Just got done watching this video, and along with it being hilarious, it speaks some truisms.

Obviously placed in a setting where woman have to compete for a man, you can see that men completely control the relationship. In a game show, even a comedic parody of one, the element of being able to leave any relationship is strong.

This video is probably the ultimate example on how the female hamster works.

Listen to the end of the video:

| "Yay we're getting married!!!" "Uh, no, Im just not dumping you, for now"

This is how you should approach any relationship with a women.

Wow, this shows RedPill so much. It's all I try to be. To leave women and not feel bad, because they don't care too. To live my life for myself and not for some girl that isn't happy with what she got.

A lot of truisms as well, if you want to be a Chad, this is a mandatory watch.

On the other side, I'd also like to contribute to this post with this:

Are you saying that a constructed reality show, where producers decide every single thing, is a good example of how men interact with women in real life? You don't think all of that is scripted and manipulated in order to create drama?
