meh, some valid points, but there are some gems in there. specially about the slut shaming.

Trust, but verify. It works for those working with classified documents, why not here

I don't understand how they can be so slanted to think that most guys don't know not to rape someone. Just statistically, you're going to run into the 'real rape' (sad I have to say that) probability in such a large population, but you can't take the true outliers in any population and apply it to everyone. What feels more pathetic is that the NAGALT (Not all girls are like that) mentality is a common retort for girls related to hypergamy, but from the experiences I've been hearing/reading and experiencing, that's another lie. Too much hypocritical crap going on combined with false accusations like this article.

And judging from my own experience of how they enjoy those rape/domination fantasies (sad again how those two are being combined in recent years) and forcibly being put down in bed, exclaiming their joy with wet release and noises, kind hard to take the 'women don't like this' mentality seriously.

Oh, enjoyed the article, good post. Should post the above in rant.
