

Is there a TRP lawyer contact exchange anywhere? (Regarding divorce rape)

February 17, 2019 | 1 upvotes | by TheRealMewt

Without diving too deep into my situation, I am living the TRP nightmare at the moment - I am on the hook for child support for a child I did not father. I want to fight this tooth and nail but my big concern is that I'm going to invest thousands of dollars into a lawyer who won't fight for me. Now I know that I'm not the only person here who ever had to fight this fight, so my question to you guys is that how do I find legal counsel that will fight for me? One that will represent me while I live in a different state (I live in Georgia and this is all happening in Delaware). Is there a lawyer recommendation exchange here at all?

I have no idea about your situation, but you could look up legal counseling if you have to. If you do have kids.

Fuuuuuck that's a nightmare. I would call a lot of lawyers and ask them lots of questions. You need to interview them just as much. Try a few of the different MRA sites as well, they may have what you are looking for, and are much more up in arms about wrongful and fraudulent paternity, and child support than you are. You could also move to a different country without extradition and say fuck off to the US. LoL

Not sure about where you live, but when my friend ended it with his woman, I advised him to get in touch with every well known divorce lawyer, specially ones that have destroyed many guys, because just talking to them first is technically a conflict of interest, so the woman can't be represented.
