

Story from when I visited my family the past holiday season

So either Thanksgiving or Christmas time 2019, and I like to spend time with my extended family when they're all in town together. We're all chatting and catching up with each other, and eventually the conversation shifts to this one girl cousin I have and this woman she knows.

She's describing this woman, and it's just so fucking insane. She's married to a cardiologist. He (the doctor, who's a cardiologist -- one of the most busiest physician specialties there is) does all/most of the cooking. On top of this, ~~they~~ he hired a nanny and a maid. To top it all off? She doesn't work, at all.

Now you're probably thinking wow, or you've seen so much of this that it doesn't even surprise you. But that's not even the most important caveat, all of my female cousins were going like "wowww, that's such an amazing life, I totally want that!" -- keep in mind most of these women are the educated, strong women type who have decent jobs on their own. Normally I would have been like "Jesus Fucking Christ", but then I just thought to myself "haha, clown world" and I just laughed and smiled and said, "good for her -- I'm sure he's lucky to have her ;) "

Who wouldn't want that life though? Sounds nice.

Women suck natural resources

Yikes! That poor guy, he is screwed if he stays or leaves. I was with someone who sat around all day and didn't work(always some sort of issue where she couldn't work, but was just fine sitting at home)would wait until I get home...from work and then ask me to run errands for her and help her cook dinner. Now mind you I don't mind helping out my woman, but what kind of respect, appreciation, and care does that show me?

Maybe I am wrong in how I feel I don't know, I can tell you I felt more like her subordinate than her man.

If I lived a life like that I would be guilty as fuck.
