Disney loves their white princess goddesses, comedic idiotic male sidekicks and male villains. I see they're getting bolder and bolder with their anti-male sentiments, but we live in this "patriarchy" apparently...

My favourite Disney stuff was Fox & The Hound, when you saw the fox and hound were just little pups, and were just revelling in their friendship together. (Of course, they have to take that away over the course of the film, and introduce the female love interest.)

It's ironic because he's the villain.

So now Disney identifies with the villains in its films? Or do ideologues really have no clue what the Fuck they are talking about.

Disney has taken a hard turn to the Left, but I don't think this scene is an example of it.

Conservatives are also wary of their daughters dating men who might hurt them.
