

Sex on command

July 18, 2021 | 24 upvotes | by HappilyMrs

---

I saw something on MRP, a comment that "Nobody gets BJs on command". So I thought I would ask here. Is that the case in your house, that sex of any variety is on command? Is this even practical for many? Is it just a case of being clever about it? Do you think it's problematic to have such a set up where one partner commands/asks and the other immediately obliges?

I know we rarely talk about sex here, but I think the balance of power and how this plays out in all aspects of a relationship is interesting.

---

Archived from theredarchive.com

---

Comments

---

grahamcookiefart • 37 points • 18 July, 2021 03:57 PM

On command is a pretty negatively connotated word - I'll put it this way, if my husband asks for a blowjob he gets it just like if he asks for a glass of water, he gets it. If something is seriously inhibiting me from doing so (such as illness) I understandably don't. I love him and I love it even more when I get to do things that make him happy.

HappilyMrs[S] • 6 points • 19 July, 2021 09:07 AM

Yep, it was hard to think of a better way to phrase it. Aside from those of us with BDSM style relationship, commanding is unlikely to feel positive to most.

Vegetable-Pound28460 points 19 July, 2021 10:18 AM [recovered]

Th eonly reason he gets it is because he's CHAD if he didnt follow the spiral aurea none of you women would like anhy dude

grahamcookiefart • 10 points • 19 July, 2021 10:30 AM

Alrighty for assuming my husband is a chad. He was sexually very conservative when we met, we are both religious. I was particularly attracted to him because he does not drink, smoke or sleep around and had 1 relationship prior to me. He is moderate and dignified - if he were a "Chad" he would most definitely not "get it" and I would not have married him.

Vegetable-Pound28461 points 19 July, 2021 05:31 PM [recovered]

Alright but do you seriously think that a wristcel like me can get a gf?? lol

grahamcookiefart • 2 points • 20 July, 2021 07:50 AM

I don't personally know you or the size of your wrists so I can't tell you my opinion on this, but I wish you lots of luck to find the girl who matches your standards and values :)

Elevatedheart • 1 point • 19 July, 2021 04:39 PM

Is that reciprocated? Or completely one sided?

grahamcookiefart • 3 points • 20 July, 2021 07:51 AM

I don't want it reciprocated - he provides things that I need, not things that I do for him. It's a fallacy to think that everything in a relationship must be reciprocated or else it's unfair...

Elevatedheart • 1 point • 20 July, 2021 09:01 AM

If we are talking about everyday things or just nice gestures for the sake of doing something kind, than sure, I don't do something for the mere fact of getting something in return. But where I'm not catching on, how could their not be a mutualism, in regards to love making? I feel like that's in a category all on its own. It's a mutual surrender to each other.

grahamcookiefart • 6 points • 20 July, 2021 09:46 AM

It is mutual, I receive my sexual gratification by pleasing him, so does he. If I were into receiving head I'm sure he would oblige, but I much prefer doing it.

Elevatedheart • 1 point • 20 July, 2021 10:09 AM

I'm still not 100% clear about what it means to be a red pill wife or woman.. Everything I've read from the women's perspective is very vague.

I see tons of articles regarding red pill men, but nothing from the woman's perspective..

When I found out the red pill woman site was actually run by male moderators, I was then linked to this site that I was told was exclusively women.

But the details haven't really been explained to me as to the philosophy behind it. I understand the anti feminist.. but as far as the relationship itself, what does it mean for you as a red pill woman?

It can't possibly be a placate from the red pill man perspective.. any woman who reads the red pill comments online, would be appalled, just by respecting your basic dignity as a human, let alone women..

I can only hope the red pill husbands, don't have the same mindset as the red pill men I read posts from online..

grahamcookiefart • 2 points • 20 July, 2021 10:17 AM

I don't think any red pill woman wants a red pill man as a husband.. going on the reddit subreddit would leave any woman repulsed. What the red pill from a woman's perspective to me is embracing feminine nature (submission, care, agreeableness, tenderness and such) to build a sustainable and happy life. Also, empowering your husband to be the captain of the household without undermining him; encouraging his masculine nature.

It's just another philosophy to pursue happiness by making biological/social assumptions about men and women.

As an RPW I never have and would never date or marry a RPM, we seek good men who are loyal, traditional and want to engage us in a committed relationship. How we as women can obtain such a man and build such a relationship is what RPW teachings are all about: what a "high value" woman is, how to behave in relationships, how to be a homemaker, good wife and lover. And also what a good man is, how to vet men and such.

I hope I clarified even if just a little bit? I'm no RPW spokesperson by any means, but if you have any question feel free! :)

Elevatedheart • 2 points • 20 July, 2021 10:41 AM

Thank you that clarifies a lot, lol.. I lost perspective when I went on red pill woman site. They were trying to persuade young girls to give sexual favors and basically to submit in a toxic manner, certainly not from a point of mutual respect.

I don't have a traditional women's role in my current relationship and in my marriage to my x.

In my current relationship, we pay for everything mutually.. he gives me his half towards bills and I manage the money for bills. I am very feminine when it comes to household responsibilities.. For example, I manage the house inside and he does the outdoor work. He will at times jump in to help with dishes.. I do the laundry, we share cooking and I pretty much clean the inside of the house.

I have a profession that I value but I don't think that by any means, disregards my femininity. Honestly, he wouldn't be able to support me 100% anyway..

I'm not sure if I exactly fit the bill of what it means to be a red pill wife.. but I do believe in traditional roles as far as him being masculine and me feminine.. I just don't build my world around homemaking.. I don't put a lot of effort into different recipes. I am always having to watch my weight and he doesn't like food that fits my diet plan. He has a high metabolism and I don't. So I'm usually eating lean meats and vegetables. He finds that boring regularly . So we have a struggle there. Sometimes he will cook for himself because of that..

If I cook him something high calorie, than I end up cooking separate meals.

Can I ask what you'd consider undermining?

grahamcookiefart • 6 points • 20 July, 2021 01:16 PM

I don't think that having a career and wanting to contribute to the household income is anti-RPW, its a tough economy after all!! I also work 40hrs a week while my husband is currently in a non paid training. Still I consider myself an RPW.

I'd say its a sexual strategy too, next to being an ideology. You are employing your feminine qualities to maintain your relationship, I don't see why that's so different.

As for undermining - and I am by no means a saint, I make my mistakes but I recognize them - I consider undermining things like.. immediately criticizing his suggestions, not going with his plans/refusing to follow them, interrupt him, not asking for his permission for important things (like big financial decisions for example) speak over him, go against his wishes...

Elevatedheart • 2 points • 20 July, 2021 02:09 PM

Ok, that makes a lot of sense.. yes they would be cause for fighting and miscommunication.. Ok good, I'm glad this sub is what I may have thought and not something different! Thanks for sharing!!

Anonymous_fiend • 18 points • 18 July, 2021 08:54 PM

I guess that can work for some couples as long as there's a lot of trust and communication. And that you can say no if you want, don't feel pressured to, and aren't overly objectified. You should take care of your husband's needs but not at your emotional expense. Body autonomy is important. Some people even if rp trad will feel uncomfortable with this dynamic. My fiance has a pretty high sex drive but I try to accommodate his needs with variety. If I say no I usually let him know when I'll be more receptive so he doesn't feel rejected. However if he really wants it he'll just make me (bdsm not rape lol). I think the power dynamics can be potentially a problem (but may not necessarily be one) depending on the relationship. Imo this topic crosses over from rp trad submissive into more bdsm submissive relationship. Don't down vote me this is a huge part of most bdsm relationships. They can be loving and consensual too. Not a bad thing if done right. But if someone can't stand up for themselves and is willing to break limits to make the other happy it can be problematic.

So yeah basically I'm all for it in healthy relationships with limits, safe words, respect, consent, and communication.

HappilyMrs[S] • 10 points • 18 July, 2021 09:17 PM

I certainly wont be downvoting. We have a free use policy in my house consensual and with safe words.

JoyfullMommy006 • 29 points • 18 July, 2021 03:42 PM

I entered the marriage feeling that meeting his sexual needs any time, every time was a top priority. With that said, I totally trust that I could say no to my husband and he would be supportive and understanding. So kinda yes, I would absolutely give him whatever sexual act he asked for on "command" tho my husband rarely comes across as commanding in a rude way. But there's always been a good balance for us - he's kind and wonderful about all things including sex so it's probably easier for me to answer the question.

HappilyMrs[S] • 4 points • 19 July, 2021 09:07 AM

This sounds wonderful :)

JoyfullMommy006 • 4 points • 19 July, 2021 10:04 AM

It really is! ☐☐☐ So thankful to call him mine! ☐

sordidstork • 17 points • 18 July, 2021 03:18 PM

My husband and I are one of those odd couples where generally my sex drive is higher than his. This doesn't mean that every time he does want it I do, but usually... I do haha! If I don't feel up to it he is understanding, but that is pretty rare for us.

I am content despite my higher sex drive to take care of myself so to speak when he isn't up for it, and I know after 5 years together (and 1 married) that if I try to initiate when he isn't in the mood, it just makes him upset. He will feel like he's disappointing me and beat himself up mentally, and it's not worth his peace of mind for me to "get some". It doesn't bother me if he isn't up for it when I am like it might some women, we work together on the same wavelength in enough of the other aspects of our life that the sex part is nbd.

HappilyMrs[S] • 3 points • 19 July, 2021 09:09 AM

It's really great that you have found positive ways to be at peace with the imbalance. I've been both the lower and higher sex drive spouse, and I know it is easy for it to become an issue

sordidstork • 3 points • 19 July, 2021 01:57 PM

Once I stopped taking it as rejection (early in our relationship thankfully!) it helped a lot. He gives me plenty of physical affection that isn't sexual. Without that it might be an issue, but he definitely makes sure I feel loved. I got a good one! Haha :)

bubblegumxxxx • 8 points • 18 July, 2021 08:22 PM

It's not on command because I don't love that work but basically anytime he wants sex or a BJ I'm ready to go, i would rarely say no unless I was sick or something, we both have a high sex drive and can be in mood pretty quickly

HappilyMrs[S] • 1 point • 19 July, 2021 09:03 AM

I think on command is a phrase that brings out negative connotations but I couldn't think of a better way to say it

Pretykity • 7 points • 19 July, 2021 01:12 AM

Unless I am sick I wouldn't turn down intimacy. I want to please my hubby.

HappilyMrs[S] • 2 points • 19 July, 2021 09:01 AM

That's really sweet :)

xosomeblonde • 7 points • 18 July, 2021 06:46 PM

My sex drive is higher than his, so in the five years we've been together, I don't think I've ever actually said no? Of course, I could. I just haven't had to, lol. If he's down, I'm down.

HappilyMrs[S] • 1 point • 19 July, 2021 09:04 AM

We've had varying balances of sex drives over the years, I would say I am like you are now.

xosomeblonde • 1 point • 19 July, 2021 02:37 PM

I think it's a lot more common than women (and men) are led to believe.

And it absolutely ebbs and flows over time!!

acgs1995 • 3 points • 23 July, 2021 12:59 AM

We believe that his body is mine as much my body is his. So yes, if he asks for something sexual, I'll do it, and vice versa. Only sickness can change this rule.

This helps with regulating low and high sex drive, and prevents resentment between us. But I know many couples wouldn't want that.

HappilyMrs[S] • 1 point • 23 July, 2021 08:19 AM

We're definitely told that we should only have sex if we're actively wanting it already. But some of the best sex I have had has been him in the mood and then me getting turned on with foreplay. I think part of this is the porn expectation that women will just be ready like a light switch. I'm sure when I was a teen in the days before internet porn it was an expectation that women were likely to want foreplay.

anothergoodbook • 9 points • 18 July, 2021 03:57 PM

I very rarely say no to my husband. He knows I'm not crazy about sex during my period so he doesn't ask then. But if I can tell he's wanting some, he gets a BJ.

We've become increasingly more "traditional" - meaning I choose to submit to his leadership - that means not saying no (with some caveats) to pretty much anything. But I trust him and he is a good leader so I'm not worried about him taking advantage. He does listen to whatever concerns I may have and takes that into consideration (this is going beyond sex).

HappilyMrs[S] • 2 points • 19 July, 2021 09:06 AM

I think the trust definitely has to be there. I trust my husband will respect my needs, and because of that I am happy to follow his wants.

creativecreatureoff • 9 points • 18 July, 2021 07:19 PM

I have never been "commanded" that would dry me up like the Sahara. I could not be with someone like this just thinking about it gave me a stomach ache. I only decline if something is happening that makes it unsafe or very inconvenient. Usually we check to see if things are good to go for that day.

HappilyMrs[S] • 2 points • 19 July, 2021 09:03 AM

That sounds like it works well for you :)

Inside_Ad_7292 • 10 points • 18 July, 2021 03:06 PM

It's definitely not on "command", but I do have an understanding that men need sex more often than women. If I truly do not feel up to it, my husband is not going to demand that I still have sex with him ( especially since I'm pregnant right now). But, generally, we try to have sex once a day because that's what we agreed was a good amount. There has to be understanding, effort (from both people), and good communication in order for you both to have a good sex life.

HappilyMrs[S] • 1 point • 19 July, 2021 09:09 AM

Once a day sounds awesome. Do you have kids already?

Inside_Ad_7292 • 2 points • 19 July, 2021 12:10 PM

No, we don't.

HappilyMrs[S] • 3 points • 19 July, 2021 01:13 PM

It does get harder, but it's all about being part of the same team and not letting it be a wedge. So exciting having your first baby :)

FlouncyMcTwinkle • 10 points • 18 July, 2021 08:22 PM

So this morning told my man i had a headache. He said a cock in my mouth would sort it out. Man was right ☐

HappilyMrs[S] • 6 points • 18 July, 2021 09:20 PM

It's the wonder drug hehe normally if I say about a headache I am directed to my sex toys to fix it. There's very few ailments for me that an orgasm would help!

FlouncyMcTwinkle • 1 point • 20 July, 2021 11:08 AM

Im just delighted to be in a relationship where my desire is there, as it wasn't in my marriage. To the point i thought i didn't work anymore. So to be with a man who just has to look at me or unbuckle his belt and stir those feelings in me, ill willingly surrender to them any place anytime tbh. I could only provide on demand if the man inspired me to do so.

HappilyMrs[S] • 1 point • 20 July, 2021 11:20 AM

Oh I totally get this! Mine is different in that it happened within my marriage. I had a big phase where I felt I was possibly asexual. Sex felt like something I needed to do for his sake, I had no spontaneous desire, and would starfish more often than not. But with some internal working, I got myself in a better place mentally, and our sex life is much better, and I am certainly not asexual at all!

sapc2 • 3 points • 19 July, 2021 01:28 AM

Sex is pretty much on command in our marriage, but that goes both ways and it's not like either of us is like, "sex. Now. Clothes off." We both sacrifice of ourselves to please the other. Of course if one of us was just really seriously not into it, that would be fine but it hasn't happened in years. It works well for us. I think that's due to 1) it going both ways and 2) pretty similar sex drives, but either way, we're both pretty happy with our sex life currently.

HappilyMrs[S] • 2 points • 19 July, 2021 09:00 AM

That's really good, it seems like you're well-matched!

For us, him saying now is the moment would work, providing there was no reason I couldn't (period, for example).

sapc2 • 1 point • 19 July, 2021 09:40 AM

To be fair, I'd love a more demanding approach sometimes, but we have a 16 month old so that's not really practical for us right now. I'm sure once he's a little older and more self sufficient, sneaking off when the urge strikes will be back on the table.

HappilyMrs[S] • 2 points • 19 July, 2021 11:43 AM

We're at the point where our son is more interested in doing his own stuff, so we've done a lot of sneaking off :D

piratebabygirl • 2 points • 19 July, 2021 04:37 AM

I do not tell my husband no.

I don't know that I would call that "on command" though. Like a lot of the replies here, it's more an acceptance of my husbands needs and my desire for him to be happy.

Hubby has never initiated sex while I was truly ill or injured. I think that's because when his needs are met and he feels accepted and respected, my health and well-being is a top priority for him.

Men need different things out of a relationship than we do. They are sexual beings. To feel genuinely loved, men need their sexual desires to be accepted and embraced by their wife. That encompasses way more than just the act of intercourse. It includes flirting, mental stimulation, cuddles, soft touches, etc.

Be open and accepting of your husbands sexual needs and he will swim through shark infested waters to bring you a glass of lemonade.

HappilyMrs[S] • 4 points • 19 July, 2021 08:58 AM

This is such a good point. It's not about the act, it's about how you accept and desire him. My husband and I have talked before about how an encounter that is full of passion and desire that doesn't have time to lead to anyone orgasming is more satisfying than quick starfish sex where your partner is clearly not into it.

AdventurousAd5107 • 1 point • 24 August, 2021 10:33 AM

A husband won't demand sex from his wife when she is ill and cannot be intimate he should be aware of her state too

If a man asks for sex when you're sick I would say he has the dynamic wrong

A woman is available and remains inviting but the man should be loving and intelligent to know when she isn't able to not put her between a rock and a hard place