

Why is everyone out to get me?

November 27, 2015 | 4 upvotes | by ioncehadsexinapool

I'm the youngest in my family. Everybody always tells stories about me and exaggerates everything so that I sound like a fuckingretard. Most of the time I correct them and scold them for doing that but they always keep doing it. I don't get what it is about me, even though I stand up for myself most of the time, people always seem to attack me first. Usually it's just telling stories to make me look bad but what the fuck?

Why do people seem to always do this? How can I still be an easy target when I always stick up for myself? I'm sick of always correcting people for making me look like a dumbass. Just makes me want to ignore everyone. I figured I'd come here and ask you guys. A lot of you veterans seem to know your shit. Thanks in advance some family member: "Hey guys, do you remember when OP fell off the trampoline and cried for 2 hours! Whahaha all their friends laughing" you: "Now let's not forget who pushed me off and fell on me. You almost crushed me with that weight. looks at their beer belly" you#2(this is if you cant get a good comeback(agree and amplify)): "Yeah totally man, if it wasn't for you catching me(grin) I would have been in the hospital"

The best defensive is a offensive. No, don't defend yourself - instead redirect the story.

After a while it won't be as funny for them anymore and they will just respect you. It works 100%

I always rip on my family and friends I just grew up doing it. Generally the one who gets the most visibly upset or defensive is the best target. You have to be less stand up for yourself and more chill about it.

My oldest brother and my dad always do what I'd call "male negging" the only thing I've learned is that I can't tell them anything I'm exited about, which is sad. That's what family (to me) is supposed to be for.

Thanks for the reply man yeah its strange. I experienced this at a young age when I told my parents what i was excited or interested in, then they would punish me from it.

I believe in controlling your life, but fuck a little verbal support goes a long fucking way it really does

Its training for the real world, chump.

Man up and neg back. Exchanging insults is the way males make friends.

See it as a shit test. They are offering you a challenge/oportunity to serve something snarky and prove frame.

Remaining passive is a sign of weakness. Overacting too.

When my best friend calls me a gay cunt because i doodled a little heart, it's to make my ass thicker, let some steam off, and remind me i'm not a fag, not just being a douchebro.

You appear weak and/or react weak
