

"When are you free?"

April 10, 2019 | 4 upvotes | by rizzyfromthe9

Regarding logistics, I've seen a lot of back and fourth about asking "When are you free/available?". Some say to state the day, location, and time then leave it up to her to reject or impose a new time. That they are putting themselves in their frame asking.

I don't agree with this. One because you have no idea what her schedule is like, so you might just keep awkwardly trying to make new plans, in which the time doesn't work for either of you.

For example:

"Lets get drinks at XX at 9pm"

Her: "I cant do that, how about the next day same time?"

"No, that doesnt work. Lets do XX, blah blah" etc. (You get the point)

Reason number two is you can gauge her interest; if she tells you shes free all the time that means she will easily make time for you.

Reason number three is when she tells you, lets say, shes free on the weekends, THEN you can STATE "Lets get a drink at 9pm on Saturday blah blah". Knowing she is available at that time, there won't be an awkward rescheduling and you are stilling show you are the decision maker.

In my experience, asking "when you are free?" when you have no idea whats her schedule is like, has not had any backlash.

Archived from theredarchive.com

Comments

TheRedPillRipper • 8 points • 10 April, 2019 11:43 PM*

In my experience, asking "when you are free?" when you have no idea what's her schedule is like, has not had any backlash.

It also has the added bonus of giving her the opportunity to flake or reschedule your date.

The way I used to structure my dates would be;

1. Organise something I wanted to do: My go-to's used to be coffee and walk along the beach/lake, hikes up a mountain(great literally for isolation)/training date(great for kino).
2. Invite her e.g. Meet me at x at 18:00.
3. Go on the date. If she turned up/flaked/rescheduled it didn't matter to me. I'd planned and executed something I know I'd enjoy.

Some say to state the day, location, and time then leave it up to her

I'd never leave it up to her. If there was enough attraction/rapport built then I was confident they'd turn up. If not; I'd still be doing something fun. Sometime's there was re-scheduling/flaking which depending on my attraction to them I'd lead; if not I'd respond with something like "Let me know when you're free." After 2 attempts on my behalf and no F2F meet I'd cut and run.

mallardcove • 7 points • 11 April, 2019 03:13 AM

When you ask a woman if she is free, you are implying that you are willing to bend at her whim. It also implies you have no life and a ton of free time, and can easily accommodate whatever time she gives you. Both put you deep into her frame.

Reason number two is you can gauge her interest; if she tells you she's free all the time that means she will easily make time for you.

Absolutely not true at all. If you had experience you would know this. I've had so many flakes and reschedules and ghosts despite her having wide open availability.

Reason number three is when she tells you, let's say, she's free on the weekends, THEN you can STATE "Let's get a drink at 9pm on Saturday blah blah". Knowing she is available at that time, there won't be an awkward rescheduling and you are still showing you are the decision maker.

Your mindset seems to be to limit the downside instead of seize the upside. When your actions are based around "avoiding an awkward rescheduling", you are being passive. Being passive is putting yourself into her frame. You need to take charge, take the lead, and be firm. It's the classic low risk low reward vs. high risk high reward argument. If she is really into you, you won't have to worry about an awkward reschedule.

Attempting to limit the downside is blue pill conditioning. You shouldn't give a shit if she reschedules, flakes, or ghosts, or whatever. That's the entire concept of abundance.

[deleted] • 3 points • 10 April, 2019 11:34 PM*

If you are going to keep second guessing every time, you'll end up an incel in denial.

Try, see what works best for you, do that until it doesn't work anymore!

There are a lot of people who try to make dating look like rocket science, it's not.

Edit: one more thing, if you will spend as much time as you spend on thinking on what it's the best to say to don't lose a date on improving your SMV, you'll not need to create scenarios like this anymore.

Project_Zero_Betas • 1 point • 10 April, 2019 11:33 PM

You give a specific time and location so they know you aren't playing games.

319Skew • 1 point • 11 April, 2019 06:04 AM

I've just recently tried that experiment. I can't confirm it but I noticed that when I took charge, it was her bending to my interest. She would be way more into me on my dates and I could fuck up and still maintain attraction.

When I put the ball in her court, it was at the mercy of her schedule and desire. The former resulted in much more interest and fewer shit tests. The later resulted in a lot more tests and broken plates.

If it works for you, great but I'll stick with leading.

MattyAnon • 1 point • 11 April, 2019 01:24 PM

"When are you free/available?". Some say to state the day, location, and time then leave it up to her to reject or impose a new time.

Exactly. Don't ask when she's free. State a time and a place, and if she says no and doesn't offer an alternative just forget it.

I don't agree with this. One because you have no idea what her schedule is like, so you might just keep awkwardly trying to make new plans, in which the time doesn't work for either of you.

Logically true. But women want to be lead. They want to be offered something. They don't want control. They want a man to be decisive and not ask questions.

Reason number two is you can gauge her interest; if she tells you shes free all the time that means she will easily make time for you

However: women.

By being decisive and leading you are INCREASING her interest, not just gauging it.

rizzlyfromthe9[S] • 1 point • 11 April, 2019 02:21 PM aren't you continuing to lead though when you state and time and place after?

MattyAnon • 1 point • 12 April, 2019 12:04 PM

Choosing from available options is hardly leading

rizzlyfromthe9[S] • 1 point • 12 April, 2019 12:09 PM

I agree, i know AMS on youtube asks when are you free; that's where i got it from