

Are Women aged 18-25 adults, that are capable of making decisions that will impact their lives?

Recently in terms of the Leonardo Di Caprio memes. I've seen a lot of Men and Women disputing whether a grown Man dating a young adult Women is immoral or not.

Surely if the young Woman is of legal age, and chose to be in a relationship with a Man who is in their late 40s, should it not be okay? Albeit, there is a... sense of animosity, and slight disgust, from Women at even the thought of this.

Understanding the power dynamics at play, this was a choice, made by the both of them. Both are adults; regardless of brain development. And are mature enough to see the relationship, until it's end. The end of course being; that Legendary, and oh so special, Quarter, Century Mark.

It's really not about those women at all. It's really the older women that are mad that they can't compete with the younger women for HVM. So they want to shame men like Leonardo Di Caprio into dating them.

Mind you nobody is supposed to care about all the young guys that can't get a gf because they can't compete with the older guys. No everyone is supposed to laugh at those incels.

Men have trouble dealing with the fact they're little more than a wallet with a dick attached, women have trouble dealing with the fact they're a depreciating asset. This is what happens when you throw the sexual marketplace into chaos like this. Return to 1950's dating/marriage or GTFO.

Are they capable? Yes. Do they usually make the best decisions? I'd say that depends on a multitude of factors, like how they've been raised, what their peer group is like, their education, etc. But that applies to everyone, men and women, in that age range. If you've been raised in a bad environment, you're probably going to make bad choices.

Forget the arguments they use and the words that come out their mouth - look at who is saying these things and what their motives are. It is angry old women who are jealous that a younger woman has more than them.

Are males aged 18-25 adults?

boomershack[S] • 2 points • 4 September, 2022 04:19 PM

You know what... We'd have to refer to the experts for this one.

RazhL • 2 points • 4 September, 2022 08:37 PM

Great! Once we figure it out it'll answer your question about the age 18-25 woman too :)

I asked my expert cousin, he said men become adults at 15. I didn't bother asking him when women become adults haha.

Imo both men and women are adults at 18 ofc and can legally do the things adults can at 16. That's how the law is where I live.

18-25 is old enough to be burdened with the negatives of being an adult without the positives. The gray line where you're an "adult" but people still want to infantilize you. Where you can be expected to be able to fully support yourself if you are kicked out of your Parents' house but also you're a teen who doesn't know nothin' bout nothin'.

Any time I said women need to be treated like children I was corrected by a mob of angry women, and some men as well.

So you should treat +18 women as adults capable of making decisions which will impact their lives.

I truly don't believe they are capable. Women are not logical and would rather exist as useless creature than taking responsibility.

But ,if she got raised by good parents with little bit of redpilled values,she will do well.

Yes. But it depends on what kind of decisions. If you think about that age gap, I think women will on average always accept a guy who's ten years older with no issue. The older they are, the wider the age gap acceptance. GIRLS who look like children just need to be very careful about who they go with. What I can be sure about, is that fatherless women are more exposed to those risks. They are generally not really good at catching the red flags at all.

I'll talk about it generally: if you think about sterilization most women don't regret their choices even if they do it at a young age (there's statistics on that). If you think about waiting over 35 before trying to have bio kids, I'd say most of them regret Because at that age most eggs are gone and your fertility it's less than half compared to 25.
