

Kind words from The Other McCain

Dalrock | 22 January, 2018 | by Dalrock

The Other McCain writes in You Should Be Reading Dalrock:

I've occasionally linked and quoted Dalrock here, and some of his regular readers are also my regular readers. He is unafraid to make tough arguments: "Child support is designed to replace marriage, and it is wickedly effective at this. . . . Child support doesn't just encourage women to have children out of wedlock, it also encourages women to kick married fathers out of the home." Remember all those Maury Povich show episodes where unwed mothers learned the results of DNA tests to determine who their Baby Daddy was? That kind of irresponsibility is actually encouraged by the existence of a legal system that uses punitive measures to enforce child-support payments. It protects women's "right" to screw around by forcing men to pay for the predictable result of such promiscuity. But as Dalrock points out, many conservatives are OK with this destructive policy. "We are trapped on Slut Island and Traditional Conservatives are our Gilligan" is the title of one of Dalrock's classic rants, in which he makes the point that "slut shaming" works.

Follow the link above for the full post. I've read McCain for several years now, and especially enjoy his lampooning the feminist cliché of the writer.

Archived from theredarchive.com