OP blocked me after they sent that. A misandrism and a coward.

They cannot afford to debate because they don't have anything to stand on. No evidence, no logic, no reason.

That's why they block. To censor any further chance of discussion.

Can't express emotions? Well women have 0 issue with it...

Gods, the irony of that statement is truly something to behold.

Cold_Conversation_51 • 13 points • 26 November, 2022 03:41 PM

So let me get this straight, toxic masculinity is all men's fault even if feminists perpetuate it?

_name_of_the_user_[S] • 12 points • 26 November, 2022 07:28 PM

According to many feminists everything is men's fault.

Subversive • 8 points • 27 November, 2022 03:41 AM

Well, that's basically the core tenet of patriarchy theory.

Exactly

ChimpPimp20 • 26 points • 26 November, 2022 03:56 AM

To say "women have no issue with men expressing emotions" is as bold as me as a black man saying "no black man has ever raped."

I hate when people have this holier than thou mentality about an entire demographic of people that make up billions of the human population. Most who they obviously have never met or will take secrets to their grave.

This person's pull yourself up by your bootstraps approach is a classic example of "toxic masculinity". That was in a thread of male suicide rates ffs.

Men do not call others who cry "gay". At least, not as functional adults. In the absence of women, a fair number of men will even approach the other guy in an attempt to comfort or find out what is wrong, because empathy. We want to help.

Men avoid mainly if they are at risk of being seen by a woman, due to the negative halo that they would be lumped in under. It's stupid, but it's also instinctual: we don't (generally) want to do anything that would reduce our chances of being able to shag her.

Just discovered this subreddit and oh lord what an incel echo chamber it is. I see absolutely nothing wrong with this post, you're just salty you got called out. I already know y'all are gonna downvote me to hell but I don't care tbh. Y'all cry about men's issues but you're not doing anything to try and fix them. Women didn't cause those issues, men did. You may want to think long and hard about why you feel so attacked by this post, it might bring some clarity.

Just discovered this subreddit

Hey, welcome!

and oh lord what an incel echo chamber it is.

I see your lexicon is too narrow to find a more nuanced ad hominem. It's ok, you'll grow up soon enough.

I see absolutely nothing wrong with this post,

Thanks for being honest and proving why this subreddit exists. Misandry is so prevalent that it's ignored and overlooked as normal treatment of men.

you're just salty you got called out.

Which one of us is here making ad hominems?

I already know y'all are gonna downvote me to hell but I don't care tbh.

Ok.

Y'all cry about men's issues but you're not doing anything to try and fix them.

Another tired feminist line. Do you have any original thoughts?

Women didn't cause those issues, men did.

This is just one of many examples of why feminism isn't a movement for equality. You're saying women are incapable of having influence on society, including men. Women have done great things both individually and as a group. To objectify women as you are here is exceedingly sexist.

Society caused those issues. Society includes men and women.

You may want to think long and hard about why you feel so attacked by this post, it might bring some clarity.

I feel attacked by it because it's judging people based on immutable characteristics. Thinking about that has brought me clarity. Understanding what feminists like in that screenshot are doing, that they are bigots and supremacists using the same thoughts and logic the KKK used to justify their treatment of black people has brought me to the conclusion that feminism is a movement based in bigotry and supremacy. As a person that seeks equality for all I reject feminism and its inherent misandry.

Way to go, you managed to completely misunderstand my point. I never said women don't have any influence on society but we are talking about men's issues, which historically, were caused by men.

Women didn't have any way to actually influence society up until the 70's or so, so how would issues that stemmed from before then be because of them? Answer me that, Einstein, since you wanna try to seem intelligent by using words like lexicon and ad hominem.

Women didn't have any way to actually influence society in a significant way up until the 70's or so,

???

<https://duckduckgo.com/?q=contradiction+definition&t=fpas&ia=definition>

but we are talking about men's issues, which historically, were caused by men.

You're wrong. Historically men's issues were caused by men and women, as in, by society. Just like women's issues were caused by society.

Women didn't have any way to actually influence society in a significant way up until the 70's or so,

No? Who spear headed prohibition? Who were the majority of signatories on the Declaration of Sentiments. The earliest records known show that women were masters in trade guilds as far back as the 1400s. You really think women didn't have influence before the 1970s?

so how would issues that stemmed from before then be because of them?

Because women have always had influence into society. I'm sorry if that breaks your sexist bubble of women being helpless, but they weren't and aren't.

Maffioze • 14 points • 7 December, 2022 02:16 PM

I don't understand this way of thinking. You're acting as if the majority of things men did historically weren't mostly about impressing women. Men are risk-taking and competitive exactly because they historically needed to be so women would sleep with them. If anything women had a huge influence on society.

Feminists need women to be seen as the victim in order to maintain their strangle hold on the empathy gap in order for feminism to be seen as a force for good.
