I like the idea of subs like FeminismUncensored and FEMRAdebates in theory, which is why it's a shame that they always turn out like this, with rules being selectively enforced to punish the MRA side.

In FeminismUncensored's particular case, InfinitySky's strategy was to get herself a henchman to do the dirty work for her by selectively enforcing rules to ridiculous extents, while she maintains a facade of free speech herself, since she's not the one enforcing the rules.

TooNuanced herself has expressed her frustration with the state of the sub and the prevalence of MRAs there on AskFeminists. A few days after that, she begins to over-enforce rules even more than she did before, permabanning several users (myself included).

Given their very subjective civility rules and rule 8 (which doesn't seem to apply to herself and InfinitySky), it's only a matter of time until she permabans most MRAs and non-feminists. Or at least turns them into a tiny enough minority for feminists to feel comfortable on the sub. And it's very clear this is her agenda and she's hellbent on remaking the sub to her liking.

Feminists had their chance with FEMRAdebates and FeminismUncensored and they failed, which is why I think it's time for MRAs to give it a shot. With a diverse moderation that includes feminist mods, of course, but with a MRA as a top mod for once. And a more relaxed moderation, but one with better defined rules that prevent them from being selectively enforced, as well as discourage the bad faith participation of users like Mitoza.

That's the problem though.

Feminists will not participate if the rules aren't biased in their favor.

Moderators there believe in Free Speech -- not in selectively allowing offensive speech against just men.

The best approach sees Free Speech as an Ethical Value and tolerates "offensive speech" to a great degree. This is the way American Society has been for several decades. Under this approach both "kill all men" and lyrics of Marshall Mathers LP would be tolerated. Even though Free Speech may have drawbacks and abuses, these abuses are much smaller than abuses of Totalitarianism.

I reworded the exact statements given and made it instead about feminists. it was removed.

This is selectively allowing offensive speech against just men.

not to mention several other comments being removed for similar "Civility" rules.
