

Anybody else think about just one pillar falling could put the entire platform at risk of collapse...

Female privilege is propped up by many pillars but just one taken down could do a lot of damage, if all of a sudden:

Male reliable contraception hits shelves.

Paternity tests are standard.

Orbiters (sic) and white knights become extinct.

Quotas for male teachers/professors.

Misandry, MGTOW, Red Pill, female privilege, Gynocentric, become household terms, to the point of trending on social media.

Men learn about emotional manipulation and how to counter.

Wage gap becomes widely regarded as a myth.

First Mgtow politician or movie character or song.

Fathers rights increase.

...what am I missing?

None of this will matter until society and legislators stop treating women like retarded children and make them face the consequences of their actions, which I never see happening.

The problem is, they ARE retarded children.

But children should face consequences for their actions.

The problem is that this kind of change will be thought of as a regression to the "Dark Ages of Misogyny". We tricked ourselves into regarding our overweening respect for women as "progress".

Oh what I would give to see mandatory retroactive paternity testing ordered nationwide. The streets would run red no doubt about it.

Male contraceptives are not going to help.

Let's see....as soon as reliable cheap male contraceptives exist (well, besides condoms) legions of women will only want guys who are on it, like condoms.

Onus of contraceptive "responsibility" shifted to men, with medical side effects. When "accidents" happen men will get blame, even more than now. Men will become just another sexual commodity even worse than now.

Careful what you wish for.

But feminism wants to keep something like a male pill from being available because it could prevent a lot of "oops pregnancies" and give men a real chance to control their fertility besides depending on rubbers or the snip.

In theory, some of these happening could case a minor shift in Western culture, but it's unlikely to amount to much

Even if 1/2 your list happened in one year, the gynocracy would find a way to fight back.

You can't push the turds back into the donkey

In the Cold War, Russia was a serious nuclear threat because they had many thousands of nuclear missiles, NK is lucky to have more than a few.

The 'all of a sudden' is unlikely I'd suggest but we're already seeing gradual changes. That's why we're here having the discussions that we have.
