If you're triggered by the topics you have to hear at your university courses, you don't belong at a university, or at least not in the field you chose.

The worst part is that they're not triggered at all.

They're just torpedoing the lecture for everybody for attention.

It shouldn't even matter. A law professor should tell them that they should switch fields if they can't handle law.

The worst part is, they literally have to teach rapelaw as a separate subject because feminists have lobbied for such a different procedure when dealing with rape cases.

When did people start taking IRL claims of "triggering" seriously without a psychiatrist's note confirming PTSD?

Can't wait until people get so fed up with this bullshit that they start telling these ego driven schmucks to grow the fuck up and get out of the class.

TRIGGERED.

That's one of the most annoying things anyone could ever say. I'm a disabled war vet and when these little baby children fucks try to tell me that they are "triggered" it's such an insult to me and all the others who get ACTUALLY triggered to the point where we start freaking out.... Fuck I used to have the worst problem with punching shit in my sleep but it hasn't happened in a while until two weeks ago when I guess I decided to drop kick the ever living fuck out of my laptop while I was asleep....

Jeannie Suk is one of the good guys and gals. She has spoken out against "The Hunting Ground" and campus kangaroo courts. This article by her is very interesting.

So PTSD is now the new gluten allergy...

Ironically, we spent like three weeks on rape reform and most of the questions on our crim law final were about rape. I think our prof did it out of spite for this very trend.
