

Agree and amplify

Alpha Game | 20 September, 2015 | by VD

New heights of SJW parenting:

I've been in such a state of perpetual turmoil ever since giving birth. My child, pronoun "they", is now 3-years-old. I have been mired in a heinous state of chronic depression because "they" do not want to play with girl's toys. It destroys me that "they" might be another white CIS male, and another future agent of the patriarchy. That's just not the type of lifestyle I can support or agree with. "Their" father has also been deeply despondent over our child's reluctance to conform to our stance and ideals on gender. My husband identifies as gender neutral, and whenever "Xe" (my husband's current pronoun) witnesses our child playing with toy trucks and trains, it triggers "Xer" so hard that "Xe" crumbles into a quivering pile of inconsolable PTSD jitters.

My question is, how can I persuade my child to blossom into the fabulous transgender individual that I know in my heart "they" truly are? All I've ever wanted was a trans child, and the fact that "they" seem so drawn to boys toys and refuse to don the lovely dresses I so painstakingly choose for "them" just crushes my soul. What can I do to make "them" understand the harm that they inflict on our family through their identity as a CIS-gendered white male? Please Jane, help us, it's tearing our family apart.

So apparently they're not QUITE beyond parody. Almost, but not quite.

Archived from theredarchive.com