There are plenty of gay relationships that revolve entirely around money. An unattractive older man with little to offer will often lead with his cash, throwing money at selfish, shallow twink sluts who will suck dick for a designer bag. It's a situation with two loathsome individuals: He who attempts to buy another person, and the other person who allows himself to be bought. There's not a shred of self respect or dignity between the two.

Man, that's rough.

After giving my consolations in the comments, I politely advised he be careful about spending money in dating, especially on what and how much, since someone might stick around just for your money. Downvoted in comments and called a "relationship-ruiner." (Y)

I get that you have recently realized huge gains in happiness from TRP, just like I have, but you need to stop talking about TRP outside of our community.

By the way, those guys are completely full of shit and dumb as hell. You shouldn't buy a man or woman's dinner if you're interested in romance, relationships or sex with them.

Maybe we should trust them, and I would LOVE to live in the world where I could, but bottom line not paying for shit keeps me from being BB and I have few priorities higher than not being BB.

Yeah. I thought I could get away with mentioning a TRP truth without directly mentioning TRP since there is talk about TRP truths making the front page when TRP isn't explicitly mentioned, but holy crap, I had no idea that people had so many defenses against not paying for EVERYTHING for a romantic partner. Like, wow, how Blue is the world? Scary.

1000% agreed. That is reserved only for family that comes to town to visit. Not for future relationships. In economics, that's called sunk costs, much like the titanic.
