

Seeking book recommendations

June 15, 2020 | 7 upvotes | by Solaceseeker14

Just found out I will be having my first child. Super excited/nervous/overjoyed. As a 34 year old male I'm looking for the best books to read on how to be both a dominant alpha, peacefully parent, be supportive of my wife and raise a good, intelligent and truth filled child in a world of lies, degeneracy and filth. I read my Bible daily and of course utilize the tools god gives us but are there any that some of the Fathers in this group would recommend?

Rollio tomossi the rational male

Read happiest baby on the block. It will give you very useful newborn baby skills. Some are a life saver.

Another user mentioned boko no pico. I still use that for reference.

Tell them stories of your ancestors. Before it becomes illegal.

To Train Up A Child by Michael Pearl and his other book Created To Need A Helpmeet. He also has two other parenting books for a bit older kids and your wife will probably enjoy, like I do, their free magazine. It's packed with info and biblical stories of family and marriage and short enough for a busy wife and mom to read in one sitting/small enough to hold whole nursing for hours on end.

Another great parenting book is Parenting By The Book although I dislike how they downplay the physical use of a physical rod. But the rest is top notch.

I've read a dozen other parenting books and none compare to these. They are all wayyyyy too much talking, which makes pansy men out of our sons.

And one podcast that is sure to change your life is The Courageous Parenting podcast. EXCELLENT godly couple you'd enjoying following on social media as well.
