

They are always for outdated gender roles when it suits them. In this case, men being the provider.

Yep. That they think this way only shows they aren't for equality but for special privileges and more power and rights than anyone else. They are in it for their personal gain and nothing more.

That's how it is in Islam

Who's name is on the payslip? oh yea mine. If you wanna dictate how someone should spend their money dictate your own by getting a job. Never go for a woman who sees it as our money.

The twisted delusional mind of a feminist.

They also do everything to make men less attractive to them in the social sphere, and then complain that there are no good men.

youropinionsaredumb • 11 points • 9 April, 2022 01:24 PM

Nothing gets you ostracized from other women faster than having something they want but can't get.

Brag about having a great man, and all the most hateful women will try to fuck him just to ruin what you have.

Due-Elderberry9583 • 2 points • 9 April, 2022 04:56 PM

That's so messed up. I hope you're not speaking from experience :(

Women are very socially competitive, and social enforcers. It can manifest in a healthy way, but that's why antisocial/sociopathic ones are feminists. It's socially rewarding to be one and reap all the rewards society wants to throw at women, and they also get hall monitor brownie points for cracking down on dissenters.

I just stay away from them as much as I can.

Due-Elderberry9583 • 2 points • 9 April, 2022 05:01 PM

Yep. You'll see it manifest perfectly in the whole "men need to be more sensitive" "equal roles" "women don't need to be submissive". And then they flock in mass to buy books like fifty shades of gray (a book where a woman is submissive to an extremely powerful and dominant man) which was the best selling book of the decade when it came out. It's suppression of instinct, which creates a taboo, aka the normal desire becomes super extreme and unconscious.

Another one is that cringe show The Handmaid's Tale, which is essentially porn for feminists.

That's why I prefer to stay single and not deal with them. My money is MY money, everything that's mine is MINE. □

I'll leave everything in my will to battered men's groups.

Great idea.

His money is his as mine is mine. However, it is a couple by couple understanding. The hubz and I sat down and made plans for how bills are taken care of and our joint and personal savings. We have a joint vacation fund and spend on each other to our hearts content.

One partner shouldn't have a monopoly over the others funds when they should be in support of one another. Just the stance my □ and I have taken in how we deal with finances in our relationship.

This is how my girl and I do it. I make significantly more than her (partly because I'm older and further in my career), and she has more time off work than I do to - we split all the bills 2/3 me vs 1/3 her, and we try to split the house work 2/3 her vs 1/3 me.

Kind of a "from each as they are able, to each as they need" sort of system.

I would be totally down to fully financially support us both, if she wanted to take care of the house and pets full time, but since she wants to have her own income, she takes part of the bills and I take part of the stuff around the house.

What really matters is that both partners match each other's energies and support, without taking advantage of each other.

How am I supposed to know who is in the wrong here with no context?

Is she living off of him or is she contributing by staying home and them not having to spend money on childcare? Some people do have those arrangements and it works because childcare is expensive af! And some other people prefer it that way for other reasons too.

To me, no one is munching off of anyone, unless the one person not working is still contributing to their family etc. If she isn't, then yeah, that's a different case.

But I'm not gonna jump and say this person is being crazy when there are sensible people out there who share their income because the other person take care of the kids/household.

WEEBforLIFE24 • 2 points • 9 April, 2022 03:25 PM

the first comment said the woman isn't working and tries to stop the man from spending his own money

ExMuzzy[S] • 1 point • 9 April, 2022 04:05 PM

No kids involved here

Striking_Equal • 1 point • 9 April, 2022 05:59 PM

It depends on the woman's contributions. If she is taking care of kids, doing housework, and they're in agreement on this arrangement. I'd actually agree, the money is a shared resource in marriage.

But I also think what the really antiquated idea is, is that marriages are always going to work out. I think it's reasonable for anyone who makes money in the marriage to set aside money for themselves, in case things don't work out.

TP_Crisis_2020 • 2 points • 10 April, 2022 07:01 AM

The problem with women marrying and being a SAHM is that they don't consider their husband working to provide for the family as a contribution. The SAHM convinces herself that she's the only one doing any work in the relationship and eventually becomes overwhelmed with domestic tasks, even when kids are of school age. So because she views things as being so unbalanced in her favor, she feels entitled to spend whatever she can of the husband's income. That's what the root cause of issues like this are.

women go in the workplace and supplant men but they want other men to support them. they act like they are not luggage when they are luggage that don't even have wheels.
