Help on judging and maybe closing

Hey TRP,

i am a selfemployed professional chef and my main client is a kindergarten.

It's pretty much fun as i get to spend ~20hrs a week with 16 females with no other male around and i use it as kind of a playground to try out and improve myself.

I have been changing my life pretty much during the past year. Stopped drinking, lost weight, recovered from depression and tried to man up. I am 37 years old, but look younger, managed to reproduce and learned a lot in the relationship with my child's mother about what i want and what not (which definitely not the kind of woman she is).

I normally wouldn't mess around at the place i am working, but i kind of "accidently" hooked up with a girl who's working there.

I think she could be LTR-material, which is what i am currently looking for. ONS are nice and i don't leave one out, but i don't care that much about them any more.

I managed to maintain a frame with her where i am the kind of experienced guy who's seen most of everything in life (which is actually true... ;)) and can get girls when he feels to, which is not that true since i had real friendzoning issues, when i was younger, but managed to change that.

She's half-jokingly said things like "I know i would have to share you." and stuff like that.

There's been going a lot of teasing and flirting on with her and she also shitted me a couple of times which (at least i think) passed by just pulling back or not giving her what she wants.

I think she is pretty aware of how to deal with men, which is kind of OK for me, since it's some competition and i like it.

We talked about dating (without an actual appointment), changed numbers and texted a couple of times.

I hesitated up to now because i've got a huge problem finally judging her from her behaviour and i want to investigate a little bit further. I cannot afford a to have a maniac working there bitching about me and making everything a problem since i make a decent amount of my money there. And last you know that you normally don't shit where you eat but it's a little bit too tempting...

I've got a real good relationship, we're not friends since i'd like to part things with one of the owners there and i know that he wouldn't be watching that for a long time. Though i talked about it to him and he is OK with it.

So maybe you could help me out a little bit. ;)

She's got a pretty nice face at least an eight to nine though she's a little bit chubby, maybe making her an overall seven to eight. Also she mentioned that she recently lost weight and continues to. She is by far the best looking one in the whole location. She is nearly as big as i am (1,85m).

As i mentioned she is aware of the game. She claims to be selfconciuous but i am not shure about that since she mentioned that she was chubbier when she was younger and she is kind of an extroverted person.

She seems to have a healthy social life and i heard her talk good about her father and her brother so her family life also seems to be at least OK.

What makes me a little bit suspicious is the fact that she claims not to have had any sexual contact for over a year plus the fact that her last boyfriend locked her up in her flat and beat her after they broke up.

Though she is relatively open about sexual stuff, as she hinted me more than once where she's got some piercings hidden and she likes me being a little bit insinuating and ambiguous.

Also it am relatively shure that she is into me since she's always smiling big time when seeing me, trying to get my attention, trying to interfere when i am chatting or flirting with the other girls around and is often trying to play the hard-to-get-type game.

So i would need a little advice on how i could judge better if she is just faking stuff to get attention and generate attraction and how to proceed from here.

I am aware that i start getting used to her and start liking her and this would be the time to go or stop and next her.

Thanks in advance. :)

tl;dr: Don't want to shit where i eat before i am relatively shure i wouldn't cause a shitstorm coming at me and need advice on judging possible LTR-material on her behaviour and how to determin if she's fake.

Propper reaction to being told that you are too cool

3 upvotes | January 17, 2014 | /r/askTRP | Link | Reddit Link

Today a coworker I've been hitting on left because she resigned (which actually made me happy because I didn't close because I didn't want to screw things at the place and it would have been hard to soft- or hard next her and I view this happening as a "go" ;)).

Whe had a chat in the kitchen about a couple of hours before my quitting time.

When she left she told me to tell her goodbye before I leave.

I told her, while making relatively clear I was joking by behaving and smiling, something like:
Depends on my time since my schedule is very packed.

She then turned around and told me: Stop being so cool.

From how the situation evolved I can tell she really meant being cool, not acting like.

I couldn't think of a decent answer so fast and asked "Why?" in an overacting surprised way.

She then told me: It's not nice! Turned around and walked away.

While I don't really care about her opinion about me in particular I am a little bit worried about the fact that my daughter's mother recently also told me twice in two weeks that things always sound too easy when she bothers me with her drama and troubles and I tell her some simple things to fix it and a final "It will become better".

So is there

A) the a danger of seeming to be too unaffected by things?

And B) a better reaction when being accused of being too cool?

And if so: which?

Advice a father of a six year old girl

Hey there redpillwomen oft reddit, as a father of a very empathic and intelligent little girl, who tries to act responsible and to be a good rolemodel, I'd like to know from you:

Is there anything you wish your father would have told you at the right time before you had to find out by yourself? Is there anything you wish he wouldn't have done?

Any tips in general for what might help her become a confident and self-responsible redpill-woman?

Thanks in advance. :)

How do I handle shittests by my female boss?

8 upvotes | January 24, 2014 | /r/askTRP | Link | Reddit Link

So, as i wrote before, i am a self-employed professional chef and my main contractor is a kindergaten.

I started applying RP-theory there with the girls (mostly amused mastery, as i am 37 and the girls are from 18-27) some months ago and my status rose up significantly and everything is just fine.

Until since last week the kindergarten's superindendant started minor and also at least one bigger shittests on me.

It's mostly small things like she is standing three meters from a coffeemachine and i am standing two meters away. While she is searching for the coffee she wiould say: "Push the button on the machine for me."

Also when overhearing me reffering to any of the girls as being nice or cute you can bet there will come "And what about me?" with a little girl's voice.

I don't mind about the second one, but the first one really annoys me.

I've got no desires to fuck her or to start a fight for dominance. Those would be two really bad things to do at a workplace. But i also don'T wanna end up being her waterboy.

So what to do? I am currently ignoring it being shittests and behave beta. Hopefully that ain't the way to go on... ;)

Women being open about polyamory

1 upvotes | February 11, 2014 | /r/askTRP | Link | Reddit Link

I'm currently lurking on OKC and ran over a few profiles of women i find interesting who are stating that they are in an open relationship and one even requested that polyamory shouldn't be no alien concept if you want to make contact.

To me that sounds quite nice at a first glance since it indicates to me that they are looking for some casual fun, that there should be less drama and maybe even that they are a little bit RP.

What are your thoughts on this? Any traps i am missing?

Just realized I need some RP-men around me

This is going to be longer. tl;dr at the end.

So. I've just been out for the first time in a year.

Just a little bit about myself at first:

I am a 37-yo self-employed professional chef. I look much younger. Recently one woman even guessed me 10 years younger. I am 6ft 1" and appr. 210 pounds. I would consider me at least average looking. Maybe 7 or so.

I am no alcoholic but I were definetly using it in an abusive way and it made me a pathetic depressed piece of shit. So I stopped about a year ago and went into monk-mode - No sex, no drugs, no alcohol, no chicks, even shaved my head (not related to the monk-thing though...) - and focused on getting my life and myself straight.

So I've lost maybe 40 pounds, got some new clients, got some decent clothes and took care of my overall appearance. I even do face packs now (and love it by the way).

I've invested much time in reading and listening to RP-stuff, of which The Black Phillip Show is my favourite and been able to implement it in my life.

I focus on my posture and how to have a better appearance so people will percieve me as being self-confident.

I changed my behaviour overall. But espescially towards women.

I plan on going to the gym to loose more weight and i tried Wing Chun and will definetly go and do that.

All those things did a great job - maybe even magic - up to now. I think much better of me now. To be honest I am often impressed by myself, when I randomly see myself in a mirror. Hope I don't turn out a narcissist.

I notice people behaving totally different. I notice women showing interest or being very different in their behaviour towards me in everyday situations like at the registration office they are doing me favours that I didn't even ask for. I notice men are drawn to having my attention.

But today. Today was both over the top and very frustrating.

There were girls, I would never have considered being interested in me earlier, smiling big time at me and I think I am safe when assuming they were interested. And to be honest: I did nothing else than look them in their eyes and smile.

I even turned down a fat 5, because she was so annoyingly harassing me. I didn't even talk to her but she tried kissing me, grabbing my ass and when she started slapping me I grabbed her face looked her straight in her eyes and told her to stop hitting me and get lost.

That felt so good. A year ago I would gladly have grabbed her, put her in a cab and fucked her brains out. And although I am really in a need of a good fuck I am really proud of myself and feel satisfied.

So now for the bad part: I still can't push myself to approach the girls I am interested. I figured out, that a big part of the problem is, that I was at the club on my own and sometimes felt uncomfortable so this dragged me down and put me in beta-mode again.

The problem is that I simply don't know any RP-guys. I try to spread the word, but they all want to stay asleep. There are some natural alphas in my circles of friends, but they are mostly in LTRs and had themselves get betaized and don't even realize it. In fact they are even whining like an AFC and don't get it why their relationship took the direction it took.

So I don't even have somebody to share and discuss things. And the worst part is that I don't have anybody who will push me to finally get out of my comfort zone which I feel I am in need of if I want to make some decent progress. I feel I could make it on my own but that this will take longer and I am losing my patience on myself.

I am somehow still caught in my beta-/white-knight-cage despite of knowing it better and I am pretty sure that other men washing my head from time to time will help me free myself.

tl;dr: Everything is going fine except that I can't finally make myself step out of my comfort zone and feel I may be in the need of some other real men, but don't know where to find them.

So after the W.O.T. here is my question: Where the fuck will I be able to find some real men - preferably around my age - who know how things roll and befriend them?

Also some resources about pushing yourself over the top to get out of your comfort zone would be greatly appreciated.

TIL that living in a matriarchial society may not be, what femnazis consider it to be

I've heard about the Mosuo before, but have just found out a little bit more about their daily life and relationships.

I must say, that it does not sound too bad to me, but indeed even more natural.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mosuo_women heterosexual activity occurs only by mutual consent and mostly through the custom of the secret nocturnal 'visit'; men and women are free to have multiple partners and to initiate or break off relationships when they please

The Mosuo men practice tisese which misleadingly translates as walking marriage in Chinese. However, the Mosuo term literally means 'goes back and forth'.

Women have the choice to invite men of interest to their private sleeping room. If the man does not reciprocate this desire, he may simply never visit the woman's household.

When feelings are reciprocal, a man will be allowed into a woman's private sleeping area (Hua, C.) There he will spend the night and walk back to his mother's home in the early morning.

At night Mosuo adults are free to experience sexuality with as many or as few partners as they wished.

Typically walking marriages are long term. During these unions a woman may become pregnant by the same man multiple times. But when children are born, they become a responsibility of the woman's family. Instead of marrying and sharing family life with spouses, adult Mosuo children remain in extended, multigenerational households with their mother and her blood relatives.

<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mosuo>

According to some, men have no responsibility in Mosuo society—they have no jobs, rest all day, and conserve their strength for nighttime visits.[6] However, Mosuo men do have important roles in their society. They are in charge of livestock and fishing,[4] which they learn from their uncles and older male family members as soon as they are old enough.

While a pairing may be long-term, the man never lives with the woman's family, or vice versa. Mosuo men and women continue to live with and be responsible to their respective families. The couple do not share property. The father usually has little responsibility for his offspring.[10] "It is the job of men to care more for their nieces and nephews than for their own children." [4] A father may indicate an interest in the upbringing of his children by bringing gifts to the mother's family. This gives him status within the mother's family, while not actually becoming part of the family. Whether or not the father is involved, children are raised in the mother's home and assume her family name.

The large majority of women know their children's fathers; it is actually a source of embarrassment if a mother cannot identify a child's father.[9] But, "unlike many cultures which castigate mothers and children without clear paternity, Na children induce no such censure".[9] At a child's birth, the father, his mother and sisters come to celebrate, and bring gifts. On New Year's Day, a child visits the father to pay respect to him and his household. A father also participates in the coming-of-age ceremony. Though he does not have an everyday role, the father is nevertheless an important partner.

I present to you: The crusaders of white knighthood. Aka "Zéromacho"

0 upvotes | February 26, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

http://zeromacho.wordpress.com/le-manifeste_en-2/

They have come to my attention through an interview by "Der Spiegel", Europe's biggest newsmagazine, which was published online today.

The translation by Google isn't the best, but you may be able to make some sense out of it. The worst thing is that the german word "Freier" doesn't translate to "free" or even worse "free man" in this context, but means a prostitutes customer.

So the headline would translate to "What prostitutes clients do is resembles to rape".

I don't want to spoil your fun, so I will only ask this: Why don't they loose a single word about also punishing the prostitute?

A sidenote: There is some heavy action and discussion going on ATM over here in Europe towards banning prostitution. It's been fully legalized in Germany just some years ago and there were recent efforts to ban it again.

The situation improved since the legalisation for many prostitutes because they could legally sue clients, could get insured, and so on, because they weren't forced to operate in the dark and brutal pimps had lesser options because the whores could even denounce them at the police without the fear of risking any punishment for themselves or their clients.

The leader of this petition on banning it in Germany was Alice Schwarzer, Germany's most famous lesbian and feminist, which funnily recently had to commit on being guilty of tax fraud.

Edit: What's the whores opinion on this?

Why are 8,5+ women kissing their guys upon eyecontact with me?

6 upvotes | April 6, 2014 | /r/askTRP | Link | Reddit Link

Pretty much the title.

Since I improved my appearance and follow my rule to make and maintain eyecontact with just anybody I cross on the streets I've noticed some strange behaviour.

Many better looking women, when walking with their guy, will pretty much instantly kiss their guy on the cheek or grab his hand or his waist and pull him to them when I focus them.

They often keep the eyecontact while doing this and some even smile at me. They never seem to be cringing or thinking in a negative way.

Also their guys will always be good looking and as if they are high status.

I am a little bit puzzled here. I've got some diffuse theories about what they are actually trying to communicate by that, but nothing really satisfying. Something like: "Nice try dude, but I'm with McAlpha here." or something like that maybe.

Anybody got some clues on that for me?

Edit: This only happens when they both appear way above average. On top I've noticed single higher value women are being much more open about maintaining eyecontact and exchanging a friendly smile than the ones with visible flaws which always seem not interested at all and quickly look away.

Is the rise of Veganism/Vegetarism maybe closely tied to the rise of modern Feminism (and of white-knighthood)?

2 upvotes | April 10, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

This might sound a little bit weird and maybe even a μ too much of a conspiracy theory as I just got this idea about one hour ago while watching the documentary "Fathead" (Link to full version on Youtube) and I cannot always formulate my ideas in a proper and sophisticated way in English as I am not a native speaker.

Self description of the documentary:

"While most people saw the documentary Super Size Me as an expose of the fast food industry, comedian and former health writer Tom Naughton saw it as a dare: He'd show that you could lose weight on a diet of burgers and fries. In addition to chronicling Naughton's weight drop, the film provides interviews with doctors, nutritionists and others to drive home his thesis that most of what we know about "healthy eating" is wrong."

Firstly I would like to highly recommend watching it, if you still believe in the myth that consuming high amounts of saturated fats will make you go fat and are one of the main causes for heartattacks and you therefore are practicing a low-fat diet. This will be a Red Pill by itself for you.

This movie shows that this all is a big fat lie and in fact carbs and processed sugar are the number one cause for all of the above.

Some pattern I noticed while watching it was that there was always the vegetarian lobby involved, which consists mainly of women, when a shift of paradigms should have been and was propagated.

I also couldn't help noticing that it seems like Morgan Surlock did "Supersize Me" because of his vegan girlfriend.

What I've also noticed in my daily work as a chef de cuisine, which ranged from "cooking right out of the box" to preparing high-class food, and from my wildly distributed circles of friends, is that more and more feminines are becoming vegetarians or even vegan and their SOs will follow them, while I really cannot remember any single man that is a self-proclaimed vegetarian, besides my gay uncle who also recently switched to adding meat to his diet again.

Also when browsing OKCupid there is one pattern repeating over and over again: Feminist, Atheist and Vegetarian/Vegan.

I put some more thought on that and I am curious as if that may somehow be linked to the times when we were hunters and gatherers. At least for example the female ability to differentiate colours much better than men can is very likely linked to these times. So why shouldn't preferred food be too?

As stated I've not come very far in overthinking this theory but am curious of your thoughts on this topic.

Edits: Spelling and grammar.

Bruce Willis is an over-the-hill gunslinger coming to a small town and engaging in a fight with the local mob groups.

Willis in his acting is basically the blueprint of a mysterious and machiavellian alpha and there is much TRP and dark triad stuff to find.

It may not be Willis' best movie, but I definitely enjoyed watching it again after a long time. Even more now with having my RP-glasses on.

I don't know if it may be available at Netflix as Netflix is unavailable at my location.

The Polygamous Sex - A very unique approach to many RP topics

27 upvotes | May 11, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

"The Polygamous Sex" is a book written by Esther Vilar and published in 1976. I assume many of you have read her preceding work "The Manipulated Man".

If you haven't then do so. She was chased out of Germany by the lesbian feminist mob and it's order of white knighting journalists because of her publishings. I can also recommend a "discussion" from the 70s between her and the famous German feminist Alice Schwarzer, who happens to be convicted of tax fraud just recently by the way. Interesting enough Schwarzer at that point of time hadn't admitted she is a lesbian. So her views regarding heterosexual relationships and families were regarded more legitimated then.

Vilar's idea in this publication is basically that women's behaviour creates a cognitive dissonance in men which they try to solve by living in polygamy. She assumes that men and women have the same capabilities mindwise, but women deliberately choose to "stay dumb" and behave like a child because they will be more successful in tying a provider to them and they simply do not need to be more clever.

She covers and explains many RP topics like hypergamy, AFBB, friendzoning, provider mentality, childish behaviour, feminism, white knighting and the necessity of a higher status to be a successful male.

I don't agree with all of her theses but a big part sounds pretty logical and there are some hidden gems in there.

Recommended read.

Edit: I just learned, that there happens to be a full analysis of it which has just been published by Eric Crowley.

TRP! Help me translate Esther Vilar's "The End Of The Manipulation" to English!

37 upvotes | May 12, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

I found out that the third part of Esther Vilar's trilogy about the modern man and feminism hasn't been translated to english up to now. Since it is from the 70s I came to the conclusion that nobody will ever unless I do it.

Although I am capable of writing comprehensible sentences in English I know that many of my sentences look feeble and inferior, there are much better ways to frame certain things and my grammar is not the best.

I'd like to submit it here piece by piece and also put it on a blog. Once it will be finished I will put it into a PDF and make it available via sharehosters and torrent.

I couldn't even find a digital version of the German original anywhere on the web, so I just bought it and have even just started with the translation. This means I will translate it while I read it.

So I am looking for native English speakers who would like to participate in this project. Endorsed contributors would be strongly preferred, although this is not mandatory. But you should have a good history and reputation at TRP or related subs like MGTOW and such.

I am not sure whether it would be a good idea to start a new sub for this task. Let me know what you think about it.

Below you'll find the first topic I translated, so you can see and judge about what you will be dealing with.

Also fellow German redpillers are welcome to help with this. I would just scan pages and make them available for translation.

What is masculine masculine = punished

The man - that's what "The Manipulated Man" was about - is born to be imprisoned. He doesn't conceive this as cruel though: Because he is prepared for this lifestyle right from the start, he doesn't expect anything else. Because practically all men have been imprisoned he even sees something positive in it - it means he is perfectly normal - and, with some pride, calls this way of being masculine. He is generally speaking in his own jargon: He calls his keepers superiors, the correction performance of duties, the administration management and a commendation for good conduct professional acknowledgement. After such commendation he immediately feels better: He then says that he enjoys his work.

Like everything in the second half of the twentieth century the way of the punishment has been humanized. But the sentence stayed the same: For a man the sentence will always be "for life". As distinguished from the "real" corrections the criterion here isn't the delinquent's danger for society - so for those who aren't jailed - but his usefulness: Type and duration therefore do not derive from the felony but from the performance ability. And because a man's performance increases when he's rested, he is being sent home in between times and by this allows him to participate in the life of those for whom he serves the sentence, in certain intervalls. As for the rest he is only exempt from corrections if he is unprofitable anyways: like with physical insufficiency or psychological shock. A healthy man who wishes to be temporarily exempted from his punishment - his crime is being a man - therefore has to either fake a medical condition or the death of a loved one. But if he does this too often or if he is being caught, he will be degraded and has to fulfill the poorest tasks offered by the department. Also his visits to the ones outside will become more and more uncomfortable then.

As soon as it is determined that short breaks are not sufficient any more to keep his performance at a decent level - and this will be the case after about one year - he is set free for multiple days. He is recommended to spend this period in an unfamiliar milieu, because this way he will recover much better and will be able to endure the old impressions bravely again because of the new impressions. When the gates close behind him again after that he often even is relieved. How beautiful to be inside again, he says to the others - holidays forever, no, that's not for me.

But even this joy isn't granted to him. Because if after half a century of living in the jailhouse his performance is becoming more and more unprofitable and the mandatory breaks aren't sufficient with all the will in the world, these last holidays are forced on him like a punishment. He is released to a home without a place for him, to a family to which he remained a stranger and in a freedom for which he feels much too tired. Luckily these holidays don't really last a forever, because statistically a man's life expectancy in the western industrial countries is about 69 years and he will only have four more years to live after his retirement.

In the light of the recent purple pill rant and countless other posts regarding anti-RP subs I feel the urge to say this:

Stop trying to persuade and convince people who want to stay in their eazy-peazy reality and mindset. Stop even reading those anti-RP subs.

It won't help you. It won't serve any purpose besides wasting energy. There is no sense at all in fighting on the internet. What outcome do you expect? What price is there to win for you?

Everybody who discovered and approved TRP was excited and wanted to share the truth he finally discovered after all this struggle. Everybody knows the anger that rises when you read some BP-bullshit. All the bullshit society used to betray you and kept you from becoming a happy and complete man. It's also normal that you go out and try to convince people because of your NRE with TRP.

But let me tell you this: You came here, you read, you understood and you approved. The people over at BP and PP came here, read and somehow disapproved. This might have a series of reasons which I frankly don't give a shit about, but the thing is, that they made their opinion and not only this but they chose to join a group of people which actively mocks, attacks and is trying to disturb discussion here. You will not convince anybody there with hard facts. Even if you tattoo them on their forehead. They've also got the right to take the blue pill and stay in la-la-land. But this also means that they've got nothing of value to offer to you.

There is a huge difference in reading those subs and reading BP-fantasy subs like /r/relationship or /r/askWomen, since you will at least learn about the ever-repeating patterns there which might help you to consolidate your RP-view and therefore benefit you somehow.

Reading the others will just make you angry, make you feel the urge to "clarify things" and will ultimately make you waste time that you could have spend much more meaningful. You will not learn anything there. Not a single thing of value.

"Arguing" with women

30 upvotes | July 22, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

Lately I've seen a rising number of posts over at /r/askTRP who asked for advice on discussions with women or even self-proclaimed feminists in particular and what to do when they get emotional or start trying to shame you.

I just happened to find a video by Terrence Popp when I was looking for some amusement before going to bed, which I thought I should share with you.

You will basically find everything you need to deal with those kind of situations in there.

- Don't ever take them serious. Don't be afraid to annoy them even more. Don't actually argue with them on a serious level.
- If you want to state your opinion and call them out on their bullshit, stay short and don't bother with long explanations.
- Use agree and amplify or disagree and amplify a lot even until sounding ridiculous.
- Hold frame and have fun doing it.

Enjoy.

FYI: I Just re-upped the TV-duell between Esther Vilar and German feminst Alice Schwarzer with English subtitles.

26 upvotes | August 11, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

There was a post over at /r/MGTOW with a request for a link to the video of this duell, including English subtitles. I had one version bookmarked, but it turned out that the video was deleted. I also couldn't find another version but found a file with the subtitles instead, so I re-upped it and added the subtitles. They are not perfect, but I believe a native English speaker is capable of following.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=py2b1g73bt4>

If you haven't seen this interview before or do not even know who Esther Vilar is here is some information:

This duell took place on German TV in 1975. Esther Vilar had published her book "Der dressierte Mann" (It was translated to "The Manipulated Man", although "dressiert" means "dressed" as in dressing a horse) which basically said that it's not men who oppress women but that in fact women oppress men.

The book raised a serious shitstorm in Germany. For instance Germany's biggest news magazine "Der Spiegel" would call her "modishly-popular manhelper in the gender conflict".

This ultimately led to Esther Vilar being brutally battered by a group of young feminists and drove her to leave my country. Funny side-note: This incident is completely left out in both her German and English Wikipedia articles.

Alice Schwarzer was (and is) the leading figure of Germany's "Frauenbewegung" (women's movement) which started its rise in the late 60s and early 70s. She is the chief editor of the feminist magazine "Emma". She got recently busted on tax fraud.

Vilar was perceived as the winner of the duell by the majority in the media.

There are many RP-truths to be found in this interview and much will sound oddly familiar to the ones who've been hanging around here for a longer time. I also admire Vilar for staying so calm and chilled all the time despite the bad discussion style of Schwarzer.

If you haven't already done so I heavily recommend reading Esther's books which form a trilogy: "The Manipulated Man", "The Polygamous Sex" and "The End of the Manipulation". The latter isn't available in English and I planned (and still plan) on translating it, but I simply lack the time just now.

I consider the former two as mandatory reading for anybody in the process of unplugging, especially if you are planning on getting married or - even worse - have already been trapped.

The Disposable Heroes - A theory

7 upvotes | August 21, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

Reading the current thread to remind us about the difference between altruistic love in men and women really struck a nerve in me and I had kind of an epiphany.

Not only are we disposable today, but we have always been and will always be.

I believe we all agree on the fact that procreating is the ultimate goal of life and the endurance of the species is what fuels this desire from deep within.

A single male is perfectly capable of spermating a really big group of females while a female is only capable of carrying one child (multiples let aside) at a time. It would take her also some time to recover from giving birth and being fertile again.

Assuring that this precious offspring will be at least capable of surviving on it's own is inevitable to assure successful procreation. Since the female is the nurturing part it is also inevitable to assure her survival.

If a single female is lost a group is much more severely damaged than if a male is lost. The survival of the group, and ultimately of the species, is much more at play if the female is gone, than if the male is.

Therefore men jumping in to catch a bullet, throwing themselves on grenades and having an overall bigger trait for altruistic love makes much more sense.

This would by the way explain pedestalizing bitches to me. Would make total sense, except for being outdated today.

Call me out on my bro-science please!

There is no value in it for anybody except the ones who receive the money - Reddit is owned by one of the largest private media companies in the US and they should have found more reasonable ways to making profit out of it than begging for money from users. The benefits that come with gold status are a joke and the validation is nothing you should be looking for. It's the same as karma: just internet points with no real life value.

BBC documentary: "The Century of the Self" - How those in power have used Freud's theories to try and control the dangerous crowd in an age of mass democracy

65 upvotes | September 1, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

This is one of my most favourite and, in my opinion, also fundamental puzzle pieces to figure out how this world is actually running and that it's running on a pretty different engine than you have been taught all your life. You might also get a sense afterwards for why the feminist's agenda is still being pushed although it seems to absolutely make no sense and is already rendered obsolete, at least to a sane mind.

The documentary describes the impact of Freud's theories on the perception of the human mind, and the ways public relations agencies and politicians have used this during the last 100 years for their engineering of consent. Among the main characters are Freud himself and his nephew Edward Bernays, who was the first to use psychological techniques in advertising. He is often seen as the father of the public relations industry.

2 upvotes | September 12, 2014 | /r/askTRP | Link | Reddit Link

This is something I started noticing just recently. I am not sure whether it is confirmation bias though. It may also be important to note that I live in Germany, since there are definitely differences in women's behaviour compared to the US as far as I can tell from reading here.

It seems that women who are looking good (7 and up) will be much more open overall and to flirting (including negging) in special. I sometimes try to make eye-contact with everybody and look where it leads to from there. I am also often just flirty with any woman I meet, like the cashier at the supermarket. My game isn't the best from self-observation, but I am definitely improving and it could also be much worse.

We also know about all this eye-raping bullshit which mostly hambeasts seem to come up with.

The good looking ones often respond to sole eye-contact with smiling and they can laugh about getting negged very much. When I do this at work (I am the only male with 20 females) they will even often tell their colleagues about it because they find it so funny. Although I figured out it may just be that they spread word that they were valuable enough to get my attention.

After giving this a little thought I came up with the theory that the ugly ones a) maybe aren't used to it, b) think that there is no way a decent and sober guy could be interested them and c) are so insecure that they are in constant shielding mode.

It also seems that they are the first to try to cock-block, even before just anything looks like sex, but if they overhear me saying something playful they will try to shut me down by trying to victimize the other girl and pretending to having to protect her. I got very good in countering this with amused mastery though.

Anybody got thoughts on this?

Do I need to worry about not being able to keep it up during the first date?

4 upvotes | September 15, 2014 | /r/askTRP | Link | Reddit Link

Just recovered from monk-mode and had my first date. She contacted me on a site similar to Tinder, switched to Whatsapp very fast and it became obvious very early that she is dtf.

She isn't the best shot, pretty face, but a little bit chubby, but hey, you need to start somewhere I guess. I'd rate her a six who could easily become an eight if she lost some weight. She is also insecure about it.

So I went to her flat tonight for the first date and things went pretty well. Held frame, she gave me one of the best blowjobs I ever had and she was very caring for my comfort overall.

Due to my long absence I wasn't able to switch off my head though. I returned the favour and ate and fingered her like a pro, but I wasn't able to get my buddy beyond half stiff. I tried to not care and fucked her for a decent five minutes like there is no tomorrow and from her screaming and cheering me I'd say it was more than OK and her legs were all shaky afterwards.

I couldn't keep it up though and we ended it without me finishing. I think I also managed to overcome the awkwardness relatively good. Didn't apologize, tried to stay fuzzy about why it happened and used very light A&A when she asked multiple times if it was her, without being cocky.

We talked about setting up a new date, even appointed it for Sunday and I'd really like it to happen since it was pretty unsatisfying as you can imagine and I definitely need to get my load anywhere else than in my hand.

I just took a cab home and refrained from the urge to text her something like "Got home save". BP-me has been very annoying about it though.

She seems to be very much into me nonetheless, but as you might also guess I feel a little bit insecure now.

How do I proceed from here? How do I react if this happens again anytime with any girl?

Edit: I've got the feeling that this isn't too bad. I had this happen before now and then, mostly because of whisky-dick, and I normally saw the girls again afterwards. Scarcity is a hell of a bitch...

Edit:

I just texted a little bit back and forth with her. She ended up writing me how much she is attracted and that she never thought she could be so turned on and so wet and so on and she can't wait for me to come around the next time.

This is one of the strangest celebrity relationships I know of.

I don't really know much about John Lennon's former relationships, but he obviously got full blue pill with Yoko. Including all this Disney shit like "Love at First Sight" and so on.

He even chose to incorporate her in his shows like in the cringeworthy video featuring Chuck Berry.

I am no expert on Yoko Ono and her Wikipedia article is pretty much all positive, although I remember that she might be one of the most hated spouses of musicians closely followed by Courtney Love.

From what I understand she was a fairly successful artist who even contributed her part to the so called "Fluxus"-network.

AFAIK she was also an active part of the 2nd wave feminism movement.

What's your take on her and their relationship? What made one of the most popular and influential musicians of the 20th century choose especially this woman?

This documentary shows many examples of what alpha behaviour is and explains how we often subconsciously deal with it.

It will help you to understand the concept of alpha and beta much better. At least it did this job for me.

[Found in TIL] The Paradox of Declining Female Happiness

Just found this paper you might find as much interesting as me:

<http://www.nber.org/papers/w14969>

I just had the time to cross-read it, so I'll just post the preface:

By many objective measures the lives of women in the United States have improved over the past 35 years, yet we show that measures of subjective well-being indicate that women's happiness has declined both absolutely and relative to men. The paradox of women's declining relative well-being is found across various datasets, measures of subjective well-being, and is pervasive across demographic groups and industrialized countries. Relative declines in female happiness have eroded a gender gap in happiness in which women in the 1970s typically reported higher subjective well-being than did men. These declines have continued and a new gender gap is emerging -- one with higher subjective well-being for men.

I just wanted to get my ass up and finally start lifting, when I noticed a very tempting offer.

There opened up a MMA Gym in my town which looks really really good with friendly people. I was thinking about this for a long time now.

They offer courses, from beginner to pro in ten combat styles ranging from Muay Thai, BBJ, Jeet Kun Do, Eskrima and much more which are taught in bulk lessons titled "Stand Fight", "Ground Fight" and so on.

If you join the gym you can also do cross courses. However I've not read very much about it here up to now and have in the back of my head that it's considered a little bit douchey and progs like SL or SS are much preferred to gain mass.

The thing is that if I join this gym I won't be able to afford paying another membership in a gym which I would use solely for lifting so I need to make a decision here.

On myself: I'm anything but small or thin. I've lost 40 pounds, but still am overweight. I'd believe about 20-25 pounds could go. I am 6 ft 1".

I haven't lifted up to now but believe I shouldn't have problems to get good gains, at least in the beginning, because of my physics. I've got a big back and rib cage.

I am doing keto for six moths now and plan to stick with it. I am at about 3000kcal a day but still loosing fat without doing any sports at all. I am a professional chef though.

So what do? Invest in lifting, or invest in MMA and cross-training?

The first comment.

Quintessence: Just stay ugly, don't bother improving yourself, but become confident and you will still have all the sex you want.

This is what you always have to keep in mind with women. There is no scarcity of sex for them, unless they are the equivalent of the hunchback of Notre Dame. They will always have men who are willing to fulfill their needs, and will even get what they consider 'high-value' dudes.

The comments are actually also worth reading. Most guys will advocate for self-improvement while many women advocate for the 'You go gal!' approach.

Just a quick reminder: You are a man. Be fucking thankful for it!

So you are in the mystical anger phase?

So you hate the world and the women within, that seem to have it created? So you woke up and realized you've been living a lie? So you realized you've been betrayed? So you see the pussy passes everywhere? So you hear the self-entitlement everywhere? So maybe you dared to step through the mirror and found out that there actually is no patriarchy, but a matriarchy with surrogate patriarchs?

So you are hurt because you don't get the pussy you expected just because you chose to 'act more alpha'? So things didn't work out in your favour?

Who cares? I don't. And so shouldn't you! Nobody takes care of you and nobody cares about you.

You are a man. You can create things. You are able to create what you just have as an image of a man in your mind. You are able to change yourself. Your imagination goes beyond what you've been told are the borders. You can focus. You can reach. You can take.

Everything of lasting value was created by men. Everything you cherish was created by men. But also all the shit you dwell in was created by men, because they would voluntarily let themselves be tooled. Stop being one of them. You are not tool, you are the guy who makes tools.

We are the creators of the world we live in and we can surely change it. At least for ourselves. We can be egocentric and egoistic if we need to. We have fought wars and we were willing to die for an idea. We can be altruistic. We know love and passion.

If you need hate, pure hate, to better yourself, hate yourself. Hate yourself to an extent where you cannot stand it anymore and then go and force a change. You can do it. You are a fucking man. Kill your hamster and move on.

The truth hurts, but so does being born.

Stay strong, hold frame, and conquer the fucking world. It's at your feet. Take it!

I know you and I am with you.

The Non-white-heterosexual license

0 upvotes | October 24, 2014 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

Just wanted to inform you guys, that from now on, all my posts here are subject to the Non-white-heterosexual license.

If you are not a white heterosexual male you are permitted to copy, sell and use this work in any manner you choose without need to include any attribution you do not see fit. You are asked as a courtesy to retain this license in any derivatives but you are not required. If you are a white heterosexual male you are provided the same permissions (reuse, modification, resale) but are required to include this license in any documentation and any public facing derivative. You are also required to include attribution to the original author or to an author responsible for redistribution of a derivative.

I live in that country, where we had these yellow stars for a group of people, so I feel kind of comfortable with it. /s

Seriously though: WTF is this shit?

This license serves as a form of communal Affirmative Action. It was developed with the belief that when we accept that we have a limited psychological capacity we are better able to architect social constructs that favor equality while making inequality more costly.

This comes close to newspeak.

It's not only about granting privileges, which never existed for white heterosexual males in the first place, to the allegedly discriminated, anymore, but now also about stripping privileges from the allegedly privileged. And all this with the goal to establish "equality".

Pardon me please. I am going to go throw up now.

Domestic Violence in Lesbian Relationships

It has been estimated that between 17-45% of lesbians have been the victim of at least one act of violence perpetrated by a female partner (Burke et al, 1999; Lie et al, 1991), and that 30% of lesbians have reported sexual assault / rape by another woman (Renzetti, 1992).

So even if you would be so dumb to believe in the myth that one out of five college hamsters will be a victim of rape by a fellow male student, this kind of tops it.

According to Amnesty International USA, there are still some refuges / shelters that refuse to take lesbian survivors of domestic violence, and so these women may feel they have no choice but to stay with their abusive partner.

Looks like if a woman is the perpetrator it can't be that bad.

Therefore, there is an inherent fear that acknowledgment of domestic abuse within this world, will give lesbian partnerships a bad name and perpetuate the myth among heterosexual society that gay relationships are abnormal or dysfunctional. Speaking out can therefore result in divisive attitudes within the community.

Yeah. Better focus on the source of all evil - masculinity - and destroying the vicious patriarchy which protects the evildoers.

Anybody got some tips for a trip to Paris?

I am going to be there for the next weekend for the first time of my life, although I took the Périphérique multiple times on my way to the Biscaya.

I am not so much into all the sightseeing stuff, so what do I definitely not want to miss?

Any tips for clubs apart from the obvious tourist places like the Rex? I read about a club with three areas of Indie music but can't remember it's name or where it was located. Sounded fun though.

Where do those college hotties hang out on a saturday night?

What do I definitely want to miss out? What about Pigalle? Worth visiting, or better save my money to go to a Thai massage club with happy ending you recommend?

I've read that the Metro won't operate from 2:15 to about 5:00 on weekends. When do people in Paris usually go out?

I am not solely interested in clubbing, but also bars, arts, interesting places, whatever.

My french is so rusted, besides my kitchen french, that I'd hardly be able to ask for directions. Thank Google for maps. Oh btw: What about taxis? Risk of skamming?

I'll be staying in Batignolles, if that's of any use.

Thanks in advance for your input.

Both hilarity and education in /r/sex.

<https://archive.today/xKNyV>

After some pain during (safe) sex last weekend and some itching, I went to the local women's clinic and requested an exam and STD tests (it's a new partner so that's the right thing to do, right?)

Absolutely. Noticed the bracketed word "safe"? You'll judge by yourself how likely this is, after you've read the rest.

When I saw the doctor come in I was apprehensive because this doctor ALWAYS tells me my problem is a yeast infection, gives me a pill and shoes me out.

So she's had to go there how many times before, because of suspicion of STD? Every other week or so? Eergh.

This time, same drill, asks me a few questions, then tells me she's gonna give me a pill for Yeast. This time I insisted I wanted an exam, she made a big sigh, "really? OK then."

I bet $5 this didn't happen, but is just added for dramatisation.

While I was up in stirrups she asked how many partners I'd had in 6 weeks, I said 2. Then when asked when my last full round of tests was, I said 10 months ago and I'd had 4 partners since then.

The commenters noted, that four different partners in ten months really isn't that much, so I might assume that we are dealing with a light form of slutiness.

So let's say she was a late bloomer and lost her virginity at eighteen and really "only" had four different partners per year. You do the math yourself to find out how many dicks she hopped on when she hits the wall.

Keep this number (and the sidenote, that this might just be a light form of slutiness) in mind, if you cannot refrain from asking your unicorn about how many guys she slept with.

Please take note of fact that she didn't bother to do a test when she switched cock the other times.

Then she said, in a really condescending way, "maybe you should try having less partners, then you won't have to worry so much."

How dare she? This is totally inappropriate and could be compared to a doctor daring to advise a morbidly obese person to maybe eat a little bit less.

I was kind of floored and mortified,

For what? Being called out for being a slut? For having to face the truth? For being reminded of it?

I mean, that's totally uncalled-for right? Especially for a health professional?

Yep. It isn't like it is their job to tell you what you might be able to do to avoid the same health problems in the future.

| I'm trying to do the right thing, even if I had a new partner every week, I'm expressing a concern for them and myself.

Remember the note you took about the other cocks? I believe the most important word here is the very last word. She doesn't really give a shit about her partners, but only gets tested if she's already having symptoms and not in advance for the safety of them, which would be appropriate regarding her lifestyle.

| TL;DR responsible adult goes in for STD testing, gets shamed by doctor

"responsible" ... "shamed"

| EDIT: thank you for the validating comments, when someone in that position says something like that, your first instinct can be, "geez she's right, I'm terrible."

Always trust your guts m'lady.

In my opinion it's pretty safe to assume, that this in fact isn't even the real partner count. It's further relatively safe to assume that all the drama is added to generate sympathy for her and prejudgement for the doctor.

So guys please, please, please:

Always wear protection! Do not listen to the bullshit she is trying to sell you. Sluts are gonna slut and they certainly don't give two cents about your health.

You don't want to wake up one day, with your fallen off dick lying besides you.

So you wonder if it's worth all the struggle to improve yourself and lead the life you want? Come in and take a look in the future!

Subclinical Primary Psychopathy, but Not Physical Formidability or Attractiveness, Predicts Conversational Dominance in a Zero-Acquaintance Situation

I am not yet finished with reading it, as it is kind of difficult to comprehend for me as a non-native speaker, and I need to read some sentences multiple times, while referencing a dictionary.

However the following excerpts should be enough to wake your interest.

One version of this dichotomy is Henrich and Gil-White's [7] distinction between dominance and prestige as processes whereby people acquire status (see also [8]). Dominance is a phylogenetically older system based on intimidation and coercion, whereas the prestige system is thought to be uniquely human, and based on freely-conferred deference [7]. In Henrich and Gil-White's [7] model, dominant individuals use force to induce fear and avoidance in subordinates, whereas prestigious individuals possess socially valued skills and/or knowledge that attracts sycophants, who defer to them in order to gain proximity so as to facilitate social learning. Consistent with this formulation, dominance and prestige have been shown to be associated with different personality traits [9] and different testosterone profiles in men[10].

Even if the vast majority of interactions with strangers are peaceful and non-coercive, failure to make such assessments early on could leave an individual unable to adaptively deploy dominance and submission in the rare event of escalating tension; this risk warrants the uniform deployment of assessment upon first encounter. The same logic explains signaling and associated behaviors: if conflict is a possibility, consensus regarding relative rank benefits both dominant and subordinate individuals, since such concordance obviates the need for a direct contest. Conversational dominance may correspond to the unfolding of such low-cost assessment. Consonant with this position, Rosa and Mazur's [23] classic study found that individuals who first broke eye contact with co-participants tended to produce fewer speech acts in a subsequent discussion than those who maintained eye contact. The authors interpret this result in terms of phylogenetically ancient dominance-submission signaling, arguing that initial eye contact establishes a dominance hierarchy that plays out in subsequent conversational behavior. Conversational dominance may also undermine prestige, to the extent that it reflects attempts to monopolize a conversation at the expense of other participants. Rather than conveying accessibility and attracting admirers, conversational dominance may rebuff learners seeking proximity and learning opportunities.

With respect to dominance motivation, psychopathy is characterized by a sense of grandiosity [27] and self-perceived relative rank [37], and recent work has implicated psychopathic traits (as part of the Dark Triad [38]) in the pursuit of dominance [39]. Research using Hawley's [40] typology has shown that psychopathy is positively associated with both coercive (dominance-linked) and bistrategic (mixed coercive and prosocial) resource acquisition strategies [41].

Physical attractiveness, though not associated with possession of valuable knowledge, is an arena of prestige competition [47] and it positively affects interpersonal assessments [48] and (particularly in women) feelings of entitlement [26].

I've noticed a dramatic increase of posts and comments today, which, in one or another favour, try to subtly question or even shame TRP, its concepts and its members.

A good example would be this post: <https://archive.today/YBHtX>

I also suspect that there might have been some vote-brigading going on earlier today.

Do not waste your time and engage in discussion with those people. It's a waste of time.

Even if those aren't BP-trolls, these posts show, that they lack understanding and knowledge of just the basic fundamentals of TRP, as posted to the sidebar in the mainsub.

Those aren't things we need to discuss here. Those are accepted as given facts. You do not have to defend or explain it to other people.

In fact, other men did so before, so just provide a link to the relevant articles, if you can't keep your hand calm and have to answer them.

If you are a hambeast and make it past a BMI of 30, you are now officialy considered to be disabled. This results in your employer having to consider discrimination laws and making it practically next to impossible to fire you.

In this particular case, the morbidly obese man wasn't even fired by the city, because he is a landwhale, but because they simply didn't have any more work for him.

Doesn't even matter, says the European Court, because he is disabled and that has to be considered, and it changes nothing, if the disability is self-inflicted or not.

So if your company is struggling and going through some rough time, you better start with your Cheetoh and Mountain Dew diet right away, so they have to fire somebody with a better qualification and who's taking care of himself, instead of you.

Fuck the EU retards and fuck my government for putting up with this bullshit.

Self-defense and martial arts

45 upvotes | January 12, 2015 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

Introduction

There have been popping up numerous threads on this topic here and over at /r/asktrp lately lately and it looks like a good idea to share the knowledge I've gathered up to now and my thoughts on this topic.

Most of these threads evolve either around which particular system to choose, or they center around situations, where OP either felt offended, intimidated or threatened.

As a short disclaimer, I'd like to throw in, that I for myself have been doing MMA just for about half a year now, and some of those things I mention are either my personal opinion, which I came up with through my experience and thorough research so far, or are based on conversations I had with people who are very experienced in self-defense/martial arts.

Why you would want to learn a martial art or self-defense-system

I'd like to start with proposing the practicing of a martial art, or a self-defense-system, as a substitution for the holy grail of lifting. You will surely not get as bulked, but you will definitely have a well-defined body and be jacked as shit, if you are serious about it.

Bulking and martial arts do not mix well. In an actual fight, you need to be able to be both explosive, but also have to have stamina to endure throughout that fight. If you've watched some fighting before, you'll notice, that if somebody is gassed, he is most likely to lose the fight.

If you have a huge amount of muscles, you're able to dominate in situations, where you need to be explosive, but you'll get exhausted much much more. There are of course a few exceptions to that, like the infamous Mark Kerr, but those just confirm the rule.

There are of course workouts specifically aimed at martial artists and I'd bet that Donald Cerrone and Jim Miller haven't got too much struggle with pulling girls, because of their bodies.

Learning how to fight has some additional benefits to offer though, apart from the most obvious ones: being more dangerous and having confidence.

The simplest one maybe is: you can skip cardio day. Just calmly rolling around and wrestling a little bit for five minutes, or dancing around with your buddy, while keeping your hands up and parting the air with your fists, will be enough for the start for you.

But seriously: You will develop a very special mindset pretty fast. It will help you to become much calmer in your thoughts and you will just not care about as many things. This will manifest in being more aloof overall, but also in acting more dominant, because you just cannot be bothered that much any more about how your actions make other people feel in this particular moment. Ever had problems with dancing around everybody, when you are in crowded places like the mall? That will have an end pretty fast.

It will rapidly increase your posture and movement. It didn't even take one month for me, although I walked like a very slow version of John Wayne for the first two weeks. It shares this with bulking, granted. Since you also practice stance, you'll notice, that you will stand much more upright and rooted.

If you ever wondered, why you might be able to find those alphas people are constantly talking about, you'll find them there (as you of course also will at the freeweight section in the local gym). I've made many friends there and it's a really friendly and supportive atmosphere there. If you trust another man enough to let him kick you, or choke you, you will have a special kind of relationship. There is also of course a lot of negging and light AMOGing going on, but you'll get used to it and it also is pretty funny and lightheaded, if nobody acts sulked or insulted.

A neat side-effect is, that if you mention towards girls, that you are one of those guys fighting in a cage, you'll almost be able to hear the tingling of their vaginas, plus it's also almost always some food for conversations with people in general.

The most important part though is something I'd put with a quote by Renner Gracie: "In order to avoid a fight, you must know how to fight", which brings me to the next topic.

Martial Arts and actual self-defense situations

If you know how to fight, your urge to actually do it does greatly decrease. Sparring at least three times a week, getting hit and bruised by your pals, and loosing to better fighters will be enough for you to calm that wish down in you.

You'll also learn pretty fast, that a fight is always a potential threat to your life and should be handled as such. I've seen people writing that you shouldn't handle it as such, but these people do not know shit about fighting. Just because you won some wrestling on the floor of a dirty bar, with the local alcoholic regular, doesn't mean that it's always like that.

You'll learn that you can't judge a book by it's cover and that you cannot safely make assumptions about the capabilities of a certain person. There are many smaller guys than me at my gym, who would beat me up in seconds, and I've seen male landwhales who were able to do the splits and pin you down on the ground in a submission pose, before you would even have time to put your beer down.

On top of all of that, you should also be aware, that you aren't Superman and can x-ray persons to find out about the content of their pockets. You'll be surprised, what you are able to do with a sharp knife by just aimlessly slashing around with it. Just do a Google image search for knife wounds(NSFW). I don't have to teach you about guns.

Watch (How to defeat multiple opponents)[<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Vyyrjpm49hA>](partly NSFW) by Renner Gracie to understand more about that.

Regardless of all that, you'll of course be able to defend yourself and I'd even say that it doesn't even matter which martial art you end up practicing, since they all will give you an advantage over an uneducated opponent, even if it's Aikido. Many of them share the same principles, like learning and about and controlling the distance. I personally have my favourites, which brings me to the last point.

Which Martial Art should I learn?

There are many many martial art and self-defense systems out there to choose from. As I said, they all have their authority, but some are more suitable to actual defend yourself and also to practice in doing so, in my opinion.

Personally I advocate for doing something which involves full-contact sparring. This will not only help you with building your personality, but you'll learn how to remain calm in stressful situations, and when you are actually hit. Anything, where you just fiddle around a little bit with your hands, or do not actually hit somebody is just some cultural dancing.

I also believe that there should be actual competitions where you can go. Although Bruce Lee's opinion was, that competitions are useless, since they've rules, and in a street fight, there are no rules, but it's the closest you can get to it, with another guy, trying to take you out and win against you.

You should also be able to judge distances and fight in different distances. If you are within striking distance, your strategy should be a different one, than if you are in trapping or grappling distance.

Being a good boxer will not help you very much if you are forced to fight on the ground with somebody who's comfortable there.

My personal favourites are clearly MMA (or Muay Thai combined with BJJ or Luta Livre) and Jeet Kun Do, also the latter misses tournaments, but they both will teach you how to effectively fight in various distances. JKD also has elements from Wing Tsun Kung Fu which can become useful in the confinement of crowded places, like the practicing of Chi-Sao.

I can't say very much about Krav Maga, since I possess too little knowledge about it, but I don't find it very sympathetic, that it is segmented and if you aren't working in law enforcement or for the military, you'll never learn the full spectrum of it.

Ultimately most streetfights are won by the person who's striking first and ruthless. A proper elbow served to the chin, or a kick to the groin, followed by a knee to the head might be the two most successful strategies, when it comes to ending a fight before it even began, unless you plan on using inventory and crystal ashtrays.

As mentioned I am a little bit biased by my own experience and I am looking forward to read about the opinions of fellow martial artists.

The benefits of an abundance mentality mindset may go deeper than we thought

Found on /r/science: Men are less promiscuous when women are scarce.

The research team questioned 300 persons from eight rural regions in Guyana, where the male-to-female ratio varied and found, that while promiscuity of women seems to be unaffected by it, men seem to be more willing to engage in long-term-relationships with growing scarcity of women.

They draw a very interesting conclusion, implicating, that while reproduction costs for women are always higher, than for men, men also face steep reproductive costs that it affects their reproductive strategies, when women are a scarcity:

‘When the pool of males is large, finding a female partner can be difficult such that existing partners become a valued resource’ say the team. Men attempt to attract and maintain a relationship with a partner because, when females are rare, it is costly to lose a partner.

Although this admittedly isn't a really high sample-size, it should still serve as a motivator for you, to work towards developing your abundance mentality mindset. Regardless if you are looking to spin plates, or if you are looking for a LTR, since the study implies that you will also automatically raise your standards.

I truly get a feeling of groundhog day the longer I come here and it would greatly decrease the need for redundance, if we'd have a Wiki with at least some short answers to the most frequently asked questions, that we could point to. I am talking about real basic and simply stuff here.

I have to force myself more and more to write an answer to questions like:

- How to get out of the friendzone?
- How to handle my oneitis?
- How to fuck my co-worker?
- What to buy my oneitis for christmas/birthday/one-week-anniversary?
- How to missionize and heal the world?
- How to handle femifucks and SJWs?
- How to handle standard shit-test XY?

and so on.

Since I once was clueless myself I feel sympathy for those who are stumbling over problems and are still struggling and I'd still like to help them to find orientation nonetheless.

Installing a Wiki with FAQs might be a way to solve this.

Thoughts?

If you don't know what I am talking about, don't bother as you will most likely never need those files.

How to use the HTML:

In order to have your browser properly display them, you'll need to have a webserver running, because of the way reddit serves the files.

They will work without one, but rendering will be very slow and it will look like shit.

Although my initial intention was to have a JSON-backup of TRP, I might be improving the rest in the near future and also provide an improved version of the php-script, which I've written to leech the data, so you can make your custom archives. I'll post an update here then.

The public always tried to shame him for being a misogynist, for being embarrassing (especially as he aged), for exploiting girls and what not. Anything a feminazi could come up with, you just name it. He was even labeled "The most embarrassing Berlin", to which he states "So what? It's a great honour. Of four million Berlins I am the most embarrassing. Who is like that? I like it."

On the other hand, nobody could actually escape his charme and charisma. He always seemed like a lotus blossom with all the dirt just dripping off of him, nonchalantly being himself. Because of his way of living and sticking to himself he was the guest of many shows and the subject of many documentaries, manifesting his image as the fearless dandy, who'd rush into the casino, just to put everything he got on red, and leave, before the wheel even got to a halt.

He was born in Berlin, but his family fled from the Nazis to Israel, where he grew up. He is not of a "wealthy" heritage, his parents ended up owning a café in Haifa. He left school when he was 14 and later joined the army to fight with the Palmach, an Israeli elite unit, in the first israeli-arabaic war.

He then moved to Paris in the early 1950s, and worked all imaginable jobs, like musician, waiter, driver, extra for film, etc., while unsuccessfully waiting for an US-visum he applied for. In 1956 he heard that every former citizen of Berlin, living abroad, would get a "Begrüßungsgeld" (literally greeting gratification) of 6000 DM, appr. 15.000$ today, because of which he decided to go there.

With this money he opened up his first nightclub, the first in a long series of nightclubs with which he shaped the nightlife of Berlin in the 50s and 60s, stayed successfull during the 70s and 80s, and finally sold all of them, when the Berlin Wall fell.

These clubs allowed him to become a rich man, being an enthusiastic Rolls Royce driver, and owning much real estate in Berlin.

In all the time between, he made seven children, had the Stones piss in his Rolls Royce, and had countless affairs with famous and not so famous women.

Some of his talkshow appearances are legendary and he's a master in black knighting. He was for instance the guest in a show with the topic "Sex as a commodity - Should we ban prostitution?", when they talked about a flatrate-brothel, where you pay 75,- Euro and can fuck all you can fuck.

While another guest, a feminazi and editor of Germany's biggest femist's magazin, proclaimed that this is misogynistic, Eden said, that he isn't interested in what's going on inside those women. "I am interested in having fun, when and where I want."

This was answered by the feminist that every suitor is leaving a wound on the soul of the prostitute, he replied "What do I know where she's bleeding? The main point is that she's doing a good job."

He turned 85 just recently and this guy maybe is the blueprint of a successful Red Piller, nearing the ending of his life. So how is he doing?

Well, he's certainly become a saggy old crook, but the media is still interested in him, he's living in his mansion in the posh suburb of Berlin called Dahlem, he is still driving Rolls Royce, his girlfriend is 30 years old and he still doesn't give a fuck.

In an interview for his birthday he stated that "My girlfriend Brigit actually is too old already, but she's sweet, so she can stay."

He's still going out until dawn, stating that he just is a nightowl, and his last will states, that if he'll die during sex, the woman shall receive €300.000 as a gratification.

Oh. And he's still gaming whenever possible. That clip is five years old though.

I could well live with what he's got at that age.

Michele Fiore: Republican politician says 'hot little girls' should carry guns at university so they don't get raped

So your country is finally going full retard.

This is a very nice example how the femitards and SJWs are used by machiavellian lobbyists to pursue their agendas.

The results of a total bullshit study are thankfully picked up and spread by the leftist idiots until the point, where the public perceives it to be a fact, and then right-wing gun lunatics use this development to underline their demand to legalize guns on campuses.

The good thing is, that you don't have to worry about getting full consent from a girl you are fucking any more. You won't have to say that much to the police after a 9mm has been fired at your dome. The states will also save much money, since there won't be that many legal cases any more.

"Well, I was drunk, and after he started to penetrate my pussy I suddenly thought about my boyfriend and that made me feel bad. So I decided he was raping me and fired the whole clip at his face." -

"Self defense. Case closed."

What a great idea.

Analysis of modern DNA once again proves female hypergamy

<http://www.psmag.com/nature-and-technology/17-to-1-reproductive-success>

A recent analysis of modern DNA found a rise in the ratio of female reproduction to male reproduction about 50,000 years ago - roughly 4,000 to 8,000 years after the invention of agriculture.

Once upon a time, 4,000 to 8,000 years after humanity invented agriculture, something very strange happened to human reproduction. Across the globe, for every 17 women who were reproducing, passing on genes that are still around today—only one man did the same.

So in these times even the 80:20 rule did not hold. Only 6% of men overall succeeded to reproduce.

"It wasn't like there was a mass death of males. They were there, so what were they doing?" asks Melissa Wilson Sayres a biological anthropologist, hypothesizes that somehow, only a few men accumulated lots of wealth and power, leaving nothing for others. These men could then pass their wealth on to their sons, perpetuating this pattern of elitist reproductive success.

Are... are you suggesting that that wealth and power (read: status) determine a male's chances to reproduce, and are you suggesting further, that it wasn't like there were only 6% nice guys left, who the female population could choose from?

Then, as more thousands of years passed, the numbers of men reproducing, compared to women, rose again. "Maybe more and more people started being successful,"

But... but does this mean, that improving myself and striving to become more successful and raising my status could indeed be the better sexual strategy? I thought just being myself would be sufficient and guaranteed me a good chance to "find the right person"!

So much for what our DNA can tell us. This study, published last week in the journal Genome Research, can't directly account for why the dip occurred. Instead, the team members tried to think through other explanations. "Like was there some sort of weird virus that only affected males across the whole globe, 8,000 years ago?" Wilson Sayres asks

Dat hamster though.

Nature is a harsh taskmaster, but so, it seems, is human culture. Although the popular notion is that farming and settlement cushioned people against "survival of the fittest," this study shows that's not true. Something cultural happened 8,000 years ago that's marked us even today.

And it's still happening.

Gentlemen, you know what you've got to do. Don't let yourself be fooled by the illusion that you could harvest without having sown first and that there could be success without work. Hypergamy is real and in order to win at the game you've got to acknowledge its rules.

See you at the gym.

[Meta] Just a reminder: Stay aware of trolls and shills here

33 upvotes | April 2, 2015 | /r/askTRP | Link | Reddit Link

On my latest journey to find some amusement over at /r/TheBluePill I also found a post encouraging people to build themselves a fake RP-identity to "infiltrate" us.

I must admit that I admire the dedication to retardedness and the amount of time these people are willing to invest into us. If they would just show this endurance when dealing with their own lives, instead of battenning themselves with triple cheese pizza, ben & jerry's ice cream, soda pops and one apple, god knows how beautiful this world could be.

Anyways. I am not so much worried about the impact on the main sub and I also do not think that it will do too much to this sub either, but I'd give you some general advice nonetheless.

Foremost and most importantly: be very careful about your personal information and don't share it with anyone without exception. This includes members with high points here and ECs like me.

I am not as paranoid (and admittedly also a little bit too comfortable) as others here to have a separate account for TRP, but on the other hand I don't post very much on the rest of reddit and I am very careful on the internet overall. Even if you knew my full name, all you would be able to get was an empty facebook profile with a picture of me, and I've been on the internet for two decades now.

There isn't single reason why anybody would have to know your personal details.

I hope nobody of you is that retarded, but just as a reminder: No women will ever contact you on this sub, because she feels attracted to you.

Secondly trust your guts. If something feels like a troll attempt, it most likely is. Do not feed the trolls and don't start discussing our tenets with them. Why? Because of the same reason that you do not discuss the math behind Einstein's theory of relativity with a five year old. Don't waste your time.

I personally answer some of their OPs or comments nonetheless, if I feel that either newbs can learn something from it, or if their answers to genuine OPs are just blatantly wrong and might be pointing others in the wrong direction.

Thirdly never forget Tits or GTFO!. If a women is coming here and asking for genuine advice, help her. It's next to impossible for her to ask for advice without revealing her gender. However if it is clear, that she didn't bother to make any effort to find an answer for herself (like posting to RPW or reading the sidebar), or she is just here to question our core tenets or to feed her hamster, gently show her the door with a softly whispered: Tits or GTFO, bitch!

Fourthly remember that your time is valuable. When in doubt, don't spend it here, but at the gym or at any place where you can learn something. Winning an argument on the internet or getting any validation here will not get you anything in real life, but stroke your ego a little bit. Develop your stoicism and deliberately do not answer to comments here questioning your knowledge, sanity, or your persona. Refrain from justifying yourself or rebuking people. It's just not worth it.

With a sip from my can of mountain dew, I reflectively scratch my neckbeard and tip my fedora to you my kind sirs.

Meanwhile in Germany: Berlin district Friedrichshain-Kreuzberg bans public display of "sexist" ads

8 upvotes | April 28, 2015 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

About one year ago Berlin-Friedrichshain/Kreuzberg's district council voted for a ban of ad-posters displaying "sexist, discriminating and misogynistic" contents.

Since it is not that easy to furtherly define correctly what this could involve, a comitee had to be founded. It consisted of 12 women (and one man) who belong to organizations like "Terre des femmes"(a German organization) and "Frieda".

So one year forward and they publish a huge paper, consisting of eight pages - all filled with words- which contain their "Ten commandments" about what identifies "sexist, discriminating and misogynistic advertising", which I am honoured to present excerpts from(unfortunately I wasn't able to get ahold of the full paper, since it appears that they didn't publish it online up to now) to you:

1. [...] which communicates that women are indeed beautiful, but dumb, respectively not as strategic as heterosexual, healthy men.
2. [...] in which women are dressed sparely or very formfitting and portrayed smiling without a cause.
3. [...] in which the woman's position is below the man.
4. [...] which communicates certain role models. Applies to children as well, who are portrayed as stereotypical boys (colour blue, plays with technics) and girls (colour pink, plays with dolls).
5. [...] which communicates, that (age-related) skin change, overweight, body hair, etc. inevitably have to be changed to lead a happy life.
6. [...] which communicates that the decorative (sic!) woman is as purchasable as the product.
7. [...] which communicates that the portrayed woman is sexually aroused or is a object of lust for the masculine observer (i.e. ads for underwear, sports-, swimwear).
8. [...] for sex services. (Interestingly enough the council explicitly excempted this in their referendum one year ago. Prostitution is legal in Germany.)
9. [...] which portrays children, especially girls, in sexual poses and/or saucy clothes.
10. [...] which communicates that the the use of verbal respectively physical violence especially against women is tolerable.

Translation and emphazisation by me.

Yes, they are serious, and yes this is most likely to pass, and yes that district is known for being the pinnacle of Germany's SJW retardation.

Oh. I nearly forgot about one minor fact: We are talking about the astonishing amount of four (yes 4) advertising surfaces, which belong to the district here. The district has got ~275k citizens and an estimated (by me) one thousand or more private advertising surfaces. So I guess this was a valid investion which's results speak for themselves.

I am thinking about starting a German TRP-blog, since there isn't much material available besides some PUA-forums and not all German guys are able to comprehend English to a level which suffices for them to take part in discussions here. Reddit also isn't nearly as popular here as it is in the US.

Since I am truly a noob regarding that topic I am asking for your advice, which is the best platform in your opinion in terms of usability, customization options (I am quite fit with web development), and most importantly in regards of censorship.

Daniel Amneus - The Garbage Generation

Daniel Amneus - The Garbage Generation (PDF)

I just fell over this book while doing some research for my first blogpost. Although I do not despise the MRM, since their goals are just and it's only their way which is flawed, I am also not a follower of it, so the author's name and his book were new to me. The fact that I am not a US-citizen furtherly contributed to my ignorance.

In short Amneus lays out why for a civilization to function healthily and to be able to produce wealth, said civilization in general and female sexuality in particular must inevitably be controlled by the patriarch, a sexual double-standard inevitably has to be created and that matriarchial empowerment just results in female promiscuity and male irresponsibility.

It was refreshing to read something from somebody who relates to the MRM (or better: related - he died in 2003), which isn't watered down in the fear of confirming the common accusations against the manosphere as being misogynistic.

The view he propagates in The Garbage Generation can be easily branded to just be misogynistic, but his sober and focused reasoning and the overwhelming facts presented by him prove him right and confirm many RP-truths. En passant Amneus also refutes many blue pill and feminists point of views.

The annex on its own makes for one third of the book and would justify the read alone. It's a surprise bag full of quotes and references which prove many RP-principles to be true and a motivation for further research.

Recommended read.

Edit:

From a repection I just came by from <http://no-maam.blogspot.de/2006/12/garbage-generation.html>:

This book explains everything about the concepts of matriarchal destruction of civilization in a very detailed, intelligent and well documented manner. It details how patriarchy took humankind from matriarchal savagery to patriarchal civilization by "putting sex to work," as in, man's motivation to build society is the ensurance of his bond to his family and this is what motivated society out of the caves and into advancement.

With the advent of feminism, male paternity is not assured, nor is his involvement with his children guaranteed, which takes away his only motivation to succeed and makes him "short-term" in his outlook on life, much like women tend to be - and therefore he has no motivation to continue to succeed & plan (or even really work) - as is evident of men in the matriarchally ruled ghettos.

The feminist shithole of Sweden just got the princess it deserves

175 upvotes | June 13, 2015 | /r/TheRedPill | Link | Reddit Link

So Prince Carl-Philip just freshly married his Sofia.

The amount of confirmation for Red Pill principles involved is just too hilarious to not share.

Firstly, just in case that you aren't aware, Sweden has the reputation of being the country providing "most" equality in the world. This goes so far, that they invented a new gender neutral pronoun in the recent years, and there are even schools who forbid their pupils to use other pronouns than that.

Sweden also has one of the broadest definition for what consists to be rape. It's no coincidence that it was Sweden where Julian Assange got accused to be an evil wymyn abuser.

Anyways. Prince Carl-Philip (36) lived the life that dreams are made of and is infamous for his former lifestyle - that of a playboy. Not very surprising if you ask me.

Much more interesting is the personal history of his newly wed wife Sofia (30).

While studying at the University of Stockholm she financed herself by becoming a glamour model. She did her job so well, that she was voted "Miss Slitz 2004" by the "readers" of the magazine with the same name.

This brought her an appearance (and win) of the TV-show "Paradise Hotel", basically a Big Brother under palms, where contestants are sent to live in tropical luxury hotels.

Each week the contestants are paired to live in one room with another one for one week, with the expected results. She became infamous for a scene where she was kissing with Jenna Jameson and another one where she was caught topless while her male roommate gave her a massage.

From 2005 to 2008 she lived in NYC to study English and Business. Rumors have it, that she didn't even graduate highschool and the amount of focus her official CV puts on education, while it leaves out all the rest of her more than intersting past is kind of suspicious.

While she was in New York, she lived the life of a vivid high-quality party slut. Not only this, but she chose to proudly blog about her adventures on the cock carousel.

Unfortunately I wasn't able to dig out the original blog, since it was deleted shortly before her marriage, so I have to go with what information I was able to get from online magazines.

Sofia enjoyed the Institute of English and Business in New York immensely, blogging, "Bellyaches after every lesson from all our laughing fits. Our teacher had something as funny as "crazy foot" that is, cramps in his legs. We are talking violent spasms, we laughed so hard we almost got six-pack abs. Pleasure finds us even at the schoolbench". Other travel blog entries written by Sofia Hellqvist and fellow Paradise Hotel contestant Camilla Sundman, detail other experiences of living in New York, such as the "desperate" men who bought them jewelry and other gifts, their new mantra "Now I am perched on top Hehe, could bite off your penis", their electricity being turned off due to non-payment, drinking until they became sick and accepting rides from strangers.

Her roaster of alleged sex partners includes such familiar names like P.Diddy, Mark Wahlberg and Jonny Depp.

Since meeting the prince in 2010 she has tried to "soften" her image, although the royal family seems to be much more red pill than Carl-Philip and despises of her, with some of the members even trying to stay away from her as far as possible at events, in order to not be caught in the same photo with her.

Despite everything she still succeeded in letting herself be impregnated by Carl-Philip. Just before the gates of the wall close, one could assume.

While you might think that she is still good looking, you'd definitely need to add "for her age". I'd say this woman is hitting the wall real hard.

tl;dr: Former party slut and glamour model hits the wall and decides it's time to get what she deserves: becoming a real princess.

Edit: I am not a native speaker and I was made aware of the fact, that I might have used a wrong word. If you read "replacable", please substitute for "exchangeable". Exchangeable in the sense of: If you do not do it, another man will fill in the gap.

tl;dr: Although you are replaceable, the world is built upon men like you. The world relies on men like you. The world needs men like you.

With all the negativity and all the anger that comes with unplugging, one is easily tempted to forget about and disregard one simple, but important fact: You are a fucking man.

As you might have already guessed, it's time for some feelgood shit. The Weltschmerz visits me from time to time and today is one of these days.

For thousands of years men have shaped the world. It was and is us who've been mutilated and hurt - physically or mentally - and have been killed for some greater good. Millions of men gave their life for the promise that this world would become a better place because of their sacrifice.

It might be, that we let ourselves be too easily trapped by the sociopathic elites and it might not have been for the true better good most of the time, but at least we had a mission - a purpose. We did not die a meaningless death. We at least had an idea. The idea of leaving the world in a better state than we found it.

I do not even want to start about the countless other men, who didn't die in an armed conflict, but chose to submit themselves to the progression of humankind - all those scientists, philosophers and leaders, who devoted themselves to the bettering of the current state as it was and is, and who put themselves and their needs behind those

I am not an US-American, and to be honest I heavily despise of all your government's actions after WWII, but your founding fathers and all those who took part in the war for independence, are men I envy for everything they stood and stand for.

You might be heavily occupied with anger towards society and you might often experience the feeling of powerlessness. You might think that you are living in fucked up times. Take a minute (or five) and think what those guys experienced, and then model yourself on them.

They saw a wrong and they did not succumb to it. They thought of a solution and they implemented it and they changed their world to the better.

You might think that you are not be able to change the world for humankind, but you are surely able to make a change for you. For you and for all those who surround you. So fucking do it.

You are not powerless. We are not powerless. I could start and tell the story of my life all over again. How I have essentially been a homeless alcoholic bum. How I experienced my own disposability, lying in the gutter with people trying to not even give me enough attention to spit on me. But I do not have to. My story is probably the story of many of you.

You are disposable and you know it. To me you though, you are not not. You are a hero. You chose to leave the comfortable passenger's compartment and make your way to the cockpit, have a seat in the pilot's seat and finally take charge of your life.

Live by these standards. The world needs you. Don't let it down. Don't let me down. I need you. I don't give a fuck if you are a selfish bastard and only want to slay some pussy right now. I know that as you grow older, you'll also grow wiser and that you'll shape your surroundings for the better. So would you do me the favour and hit the gym hard, please? Would you please get rid of all that meaningless overhead which is occupying your life at the moment and fucking focus? Focus on becoming a better man?

Lessons learned: You are a man. You possess the powers required to shape yourself and your surroundings. Be thankful, don't waste them and make use of them. You are a man. Don't let yourself be ashamed of it. Be proud.

Happy 4th of July you fuckers.

A reminder of why the red pill is so important

While we were in "back to basics" mode and celebrated our extended exposure to the rest of reddit through subredditoftheday, a very sad study done by the National Center for Health Statistics was published.

Suicide rates among white males are not only still the highest of all, they also took a significant rise both relatively and absolutely.

While r.science is still wondering, why the suicide rate among white males rose while that of black males declined, and speculate about pressure in the working place and other strawmen, I think we all know what the true reasons are - hint: it's not our white male privileges.

White men in the Western world suffer from the loss of a positive male identity. They struggle to make sense of the world around them and how they feel about it on the inside, living in a constant cognitive dissonance they aren't able to solve for themselves.

Being taught to suppress parts of their nature, their so called "toxic masculinity" their desire to dominate, to suppress their aggressiveness and thirt to measure themselves with other males, rather than being taught how to canalyze all of those into doing something useful for both themselves and the people around them, took it toll.

The fact that we are fairly popular among reddit - bad PR is still PR - easily tempts us into projecting that popularity on the real world, which of course is way off of reality.

The vast vast vast majority of men is living a plugged-in life, believing in all the utter bullshit they have been and are still fed day by day by what we call "society".

Being told that being nice and patient is all they need and that success in life is just a byproduct of luck and not of hard work, those who fall and struggle to get up, simply cannot imagine a positive and happy future for themselves, since what they have been told it takes in order to succeed in life, didn't work for them.

Having been on the verge of leaving this world out of free will, although it was not TRP which gave me the initial push to better myself, it was this subreddit which ultimately allows me to lead an increasingly happier life with increasing life quality each day.

I finally made peace with my inner demons and the beast inside myself. I learned to accept my nature and still learn to make use of the traits I possess in order to one day be able to be the man I always pictured myself to be.

Other men deserve this chance as well - that is why we are so important.

I leave you with a cheesy quote:

When I let go of what I am, I become what I might be.

Why Women Go For Assholes

If you ever had your doubts if what we are telling you is actually the truth, you might be more inclined to believe it coming from a woman's mouth.

This is an article that was just published on vice in Germany. I translated it. Sorry in advance if the language is a little bit bumpy. I am still working to improve my skills in written English.

Although I do not agree with every single word, that article is surprisingly accurate, self-aware and honest, especially for coming from a woman's mouth, and I will leave it ucommented as it clearly speaks for itself.

For our German subscribers, the original article can be found archived under <http://archive.is/jgbmQ>. Enjoy.

Why Women Go For Assholes

The myth that women go for assholes is widely spread and that's got its reasons.

One thing beforehand: Of course - and I am probably talking for nearly all women here - we do not like to be treated badly. Discrimination, let alone violence, is a no-go in any interpersonal relationship, especially if the physically weaker is the one attacked.

Marriage - if that is even the particular woman's wish - we want with prince charming. Prince charming is characterized by being loyal, good looking, protecting and loving, will make for a good father and can fix and set everything right.

So why do women go for assholes?

We love to conquer passively. To bewitch. We want to be liked. Paradoxically a man is many times more interesting, if he pretends to not be interested in us too much. The bad boy image is sexy. Even as a little girl I fell in love with the villains and not the superheroes.

Because assholes - or better: bad boys - are experienced. They have experienced things and aren't in need of waddling behind a woman. They are well-build, overly confident, take what they want and know exactly what we want. Bad boys do not live by the rules, create ones by and for themselves, oftentimes come off a little bit arrogant, especially if they are attractive. This attractiveness opens doors. We know that possible competitors desire him as well and long for his validation.

His validation is the push for our ego.

Furthermore we have a natural instinct, which leaves us in the misbelief, to be able, as opposed to our competitors, to break the hard core and to save the prince charming behind the sexy facade. The majority of us aren't as naive as that anymore though and know that it is a futile attempt. Even if a guy with asshole-like traits will comply and commit to a serious relationship, he will sooner or later be caught between the thighs of another one.

He is living dangerously, smokes, loves the nightlife, drinks, drives a big Harley and loves no women besides his mother, which most probably spoiled him until his 25th birthday. It has got a pornous (is that a word? the translator) impact, to sit behind him - the humming motorcycle between the legs, driving with topspeed on the motorway - having the arms wrapped around his jacked chest.

The asshole is really good in bed and knows it as well. If he for example is in a relationship and you are the one who is used to cheat with, you better not believe that he will stay faithful to a possible new relationship. He won't and that's what makes for the asshole.

I claim that every woman gets into one of these men at least once in her life. A holiday club animator, a bouncer, a barkeeper, or a businessman. A man who knows how to dress and act in order to get off, and is acting strategically for it. A man who's got the intuition to know what's morally right or condemnable but is widely ignoring it.

That's what gives him the ability to give us everything - and we sense that.

Such players will barely get in touch, what makes the feeling if they do it even better. If they don't get back at all, you have to let go. They are great as long as we are holding the reins and are able to let go in time. Interesting for a limited time, good for the ego, nice on pictures and superb in bed.

Women go for assholes. For good sex, for long nights, for fun, for danger and for looking up to him.

If you are the type of man, who isn't looking for the woman of your life, but is looking to get as far as possible with as many as possible, you should not give up the good things which make for you, but be concentrating more on yourself - on what you want and what you enjoy.

tl;dr: Just do what you are told here. Read the fucking sidebar and act accordingly.

As some of you might now, I am foremostly doing my shifts right at the front, playing the mailbox aunt for noobs, answering their questions, which mostly revolve around their unicorns, being too lazy to fucking follow one simple advice (Go lift, asshat!), or dealing with the toughest draw of them all - being Indian and wanting to bang blonde bitches from the USA.

One of the biggest problems I face there is another one though:

Guys who downplay, shame or directly deny the importance of having uncommitted sexual relationships with women (e.g. "Spinning Plates") in the process of unplugging.

The recent influx of motherfuckers who act as unicorn hunters, "MGTOW" or MRA support group feel-good pussies (I do not know which is the worse fate to be honest) in the mainsub just underlines the need of somebody outright telling you:

You will never be fully unplugged, if you have not held a soft harem for an extended period of time and experienced true female nature first hand.

Nothing else will give you the same insights.

Not having raged on the toilet over reading about some cunt getting the pussy pass in a courtroom. Not laying in the gras with your girlfriend, arguing about what forms the clouds resemble. Not sitting in your basement, typing flaming hateposts about 3rd wave feminists for your fellow fatties with your cheetoh crusted fingers. And most certainly not coming here, trying to shame Alpha Chads for chadding all they can.

This sub's first and most important purpose has always been to get guys in a physical and mental state to be ready to fully blossom in their masculinity and go out and do what they are meant to do: impregnate as many human females as they possibly can. Well, not literally most certainly.

Everything else is just by-products.

MGTOW, relationships or becoming the saviour of all men are endgoals and not "the way".

Especially the self-proclaimed MGTOW get me on the fence on a regular basis. Just FYI:

You cannot be MGTOW if you do not possess the capabilities and knowledge of a pussy-slayer. Sitting at you computer at 350 lbs, and deciding that you are going your own way from now on, between chugging a gallon of Mountain Dew and shouting at your mom while jacking off to midget trannies pissing at each other, is just the same as dying of thirst in the desert and proclaiming that you'll never drink water again from now on.

When the first MGTOW arose, they rose from the crowd of Chads, not angry Incels, who just came to the conclusion, that pussy is not worth the hassle and following your mission should be your priority. However they knew one thing very well: Being in shape, taking care of your body and your mind, still was the most important thing of them all.

The mere nature of a man going his own way is an instant pussy humidifier. He is taking care of himself, he is confident, he is following his own rules and he's got goals in life and is assertive in reaching them. Probably the exact opposite of what many of the "2nd wave MGTOW" are.

You narcissistic serial monogamists are following closely though. "Muh. I do not date sluts. Muh." How the fuck will you even know what type of bitch you are dealing with after meeting her two times and then throwing your commitment at her?

Founding a dynasty is one of the possible endgames of the unplugged man. However wandering through life with the goal of finding your unicorn will never satisfyingly lead you there.

In order to be able to carefully select a future mate, having dealt with many prospects who do not qualify is essential. Having wife's grope your crotch, whispering in your ears that it's such a pity that their husband does not have such muscles or having somebody's "innocent" girlfriend drive 40 miles at night just to suck your dick, swallow your load and drive back home, to lay at his side in his bed, are pretty eye-opening experiences and just reading about them is not the same as having them do it for you.

Let aside that you will not know what type of woman you are dealing with, until you have fucked her for the very least amount of six to twelve months without offering her exclusivity. Women are wearing different masks for different people and you will not be able to meet the women behind all of those in two weeks of vanilla sexing her and throwing your most precious good - your commitment - at her at the very first moment that represents itself to you.

Thridly we have the type of feel-good activists who come here, desperately trying to force their own moral standards on everybody, while they never truly put them to a test themselves.

Not being anywhere near the state of being able to pull quality pussy or having ever been in the situation where they were Chad, and had a good looking married woman drop on her knees in front of them, desperately trying to get their cock out, yet they absolutely know what "is not true alpha behaviour". What the fuck would you know about that, you bad Paul Elam carbon copy?

All of the above archetypes of commenters share one, maybe the most annoying trait: They cannot withstand their urge to tell people, especially myself and fellow Endorsed Contributors, that we cannot possibly know the right way. Oftentimes followed by some variation of "How could you have become an EC."

I got news for you: Yes. We do indeed know better than you and there is a fucking reason why we got that flair and you have not, and it is not because we meet and suck each others dicks on a regular basis, as you so non-chalantly like to assume.

Lastly, there is the guys I do not despise of, but who need to be told:

Less thinking and more doing motherfuckers.

You will not be able to get good at sexual relationships by avoiding to coming close to having one. If you have read the sidebar material and maybe one book about game, like i.e. "Models" by Mark Manson, you know enough in order to succeed with women.

You don't need to study the equivalent to the material needed to get a bachelor in evolutionary psychology "to understand the nature of women".

Get in shape, fire up tinder and find out for yourself what kind of shallow, boring, iloyal, impulsive, cheap, cheating, self-entitled, superficial, annoying assholes most of the bitches out there are.

tl;dr: Shut up, bang bitches, be awesome, stop annoying me with your horseshit.

Well, hello you little fuckers. Auntie vandaalen, askTRP's favourite mailbox slut with some fresh advice for all you newbies out of there.

This time we are going to talk about a non-sexual topic, at least if you are not a sick bastard:

Street Fighting.

There recently was a post here, which made me think a post on this topic is justified. In short, two guys go to a concert. One of them paid $140 for some chicks to join them. They are all having good fun, until one of us dared to show up and started gaming that pussy by grinding her ass. OP got so mad about it, that he started a fight with the guy, which ended in a huge brawl. OP's crew won. So everything's fine, no? No!

First off let me start by telling you guys this: if you are spending $140 on a girl that you are not fucking regularly and who is behaving exceptionally well like a trained dog, you are a chump. No. You are a retarded chump.

OP's buddy tried to buy that pussy and he miserably failed. Next time better take that money to a pronounced whore and get what you paid for. Then, when a Chad joins the scene and all his investment consist of being fun to be around and making some jokes, OP loses his shit and jumps in as the bro-knight.

OP then goes on to hamster away the fact that this was a retarded decision by trying to justify it as having stood up for something - his friend. Take good note that his friend obviously didn't care enough to stand up for himself. OP did not only mate-guards, he mate-guarded for his chump friend. He has got no fucking idea what he could have gotten himself into.

I have been training MMA for the last three years and I am a heavyweight (I should be an LHW admittedly). This alone means that there are not many people on this planet who pose a challenge to me in an 101 empty hand fight. You will never see me getting into a street fight over a dick measuring contest though.

The only way I could see this situation play out in a way that I would jump in, would be if the chick tried to push Chad away and he would go on to harrass her.

And I have got serious reasons not to do so.

You never know what the guy is capable of Nowadays it's not so easy to tell who has got some real fighting skills. MMA-gyms are filled with nerdy looking lanky students. If you saw Nate Diaz on the streets, probably baked as a Rastafari (minus his scars and cauliflower), would you think that he is one of the most dangerous guys on the planet? Probably not.

The best possible outcome would be that that guy is a chilled BJJ dude and will even let you live if you tap.

You never know what the guy's pockets contain

I learned this the hard way many years ago, before I even thought of laying in a cage with sweaty men in underpants. I was at a dive bar after work, when I was still working as a chef de cuisine.

There was a guy a couple of meters away whom I hadn't seen there before and I was a frequent customer, since that bar was just across the street of the place I was working at.

As already mentioned, I am fairly big and heavily tattooed, so guys often think I am down for a fight. That particular guy tried to provoke me for a consecutive two hours. I mainly deflected him with humor, but at one point I just got fed up and told him: "OK. That's it. Chug, pay and leave. Now." I knew the owner pretty well, so that was no problem.

The guy smirked and responded with: "Well. We can meet outside if you want." I got up from the bar stool and approached him. I didn't even want to escalate to violence but to make myself a little bit more clear.

I noticed afterwards, that the guy had been hiding his right hand in the pocket all night. When I was about one meter away, he suddenly pulled out a can of pepper spray, extended his arm and I got a full load into both eyes and my neck from about half a meter away. If you haven't had pepper spray used against you, you cannot fathom what it feels like. I got instantly put into primal mode and all I wanted was to get that shit out of my system. The only relief was after twenty minutes, when the ambulance arrived and they put some gel in my eyes. Took six days until I couldn't feel it anymore on my skin after taking a shower. It really is a bitch.

But I still was lucky. Why? Well that could also have been a knife. A knife will even make a 105lbs female a threat to your life.

Turned out, that guy bought that spray that very day and told his friends at the soccer game that he was going to try it that night. Which brings me to my next point:

You do not know the mental state of the other guy

Anybody who works in a sanatorium can attest that lunatics possess the wildest powers. But even a guy who will just not give up will pose a serious threat to anybody. He will make use of everything he can and "rules" (let aside there are no rules in a street fight anyways) or "honor" don't mean shit to him.

He will bite (I personally know a guy who bit a bouncer's finger off in a fight him against three bouncers), he will scratch, he will poke your eyes, he will even bite your genitals if he can.

What are you, an untrained person, do against that? My coach will let guys like that "born fighters" as he calls them, go fight amateur MMA without too much training, because he knows that they got the necessary mindset and brutality.

Will you cripple or kill that guy? Would you even be able to go through with it, if you knew how to?

Which brings me to the next point:

You could kill or cripple your opponent

Even if you win such a confrontation, what happens if you accidentally cripple or kill the guy? You know what it will look like, when police arrives? There is one guy standing and another dead or seriously injured. Do you think they will give a fuck about what you have to say about it? They are only interested in your side in order to be able to make a case against you out of it. Everything you say will be used against you.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=d-7o9xYp7eE>

Depending on how things go, you might end up going to jail and having your life fucked up. I really know a guy who came out of jail, went to a party to have a couple of drinks and celebrate. He got into an altercation and merely pushed the guy.

They were on a stage, the guy stumbled backwards and tripped. He fell on a ledge neck first. Neck snapped. He died there.

Guy a was arrested that very evening and got eight years for manslaughter.

So as you see, there are many valid reasons to avoid a fight at all cost. I didn't even adress the fact that you don't know how many and what type of friends the other guy has around the corner.

Do you think it is worth getting killed or crippled yourself, or having your life fucked up over something laughable as "honour" or "pride" or (even more pathetic) pussy? I don't think so.

In my opinion there is only one reason to fight: Your or other people's life or well-being at stake. That is all. Unless, you are doing it for fun (or fame). Which brings me to my last point:

What do?

Fucking go and train MMA if you want to measure yourself with other dudes and want to fight. You will not only benefit from it because you will get to know many many really good dudes and alpha blueprints, but you will actually not have to fight anymore.

People will sense that you are danerous, because you will emit it by the way you move, look and talk. I guarantee you that I could go out with any girl and nobody would ever grind on her ass if he knows that she is there with me.

I had some fights before I started training, but I never had any streetfights or self-defense situations since then.

I also can't be bothered anymore. Actually I'd consider it boring to fight somebody who doesn't know how to fight and so will you. You will want to measure yourself to guys who are better than you, until you get better than them.

Do yourself a favour and don't go and train some pseudo bullshit like Krav Maga or Wing Chung, or such (and please spare me the whining about how lethal they are and other bullshit). If MMA is too tough for you, at least make it BJJ.

Other posts have been made about the uncountable other positive things they will introduce to your life, so I am going to spare you from that.

I am sure I forgot about some more issues. Let me know in the comments.

Law 5: So Much Depends on Reputation – Guard it with your Life

- Robert Greene, The 48 Laws of Power

Hello my little retards.

AskTRP's most favourite agony uncle checking back in from the front. Although oscillating between states of catatonic disbelief and holy rage, caused by the PTSD, that having to deal with massive loads of retarded horseshit on a daily basis, gave me, I'll try to unravel yet another mystery of the angsty female mind for you.

A recent post from a user titled "Sending your girlfriend's nudes to your friends, is it a bad thing?" reminded me of a piece I planned on writing for a long time.

As the title implies, the user got worked up over some girl's bullshit and subsequently send some nudes said girl had taken for him, to one of his friends, as some form of retaliation. After cooling down a little bit he now was struck by doubts that this was not a moral thing to do.

Exactly how any experienced user might suspect, the moral-fagging and white-knighting immediately started, with people completely missing the not so obvious point, that while it indeed was a bad decision, it wasn't bad because of the morality involved, but because the guy might face some serious consequences from this, especially if his selection of sex partners is only half as retarded as his decision making, and he ended up with a crazy woman.

Get the following tattooed onto your retina:

To a woman her reputation is her precious. It is worth more than your life.

Once you understood and accepted this, many female behavioural patterns will become clearer and make sense to you and what is oftentimes just brushed away with "females are opportunists and illoyal" can be explained with more depths.

As oftentimes you have to put things into the context of the times, when we were living in small tribes in rough circumstances, where having access to resources and protection could mean the difference between living and dying.

Provided that youth, beauty and health are within normal parameters there isn't much more that a woman can bring to the negotiäten table besides her pussy, her uterus and her reputation on how easy she will grant males access to them, since the latter will also allow prospects to draw conclusions about her fidelity in committed relationships.

So a damage in reputation will mean a decrease of SMV to her at best and the total nuclear destruction of it at worst, maybe even leading to be cast out by the other females or even the group as whole.

In consequence she will fight like a cornered animal - ruthless and to the death - in order to defend it, but will also try to avoid ending up in those situations in the first place, exhausting all possibilities to get herself out of the line of fire.

Although fake rape accusations oftentimes are rooted in the crazy, they might also often be caused by exactly this matter. The example that many users around here might know (or not) is Patrice O'Neal's Greatest Story Ever Told on Radio. If you haven't listened to it, stop reading here and do it right now. Well worth the time.

On the lower end of the spectrum, we have a basic concept of game: isolation. You know that you should always isolate a prospect from her group, before trying to escalate. Again her valuing her reputation is the reason why you must. She must not assume that her group will know that she engaged in sexual activities with you. Which by the way is also the reason why women like to go on trips to "find themselves" (some juicy strange dick).

There is also every now and then the common question at askTRP about how one could get about being in a committed relationship where the female partner is staying faithful to her partner, although she knows that he is having pussy on the side.

Apart from other factors involved and things to keep an eye on, always respecting her reputation and never getting her into a situation where she will have to admit that she is allowing your "infidelity" to her friends and family, is one of the most important.

I am sure you will see many more applications of this rule once you keep watching out for it.

I'll be happy to hear them and your personal thoughts on this in the comments.

23% of middle-age men in Norway are now childless, compared to 13% of women

23% of middle-age men in Norway are now childless, compared to 13% of women

94 points • 303 comments • submitted 8 months ago * by Reven311 to r/PurplePillDebate

Fertility figures from Statistics Norway show that fewer and fewer men in Norway are fathering children.

The share of men who are childless at age 45 rose from 14 percent in 1985 to 23 percent in 2013.

The share of women who had not become mothers by age 45 increased from 10 percent in 1985 to 13 percent in 2013.

So to put this in perspective, women's childlessness has only risen by 30%, but men's childlessness has risen by a dramatic 64% in comparison (2 to 1). Or if we purely look at the raw percentage increase it's 3 to 1.

And apparently according to the article most of it is involuntary.

Men want to have children too

Why do so many men in Norway never have kids?

The development is paradoxical:

Norway is one of the countries in the Western World with the highest birth rates. More children are born per capita than nearly anywhere else.

Norway is also known to be a vanguard country with regard to equal rights for women and men.

“Both men and women in Norway answer in studies that having children is an important part of life. Few men or women consciously decide against having them. The desire to have kids has not changed,” says An-Magritt Jensen.

Norway is an interesting case, because it's basically like an egalitarian dream come true, basically the model they want for America. But people (mainly men) are increasingly not able to meet their most basic desires in life.

Jensen, a sociology professor at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology (NTNU) in Trondheim, concludes that something else must have changed in Norwegian society.

She has conducted research on this issue for several years, especially through interviews with men.

“Expectations of Norwegian men have rocketed,” explains Jensen.

When women do give birth to children, it turns out that it can often be with men who have kids from previous relationships.

This is really important to recognize, and she should be commended for courageously stating the obvious.

“When Norwegian men from the working class have children, it is more often by chance,” explains Jensen.

She stresses that one often finds the most delighted and devoted fathers in this group.

So income seems to be a key driver of men's lower chances of reproducing in our modern egalitarian world, but that's probably not the whole story.

What actually happens often is that men who are already fathers get recycled.

Nevertheless, she ascertains that feminism and equal opportunity ideology have had an unequal impact on men and women in Norway.

“In other Western countries too there are men who never become fathers. But the proportion is especially high in Norway.”

What this basically means is with near perfect egalitarianism about 25% of the male population is simply obsolete (at least in a biological sense), and that number may continue to rise for the foreseeable future. Men have always been the disposable gender, so this is just a reversion back to our roots prior to the advent of agriculture, which precipitated a desire/need to promote monogamy to extract beta male productivity for economic/societal gains. But our modern world simply doesn't need the bottom 25% anymore. They're essentially a waste of space. Females have re-established a sexual dynamic via education and birth control that favors their reproductive strategies again after centuries of repression.
