I wonder if this study shows women operate more on a pass/fail system instead of a 1-10 scale men use.

aethon_maegyr • 15 points • 1 April, 2021 12:39 PM is more of pass/fail - need of minimal level of good looking for female even start consider you as a potential mate.

bilberberbers • 4 points • 1 April, 2021 10:54 PM

The stats do seem to indicate this, which is why their ratings seem so messed up when you give them a 1-10 scale to use expecting some kind of normal distribution like you get with men.

All you need to do is be a good person.

In the Wisconsin Longitudinal Study (1244 women, 997 men born between 1937 and 1940)

This is a study done in a different era lmao. Life for young guys right now is nothing like it was for young guys born in the 1940s

There has been a flood of blue pill/red pill studies in the last week or two that I think are meant to change sentiment in this sub. Think about it, if the average person on this sub thinks a lot of studies out there contradict black pill or disprove it then black pill would start to feel like it is incorrect. If you really start looking into the studies being presented however in the last few weeks things like this pop up.

U_Hypocrite • 9 points • 5 April, 2021 09:53 AM

All of the bluepill studies are posted by one guy. He'll favor some study from decades ago, or some shitty survey, just because they favor his view.

Just realized this Still, it's a good study to share, imo. Even though peoples from different times. Even from those times, it shows looks played a very significant role.

Also, you gotta know. It measures reproductive success. But not really relationships, mating, etc. success. And most men, wanted and have stopped after a couple of kids.

So EVEN, if a good looking male, has options from women to have 100 kids, he just don't wants to. And he stops after 2 kids, and stays with his woman and rejects all other offers. when he could had had more.

And where an man of lesser looks, may have only had 1 woman in his life that was willing to have kids with him. And they have 2 kids. And he had ZERO other options of mating, having children.

BOTH, these men in this study are reported to have equal reproductive success.

Which is true, they have equal reproductive success in a quantity sense.
