

Are Boy Scouts making blue pill boys and turning dads blue?

May 11, 2016 | 1 upvotes | by nooomaam

As a husband and father who has noticed a great deal of feminine influence over the boys in the school pack, I am taking it upon myself to turn the tide. I'm looking to see what y'all think.

Archived from theredarchive.com

Comments

bornredd • 3 points • 11 May, 2016 05:49 PM

I just put my boy into sports instead. It wasn't worth the battle.

nooomaam[S] • 2 points • 11 May, 2016 06:08 PM

I've got both going on.

I'm just wondering if scouts is a BP institution, hiding as a beacon of masculinity.

[deleted] • 2 points • 11 May, 2016 06:18 PM

In my experience it wasn't. Are you referring to cub scouts? Ages 6-11 there may be a lot of mom's helping out. 12-18 it was all men. My best friends all to this day are Eagle Scouts with me and we all follow TRP.

nooomaam[S] • 2 points • 11 May, 2016 07:16 PM

I'm an eagle. And am starting to follow TRP.

Just realizing there's seems to be alot of BP & "rationalization" in cubs.

Maybe it's cub scouts.

Thanks for the insight.

bornredd • 1 point • 11 May, 2016 07:55 PM

It was very RP when I was a kid, but the packs local to me are definitely not anymore.

Shit, I was the only father who knew how to use a knife for anything beyond cutting food.

starista • 1 point • 11 May, 2016 09:54 PM

If you're Catholic there's also the Squires, which is all men-led and for boys led by the Knights of Columbus.

Hunter2isit • 1 point • 11 May, 2016 11:49 PM

Nature doesn't take pity, it just gives you the cards and you are left to make the best of it. Prepare yourself for the worst because no one else will. When you are given a shitty situation, figure it out. Know how to put out a forest fire that you will inevitability start.

Lastly, know how to tie a girl to the bed.

That's what I learned, not sure what they are teaching now.