

Am i wrong?

May 20, 2017 | 0 upvotes | by casemodsalt

Girl I've been dating for a while asked me to get her some milk. I figured I'll pour a cup or whatever and bring it.

She then asks for the red top.

I'm like "whoa what?"

And she says the milk with the red top from the store.

I freak out and tell her no

Then about 10 minutes later she says she's ready (I was going to pick her up until she asked for milk)

I just said "lol" and went to bevmo since I had the car started anyway.

We had planned on hanging out and her sleeping over tonight..

She was blowing up my phone basically.

Ghosted her for a while and then said maybe her ex can pick up milk for her

She started saying blah blah you can't do me a favor, you think in a fucked up way, blah blah.

I said 'I know' and she replied with "how many more times are you going to make me cry this week"

Pics of text for better accuracy available upon request.

Some worthy mentions:

Doesn't drive...not me anyway. Will drive her family around though.

Doesn't have a car

Recently quit her job and hasn't really looked for another.

I work part-full time.

Have a car. Access to 4 cars total almost any time. Always pick her up and all that.

I feel like I shouldn't have to try as hard as her value has decreased significantly from the low point it already was.

Archived from theredarchive.com

Comments

vandaalen • 9 points • 20 May, 2017 07:18 PM

Wat?

She asked you to bring some milk from the store, you said yes, and when she specified which one you threw a tantrum?

casemodsalt[S] • 0 points • 20 May, 2017 07:22 PM

No I figured she wanted a little bit of milk from my fridge. Going out of my way to the store and then delivering it to her was asking too much imo. And then going as far as to specify what one she wants on top of that

vandaalen • 6 points • 20 May, 2017 07:24 PM

Where is the problem? Amused mastery. Literally laugh about her. Problem solved.

d4nonymous • 5 points • 20 May, 2017 08:25 PM

You didn't need to freak out. You could've just said no calmly. There are ways to set boundaries without coming off as a maniac.