From MGTOW perspective, the quote is relevant for every young man who stands at the crossroad between :

- 1) "Manning up and doing the right thing" according to the rules set by the gynocentric society. AKA selling your soul to the mindless harpies and funding their life style.
- 2) Choosing freedom over the false promise of honor and going his own way.

The dead souls, are the men who have been divorce raped or "metoo'd " and are now a shallow ghost of their past selves.

Their silence is the reason why MGTOW exists.

Deus Vult brothers.

Yeah saw a girl "crying" crouched by the floor by the stair way and elevator on my way to my dorm. I was taking the stairs up and in front of me was a group of guys all walked by and I look at her for a second to be like what's up with her? And went to my dorm. Funny thing is her sniffing got louder as we walked away. So I'm like... yeah she's faking it. Had to walk back by around 2-3 minutes later on my way to lunch and she stood up and was talking on her phone not even sounding like she was crying crouched down a few minutes ago. Old me would have asked what's up, heck old me was always willing to help anyone in pain. Only took on incident in my past for all the years of people telling me to mind my own business to take affect. Honor means nothing. Honor doesn't make you thrive or survive. If you're strong enough to carry yourself to the ends of the earth do it and leave all those without wings to find their own way.

TRP is dangerous to the status quwhore because it acknowledges shaming for the weakness of the provagtraitor it is.

And Jaavik was a tool. His people were wiped out because they weren't good enough to stand against the Reapers.

The whole point of the game - and indeed real life - is that power doesn't come from a gun, individual strength or even military might.

Power comes from the number of people willing to work together to achieve a goal. It is the single most important factor. And it is also why those who created and pushed feminism want us divided. Even here.

espouses survival of the fittest

His entire species was definitively proven to not be the fittest.

This is my point. The dude was dead weight. An afterthought from a dead culture who failed. His entire attitude was emblematic of this, and so to take any of his advice would be to buy in to the same limitations and inferiority that got his people killed.

It didn't fail. Its been attacked by the same enemy who brought down the UK, Imperial Russia, and Rome.

You need to read more.

Never dignify it with a response.
