It's easy for people to make excuses for their poor choices.

Men work. That is the difference.

So my mom is a Nurse and the hospital she works at pays her the exact same as her male cohorts, the only difference in salaries are from age and experience

Men choose the same professions, but don't have the choice to take years out to do something much more rewarding, such as raising their own children.

Instead traditionally we get to go to work without a break to ensure our wives and children have sufficient money for a secure and stable home life to develop in.

Then as a bonus for not having a choice and having to go to work, we get told the fact we earn more is sexism and we're the "oppressors".

Men do OT and ask for raise and also work more. Then they'll be like I need to see my children. Idgaf you want more? WORK MORE and if you won't then stop bitching about it

They work more for their children.

My father worked two jobs to provide for us, but he stopped after my mother divorced him and got us, the house, and the cars.

Tell me how that is fair.

Do you think men want to work more? If they have no partner and no children, then obviously it would be better with if they worked more, since they'd have more time to spend.
