Such women are those who have accepted the flattering vanities of career “advancement” in place of a truly satisfying life as the active mother of a teeming and energetic pack of yard apes. These duped women have somehow been persuaded that the good opinion of the bureaucrats in HR is somehow far more valuable than the good opinion of the yard apes. It isn’t, by the way.

That's a matter of opinion. Some women (myself included) are simply not cut out to have kids and it's better for all concerned if we don't.

What are you doing here as a woman

Willow-girl • 8 points • 9 November, 2018 01:29 PM

Mostly sharing my experience, strength and hope, but occasionally pointing out flaws in logic where I see them. I think it's faulty to assume that motherhood is automatically the highest calling for women. A lot of women (myself included) have the maternal instincts of a parking meter, and it's best for all concerned if we simply don't "go there." (Incidentally, the same could be said of men and fatherhood.)

Well, you shouldn't be here. You're ruining your own marriage by knowing and "contributing" what you'll be informed of here. Please save yourself and your marriage and consult your husband on these issues, as you know the Bible specifically states.

And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church. (1 Cor. 14:35)

I didn't realize this was church! And here I am in my pyjamas with my mug of java. Oy!

Excuse me while I at least go comb my hair ... :-)

That is an excellent article and I enjoyed reading it. Thanks for sharing it.

I wonder if Doug Wilson is finally turning a corner after Dalrock has critiqued many of his post this past year and Dalrock's commenters have caused his comments sections to be closed at times.

This seems to be representative of Doug Wilson’s thinking without the usual qualifiers. I think Dalrock has honestly misunderstood much of Wilson’s work in the past. I’ve always thought it strange that with such a target rich environment Dalrock seems to single out DW for his highest criticism.

Deep_Strength • 3 points • 6 November, 2018 02:18 AM

I don't think so. I've read most of every post that Dalrock actually links to on Doug's stuff and it is off. Doug has one of the common blind spots that a husband is responsible for the marriage even if the wife rebels. However, Doug does call out women for obvious things (just not the above for some reason) which most pastors don't do so kudos to him for that.

The oddest thing to me is that when Doug has responded directly to Dalrock he's doubled down on much of his prior comments.

Doug overall is closer than most Christian pastors are now, but he does have a few blindspots still.

Also, Dalrock to my knowledge does not single anyone out as he comments on every single Christian pastor who has fallen into overt or subtle traps of feminism.

I, too, happen to know for a fact that Dalrock at least partially misunderstands Wilson's work. There is an attitude that Dalrock puts forward that Wilson's session never holds women in discipline for rebellion or what have you. I know someone personally that proves this wrong.

All that said, I enjoy the work of both men.

I don't think Dalrock has ever said no women have ever been held accountable in Wilson's church. And I do not think dalrock misunderstands Wilson at all. I read Wilson before Dalrock even started his blog and saw it then myself.

I've heard the name thrown around many times. Who is Dalrock?

Deep_Strength • 3 points • 6 November, 2018 02:34 AM

The biggest Christian manosphere blog on the Internet. Focuses on exposing feminism and man-blaming in the media, Church, and Christian pastors mostly.
