

#IfAllMenDisappearedForaDay

August 8, 2021 | 235 upvotes | by Skeleton_Warrior

This is actually trending right now on Twitter as I write this. It's terrible how blatant misandry and denigration of males in society is seen as acceptable and equality. I can only imagine the uproar if the hashtag had women, there'd be straight-up rioting. This is blatant sexism and I'd feel the same way if the hashtag had women in it, sexism and discrimination is wrong either way. But misandry is never acknowledged or condemned nearly as much (if it all) and sometimes is not just acceptable but even celebrated and encouraged. Much more needs to be done to crack down on misandry and see to it it's as condemned as misogyny.

Archived from theredarchive.com

Comments

MastermindX • 55 points • 9 August, 2021 01:55 AM

When I saw that I thought it was an anti-feminist hashtag, because we all know what would happen.

psilorder • 13 points • 9 August, 2021 06:51 AM

Yeah, pretty sure i've seen the concept several times on MensRights as an argument for why they wouldn't really want to "kill all men".

....Or maybe it was just "if men stopped working for a day".

a-man-from-earth • 20 points • 9 August, 2021 02:30 AM

That's a good take.

a-man-from-earth • 165 points • 8 August, 2021 10:28 PM

If all men disappeared, society would come to a screeching halt and chaos would ensue. Their blindness is staggering.

lorarc • 98 points • 8 August, 2021 11:57 PM

Just like if all women would disappear. Or all lower class people. Or any other big enough group.

CrypticMind24 • 23 points • 9 August, 2021 04:55 AM

But these tags are not trending..are they?

a-man-from-earth • 19 points • 9 August, 2021 06:18 AM

Now that's patriarchy for you!

WhyDoYouBanMeImRight • 5 points • 10 August, 2021 01:30 AM amazing how gynocentric the patriarchy is, isnt it?

a-man-from-earth • 68 points • 9 August, 2021 12:00 AM

Indeed. Failing to recognize the bigotry in that is failing at adulting.

genkernels • 25 points • 9 August, 2021 03:04 AM*

There's a difference between the catastrophe that a women's strike would be and the catastrophe that a men's strike would be. It's an entirely different level.

Xakura • 9 points • 9 August, 2021 11:25 AM

Maybe I am just getting bored or tired of seeing so much hypocrisy on social media, but I kind of just want this strike to happen.

blueleaf78 • 6 points • 11 August, 2021 12:39 AM

Feminists actually tried doing "IfAllWomenDisappearedForADay" in my country a few years ago to show how valuable women were in the workplace (basically women going on strike for a day).

If anything, it really set back the perceived value of women in the workplace. To be fair, I think it was mainly feminists who attended, so it wasn't representative of the average woman. But the long story short is that although there was a lot of talk about it in the weeks prior, nobody really noticed when the day came. Feminists had also been pushing for years the idea that women were unfairly underpaid, and a majority of the public believed it, but that idea became a lot less popular after that day.

Oh, and it seems every organization thought their big day had come, so they all printed flyers explicitly showing their misandrist goals and beliefs, which to this day still makes great ammunition to use against them.

But I'd love to see an actual day where men go on strike. The tolerance for blatant misandry is still far too high and society needs a reminder of what men contribute, often at great cost and risk to themselves.

Xakura • 2 points • 11 August, 2021 03:32 AM

It pretty much showed the lack of value that radical feminists had yes. Any professional egalitarian feminist would go to work and support her male colleagues (and support the MRM as well). Just because women might have more problems (as far as we know) doesn't mean men's issues are invalid.

I really wish they'd just rebrand feminism as equalism or something similar. Most women feel uncomfortable calling themselves a feminist ever since the movement sold itself out and a cult called itself by the same name.

rman1001 • 4 points • 9 August, 2021 03:05 PM

This might actually be a good idea. Get men to just stop going into work, stop contributing to society, for just one day. A general strike, maybe one day a month, until a commission is appointed to address men's issues - suicide rate, earlier deaths, greater incarceration rate, more workplace deaths, treatment in family court system, etc. I think it might work.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 10:48 PM

You can also add to that male victims of domestic violence and rape/sexual assault and harassment having next to no help or resources or organizations to help them (and how female offenders often get a pass), how boys struggle terribly in the school system due to special and favorable treatment given to female students and how as a result the majority of dropouts tend to be male, and let's not forget how any man can be falsely accused of sexual misconduct and have his life and image forever tarnished beyond repair even if his accuser has no evidence of wrongdoing; all because of the "believe women" mantra feminists preach.

ellipticcurve5 • 1 point • 11 August, 2021 08:00 PM

Yeah, a male analogue to this.

TheRabbitTunnel • 1 point • 13 August, 2021 08:09 AM

These people are living in a fantasy.

Peepo_sativum • 18 points • 9 August, 2021 07:50 AM

The kind of woman who likes that trend smugly imagines a day without men as a vacation for herself, regardless of how much trouble she'd still have to deal with from female racists, ableists, classists, xenophobes, homophobes, transphobes, rapists, murderers, and so on. It is especially... interesting... to see women who think they're innocent of committing any misogyny themselves. It's a weird combination of narcissistically believing one's group superior and also being naively over-trusting of it. Kind of like chauvinism?

Given the main themes in it, I imagine that victims of female-on-female rape probably don't like that hashtag either.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 10:39 PM

You mention that evil women also exist, feminists will always blame their imaginary patriarchy for the actions of evil women. They'd rather die than ever admit evil women exist and are evil of their own free will, not because they're under the influence of a non-existent patriarchy. I swear these feminists are as bad and ignorant as anti-mask/anti-vaccination people.

Peepo_sativum • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 10:54 PM

Um, that's more dramatic and extreme than I'd go for. Besides there being lots of different kinds of feminism, none of those kinds invented the problem. There have been women blaming all the world's woes on men since long before any form of modern feminism existed. Once the first waves started, they just picked up and carried along with them the baggage that was already there. Blaming everything on "feminism" implies that once upon a time society was free from all of these problems, but it never has been. Feminism just hasn't fixed the problems that aren't convenient for it, and nothing else has complemented it effectively enough to fix that issue yet.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 10:58 PM

Thing is the feminist movement as a whole nowadays is undeniable an anti-male movement and ideology, and feminists always preach how a world run and dominated by women would achieve peace and all of the world's problems would be solved, and anytime women commit wrongdoing it's due to men. Feminism doesn't solve any problems, it just adds to them.

Peepo_sativum • 0 points • 9 August, 2021 11:03 PM

Go outside and touch grass dude. Think of some poor girl far away who got knocked up by her uncle and has to marry him because she's now considered his property. Surely the most basic form of feminism would her at least help her? What are you even trying to accomplish with your absurdly absolutist anti-feminist ranting? What problems are you solving with that?

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 11:12 PM

What does that have to do with anything or the original post in question? I'm pointing out how the logic and ideology behind this terrible and insanely anti-male hashtag is the basis for modern feminism and how it adds to gender inequality. It isn't feminism that would help the girl in question you're bringing up, it's a combination of social workers and law enforcement that would come to her aid and get her justice and see to it her abusive uncle is locked away.

Peepo_sativum • 0 points • 9 August, 2021 11:24 PM

Your definition of "feminism" is bizarrely extreme and detached from reality. To conclude this interaction, I repeat, please touch some grass.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 11:29 PM

I don't see how so when time and time again, the feminists of today have displayed blatant female supremacy and have never done anything to advocate for male issues, despite claiming they want equality. Things like this hashtag are just one of several examples.

Deadlocked02 • 48 points • 9 August, 2021 01:23 AM

It must be so comfortable to be a feminist and expect men's rights advocates to call out the misogyny inside the movement (or even in other movements) while you can just dodge the criticism about the misandry of regular feminists and of feminists with institutional power by saying they have nothing to do with you. So, so comfortable and convenient. Only take, never give. That should be their motto.

baggedmilkenjoyer • 13 points • 9 August, 2021 07:38 AM if all men dissappeared, even for as little time as a single day, the world would more than likely collapse. im not saying this is for men only. imagine half of the whole world dissappearing all of a sudden. these people live in a sick utopia and their mentally sick place they call reality

sakura_drop • 31 points • 9 August, 2021 12:53 AM

This is actually trending right now on Twitter as I write this. It's terrible how blatant misandry and denigration of males in society is seen as acceptable and equality.

I mean, it's tame compared to #KillAllMen which has trended numerous times over the last few years - I think when I searched on the other sub I found threads dating back six years - which I believe garnered disturbingly high amounts of postings or retweets or whatever it's called.

Neveah_Hope_Dreams • 9 points • 9 August, 2021 07:36 AM

I was just talking about it on r/MensRights as they posted a screenshot of the hashtag.

I was just saying how it would expose how many misandrists there are in the world so we know who to show disgust and disdain to.

nocturnefox • 65 points • 8 August, 2021 11:42 PM*

Yes, as a trans man, I haven't felt any anxiety in all these situations all these situations all women or people born female experience. Then when I tell feminists this I get told in a very condescending way "well maybe you don't but most women and girls do".

Edit:

It's at least a little encouraging I'm seeing comments looking at it how they would be upset/worried/lose their minds or the reality is different than what most these people posting think it would be

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 50 points • 8 August, 2021 11:54 PM

And as usual, they ignore the fact men are also victims and have their own anxieties and that women also commit violent acts. They live in their own world cut off from reality. For all we constantly hear about women having to fear for their safety, men still make up the majority of homicide victims.

lorarc • 43 points • 9 August, 2021 12:16 AM

Men are primary victims of violence in nearly every category, yes in most cases at hands of another men. But some groups think that some victims don't deserve any empathy just because of how they were born.

dr_pepper02 • 6 points • 9 August, 2021 09:11 PM

But also female proxy violence is an issue they like to ignore. There's a long history of women using power of the state or other well meaning but sometimes naive men to exact violence against those they're opposed to.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 30 points • 9 August, 2021 12:22 AM

And failing to acknowledge the fact women can still be violent and commit crimes. Violence is violence, and just as harmful regardless of who's doing and receiving it. Even if men commit more the fact there's plenty of women who still do it still can't be ignored. Which feminists always do. Feminists are never willing to acknowledge or admit women can be evil as well.

lorarc • 17 points • 9 August, 2021 12:31 AM

I grew up in bad neighborhood, while it's true that young men were the ones that chose the life of crime they always had women around them that knew exactly what was going on and benefited from it. I would say that if women stopped dealing with criminals then crime rate would fall drastically.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 20 points • 9 August, 2021 12:33 AM

This whole warped way of thinking they have about men disappearing from the world plays into their delusion of how women running the world and in more positions of power would lead to world peace and solve all of the world's problems. Which is an unbelievably ignorant and unrealistic way of looking at things.

a-man-from-earth • 10 points • 9 August, 2021 12:58 AM Especially looking at women who historically have been in positions of power. They are no strangers to anything human.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 13 points • 9 August, 2021 01:24 AM

I know I sure wouldn't want a woman like say, Marjorie Greene, in anything resembling a position of power or authority. I shudder to think of what someone like her would do if she had the means.

Mahameghabahana • 6 points • 9 August, 2021 01:35 AM

When Victoria came to India for her ceremony as the new empress of india, nearly 8 million people died in Deccan region from a famine. Yeah what a great leader that woman was.

Skeleton_Warrior[S] • 8 points • 9 August, 2021 01:44 AM

Knowing feminists they doubtlessly blame the imaginary patriarchy on her failure as a leader. When you're a radical, delusional feminist blaming the (non-existent) patriarchy is what you do.

Algoresball • 6 points • 9 August, 2021 01:36 AM

Young men from poor backgrounds turn to crime to earn the money that women demand they have in order to be loved omegaphallic • 5 points • 9 August, 2021 09:54 AM

If all men disappeared almost all women would die, men do too many hard, dangerous, and vital, jobs with nit enough qualified to replace them.

Mightyduck416 • 4 points • 9 August, 2021 01:22 PM

Maybe there on to something could we organize an all males strike for a day all men take a day off from all the extremely essential jobs that we do that get no praise let them see what would really happen it
#allmendisappearedforaday

MelissaMiranti • 20 points • 8 August, 2021 10:13 PM

I think Y:The Last Man was a pretty good look at the chaos that would happen without men.

IoSonCalaf • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 02:16 AM

What platform is that on?

MelissaMiranti • 6 points • 9 August, 2021 03:16 AM

I read it in comic compilation form at my local library some years ago.

International_Crew89 • 1 point • 12 August, 2021 01:40 AM

Actually this has been recently made into a mini-series. Look for it on Hulu.

MelissaMiranti • 1 point • 12 August, 2021 03:39 AM

Yep, looking forward to seeing it one day.

Apexander1 • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 02:05 PM

TBH looking through the hashtag, seems like most people responding to it also think its stupid.

skier69 • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 02:21 PM

I'm pretty sure there was a reverse hashtag or concept (there was some British show where all the women from a small town left for a period of time) and it was framed as « the men are complete bumbling useless idiots without women; thank god we have women because otherwise the men would burn down their houses trying to boil water. » well if the men of that town are really that incompetent, then clearly society (ie, educators and caregivers) has done boys a disservice by not raising them to be self sufficient (ie, be able to cook and clean on their own) but no, it's the men's fault they are stupid, and this is somehow empowering to women?! □

dr_pepper02 • 2 points • 9 August, 2021 09:03 PM

Here's the issue feminists are quite delusional and spoiled, as they've gotten so used to lives of privilege and comfort they've forgotten who it is that builds and maintains the very infrastructure of the society they live in.

The men specifically working class men are often forgotten and disrespected the most so if those men disappeared the very pillars of society would crumble and those feminists would suddenly be for traditional gender roles again. They're almost like a teen who reaches a certain age, gets a little power and thinks they don't need their parents for anything anymore even though they're literally provide the foundation for everything.

What should happen is we co-opt the hashtag and tell them what would happen without men.

AleksandrNevsky • 1 point • 9 August, 2021 08:21 AM

I'm reminded of that notorious tumblr post that made the rounds at least once a year back in the day.

ninja_deli • 1 point • 9 August, 2021 05:04 PM

If all men disappeared for a day the world would grind to a halt. All the manual labor type jobs would stop and everyone would not know what to do. It would be a s$(^ show. Be careful what you wish for women.

Grow_peace_in_Bedlam • 1 point • 11 August, 2021 01:37 AM

Pro-male people should hijack the hashtag and inject reason into it with evidence and celebrations of men's innumerable and invaluable contributions to a better world.