I have this saved and read it from time to time. Great read and summarization if the principles taught here. For me it's a great example of a "best case" scenario and a wife who responds well to the praxeology. Still prepare yourself for and be comfortable with the worst case.

ME: "I was not! Honestly honey, I only have eyes for you!"

Had you read NMMNG you would see very clearly why this sort of behavior leads to more fights. It's dishonesty and people see right through that.

To be clear, I am neither the person in the story above, nor the author of the comments. Just posting the story.

You said it was well played. Clearly it was not.

To be extra clear, that reply is not mine, either.

(The grayed out quotes below are from "Dave in Hawaii," while the regular text is Roissy. I've edited the post because, looking back, I think that was pretty unclear.)

To get to your larger point, though, that quote is used to illustrate the before/after:

At the beach, back in the "beta" days:

HER: "I see you looking at that chic in the G-string!"

ME: "I was not! Honestly honey, I only have eyes for you!"

We both know I was lying...and she would get upset, and not speak to me and we'd end up getting into an argument that ruined the entire day. Ironic isn't it...by lying to her to try and avoid conflict, I actually made it much worse.

Now?

HER: "I see you looking at her!" ME: "She's hot, isn't she?"

I don't think either Dave or Roissy are standing by supplicating to your wife; quite the opposite.

Ok so the post is being removed because don't accept copy and pastes. If you want to write on a media piece you need to write your own words not just low effort control + c , control +v.

Ahh, ok. Gotcha. I had thought my commentary up top was enough, but apologies if that was not case.
