Have Changed

[image: The old days...]

A long time ago, a woman had to marry one man and then stick with him for life.

It was shameful to divorce and in America for example, the divorce rate in 1900 was less than 10%.

Times have definitely changed and unfortunately, it's no longer seem as shameful or wrong for a woman to get divorced.

If a modern man wants to keep a relationship together with a woman for life, he has to be able to deepen her love, respect and attraction for him over time, rather than just taking her for granted and expecting she will stick around because she “has to.”

Women no longer have to stick around and can leave whenever they want.

However, that doesn't mean that modern relationships are doomed. It is still possible to keep a relationship together for life and remain happy and in love until the end.

As a man, you simply have to be willing to adapt to the modern relationship environment by being a more well rounded man (e.g. you are confident, loving, ambitious, emotionally strong).

It's only when a guy starts becoming unattractive in a relationship (e.g. he becomes insecure, unloving, lacks ambition and drive, becomes emotionally weak or sensitive) that the relationship begins to fall apart.

Why?

Women react to the man's lead and they will go along with whatever type of relationship dynamic you create.

If you create a relationship dynamic that is stressful based on your insecurities, the woman will go along with that and will gradually lose respect and attraction for you and then fall out of love.

However, if you maintain a relationship dynamic that feels great because you remain confident and become more confident as a man over time, a woman's feelings of respect, attraction and love for you will deepen over time.

When Did the Seven Year Itch Become a Popular Idea?

[image: Seven year itch - Marilyn Monroe]

In 1955, Marilyn Monroe starred in a movie entitled The Seven Year Itch.

The basic story revolves around a married man who is struggling with thoughts of walking out on his wife and child to be with a younger woman (played by Marilyn Monroe).

The idea for the "Seven Year Itch" title came from US Census Bureau statistics at the time, which revealed that a divorce was most likely to happen after seven years of marriage.

The most recent statistics available today reveal that the average lifespan of a marriage is now eight years.

Yet, just don't forget the fact that millions of couples stay together for life and are so happy and in love.

You can have that, even if the spark has died in your relationship or marriage.

Watch this video for more info...

If your woman doesn't love you at the moment, it doesn't mean that you can't get that back.

Love is something that can be brought back to life by way of your actions, behavior and attitude as a man.

When you change, she changes.

She may resist initially because she has been so fed up and tired of putting up a lack of feelings for so long, but she will smile, open up and fall back in love with you again if you just continue on being the new, improved you.

So, don't fall victim to the idea that a relationship or marriage has to end at 7 or 8 years.

It doesn't.

You can keep the spark alive for life.

The Hall Pass Trend

[image: Hall Pass]

According to a study commissioned by Warner Brothers, the seven year itch has been replaced by what they now refer to as a “three year glitch.”

The three year mark is apparently when they begin taking each other for granted and start feeling the urge to be with someone new.

The Warner Brothers study included 2,000 couples in committed relationships in the UK, to promote the release of their movie, Hall Pass.

The movie revolves around the story of two couples who are bored and unhappy in their marriages.

The wives take the advice of a doctor friend and give their husbands a “hall pass,” which is essentially a week off from marriage wherein they are free to do whatever they want, including having sex with other women.

The term “pink pass” has also recently been coined to describe a wife’s grant of freedom to her husband to have a night out with the guys or go on a sports or hobby related weekend away without her or the rest of the family.

According to the Warner Brothers study, 76% of those surveyed said that “individual space” was extremely important in their relationship and 58% admitted that they regularly go on holiday without their spouse.

Personally speaking, I disagree with the hall pass or pink pass idea.

I believe that if you get married (I recently did after being engaged for only 4 months), you are choosing someone that you love to be around and want to be with for life.

When a man has the skill of being able to deepen a woman’s feelings of love, respect and attraction for him over time, the relationship gets better and better over time.

Is the Seven Year Itch in Our Nature?

A number of theories have been put forward over the years, including anthropologist Helen Fisher’s belief that as human beings we might be programmed to be serial monogamists, meaning that by nature we only stay with one woman long enough to raise a child and then move on to the next one.

It’s an interesting theory that’s backed up by her 1980s research data, which was gathered from a study involving 58 human societies from across the world.

Her findings revealed that when a marriage ends in divorce, it tends to happen in or around the fourth year of the relationship.

This discovery ties in well with the theory that as “breeding partners,” a couple would have time to raise a child beyond the most vulnerable stage of life, which is the first four years, before moving on to the next partner to raise another child.

It could be that in Marilyn Monroe’s day, divorce was a much more taboo subject than it is today and therefore it took until the 7th year of marriage before either spouse could no longer fake it and had to make the break.

Yet, just don’t ever forget that couples do stay together for life and remain madly in love.

If the spark dies, it can be reignited.

The relationship or marriage does not have to end up in a break up or divorce.
It can be fixed and made to be even better than it was before.

When the Romance Dies

In the Warner Brothers study, couples said that long working hours and financial problems were the most common causes of stress in a relationship, with other factors such as annoying habits becoming more prevalent the longer a couple stay together.

For the purposes of the study, a “long-term relationship” was more three years of living together and a short-term relationship was defined as being together for less than three years.

Interestingly, in both the long-term and short-term relationships, couples admitted that many of the little habits they found quite endearing in the early stages of the romance, eventually became unbearable irritations by around the 36 month mark.

In the same vein, a decline in the amount of quality time spent together, including less frequent sex, was reported to cause increased negative tension in a relationship.

52% of the couples in short term relationships were having sex at least three times per week compared to only 16% of those in relationships of over three years.

55% of the couples in long-term relationships admitted that quality time was something that had to be scheduled into their busy diaries, otherwise it might not happen at all.

“A successful marriage requires falling in love many times, always with the same person” Mignon McLaughlin, American journalist and author

I agree with that quote.

My wife and I are always falling more in love with each other for new reasons.

It’s a wonderful process and I look forward to spending the rest of my life with her and she feels the same way.

I focus on the fact that at least 50% of marriages stay together for life, rather than getting sucked into the 7 year itch theory.

I believe in love that lasts a lifetime and so should you if you want to retain your confidence in a relationship or marriage.

If you begin to doubt her love and attraction for you, it will cause you to become insecure, which will actually ruin her love and attraction for you.

7 Reasons Why Women Lose Respect For Men

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

When a woman loses respect for you as her man, she will then begin to feel less attraction for you and when that happens, she will gradually begin to fall out of love with you.

Maintaining a woman's respect is essentially about being a strong, honest man that she can look up to, rather than an insecure, emotionally selfish or unreliable man that she looks down on.

It's also about making sure that you make her feel motivated to be a good woman for you, rather than her eventually feeling like she can disrespect you, not be affection or loving and you will just put up with it.

So, in addition to being a good man that she can look up to and respect, you need to bring out the best in her, so she is a good woman that treats you well.

Of course, that's not what women will go around saying.

If you ask women about relationships, they will usually say that a man has to do everything and treat the woman like a princess and then she might be nice to him, if he's lucky.

That's just a trick that women use to control men.

You've got to look through it and notice that the women who are the happiest, are with a good man who treats them well, but who also brings out their good girl side and makes them want to treat him well.

The Start of a Relationship is the Easy Part

[image: The start of a relationship]

When a relationship begins, most men are on their best behavior because they want to have sex with the woman and then get into a relationship with her.

Yet, after a while, a man might slip into the habit of treating his woman badly and taking her presence in his life for granted.

He assumes that because things felt great at the start, the woman will be willing to stick around even when things turn bad.

Yet, today's women don't need men like they once did (i.e. most women couldn't earn a living in the past and had to rely on men to provide), so they will break up with a guy if the relationship goes sour.

In the past, a woman had to stick by her man for life because it was shameful to break up or divorce and because she had to rely on him to provide for her.

Not anymore.

Keeping a relationship together in today's world requires a man to actually know how to deepen the love, respect and attraction that a woman feels for him over time.

If he can't do that, the relationship will almost always fall apart eventually (or very quickly).

Starting a relationship with a modern woman is the easy part because they are much more open to having sex and seeing where it goes.

The more challenging part for most guys is being able to keep the relationship together by deepening the woman's love, respect and attraction over time.

Here are 7 common mistakes that cause a woman to lose respect for her man and begin to question whether or not she wants to be in a relationship with him anymore...

1. Being Bossy Around Her, But Submissive Around Other Men

Most women are naturally more submissive than men and when in a relationship with a man, a woman wants the man to "wear the pants" and be the leader.

Being the "leader" doesn't mean bossing her around like she is some sort of servant or employee.

Instead, it means that you are the one who takes on the responsibility of being the emotionally stronger one, especially when times get tough or when you face a challenging situation.

Being the leader in a relationship also doesn't mean that you have to lead everything or do all the work.

Most women are intelligent and perfectly capable of taking the lead and you should allow your woman to lead sometimes, but in most cases, women simply prefer the man to take charge and lead the way.

Why do women prefer that?

It allows them to relax into being a woman, instead of being forced to act like the man in the relationship.

A lot of guys lose the respect of their woman by being very bossy at home, but then being shy and submissive around other men in public.

When a woman sees that her man is bossy around her, but submits around other people in social situations, she will begin to question whether or not she should be following his lead.

Whether he's talking to other men at a party or to a shop attendant in a store, the woman is watching to see if he acts submissively and places other men above him in terms of dominance.

If he bosses her around at home, but then goes into his shell when interacting with confident men outside of the home, she will lose respect for him and won't want to follow his orders at home.

2. Being Too Suspicious and Protective

It's fine to be a bit protective of your woman to show that you care.

However, if you are overly suspicious or protective due to insecurity (i.e. you're worried that she will cheat on you), it will cause her to lose respect for you.

A woman wants to know that you care about her, love her and want her in your life, but that you would also be absolutely fine without her.

She doesn't want to feel as though you need her for your emotional stability and that she has to be stick with you because you're afraid of losing her.

Whether she is legitimately working with a male co-worker on a project, going to the movies with friends or doing some shopping, some guys find it almost impossible to trust their woman unless they are with her.

In an effort to control his woman, a man stay in constant contact with her to find out where she is and what she is doing at all times.

Women are attracted to the strength in men and turned off by the weakness, so when a woman senses a man's insecurity like that, she begins to lose attraction and respect for him on a fundamental level.

A woman doesn't want to lose respect and attraction for you when in a relationship.

She wants you to remain confident and not ruin her feelings.

If you do ruin her feelings, she wants you to fix it so you and her can go back to being in love.

3. Hiding From Your True Potential as a Man

What are your biggest ambitions in life?

Are you following through on them fearlessly and with unrelenting determination?

The most respected men in the world are through who know what they want from life and go after it will unrelenting determination.

When a man gets into a relationship with a woman, he will often make the mistake of hiding from his true potential as a man behind the relationship.

Instead of rising through the levels of his true potential as a man, he will waste time on unnecessary thing to fill up his free time so he doesn't have to face his fears.

If a woman can see that a man is hiding from his potential due to fear, then she will gradually begin to lose respect for him.

If this goes on for a long time, she will lose attraction for him and then begin to fall out of love with him.

A big part of being what women refer to as a real man is having purpose in life and following through on it until you are successful.

You don't have to be successful right now, but you do have to be on your way to success.

If you want to be the sort of man that is not only respected by your woman, but by almost everyone around you, start pushing forward towards your biggest ambitions and goals in life...and don't give up until you achieve them, or at least achieve something very similar within the same industry, field or area.

4. Whining About Life Like a Victim

For a variety of reasons, a man might find that his life plans are suddenly in jeopardy (e.g. he loses his job, his investments lose a lot of value, he gets caught up in heated disagreements with family or friends, etc.).

It's completely fine for a man to talk about his problems if life gets too tough or challenging for him to face on his own.

However, if he whines and complains about life like a victim when talking to her, without looking for solutions to the problems that he is facing, a woman's respect for him will begin to fade.

A woman wants to be able to see that no matter what life throws at you, you remain strong like a man and push for a solution to any problem you face.

She doesn't want to hear you complaining and saying that life is too hard.

She wants you to deal with the problem and move towards a solution.

We men are expected to be strong (mentally and emotionally), so when you display weakness to a woman, she will find it difficult to see you as a real man.

She might love you, care about you and even like you as a person, but when your woman loses enough respect for you, her attraction for you will also begin to fade.

If a problem needs fixing in your life, you need be a man about it by making a firm decision on what you're going to do and then acting on that decision.

As a friend said to me the other night when talking about this subject, â□□It's not what happens to you in life; it's how you deal with it...that's what determines how your life plays out.

If you behave like a victim and hide away in fear or drown yourself in excuses, your life will become a mess of problems, sadness and missed opportunities.â□□

This same friend lost 85% of his life savings when the stock markets crashed a few years ago, but he's managed to get back on his feet and push forward to success once again.

That's one of the things I like about him; he talks the talk and walks the walk.

He makes things happen and achieves big things without having to cry, bitch or moan about it.

Guys who sit around complaining, whining and feeling like a victim will only experience more pain, frustration and disappointment throughout life.

Women know that this world is a challenging place to live, survive and prosper.

As a result, women naturally look for strong men who won't crumble under pressure and will remain strong no matter what.

The stronger you are as a man (mentally and emotionally), the more naturally attractive you will be to women.

If you are emotionally weak (i.e. insecure), it's only natural that women will find it hard to respect you and feel attracted to who you are.

5. Belittling Her or Continually Criticizing Her

Belittle (verb): To make someone feel unimportant.

Criticize (verb): To find faults. Judge unfavorably.

Playfully teasing your woman in private is fun, especially if it's just a light-hearted thing between you and her.

However, if you are actually belittling or criticising her on a regular basis, she will quickly lose respect for you as a man.

In an effort to show off in front of his friends, some guys will say hurtful things about their woman in front of her and behind her back.

When a woman knows that her man doesn't respect her and doesn't have her back, she may also begin trying to undermine him or disrespect him in front of others.

When that happens, the flow of love will slow down between them and all sorts of other relationship problems will begin to arise.

6. Always Letting Her Win

Some guys make the mistake of putting up with unreasonable behavior or demands from a woman in a relationship because they are afraid of losing her.

Yet, women don't respect guys who let themselves be walked all over and treated badly.

In a relationship, a woman will always test you to see how much she can get away with.

If you do let her boss you around, she may stay with you in a relationship because it's convenient, but she will lose respect for you as a man on a fundamental level and when that happens, your sex life with her will come to a screeching halt.

7. Taking Her Love, Respect and Attraction For Granted

To keep a relationship together for life, you have to deepen a woman's feelings of love, respect and attraction for you.

One of the most important ways to do that is to focus on bringing out the best in your woman, so she feels motivated to want to treat you well, respect you, love you and be good to you.

For us modern men, it's no longer possible to take a woman's love, respect and attraction for granted and expect that she will stick around because the relationship was good at the start.

If you get into a habit of turning her off, doing things that make her lose respect for you and ruining the love over time, you can't expect her to want to stick around for life.

Should Men Do Housework?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

There's nothing wrong with a man helping a woman with the housework at times, but only if it's absolutely necessary.

According to Norwegian study, divorce rates are 50% higher for couples who share the housework compared to those where the woman takes on most of the responsibility.

If a man essentially gives up his will to achieve big things in life and hides from his true potential by wasting time with housework, his woman will not fully respect him.

Although she may deny that if people ask her (because she's enjoying the break from her housework), a woman will never, ever respect a housewife husband as much as a man who is rising through the levels of his true potential as a man and going after big and challenging ambitions.

So, does this mean that if a man does housework his relationship is doomed to failure? No, it's not that simple.

Sometimes, it's absolutely necessary to help out. For example: She is very busy with work and working overtime, while you work a normal job and have plenty of time at home, but can't afford to hire a cleaner to help out.

If that's the case, it is fine. However, if you have just as much free time as she does and do the housework for her because you don't want her getting angry, then she's going to lose respect for you as a man. She will let you do the housework, but she won't look at you in the same way as she would a man who made her feel like she had to do the lion's share of the housework.

Again, most women won't admit that outright and there are some women who even say that I am wrong, but statistics and real life examples don't lie.

Here's a real life example to show you what I mean...

A Real Life Example of What Happens When a Man Grows a Vagina and Becomes a Housewife

Have you ever heard of Kate Thompson? She has been referred to as "Britain's Worst Wife," which is a title that she's proud of.

[image: Pussy whipped man]

Kate Thompson's husband does most of the cooking, cleaning and ironing. He only gets sex on birthdays that end with zero (e.g. 40, 50). A classic example of what happens when a woman wears the pants.

In Kate's own words:

"My husband is the kindest, most considerate man in the world. During the seven years we've been married, Ben has done most of the cooking, cleaning and ironing without ever being asked. And yes, he works full-time.

And if you think I reward his sterling domestic efforts with treats in the bedroom, I'm afraid I fail in that department, too. Intimacy is reserved only for his birthdays – and then just the ones with a zero.

I am shamefully neglectful of my wifely duties. In fact, I am the anti-wife. The truth is that I'm just too busy and involved in my career as a writer to be a traditional, caring wife. The truth is that Iâm in awe of the way he looks after me, our sons and our home. He makes my life easier.

Does that make me a selfish, slovenly, neglectful wife?" Probably – but it also makes me a happier one." Kate Thompson

This is a classic example of what happens when a man becomes a woman's little bitch.

He hides from his true potential as a man behind her and the relationship. Instead of following through on his biggest ambitions and most challenging dreams in life (and becoming a bigger and better man throughout life as a result), he does the dishes.

What does he get for it? His wife is in "awe of the way he looks after her."

Kate's poor husband would be masturbating to porn every week to dull his built up sexual desire. She only allows him to have sex with her once a decade.

OMG.

Each to their own, I suppose.

The Need That a Woman Has For a Man Has Changed

[image: The old days...]

In the past, a woman had to stay with a man for life, even if she was unhappy because it was shameful to divorce and she usually wouldn't be able to support herself without him. She would stay at home and base her life around being a mother who cooked, cleaned and took care of the children and her husband's needs.

These days, most women are no longer dependant on a man's income to support the household, so divorce has become an "easier" option for unhappy women.

If a man wants to keep a relationship with a woman together for life, he has to know how to deepen her love, respect and attraction for him over time. Doing all the housework for her, or sharing it 50/50 will NOT achieve that goal.

Again, there's nothing wrong with a man helping out, but if you want to maintain a woman's respect for you, the majority of your free time should be spent on following through on your biggest and most challenging ambitions in life.

When you do that, she feels proud to be your woman. She wants to be with you and she knows that without you in her life, it would be next to impossible to find another man who is courageous as you are about following through on your biggest ambitions in life.

Not only do you love her, respect her and make her feel the sexiest woman on Earth, but you are the man. You are someone that she can look up to and feel proud to be with. When that happens, a woman does not want to leave. She is happy and the relationship feels right.

Sure, there are some women out there who are more like men and want to achieve big things too. Those types of women usually attract feminine types of men who are willing to be a housewife and stand back as she takes on the world. However, their sex life will be basically non-existent and the husband will only be “allowed” to have sex with her when she wants.

After helping 100s of phone coaching clients fix their relationship and marriage problems, I’ve seen it time and time again. When a guy fails to be the man in the relationship and hands over his power to the woman, the sex almost always dries up and only happens on her terms.

You Need to Have Clearly Defined Roles: You are the Man and She is the Woman

Sharing the housework evenly amongst a man and a woman leads to a relationship without clearly defined roles.

You and your girlfriend (fiance or wife) feel more like friends who share a house together than man and wife. That type of dynamic doesn’t create sexual attraction because you are both neither the man or the woman; you’re neutral housemates.

After a while, the spark dies out and the sex dries up. The couple then begins to wonder if they are meant for each other, not even knowing that they are killing the potential for attraction by not having a clear masculine/feminine dynamic in their relationship.

Relationships don’t fall apart because a guy wants to be a good man by helping out with the vacuuming every now and then; they fall apart because the relationship dynamic is wrong.

When the dynamic is right, a woman feels good about taking care of her man and taking care of their home, and a man feels good about taking care of his woman by taking care of the household chores that she’s not able to tackle on her own.

It might seem old fashioned to refer to housework as “women’s work,” but when the relationship dynamic is right, a woman actually wants to be the woman and allow you to have time and space to go after your biggest and most challenging goals and ambitions in life.

She doesn’t want you to waste time dusting around the house, but she does want you to fix the leaky tap in the kitchen if you can. If you can’t, she wants you to help out by arranging for a plumber to come and fix it.

Just because a lot of men have been behaving like housewives lately, it doesn’t mean that it’s the correct way to approach your relationship. All you need to do is look at the divorce rates, especially with regards to the Norwegian study, to see that you need to be the man and allow your woman to be the woman.

Times When I Do Housework

Recently, it was my wife’s birthday and we had a bit of a party at home with some friends on the night before her actual birthday.

After a big night of drinking, laughing and partying together, everyone headed home and my wife and I went to bed.

I wouldn’t normally include this because it might sound like I am boasting, but since I’ve been talking about sex in relationships during this article, I will say for the record that we had some pretty awesome sex that night.

Anyway, in the morning, I woke up before her and headed downstairs. The place was a mess.

I was hungover, but after having a coffee and a quick breakfast, I quickly got to work on cleaning up the downstairs part of the house where all the party action was. It took me two hours of non-stop work to get it all cleaned up, but it was worth it. When my wife came downstairs, she was amazed, happy and shocked at the same time.

I don't normally have the time to be doing housework because I work so damn hard on The Modern Man (seriously – I put in 50-60 hours per week), but this was the morning of her birthday and I did it as a nice surprise for her.

For the record: I didn't buy her a birthday present. I have the type of relationship with her that doesn't require presents on every special occasion. Being truly in love with each other and doing nice things for each other is more than enough.

Regarding housework, my wife actually doesn't want me to waste time doing it because she knows that I could work endlessly on writing new articles for The Modern Man and never be finished. Helping guys to be more successful with women is my passion, not dishes or dusting.

Will My Relationship Last?

September 17, 2020 | by Dan Bacon | Link | Original Link

In today's world, if you want to make a relationship with a woman last for a lifetime, you have to know how to deepen her feelings of love, respect and attraction for you over time.

In the past, a woman would have to stay with a man for life even if she wasn't happy because it was shameful to get divorced. These days, if a woman isn't happy in her relationship, the society around her tells her to move on.

Is She Still Attracted to You?

One of the main indicators of a happy relationship is the attraction that a couple feels for each other. If your girlfriend doesn't feel enough attraction for you, she will begin to wonder why she is even with you and may start to think about being with other guys.

As a man, you have to actively make women feel attracted to you based on how you think, behave and act around them. Although she might like the way you look or the job you have, if she doesn't feel attracted to you in the deeper, longer lasting ways, then she will gradually begin to lose interest in being with you.

Have You Chosen the Right Woman?

Most guys don't know how to actively attract women when they meet them, so they usually just try to make it work with a woman that they've gotten lucky with.

When you met your girlfriend, did you choose her over other many other women who were interested in you at the time, or was she basically the only option you had?

If you had no other options with women, it means that you got lucky with a girl who gave you a chance, rather than actively attracting women so you can have your choice of women and then choose the right one for you.

No woman is truly compatible with every man and no man is truly compatible with every woman. If you want a relationship to work without much effort and to always feel good, you have to start by choosing the right woman for you. Trying to make it work with a girl who really isn't your type will usually end up in a break up.

Assuming that you've chosen the right girl for you, here are 5 signs that your relationship with her has a chance of going the distance...

5 Signs That Your Relationship Has Staying Power

1. You are free to be yourself

If both you and your girlfriend are free to be your true selves and you both love and appreciate each other for that, then it's a very good sign that things will last. However, being forced to change your true self to fit into a relationship is a sure sign that it won't last.

For a relationship to have real staying power, both the man and the woman should be able to see themselves as individuals who form into a great couple when they are together.

One of the main purposes of being in a relationship is so that you can be more, achieve more, experience more and feel more than you would on your own. However, that doesn't mean you still can't be your true self and retain your individual identity.

Both you and your girlfriend have to love and accept each other for who you are, while also trying to love, respect and care for each other better every day. As long as you are both committed to the idea of always trying to be better for the other person, while still being your true self, both of you will be happy together.

2. You are connected, but not joined at the hip

Couples with real staying power understand the value of spending quality time together. Having shared interests and common ground is an essential element of any successful relationship, making it possible to connect on a deeper level and to really understand one another.

However, doing everything together as a couple and having no independent hobbies or interests is a recipe for disaster. As a man, you need to have ambitions and life purpose that go beyond your relationship with her. Your life cannot be about her. If you make your life only about her, she will gradually lose respect and attraction for you.

A woman does not want to be your sole purpose in life. She wants you to stand up and rise through the levels of your true potential as a man. Fearlessly go after your biggest ambitions and don't stop until you reach them.

If we don't grow, we stagnate, and if we don't grow as individuals in a relationship, the relationship is destined to stagnate and wither away into boredom, restlessness and feelings of resentment. Connected couples grow closer through having shared and separate interests.

3. You don't take arguments too seriously

Happy couples don't necessarily see eye-to-eye on everything.

There's nothing with having the occasional argument, as long as you can bring it back to smiling and laughter when you get to the bottom of the issue. Both of you have to realize that you're in this together and are not enemies.

You don't win anything by beating each other in arguments or putting each other down, so you have to learn not to take arguments so seriously. Just see them as an opportunity to clear the air, clear up any misunderstandings and get back to loving and respecting each other as per normal.
