

What Self-Love ACTUALLY is.

November 2, 2017 | 17 upvotes | by DatingCoach111

[removed]

Archived from theredarchive.com

Comments

ThrowFader • 11 points • 3 November, 2017 12:29 AM

Ok this shit is rife with the naturalistic fallacy. Aside from that it doesn't belong in this sub.

Kindly refrain from posting in the future.

Leo_Back • 1 points • 3 November, 2017 12:58 AM [recovered]

i think feelings don't help men very much, men evolutionary adapted to rationalizing so why go against it ?

Rationalizing my feelings always helped me more then just being sad or angry or bitter and made it understand thing better

0signal0 • 1 points • 3 November, 2017 01:18 AM [recovered]

I believe men feel more and more deeply. It doesn't really surprise me that most of the great poets, musicians, painters, you name it...have been men. Dante Alighieri falls in love with some stupid girl and writes "The divine comedy" as a tribute to her. Francesco Petrarca sees some random girl on the street and dedicates to her some of the most beautiful poetry ever written. The "emotional" sex (women) are never doing that.

Faggot.

ozaku7 • 1 point • 3 November, 2017 02:30 AM

We just have a firmer grasp of your emotions, while women just let them run loose and just cause disaster.

[deleted] • 1 point • 3 November, 2017 01:12 AM

Who gives a fuck who Matt Kahn is and just because it's natural doesn't make it good