

Feeling frustrated because it feels like my circumstance hasn't improved even after achieving a career milestone

June 18, 2020 | 2 upvotes | by ObjectiveHunter

After years of hard work and sacrifice, I am about to start working as a resident physician. I'm going into a competitive surgical subspecialty with a high future earning potential as an attending.

The kicker is that I don't think my elevated "status" as a doctor has done jack shit to improve my chances. I recently went back on dating apps... I'm doing worse than I did when I was in med school for some reason.

It's not that I was looking to catch a gold digger who sees me as a future human ATM. But I did think being a surgeon-in-training would give me at least some sort of boost in terms of my success on dating apps.

Has anyone else experienced this? Is the saying "rich doctors/lawyers get all the hot chicks" a fallacy?

Archived from theredarchive.com

Comments

gediwer • 9 points • 18 June, 2020 06:37 AM

You are fucking it up. Don't use your job as a way to get girls. This extreme beta shit. You getting a job doesn't change jack shit about your game. You should learn how to better yourself. Lifting, hygiene, how to dress up, look like a man. If you want plates you have to be the most alpha you can be. Online game is harder than real life. If you don't know how to take good pictures and how to text/flirt with girls you really can't pull a chick. If anything your job is going to probably make it harder for you since doctors have to work indefinite time periods. Clean up your place. Create a vibe. Create an aesthetic for you. Build a personality. If you only do stuff in hopes of pulling a girl you are dead wrong. You have to work on yourself to better yourself.

rprookie • 1 point • 18 June, 2020 10:07 AM

This ^ and always have this mindset. Because it'll fuck with you subconsciously.

Remind yourself to do things for you, not for the bitches.

[deleted] 18 June, 2020 12:09 PM

[deleted]

rprookie • 1 point • 18 June, 2020 01:20 PM

Exactly

[deleted] 18 June, 2020 03:44 PM

[deleted]

gediwer • 3 points • 18 June, 2020 03:52 PM

Man you're doing the same thing. Your job status is making you feel entitled to women. You have to get rid of this mindset.

And yes, burger flippers probably get more women than you because they know how to flirt and escalate. I'd say you are somewhere in your late 20s and early 30s. You have plenty of time still. If you are looking for plates you shouldn't think that being a doctor gets you plus points or anything. There's plenty of guys here who earn less than 100k a year and still have hundreds of bodies. You mentioning your job and income will only get you gold diggers. And while they are alright to have as plates you wouldn't want them as LTRs.

[deleted] 18 June, 2020 05:10 PM

[deleted]

gediwer • 1 point • 18 June, 2020 06:53 PM

I don't understand why you think I am the bad guy here. If you don't want to then don't listen to me ☐. Simple as that. Take my words by a grain of salt if you want to doesn't affect me at all. If you think anyone else here had better advice then please by all means focus on those and ignore me.

red__Man • 1 point • 18 June, 2020 09:26 PM

you're kinda arrogant my friend, in a bad way.

