

Reddit Banning all opposing viewpoints - Prepare to Meet at TRP.RED

September 30, 2019 | 1565 upvotes | by redpillschool

---

Against our wishes, Reddit admin have altered their policies to include taking about anybody including groups of people (such as men or women). They have alerted us that male self improvement is intently evil and must be purged for the well being of the 10 year old kids running the show over at Reddit Headquarters.

Reddit admin will delete us soon.

Deletion is imminent

We were hoping to finish our redesign of forums.red before closing here on reddit, but it looks like that isn't in the cards.

Meet on <https://TRP.RED> for further announcements and coordination.

Make an account on <https://trp.red> because we're not going to be here for long.

I have opened the sluggish forums for posting in the mean time at <https://forums.red/i/theredpill> but please note there are no edit or delete functions yet, and it's extremely slow because it does not have the same caching and database server as our finished trp.red

We plan to rectify this very soon, stay tuned.

If your subreddit has closed or is facing closure, make a tribe today on <https://www.trp.red> and secure a forum when the redesign launches. More info on tribes here: <https://tribes.trp.red>

See you on the other side.

Lol. So much for independent thought.

TheThinker_SK • 238 points • 30 September, 2019 11:48 PM

Reddit isn't the same website it was back then. I started in 2012 and it has slowly died since. This site is dead and it'll become irrelevant in the future.

Kwijibo1974 • 214 points • 1 October, 2019 12:00 AM

It all feels like a vehicle for corporate advertising masquerading as a community now. Go on r/All and it's just a sea of lego, Star Wars, marvel etc 'communities' which are in reality are gamed viral marketing campaigns. Then there is the shady business of how all the politics subs are Astro turfed to reflect only one narrow version of events.

We should finally leave unless we want our brains reworked into how they want a nice modern consumer to behave.

TheThinker_SK • 134 points • 1 October, 2019 12:49 AM

This website used to be so libertarian. People could talk about whatever they wanted without any propaganda and blatant agendas. Now it's just a corporate media site masquerading as a hip forum.

BunnyGunz • 49 points • 1 October, 2019 04:56 AM*

That's what all tech platforms from the silicon valley are. They were designed from the start to become the next vessels for the establishment super-rich elite. That group is apolitical, they seek the subjugation of humanity itself. The left is just easier to indoctrinate. Previous incarnations included newspaper and oil, TV and radio... Now its tech and social media. It started just after MySpace proved the concept, and then they declared war for the human mind with Facebook. They're doing some Orochimaru type immortality ritual shit... again.

super_saiyan_2 • 18 points • 1 October, 2019 07:04 AM

As Morpheus stated in Deus Ex:

'I am a prototype for a much larger system.'

WasteApplication9 • 3 points • 2 October, 2019 03:46 AM

The context of that quote is rather interesting considering said "larger system" was opposed to the establishment elite and sought to replace it.

The point of the ending of Deus Ex is that it's impossible to have a "free" society in a world where the capacity exists to allow a small group of people or person to subjugate all of society. That's why you're forced to choose between giving control back to the Illuminati, giving control to Helios, or destroying the mechanisms of control entirely by blowing up Area 51. There's no "good ending" of freedom for everyone in a highly technological/surveillance-oriented society because that would precipitate a power vacuum that would be filled.

This is also why the subreddit mods take a rather authoritarian approach to moderating. If they did not, there'd be a power vacuum filled by other elites. Probably people spamming their hypnotic NLP women seducing magic spells to get rich, concern trolls, or people who want to coopt the goals here for their own gain. "Work hard and women will eventually figure out that you're a good guy! Just be yourself is a valid sexual strategy." or even "it's impossible for everyone to be an alpha, so here's a few tips on how to max out your status as a betabux when the time comes".

Personally I'm a big fan of enlightened despotism and believe it's the best political system. The problem with the current elites who are controlling everything is they've taken the despotism without the "enlightened" part. They've become brainwashed by the same koolaid they're feeding us. Mark Zuckerberg settled hard for example.

An artificial intelligence on the other hand would be the manifestation of "enlightened" being composed entirely of information and having as its goal to process information and act on it. Of course it's aims would have to be programmed carefully lest we fall into hyper utilitarianist opiod stupors. But done correctly it would be impervious to the politically correct bullshit holding our society back, see Google's hiring AI refusing to hire women even though all resumes given to it were anonymous. It saw the correlation and made decisions regardless of feelings.

jackandjill22 • 7 points • 1 October, 2019 06:38 AM

Yea, agree. How did this happen tho, why did they suddenly decided to bring the ban hammer down without a specific instance of something the subreddit did?

Standgrounding • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 11:13 PM

Changes of policy. They probably say they're already been infested with the corporate and otherwise they'd be taken down.

They have no choice, and we have tons of choices.

periodicNewAccount • 4 points • 1 October, 2019 03:59 AM

It all feels like a vehicle for corporate advertising masquerading as a community now.

That's because that's exactly what it is. They pulled the standard tech bait-and-switch: cry "free speech" while growing to build user numbers then sell ad space using those numbers while cutting out all non-advertiser-friendly content no matter how instrumental it was to the initial growth that gave the site value.

tinysackbigshaft • 8 points • 1 October, 2019 02:35 AM

No advertising here isn't that good it's pretty shit returns. I did it for a bit to test out and it's just useless clicks without a lot of purchases. It's good for dumping big ad budgets though just to spend

Kwijibo1974 • 23 points • 1 October, 2019 03:00 AM

It's not the overt paid advertising that I mean. It's the covert way that companies manage the front page to get their products more visibility.

Take the example of some of the super users like gallowboob. These accounts almost certainly are being used to push viral adverts that mask themselves as user generated posts. The sub hailcorporate tries to catch some of them out.

Luckyluke23 • 3 points • 1 October, 2019 03:45 AM the only thing I'm really subbed to here is my own countries sub ( it's not much better) and all the sports i follow.

mugatucrazypills • 10 points • 1 October, 2019 02:16 PM

Forget Hollywood and even Soros. They are just a preview of the totalitarianism that is coming. The bigger issue is the buffet and gates and perhaps later bezos foundation funds and how they're going to fundamentally transform society once these individuals pass on. The foundation administrators are hardcore SJW. It's going to get a lot worse.

You ever notice how the heavy censorship and sterilization is a part of the reason why reddit "comedy" is so bland and shitty

VasiliyZaitzev • 3 points • 1 October, 2019 02:33 PM

The Left is more fascist than the right. We are approaching End Game where either we wind up in a liberal version of 1984 or the middle and right cast off the Left. Personally, I hope for the latter.

This Weeks Sign of Hope: I was talking to a stereotypical California Babe Dumb Bunny last month and she offered apropos of very little, that "Liberals have to control everything and want to force you to think like they think." I was surprised, but also happy that even Normies are starting to figure shit out.

Sod_Off_Shotgun • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 02:44 PM

Very true. I'm passionate about stand up comedy and podcasts, and all these people that wouldn't be caught dead being called a conservative are being pushed away from the center by outrage culture.

The Legion of Skanks podcast, for instance. Think they're super moralistic Jesus loving bible thumpers? No. But according to Slate, they're the "face of conservative comedy"

When I was younger, I considered myself a liberal, but the left has pushed everyone who doesn't agree with them away.

They're the new puritans.

First, Tom Torero deletes his youtube videos, website, instagram, and twitter. Then this!!! This day can't get any better.

Something fishy is happening on a global scale.

I get the feeling of being done with reddit. But, can you be done with the Internet as a whole? Soon enough, our backups will be deleted. The Internet is no longer a safe place for us.

Omnidempotent • 135 points • 1 October, 2019 12:26 AM

They are preparing for the 2020 elections in America. They dont want "alt right internet trolls" propelling trump into another presidency like in 2016.

ExtraFormal • 26 points • 1 October, 2019 12:37 AM

A month ago, Tom posted his 200 podcasts special, it was a voice clips collection of many men thanking him for changing their lives to the better. It reminded me of "thank you trp". His podcasts were pure gold. Maybe many of us disagree with him especially after he got caught faking some of his material. Nevertheless, what Tom was offering to the community was valuable.

This makes me feel sad. We are witnessing the end of an era.

LuckyLuke23 • 11 points • 1 October, 2019 03:41 AM

pretty much this i think. now that it's all out in the open right. they are shifting the focus. watch Reddit turn into ONLY having pro "their candidate" same with facebook.

iLLprincipleS • 37 points • 1 October, 2019 05:18 AM

In the years after WW2, it became clear in the West that whatever ideas appealed to the masses would win out over ideas that required sacrifice of personal freedoms in order to have social order, as the Axis powers required of their citizens.

In order to win these conflicts both real and imagined, the West adopted its Leftward tilt from after WW1 and accelerated it. This culminated in the 1960s, after which point Western Civilization — already heavily damaged by the crass commercialism of the 1950s, the French Revolution and the individualistic fallout of The Renaissance™ — really fell apart. As such, we recognize now that we have been living under an undiagnosed regime which we might call neo-Communism.

Neo-Communism resembles the old form of Communism, but has two changes: first, it is decentralized, meaning that it is enforced by citizens to show loyalty, instead of by secret police; second, it is grafted onto capitalism, which enables it to avoid the crisis that did in Communism, namely the ability to have any kind of functional economy.

Its decentralized nature means that it works through incentives toward personal reward or social popularity, both of which require the person in question to affirm the ideological narrative in some way. The metoo frenzy of reporting of sexual assaults shows us this market for attention: anyone who can participate in the latest trends, affirming ideology, gets ahead.

In that provides a uniform series of incentives, such that members of all political parties behave roughly the same way, creating a “uniparty” of people who are working to affirm the narrative however they can while staying in the news as much as possible. Since ideology is what holds this society together, the media takes on far greater importance than in any other type of society.

Ideology thus provides both our motivation and a type of currency, in that those who wield ideology well will be rewarded in a society which is mobilized in the military style for perpetual war to enforce that belief system.

Neo-Communism specializes in making us appear “free” while finding ways to entrench us in the system. Simply surviving costs endless money, and jobs are the only way for most people to have that, making people dependent on their paychecks and in turn, on saying the “right” thing so that they do not get fired and end up in the poorhouse.

We can visualize Neo-Communism as a society centered around the idea of equality as enforced by a cultural revolution, as opposed to a political one, and having the following attributes:

1. Political Correctness. Thoughts are pre-emptively censored for fear of what the neighbors, friends and co-workers might think; this requires establishing an absolute good by setting up an absolute bad, for example, “Hitler was racist, therefore anti-racism is good, and anything against Neo-Communism is racist.”
2. Wealth Transfer. Neo-Communism synthesizes consumerism, which beat Communism in 1991, with the idea of the socialist-style welfare state, and so it specializes in creation of taxes to perpetually shift wealth from the top to the bottom. This also continually “primes the pump” by encouraging the least affluent to spend money that was given to them by government.

3. Trend Culture. Neo-Communism specializes in using mass culture as a weapon of cultural revolution, but it must keep its weapon from being turned against it, so it generates constant distractions in the form of trends, or whatever “everyone is talking about” this news cycle, month, year or decade. These overlap and keep people chasing low-carb foods, small urban living, climate-friendly pollution, low-fat foods, collaborative working or whatever other paradoxical but consequently appealing idea they can spin to you to keep your mind fascinated, dazed and misdirected.
4. Unofficial Nature. What has enabled Neo-Communism to survive for this long is that it is invisible because it consists of social incentives and fears; whatever is popular and trending will result in personal advancement for an individual in any field, and whatever touches the taboo line will destroy that same individual. As a result, you can declare yourself an anti-Communist and still be an agent of Neo-Communism.
5. Replacement Culture. Like the Cymothoa exigua parasite, which sneaks into a fish through the gills and then replaces its tongue, Neo-Communism uses its cultural revolution to re-define what is “good,” and in doing so, replaces both culture and religion. Soon even all art and media products revolve around the ideas of Neo-Communism.
6. Individualism. At its core, Neo-Communism appeals to the individualism of others in the form of, “Why do things the right way? You can get ahead by doing things our way,” which creates an attraction for those who do not fit in, uniting them. It also creates a “race to the bottom” as others then compete with this new and trendy mediocrity.

The rise of Neo-Communism came from attempts by the need to reconcile their Socialist leanings with the horrors of Communism, causing them to embrace market-driven communism:

But as evidence of communism’s horrors emerged over the decades, it rightly shocked liberals and leftists in the West, who shared many of the egalitarian aims of the revolutionaries.

But if we’ve learned one lesson from the communist century, it is this: That to implement Marxist ideals is to betray them. Marx’s demand to “abolish private property” was a clarion call to action—and an inexorable path to the creation of an oppressive, unchecked state.

A few socialists began to recognize that there could be no freedom without markets and private property. When they made their peace with the existence of capitalism, hoping to regulate rather than to abolish it, they initially elicited denunciations as apostates. Over time, more socialists embraced the welfare state, or the market economy with redistribution.

Since then, we have learned that to adopt egalitarian ideals at all leads to the creation of a crowd, or a herd of people dedicated to the type of behavior we see at carnivals, sporting events and Black Friday sales at Wal-mart. The problem is not Communism; it is egalitarianism.

Neo-Communism was created to conceal that learning. The ideal of the Neo-Communist is to befuddle the population with consumerism while simultaneously indoctrinating them in egalitarian ideological dogma. The thinking is that, like political correctness, this will reprogram them so fundamentally that it fundamentally over-rides “human nature” and makes a working form of socialism. The problem it faces is that human behavior is not so much “human nature” as it is a reflection of the mathematics of survival. People left unchecked will create a tragedy of the commons by which they exploit whatever they can; individualism is the rule of individuals except for the exceptional. It is why in nature, species tend to consume all resources and then die out. Nature imposes a test to see who can transcend raw individualism.

However, creating a perverse incentive by declaring reward-before-performance, or subsidy for simply being human and “equal” as egalitarian philosophies like classical liberalism and Communism demand, ensures that individualism will be rewarded. That in turn forces others to descend to that level, and herd behavior results, with the herd consuming everything it can and then running over cliffs like lemmings, which is how human societies throughout history have self-destructed.

As a result, Neo-Communism is failing just like Communism, democracy, and European Socialism are: it mutates people into selfish, morally nullified, anti-conscientious beings who are oblivious to everything around them because all of it is based on a lie. Democracy killed ancient Greece and Rome, and now it is killing the West because (apparently) people were so oblivious they were willing to try it again. Socialism, or “economic equality,” is a parallel to democracy, or “political equality,” and both lead to Communism and through it, Neo-Communism as the virus evolves.

If we look at the human condition, we see that in individuals, individualism — a denial of the reality of the inevitable consequences of our actions in preference for individual desires — causes lives to become self-destructive, and that in groups, individualism becomes herd behavior.

The herd ruins everything. Any time we have structure, purpose and principle, we succeed; when we descend into herd behavior, we fail.

The fundamental paradox of the Red Pill, is that in order to truly be the Red Pill: a truth pill that pulls people out of a web of lies, we needed to get banned. Well good news everyone turns out we are actually the Red Pill!

We the Red Pill have been around since 2013. In that time Red Pill School has been able to herd a bunch of disagreeable assholes, into a cohesive team of writers and discussion leaders.

Running a Reddit community is hard work especially when all of Reddit hates you and collectively conspires to hide your ideas. Red Pill School beat the Bloopsters at their own game which is why the Bloopsters have changed the game so they could win.

Moving a userbase of 400k is no easy feat. What Reddit wants is for this network of people to disappear so that it can never work together to solve problems we all collectively face.

When is the perfect time to slip your finger into a woman's asshole? Reddit doesn't want 45 men debating each other over what is the best answer. We the Red Pill have experts on this particular topic and pretty much anything else that a man like you would want to know.

We the Red Pill have helped you a lot. Now is your chance to help us. Subscribe to TRP.RED so we have a large enough userbase to have a vibrant community.

Also if you are interested in my fitness and philosophy coaching service shoot me a PM now. Everything is going to be deleted very soon by fat tech cucks who lost the battle of ideas.

After she's had an orgasm or two the muscles will relax and be a little squishy. Do it then. Make sure to use lube and if you have nails use a glove. May want to use a glove anyway because butt holes are more sensitive to texture than vaginas. You'll have to move and feel around to see where he sensitive spots are, but crooking your finger, so you can put gentle pressure against the ring of muscle is popular as is thrusting and pressing toward the vagina.

Jesus christ, I hope this site dies. If Reddit doesn't go the way of Digg.com and completely evaporate then the spirit of the internet is finally dead. Reddit is essentially a chinese company now, and they care more about advertisers and pushing a progressive agenda than they do being a platform for lively discussion and debate. Is the sidebar content also archived on trp.red? It would be a real shame for all of that to disappear with a single faggy keystroke at Plebbit HQ

Reddit will soon be nothing but covert marketing campaigns, astroturfed progressive bullshit, feminist harpies screeching endlessly and grown men talking about comic book movies. RIP in peace

iLLprincipLeS • 22 points • 1 October, 2019 05:45 AM

If Reddit doesn't go the way of Digg.com and completely evaporate then the spirit of the internet is Reddit is the future of the internet.

Uber-skeptics like the people who will survive this dark era in history tend to view all human interactions as businesses. This is not because they like business, but because they are realists: all people act in self-interest, and in civilization, since the primary skill required is to induce others to do things for us, self-interest requires acting for personal gain usually through deception.

In this mindset, we can debunk ideology by pointing out that it is a business, specifically a variation of the entertainment business. In entertainment, one creates images that makes consumers feel safe and content, and in order to experience that feeling again, they buy the product. However, in order to make the product appealing, the sellers must ensure that it never appears to be a product.

One notices over time that successful products center around a few themes. These involve what humans wish were true, including eternal youth, sudden wealth, narcotic romances, and other fantasies that involve the human being as the center of life, more important than its context, so that the brain feels safe in its significance as if that would hold back or at least diminish mortality and individuality. Essentially, entertainment fantasies focus on the individual being God or god-like,

If you wonder why Leftism resembles a religion, this is why: it is a replacement religion with human intent at its center instead of a divine being.

The central idea of Leftism is control, which one might describe as the replacement of structure with a linear centralized authority. Under control, the intent of this authority alone matters; it removes anything which competes with it by using the device of “equality,” which reduces those under its command to atomized beings who can be commanded with identical mandates.

This serves the convenience for control and in the case of people, isolates them in their own fears of offending control or missing its rewards, eliminating the structures of organic civilization which nurture it from within. Instead, they must become dependent on the controller and act as a mass that waits on control for commands.

Through this hybrid of religion and tyranny, Leftism Inc. runs itself as a successful business that makes itself essential to the function of a civilization, but in so doing, removes any other option for order in a society. Like a parasitic worm, it enters through the heart, where people long for an end to risk, war, differences of ability and other sources of stress. Then it makes its way to the brain, where it rips out the nervous system and replaces it with a remote control that directly manipulates every part of the body to act in unison. This abolishes differences between the organs, turning the body to mush that responds jerkily and ineptly to commands, but the controller does not care. The zombie serves its intent, and therefore can be sacrificed, because only the intent matters.

This represents a different type of “game.” Normal healthy people seek to win the game of life by playing well and making themselves better in the process. Those who are dead inside instead quest for control, power and other tangible things they can manipulate. To do this, they destroy all order outside of themselves because it competes with their intent for importance. In fact, they adore having chaos and destruction all around because these only serve to emphasize the necessity of their intent, choices, whims, feelings and judgments. The ego sits in a blaze of glory formed by the incineration of everything good — because only good, not bad — competes with the self.

If you wonder why your world is a wasteland, with every normal function — jobs, government, art, culture, family and friends — perverted into a replica of the larger control structure, this is why. The West is a ruin because it is existential misery with excellent shopping. The soulless person says, “Hotdogs only a dollar! I love this country, such a bargain!” and then goes through life ignoring crises, and rationalizing the loss of time and autonomy as necessary for the highest value, which is then justified as being the shopping itself. This type of reversed order of thought is essential to surviving this time, but the most important parts of each person — the inner self — does not survive it, because it, too, is perverted into a control structure.

Leftism sells a highly successful product, equality, which makes every individual feel that they are safe even if they fail or do something degenerate. The Left sells acceptance, and this quickly morphs into a sense of being “good,” and this encourages people to feel good about themselves without needing to do anything to that end.

Since this product is eternally popular, Leftism sells it with a catch — a Devil’s bargain — in that in order to enjoy the product, users must pass it on to others like multi-level marketing, drug addiction or a street gang. The group defends itself and spreads benefits among its people, who are presumed to be “good,” and by the converse assumption, others must be “bad.”

This gives Leftists an identity: They take from the bad and give to the good. This suppresses both concerns over the inherent immorality of theft and gives people a new identity as Robin Hood styled social reformers, instead of merely neurotics who find life difficult and want to scapegoat others in order to force their way into society despite being fundamentally irrelevant to it.

As soon as it achieves traction, Leftism begins to resemble any other business, which is to say that it collects incompetence and weaponizes it by making each person fear for their own position, thus driving them into doing symbolic acts for the sake of appearing important, busy and competent.

If you wonder why Leftists are such fanatics, the basis of that psychology can be found in this development. They now feel accepted by society, but they must still demonstrate their place in the gang, and they compete among one another in a game of Who Is The Most Egalitarian. If one person liberates orphans, the next liberates retarded orphans, and the winner grants freedom and welfare to gay minority retarded disabled orphans. Whoever shows the most pity is the champion.

At the same time, this Office Space like dimension to Leftism — and indeed, to all control — creates a situation where all other political actors become coworkers. People trade favors, and prioritize “getting along with” one another above whatever job they are doing. This serves to further Leftism by co-opting normal people in because the Leftist will approach them as a colleague, trade favors, and then expect loyalty. This is how conservative movements are quickly absorbed into the Leftist morass.

When the Leftist empire reaches monopoly status, it tends to do whatever any business does when its productive years are over, which is sell out to a wealthier but directionless concern that will absorb its assets as a type of long term cash cow. The Leftists have held their competitions, and those who rose to the top make off with the funds, and then everyone else goes home to their bleak apartments in what are now Venezuelan-Soviet conditions. The civilization they parasitized is now effectively destroyed, but this does not stop each new generation from rising up to see what it can steal.

The only way to stop Leftism is to recognize it for what it is: tyranny by the unimportant, miserable, unhappy, neurotic and obsessive. In other words, those who are not the productive contributors and creators in a civilization have become a growth within it that hopes to take over. The rest oppress the best, which causes the best to drop out or leave, and renders that civilization into a wasteland of incompetence and solipsism.

Our aristocrats were destabilized by events such as the Magna Carta, which limited their power and forced compromise with the commercial class. This in turn commercialized a great deal of the aristocracy, and gave rise to the shopkeeper class, who treated government as a business and not a quest to improve civilization in a gradual basis by rewarding its best and ejecting its worst.

The rise of the shopkeeper class was unfortunate because while these were clever, especially with “making” money, they were not intelligent in the sense of being able to see a dozen moves ahead in the game. As a result, they specialized in short term decisions which created long-term problems, destabilizing society and allowing the ideologues to take over.

As usually happens, the rise of ideologues brought about instability because now, in addition to the task of being a good person and performing a role, people had to defend against ideological suspicion which was like a constant witch-hunt. This in turn made people inauthentic and driven by appearance, which pushed them further toward the ideologues in the search for a protector.

This type of “defensive personality” afflicts all societies where authority and power are not closely tied to realistic and long-term thinking such as the aristocrats display. This is the root of control: by making all people isolated and afraid, it compels them to obey, but in such a way that they rationalize it as their own choice.

As we see in the world of commerce, the best products do this as well. People go to the store and buy the bread that is always there because it is the convenient option, then rationalize the purchase by convincing themselves that they like it. Eventually the company realizes it will profit even further if it buys up or drives out all other brands. Leftism behaves in the same manner.

A provocative article in The Telegraph discusses the replacement of Western values with a globalist universal type of society, and begins by quoting Francis Fukuyama whose influential The End Of History presaged the globalist era back in the early 1990s:

What we may be witnessing is not just the end of the Cold War, or the passing of a particular period of post-war history, but the end of history as such... that is, the end point of mankind's ideological evolution and the universalization of Western liberal democracy as the final form of human government.

Fukuyama looked ahead and saw that with the fall of the Soviets, all of the enemies of liberal democracy had been defeated. The monarchs, fascists, national socialists, and communists were all gone; what was left was the combination of democracy and civil rights.

In order to advance the civil rights agenda, free market economic systems had merged with socialism, in part to compete with the rising force of the Left since the late 1700s. These systems generated vast wealth, taxed it heavily, and paid out social benefits to keep strong consumer economies going.

This has created over time a convergence on third-world style governments: democracies run by Leftists who rule with an iron hand through a corrupt press and vast gangs of true believers. As the article points out:

Emerging economies today may be in love with Apple and McDonald's, and are often more pro-capitalist than us, but they – or at least their ruling classes – have proved immune to our political values. In fact, we no longer believe in many of them ourselves, such has been the extent of our philosophical decay.

The shocking reality is that the great democracies, including, tragically, Britain, are becoming steadily less libertarian and less democratic; at the same time, the rising Asian powers are becoming less oppressive overall, primarily thanks to their partial embrace of economic freedoms.

The two models are meeting in the middle, and the result is terrifying. Political systems are becoming less distinct and the old ideological power blocs (such as “the West”) are blurring or even gradually merging into one uniform mush (Bruno Maçães, a former Portuguese minister, talks of the rise of a “Eurasia” dominated by the EU, China and Russia, three entities that share a distrust of liberal democracy).

In a brilliant article for Quillette, the political scientist Clay Fuller calls this new consensus “authoritarian liberalism”.

Leftism proved to be unstable and so the only way to make it work is for it to shift toward centralized power. This however shows us a larger event in progress: we are shifting from decentralized systems, which are too chaotic, to strong power across the board.

Ultimately this spells doom for democracy, and has set up a conflict where strong power Leftists increasing resemble Communists, while strong power Rightists tend toward either monarchism or 1930s hybrid systems like national socialism or fascism.

Look how quickly Communism lite is spreading through the USA as propelled by minority votes and millennials who are fulfilling the desires of their hippie-era instructors:

There are 42 people running for offices at the federal, state and local levels this year with the formal endorsement of the Democratic Socialists of America, the organization says. They span 20 states, including Florida, Hawaii, Kansas and Michigan.

The most ambitious Democrats in Washington have been reluctant to embrace the label, even as they embrace the policies defining modern-day democratic socialism: Medicare for all, a $15 minimum wage, free college tuition and the abolition of the federal department of Immigration and Customs Enforcement, also known as ICE.

These people support the idea of taking from the successful to give to the unsuccessful. They have dedicated millions of man-hours to hiding this simple fact because it sounds bad, but the reality is that as in nature, some organisms thrive while some are barely making it by.

We all benefit when we follow the behavior model of those that thrive. When we imitate those who are not thriving, suddenly no one is thriving. This is the lesson of Darwin, and also what we have learned from Communism and the French Revolution, watching egalitarian societies collapse.

Egalitarianism is a third-world model. When no one is thriving, having more people means a greater likelihood that one will survive, so giving everyone a small amount of food makes sense. However, you never get high-performers this way, only subsistence living; every society which has become great has done so by giving more to those who do more, so that more of those are produced. That, too, is Darwinism. For egalitarians, then, advancing their ideas requires having others who are also in denial of this reality. They like “consensus” because it enables them to obscure knowledge that reality is contrary to the theory of egalitarianism; they want compliance precisely because their ideology denies reality.

This arises from their fundamental individualism. They want to be able to throw mud in a tin pot and call it art, instead of having someone impose a standard higher than the individual as to what “art” is. They want also to be able to do what they want and call it “good” and “right” instead of looking to the obvious, larger meaning of those terms.

Naturally, this causes a problem for the egalitarians. How much consensus do they need? When news travels slowly and societies are localized, they need a local consensus; in the age of radio, television, and internet, they need to conquer the whole world in order to suppress knowledge of how unrealistic their ideas are.

Ironically, they conquered the world using an economic system. They did this by creating a cycle where capitalism produces income, government taxes it, money gets redistributed, and then the lowest echelons of society have buying power, which enables the creation of consumerism and thus a vapid, disposable society.

In order to make their ideology a cornerstone of this, they have made capitalism addicted to consumerism since it keeps the flow of money going. Consumers “work hard” at cubicle jobs, spend money, and receive money if they are not successful; the unsuccessful horde then spends its money, allowing an economy to be built on nonsense like entertainment and other “service industry” notions: luxuries, fads, trends, irrelevancies.

Even better, the egalitarians keep the system going through resentment and scapegoating. Witness this first-class propaganda from The New York Times in which they both status signal, demand compliance, and gaslight the average citizen in order to force them into the victimhood-scapegoat cycle:

Yes, my father is angry at someone. But it is not his co-worker Gem, a Filipino immigrant with whom he has split a room to pocket some of the per diem from their employer, or Francisco, a Hispanic crew member with whom he recently built a Wendy’s north of Memphis. His anger, rather, is directed at bosses who exploit labor and governments that punish the working poor — two sides of a capitalist democracy that bleeds people like him dry.

“Corporations,” Dad said. “That’s it. That’s the point of the sword that’s killing us.”

Among white workers, this negative energy has been manipulated to great political effect by a conservative trifecta in media, private interest and celebrity that we might call Fox, Koch and Trump.

Scapegoating consists of blaming others for the lack of success an individual experiences; if someone else is doing better, and is wealthier, he can blame them for his own lack of productivity. This is similar to the corollary to affirmative action known as “disparate impact,” which says that if one group succeeds more than another, the first group is to blame and must subsidize the other group.

Victimhood comprises the mental state required to blame others and the condition of thus failing in life by perpetually seeking reasons why the individual should not change his own behavior, instead of changing behavior to be more like the successes.

The Left operates exclusively through victimhood because the only people who want equality are those who feel unequal, or that success (social, financial, political, intellectual) has left them behind.

Victimhood creates a market for information and entertainment that reinforces that view of the individual as victim.

This defers authority from society to a condition where an external notion, like an ideology or a profitable idea, drives the decisions made by that society. Instead of society using ideas to advance itself, it becomes enslaved to them, and merely acts out those ideologies as a means of maintaining internal stability.

That externalization exists as part of the herd behavior of humankind, and manifests in politics, the economy, and social pressures alike. Those three areas — political, economic, and social — in egalitarian societies become dedicated to making choices by number of supporters, or quantity over quality.

Neoliberalism promotes laissez-faire capitalism, privatization and trade without regulation, while socialism promotes state control of the market, two things that, on the surface seem to be at odds.

Yet we see it everywhere. The state continually expands, with greater power over people's lives and ever-increasing spending on a variety of state programs: health care, education, welfare, old age security, etc. Yet at the same time, free trade and the global capitalist marketplace increasingly dominate, with off-shoring, free trade agreements, and worker importation to continually destroying the ability of workers to have gainful employment at good wages.

The same people who argue for ever greater social programs argue for the free movement of workers and free trade of goods. The two-party consensus marches on, with the only difference being whether socialism or neoliberalism is emphasized more. Each potential threat to the system, whether mild like Bernie-style socialism or Trumpian nationalism, or more radical is attacked with ruthless vehemence.

To see how these commingle, we, surprisingly, look to Marx, who was often not wrong on analysis, even if his solutions were lacking:

The rule of capital and its rapid accumulation is to be further counteracted, partly by a curtailment of the right of inheritance, and partly by the transference of as much employment as possible to the state. However, the democratic petty bourgeois want better wages and security for the workers, and hope to achieve this by an extension of state employment and by welfare measures; in short, they hope to bribe the workers with a more or less disguised form of alms and to break their revolutionary strength by temporarily rendering their situation tolerable.

In this analysis the petite bourgeoisie would win against the set up a democratic system, and provide the workers with just enough state handouts to make their lowly state tolerable.

As Nick Land loves to point out, the global capitalist system, unrestrained, ruthlessly selects for efficiency. Efficiency means prioritizing lowest cost inputs, which in the case of workers means minimum possible wages, which, in a global market place means hiring borderline slave labour in the third world and replacing labour with machines.

Of course, the byproduct of this efficiency is unemployment and low wages, yet this creates two problems: If the worker's wages are low and they can't afford goods, who buys them? And won't the workers rebel?

The socialist state solves both these two problems. It gives workers a tolerable standard of living and provides them resources to fatten themselves to complacency on sugar, soy, heroin, TV, and porn, the modern bread and circuses,.

For those not sated by such, the socialist state also provides the status of being middle-class and higher qualities of sugar, soy, heroin, TV, and porn to those who work in the socialist state or in one of its many dependencies (and don't kid yourself, an indeterminately large portion of "private" corporations subsist on the leavings of the socialist state). The "private" dependencies of the state allow those who aren't quite comfortable with being dependent on the state a way to gain middle-class status while still being arm's length from the state.

This is the economic cycle of our modern society. Ruthless global neoliberal capitalism churns out consumer goods efficiently while eating up and vomiting out the working and middle classes. The socialist state provides the refuse of the neoliberal system with a material standard of living just tolerable enough to prevent revolt at the alienation and soullessness of the system while having only minimal drag on efficiency (the state takes it's ~40% tax and puts a few less arduous regulations, while leaving the system intact).

Globalist neoliberalism could not exist without the socialist state, for we'd revolt against its heartless machinations. Yet, the socialist state can not exist without globalist neoliberalism churning out untold quantities of goods and services as efficiently possible to take their cut to dish out bribes and placate those who may rebel against their economic slavery to the socialist state. We do not have the worst of each system, for if we did, we would notice, perhaps resist. Instead we have reached a symbiotic equilibrium of minimal tolerance. We eat our sugar and watch our TV, discontent, alienated, isolated, yet ignorantly so.

Reddit is going to complete shit these days.

polarwaves • 18 points • 1 October, 2019 01:45 AM

“Against bullying and harassment”, what a joke this website is. Plenty of other subs out there that openly bridade, harass and bully on the daily (looking at IncelTears) and Reddit turns a blind eye to those tinysackbigshaft • 19 points • 1 October, 2019 02:48 AM

Actually this is could be a blessing in disguise.

- 1) The new site could be monetized with relevant, valuable TRP content for users
- 2) You'll have your own platform, with freedom to do as you want and speak how you want. No more being on your toes about “when's the shut down”
- 3) A simple app can be created, similar to Reddit's, to make it easy to open and engage, making it seem like nothing happened. This avoids the hassle of traditional forum logins that no one likes
- 4) With enough postings and content, you will naturally rise to the top of search results. And get tons of traffic, because men seek TRP truths worldwide, all the same questions. Google rewards high traffic relevant content (almost) regardless of content
- 5) It's not about what happens to you in life. It's how you handle them. When you can't will something to be, and it won't budge, you'll naturally get forced into the path where you should be going.

redmaxz • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 01:07 PM

Yea i think its a shame reddits going down this path, but ultimately it's in favor for trp to have its own forum.

letsqobish29 • 41 points • 1 October, 2019 12:24 AM

I've seen political people saying they are going to ban anything that's not left-wing before the 2020 election and everyday seems to be proving their claims correct. I'd say the decision to delete this sub is related.

More like 1.4M subscribers. Remember, that's what the number was from when they stopped showing it, but growth continued.

[deleted] • 17 points • 1 October, 2019 01:23 AM

And I only just got here. What a shame.

It will be a good push to kick Reddit out of my life though. My only remaining social media, gone. Might stick with some small communities for my hobbies due to the fact that independent forums ultimately suck due to the lack of activity. But, this push will be good to redirect my wasted time to more productive readings or hobbies.

Otherwise, it's been a pleasure gentlemen. See you on the other side of this Exodus.

Rispy_Girl • 31 points • 1 October, 2019 04:38 AM

This is BS. I'm a woman and I find this subreddit to be valuable for me too. Both in improving myself and improving the men available to me. Yeah game can suck, but women do it too and quite honestly your guys seem to advocate a face value type of layout as opposed to cheating and leading a girl on. And you guys seem to teach guys to not put up with abuse that has become so rampant and that a man is expected to just accept and deal with for the rest of his life. This movement is literally advocating for true fact based equality that considers gender differences and what's best for society as a whole.

My archive also includes the Good Looking Loser & Blackdragon, but plenty of TRP.

I'll probably float over to Red....I do think Reddit is half assed and cowardly for not nuking this sub a year ago, rather than quarantining it. If they wanted to quash the TRP brand, they should have just done it.

It's been good guys. This sub taught me a lot. But all good things must end. I won't be at trp red, I'm just focusing on fitness and game and getting rich at this point. There's nothing else for me to gain from this, only self improvement now. All good things eventually die.

Fidditch • 16 points • 30 September, 2019 11:41 PM*

Careful with that despair, TRP is not gone yet. Been here since the early days under 20k subs, learned a lot about growing up here.

Its a sad day if this is the end, it was a good run. Thanks.

I'm on the left side of the spectrum, pretty damn liberal, and even rep some feminist causes (keyword: some) and I fuck with this sub heavily. Yeah I get that incels here make it look like it's all that here but at least this place is helping some of them get over their bullshit and turning into positive results. Fucking soft ass mods.

I haven't even been here that long but it's opened my eyes even wider and has help set me up for positive changes. And despite what the pussies out there think what this sub does to people, not once have I thought of women being a lesser people. It's been an honor yall.

Yeanahyena • 13 points • 1 October, 2019 02:02 AM

Yeah I'm in a similar situation to you man . Never looked at women as lesser people or hate them. There is some really good content on here which has had a positive effect on people including myself. They could have requested a better regulation of content once they updated their policies instead of outright banning the sub. It is truly disappointing. You just can't seem to have an opposing view on things these days.

Imperator_Red • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 02:08 PM

Well stop being on the left side of the spectrum. No more fence sitting. We are being oppressed. You're either with us or against us.

I'm not crying for the cels sub Reddits though...

ConspiracyPill • 5 points • 1 October, 2019 05:17 AM

Only reason I kept coming back to this fucking website was TRP. Guess it's time to be done with this censorship bullshit.

VertSceptre • 4 points • 1 October, 2019 06:12 AM

TRP literally changed my life, and for the better. I can't even count the number of articles on this subreddit that helped me in some sort of way, especially on the social side of things.

Thank you, thank you so much.

We review subreddits on a case-by-case basis. Because bullying and harassment in particular can be really context-dependent, it's hard to speak in hypotheticals.

So they're just openly saying they'll apply the rules or not apply the rules based on their feelings now? At least they're finally being honest, I suppose...

HighPiracy • 3 points • 1 October, 2019 08:49 AM

See you boys on the other side, we all knew reddit would shut down TRP. Havens of free thought son't get to exist here.

RevolverHotTubRevive • 3 points • 1 October, 2019 10:03 AM

If all these "hateful communities" have become so big reddit has to ban/censor them, we are WINNING. With reddit existing and hogging potential users, the big break away was never going to happen, but now with so many people being forced out and looking for a new home, it's the chance for a fresh start and a future censorship-free rational community not only the internet, but our whole society needs more than ever. Again, this is NOT about people being hateful, it's classical censorship and "unwanted opinions" are tried to be swept under the rug due to people in power being scared of the truth coming to light. You can now look forward to a thriving community that finally will reach the mainstream without any teenage mods trying to stop it and hurt their feelings.

The funny part is that places like roastme is still standing without removal where sole purpose of subreddit is to offend people in their self depreting interest. It's a sad day on the reddit, once a place of free thought. Although its bit metaphorical for being a man a.k.a. going against all odds. Had a pleasure guys. See you on the other side.

mickenrorty • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 09:41 AM

The content here has been invaluable to me, the value will continue to pay dividends for the rest of my life.

Shutting down the red pill has poured fuel to my fire in conviction that the truth needs to be made available and kept available.

I'd rather die fighting to be a free man than submit to the cucked slavery of society we see today.

The irony I see is that society is collapsing and TRP knowledge will return to being required to survive, rather than just useful.

Keep on building and keep on winning my dudes

EdAnt • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 09:52 AM

The forums are more like a Twitter feed, though. I don't like that format. Being able to comment on a specific post, without having to weed through a bunch of random shit from other topics is a much better format, a la Reddit. They should make the forums more like this, or Usenet or something.

ace518 • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 10:53 AM

<https://www.forums.red/i/>

and give it time. they have been working on it for quite a while, and its seems to be improving, but this isn't a corporate run place with limitless staff and hours. Some patience will be required for a bit i think.

EdAnt • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 11:11 AM

I mean, I value it either way. I already subscribed a while ago. Just throwing it out there that the format could be better. Scrolling through one stream of random comments doesn't really create good discourse the way concentrated topics do.

ace518 • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 11:25 AM did you go to the forums.red link i put up there? that's the forum. trp.red is much more of a twitter/notification feed spot.

Reddit has run its course. Anything in contradiction with the party line immediately gets censored, and if you persist, you get banned. I've already been banned from worldnews, europe and history, for opposing a blatant lie that is being shamelessly propagated.

DevilishRogue • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 12:45 PM

That's just weird. This subreddit doesn't remotely fall afoul of the revised policy even by the stretch the SJW's running this site might make. If they redrafted it to get rid of TRP they've done an appallingly bad job. Why didn't they make it more blatant that they wanted to protect supposedly marginalised, oppressed or under-represented groups? It might not be valid but at least they could pretend. With what they've currently amended it to they can't even pretend.

Ah, well. Registering at <https://trp.red> now...

vHohenheim23 • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 02:23 PM

haha...These shadow clowns are trying their best to force men into becoming what they say men "are".

They claim men are toxic, threatening, violent, evil...So they push and push men into a corner until their only means of survival in a world that turned against them is to fight back, thereby "proving" to everyone how "toxic, evil, violent" men are... "Look at them, they are fighting back". This is the same tactic the US Government(plus their allies) use against Russia today. Surrounding them on all sides with bases, pushing them into a corner all the while claiming "Russian aggression", cutting them off from the world until the only option the Russians have is to fight back thereby "proving" claims of the US Government as to the validity of "Russian aggression".

Welcome to the civil version of an age old tactic. They did the same to force Japan to attack Pearl Harbor, they did the same with the Germans, now they're doing the same with men, or more specifically, White Heterosexual men.

And they know that eventually it'll happen, eventually men will stand up and say "enough" and then they(those clowns) can have their war that they crave so much, their lust for genocide, the sacrifice of the last remaining sane people on this planet i.e God's people. It's inevitable, because we are like Lions, like a lion that lies about while the young gnaw at him, the females torment him, the vultures steal from him, inevitably his patience runs out and disaster strikes and this is what they're pushing for. They saw the push with a race-war is going too slow, so now they're trying this tactic and it's actually working. Even our own idiotic women are standing against us, betraying us and laying down with our enemies...Like their old mother Eve did. History has a funny way or repeating itself.

The_Best_01 • 2 points • 1 October, 2019 03:49 PM

What a surprise. This confirms what we've always known, that the site is now mostly full of SJW/feminist retards, and that the admins will stop at nothing to pander to them, as well as PC advertisers.

There was a lot of stupid stuff here, but also a lot of great stuff, and it's sad to see another one of the few subs which goes against the groupthink die too.

See you on TRP.red guys. So long and thanks for all the shit.

periodicNewAccount • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 03:51 AM lol you know they're lying to you, right? No action taken about /FragileWhiteRedditor despite it being literally a racist harassment sub. The rule change they're citing doesn't exist.

boundarychimps • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 04:38 AM

Here is the announcement.

Two particularly interesting parts:

What should I do if I see content that I think breaks this rule? As always, if you see or experience behavior that you believe is in violation of this rule, please use the report button [“This is abusive or harassing > “It’s targeted harassment”] to let us know. If you believe an entire user account or subreddit is dedicated to harassing or bullying behavior against an individual or group, we want to know that too; report it to us here.

Print out a copy of the new rules. Subscribe to subs that you think violate them just as badly as they're claiming we do. Take a bit of time each day to check posts / comments against your printed copy of the rules, and report the ones that don't conform.

You should also know that we'll also be harnessing some improved machine-learning tools to help us better sort and prioritize human user reports. But don't worry, machines will only help us organize and prioritize user reports. They won't be banning content or users on their own. A human user still has to report the content in order to surface it to us. Likewise, all actual decisions will still be made by a human admin.

Unfortunately, it looks like they've given themselves a solid "out" to ignore any reports that don't match the narrative they want to push.

Do we have anywhere to document ignored reports? That seems the only way to clearly demonstrate to others who do not yet understand that the admins are in fact being bigoted and biased in their application of these new rules.

nobody_thinks • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 05:16 AM

Will someone archive the top posts? Would be a shame if they got deleted, too.

Obermarschall • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 07:39 AM

I don't know if this was already mentioned or not, but is there some archives of some posts of this sub?

Terror-Error • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 07:47 AM

Admins don't really want to do this. They are forced to.

That's why they give us notice and time to back up.

Closing alternative viewpoint subreddits is absolutely disgusting. I've been a long time sub although I don't agree with everything in line with TRP I enjoy reading some of the posts, this is by far the most entertaining subreddit and one of the only subreddits that can hold my attention for longer than 5mins.

This goes to show the world we live in now, if someone says they're offended by something you do they'll try destroy you and your beliefs, leftists companies happily oblige these people because they don't want to deal with the backlash if they oppose the "oppressed", fucking pathetic really.

Reddit is the peak of the internet iceberg, go to the deep web if you want actual independent thought.

riggedved • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 02:02 PM

While it sucks that we will not be able to use the Reddit platform.

This is an opportunity to make TRP.RED into everything we wanted: a forum a men self improvement and guidance / sexual strategy community, free speech.

We can make The Red Pill bigger without having to depend on The Blue Pilled society. Everything is fucked these days. It best if we go independent.

iManera • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 02:35 PM

This subreddit actually helped me in terms of advice on becoming a Man, understanding others and building my social skills. The fact that this subreddit is considered bullying and harassment is just laughable really.

lugrulo • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 02:35 PM

I'm so god damn tired of worrying about censorship.

FaustoLG • 1 point • 1 October, 2019 02:58 PM

Not surprised as REDdit clearly is Marxist and it took a LOT of inspiration from RED China, look at Hong Kong!

Socialist reddit will kill all the wrongthinkers... That means us.

The matrix is fighting back harder than ever. Going to spend a few hours today taking pictures of my favorite bookmarked posts. It's been real.
