

My supervisor asked me out

June 23, 2019 | 130 upvotes | by OfficerWade

My supervisor from work, as in police officer. Female in a costume. You understand? She's been placed in the office and mostly only does patrols because she cries sometimes the way guys are pushovers around the office, nothing sexual but where there's a physical conflict she obviously can't fight off a 300lb gorilla. So guys are always teamed up with her. Right? So every Sunday I get to be her partner and it's going to her head. There was an incident this morning with kids stealing bicycles, we returned the stolen bikes and she was starting to come onto me. I mean I told her to stop... I thought she was just feeling secure after we closed the case or whatever but she asked me if I wanted to go out with her tomorrow. I said I was busy. She said at least your honest.

Obviously this is the rule we're told to never break. Don't shit where you eat. But man this red headed step child is calling my name and I just need you guys to help remember it's all worth it

Experience is the best teacher.

I say go out with her. Have sex with her. After she goes to HR and you are fired you will never have to post a stupid question like this on askTRP again because you will have learned your lesson.

EvolvedVirus • 20 points • 24 June, 2019 01:24 AM

The problem is, anything he does can backfire.

If he rejects her, she's now out to getcha. If he sleeps with her, and then gets dumped or he dumps her, again, she's out to getcha.

Try to stay at a distance but if she's super persistent, she can kinda own you at that point. Also gotta remember, rejecting her may just make her more lustful and obsessed with you.

If she's ugly, you might be able to keep a distance, they may have a lot of doubts about themselves and may not go any further than that.

HotelMohelHolidayInn • 7 points • 24 June, 2019 02:52 AM

can backfire

"I'm here to work, not date co-workers. Please respect my decision."

Let's not pretend you'll get fired because you turned down a co-worker you don't want to go out with.

EvolvedVirus • 15 points • 24 June, 2019 03:06 AM

You'd be wrong.

Let's not pretend you can get fired for having sex with a co-worker once and then dumping her right?

Wait, that assumes that women might be telling the truth TO HR.

If she lies about you raping her, do you think she won't lie about you raping her, just because you rejected her FIRST advance?

HotelMohelHolidayInn • 3 points • 24 June, 2019 03:21 AM

That comes with proof of the rape happening, which it won't because OP isn't dumb.

EvolvedVirus • 1 point • 24 June, 2019 04:17 AM

You clearly haven't been in his position before... women hate rejection, especially if they're really into you, next thing he'll know is some department chief calling him into the office with some claim by the chick siting "harassment" or some other fuckery.

She will fuck your brains out. Everything would seem normal. Until, she gossips with people at the work place about it. She will realize that she might lose her job over it. Then she goes to HR saying you drugged her or something. You will get moved or put on paid leave while they investigate it. After they conclude what they conclude you will get let go and she will keep working there or perhaps get moved to another department and start over.

Atheist_Utopia • 89 points • 23 June, 2019 03:02 PM

Kkiy0M • 11 points • 23 June, 2019 04:05 PM

Why would she go to hr? I say he records everything and just goes with the flow. That way he'll at least be more secure than her.

Jabbermouth • 28 points • 23 June, 2019 04:37 PM

People are unpredictable. The chances she would go to HR may not be high, but they are still there.

Why risk it at all? HR is more likely to side with his boss than him. Not only is she a woman but she is also not as easily replaceable as he is. Even with records, there's no guarantee they don't let you go.

askmrcia • 14 points • 23 June, 2019 05:17 PM

I think Going to hr would be the least of my worries.

I'd be worried about her gossiping more than anything. And people would all know that op and her is dating.

That's when the work environment would turn into an uncomfortable awkward environment.

And then that's when trouble would start.

thrwy75479 • 3 points • 23 June, 2019 07:40 PM

If handled properly, even the gossip isn't that much of an issue.

Hope for the best, plan for the worst. Keep records of everything to prevent a sexual assault/harassment charge. That could potentially impact the rest of his life.

Carboneraser • 4 points • 23 June, 2019 11:36 PM

lossescollector • 47 points • 23 June, 2019 04:13 PM*

Don't do it bro. Too many downsides.

If things dont work out, it gets awkward as hell/if not impossible to work together.

If there's another girl at the office crushing on you and she finds out, she may get jealous and this can open the door to all kinds of issues.

You can't just "next" her if things go south because you'll be seeing her everyday at the office. And if she is crazy, and you disappoint her in some way, you always open the door to the possibility of a sexual harassment complaint which will almost auto cost you your job regardless of the details. Like the family courts, HR investigations are heavily anti-male bias.

[deleted] • 1 point • 24 June, 2019 02:09 AM

Yeah it's also messy if he continues to scorn her, which is how she will take it.

Only path forward here is to not fuck her and also strengthen alliances with coworkers because she will try to bring him down.

EvolvedVirus • 1 point • 24 June, 2019 01:30 AM

He can also block all her advances from the start, and she can start rumors, make his life miserable as a supervisor, and get him fired too.

Best strategy: resist, resist, don't do anything with her, keep distance.... but if she is just hammering you and pressuring you obsessively, then you may have to surrender your D to her. It might be enough to keep her satisfied and then be as boring as possible so that she gets rid of you and doesn't want anything to do with you. Avoid doing anything at work to make it seem like you are dating.

If things go wrong for her, she will make up all sorts of lies to take you down, so you have to be prepared. Make sure nothing goes wrong for her. Make sure she is simply bored of you rather than angry at you.

lossescollector • 3 points • 24 June, 2019 02:01 AM*

In my experience this isn't true at all.

If you tell a girl to her face you simply aren't interested or just make up some random excuse as to why you aren't romantically available from the start she may feel disappointed or whatever, but she'll probably just move on.

If you have sex with her, and then try to get rid of her, that's when the crazy comes out.

EvolvedVirus • 2 points • 24 June, 2019 02:22 AM

They don't need sex to go crazy. I have seen a lady at work go crazy because I didn't give her attention. She's scary, self-entitled, and I have kept a very large distance.

They can stir up trouble, just because you rejected them.

lossescollector • 1 point • 24 June, 2019 02:26 AM

I'm speaking in general terms, there's always exceptions to the rule/outliers. Either way, I feel sorry for you bro. In our society only guys are recognized as harassers/creepers but there are chicks out there that don't know how to take no for an answer, and since our system doesn't really back up men in these situations, you are left to handle this situation on your own. Good luck.

EvolvedVirus • 0 points • 24 June, 2019 02:44 AM

Exactly. It may be that sex creates an attachment that makes it even more risky. But the thought of being rejected, can also be a huge emotional strain too. Don't forget.

You can have sex and be a good person, and you may have an amicable breakup.

You can not have sex, but reject her in a callous way, and you may have a bad time.

Just gotta be careful about not triggering their crazy-landmines.

HotelMohelHolidayInn • 1 point • 24 June, 2019 02:57 AM ac714 • 2 points • 24 June, 2019 02:27 AM

I agree with you. This is a clear cut 'say no with respect' and you will both move on.

So many here are jumping off to conclusions that constitute a fraction of the cases out there. There is no reason to be listing off various scenarios based on the details OP has provided.

HotelMohelHolidayInn • 0 points • 24 June, 2019 02:56 AM

idontalwayssin • 26 points • 23 June, 2019 05:20 PM*

Against common logic, I was fucking a coworker.

Worked as an analyst at a small business. I was seated next to a relatively cute girl, who I would proceed to flirt with and stuff. Eventually, I had my dick in her mouth after we decided to go and get some dinner.

That proceeded to regular sex. Lots of blowjobs, fucking & blowjobs in the office stairwell when feeling risky, and of course, the car. Blowjobs at lunch, so many blowjobs. Meeting up late at night and fucking her in the empty parking garage. Etc.

It was some of the funnest times of my life, even if it was dumb as fuck. But I didn't really care, I knew I was going to leave that job in the long run anyways.

I would do it again in similar situations.

redvelvet_oreo • 20 points • 23 June, 2019 06:19 PM

lol most people who become cops do not sign up to quit in a few months or find a new job...

[deleted] • 8 points • 23 June, 2019 05:47 PM

There has to be a policy in your sop you agreed to, even if you didn't read it, that covers this.

The policy is in place for a reason.

Shes on a desk for a reason.

And supervisor that would approach a subordinate for anything crossing that line is a bucket of crazy and I bet you allready know that about her.

If your willing to risk losing your job or get held hostage by her for crazy girl sex, go on then.

Just know what your buying and what the potential price is.

no_delay1 • 0 points • 24 June, 2019 07:18 AM

Nope you are wrong.

Option 1 hard rejection.

Option 2 go for the score.

Neither will end well. The third option is to treat her like your little sister, smirk and not even take her comments or advances seriously. Just give her a playful look and a remark about how sill she's being..

This will keep a bit of tension, and she'll still get the message. Hell might even make work enjoyable.

Liking people you work with and spend a majority of your day is a good thing.

The middle path is the way.

If he subtly foists her on some other guy, she'll be grateful to him for doing the favor, provided the dick is good.

red2hilt • 2 points • 24 June, 2019 01:13 PM not battle-tested but the below is my opinion:

I think she's now your bitch. don't fuck or her or give her any attention or go out with her, but you can now ask her anything you need and she will instantly do it. dude, she just put her job on the line for you. She will do anything you want at any point. you're now her boss and can get anything done that you want, while meanwhile you don't have to do ANY paperwork or any of the hard stuff associated with being a boss. you just ask her for what you want and I promise you she'll do it right away. don't go out with her or anything like that. don't even acknowledge her advances.

I'm not sure about the psychology behind this (maybe if she thinks she's compliant enough for long enough you'll finally go out with her) but this is the new rules. way better than the other replies you've been getting. also you have to be a really good leader. don't ask her to do anything unfair, demeaning. be the law. be really fair. but ask for anything you want or need.

[deleted] • 1 point • 24 June, 2019 02:07 AM

It could be a loss either way. If she feels scorned, she can also attack you in many ways at work. But if you fuck her, you've created an ally but only until you start dating someone else seriously and then she is going to feel scorned. So — You've gotta document this somehow with a coworker or HR or something because there is no way this isn't going to cause her to try to bring you down somehow in the future. Though obviously fucking her is the least messy path forward.

In some places, you could pump and dump her and there would be basically zero consequences. In some places, you're already fucked, even if you reject her, she'll trump something up and your career will be over.

I would report the instance to HR. Girls seem to do crazy shit when they get rejected. You sound like you just let her off easy but she may come at you again until you have to put her down for real. Its better to have it on record. She might hate you for rejecting her and do something crazy or fabricate some story about you.
