Are you me, but younger?

33 F here. Also no interest in kids or big houses. It took a long time but I found someone who wants the same things, isn't a huge spender, and also isn't intimidated by a woman who makes good money. They're out there. Go into any dating or relationship with pure honesty about what you want. Don't settle for anyone that won't fully support your financial future and goals.

Are there really people scared of sugar mommas out there?

Some guys have a complex about being emasculated. Probably not all that many, but enough to be a thing.

Tip: If someone lets their insecurities and ego rule them that much, they most likely weren't a good partner in the first place.

You're acting as if women not wanting to date below them (it's funny, literally the parent node of this sub-thread mentions "don't settle") isn't what the primary explanation for the majority of cases in which successful women are single (which is fine, I don't care given everyone is entitled to their own preferences - but call a spade a spade).

It's somehow men getting the blame for this all of the time in that men "are scared of successful women", when that's probably a minority of cases in all fairness. From the corresponding perspective, chances are said successful men are looking for other things that your stereotypical successful woman doesn't have.

Biologically speaking, a man marries a younger woman (reproductive viability), and a woman marries an older man (monetary viability). This makes sense. A woman has a greater chance to have healthy offspring in her youth, and a man has a greater chance to have accumulated wealth as he gets older.

Now, if you reverse that, you have an older woman (more time to accumulate wealth) with limited reproductive viability, vying for a man with less resources than she. But the man's raison d'être is wrapped up in his ability to provide and the woman's youth. Now the older, richer woman has two strikes against her: lack of viability and not needing a man's resources.

The third strike for this woman is "not settling." Since a very successful woman has to either find a man with more resources than she has or a younger man who is a gold digger (rare), she's has a conundrum. The more successful man is looking for a young, fertile woman and cares little for her earning ability, and the younger man will more than likely fill his biological urges "on the side" with a more youthful woman.

Of course, you could just marry a nice, beta man, who would be loyal and faithful to you, but you just couldn't stand that, because that would be "settling."

So logically, the biological reason fails here. I'm looking more towards the convenience/status aspect.

Essentially paying for an alpha-ish individual, just like men would pay for someone they are attracted to.

Makes me wonder - how quickly laws will change once the ladies are on the receiving end of the divorce raping... They're leaving themselves open for it. And alpha men tend to not care about anyone but themselves, it's just a trait of those.

Good points!

Someone summed it up best on SydneyMGTOW on Youtube:

Charlize Theron. Age 43. Net worth $130 million. Chances she will accept a man with a lesser OR equal net worth: Zero. Chances a man with significantly greater net worth will hook up with her: Zero. The wall plus hypergamy predict her fate. Chances she will remain alone and miserable: 100 percent.

Charlize Theron remaining alone? You are deluded.

fredanderssen • 3 points • 9 April, 2019 03:46 PM

There's an article by Theron regarding just this. She hasn't had a date since 2015.

BLOOD_PALADIN • 1 point • 14 May, 2019 11:27 AM

Oh shit, she's fairly good looking tho. She must be a total bitch to be so single, either that or having huge standards. This although proves how we are far less gold digging than women.

lol

You are deluded guys, check at those rich Hollywood milfs (and also ugly hags even) with young men. Check at Jeremy Meeks who is an ex convict who married a billionaire's daughter solely because of his face. Don't let money become a new coping mechanism.

I was just about to X-post the link to this, but decided to check your post history first and saw this.

The reply two below you was fantastic

" I know you're in r/FIRE but I hope you brought ice with that burn. "

If I understand/remember correctly that was supporting a claim made against me, in which the person replying said "Like time for them" in regards to me originally stating that the average 'successful' woman doesn't have qualities/attributes that high-value men with options are looking for.

mdigibou • 1 point • 10 April, 2019 10:06 PM

Oh that's not how I took it.

I saw it as someone else saying that women SHOULD be making time for a man in their life if they want them to stay around.

lol internet vagueness.

It appears you were right. I'm pretty surprised lol

Haha, the thing is though I'm pretty sure the majority of people who upvoted that comment interpreted it the same way I did initially.
