

What about the other Purple Pill?

8 upvotes | 4 October, 2018 | by boundarychimps

A line I found on Wikipedia:

| For the medication advertised by AstraZeneca as "the purple pill", see Esomeprazole.

What do you all think of that other purple pill, and of antacids in general? And more broadly, of medical advertising to consumers?

I think it may cause side effects.

Side effects are not good. My bf pops them like they are candy and trys to push them on me whenever I have a stomach upset. I am glad my country does not have direct to consumer marketing for prescription medication.

I take it. Works pretty well.

I never properly appreciated them until I got pregnant.

I'm sorry, antacids, for failing to recognize your brilliance. You da real MVP.

Attention!

IT'S PUUUUUURGE WEEEEEEEEEEK

Booyah.

Once a year there are no rules.

(Well, there are still reddit wide rules. No Breaking THEM or the admins will fuck us up.)

Otherwise go nuts.

is Eminem singing about Nexium?

i think i remember reading an article that he had really bad acid-reflux disease and was worried the acid would ruin his vocal cords/career^{jk}
